Former prof. to sue SMC

By Maria Gallagher

A former St. Mary's professor has notified the college administration of his intent to sue the school because he was allegedly denied a teaching position "on the grounds of race and creed."

Professor Iqbal Q. Geoffrey recently filed his complaint and listed his charges with the South Bend Human Relations Board. He claims that he was also refused as a candidate for the SMC presidency for the same reasons. The Observer received two carbon copies of the formal complaints in which the professor claims he can produce "circumstantial and documentary evidence."

Prof. Geoffrey plans to sue SMC because he feels some good will come of it, and he expressed confidence that he would win. "They don't have a leg to stand on," he said. "Personal glory means nothing to me, for I would rather be remembered as a man who stood fast for what he believed in."

When asked about the charges made against SMC, Acting President Sr. Alma Peter and Francis Jones, SMC attorney, both declined to comment. Academic Dean Sr. Jeanne Finske claimed she "knew nothing about the man."

A spokesman for the South Bend Human Relations Board said that no action has yet been taken—SMC has been notified of the complaint; attorneys for the college have sent a letter to the Board acknowledging receipt of the notice; and a reply is expected "soon."

Prof. Geoffrey was a member of the SMC Art Department faculty from September 1967 until June 1968. Prior to that, he served as human rights attorney at the United Nations from 1966-1967. He is a native of Pakistan, a Semite and claims to be a direct descendant of Mohammed. Although only 32, he holds three Ph.D.s, including an honorary doctorate in law from Harvard. He is the only professor in St. Mary's history to be nominated for Distinguished Professorship.

In a recent interview Prof. Geoffrey further elaborated on the subject. He remarked that during the period 1967-1968, he did not experience anything that he would term "discrimination."

"My work was sufficiently liked, my relations with the students were good, and I was the first professor in SMC history to be nominated for Distinguished Professorship. Not until Fr. McGrath (Msgr. John J. McGrath was President of SMC when he died last summer.) came to SMC did I experience discrimination here." He went on to cite examples from his own personal experience. He claimed that "...I was verbally told that because of my race and religion etc., SMC could not consider me for Distinguished Professorship." He further states that all Distinguished Professorships have been given to whites and "all of them put together cannot supersede my background which is the finest and has won the finest acclaim."

Another example which points to a policy of discrimination, according to Prof. Geoffrey, is that in its 125 year existence, St. Mary's has employed very few blacks, except for janitorial or custodian positions. "They have never considered a black man for an administrative position," he claims. "The same holds true for Notre Dame. I don't believe that people should be denied jobs on the basis of color, creed, personal beliefs, etc., but according to their qualifications." Prof. Geoffrey termed his case exemplary.

When asked why he left St. Mary's, Prof. Geoffrey said that he disagreed with most of Fr. McGrath's policies. There was also some mix-up concerning a visa which he had to visit London over the summer. Supposedly it had been approved by both the U.S. Department of Immigration and the college administration, but Prof. Geoffrey claims that Fr. McGrath later "pulled strings", and he was unable to get back into the country. Consequently, he lost his job and was stranded in London. Later, the U.S. Attorney General wrote him an apology, not giving him the details of the misunderstanding, but just apologizing, he added.

Prof. Geoffrey gives his reasons for applying for the presidency of SMC as twofold: he wishes to see how the administration would respond, and he "wanted to right Fr. McGrath's wrongs." Supported by "considerable" administrative experience in higher education, Prof. Geoffrey feels he was fully qualified for the job.

What would he have done were he given the SMC presidency? "SMC would no longer be substandard," he asserts. "Today SMC is a 'dead' college, a rubber stamp of Notre Dame, dangling in yesterday, and needs to be awakened. Four years ago it was one of the best girls' colleges in the country, although it was not as progressive as it could have been, but it went downhill after Fr. McGrath."

Prof. Geoffrey claims that within 5 years he could make SMC one of the best colleges in the country. "I have modern ideas that would be beneficial to SMC; and I am in favor of avant-garde education." He did not give concrete details as to what he would do.

Reagan annoyed by tax payment inquires

UPI — Gov. Ronald Reagan, who paid no state income tax for 1970, refused to answer yesterday whether he also paid no federal tax and called such inquiries "an invasion of privacy."

Reagan told a newsman he should be "ashamed" for even asking.

"Obviously, I would have preferred to make money and owe a tax than to lose money and therefore pay a tax," said Reagan, whose salary as governor was $44,100.

Reagan disclosed Tuesday—after first insisting he couldn't remember—that he paid no state income tax for last year because of "business reverses" on "investments."

The millionaire governor's tax status brought loud demands that the state's tax structure be changed so that wealthy people pay at least some income tax.

U.S. Sen. Alan Cranston said "loopholes" should be closed and jokingly told a capitol news conference, "I hope to learn today how to avoid paying state income taxes. I've been paying very heavily for many, many years."

Mayor Sam Yorty told a Los Angeles news conference the tax structure "badly needs an overhaul" because low wage earners are the hardest hit. State

Sen. Nicholas C. Petris, D-Oakland, compared Reagan with welfare recipients who take advantage of legal loopholes to obtain higher relief checks.

"The governor has been very vocal in his opposition to that. Now he's using the law in the same way," said Petris. "It's exactly the same thing, except this applies to people at the top of the income level and welfare applies to those at the bottom."

Rally, march mark protest

By Kevin McGill

Notre Dame marked yesterday's moratorium and commemorated the deaths at Jackson and Kent State with a rally on the South Quad and a peaceful march to the Selective Service office in South Bend.

Aiming to "stop business as usual," the Notre Dame Peace Action Group urged students to boycott classes. Only four marshalls turned up at eight o'clock to picket buildings, but by eleven more people were at the main buildings and dining halls holding signs and distributing flyers.

Co-ex tickets replaced

Co-ex dinner tickets have been obtained to replace those stolen from the Student Union office Monday night. Twenty-five tickets will be available on a "first come-first serve" basis for each night up to and including Saturday, May 15th. They may be obtained from Pat Molinaro, student government Secretary, in LaFortune each weekday between 1 and 5 p.m. Tickets must be picked up in person and a meal card must be shown.

These tickets are good only the date stamped on the ticket. Sunday tickets are good for either the noon or evening meal.

All of the stolen tickets are now invalid. St. Mary's meal checkers have been instructed to check closely to see that none of them are used.

Telegrams from Senator Vance Hartke calling for an end to the war and Senator Edward Kennedy commending the Refugee Aid Program were read to the large group that assembled on the quad around noon.

Rev. William Toohey, C.S.C., Director of the Campus Ministry, said a mass which marked the end of the month long drive for the Refugee Aid Program. Following the mass were a number of speakers.

Marshall d'Arcy, a veteran who had been to the demonstrations in Washington, spoke bitterly about the government's attempt to end the war politically.

Mrs. Marice Nagu, a representative to the Paris Peace talks with the People's Peace Treaty, said that she did not want her son returned home from a war dead. "The enemy is not in Hanoi but in Washington," she said.

Former Observer Features Editor Dave Lammers told of his participation in the recent Washington demonstrations and his subsequent arrest. Tim Kendall, who faces a possible prison term for draft evasion, said, "There is no such thing as not being involved in the war," and appealed to the people to do "much more than simply enough to ease their consciences."

After several more speakers, Tom Vanderputten and Mrs.

Nagu led some sixty students to the Selective Service Office. They walked along the sidewalk and chanted "All we are saying is give peace a chance" through the city and into the Sherland Building.

Leaders of the march had telephoned the office before they began, and they found the doors locked. Police officers inside refused to allow the marchers to enter as a group and talk with the office personnel. There were no selective service officials there, only secretaries.

The protesters sat down while they were allowed to enter the office one at a time. The students who were admitted were photographed by a police officer.

Each student was allowed to talk to one secretary who refused to answer all questions not dealing with the individual's draft file. Because of this, many protestors asked technical questions about the draft rather than discussed the morality of the war.

At one point, the group promised to leave if the selective service office would stop its business at an early time, but the office refused.

Declaring support for the nationwide moratorium, Lammers said for the entire group, "We are here because the war in Vietnam, Laos, and Cambodia is not ending, it is continuing to destroy the citizens, children, and land of Indochina with bombing, defoliation, and the killing of civilians."

500 end sit-in at Kent State ROTC

KENT, Ohio—A Kent State University building housing the ROTC was reopened yesterday when a hard core of student demonstrators began bickering among themselves and wandered away, ending a 22 hour sit in.

Four students remained in the main entrance of Rockwell Hall, a combination office and classroom building but there were no incidents.

About 500 demonstrators, led by KSU Yippie leader Jerry Persky, began the sit in Tuesday afternoon following four days of commemoration for the four Kent State students shot to death by National Guard troops here May 4, 1970.

Many of the demonstrators spent Tuesday night bundled up in blankets to ward off the 40 degree temperature.

A majority of the demonstrators left after leaders asked them if they wanted to "stay and be arrested." About 80 students remained at the building, blocking the entrances until they began bickering among themselves around noon.

Observer Staff

Please pick up your party tickets from your department heads before Friday. The tickets should be available later this afternoon. You need a ticket to get into the party. The department heads will be able to tell you the time and location of the party.

Congressmen join protest

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A diehard throng of up to 1,500 demonstrators led by antiwar congressmen swarmed up to the locked main entrance of the House of Representatives Wednesday demanding an immediate U.S. pullout from Indochina. Police made mass arrests.

While protesters chanted obscenities, sang, laughed and smoked marijuana on the Capitol steps, a youth stripped naked. Rep. Ronald V. Deulums, D. Calif., scuffled with a policeman and a small band of "human flies" peered into Speaker Carl Albert's second floor office from a narrow ledge.

Police arrested the demonstrators one by one on charges of unlawful assembly on the Capitol grounds, and hauled them away in dozens of vehicles ranging from patrol wagons to rented panel trucks.

The arrests at the last scheduled event of a 17 day "spring offensive" of antiwar protests in the capital coincided with supporting demonstrations in other major cities across the country, including New York, Boston, Chicago, San Francisco and Kent State where four students were killed in a protest a year ago.

At the University of Maryland 10 miles away from the Capitol in suburban College Park, state police moved in under orders of Gov. Marvin Mandel to clear nearly 1,000 demonstrators blocking busy U.S. Route 1 adjacent to the campus. Mandel also put 1,200 National Guardsmen on standby alert.

Tear gas was finally used at the Maryland campus, and police fired about 20 canisters to disperse an unruly crowd of nearly 5,000 college and high school students at the University of Wisconsin in Madison.

At the Capitol, Senate doorkeepers ejected a dozen demonstrators from the visitors' gallery after a few of them silently donned bandanna masks and raised clenched fists while senators below them debated police tactics in handling street confrontations.

But outside, on the House side of the Capitol, hundreds of helmeted policemen began arrests a scant half hour after the demonstrators swarmed onto the Capitol grounds and up the east front steps of the House, led by Dellums and Rep. Bella Abzug, D.-N.Y.

Police began dragging the protesters down the steps even as Mrs. Abzug, one of four antiwar legislators to address the cheering crowd, was saying that it was a "very wonderful moment to see the police and the people demonstrating here together." A few moments later, she was calling the arrests "an outrage."

Speaker Albert emerged from the building an hour after the arrests began and shook hands with some of the demonstrators on the sidewalk. He told newsmen he had authorized the arrests.

Goode, EARTH editor, to speak

"Trying to tame the Republic" or "How to get through the year without hating Yourself" will be the topic of a lecture tonight night by James A. Goode. The talk will be held in the library auditorium at 8:00.

Goode is currently editor and co-publisher of the magazine Earth, a publication orientated towards the "alternate culture." Before founding Earth in July of 1970, Goode served as an editor for Playboy magazine.

Goode was born and raised in Indianapolis and received his B.A. degree from Wabash College, where he edited the campus newspaper.

Letter invites Tracey to Zahm

Extending best wishes and congratulations to Ann Marie Tracey for her recent victory in the Student Life Council election, the residents of Zahm Hall have invited Miss Tracey to spend "a few days" living in the hall and become acquainted with the hall community, in an open letter dated May 3, 1971. The letter follows:

Ann Marie Tracey

The members of the Zahm Hall community would like to extend their congratulations to you on your election to the SLC last weekend. The change to coeducation involves many growing pains for our two institutions, especially from the administrative viewpoint. Your election to the SLC on Friday is in the spirit of uniting the two schools in as short a time as possible. We are confident in your abilities to represent the interests of all students while serving on the board. However, the controversy stirred by your candidacy may have prevented you from campaigning as much as you desired. Zahm Hall would like at this time to extend an invitation to you to come and live in our community for a few days. The purpose would be to spend some time discussing the problems encountered in the living experience of Notre Dame. Hopefully, the exchange of ideas would benefit all of us as we seek to expand our awareness of the problems confronting both Saint Mary's and Notre Dame. Please give serious consideration to our offer, and again, our best wishes for a successful year on the SLC.

New York antiwar action disrupted but peaceful

NEW YORK (UPI)

—One rally was moved to save newly seeded grass, another ended prematurely with a bandshell takeover and a suburban savings and loan association found itself the target of a "bank run."

In all, thousands of New Yorkers, most of them young, marked the anniversary Wednesday of the shootings of Kent State and Jackson State Universities with antiwar protests of a variety of sorts. Most were peaceful.

The largest began late in the afternoon, when some 5,000 persons assembled on a one block stretch of 40th Street in midtown Manhattan that was banned to traffic. The rally originally was scheduled to be held in nearby Bryant Park, scene of a number of antiwar rallies in recent years, but city officials moved it to the street at the last minute to save the newly seeded park grass.

Earlier, about 1,500 persons, most of them high school students, grouped for a rally at the Central Park bandshell. But that gathering ended prematurely when a group of some two dozen black high school students mounted the stage wrestled briefly with rally organizers for their bullhorns and began shouting black power slogans.

Although a few fistfights erupted, there were no known injuries or arrests. In suburban Cedarhurst on Long Island, meanwhile, members of three peace groups staged what they called a "bank run" on a savings and loan association by cashing in their U.S. savings bonds.

Association officials said at least $5,000 of the bonds had been turned in.

SU plans 'Festival of Life' at SMC

The Student Union Social Commission has announced plans for a "Festival of Life" to be held tomorrow and Saturday on the West Campus (SMC).

The activities will begin at 4:30 Friday, outside Madeleva Hall with "music till dark." After dark, four hours of movies will be shown.

At noon Saturday, there will be music by several different groups. An art and photo gallery is to be set up near LeMans Hall and a water balloon fight is planned for the Saint Mary's tennis courts.

The purpose of the festival is to provide students will free, outdoor social events so that they can enjoy themselves while getting away from dating situations.

The security department has asked that there be no drinking during any of the event. The Social Commission urged that the students comply with this request so that the program could be continued in the future.

Any student musician interested in participating in the concerts should contact the Student Union Social Commission, to make arrangements. In the event of bad weather the "Festival of Life" will be held indoors.

The Meadowbrook Neighborhood Corporation is again seeking volunteers from the ND-SMC community to aid in the construction of its Indian day-care and cultural center on Saturday, May 8.

Due to the closeness of final examinations, we'll only be working two or three hours. Interested students need only show up at the bus circle at 9:30 a.m. where transportation will be provided to the construction site.

We would also like to take this opportunity to thank all those students who have aided us the past few Saturdays. Your help has been greatly appreciated by the people of the community.

If any interested party has any further questions, they can call Bill Brophy at 1504.

Sen. stopped; punches cop

WASHINGTON UPI—Sen. Lee Metcalf, D. Mont., a robust 60 years old, punched a policeman in the chest Wednesday when he stopped him from crossing a police line during antiwar demonstrations at the Capitol. Two other city police officers grabbed Metcalf after he threw his straight right to the chest of officer M. J. Van Fossen, but the chief of the Capitol police inherited on his behalf and they let the senator go.

Metcalf shouted that he was a United States senator and couldn't be prevented from going anywhere on the Capitol grounds when Van Fossen, wearing a riot helmet and holding a nightstick with both hands, told Metcalf he could not cross the line of policemen.

Metcalf then jabbed out his right fist and hit Van Fossen in the left upper chest. The officer took the punch easily and did not swing back. But two other policemen grabbed Metcalf's arms and started leading him toward buses where demonstrators were being arrested.

As they walked, however, Capitol Police Chief James Powell became aware of the commotion and hustled over, recognized Metcalf, and ordered him to be released. Metcalf, still enraged and face flushed, grabbed a UPI reporter by the arm to get his ear.

"My name is Lee Metcalf. I've been stopped." He then quickly left without commenting on his little fracas with Van Fossen.

Police tried to downgrade the incident, and a higher ranking officer admonished Van Fossen and the other officers not to discuss it with the press.

"It's an unfortunate incident that we're not going to discuss," said Inspector Thomas R. Estes.

Weekend thefts told

Vandalism and theft, including that of a blue 1962 Chevrolet sedan from a student parking lot Saturday night, marred the An Tostal weekend, Security Director Arthur Pears said Tuesday.

In addition to the four-door sedan, a Honda 160 Scrambler, owned by William Seiss of 257 Dillon, was stolen Saturday. A University-owned vehicle sustained minor damage when it was struck by a car driven by a visitor from Davenport, Iowa.

Autos also were involved in two thefts which occurred over the weekend. On Friday, thieves forcibly entered a car parked in the C-3 lot, and took a small plastic utility back containing sun glasses and warranty papers for the car. Four wheel covers valued at $120 were removed from a 1970 Camaro parked in the D-1 lot.

Three bicycles also were reported stolen over the weekend, along with an American flag from one of the security guard houses and a light brown, wooden desk from room 184 of the Commerce Building.

New hall key policy outlined

A five-point plan to "bolster the security" in the halls through a new room key distribution policy was revealed yesterday by Ombudsman Paul Dziedzic. He added that the Office of Student Residences, along with his office, urges hall rectors and presidents to comply with the following guidelines:

Only one mailbox and one key should be made for each student resident of a dormitory.

A five dollar deposit should be required when a student picks up his key in the fall.

A record of the deposit will be kept and the five dollars will be refunded at the year's end.

Should a key be lost, the deposit will pay for a new lock on a door or mailbox. New keys should be issued to anyone else using the lock. The person who lost the key will be required to pay another five dollar deposit for the new key.

Accumulated deposits may be placed in the hall treasury or in time passport certificates at the discretion of the hall.

If these guidelines are instituted, Dziedzic said, "mail security should be improved for next semester" because the University will replace all hall mailboxes this summer. He requested any student or hall with a system that is "more practical and efficient" to notify the Office of Student Residences early in the next semester.

Glee Club concert to support tour

The Notre Dame Glee Club, in the final stages of its fund-raising drive, will present a European Tour Benefit Concert Sunday, May 9, at 8 p.m. in Washington Hall. Student tickets are priced at $1, adults $2.

The benefit concert will culminate a ten-year effort to make a tour of Europe. The tour will last three weeks with stops scheduled in Amsterdam, Brussels, Munich, Vienna, Innsbruck, Venice, Rome, Milan, Zurich, and Paris.

Several formal and informal concerts have been scheduled in many of the cities. In addition, the club will appear on Italian national television, tape a half-hour show on Belgium national T.V., and is scheduled to sing in the world-famous Vienna Music Festival.

The European tour will climax a year of extensive travel for the Glee Club. They have performed in various cities from Boston to Los Angeles.

The club returned last month from the largest tour in its history, a western swing through Denver, Salt Lake City, Reno, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Las Vegas, Phoenix, and Tucson.

Further information concerning tickets for the benefit can be obtained by phoning Jim Roberts at 283-1344. Tickets will also be available at the door Sunday evening.

Give US Back the Rock

Some day, when all the leaves have fallen from the Indiana trees and they stand shivering naked against the harsh Indiana winds, some Notre Dame Freshman, battered by the combined forces of man and nature, baffled by the Freshman Year's ever-constant demand for academic excellence, cut to the quick in his quest for a meaningful relationship with one of the coy maidens at St. Mary's, or set back by any of the preceeding will come to LaFortune Student Center in search of the man who led the ta-dah Fighting Irish to undefeated season after undefeated season and got a ta-dah gym named after himself. And he'll find nothing. Somebody stole LaFortune's eight-by-ten photographs of the Rock.

Oh, he may find a few things. He may find Tom Dooley, but that's not the same. After all, how many undefeated seasons can you have in Southeast Asia? Or he may find a brand new photograph of Father Burtchaell. That may inspire him to buy a new set of suspenders, but precious little else. There's a photo of Father Hesburgh in there, which may move him to see the world, but as much of an institution as Fr. H. is, he still ain't the Rock.

The Rock was our one link with the past, and, by virtue of his permanence, our one link with the future. Long after Dave Krashna, John Barkett, and, lo, even Don Mooney fade into obscurity, the Rock will be here. But now his pictures are gone. Hell, we still have pictures of Pat Dowd at the Observer office!

The Observer, then, recommends that the Rock's pictures be returned for the following reasons:

- 1.) If they aren't then everyone will forget what he looked like. Freshmen might take his nickname literally, and really believe him to be a mineral composite. With only that bust in the Rockne Building to go on, that conclusion would be entirely justified.
- 2.) If they aren't, people will stop believing that the Rock really coached here. They will combine their knowledge of his reputation with the reputation of a ND sports department slick enough to convince people that a certain well-known quarterback of a couple years previous had an IQ in double figures, and logically conclude that the Rock never stepped foot on this campus, much less coached here.
- 3.) Finally, if they aren't, that Freshman of the future, looking for solace, comfort, and inspiration, would be forced to look at Burtchaell, Hesburgh, and Dooley, and God knows what would happen after staring at that troika.

Give us our Rock back! And on that supplicatory knute, we end this plea.

Fr. Burtchaell is Called

For those of you who missed it WSND last night featured the profound depths and at least half the subtle wit of University Provost (that's Prah-vist) James Tungstead Burtchaell. During the course of his intellectual discussion with L. Franklin Devine and others Fr. Burtchaell, (or, "his holiness-to-be" as he's known to his friends), was heard to comment that he would raze the fieldhouse if it had the Observer staff in it.

We feel that it should take more than a Fr. Burtchaell Dictum to demolish the fieldhouse. Accordingly, we propose a contest. A member of our staff is the six-and-under arm wrestling champion of Roosevelt, Arizona. He will meet Fr. Burtchaell in an affair of honor in front of the fieldhouse at twelve midnight, Friday, May 7th, 1971. The loser of the arm wrestling match will be forced to enter the fieldhouse while the winner gets to demolish it about his ears.

Fr. Burtchaell, we're calling you out!

Isolation on the Prairie

Some months ago Cardinal Suenens told a Parisian interviewer that the Church should settle the question of celibacy and get beyond to the major problems of Church reform. The Cardinal said that the idea of celibacy is a minor concern in comparison to the concept of what the priesthood itself should be. Frequently enough, the same situation occurs over and over again where the accidental is allowed to supercede the essential. "A genius for the periphery" is the curse of the dilettante, and apathy is the disease of the self satisfied. In both cases the prospect of being on the cutting edge of substantial reform is blunted by misdirected emphasis, or by no activity at all.

I think there is an analogous situation in our academic community of Notre Dame University and St. Mary's College. In the three years that I have been teaching here the major educational reform that has taken place is coeducation. Such a change is hardly a sign of being in the vanguard of creative experiences, especially since coeducation really is an accidental aspect to the total concept of education in itself. While I believe that a coeducational environment is much healthier for students, I don't think anyone holds it to be essential before learning can take place. Also since the announcement of the merger and thus the impending coeducational situation, the academic community here seems to have lapsed into a state of lethargy that reeks of apathy.

While the dilettante is understandable as one who is generally young and inexperienced, the smugness of the self satisfied is much more difficult to digest. Why we feel that all is well in our academic situation is really incomprehensible. One doesn't have to ponder for long what exists here and what is possible in higher education, to realize that soon we could be inhaling the dust of the reformers. Sometimes I wonder if the "isolation of the prairie" hasn't brought about a great degree of stagnation, for anyone who would state that there is a dynamic academic milieu at ND-SMC hardly has his finger on the pulse.

Before essential change in the educational process can take place though, there has to exist a structure that is capable of bearing the weight of such reform. The present centralized model based on American corporations has left us with much to be desired. This system has taken us to our present place in time but leaves little doubt that it is inadequate for the future. Such an organization has taken away decision making and a sense of responsibility from those who need it most, deans of schools and heads of departments, and it controls programs, appointments, and appropriations generally from an ivory tower.

Thus it seems evident that we need a decentralization of the academic bureaucracy, and more freedom and responsibility given to those administrators who are closer to the academic situation. Schools within the university should be given more real license to develop creative programs and have the autonomy to move freely in their spheres by governing their own fiscal affairs. Power is in the hands of the person who controls the money. So no change in the present structure can take place until the schools in the university are given the responsibility of controlling, at least partially, their own finances. This certainly would have to be one of the first steps in any serious reform.

For a positive direction, I believe that Notre Dame should resurrect the experimental college concept and give it sufficient fiscal and academic autonomy to be able to succeed. The experimental college concept should not become stereotyped and formalized but remain open and free with enough structure to keep it from developing into a mentality of license to do anything or to do nothing. The University should allow variations of the program to arise naturally in time, and encourage creativity from faculty and students alike. But we do have serious problems in the development of such a change, for we cannot expect an academic community to find the seeds of such a sweeping change within itself. They can make some minor changes in areas but no overall structural reformation is possible without outside help. Talented persons from without have to be brought into the University, and they have to be given the power to reform even against the long guarded concerns of those high in the organization.

It seems quite apparent though that the present structure of Notre Dame wasn't prepared for the experimental college and thus it remains only a dream.

So I suggest that Notre Dame hire a team whose task would be to organize the transformation of the University, in order to allow the greatest amount of academic excellence to ensue. What is needed are some young Dr. George Shusters. Such men will need creative vision and an enthusiastic vitality for the job certainly won't be easy. The reformers will need total backing from the powers that be, and they will have to remain insensitive to the verbal blasts which will definitely come from some in the academic community itself.

For Notre Dame to continue on its present course seems an unfortunate circumstance. For St. Mary's College to enter at this juncture into the University's structure without substantial change taking place seems even more unfortunate. Merger under these conditions just increases the number of students who will getting a rather mediocre education. What is sad is to be unable to discern any movement toward real reform. Most appear satisfied. While it seems very true that St. Mary's College had no future alone, it causes no joy to bury the dead without much hope that a reincarnation will bring a higher form of life.

To ape the minor reforms of other universities only after they have proven somewhat successful is not the way develop an academic vitality. Still today, private institutions have a great opportunity to initiate change since they are free to develop different responses to the dynamics of man. To do this involves risk, a high degree of uncertainty at times, and the possibility of failure. Only by taking such chances though will Notre Dame inch forward to the cutting edge of leadership in higher education.

a gleam of light

Springtime, '71, has been the season of secular Lents. In an age when the Church has mitigated the discipline of fasts that fed that fishmonger's daughter, and almsgiving has become principally a matter of deductions between a man and his tax-collector, students have vowed hunger as a protest to napalm and renounced their discophilia as a thrifty means of raising money for the purchase of balms in Gilead for a suffering Asian village. They mourn the death of Messiah fallen in Memphis and the slaughter of the innocents on the greens of Kent State. They follow a Via Dolorosa that leads them not to Calvary or an empty tomb, but to encampments at the seats of power. On the lawns of Washington, they protest the alliance of Herod with Pilate; on the steps of the Pentagon, they turn their anger against Annas and Caiphas, plotting together as conspirators in the palace of the high priest.

In the early hours of a recent Saturday, reports came in from the night marauders of a group of munchkins huddled under blankets on the steps of the Administration building; it was snowing a bit, and the air was icy with the night winds of March; but still the munchkins waited for the coming of Sunday evening, when their hunger strike would end. Only old gluttons know how touching this form of war-protest really is; but in the end, I fear, it did not affect anything. Only if, like Gandhi, they were prepared to fast until death, it seems to me, could their self-punitive suffering make the slightest dent in the moral composure of the military-industrial complex.

The difficulty with our secular Lents is that they involve a postponement of Easter. The passiontide of the world began with its birth. Vietnam—for all of its wounding of the contemporary Christian conscience—is only a single gasp of pain in the agony of the generations that have been nailed to a cross of fire in all the wars of history. Every date on the calendar of time is encircled with the blood of victims who bear the marks of a crown of thorns.

But the energies of living men must not be spent in counting the bodies of the unjustly dead.

At Easter this year, at the Mass for the moppets in Urchinsville, each child was given a plant to take home and care for: it was the gift of a green and living thing in celebration of the Feast of Life.

Vietnam is all of the obscene crimes its critics have called it: organized murder, genocide, capitalistic exploitation, atrocity of the first dimension. I reverence on my knees all the efforts of the gentle people who commit themselves to ending the horror. But as a Christian priest, I beg that their peace movements not be those of penitents who starve themselves in the darkness, but as children who care for green and living things to celebrate the Feast of Life.

War is the ultimate denial of the sanctity of human life. Ideally, as a way of affirming the holiness of the life-force, infants should be fathered and conceived, as a victory declared in the face of death.

If a hundred thousand students would observe May 5th as a day spent in the symbolic act of planting trees in the plundered forest of America, then the peace movement could be seen as reflective of the creative mood of the children of beauty. If a thousand students at Notre Dame could plant a garden on the quads—a place where lovers could walk, and dreamers have visions—it could endure forever as a sacrament of peace: the external sign of the internal grace of a generation's decision to work, in the midst of war, as the sons and daughters of the Father of Life.

A peace garden on the quads...in this Ave atque Vale of my scribblings in the Observer this year, this frivolous nothing represents my hope for the direction in which the energies of the peace-makers might go: not to Washington; not to rallies in Stepan Center; not to futile, somewhat doubtful, acts of civil disobedience...but to the work of caring for green, living things that affirm that Easter is as eternally present in human affairs as the outrages against innocence that seem, like the life of God Himself, to occupy an eternal now.

A final thought: the question is often asked of Notre Dame: is it Catholic? Is it Christian? by which is meant: do the students go to Mass? The question itself represents a topsy-turvy view of hierarchical function. Notre Dame can be Christian only if it has a true moral vision of what a Christian university should be: a witness to itself and to the world community of the implications of truth as revealed in the Incarnation of the Son of Man.

If being Christian adds a dimension of insight to the function of being a university, it is to be hoped that our leaders can define the goals of Notre Dame facing a post-ghetto world where science, operating without ethics, is manipulating more and more the forces of life; for a heaven created on earth by science could end by being more terrifying than the extra-terrestrial hell as conceived by theologians.

In the meantime, to the least of all the children in the Kingdom, a gleam of light is given...maybe, if the gleams given to all of us are collected, they will coalesce into a vision of what Notre Dame should be.

Wounds are not healed by protest; service to suffering is not rendered by rhetoric. Maybe peace can begin only when a generation of students called to bayonets declares an armistice to plant roses in an earth that is in need of gardens.

Peace! If you are in the neighborhood of St. Malachy's, W. 49th Street, two blocks north of Times Square, during July and August, drop in for Sermonette. And remember: Darby and I never said we didn't love you.

(my delta)

in my vietnam
there are no mortars
no rockets or grenades
no bombs or bullets.
only lush majestic hills
rushing tumbling to the sea and crystal emerald
water with old stone mansions rising up from the valleys

in my viet nam
there are cities not unlike Memphis or those in the mississippi
delta region. my many flat farms are similar to those of illinois or iowa
my thousands of miles of dirt roads of red
clay like those in georgia.
my densely wooded areas are reflective of the peaked places of pennsylvania my many jagged cliffs are here colorado and there new hampshire

my villages are so closely packed together that one recalls the livittowns in suburbia.

my rivers are as winding as the rivers of southern ohio.
my people are
short of stance
but large of heart
four ours is a beautiful and someday a free, free land.

man's greatest fault

On completion of my daily chore,
Reading the events of the day before,
I laid the newsprint on the shelf to rest
To ponder the world beyond my nest.

I thought of mankind's greatest fault,
Of his inability of hate to halt
Before it grew and grew so great
That destruction of the world would be his fate.

I wondered why men were so full of hate,
Like impulsive fisherman, hungry fish and bate.
I wondered why men could not live in peace
And learn how their happiness this would increase.

Then I thought of mighty Niagara,
Roaring as it rushed toward the sea.
The sea itself
Breaking and brushing against the shore.
The shore, windswept,
Slanting upward as far as the eye could see.

I thought of the majestic Rockies
Pointing heavenward —
And of the Grand Canyon floor —
Of the flatland plains, the crystal lakes, the sun-dried deserts —
The tempests, the quakes —
And all that lies in nature's creative wake.

I thought of how I had felt upon beholding
these — nature's monuments!
So small, so lost, so insignificant,
So much in need of another humane's sentiments!
Yet I did not feel the need for power,
money or fame,
Or any of those trivial things that drive
men so insane.
Then I thought, if everyman could so feel.
The world surely would be healed.
Then what need of war, of prejudice, of hate;
Of impulsive fisherman, hungry fish and bate!

a letter from an nd

Dear Brian:

Sorry that I haven't written in such a long while especially in light of your faithful and very interesting correspondence.

I'm just getting out of the hospital after having been hosed by the "enemy" (whoever and whatever they are). It's really ironic that they are giving me a Purple Heart Medal for shedding blood for my country when in reality I wouldn't even be proud to shed a mouthful of saliva for the U.S.

I got hit over a place called An Hea (the press is calling it the battle of Duc Duc) which is a mere 17 miles west of Danang. Nixon's Vietnamization program rhymes with castration. As we pull out more and more of the "enemy" is just taking over the places that we have been fighting over for 6 years.

I was very lucky in my accident. Got all the troops out alive but I caught shrapnel in the neck, chest, and arm. The real clincher is that an AK-47 round went through my survival vest and radio and stopped at the butt of my .38 pistol which was worn over my heart. I'm either an immortal or the luckiest bastard alive. Probably the latter is more correct. What saved me was the "Superman" T-shirt that I wear under my flight suit.

I have 16 days and a wake-up until my unit withdraws to Okinawa for six months. I hope I get a job like passing out volleyballs so I can devote all of my energies in dealing with the Black Market and organizing a first class whore house.

I will really be ecstatic about getting out of here. They blew up part of my orphanage last week and so there is really nothing constructive left for me to do.

Spring has always been a good time at N.D., I hope you're enjoying it.

I almost forgot. Spent my R and R in Sydney, Australia. Definitely the best place I've ever visited. Thinking about going there again for a couple months after I'm paroled or exiled from the military.

Peace and friendship.

Colombo claims police harassment

NEW YORK (UPI)—Since 1963 when Joseph Colombo Sr. was accused by federal authorities of heading a Brooklyn crime family, he has lived with what he terms "the nightmare" of being referred to as a Mafioso.

Colombo said in an interview that the federal government's organized strike force has been "harassing" his family. Colombo himself has been indicted for income tax evasion, conspiracy in a jewel robbery and handed a jail sentence for perjury, which he is appealing.

Law enforcement officials scoff at this Colombo martyr image and maintain he has engaged in a publicity campaign to dupe the public by establishing a "veneer" of respectability.

Colombo, 47, not only denies the charges against him but also accuses the federal government of fabricating "the myth of the Mafia" to harass Italian Americans and of using unfair tactics against him.

The most recent indictment charges Colombo with running a multimillion dollar gambling operation. Colombo admits to deriving revenue from gambling operations but maintains they are outside the United States where such activities are legal.

"Now my activities are gambling in London and all these big enterprises," Colombo said. "I don't need anybody to protect me there."

Before the recent charges were filed against him, Colombo had been arrested about a dozen times, primarily for running crap games, consorting with known criminals, disorderly conduct and vagrancy. But he served only a 30 day sentence on a contempt charge for refusing to answer grand jury questions about mob infiltration into legitimate businesses.

Until recently, Colombo greeted charges that he was a powerful Mafia chieftain and member of the Cosa Nostra council with complete silence.

Then last year, federal crime fighters arrested his son, Joseph Jr., on charges of conspiring to melt down silver coins into more valuable ingots. That's when Colombo founded and organized the Italian American Civil Rights League, whose members began picketing FBI headquarters in Manhattan. This form of protest failed to shake the conviction of those who call Colombo the boss of a Cosa Nostra family that profited from loan sharking, labor racketeering and gambling in Brooklyn, England and the Bahamas.

Rally, march mark ND moratorium

"We believe that cooperation with the draft is obeying a law that orders us to commit murders that are unjust, immoral, and inhuman. The war in Vietnam is destroying America's integrity and the Indochinese people.

"People, the task is hard, for we must stop, ask ourselves what we are doing with our lives and money, and attempt to give peace a chance."

The office closed at 4:30, and many students left to talk to people on the streets and distribute literature, but the secretaries at first refused to leave through the protester-lined hallway. After the students agreed not to try to converse with any of the ladies, however, they left, some hostile and some joking. As they left, the students sang the "Star-Spangled Banner." The marchers left the building soon afterward.

There will be a meeting of the N.D. Peace Coalition action committee at 8:00 p.m. tonight at the Teahouse of the Fieldhouse.

These illegal immigrants aid the U.S. economy by providing cheap labor, Samora pointed out. However, the presence of great numbers of Mexicans depresses wages in the entire border area, creating the displacement of citizens and legal aliens.

The wetbacks are also used to break strikes, most recently in efforts of farm laborers to organize into a union. Since the aliens have no legalrights, they cannot be organized themselves.

Mexico has fostered the wet-back migration by not enforcing laws which prohibit the illegal border crossing, Samora added. Apparently, he explained, Mexico believes the money sent back by the wetbacks is good for the economy. Also, the officials believe that the aliens are at least employed in the U.S., where they would remain jobless in Mexico.

However, Samora contends, most of the money the wetback earns is spent in the United States. Also, the personal misery and degradation caused by the illegal migration is damaging to a great many Mexican families.

To discourage the wetback flow, Samora suggests an identification card should be carried by all citizens and legal aliens. Employers hiring anyone unable to produce such a card would be severely prosecuted. This would remove the incentive for employers to hire wetbacks, at the same time removing the major incentive--jobs-- which causes Mexicans to make the dangerous journey across the border.

Samora also stressed that smugglers who traffic in human lives should be prosecuted severely.

Rock photos taken from LaFortune

Arthur Pears, director of Notre Dame security, has confirmed the report that several pictures had been stolen from LaFortune Student Center.

The eight photographs, of football teams coached by Knute Rockne, were removed recently.

Pears said that the main value of the pictures was the entertainment they gave to those that visit the Student Center, and he could not understand the value they would have for any individual. Because of this, Pears hopes that the person responsible will return the photos to LaFortune where everyone will be able to enjoy them.

'This is the place to be'- Phelps

by Jim Donaldson
Observer Sports Editor

In his first year as a college basketball coach, Dick "Digger" Phelps inherited a team that had a 10-15 record and didn't have a starter taller than 6'5". Phelps was able to win 26 of 29 games with that delegation, an accomplishment that earned him the runner-up spot in the United Press International "Coach of the Year" voting.

Next season, Phelps will take over the reins of a Fighting Irish basketball squad that has just two returning lettermen, neither of whom started during the past year. The task before him is a difficult one, but "Digger" is anxious to get started. At a press conference yesterday morning in the Monogram room of the ACC he seemed as thrilled with Notre Dame as a freshman the first week in September.

"I'm very excited about being here," Phelps said. "I just can't believe it. I've always wanted to coach at Notre Dame. I think that this is the place to be."

"There are great people here," Phelps continued. "Notre Dame has a winning tradition, tremendous facilities, a fine academic atmosphere and what I think is the finest alumni association in the country."

Notre Dame was not the only school that sought Phelps' services. He mentioned Minnesota, Utah, Rutgers, Penn and Virginia Tech as schools that had felt him out on coaching jobs but he rejected their offers.

"One offer, at least, was for much more money, but you can't buy happiness," the 29-year old coach said.

The first order of business for Phelps will be to wrap up the recruiting of next year's freshman ballplayers, begun by ex-coach John Dee and his assistant, Gene Sullivan.

Phelps was quick to point out, however, that he wouldn't attempt to recruit any high school prospects who had committed themselves either verbally or in writing to Fordham, nor would he encourage any of his Fordham players to transfer to Notre Dame.

Phelps was also anxious to contact his new "kids".

"It's important that the kids believe in themselves," Phelps commented. "Knowing that most of next year's Fighting Irish will be inexperienced, Phelps expressed the hope that he could "get the most out of the material at hand".

"If I can build confidence among the kids, there's no limit to what we can accomplish," Phelps said.

Offensively, Phelps figures to use a style that best suits the ability of his players but on defense, he let it be known that he was strictly a man-to-man advocate.

When the difficulty of the 1971-'72 schedule was pointed out to him, including the fact that NYU had been replaced by a Madison Square Garden date with North Carolina, Phelps remarked that "to be the best you have to play the best".

"We'll go step by step and take each game one by one. The kids will have to play the best they can," Phelps continued.

While discussing his coaching philosophy, Phelps commented that he wasn't a "hold the ball coach". "College basketball is a spectator game and it's got to be exciting," he felt. He said that if other teams play a slow-down type of game then, "we'll go out after them early. We can't afford to play into their hands."

Gene Sullivan, Dee's assistant who had sought the head coaching post, spoke briefly at the conference and wished Phelps and the Irish good luck in the future.

Phelps let it be known that he signed a 4-year contract with Notre Dame and said that "I hope it turns out to be 40".

Phelps also revealed how he got his nickname. "My father is an undertaker," he said with a smile.

I guess if the Irish intend to bury their opponents next year, "Digger" is the man that can do it for them.

Pomarico's in the DiNardo mold

by Vic Dorr
Observer Sports Writer

The 1971 Fighting Irish football team will be the eighth team that Ara Parseghian has produced since coming to Notre Dame, and this team, like no other, promises to be a blend of experience and youth. No one needs to be reminded that the Irish roster for next season will be loaded with names such as Gatewood, Patulski, Creaney, and Ellis, but there will also be some new names on the list. Names like Brown, Hill, Devine, Casper, and Rudnick.

One of the most promising of these young players is Frank Pomarico, a 6-2, 240 pound offensive guard who very likely will be holding down Larry DiNardo's old position when the Irish open against Northwestern in September.

Pomarico, who like DiNardo, came to Notre Dame from St. Francis Prep in Brooklyn, is something of a "born" offensive lineman.

"I've been playing on the offensive line since I was 10 years old," he said. "And I've always played at guard, too, except in high school where I played a little tackle."

Apparently he did no injustice to the memory of DiNardo at St. Francis for during his last year there Pomarico was a rather heavily wooed prospect. He was approached by the likes of Boston College, Michigan State and North Carolina, as well as Notre Dame. But according to Pomarico, there was never any choice.

"I'd wanted to come to Notre Dame ever since my sophomore year in high school. Oh, sure, I was recruited by other places, but I always knew that I'd come here if I got the chance. I guess I'd have to say that Larry (DiNardo) was one of the big reasons, too. We talked about the school a lot, and he didn't leave much doubt in my mind."

One doubt that did confront Frank Pomarico last fall was whether or not he would be able to "make it" on the Irish freshman team.

"At first I had my doubts," he admitted. "You know, I came up here and I was afraid that they'd all be monsters. And during the early part of the freshman season everyone shot out in front of me. But after a while everything started to fall into place and I started to get the feel of things a little better." Freshman coach Denny Murphy must have thought that things fell into place for Pomarico immediately, because Frank started at offensive guard in every freshman game last year, and he even went both ways in the season's finale against Michigan.

The freshman season ended some two weeks before the Thanksgiving holidays, and as soon as Pomarico returned to South Bend after that semester break he began a weight-training program for the '71 season.

"I made up my mind right away that I wasn't going to end up on the prep team again," he said. "All I really wanted to do was be sure that I made the traveling squad, and I decided to work my butt off until I did." That bit of off-season conditioning paid off handsomely. For not only did Pomarico achieve his goal of making the traveling squad, but he also found himself, at the end of his freshman year, as the team's first string right guard.

There was an added bonus, too. At halftime of last week's Blue-Gold game, Pomarico was one of the fifteen players--and one of six freshmen--to receive Hering Awards for superior performances during spring practice. Pomarico's award came for being the Outstanding Freshman Offensive Lineman.

"Winning that award was something of an inward goal that I set for myself at the beginning of practice," he said, "and I was really glad to get it...but I wouldn't have been demoralized if I hadn't. This is something special for me, though, because Larry won the same award his freshman year, and it's an honor for me to have done the same thing."

Frank Pomarico, despite all his early successes, is aware that his position is anything but secure.

"It depends," he said, "on how much I work out during the summer. With the kind of players that we've got at Notre Dame, it's a day-by-day challenge to keep your position. You've got to try to look good on every play; you just can't afford to get beat. I'm pretty confident right now that I'll have my position in September, but I know it's going to be different in the fall. I'll have to go out and prove myself all over again."

Thinking ahead to the upcoming season, Pomarico ventured an opinion that may not be born out until the Irish are well into their '71 schedule.

"We'll have a great defense, but our offense is kind of young and it could take a few games for us to gell. But if we get through our first three or four games without a loss then we'll be hard to stop."

Last year's team did just that, and a key factor in their early-season spurt was the performance of number 56--guard Larry DiNardo. If next year's team is going to enjoy the same success, it's just possible that much of the responsibility will fall on another number 56--guard Frank Pomarico.

ND netmen run winstreak to 14

By E.J. Kinkopf
Observer Sports Writer

"Tiger" Tom Fallon's racquetballers continued their blistering pace, as they disposed of Purdue on Monday and Indiana on Tuesday.

In the process they extended their unbeaten string of 14 straight and ended the win streak of the Hoosiers at ten.

The Irish defeated the Boilermakers on the West Lafayette campus by a score of 7-2.

Buster Brown, John Allare, Brandon Walsh and Rob Scheffer all recorded singles victories. Brown's winning match was the only one that went three sets.

The doubles teams of Riley-LeSage, Brown-Allare, and Walsh-Murray swept in the doubles action.

The Indiana match was a different story as the Irish squeaked by 5-4.

The Hoosiers were out for blood, after losing to the netmen by an identical score at the convo earlier this spring.

They left the ND campus in March complaining that the Irish had an advantage on the indoor courts.

So this time the racquetballers stuck it to 'em outdoors.

Coach Fallon singled out Captain Bernie LeSage as the hero of the match as he won a tie-breaker in number four singles in the final set for his victory.

And that tie breaking point proved to be the margin of victory.

Besides LeSage, Allare, Walsh and Scheffer all won their singles matches, and the duo of Brown-Allare recorded the only Irish doubles victory, while clinching the win.

The racquetballers will travel to Kalamazoo for matches with Western Michigan on Friday and Kalamazoo College on Saturday.

The netters will also host a doubleheader on Sunday when they tackle Eastern Michigan and Michigan State.

Thinclads take 4th in Big State Meet

The Notre Dame track team placed fourth in the Indiana State Meet at Muncie on Tuesday.

The Irish, running up a point total of 58½, finished behind Indiana University, Indiana State and Purdue. The winners, IU, racked up a total of 82 points to win first place honors.

Tom McMannon was the Irish star as he set new Notre Dame and Indiana State records in the high hurdles.

The swift soph recorded times of 13.5 seconds in the qualifying heat, and finished up with a 13.7 clocking in the finals while copping first place honors.

The new record broke the mark of 13.8 Tom had set only two weeks ago.

In the same event, Joe Utz finished third and Dave Struckler came in fourth.

Their respective times of 14.0 and 14.2 were also cited by Coach Wilson as 'exceptional.'

Tom McMannon also won a first in the 440 hurdles. His time of 54.2 seconds won him the blue ribbon.

Tom's older brother Mike finished second in the long jump and fourth in the triple jump.

Mike also teamed with Jack Samar, Rick Vallicelli and Rich

Harris in the 440 Relay. The

Rick Wohluter

quartet finished fourth with a clocking of 42.8.

Rich Vallicelli turned in his best outdoor efforts this spring in the 100 yard dash and the 220 yards.

But his 9.5 clocking in the 100 and his 21.9 in the 220 earned him only fourth and third place respectively.

Rick Wohuter, Marty Hill and Dan Dunn rounded out the Irish scoring in the track events.

Wohluter, returning to action after a layoff due to a leg injury, finished first in his section of the 880. However his time of 1:57.1 was only good enough for fourth place overall.

Elio Polselli completed the scoring as he won a first and a second in the field events.

Elio finished first in the discus with a toss of 176' 4". In the shot put he won a second place ribbon. His throw of 55' 5½" was his best outdoor effort this year.

The tracksters will take a vacation from formal competition until May 29th when they travel to Philly to compete in the ICAAAA meet.

Welfare cuts spark riots

NEW YORK UPI—Thousands of blacks angered by welfare cuts rampaged through the East New York section of Brooklyn yesterday, setting fire to houses, breaking store windows, and looting.

Police reported "quite a log of arrests" on looting and other charges.

The protest gained momentum after a rally attended by 500 demonstrators heard speeches denouncing welfare cutbacks made necessary by a reduction of state aid to the city and wholesale layoffs of city workers. It was sponsored by an organization calling itself The Black Coalition.

The rally spilled into a surrounding 10 block area and the crowd increased in numbers. The protesters blocked traffic, set garbage fires, hurled rocks and refuse through shop windows and snatched up merchandise. One police spokesman said the looting was "WIDESPREAD," especially on Rockaway Boulevard and Amboy Street, which subsequently was roped off by 10 police.

Six houses at Christopher and Sutter Streets—four of them vacant—burst into flame and a few minutes later two other buildings apparently were set afire at Pitkin and Powell Avenues. Equipment from a number of fire stations was rushed into the area and more than 300 firefighters were at the scene.

Roving bands harassed the firemen and threw bottles at them. The firefighters requested police protection and scores of officers were moved into the area of the four alarm and three alarm blazes.

Off-campus tenant info service organized

An information service for off-campus students composed of third year law students under the supervision of a practicing attorney will begin operation next semester, according to Off-Campus Commissioner John Drost.

The Student Tenant In-

NEW OFFICERS - John Krasnostein, (seated), of Western Australia, named president of the executive committee of the International Students Association yesterday. Also elected were; (1. to r.), Paul Chang, ND Coordinator (Jamaica); Colin Liu, Vice President (Hong Kong); Amaury Velez, Treasurer (Puerto Rico) and Angela Raaf, SMC Coordinator-Secretary (Bolivia).

formation Service will be housed in the Off-Campus Office in the basement of the LaFortune Student Center. It will operate "in accord with the rules of the Indiana Supreme Court" and advise students in tenant and landlord relations, Drost said yesterday.

The service, which was organized by the Off-Campus Commission and the ND Legal Aid and Defender Assoc., arose out of the need to arbitrate problems between tenant and their landlords.

Drost said that students planning to sign a lease before leaving for the summer should consult the Off-Campus Office for pertinent information. The service, which will operate full time next year, is now on a temporary schedule. Problems should be taken to Dave Tushar, Student government judicial coordinator, for the present, Drost added.

Lah calls for Ecology camp volunteers

Four volunteers are needed to help staff an ecology camp for sixth graders from May 10 to May 14, Community Relations Commissioner Dave Lah announced yesterday.

The volunteers will "lead nature walks and discussions and act as camp counsellors in general," Lah said. He added that they are looking especially for students knowledgeable of forestry, biology, astronomy, geology or camping. They will accept students who can only make it for one or two days.

The camp, which is only 40 miles from Notre Dame, is funded by Model Cities. There is no pay involved for the volunteers, but everything is free at the camp.

Anyone interested should contact Dave Lah at 1535.

DePaul Society collection Tuesday

Tuesday, May 11, has been proclaimed "St. Vincent DePaul Society Day" by Student Government and the Hall Presidents Council.

On that day, section leaders will go from room to room collecting used clothing, shoes, and athletic equipment. Books, furniture, rugs, refrigerators, book cases, lamps, old TV's and radios can be left inside the loading dock door of each hall for pickup by the society early Wednesday morning.

Collected articles will be sold in the St. Vincent DePaul Store downtown. All money eventually goes to some charitable use.

Jack Candon is coordinating the drive at SMC, with Dave Lah in charge of the Notre Dame project.
