COMMENT

Another Association year has come to a close with Commencement and the publication of this June ALUMNUS, the last until October.

All of our problems have been so thoroughly discussed, and the one solution of the payment of dues so definitely emphasized, that we ought to make this parting observation one of more pleasurable memory.

Things do look better. If the tone, that intangible quality of men and events which nevertheless makes itself heard, rings true from its Commencement manifestation, we're all set for a big year.

This Harry Miller fellow, whom the Michigan football team of 1909 will remember as a driving force, hasn't lost any of it.

The University has weighed us in the balance and agreed to satisfy our wants, so long as we continue to give our maximum co-operation.

The old Secretary-Editor-Treasurer, to list all of the titles of the old monarchy, has struggled along this far through balanced and unbalanced budgets to a point where he can predict that the Alumni Office will be doing its utmost.

About all that leaves is you, old pal.

Shortly after you enjoy the following pages, listing the glamor that was Commencement and the glory that was Laetare Medal presentation, listing the hundreds of alumni who received the unlimited hospitality of the University,—you'll receive a little notice that you are to enjoy the privilege of participating in all of these activities, these achievements, by the increasingly simple (if you're administration-minded) process of sending five dollars in cash, money order or (such is our own optimism) check.

That's a simple exchange for a trade-mark that means as much as Notre Dame.

Then, after we've received the several thousand fivespots, will we go places! And do things! Set? We've had ideas and programs and people waiting these long four years. The machinery of production is ready. The market is crying for the commodity. How about a share of stock? You've already made a handsome profit on it, my friend, on the investment of your predecessors and your fellows. They counted on your interest.

Look at the air view on the next page. No matter if you left here in June 1883 or June 1933, think of Father Sorin standing on the snowy banks by the little Log Chapel, a small clearing, a few dollars, a little band of Brothers, sparse population nearby, few Catholics. Think of the fire in '79, wiping out thirty-seven years of grueling progress. Then look at the air view again. Read the record of the Eighty-Ninth Commencement. This is the Notre Dame you are judged by. Who made it? You, in part. But not—you'll be the first to agree—you alone.

Dues are a very small tribute to the men who have gone before you in the building of Notre Dame. They are a very small contribution for the men who will come after you.

But like those few dollars of original capital that Father Sorin brought to these shores, if we have them, we can try to work similar miracles in the shadows of his Golden Dome.

MOST RECENT AIR VIEW OF THE UNIVERSITY OF NOTRE DAME

Alumni of all years will find in this view of the campus the evolution of the building program which has brought Notre Dame from the hidden little building on the shore of the lake to the great group of residence and academic buildings which now offer so impressive a picture to all visitors.

Celebrities and Crowds Create Record Commencement

John McCormack, Margaret Anglin, Al Smith, Dr. James J. Walsh, Gov. McNutt, Father Coughlin, Distinguished Guests and University Speakers Thrill Throngs

Harking back for terms to the sports pages, "the 89th Annual Commencement of the University of Notre Dame, June 2, 3 and 4, broke all gymnasium records."

Class of '33, Theatre, Alumni Banquet, Glee Club Concert, Pontifical Mass, Commencement Exercises, Laetare Medal Presentation, in the order named, achieved new peaks of splendor and attendance, comprising, with other numerous features, Notre Dame's greatest Commencement.

Sunday, June 4, is a day unequalled in the history of Notre Dame, and likely to remain so for a long time. Therefore, the ALUMNUS violates chronology to recount its trilogy. (The recounting by Edward Brennan, '31 journalist.)

An Irish singer, telling simply in song of the overflowing happiness of his heart—"This vast treasure of content that is mine today"—rang down the curtain Sunday night on the 89th commencement program of the University of Notre Dame. John McCormack, recipient of Notre Dame's Laetare medal at the golden jubilee celebration of the medal, an honor which, as he said, he long secretly longed for, could find no better expression of his gratitude than in the beautiful and eloquent words of James Whitcomb Riley's "The Prayer Perfect":

Bring unto the sorrowing
All release from pain.
Let the lips of laughter overflow again.
And with the needy
O divide. I pray.
This vast treasure of content that is mine today.

Dear Lord, kind Lord,
Gracious Lord, I pray.
Thou wilt look on all I love
Tenderly today.

Mr. McCormack's song was the final episode in a long and busy program of brilliant addresses and impressive functions throughout the day, highlights of which were the appearance of former Gov. Alfred E. Smith, of New York, on the Notre Dame stage, the baccalaureate sermon by Rev. Charles E. Coughlin, of Royal Oak, Mich., and the commencement address by Gov. Paul V. McNutt, of Indiana.

Mr. Smith's appearance at Notre Dame in the afternoon at commencement exercises was the occasion of an unparalleled demonstration. Again at the Laetare ceremony in the evening his entrance brought the throng of 6,000 that jammed every corner of the gymnasium to their feet while the band struck up that famed battle-song of the Brown Derby, "Sidewalks of New York."

Mr. Smith's arrival one hour late made it impossible for him to attend the first of the day's exercises, the solemn pontifical mass, celebrated by the Most Rev. John Francis Noll, bishop of Fort Wayne, Ind., at which Father Coughlin delivered the baccalaureate address.

The capacity crowd that was present for the beautiful ceremony of the pontifical mass thrilled to the stirring oratory of the clergy's foremost radio speaker, Father Coughlin, when he delivered the baccalaureate address. Following the singing of "Veni, Creator Spiritus," by the Moreau seminary choir and the University glee club, Father Coughlin knelt to receive from the bishop the stole and blessing. The crowd went on its knees with Father Coughlin as he himself kneeled at the altar and prayed briefly before advancing to the front of the stage.

Materialism and the philosophy of individuals were roundly attacked by the radio priest as he pleaded with the 565 members of the graduating class to "become pioneers of a new era in Catholic education, the advance guard of a movement away from the philosophy of licentiousness and greed."

"The thousands of friends and relatives of these young graduates," he said, "are celebrating, whether they know it or not, the birth of a new age in Catholic education and these young men are leaving the halls of their alma mater to go forth as pioneers, not following the old paths but new ones.

"For more than 400 years that great civilization of ours has been dedicated to a policy of rugged individualism. We have watched this movement grow until the old principles of Catholic loyalty are referred to as the superstitions of the dark ages.

"Immanuel Kant defied the pharisees of his day with his principles of idealistic selfishness. He strove to make the individual greater than the race, to build up licentiousness, to break down Christian decorum."

Addressing himself particularly to the graduates, he said, "you have learned within these hallowed walls the Catholic principle that the end of production is use with profit, not profit alone, not use alone.

"For the last 400 years we have multiplied the numbers of graduates from the schools and institutions who with all their learning and all their pedantry live to create a hell upon earth, the crown of which was the world war—a crown fashioned by rabid individualism.

"On this feast of the Pentecost, turn away from the old roads that led to horrible suffering, hunger and want, unemployment and the divorce courts. Assume the new leadership of Jesus Christ. Become modern apostles, ask for the gift of wisdom, of knowledge, of Christian fortitude. Go forth and preach the gospel of Christ, not the gospel of exploitation.

"Though we try our utmost to end the depression we will never succeed until the principles of Christian charity and justice are restored to the world."

Following the baccalaureate mass the 565 members of the graduating class in caps and gowns marched across the main quadrangle on the campus and assembled at the University flag pole. After blessing of the flag annually presented by the senior class to the University, the weather-worn old flag was lowered and the new one raised. Until next June and another class of graduates it will float over the University campus. Throughout the day thousands of persons visited the campus, visiting the art galleries, museums, residence halls and dining halls.

When it was learned that former Gov. Smith had arrived many of his loyal followers came from the campus to the hotel, hoping for a glimpse of the democratic nominee for president in 1928. State and local democrats gathered in the Oliver lobby, awaiting an interview with Mr. Smith or with Gov. McNutt, who arrived in mid-afternoon.

At 4:30 o'clock the Smith party which then included Prof. Clarence (Pat) Manion, Mayor Ray Miller, of Cleveland, Frank C. Walker, Mr. Mooney, Rev. Michael A. Mulcaire, C.S.C., and others, left in official cars for the University. Gov. McNutt followed.

Cheer upon cheer greeted Mr. Smith's entrance to the gymnasium. The program, featured by the presentation of degrees to the 565 members of the graduating class, and the presentation of honorary degrees of doctor of laws to Father Coughlin and Gov. McNutt, moved quickly. The diplomas were presented by Father Mulcaire.

It was announced by Father Mulcaire that the 1933 award of the $500 to the lay member of the University faculty who has given the University most distinguished service during the past year was won by Paul Byrne, University librarian.

Hon. Paul V. McNutt, Governor of the State of Indiana, then gave the briefly eloquent Commencement Address which the ALUMNUS is privileged to reprint separately.

Among the many guests of honor at the commencement exercises, one seated on the stage attracted a lion's share of the crowd's attention with his Indian headdress. It was Rev. Phillip Gordon, LL.D., chief of a Chippewa tribe in northern Wisconsin, the only priest in the country who is a full-blooded Indian chief. Father Gordon is a graduate of St. Thomas' college, St. Paul, Minn.

Two old political rivals were brought together at the dinner which followed the commencement exercises in the dining halls. Former U. S. Senator James E. Watson and former Gov. Smith, were seated close at the banquet table.

The climax of the program was reached with the Laetare medal celebration that started in the beautifully decorated gymnasium at 9 o'clock. Seven recipients of the medal were present to participate in the University's celebration of the 50th anniversary of the medal's origin by Rev. Edward Sorin, C.S.C., founder of Notre Dame. These past medalists were Charles D. Maginnis, Dr. Stephen J. Maher, Miss Margaret Anglin, Dr. James J. Walsh, Jack J. Spalding, Edward N. Hurley, and Mr. McCormack.

The ovation that was accorded former Gov. Smith when he entered the gymnasium and took his seat on the flower decked platform while the University bany played again "The Side-walks of New York," was rivalled by the reception of Mr. McCormack. It was the crowd's first sight of McCormack for he had not arrived until late in the afternoon. For his benefit the band played, "Believe Me If All Those Endearing Young Charms."

Bishop Noll first addressed the audience, delivering the benediction of Pope Pius XI upon the entire assembly to him from Rome. It was the pontiff's tribute to Notre Dame's Laetare celebration.

It was a typical Smith crowd that cheered him when he stepped to the microphone. "Well, . . ." he began. A big "well" and the crowd loved it. He proceeded to crack jokes and tell stories and finally got down to the serious business of introducing the speakers of the evening.

First was Dr. Walsh, who spoke on behalf of the men who have received the Laetare medal in the past. Miss Anglin then reviewed the lives and works of the ten women who have been recipients of the honor.

Because of the great significance of the Laetare Medal in the history of Notre Dame, the ALUMNUS reprints separately the complete texts of the talks by Miss Anglin and Dr. Walsh.

Briefly but beautifully in language of classic purity Father O'Donnell, who took little part in the day's functions because of his ill health, then made the presentation address. He looked tired and wan but there was a ring of fiery eloquence in his voice as he said:

"Sir, in this golden jubilee year of the Laetare medal, the University of Notre Dame places your name on the honor roll of her award. She invites you into the company of men and women who have given worthy expression to Catholic practice in their lives and exalted the Catholic name by achieving the high rank in a career. Your Catholic faith has been the inspiration of your art; your ranking in that art has been attested to alike by the discerning and by the lowly. The music critic has paid you his tribute; and beside home fires hearts have been hushed by your magic. You have brought poetry from books to human lives. Unheard beauties you have made audible; simple, homely things you have taken from kitchen and fireside to the whiteness and brightness of theaters. You have captured Irish ballads from cross-roads, from countrysides, and by a wizardry of tone have transformed them into new, beautiful essences. You have made Ireland's voice audible to millions who have never seen Ireland's face.

"Your art has ministered to faith, patriotism, love, to the simple, holy dreams of poor folk who for so long had been waiting a minstrel. High things you have done highly, exhibiting mastery. For that critics acclaim you. You have exalted the humble; and the love of the humble goes to you. You have excelled, have been acclaimed, honored, named and re-named in the rolls of renown. And in winning so much you have not lost the one thing necessary.

"Therefore the University of Notre Dame honors the faith that is in you, pays homage to the nobility of the art which you express, bestowing her award upon you who express it so competently.

"In recognition of your devotion to the faith of your fathers, your unheralded charities, and that voice of yours which has soared high to capture beauty, and searched sequestered places of the earth to discover the simpler melodies of lonely human hearts, the University of Notre Dame honors you. She asks you, John McCormack, to accept the Laetare medal for this year of Our Lord 1933. May you find as much joy in receiving as the University of Notre Dame takes in bestowing."

The medal was then pinned by Father O'Donnell on the lapel of Mr. McCormack's coat, and the great singer who was hailed by Smith as the "greatest of all time," took on himself a new role in delivering despite nervousness one of the most effective speeches of the day. He said:

"In the presence of such a distinguished company, comprising as it does most eminent divines, statesmen, scholars and what is still more embarrassing, embryonic specimens of all these, is it any wonder that I stand before you with awe in my soul and a deep sense of utter unworthiness in my heart? Can you wonder that I cannot find words to express to you tonight my joy, my pride and my unfathomable gratitude for the great honor that has come to me.

"The Laetare medal — magical words. Oh! I would that my tongue could utter the thoughts that arise in me at their very sound.

"Long before I had ever dreamed of the possibility of being numbered amongst the fortunate ones upon whom Our Holy Father in his beneficence might smile, I knew all about the Laetare medal and secretly envied those on whom it was conferred. I vividly recall reading in the Catholic News in 1910 the name of that splendid diplomat and writer, Maurice Francis Egan. Each succeeding year with ever-increasing interest, I watched for the name of the fortunate nominee. Notre Dame and Laetare became synonymous, Notre Dame and happiness and rejoicing and joy became as one in my mind. It shall ever remain so.

"I have been wondering why Notre Dame should hold such a weird fascination for me for all these years. Perhaps some psychoanalyst could explain it. Can it be that the coming event of the Four Horsemen was casting its shadow upon me? Perhaps it was the Fighting Irish with such splendid Gaelic names as Carideo and Savoldi and Popodopolis and Schwartzbach, that were exerting on my young Irish mind what I might call a pre-Laetare influence. Whatever it was, it, in any event, existed, and in absolute truth, I can assure that I had always from that time on had the ambition one day to be the recipient of this great honor. In no sense of false modesty do I now confess that I never thought that I would stand as I do here tonight with the precious medal on my breast.

"We have an old saying in Ireland, 'tell me your company and I'll tell you what you are.' If I am to be judged by that company in which I find myself tonight, then with head erect do I proclaim from the rooftops—I am in the company of such men as Bourke Cochran and Dr. Addis Emmett, or Miss Mary Merrick and Margaret Anglin, of Admiral Benson and that most beloved Catholic statesman, Alfred Emanuel Smith.

"I hope I will not be misunderstood if I express the opinion that I think it a strange coincidence that in these days of 'sturm und drang,' national and international, that the Laetare medal should be conferred on a humble disciple of harmony. Music is the celestial art and harmony is its essence. Therefore, speaking absolutely impersonally, I cannot but feel that in calling attention to the celestial art of music in the presence of the future makers of our country, and in attracting and at least pro tempore concentrating their thoughts on harmony, we are doing a useful, a helpful and constructive thing.

"I pray fervently that the discords which seem to be reverberating throughout the world may soon be resolved and that harmony may reign again, that a concord of sweet sounds may soon banish the raucous rumblings of mutual distrust.

"In conclusion, even if I had the great oratorical gift of Bourke Cochran, I could never tell you how proud, how happy, how inexpressibly grateful I am for the great honor which has come to me from Notre Dame. Words are futile things at such a moment. It would be so much easier for me to sing my thanks. Truly has Thomas Moore sung:

'Music!! oh how faint how weak language fades before thy spell
Why should feeling ever speak when thou canst breathe her soul so well.'

"Thank you, then, dear Notre Dame, from my Irish heart of hearts. May God bless you, direct you, prosper you and keep you in the Palm of His Mighty Hand."

He had no more than done when the crowd was on its feet clamoring for him to sing, afraid that he might not. Although tired, he consented and sang, "The Prayer Perfect." The crowd wanted more. He sang one encore. "Believe Me If All Those Endearing Young Charms," then begged off. The band played, Father O'Donnel and Mr. Smith rose to go, the crowd pushed forward to see the celebrities as they filed out, the crowd followed them, the band ceased its music, the gymnasium was emptied. The 89th annual commencement of the University of Notre Dame was over.

Friday opened the Commencement with an intimation of the caliber of the programs and the record crowds that were to come. (Chronology in the story of the week-end will probably serve the best purpose.)

Registration

Alumni began coming in the early part of the week, and Friday's registration pointed to a return from all Classes and places. Alumni and Dillon Halls were set apart, and during the course of the week-end filled to capacity, with an overflow of 40 or 50 alumni in Howard. Attendance, by Classes, appears in the back of the book. The University golf course drew the early arrivals out into the fine weather that prevailed during the week-end.

President's Address

In the absence of Rev. Charles L. O'Donnell, C.S.C., whose health permitted him only the pleasure of attending the Sunday exercises, Rev. M. A. Mulcaire, C.S.C., vice-president, addressed the Class of 1933 in Washington Hall at 12:45 Friday afternoon in the annual President's Address.

Varsity-Alumni Baseball

This account doesn't come properly under the heading of athletics, and still less under that of baseball. The score of 14 to 6 is immaterial because it doesn't tell the story of the heroics of the alumni in their defeat by the varsity June 3 in the commencement game.

The first palm should go to Hugh (Red) Mageveny, who held the varsity to 16 hits, two of which were clean. The others went into the book as bingles, merely because what Red was using for support couldn't get under the pop flies and handle-hits of the varsity. Red also got three hits, including a double to score two runs and drive in another.

An orchid to "Rangy" Miles for his triple, and double which drove in two runs and allowed him to score once himself.

Further plaudits should go to Bill Sheehan, who organized the old-timers, Falvey, Bader, Botts Crowley, Hunk Anderson and Mageveny for not making errors. It might be explained that Bader didn't have any chances.

For the varsity, chief honors, as far as the alumni are concerned, go to George Keogan, who relieved Steve Banas in the sixth and allowed four runs to score.

Since he is now an alumnus, Arnie Seidl, varsity left fielder, should have recognition for his four singles in four trips. He scored four times and drove in two runs.

Cloviss White, third baseman, has two more years of competition, so we can't give him too much credit for driving in four runs and scoring twice after his single and an error.

Banas, who gave up only three hits and one run in five innings, drew the ire of the alumni when he spiked Col. Anderson on first base in the second inning, forcing the Colonel to retire to the julep room. Eye-witnesses say the Colonel jabbed his leg back under Steve's descending spikes, but we wouldn't give a nickel for Steve's chances of making the varsity next fall, even if George Melinkovich doesn't recuperate from the yellow jaundice.

Bader's single in the fourth inning brought him a lovely bouquet of doubtful vintage. The presentation was made to the tune of clicking cameras at first base. The guards of honor were Director of Athletics Noble Kizer of Purdue, who thinks Purdue will whip the old alma mammy Nov. 11 next; Business Manager Art Haley (who has just announced that you can buy season tickets on the installment plan); St. Joe Valley Alumni Ex-President Ed Meehan, and Assistant Business Manager Herb Jones.

Fourth Club Council

Decreased attendance, the result of Friday scheduling, presenting an unfortunate condition which will be remedied next year, the Fourth Annual Council of Local Alumni Clubs nevertheless met in the Faculty Lounge of the Dining Halls and discussed a number of ideas of definitely constructive merit in the Club organization of the Association. Detroit, Toledo, Chicago, Cleveland, Rochester, New Jersey, Eastern Pennsylvania, New York, and the St. Joseph Valley, were the Clubs represented. President Clarence Manion presided at the meeting.

Father Mulcaire, on behalf of the University, welcomed the representatives; expressed the University's appreciation of the work of the Clubs; asked the Club co-operation at all times with the assertion that the administration, whatever its actions might be or seem to be, always worked with the best interests of the University as the sole objective; outlined the present student situation, cost of education, comparative figures, and encouraged a continuation of the appreciated student contact program already in effect in the Clubs in many cities.

Mr. Frank Lloyd, Comptroller of the University, spoke to the Council on the possibility and the urgency of Club support of the payment of Alumni Association dues, outlining the Association costs and needs.

Mr. Thomas Byrne, former president of the Notre Dame Club of Cleveland, outlined the system of Club organization and activity which produced in Cleveland last year probably the most intensive and well-executed Club program in the history of the Clubs.

Mr. Daniel E. Hilgartner, Jr., chairman of the luncheon committee of the Notre Dame Club of Chicago, gave a short discussion of the factors which have made the weekly luncheons of the Chicago Club an integral part of that Club's program.

Mr. Bernard Voll, former president of the Notre Dame Club of the St. Joseph Valley, was unable to be present, but sent a paper outlining the history of the Football banquet, which has become, under the auspices of the local Club, a national institution.

Mr. William A. Daunt, chairman of the Lay Retreat of the Notre Dame Club of New York, also sent a paper on the recent successful Retreat there.

Mr. Thomas Farrell of the Notre Dame Club of New Jersey, obligingly spoke on both Lay Retreats, which the New Jersey Club pioneered, and the contacting of prospective students, which has also been actively promoted over a long period by the Jersey organization.

The Council had the pleasure of listening also to Registrar Robert Riordan on the subject of student contacts. The Registrar spoke both in appreciation of what has been done and in the hope of what may be done by the alumni in this important phase of activity.

Discussion of all of these points was participated in by the representatives. It was also agreed that the District Governors can be utilized to greater advantage in the organization and promotion of Club activities.

Class Reunions

As usual, the Commencement represented a General Reunion, with most of the Reunion Classes failing to identify themselves particularly. Two exceptions stand out—one the 5-Year Class of 1928, which broke all Class Reunion records here with a registration of more than 100 members. A dinner and meeting at the Knights of Columbus Hall, South Bend, Friday night, brought 80 of the Class together, the rest coming in during Saturday. To Class Secretary Louis Buckley, and the efficient Local Committee go the appreciation and credit for the success of the Reunion.

Secretary Paul Castner, of the Class of 1923, arranged a dinner for the Class at the Oliver Hotel, South Bend, Friday night, and then was called out of the city until Saturday. But the affair was turned over to Joe Nyikos, and went off on schedule to the edification of the 25 members on hand for it.

With the Alumni Banquet coming on Saturday night, with its provision for Reunion Classes, and with the Sunday program so filled, the Alumni Office appreciates fully the difficulties of arranging special Reunion affairs. And it seems, in view of the lack of emphasis on Class organization on the campus, the General Reunion spirit which prevails at Notre Dame at Commencement, ought not to be jeopardized any further than the present system, though improvement can be effected in many ways without any risk.

Band Concert

The University Band, closing one of its best years, pleased a large crowd on the Main Quadrangle at 7 o'clock, Friday night, with its annual Commencement Concert. The range of the Band program is a definite tribute to the talents of the boys as musicians, and their performance adds no little to the laurels of Joseph Casasanta, '23, as Director.

"Richelieu"

Notre Dame's rich tradition of the drama gained another victory with the excellent production of one of the stage's most difficult dramas, "Richelieu." Originally scheduled for the Gymnasium, and played there the Monday preceding Commencement, the play was returned to Washington Hall for better acoustics, and overcame this handicap of changing facilities to hold a packed audience on a hot night through its five acts.

The South Bend Tribune commented editorially:

Comment on the 89th commencement would be incomplete without an expression of appreciation of the University theater presentation of "Richelieu." For the last performance of the 1932-33 season Director Frank W. Kelly and associates selected one of the most difficult vehicles, "Richelieu" is colorful, yet definitely "dated"; and its presentation by amateurs these days, considering the sophistication of a motion picture era audience, is a dangerous undertaking. The Notre Dame players covered themselves with glory. The title role, which has tested the abilities of some of the world's greatest actors was filled by Prof. A. L. Doyle, of the university faculty and Mishawaka city judge, in a manner that intensified the opinion that the professional stage lost an excellent actor when he decided to practice law.

Mass For Deceased Alumni

Saturday morning, in Sacred Heart Church, Rev. Francis Ott celebrated the Requiem Mass for Alumni, assisted by Rev. Charles Hamel, C.S.C., and Rev. Norman Johnson, C.S.C., both members of the Class of '28.

Last Visit and Class Day

The Seniors in cap and gown moved to the Church for the private ceremony which has become so beautiful a feature of the Commencement week-end, the Last Visit.

From there, the procession moved to Washington Hall for the Class Day exercises and the award of honors. Francis Werner, president of the Class, gave a short address of welcome. James Joseph Boyle delivered the Class Oration. Cornelius Joseph Laskowski, C.S.C., read his Class Poem. Michael Joseph Leding gave the Valedictory. The University orchestra played before and after the ceremonies.

The Baseball Game

Michigan State brought its snappy baseball squad to Cartier Field and with utter disregard for the occasion, and Notre Dame's big league traditions, added the final defeat of the season to the Irish record.

The Alumni Banquet

One thousand alumni, including the Class of 1933, broke all records (and emphasized the remarkable facilities of the University Dining Halls) at the Alumni Banquet in the East Hall of the Dining Halls on Saturday Night.

Because of the crowded program of the week-end, the heat, and the uncertainty of arrival of the celebrated guests, only a skeleton program for the Banquet had been planned. But it turned out to be one of the most satisfactory in the Banquet history of the Association.

Retiring President Manion, a toastmaster of wide repute, conducted the affair. In an introductory address, he outlined the progress of the year, made suggestions for further development, expressed his views as the result of his experience as president of the Association.

Introduction of Rev. M. A. Mulcaire, C.S.C., '17, vice-president of the University, to speak on behalf of the University in the absence of Rev. Charles L. O'Donnell, C.S.C., '06, brought to alumni another of those pleasing and inspiring summaries of the year at Notre Dame—a year, in spite of the depression, which moved the University a definite step toward that Greater Notre Dame whose horizon has been drawing so close. Father Mulcaire stressed particularly the fine report which the North Central Association received on Notre Dame athletics, absolving the University of all the mythical charges leveled against Notre Dame. He listed the deaths of alumni and faculty which have brought their quota of sorrow to the year just closed. And he praised the alumni for their advice and support, urging continuing interest and participation of alumni in the development of the University.

Byron V. Kanaley, newly elected Honorary president of the Association, gave a most pleasing talk, with the exception of attributing to his office the recognition of age, an accusation completely out of keeping with his appearance, voice and activities generally, not to mention actual age.

The highlight of the Banquet was the introduction of Rev. Charles Coughlin, who arrived Saturday afternoon, and the brief but eloquent address which he delivered in the beautiful voice which has become so familiar to millions of American radio listeners. The theme of Father Coughlin's remarks at the Banquet was the teaching of Christ, and his apostles as the first alumni. Father Coughlin, speaking on the eve of Pentecost, urged Notre Dame alumni, as Christ urged his disciples, to use the great gifts of their Faith in their various ways and places of life.

President Manion finally yielded the meeting to M. Harry Miller, '10, newly elected president of the Association, who, after a short inaugural talk promising a "new deal" and continuing development of the Association, adjourned the meeting.

Glee Club Concert

Another event, running concurrently with the Alumni Banquet, was turning away crowds from the new

Al Smith Speaks At Laetare Medal Presentation

Throng of Admirers Thrilled and Pleased With Informal but Typical Remarks by America's Great Catholic Statesman.

"Unless the New York producers realize that the public does not want cheap and smutty drama, there will be need soon to clamp a censorship on the spoken drama," said former Gov. Alfred E. Smith, of New York, when he addressed a crowd estimated at 6,000 Sunday night, June 4, at the Laetare medal golden jubilee celebration in the University of Notre Dame gymnasium.

Former Gov. Smith's attack on the conditions of the drama in New York was in introduction to Miss Margaret Anglin, famous New York actress, who spoke at the Laetare golden jubilee celebration.

"She is one of the foremost actresses in America," he said. "But that doesn't mean a thing. What is more important is that she has held a steadfast position for clean drama and the Lord knows we need it."

Former Gov. Smith was chairman of the program which featured the presentation of the 1933 Laetare award to John McCormack. Most Rev. John Francis Noll, D.D., bishop of Fort Wayne presided.

While camera lights flashed and the crowd roared its approval, Mr. Smith advanced to the microphones at the fore of the platform.

"There is an unwritten tradition that neither the chairman nor toastmaster of a program is supposed to speak. "Well . . ." he began with a large flourish of his arms. "It's all that I expected and then some." He referred to the day's program.

"As I sat here this afternoon and saw these young men file past to receive their diplomas I was glad to see New York so well represented in each group. In fact, New York is well represented on the entire program, I'm pleased to see."

He then remarked on having heard as he entered the building, "the strains of a familiar tune," and told how "The Sidewalks of New York" had originally been attached to his name.

"In 1924," he said, "I left New York for the national convention at San Francisco. There was an understanding that until New York knew what to do with its 90 delegates I was to be its candidate for president. I was not very well known then."

Bourke Cochran, he said, during his speech nominating Smith, made some oratorical reference to Smith's having risen from the sidewalks of New York.

At that convention, he said, each candidate was assigned a favorite tune that was played by a brass band with a little Italian leader whenever the opportunity offered. One of the candidates had selected "The Sidewalks" as his theme song. But when Cochran made a grand oratorical reference to Smith's rise from the sidewalks of New York, the Italian band leader thought it the cue for that piece and though the band didn't play it very well, he had no trouble getting all the New York sidewalk votes as a result and the tune clug to him.

"In fact," he said, "they said of me that I had to sing to get elected, that I was elected after I had gone around singing a song."

Former Gov. Smith's peculiarities of speech, so strange to a midwestern audience, drew applause and laughter from the crowd at every evidence of a lapse into "foist" or "the like."

"I can think of no man in America today that is more deserving of this honor from Notre Dame," he said, referring to the award of the Laetare medal to Mr. McCormack. "When God gives great gifts he has the right to expect great returns, and McCormack has always used the great gift of his voice for the support and relief of those less fortunate."

This was the only public speaking done by Mr. Smith during his stay on the Notre Dame campus or in South Bend. It was his first visit to Notre Dame.

"I have been waiting for four years to come," he told the audience, "and it was worth while."

and decorative portal of Washington Hall. The Glee Club, under the direction of Joseph Casasanta, '23, which is now appearing at leading theaters in the principal cities of the East and will close at Chicago in September, gave one of its varied and excellent programs to guests and the widows and children of Banqueting alumni.

Chimes and Organ Recital

Instead of the Studebaker Band's annual concert this year, the visitors on Saturday evening enjoyed a special recital of the chimes and the organ in Sacred Heart Church, broadcast through special amplifiers to the Main Quadrangle by Mr. Willard Groom, member of the faculty of the music department.

Monogram Luncheons

After considerable uncertainty as to time and place, the Monogram Club finally gathered in the East Hall of the Dining Halls on Sunday noon for a very enjoyable luncheon in keeping with the old tradition.

Address by the Hon. Paul V. McNutt, Governor of Indiana

At the Eighty-Ninth Annual Commencement Exercises of the University of Notre Dame

Mr. President, Reverend fathers, Distinguished guests, Members of the Graduation Class:

In the closing pages of Plato's Republic is found the story of the prophet who said to the souls of men given a chance to come back to this world and choose the lives they should lead: "Hear the words of Lachesis, daughter of Necessity: Mortal souls, behold a new cycle of life and mortality! Let him who draws the first lot have the first choice, and the life that he chooses shall be his destiny. Virtue is free, and as a man honors her he will have more or less of her. The responsibility is with the loser. God is justified!"

The life you choose shall be your destiny, as well as the destiny of your generation.

You leave the University during a critical period, a time of stress and change. The change carries with it the possibility of far reaching consequence. It offers the opportunity to prove that free people can meet any crisis, however great. It calls for leadership based upon patriotism, courage, intelligence, and humility.

The patriotism must be a new, a greater, a continuous patriotism. Some look upon patriotism as a thing reserved for armed conflict. We wait for the blare of martial music, the sound of marching feet and the rumble of the caisson to quicken the pulse and inspire devotion to the common cause. They are sustained by the excitement of the moment and lose all interest in public matters when the hostilities cease. Such intermittent attention to the general welfare does not satisfy the public needs.

The struggle to restore economic equilibrium is as grim and as real as any war. It calls for the same unselfish service, energy, intelligence and solidarity. It requires the same willingness to give all that we are and all that we hope to be without thought of reward save the accomplishment of high purposes. It demands nothing more—a critical and searching examination of all agencies to see which, if any, have outlived their usefulness. This is the time for perfect candor—no bragging, no pretense that things are better than they are, no tolerance of what should not be tolerated. Such patriotism is necessary if we are to weather the present economic storm.

Patriotism without courage is of little avail. I have been deeply concerned by the pessimism of many of our people during recent months. Some of them, as individuals, repeat Kipling's pagan psalm, founded on the story in the tenth chapter of Luke which tells how Martha, who was cumbered with much serving, while Mary sat at Jesus' feet, came to Jesus and said, "Lord, dost thou not care that my sister hath left me to serve alone? Bid her, therefore, that she help me." Whereupon Jesus answered and said, "Martha, Martha, thou art careful and troubled about many things. But one thing is needful, and Mary hath chosen that good part, which shall not be taken away from her."

Mr. Kipling has taken the part of Martha and her kind, who, he says:

"... Must await upon Mary's sons,
World without end, reprieve or rest.
It is their care in all ages to Take the buffet and cushion the shock:
It is their care that the gear gears:
It is their care that the switches lock.
They finger death at their glove's end
When they piece and replace the living wires. He rears against the gate they Tend: they feed him hungry behind their fires.

To these from birth in belief forbidden
They are concerned with matters hidden:
Under the earth line their altars are.
Lift yet the stone or cleave the wood,
To make a path more fair or flat—
Lo! It is black already with blood
Some sons of Martha spilled for that!"

Meanwhile, he says, the sons of Mary

"... sit at the feet, and they hear the Word.
They know how truly the promise runs
They have cast their burden upon the Lord, and—the Lord, He lays it on Martha's sons."

It is true that most of you are the children of Martha. You are cumbered with much serving. You are to bear the burden and the heat of the days. You are to be weary of the work which you have chosen and intolerably weary with the drudgery which you have not chosen. You are to enter fine fields of enterprise and to see yourselves growing quickly old with only a little accomplished. You are to find yourselves blamed for doing the right thing when it happens to be the unpopular thing. You are to begin in the freedom of youth and you are to end each in his own prison of habits. You are to face society bearing its ancient hereditary burden of tasks, of iniquity, of sorrows, and to find presently that something of all of this has been laid on you.

You can bear all of this and not be a pessimist. You can know the best without surrender. It is possible to meet life as the best men of the great races have done with indomitable courage (which a few of our great leaders have today) and indestructible hope (hope which many of us are living).

Other pessimists fear for society as a whole. They say that the structure of society is threatened by Communism of Russia, not alone by its propaganda but likewise by its alleged power to undersell and thus bankrupt the entire world. They say that dull-witted, vain and insolent we clap roundly on the rump the four horses of the apocalypse and bid them to prepare anew to trample the human herd. They say that in spite of our science and invention, or because of them, we are approaching a period such as that which followed the decline of the Roman Empire. Even such a man as Henry Adams, descendant of presidents, student of affairs both economic and political, says that he sees upon the scroll of destiny for the United States of America, four frightful choices: first, the pessimism of Europe's dying civilization; second, the tyranny of capital of labor; third, a return to mysticism; or fourth, a ceaseless reiteration of the old processes under new guises at a monotonous level.

Does Mr. Adams mean that he has lost faith in our peoples? Does he mean that he has lost faith in the ability of the masses as contrasted with heroes, the miracle men of the classes, to work out by reasonably adequate methods the issues which are raised by the flow of time? Surely he does not mean that. Every page of our history refutes such statement.

Does Mr. Adams mean that he has lost faith in the genius of the American people? A genius which has produced more by way of scientific achievement during the last decade and a half than has been produced during any half century of the world's history. Certainly that same genius is with us. Certainly it can produce for us those things which are absolutely essential for health, security, some share of this world's goods, some leisure time in which to enjoy that share, some ability and some desire to make a worthwhile contribution to the sum of things as they are.

I wish to be counted among those who deny the most of these prophecies of evil and who defy the rest. Who are these prophets and where have they been?

To use the words of Carlyle, "they have been nowhere but where we also have been and have seen at most a few handbreadths deeper than we now see into the ocean, which is without bottom and without shore." Rather than choose the words of some of these major and minor Jeremiahs, I would invite your attention to the words of a man who faced crises in his day and a man who stood at Valley Forge 'midst privation and suffering and kept his faith, kept his faith in his men, kept his faith in his nation which was to be, kept his faith in his God. Washington said then—and his words are particularly applicable now—"The game is yet in our hands. To play it well is all we have to do. Nothing but honesty, harmony, industry, and frugality are necessary to make us a great and happy people." The game is yet in our own hands. To play it well is all we have to do. Nothing but honesty, harmony, industry, and frugality are necessary to keep us a great and happy people.

I do not blame these pessimists when I realize that a few short months ago we had in this country all of the things which the writer of Utopian literature thought necessary to the perfect state. We had plenty of money. We had literally millions of hands ready to work. We had no pest of wind or weather. We had no armed invader hammering at our gates to disturb our minds or to destroy the course of our enterprise. Yet at that very moment the shadow of a great economic depression fell across the nation.

It is necessary for us to make one of three choices. First, we could beat a retreat in the face of our manifestly serious problems. We could beat a retreat and follow the example of some of the countries on the continent of Europe and attempt to find relief in the disintegrative process of dictatorship, neither one of which has any place in the United States of America. I have been accused of choosing this second course. That is not true. Among other things government is a business and must be managed as a business. The people of Indiana have made their governor general manager of governmental activities. He is a constitutional officer elected by and responsible to the people. Instead of creating a dictatorship the Indiana plan has made possible the application of common sense and practical methods to the important business of government.

We can make a second choice, following the example of some of our so-called captains of industry and some of our so-called leaders and educators, that is dig ourselves in and merely attempt to preserve those institutions which have grown through the years. No nation stands in one spot. It either moves forward or backward. Happily the faces of the American people have ever been turned forward.

Therefore, in reality, we have but one choice is we would be worthy of the fine heritage which is ours, if we would save our souls from damnation. That is the choice which Foch made in the darkest year of the World War, when everything had gone against him. His choice was in the form of this message: "My left is giving way. My right is falling back. Therefore I am ordering a charge, a decisive attack by the center." We can order an attack, move forward with courage and determination under responsible and responsive leadership, solving our problems and bringing about a better social and economic era. We can then say to those prophets of evil that the shadows which some say are the lengthening shadows of the dusk in the United States of America, are not the lengthening shadows of the dusk at all. They are the shortening shadows of the dawn of a better day.

The third basis of today's leadership must be intelligence. Your diploma is not necessarily proof of that. It means that the University has done its part.

The purpose of an education is to teach men how to think, to make them students for the remainder of their lives, students of great books, students of men, students of events. I am particularly anxious that the members of your generation study most of the great and ever changing book which is the life of the people around you. God give you the power to read it deeply. You will know the wolf that is in us all, that sometimes we hunt together in packs, that sometimes we tear each other to pieces over the carcass. You will understand how we hunger and thirst and speak and barter our lives away for a little mess of pottage. But, if you read deeply enough, you will see also that underneath the greed, the lust, the treachery, there is something worth saving. Jesus of Nazareth knew that and died that man might be saved.

Lowell said that the final defense of Democracy is whether it can produce the best men. The members of your generation have an opportunity to meet the test and to justify the faith of all who love freedom. The test will be the intelligent performance of these immediate tasks: to provide food, clothing, and shelter to the destitute, the aged and the infirm; to lower the costs of government and to simplify its operations; to reduce and redistribute the burden of taxes; to maintain an adequate system of education; to promote the efficient administration of justice; to strengthen necessary social agencies; to remove special privilege from the seats of power; to offer every assistance in restoring economic equilibrium, and to regain confidence in ourselves and in our institutions.

Important as all these matters are, I wish to emphasize the first, without which the others are of little consequence. When the Savior said, "After this manner therefore pray ye," His first petition was, "Give us this day our daily bread." It is not that man lives by bread alone. Things of the spirit are likewise necessary. But it is significant that, through the ages, hungry people have been in the vanguard of every revolt against the established order. A hungry man is never rational in his attitude toward the life of the community or toward his own life. Therefore it is our business to make those adjustments which guarantee to every man the right to live as a normal human being.

You enter upon your active life at a time when the lives and fortunes of the people are at stake. Who would refuse them the best fruits of our minds and hearts? Who would not choose the high course of action? Who would betray the great trust? Certainly no one who bears the mark of this great University.

The fourth requisite of your leadership must be a spirit of humility. It is necessary that you see your duty, that you conceive it in high terms and that you spend yourself not upon your own ambitions, but upon the duty which is before you. You must be humble in the presence of your great opportunity. There is work to be done, service to be rendered and sacrifice to be made in your home, in your occupation, in your church, in your community, in your state, and in your nation. Your question is what can I do, not what can be done for me. You brought nothing into the world in the beginning: you will take nothing out at the end. Your sole contri-

Season tickets for the games in the Notre Dame Stadium—Kansas, Pittsburgh, Purdue and Southern California—total value of $14.00 including tax and postage—are being offered for $11.20, including tax and postage, a saving of 20 per cent, with the usual advantages of location and sameness in seats for all games. In addition, this year, the Football Tickets Committee is accepting $3 as an order for a season ticket, the balance of $7, plus tax and postage, to be remitted on or before Sept. 1.

The diagram attached shows the system of ticket distribution. Alumni who will scan this carefully can find little fault with the preference extended to them. Difficulties usually arise from failure to observe one of the alumni rules to secure this preference—have your order in on time, and have your dues paid on time. The sale opens August 1 this year as usual. The deadline for handing in the names of alumni whose dues are paid, however, has been extended to September 1.

The season ticket sale opened June 20.

You can save a great deal of time for the Alumni Office and yourselves if all football ticket matters are directed to the Football Ticket Committee, Notre Dame, Indiana.

bution to the sum of things will be yourself. Are you willing to place yourself upon the altar in order that life may be better? The tradition of this place, its history, its fine contributions to all things worthwhile make me think that you are. Stalwart, humble men of God have made this institution, Father Corby, Father Thomas Walsh, Father Andrew Morrissey, Father John Cavanaugh, Father James Burns, Father Matthew Walsh, Father Charles O'Donnell. It is for you to prove yourselves worthy of membership in that great company who made Notre Dame.

A University is not to be found in buildings, magnificent as they may be. A University is to be found in its men.

As I have told you in the beginning, the life you choose shall be your destiny. It shall also be the destiny of your beloved Alma Mater. God grant that you may be guided by the ancient phrase: "So teach us to number our days that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom."

Golden Jubilee Brings History of Laetare Medal

Record of Awards Since 1883, Outlined by Margaret Anglin and Dr. James J. Walsh, Reveals Great and Sustained Merit in the Tradition of "The American Golden Rose"

One of the features within a feature was the summary history of the Laetare Medal from its beginning in 1883 to the present. Dr. James J. Walsh, famous physician, author and lecturer, familiar and beloved visitor on the Notre Dame campus, undertook the task of sketching the brilliant array of Catholic laymen who have been honored with the award. Himself the applauded choice for the distinction in 1916, Dr. Walsh necessarily omitted one of the great figures of the laity in America whom an Sc.D. in 1909 and the Medal in 1916 recognized for Notre Dame.

Following is the history of the men who have received the Laetare Medal. (This paper closes with an introduction of Miss Anglin, and is followed immediately by her beautiful tributes to the women Medalists.)

I first came to Notre Dame just about forty years ago to see the place and to spend an hour or two with my very dear friend, Dr. Austin O'Malley. At that time Notre Dame was the largest of the Catholic colleges of this country though its attendance was in hundreds, scarcely more than it is in thousands now. The Laetare Medal had been conferred for the tenth time that year and the annual event was beginning to attract the attention that it deserved.

The numbers in our Catholic colleges at that time and especially the numbers of collegians, for the enrollment in the Catholic colleges was swollen by the long lists of pupils in the preparatory school and even in the elementary department, were so few that it must have seemed to a great many almost impossible that worthy Catholic laymen as the years went on could be found for the award. It was true that the liberal spirit of the college stimulated undoubtedly by the sister institutions of St. Mary's, scarcely more than a mile away, had dictated the presentation of the third Laetare Medal to a woman, Eliza Allen Starr, and this doubled the number of candidates and showed at the same time how ready churchmen were to recognize women's rights in intellectual matters but even with addition it seemed as though available candidates worthy of the distinction would require very careful searching for.

Now after fifty years we may look back and realize that the roll of honor thus created has been very worthily filled up and that there are men on it whose names will be in benediction for generations and whose work awaits them in the gates where they will surely illustrate very well the power of Catholic education to make men think of others rather than themselves.

As one goes over this list carefully one almost inevitably comes to the conclusion that the example set by these men eminently deserved a distinction which called attention to the unselfishness, a word which is for me much stronger than altruism, which characterized them. I doubt whether there is any list connected by any bond here in America that enrolls so many men whose significant distinction was their thoughtfulness for others rather than themselves. Long ago He said, "And the second commandment is like unto the first, thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." It was Kipling, I think, who once said, "Show me a man who thinks more about others than himself and I'll show you a man who will go far in making a real success in life." Well, this list of Laetare Medalists contains particularly a group of men who thought in terms of others. Over and over again one finds this illustrated in their biographic sketches.

Here we have a band of representative American citizens, most of them modest, rather retiring scholars, whose achievements would be little known very often only for the fact that Notre Dame picked them out to honor them particularly and give them a place among her immortals. The best thing about the Laetare Medal award is that it presents young Catholics with models for work in life that will make existence worth while indeed. Most of them, I am quite sure, had no idea of the honor that was coming to them, and least of all felt themselves worthy of it. Personal or political or social influence has meant nothing to the keepers of the lists, and the result is this distinctive group of Catholics that represent such an honor to us. Biography has come in with a rush in our time but much of its has fulfilled in Shakespeare's dictum, "the evil that men do lives after them and the good is oft interred with their bones." Above all autobiography has only too often partaken of the character of ought-not-obitography. Here is a list of incentives and exemplars well worth while.

The very first to receive the Laetare Medal probably deserved that distinction better than anyone who has received it during the fifty years since. John Gilmory Shea was a genuine historian in the best sense of the term and he spent all his mature life in the gathering of materials for the history of the Catholic Church in this country. Time had to be taken off for what a distinguished anatomist called "chasing the damn dollar," because there was a family to support. His work is an enduring monument to his whole-hearted industry and self-sacrificing devotion to a great cause. I count it as one of the distinctions of life to have known him and to have had the privilege a few years after his death of paying tribute to him at the unveiling of a tablet in his honor at the door of the Newark cathedral.

After him came Keely, a great architect, who more than any other changed the style of ecclesiastical structure and modified architectural taste in this country. Just forty years later another architect was to receive the honor, Charles Maginnis, who worthily set the capstone on what Keeley so well began, and who has been a godsend for the uplift of architectural taste in our academy, college and church buildings.

The third medalist was Eliza Allen Starr. Miss Anglin will tell you about her, but it was a triumph for true liberalism of mind to have her selected. This is all the more interesting because about that time a young woman passed the examination for the senior wranglership in mathematics at Cambridge, England, and they gave her a certificate to that effect, but passed the wranglership on to the man who was next. How I would like to have been the senior "wrangler under those circumstances!

And then there was a group of military scientists initiated by the fourth medalist, General John Newton. During the next forty years he was to be followed by General Rosecrans, Admiral William S. Benson and Dr. Albert F. Zahm of aeronautic fame. I can speak of only one of them as we pass, Admiral Benson whom I knew very well, and who was one of the most important figures in the modern history of the United States navy. It was said of him,

"Whatever ship he served was sure to be a happy ship." He was a daily communicant, a convert who shamed many to the manner born, and an historic American figure, a demonstration of Catholic patriotism.

And then came the first of a group of journalists, Edward Preuss, whom our German friends appreciated so thoroughly; P. V. Hickey, known by the Irish; and Patrick Donahoe, known by American Catholics everywhere. Had he done nothing but give Boyle O'Reilly his opportunity to write for his Irish compatriots here in America that would have been fame enough, but he was a Catholic patriarch who worked marvels and began the transformation of Puritan Boston into what it is today. As for P. V. Hickey, I could say much but refrain. He attended my Commencement at Fordham and offered me a chance to write for his paper. I knew that he had excellent taste in journalism.

And then came a series of publicists and philanthropists, Onahan of Chicago; Daniel Dougherty of Philadelphia; John A. Creighton of Omaha, founder of the University; Thomas Fitzpatrick who succeeded Donahoe as a Catholic benefactor of Boston; Tom Mulry, the beloved of New York, with regard to whose marvelous work for the children of New York we heard over the Catholic Hour last Sunday; George Duval, the founder of so many Catholic institutions; Kenkel, the great leader in German Catholic activities, another one of these marvelous converts who show native Catholics their way to heaven; James J. Phelan, a worthy successor of Donahoe and Fitzpatrick in Catholic welfare for Boston. Most of these men I knew personally, but that only makes it all the harder to skip over their achievements with the paucity of words that the circumstances of this occasion demand of me.

And now that I come to medicine I refuse to be confined within such word fetters, but I think that you will agree that there is more than professional partiality to justify loquacity about them. Among the Laetare medalists are some of the greatest American physicians. Thomas Addis Emmet probably saved more pain and suffering to women from the unfortunate results of complications in the precious process of motherhood than any other man who lived. No wonder patients came to him from all over the world. No wonder that his textbook was translated into four languages. No wonder that men already of distinction in this field came across the Atlantic in order to see what Emmet was accomplishing. His results seemed almost incredible until you actually saw them accomplished.

Dr. John B. Murphy, it has been said, made Chicago famous. He was known all over the world for his inventions, discoveries and observations in surgery. I can still recall very vividly how cordial was the welcome to him at the International Medical Congress of Medicine in Moscow in 1897. One of the greatest of living surgeons declared that Murphy was the greatest surgeon for the last three hundred years. He listed all the surgeons of distinction for that period and he knew his history of surgery very well, and then placed Murphy at the head of them. Our own Dr. Will Mayo of Rochester, Minn., declared that Murphy had done more to make American surgery what it is, the leader of the world in this department, than any other. Then there was Dr. Lawrence Flick of Philadelphia, who is acknowledged to have done so much for the reduction of the mortality from consumption, which had been in Defoe's picturesque phrase, the captain of the men of death, and has become one of the less important factors in the mortality lists. The very latest of Laetare Medalists before today, Dr. Stephen Maher, was another one of these heroes of tuberculosis who have accomplished so much in wiping out to such a happy extent that great folk disease, the White Plague, that was so threatening only a generation ago—and now is faced so confidently. It might be easy to think that this list of Laetare medalists exhausted the roll of Catholics of any distinction in this country. It might even seem, since so much of the work of these men was done in the quiet obscurity that so often represents the best environment for the doing of good to others, that Catholics had made less than their due contribution to accomplishment in this country. Anyone who has looked over even casually the work known as the Catholic Builders of the Nation will have brought home to him how active Catholics have been in American life considering conditions and opportunities. As it is there are a number of men who might readily have found a place on this Laetare list only that others seemed for the moment to possess more distinction and to carry more prestige. Years ago Alphonse Daudet, I think it was, in France having failed of election himself to the French Academy, the famous Forty Immortals, wrote the story of The Forty-first Fauteuil, pointing out that in every generation someone had been refused admission to the Academy who was at least as distinguished as those admitted, so that "the forty-first chair" actually had more distinction than almost any other chair in the Academy. I think that something of that same kind might well be said of the Laetare Medal. It is easy to look back and wonder why certain men did not receive the medal, for they certainly deserved it as much as many of those who got it. As a physician I think for the moment in terms of medicine and such names occur to me as that of Professor Thomas Dwight, Parkman Professor of Anatomy at Harvard for twenty-five years in the chair that had been occupied by Oliver Wendell Holmes; Dr. Joseph O'Dwyer, whose invention of intubation saved so many lives and so much suffering among children; Van Buren, the distinguished New York surgeon; and Edward L. Keyes, Sr., another of our great surgeons, known all over the country, both of them converts to the Church. When I recall in addition Charles O'Connor, the great lawyer, and O'Callaghan, the historian of New York State, I know that the forty-first fauteuil is as well occupied in America as in France.

And now with the list of doctors completed I am almost free to confess that the lawyers are ahead of us physicians in the distinction of their members who have been Laetare medalists. Among them were Timothy Howard, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Notre Dame's own state of Indiana; New York's great lawyer and orator, statesman and defender of the faith, Bourke Cochran, the youngest man to receive the Laetare Medal, for he was only forty-seven; Charles J. Bonaparte, who said when the medal was conferred on him, "What America demands of a patriot chiefly is not that he die for his country, but that he live for it." He was the evangelist of the doctrine, "No man can be a good Catholic who is not a good citizen. It is not enough that this doctrine be affirmed by our catechism or declared by our preachers; it must be recognized in our lives."

Among the lawyers also was that great Chief Justice of the United States, Edward Douglas White. With Robert Brooke Taney he was one of two Catholics who were on the Supreme Bench for some sixty years, and for nearly half a century were Chief Justices of the United States. Could there be a greater tribute to Catholic citizenship?

Then there is Joe Scott, probably the best known lawyer on the Pacific coast, and Walter George Smith, one of the best known lawyers in the East, president of the American Bar Association, the highest honor for a member of the bar. He was co-author of that life of Father Fidelis of the Passionists whose conversion to the Church while president of Hobart College meant so much. Then there is Jack Spalding, who used all the diplomacy developed by legal training to foster understanding among his fellow citizens of the South and to minimize the religious intolerance that is due more to ignorance than to anything else.

The first of the medalists was an author, modest and unassuming, but his work was enduring. He initiated a series of authors highly honored in their own day. There was Henry F.

Brownson, the son of Orestes, but himself declared to be one of the most scholarly men of his day. Then there was Maurice Francis Egan who occupies so high a place in the memories of Notre Dame students and who was one of the most genial of diplomats, a poet and novelist as well. How different Egan was from the author medalist of three years later, Charles Heberman, looked upon as one of the best classical scholars of his generation, an authority on Latin language and literature, as well as on Roman antiquities, and the greatest guiding spirit of the Catholic Encyclopedia, that triumph of American scholarship.

Then there is a group of men who may well be called statesmen. A witty Frenchman once defined a statesman as a dead politician, but these men were not politicians, but men who devoted themselves to some of the best service to the commonwealth. Richard C. Kerens, a great pioneer in American transportation, who made a fortune without smirch, and who was noted for his charities and benefactions, his gifts to the Catholic University and to the University of St. Louis, eminently deserved the appointment of Ambassador of Austria. He was a devotee of daily Mass. Three years later he was followed as medalist by James Monaghan, who worked up from poverty to be a prominent authority on United States foreign relation and trade. Another of the series was Charles Patrick Neill, commissioner of labor under Roosevelt, Taft and Wilson, and it is easy to understand that anyone who could satisfy the policies of three men so different in the solution of problems so knotty as those of the labor field in the first quarter of the twentieth century is a man of tact and judgment and intellectual acumen. Another of the statesman medalists was Edward Nash Hurley, the head of the United States Shipping Board during the war. Quite needless to say this was a difficult position and yet he emerged from it with a commandment in the French Legion of Honor, a Grand Officer of the Crown of Italy, and a Distinguished Service Medal from General Pershing, just another of these Laetarists who began at the bottom of the social ladder and well deserved the distinction of being picked out as the distinctive Catholic layman of his day.

No New Yorker could quite trust himself to speak about the next of the statesmen, Alfred E. Smith, who received the medal in 1929. He is the greatest of all our American Catholic laymen and as our greatest New York lawyer, Elihu Root, said after the Constitutional Convention in New York. "Al Smith has been the most useful member of this committee." That was years ago and since we have had the benefit of his seasoned wisdom.

I come to the artists who have been honored. Thirty years ago the Laetare Medal was conferred on Augustine Daly of New York, the apostle of high and uplifting art. He changed the traditions of the theater from the worship of the star to group excellence. No wonder he achieved worldwide fame and his company was as well known in Europe in the great capitals, Paris and London, as in America. No wonder that he was showered with honors and was looked upon as one of the great moral forces of his day. What he did for the stage comes out all the more by contrast with what the drama became after his day in New York.

And after having paid tribute to Augustine Daly—one of the self-made Laetarists, whose brother, Judge Daly, once said to me, "The best education that you can give a boy of twelve to fifteen is to put his widowed mother on his hands to support. If there is anything in the boy it will come out." That is what happened to the two Dalys, and both of them succeeded admirably, both of them became leaders in their own lines in New York.

I am told that I should introduce the next speaker who is herself a medalist and who is so much better known than I am even to this audience that I hesitate to do more than present her. She is one of the greatest of Shakespearean actresses, the marvelously successful originator of a revival of the twentieth century of Greek classic drama crowned with a laurel wreath as "the foremost actress of America" by the University of California, invited by the Greek government to produce the Greek classics in Athens. She comes worthily to a place beside Augustine Daly in what she has done for the uplift of the stage. She is the champion of high ideals in the theater, a recognized outstanding leader of women in public artistic life, who became her own producer rather than submit to the dictates of producers exploiting immoral drama, one of the worthiest of the holders of the Laetare Medal who will tell you as no mere man could the tale of the other women medalists.

Miss Anglin's Talk

In the fifty years since the Laetare Medal was instituted, ten women have been recognized and honored. It is for them I have been chosen to speak on this Jubilee occasion. The honor is a great one. May I first say for myself, that next to the honor of receiving this inspiring decoration, no privilege could be greater than to be spokesman this evening for my distinguished sisters.

In the ritual of the Church on Laetare Sunday, the theme is leadership. In that ritual the Call of Moses is commemorated, the Call of God, which summoned Moses to lead the chosen people out of the Wilderness into the Land of Promise. The Israelites had their Moses to lead them. But the story of their wanderings and triumphs tells us, also, that they had their Deborah—their woman leader—who cried out to Barak, "Up! for this is the day in which the Lord hath delivered Sisera into thy hand!" And Deborah went up with him and Deborah sang her famous song of leadership and victory praising the Lord for his blessings.

Notre Dame, in conferring her award year after year on leaders of the American laity has not forgotten the Deborahs. This is a man's school, but is it not presided over by a woman? By the woman of all women—Our Lady! Woman is not forgotten here.

The first woman to receive the Laetare Medal was the well known art critic Eliza Allen Starr, to whom the decoration was given in 1885 the third year of the award. To no single person in the history of American culture do we owe more than to Eliza Allen Starr for our development in the appreciation of art. Few have mastered the principles of painting as she did; but she did more than master them. Her love of Beauty was a communicable gift. She was able to convey to others, to thousands, through books and lectures her enthusiasm and her keen knowledge of color and form, not to speak of her vast knowledge of the History of art. She was the American Ruskin. More than ever today we need her ideals!

The first award of the Laetare Medal for imaginative literature was made in 1889 and it went to the novelist Anna Hanson Dorsey. The name of this gifted woman stands in the record of American literature as that of the pioneer Catholic Novelist. Until she brought her pen to its task, there was no such thing as Catholic fiction in America, and it was a time when the printed word was badly needed by a people often scattered far from the ordinary contacts of the old Faith, needed not only to stir their imaginations but to rouse and keep alive their pride in the often very difficult practice of their religion.

In the charming and romantic pages of Mrs. Dorsey's twenty or more novels the Catholic masses of earlier times found that wholesome pleasure and that inspiration to "carry on."

Very truly may it be said of Anna Hanson Dorsey, as Maurice Francis Egan said to her in his sonnet on the occasion of her decoration—that she "with noble art, worked serene above a sordid world—

Not prizing much its praises or its blame,

But telling secrets to the Faithful heart

Learned well of God!"

Creative literature was crowned for the second time in 1895 when another novelist, Mary A. Sadlier was honored.

The term "a household world" is probably out-worn; but never to any name could it be more literally applied than to the name of Mrs. Sadlier.

Every state in the Union knew Mrs. Sadlier's stories, "The Blakes and the Flannigans," "Willie Burke," "The Confederate Chieftains."

Those books—many of them still read—are records of a time of struggle and development.

When Notre Dame, in 1899, scanned the world of American Catholic lay achievement to find the one most highly meriting national recognition, one name stood out—Mary Gwendolen Caldwell. This time the choice fell not in the field of art, but in the field of education and philanthropy. It was Miss Caldwell's deep interest in Catholic education that moved her to give to that cause perhaps the most significant gift ever bestowed upon it in this country. She founded the Catholic University of America; she may truly be called its founder, since it was her munificence that made possible the erection of its first building. That epochal gift was recognized in the highest quarter when Pope Leo XIII conferred on Miss Caldwell the Golden Rose. It was fitting, then, that the Laetare Medal, the "Golden Rose of America," should also be hers; and all the more so since, following her first memorable beneficence, she added to it the foundation of a Fellowship and a Scholarship in the School of Divinity:

A woman of great wealth, Miss Caldwell's charities were many; she was a true philanthropist and she was far-seeing as well as generous. Since her time, hosts of men, armed with the Catholic faith, have gone out from the walls of the school that she endowed, many of them to significant achievement. Some have come to wear the Laetare Medal. And the riches of achievement which life has given them came from the wealth of a woman's heart.

Leadership in the world of journalism has commonly belonged to men. Women have long played a part in the molding of opinion through the public prints, but seldom has she been at the helm. Katherine E. Conway, the Laetare Medalist of 1907, was one of the few women leaders that American journalism has produced. Trained in the stern old-time school of Patrick Donahoe, for half a century the high priest of Catholic journalism in the United States, Miss Conway, despite the gentleness of her nature, was the logical successor of Donahoe, and of her brilliant colleague John Boyle O'Reilly, when the historic old Pilot called for an editor. For a quarter of a century this quiet and unassuming, but brainy woman, had served the cause of Catholic letters when the Laetare Medal found her out in her little back-room office. Nor did The Pilot, patriarch of American Catholic newspapers, absorb all her energies. As literary editor of The Republic, as contributor to practically every secular daily of Boston and to numerous magazines, as poet, essayist and novelist, author of fourteen volumes of prose and verse, Miss Conway kept the candles on the altar of Catholic letters brightly lighted. Her story is the story of a public career dignified by noble service and in it we may read for all time "the lesson of the valiant woman."

"Christian Reid" was the pen-name of Frances Fisher Tiernan upon whom the Medal was conferred in 1909. Not many knew the private name of this modest Southern woman, the daughter of a Confederate colonel, but the whole world knew "Christian Reid" the novelist, whose writings were recognized as the product of a singularly gifted mind. She was one of those whose voice is heard, not alone by her fellows of the Faith, but by the non-Catholic world as well. The critical recognition given everywhere to "Christian Reid" made her work a genuine achievement in the Apostolate of Art. Her daily life, lived quietly and unobtrusively in her native Carolina, was a constant exemplification of her ideals. For years she was the only teacher of Christian doctrine in her neighborhood. Around her she gathered the children and taught them their catechism. Hundreds gave her the adoration of their hearts, as tens of thousands in the world outside gave her the homage that is the rightful reward of the true artist.

The seventh star in Laetare's galaxy of women leaders is one that happily still beams and shines for us, a true luminary in the skies of contemporary literature. More than 20 years have passed since Agnes Repplier, in 1911, was honored by Notre Dame, but already she was one of the foremost figures in American letters. A very special type of mind, a very special gift of genius, brought Agnes Repplier into what is sometimes termed the most difficult of all fields of writing—the essay. Literature has produced countless great poets, novelists, dramatics, but few supreme essayists. In American literature Emerson and Lowell lead the small band. But they do not lead it alone. It is enough to say of Agnes Repplier that, by the consensus of critical opinion, she ranks with them, she stands abreast of them. She is unquestionably the greatest of living essayists of the English tongue, and she is so recognized in Europe as well as America. She has been called by Schelling, the famous Elizabethan scholar, "the cleverest woman in America." If we take Schelling's "clever" to mean the most gifted, the most polished and finished, in short the most artistic, then the appellation is rightfully Agnes Repplier's. Miss Repplier has achieved more greatly than any other woman in her difficult field. There is no name in the catalogue of artistic accomplishments, be it man's or woman's of which America, and especially the Catholics of America, may be more justly proud than that of Agnes Repplier.

The achievements of the women whose stories I have so far told represent more than mere gifts of genius. They represent determination, hard work, indefatigable zeal. I come now to the story of one whose record on the score of purpose and courage is unique. In a sense, she stands alone among her sisters and brothers of the Laetare confraternity. Her story is one of the world's inspiring legends of courage, unquenchable spirit and unconquerable will. The story of a woman who, denied all that others have, crippled since childhood, never during the years since she was a little girl, walking, standing or even sitting, nevertheless out of the indomitable strength of her nature and out of the abundance of her heart's riches had built up one of the noblest works of charity America has known. In 1915 Notre Dame, turning from the highest tribunal of the land, having the year before given the Laetare Medal to the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, looked into the sick room of a bedridden woman and found there one of the world's leaders, one of the most inspired Deborahs—Mary Merrick. I scarcely need mention the name of her great work, the founding of the Christ Child Society, that matchless and unaccompanied institution of infant welfare which has grown out of the beautiful genius of a living modern saint. She began it one Christmas years ago, by the simple act of preparing with her own hands, as she lay stricken on her bed, some warm clothes for two poor babies. From that lovely act has grown a work of the most far-reaching consequence, a work which includes in its activities, shelters, sewing-schools, libraries, summer outing camps, hospital-visiting, settlement work, all for poor children. Most fittingly this work is carried on in the name of the Christ Child. Its founder is herself literally as hidden away as the Christ Child was at Bethlehem, and even her name would be still unknown were it not for the insistence of Notre Dame that she be recognized so that others might be given the inspiration of her example. Unique figure that Mary Merrick is in the history of Catholic lay achievement, the work that she has done is nevertheless one of the most common appeal. In that lies her greatness and in that lies her glory—in the obvious fact that from her, all of us may learn not only how to do but how to be leaders in doing, no matter what may be the handicap life puts on us.

As this cycle of Catholic womanhood preeminent in lay endeavor began with art, so it comes to a close with the name of an artist. Elizabeth Nourse, to whom the Laetare Medal was awarded in 1921, is not only the outstanding American Catholic painter of our day but is likewise one of the world's greatest living artists. Her fame is international, her record one of the most brilliant of all the wielders of the brush in modern times. Her canvasses are known in the great galleries of the world. The only American woman to be elected to membership in the Societe Nationale des Beaux Arts, winner of awards in all the world—expositions during the past 40 years—since Chicago, in 1893—Miss Nourse stands as one of the most distinguished figures in the field of painting. Accepted by the Paris Salon while still a student—an almost unprecedented honor—first recognized by Puvis de Chavannes, preeminent among modern muralists, acclaimed by Rodin, Cezanne, Carolus-Duran and the other masters, her name is indeed a resplendent one shining in the starry host of the Laetare Medalists. Yet it is not her great fame alone that is significant to us on this day when the Laetare confraternity celebrates its Golden Jubilee. Better than her fame is that for which she is famous—an art devoted to the purest ideals, a mastery of technique, of color and composition, consecrated to the picturing of human life at its best. The landscape canvasses of Elizabeth Nourse are famous for their beauty and warmth, but it is as "the artist of the lowly poor" that she will be remembered. That is enough to say of her; that tells all—all the story of her struggle up from poverty to achievement and fame, all the story of her keeping unspoiled throughout that struggle the beauty, the tenderness, the glowing human warmth and sympathy of a beautiful soul.

In the address made to that illustrious military leader, General Rosecrans, when the Laetare Medal was conferred upon him, these words were spoken: "The Laetare Medal has been worn only by men and women whose genius has ennobled the arts and sciences, illustrated the ideals of the Church, and enriched the heritage of humanity."

Americans are traditionally proud of their women. In no land is woman paid such tribute of attention and admiration as in America. Indeed, a stock European criticism against the American woman is that she is spoiled. Of course, the women smile at that, knowing all the time that it is they who spoil the men, knowing, in fact that women are adepts at the art of spoiling—and that the perfect art is the art that conceals itself! But seriously, women, being only human, enjoy the admiration of the men, which is only another way of saying that, like the men themselves, they enjoy the admiration of the world, even if sometimes their consciences reproach them for not meriting it. Yet when such a record of woman's leadership is set forth as I have tried briefly to give you here today; when womanhood is seen glorified by the personalities and achievements of such women as these nine Laetare Medalists; then a woman, speaking for herself and for all her sisters, has the right to say, and is perfectly safe in saying, though she speak in great humility, that our womanhood is a thing of which all Americans, and especially Catholic Americans, may be justly proud.

Artist To Retouch Gregori Art

The famous fresco paintings by the artist Gregori in Sacred Heart church, Notre Dame, Ind., will be rejuvenated during the next four months by Conrad Schmidt, Milwaukee, who is surpassed by no one in America as a church decorator.

The paintings, more than 50 years old, are mostly in perfect condition. Others, however, are disintegrating slightly after a half century in the picturesque Gothic structure, and the pillars and walls need re-painting.

Schmidt has just finished the fresco work in the Cathedral at Tucson, Ariz. He was the artist for the St. Louis Cathedral which contained the largest murals and frescoes in the country. He also painted the St. Peter's and Paul's church in Pittsburgh and many others of the largest in this country.

He was loud in his praise of the Gregori fresco artistry. "Many of the figures are as fresh as if they had been painted yesterday," he said. "They are good for fully another century."

Schmidt explained that Gregori worked with mineral colors, using no artificial or chemical colors. The mineral colors, he said, shed dust and permit atmospheric conditions to work through them without any disturbance.

"If these paintings were in oil they would have been black long ago," Schmidt stated. "In a church I decorated ten years ago the mosaics are already black while the frescoes are as fresh as if they were just painted. Any substance other than natural mineral colors will collect dirt and grime. These paintings have not been touched for 50 years and they look like new."

Schmidt was also highly pleased with the gothic lines of Sacred Heart church which is considered one of the finest examples in the United States of this type of architecture. The new Notre Dame buildings have been built in the modern gothic style, and Notre Dame is fast becoming one of the outstanding centers of gothic architecture.

He also had much praise for the Bernini altar which stood in Rome for 300 years and which has stood at Notre Dame for half a century. If any doubt the authenticity of this altar, he said, they have only to realize that it is in perfect condition after 350 years of constant use, and to study the style, which is definitely Bernini's. "An imitation would not have lasted this long," he said.

The famous altar, carved by the contemporary of Michaelangelo who worked with that Italian master in St. Peter's in Rome, has been used in recent years for perpetual adoration during the Lenten, Advent, and May seasons. Notre Dame is one of the few places in the country outside of convents where perpetual adoration is allowed.

Secretary's Report

May I speak first of the financial report, because what we have done has been affected by our financial condition. Here, as in the whole report, achievement of the Association, where it occurs, is pointed out for the benefit of the members and is not intended as self-praise from the Secretary.

June 1, 1932, with a balance of $582.68 on hand, we had outstanding bills of approximately $4,800, including printing, back salaries, and miscellaneous bills.

June 1, 1933, with a balance of $398.57, we have outstanding bills of approximately $4,800, which have been concentrated by the University through the assuming of the bill for the ALUMNUS and a cash advance of $1,050, to permit the Association to function in spite of this deficit.

While, therefore, we did not reduce our deficit during the year just past, it was not increased. We operated the Association during the period on a per capita cost of approximately $1.05. This represents a 50% reduction in the per capita cost from three years ago, while accompanied by a 25% increase in the number of alumni in the Association.

This represents, of course, reduction in expenditures. We doubt whether it is, completely at least, good economy.

The Alumnus

The cost of publishing the ALUMNUS this year was reduced 40% by omitting a cover and taking advantage of the general decline of the cost of printing. We believe the magazine to have been satisfactory considering the emergency. It should be improved considerably as soon as possible. The uncertainty of finances also resulted in a publication policy that hampered the unity and continuity that would increase the interest and service of the magazine.

One promising sign of the year was the doubling of the gross advertising revenue, representing the activity of a new organization which seems to be solving the peculiar field of alumni magazine advertising.

The introduction of a book review page by Father John Cavanaugh, C.S.C. and the continuation of the work of Father John O'Hara, C.S.C., through the Religious Page, were happy features.

Through the economies effected, the magazine resumed its 9-time schedule, with benefits from this regularity that we believe offset the cost.

The Local Clubs

Too much praise cannot be found to heap on the Local Clubs. During the weakest year of the Alumni Office, in many ways, the Club programs throughout the country have reflected an understanding and a co-operation which deserves the notice and the appreciation of Notre Dame and all Notre Dame men.

The Local Clubs are here to stay, realizing already possibilities that only several years ago were held to be ideals of distant hope. Universal Notre Dame Night brought undiminished enthusiasm and activity and a new note of serious purpose and achievement from all corners of the country. The Retreat movement is spreading definitely through the Clubs. The University is pleasantly amazed at the strength of the Clubs as co-operative factors in the program of contacts with preparatory students and schools.

Despite conditions, four new Clubs were organized during the year—Dallas, Texas; Laporte, Indiana; Rhode Island; and Oklahoma City. In addition, the Notre Dame Club of Bridgeport, Conn., reorganized recently on a more intensive scale, as well as extensive, to become the Notre Dame Club of Fairfield County. In addition to the numerical increase in the number of Clubs—there are now 73 such organizations—the Alumni Office has been stimulated particularly by the tone of the report of organization and the high plane of achievement of the infant organizations. In every instance, new Clubs of this year have functioned in a manner hitherto associated with far greater years and numbers.

Attendance at other Club functions, among the older Clubs, seems to have generally improved.

Work of Club officers and committees, in the widening variety of duties, has been reported most favorably during the past year from all quarters.

The Alumni Office does not hesitate to report that the worst year of the depression has been the best year of the Clubs.

Prospective-Student Contacts

A new field of activity engaged the Alumni Office to substantial degree this year. Economic conditions, and the program of the colleges generally as a result, made it advisable for Notre Dame to begin actively a survey of students for 1933-4. The alumni, the Alumni Clubs, and the Alumni Office, formed almost a natural channel for this survey. A number of members of the faculty were enlisted to visit high schools from which the University has drawn enrolment, and even in these instances, the co-operation of the alumni and the Clubs was freely given and very valuable.

Two major trips occupied six weeks actual time of the Alumni Secretary. One was East, beginning in Ohio and extending to New York, visiting 15 Local Alumni Clubs on the trip and some 25 high schools, besides sundry other contacts of value associated with such a trip. The other was confined to the neighboring but populous area in Southwestern Michigan, covering six cities and 25 high schools and civic organizations.

In addition, the Secretary has visited the Chicago Club at its luncheon several times and two Chicago high schools, and the Indianapolis Club. The Secretary is, of course, in constant contact with the Notre Dame Club of the St. Joseph Valley.

Besides these trips, supplemented by the faculty visits to other areas, the Registrar's Office and the Alumni Office have co-operated in sending out lists of prospective students and inquirers to the Clubs and the District Governors.

The N. D. Club of Milwaukee also brought ten boys, through the personal initiative and conducting of former president and present District Governor William J. Redden, to the campus for an inspection tour this Spring.

The District Governors

The above note requires a further comment on the District Governors. Holding positions without precedent in the Association, all of them men of affairs, the response of the Governors to the student contact project—the one job designed to enlist their efforts this year—has been most encouraging. The Governors have contributed to the success of this particular plan which makes the creation of their positions a definite step ahead, the program for their successors one of active proportions.

Universal Notre Dame Night

The 10th Annual Universal Notre Dame Night was observed on Monday, April 24. Due to obvious circumstances, the Alumni Office offered little enough constructive co-operation.

In spite of this, the reports were indicative of the usual splendid meetings everywhere. Speakers from the campus were present at more than the usual number of meetings.

A recent questionnaire to the Clubs, as well as a growing conviction at the University and in the Association, increases the probability of a national radio hook-up for the next U. N. D. Night.

Living Endowment

Conditions obviously made a campaign for Living Endowment during the year doubtful both as to result and policy. A gesture was made according to custom, so that the really promising plan would not lose the value of continuity.

It is therefore somewhat encouraging to report that 200 members of the Association contributed $1,375.25 to the Fund. This, under the construction of the Fund, represents $27,505 capital invested at 5%. Pressure in other departments of the Association has caused the assignment of this fund to the general expenses of the Association this year.

Dues

A serious decrease in the number of dues paid members, 354, marked this year. This, coupled with almost a 500 drop the previous year, has hit the principal source of income for the Association a terrific economic blow.

There is one improvement this year over last. The Alumni Office has received literally hundreds of letters regretting inability to pay dues, promising to pay as soon as jobs are secured, urging continuation of the ALUMNUS, and, in many cases, enclosing a dollar or two as proof of faith. So long as this situation prevails, the actual physical shrinkage does not carry its normally serious significance.

However, too much emphasis cannot be placed on dues as the sole major source of income. While the Association modified its system of billing to prevent embarrassment of the membership during the last two years, unless a voluntary response brings a return of losses suffered during these years, other and more serious steps will be forced into effect.

The Alumni Office

In spite of increased volume of membership through the addition of some 600 graduates of June and August of 1932, and in spite of the clerical work and the several weeks away from the Office caused by the participation in student contacts, the Alumni Office this year has done without the services of one of the two assistants employed last year.

This move was made reluctantly, and the difficulties with records and correspondence have made it most questionable in actual economy. While we have managed to keep up without vital losses, nevertheless we have suffered embarrassing delays in answering correspondence, delays in preparing lists of alumni for Clubs and Classes, inability to pursue the important work of filing non-graduate names, and numerous isolated cases of failure to seize opportunities that involved more attention than two people in the Office can give. Club and Class officers have been our most regrettable victims.

The Office has had more correspondence than usual this year, reflecting a growing appreciation of the numerous services possible by a central alumni office with records such as those we have. Alumni co-operation in guiding various business opportunities toward fellow alumni has evidenced an increase this year.

Special

Special projects of the year have included mailing of Questionnaires to all alumni for the second edition of the Religious Survey of Alumni, prepared and edited by Rev. John F. O'Hara, C.S.C. The first Survey attracted such wide and favorable attention in the Catholic world and carried so many things of importance and interest to Catholic higher education that the University immediately authorized further Surveys of the kind at two-year intervals. The Alumni Office and Father O'Hara co-operated in the mailing of these Questionnaires to all alumni.

For our own advancement, the Alumni Association recently issued a Questionnaire to secure business and biographical data which is almost essential to the type of activity that the development of the Alumni Association is evolving. The extent of good achieved will depend to a large extent upon the completeness of the returns. To date, however, the number answering has been satisfactory and the contents of the Questionnaires supplying ideas and material for activities even beyond the immediate objectives responsible for its mailing.

Conclusions

We repeat here our annual statement that the details of an Alumni Office permit no accurate report short of volumes. There are, however, one or two general points that we feel obligated to make.

Our present economy has gone below the level of efficiency. We must secure an increase of resources if we are to continue without serious loss. This, of course, simply means that the Association must share immediately the return of prosperity to its members, or more sacrifice from them.

More intangible as to proof, but equally strong as to conviction, is my feeling that, after almost eight years experience in the job, the Alumni Association has more understanding co-operation and more mutual respect from its members and from the University than ever before. This is the essential situation. When alumni and University understand each other and the part the Association plays as the machinery of this mutual interest, the financial support to make the machinery function is properly subordinated to the greater possibilities of the relationships. We feel secure in our prophecy that the end of this depression will be the end of all such experiences for the Association.

James E. Armstrong
Secretary-Treasurer

Harry Miller, '10, Heads New Administration

Byron Kanaley, Frank Walker, Arthur Carmody and Fred Steers Join Alumni Board; Plans in Process for a Success Program.

Balloting by members of the Association brought the usual fine results. Inasmuch as the nominations have never failed to select only leaders in the Association, the elections themselves can hardly go astray.

President of the new regime is Mr. Harry "Red" Miller, '10, one of the Five Miller Brothers, the Defiance Dynasty at Notre Dame, now a leading citizen in Cleveland, brother of the Mayor of that metropolis, attorney for the Graselli Chemical Co., former national director of the Association, famous in song and story as an athlete of the great days of the Champions of 1909, all-around alumnus. Every qualification an electorate could ask!

Honorary President is Byron V. Kanaley, '04, who has held just about all the other offices in the Association, Lay Trustee of the University, "father" of various movements in the organization that are still bearing fruit, former debater in the era of debate, editor of the Scholastic, member of the Chicago Club, a member of the Board who is going to be "honorary in name only."

First Vice-President is Frank C. Walker, '00. If the now nationally prominent New Yorker-by-adoption (matriculated from Montana) can lend to this organization some of the financial genius of the late Democratic campaign, his year will be well spent. As a Lay Trustee he has been in close touch with the campus and knows Notre Dame today in a way that makes his services on the Board of particular merit.

Second Vice-President is Arthur Carmody, '15, Shreveport, La. A member of an illustrious Notre Dame line of Carmody's, the new V-P. brings, like the President, a viewpoint and a cross-section of Notre Dame far in excess of his own years on the campus. Being in the oil industry, and in Louisiana, the problems of the Association will present little of serious involvement to Vice-President Carmody.

Director of the next four years is Fred L. Steers, '11, Chicago. The "freshman member" of the Directorate comes in with an alumni background so faithful in service, advice, attendance, etc., both on the campus and in Chicago, that the transfer from the ranks to the Directorate can make little but formal difference. As Class Secretary of the Class of '11 and manager of the Women's Olympic Team, Fred has had his problems.

President Pat Manion retires to the Board as an ex officio member to contribute his valuable experience for the next year.

Francis A. Werner, Senior Class president becomes the '33 Director.

In the Lay Trustees, for the next six years, Frank E. Hering, '98, LL.B. '02, was re-elected. As former coach and football star, as past president of the Alumni Association, and as Lay Trustee for the past six years, Mr. Hering's service to the University has been such that the vote of the membership which has re-elected him stands for certain reward in a continuation of this service.

The other Trustee elected this year is John P. Murphy, '12, Cleveland, also a former president of the Association, attorney for the Van Sweringen interests, one of the leading attorneys in his field, long identified with Notre Dame activities both national and local. The new Trustee could receive no more adequate recommendation than that he can capably fill the place of his predecessor, C. C. Mitchell, '02.

Father French's Golden Jubilee

Rev. James French, A.M., '90, celebrated the Golden Jubilee of his Ordination at Notre Dame, Sunday, May 28.

For four years after ordination, Father French was a member of the faculty of St. Joseph's College, Cincinnati. Following that he was made superior of Holy Cross Seminary.

In 1893 Father French became vice-president and director of studies of the University of Notre Dame, under Rev. Andrew Morrissey. Father Patrick Carroll, preaching the Jubilee sermon, says of him in this capacity, "The director of studies had manifold duties in those early days when the student list was smaller, the number of professors fewer . . . Father French . . . in a word, pursued the full round of his (the student's) scholastic life."

In 1905 Father French was made president of St. Joseph's College, Cincinnati, and in 1906 returned to Holy Cross Seminary as its superior until 1912, when he became assistant superior to Rev. Gilbert Francais. At this time, too, he took up the work of establishing the now popular Mission Band of the Congregation.

Two years ago Father French retired from missionary work, but not from active service. He is now serving, as he is so beautifully qualified to serve, as the Chaplain of St. Joseph's hospital, South Bend.

Memorial Day Ceremonies

Memorial Day took on a special significance at Notre Dame this year with the death during the year of two of its former beloved figures, Most Rev. George J. Finnigan, C.S.C., Bishop of Helena, former Chaplain of the 137th Field Artillery and 80th Field Artillery, World War, and Col. William J. Hoynes, K.S.G., 20th Wisconsin Infantry and 2nd Wisconsin Cavalry, Civil War, the last member of the Notre Dame Post, G. A. R.

Rev. Raymond Murray, C.S.C., Regimental Sergeant-Major, 320th Train Hq., 95th Div., World War, was the Celebrant of the Mass. The Address was delivered by Rev. Frederick T. McKeon, C.S.C., Chaplain 48th Inf., U. S. A., World War. Capt. Robert B. Riordan, 489th Field Artillery, University Registrar, commanded the military detail. The University Band played. New in the line of march was the Reserve Officers club of Notre Dame, James C. McDevitt, Commandant. The Prayer of the Nation's Dead, at the graves in the Community Cemetery, was delivered by Rev. J. A. Heiser, C.S.C., Captain Chaplain, 489th Field Artillery.

Indian Priest at Commencement

One of the most interesting touches of color at Notre Dame's brilliant 89th annual commencement exercises and presentation of the golden jubilee Laetare Medal to John McCormack, was supplied by the Rev. Philip Gordon, the only full-blooded Indian Catholic priest in America.

Father Gordon is chief of the Chipewewa tribe of Northern Wisconsin and a member of the diocese of Superior, Wis.

He entered the academic procession in full tribal regalia of feathered headdress.

Glee Club On Tour

The Notre Dame glee club of 32 voices and Prof. Joseph J. Casasanta, director, opened a 14-weeks stage tour at the Capitol theater in New York City on June 9.

The club will appear on consecutive weeks in Washington, D. C., Baltimore, Philadelphia, Newark, Brooklyn, New York City (second time), Boston, Providence, Jersey City, Detroit, Cleveland, Youngstown and Akron (split week), and Chicago, according to schedule.

Movies to be shown in these theaters will be approved by Notre Dame officials before the club is allowed to appear. The week of July 21 the club will make a motion picture short subject while appearing at Loew's State theater in New York City.

Athletics

By JOSEPH PETRITZ, '32

Despite lugubrious predictions from all quarters, Notre Dame closed its athletic year with an all-team percentage of .619 with 39 victories and 24 defeats. Two ties in track and baseball are not listed among the victories since this is a non-moral record.

The golfers, Capt. John Montedonico, Vince Fehlrig, Johnny Banks, Bill Veeneman, Bill Cole, and A. Ray Martin, swept their matches with Loyola, Purdue, Michigan State, Illinois, Northwestern, and Chicago to gain the third perfect record in four years. The Irish have lost only two dual matches—both last season—in the four years of official golf teams since the opening of the William J. Burke-Notre Dame course.

Furthermore, the state title, which was dropped to Purdue last year, came home again. Notre Dame took 626 strokes. Purdue had 664 and Indiana took 712. The five-man team took five of the first six places, Harrell of Indiana tying for second with Johnny Banks. Bill Cole's 152 took the individual title.

The fruits of these victories are a shuffle off to Buffalo to participate in the forthcoming national intercollegiate golf championships.

The football team was second on the percentage basis with seven victories and two losses (see ALUMNUS September, October, November, December, January, February, March, April, May, June). The percentage was .778.

Third honors went to the basketball team with a .727 mark for 16 victories and six losses. An 11-game winning streak to finish the season showed what stuff Coach George Keogan's men are made of.

John Nicholson, an old hypochondriac, took all honors for the season with his track predictions. His team fooled him, though, and broke even with three wins and losses and a tie.

One of the track victories, was over the strong Pittsburgh squad, another over Illinois, and the third at Purdue's expense. Can you name three teams you'd rather have the boys beat? Michigan State, Marquette, and Army won from Notre Dame. Ohio State's strong team was held to a tie when one of their gentlemen obligingly dropped the baton and gave the Irish the tying five points in mile relay.

General unsteadiness, despite flashes of brilliance, cost the baseball team the second successive losing season, also the second in the last 27 years. The team lost seven games while winning five for a percentage of .417. They won from and tied with Purdue. Another Purdue game was rained out, as was a scheduled game with Northwestern. Victories in the two rain-check games might have given Notre Dame an even break. We predict a great team for next season. Practically all of the 1933 men will be back and they did improve during the season.

The tennis team found the going just too tough, losing six of its seven matches for a mark of .143. Until indoor facilities and adequate courts are furnished, the same performance may be expected. The four tarvia courts are all right, but they give a higher bounce than clay courts—and when the boys try to adjust their strokes when they get on clay, it's too late.

Beaupre Wins Golf Title

The annual Notre Dame Alumni golf meet turned out to be a brotherly affair this year, results made public

June 4, revealed with the Beaupre brothers of Detroit, Mich., heading the field of 25 participants in the 36-hole medal play tourney.

Fran Beaupre outstroked his brother Russell to win top honors. His scores were 73-75 for a 148. Russ trailed him with a 77-73—150. Larry Moller, captain of the 1931 undefeated varsity team, came in third. His scores were 75-76—151.

All three of the top winners were members of the 1931 team.

Association Honored

James E. Armstrong, Secretary of the Notre Dame Alumni Association, is in Chicago from June 24-28 as Director of the Nineteenth Annual Convention of the American Alumni Council, the professional organization of alumni and alumnae executives of America. The Convention is being held in Evanston, with Northwestern, Chicago, Lake Forest and Lewis Institute as host colleges. The Notre Dame representative has held a national office in the Council for the last five years, and was Director of the Mid-West District of the Council for two years.

ALUMNI CLUBS

CLEVELAND

Well, the time has come for the President to prepare his farewell speech, the Vice-President to join the ranks of the Benedicts, the Treasurer to balance his ledger and the Secretary to close his correspondence files and dismiss his "large staff." All together it has been a very pleasant, satisfactory and profitable year for the organization. Through the unstinted efforts of our President, Tom Byrne, and the wholehearted support of the members, many new policies and activities have been added to the Club's program.

First of all, there was the adoption of the new "joint enterprise policy" between the Campus Club and the Local Alumni Club. The success of this policy can only be judged after a fair trial. Personally, I am strongly in favor of it. Briefly stated it means that in all local activities both the Students and the Alumni participate and share. It was an alternative proposed by the present administration in place of the growing practice among the Alumni clubs to control all local activities.

Next came the adoption of the idea of universal participation in activities by all the members of the club. An honest and sincere effort has been made to place all members of the club on a committee which, at some time during the year will have a definite task to do. Naturally, the success of this plan has been somewhat modified in a few cases by the lack of interest, conflicting interests, etc. of some of the members. Nevertheless, I believe the success which crowned all the club's activities during this past year is the best answer to those who might advocate the select minority.

Another policy advocated this past year was towards a general and complete change of officers from year to year. It was thought that this would encourage individual initiative and stimulate interest. More of this later.

I had prepared several letters for your department but they were incorporated in the "Officers' Report," a copy of which, I believe has been forwarded to you. So I refer you to that for any additional information regarding the past years activities of the club and officers.

At the club meeting and party held on Universal N. D. Night the Club adopted a Constitution. Although very active for over a period of 10 or 12 years there was some question as to whether we had ever adopted a Constitution, so the void was filled and everyone is happy. Also, it should prevent any discussion on procedure, inasmuch as one of my legal brethren, John Weisend, was chairman of the committee on the job. Speeches by Tom Byrne and J. Patrick Canny were relieved by a goodly seidel of two (or even three) of Rohr's beer at the Club's expense.

Not to omit the most important news of the year—I should next take up the club elections. As you may have gathered from the foregoing, the present officers declined to accept the job for another year. This should not be interpreted in an unfavorable light as much thought was given to it and it was thought to be in the best interests of the club to have an annual turnover of officers. The most disappointing feature of the elections was the unanimous vote the candidates received. Not that the men elected were not qualified—for I think they are exceptionally well qualified—but because lack of competition has a deadening effect. But let's congratulate the candidates who carried both houses. Here they are:

President, Matthew E. Trudelle, 1023 Schofield Bldg., Euclid Avenue; vice-president, Gaylord Haas, c.o. Ohio Bell Telephone Co., Huron Road; secretary, J. Pat Canny, c.o. Legal Dept., Erie RR., Medical Arts

Bldg.; treasurer, Jerome G. Reidy, c.o. Ohio Bell Telephone Co., Huron Road.

I might include a word of explanation here regarding the position of Jerry Reidy, As you recall, he was appointed to fill the vacancy left by our former treasurer, Lou Stettler who moved to Pittsburgh. In appreciation of his fine job of taking hold and clearing up the year's business and because he had not been elected to his office, Mr. Newmark wisely overrode his objections and nominated him to the treasurer's job again this year. The unanimous vote indicated the club members feeling on it.

I do not wish to be presumptuous or transgress the bonds of propriety but I cannot help but feel that some mention should be made of the exceptionally fine management the club had under the out-going president, Tom Byrne. I have had very close contact with him during the past year and would like to recommend him to your consideration for a National Alumni office. He would probably hang me for this but it is the result of sincere enthusiasm and appreciation for his ability.

Clayton G. Leroux.

NEW YORK

Our Retreat that was held from May 19, to 22, 1923, at Loyola House of Retreats in Morristown, N. J., was enthusiastically praised by everyone that attended. Enclosed photo of the group may interest you, and I am also attaching letter dated May 21, 1933, addressed to us from Father Herman I. Storck, S.J., who was in the hospital, so that the retreat was conducted by Fathers Oates and McCauley. Two printed booklets, which I am enclosing, tell about the Loyola House of Retreats and the manner in which the retreats are arranged and carried on. Holy Communion was offered up by the group for the early recovery of Father Charles O'Donnell, president of Notre Dame University.

NEW JERSEY

This will probably reach you much too late to use in that special "Universal N. D. nite edition, but I'm sending it along so that you can use it when and as. As a correspondent for the Jersey Club I'm a bit dilatory.

As you may already know we ran our Universal Night four nights in advance of the regular one. It was to assure our members of the especially pleasing Jimmy Crowley. He came along to the Steuben club in Newark and the fact that more than a hundred alumni and friends were on hand was plenty of compliment to Jim.

It was a swell feed with plenty of good beer (Jersey of course having long since established its reputation with this beverage). Jim Silver was toastmaster and did a good job. Crowley, who always was a wit, has stepped up the ladder plenty in the post-prandial line and right now, in my humble opinion, is far and ahead of more famous football coaches. He had some new stuff and, on urgent applause, repeated some of his old stories.

Others who spoke briefly were Russell Riley, president of the Jersey Club; Bob Phelan, and Joe Byrne. The list of guests I haven't, but some of the "old boys" included Bert Daniels, Manhattan College baseball coach; Frank McDermitt, Gene Gilligan, Lyndon (Babe) Bryce, Joe Gilligan, Ex-N. D. and Princeton grid star; and others. Ed Lea Mond's Orchestra played.

The club held its annual election May 1 at the Newark A. C. and Bob Phelan, fullback in the early twenties, was chosen to succeed Russ Riley. Kernan Wingerter of Newark replaces Phelan as vice-president while Eddie Broderick, Newark lawyer has done so well for two years as treasurer, was again chosen for the post. Joe Nulty, ex-cross country captain, continues as secretary—for the seventh year. The officers take their posts at the annual freshman banquet in September.

I ought to have a raft of notes about the boys but I'm sorry to say I haven't, though Dr. Jerry Hayes, who is living in East Orange, has just returned from a two months' European cruise. He says Leningrad is a four-letter word meaning Inferno.

Many of the boys are going back to the Old School late this month—and I wouldn't be surprised if Andy McDonough, Plainfield lawyer makes his annual auto trip to the campus.

Art Lea Mond.

OKLAHOMA CITY

It will be of interest to you to know that Oklahoma City has now joined the great number of cities which have an annual celebration of Universal Notre Dame night. We were a little surprised to find that we have eighteen Notre Dame men in the immediate vicinity of Oklahoma City.

Plans for the banquet were not started until late. It was not possible to inform all the alumni here of the event. It was held at the University Club of this city. So thoroughly did everyone enjoy the dinner and the general round table conversation (which, you may be sure, was replete with stories of the student days at Notre Dame) that plans were made for a larger celebration next year.

Mr. W. F. Wilson, who received an honorary law degree from the University in 1931, Dr. J. F. Martin, whose son is now at Notre Dame, and Mr. Thomas Boland one of the loyal supporters of Notre Dame who attended there many years ago enjoyed the evening with Bob and Ford Sullivan, Curry Holman, A. Mulhall, Louis Danzig, Bernard Lomasney (all now attending the University of Oklahoma), Larry Farnam, Robert Beery, James Burke, and William Lomasney. Rodney Janeway, Roland Wright, Louis Choteau, J. S. Askew, Jr., and Howard Beasley were out of town and could not attend.

It will be of interest to their friends to know that Larry Farnam is one of the leading lights with the Mass. Mutual Life Ins. Co., in Oklahoma, Bob Berry is an assistant municipal counsellor, Rod Janeway is assistant cashier in the Mangum National Bank, James Burke is a buyer for the leading department store here, Howard Beasley is district representative for the Federal Match Company. Although, my title of assistant state fire marshal seems to connote red suspenders, fire whistles, and the like, my work is really confined to the development and prosecution of arson cases. By the way, Beasley as match salesman usually precedes me in traveling about the state.

Please remember me to Father O'Hara, Father Miltner, and the other good friends who were so good to me at Notre Dame. We are very thankful that Father O'Donnell is well again. We did not forget him when he was ill.

William Lomasney and J. S. Askew are planning to return to Notre Dame to complete their courses. Bill is working on the Legal News and J. S. is working for the Board of Affairs.

Haskell Askew.

1933 Ordinations

A class of 20 men was ordained Roman Catholic priests Saturday morning, June 24 at eight o'clock by the Most Rev. John F. Noll, D.D., LL.D., bishop of the Fort Wayne diocese, at Sacred Heart Church, Notre Dame, Indiana.

One other, the Rev. James Norton, C.S.C., will be ordained at Indianapolis, his home.

Following are the men ordained.

The Rev. John Molter, C.S.C., Plymouth, Ind.; Rev. James Gibbons, C.S.C., Chicago; Rev. Christopher O'Toole, C.S.C., Alpena, Mich.; Rev. John Scheberle, C.S.C., Watertown, Wisconsin; Rev. Summer School Opens

Approximately 500 summer school students enrolled for the University of Notre Dame summer sessions which opened Tuesday, June 20.

Most of the students are nuns, priests, and brothers. The nuns live in Morrissey and Howard halls, the priests and brothers in Sorin and Walsh halls, and the laymen in St. Edward's hall.

Students have the option of eating in the dining halls or cafeteria. The nuns eat in one of the huge twin wings and the laymen, priests, and brothers eat in the other wing.

There are 94 officers of instruction for summer school, including 82 members of the regular faculty and 12 visiting teachers.

Bachelor degrees will be conferred in arts and letters, fine arts, music, and science. Masters degrees will be conferred in arts and letters, music, and science. Doctor of philosophy degrees will be conferred.

THE ALUMNI

Following are the names, by Classes, of those fortunate alumni who enjoyed the 89th Commencement. These names are taken from the registers of the Alumni Office and the residence halls. As annually history has repeated itself, this year too convinces us that a number of alumni did not register. This is primarily true of those who came for only one day, stayed down town, or the resident alumni.

That there is improvement in the "local boys" is indicated by a total registration of 111 members of the Notre Dame Club of the St. Joseph Valley, in addition to the "pros" who can technically be included in the organization—the 47 priests and faculty members of the University, who registered.

Chicago leads the legitimate registration with 125—

Cleveland supported its several candidates (successfully) with a delegation of 27, including the Five Miller Brothers, Henry Newmark, and the Rev. Mike Moriarty. The register for the record-breaking Five-Year Reunion of '28 brings names listed from New York and New Jersey, Massachusetts, through the U. S. to Oregon and Wyoming, to a new high total of 101. The Dix Reunions of '23, '24, '25, '26 brought back 121. The Classes of '04, '05, '06, '07 were lighter than usual, with an attendance of 17. Only six of the 25-Year Class of 1908 were back.

The Class of '83, besides the handicap of distance in several instances, reported itself so involved in the business world that attendance was impossible. No out-of-industry-at-60 for '83!

DEATHS

BROTHER MALACHY, C.S.C., a prefect in Brownson Hall from 1901 to 1904, died at Dearborn, Mich., May 2. He was born in Portadown, County Armagh, Ireland, in 1858. He was educated at the local academy and at St. Patrick's Teachers' College, Dublin, of which institution he was an alumnus. He received the habit of a Brother of the Congregation of Holy Cross, August 15, 1899, and made his profession three years later. From 1904 to 1929 he served as teacher or prefect at St. Edward's university, Austin, Texas; in Holy Cross College, New Orleans; in Trinity High school, Chicago, and in Sacred Heart College, Watertown, Wis. He retired in 1929.

A returned envelope bears the information of the death of THOMAS F. GRIFFIN, '88, Sioux City, Iowa.

One week after SAMUEL P. SCHWARTZ, '13, South Bend, Ind., filled out his Alumni Questionnaire in his vigorous legal manner, the Alumni Office used its information for his obituary. Coming to South Bend from Jersey City in 1910, he entered the Notre Dame law school, working as a newspaper reporter while attending college. For two years he was secretary to Father Joe Burke and did occasional work for Fathers Morrissey and Matthew Walsh. His roommates were EDMOND SAVORD and LEO SCHUMACHER. On Oct. 21, 1917, he was married to Ruth E. Schock, sister of GEORGE SCHOCK, LL.B., '18, South Bend. One daughter survives, Aurelia, who has attended St. Mary's since she was five years old, completing her 11th year there this year. Mr. Schwartz was chairman of the Elks work in the Liberty Loan Drives during the War and has been active in various Masonic work. In politics he was secretary of the St. Joseph County Democrats while in school in 1910-11, was deputy prosecutor from 1912-18 and served three terms as prosecuting attorney, 1918-20, 1926-28 and 1930-32. Criminal law comprised his private practice. Jewish by race, it is significant of his character and his mind that his favorite priests were Fathers Schumacher and Carrico, and his favorite laymen Judge Howard and Col. Hoynes. Also significant was his Hobby—Work. Born January 29, 1892, much activity was crowded into his 41 years.

One of the sad deaths of a young man that, with the growth of numbers, must find their way into these columns with increasing frequency, was that of ROLLIN G. BALDWIN, '32, Chicago, who died May 20 from an infection. Rollin, "Lucky," he was called, was the brother of John Baldwin, captain of this year's basketball team, and was himself active in interhall sports while on the campus.

HARRY M. JEWETT, former star athlete, half-back on Notre Dame's first football team in '87, captain of the University's first track team in '90, holder of two world's records, died suddenly June 15. The following newspaper account, from the ever-thoughtful HUGH O'DONNELL of the New York Times, classmate of the younger EDWARD H. JEWETT, '94, who died three years ago, gives a detailed story of his life. (Hugh writes: Both he and his brother are gone now. They were excellent companions, fine students, but were not Catholics, yet attended Catholic schools all their lives, Ned even going to Notre Dame when he was a minim. . . .)

Harry Mulford Jewett, one of Detroit's industrial and sport leaders, died suddenly today of a heart attack at his home, near here, as he was about to leave for his office. He was 62 years old.

The most notable achievement of his life was the organization of the Paige-Detroit Company in 1910, in association with other pioneers of the automobile industry. From the first he was president and chairman of the board, and in that capacity negotiated in 1927 the sale of the firm, now known as the Graham-Paige Motors Corporation, to the Graham brothers.

In 1890 Harry Jewett was the undisputed champion of the world in the 100 and 220-yard dashes. He was graduated in engineering from Notre Dame University that year.

Mr. Jewett was born in Elmira, N. Y., of a family which traced its ancestry back eight generations to Edwin Jewett, a cloth manufacturer of Yorkshire England. Edwin Jewett's son was a Colonial officer and his great-grandson founded Jewett City, Conn.

Surviving Harry Jewett are a widow, a son, Edward Hunting Jewett 2d, and a daughter, Mrs. J. Vincent Dwyer.

On leaving college, Mr. Jewett worked as a civil engineer on the Chicago Drainage Canal, then joined the Michigan Central Railroad as assistant engineer at Detroit. Next he went into coal mining, being with the W. P. Rend Coal Company of Chicago. In 1903 he started his own coal business at Detroit, later organizing the firm of Jewett, Bigelow & Brooks, miners and wholesale coal dealers.

For the last six years Mr. Jewett had been president of the Colonial Laundry Company of Detroit. He was a member of the Michigan Naval Reserve, and in the war with Spain served on the U. S. S. Yosemite. He was a former president of the Detroit Athletic Club, and he belonged to many other clubs in Detroit and to the New York Yacht Club.

BIRTHS

A note from WILLIAM J. MOONEY, JR., Indianapolis, says: "Arrived at the Mooneys on May 4th a fine nine pound boy. This was indeed a welcome addition to the two daughters."

TIM GALVIN writes: "In the next issue of the ALUMNUS you may announce the arrival of THOMAS ADRIAN HAYES, JR., son and heir of Thomas A. Hayes, LL.B., '16. The young gentleman was born April 13. His parents reside at 1107 West-over Road, Fort Wayne, and rumor has it that the father is existing in the clouds as he dreams about the touchdowns that young Tommy is going to score for Notre Dame in 1953."

Arriving a day late for the Dix Reunion was Peter Castner, 6 lb. 10 oz. member by marriage of the Class of '23 since June 5. Peter, his brother "Pepper" and his mother are staying in South Bend for the summer, while the Class Secretary pursues his new duties under the White banners in Cleveland. Paul writes: "He evidently was so inspired by the wonderful Notre Dame Commencement program that he decided to have a commencement of his own."

Abraham Lincoln and Lucia Ann Geniesse arrived Feb. 12. Some day we hope to be more prompt in observing Levi's daughter's birthday, too.

Another Class Secretary takes drastic steps to produce news: "Just a note for the records, the arrival of Miss Anne Hayes on Tuesday, April 18. The young lady and her mother are in fine health. The father is fortunate that his office is in the Empire State Building because no other would be big enough to hold him these days. Judging from the way the Hayes daughter is sleeping the clock around she will make a first rate Class Secretary some day."

From the opposite coast: "This will announce the arrival of John Michael on April 16, weight 7 lbs., 8 ozs.—JOHN F. KILKENNY," Pendleton, Ore., '25.

And from that same distinguished Class of '25 comes Sarah Anne Gordon to the Bob Gordons on May 20, joining Robert K., Jr., two years her senior.

CHARLEY and Mrs. MARGUET, '26, announce the birth of a son Charles Patrick, New Albany, Indiana, on May 8.

ED and Mrs. MC CLARNON, '28, announce the arrival of Edmund Michael on April 22, Detroit, Mich.

JOHNNY FREDERICK, '28, and Mrs. Frederick are parents of a son, born June 13.

Another coach who has started raising his own material is LARRY MULLINS, '31. "The New Moon" appeared May 27—Lawrence A. Jr.

Word from BERNIE CONROY relays the arrival of a future All-American guard to the BERT METZGERS, 6103 N. Hayne Ave., Chicago. Bert, who is learning the dairy business from the pump up, is reported to have rung the doorbell of every customer before dawn to break the news.

FRANK D'MUHALA, writes from Stamford, Conn., where he is probation officer for the Juvenile Court: "On April 3rd was inducted into the Juvenile and City courts as chief probation officer. On April 15th, I received this telegram from New York, where my wife Irene remained for some time—Happy landing at 3:40, stowaway on board, a little girl and her name is Joan.

SPICY leaves of
are strung to dry and cure in the sun.

Well, that's something about cigarettes I never knew before

The cigarette that's MILDER
The cigarette that TASTES BETTER

I'd never thought much about what's inside a Chesterfield cigarette. But I have just been reading something that made me think about it.

Just think of this, some of the tobacco in Chesterfield—the Turkish—comes from 4000 miles away! And before it is shipped every single leaf is packed by hand.

Of course I don't know much about making cigarettes, but I do know this—that Chesterfields are milder and have a very pleasing aroma and taste. They satisfy—and that's what counts!
