

Discussion centers on SLC elections

Hall presidents meet in St. Ed's

By Pete McHugh
Observer Staff Reporter

Student Life Council elections, allotment of hall finances and bicycle theft were among the topics discussed last night in St. Edward's Hall.

The meeting was closed for discussion among the presidents, until HPC Chairman William "Butch" Ward opened it ten minutes after its start.

Ed Ellis, a member of the Student Government Election Committee explained voting procedures for today's election, and stressed the need for attendants to observe the balloting at all times. He urged that everyone who votes be registered, and Ward emphasized the importance of the elections noting that the winners may have to choose the successor of King Kersten should he resign.

Election boxes will be delivered to the halls between 10:30 and 11:00 a.m. today, according to Ellis. Voting will continue until 7 p.m. Registration before voting is mandatory, with each student giving his name, class and identification number.

Ward added, "If we are to create an atmosphere at all conducive to Student Government, we will have to show responsibility."

Hall Allocations

Ward brought up the subject of hall allotments for renovation, or other needs. He said this money is not to be used for general maintenance, but for larger needs such as the creation of study areas or lounges.

There will be $50,000 available for distribution.

Mentioning that the Board of Trustees is in no hurry to dispense this fund, Ward urged the council to submit their reports as soon as possible. Distribution decisions will be made by Fr. Jerome Wilson, vice president for business affairs.

Noting the continued incidence of bicycle theft on campus, Research and Development Commissioner Jim Clark described the planned bike registration procedure.

There will be a 75 cent registration fee, and serial numbers will be punched into the frames of bicycles without them. It will be done by halls beginning with Flanner and Grace, where the theft rate has been highest. For more information, contact Clark at the Student Government offices.

In a related traffic matter, Ward called for the enforcement of campus speed limits to prevent any more accidents such as the Friday night hit and run incident. Ward has met with the acting vice president for student affairs about the matter.

Coed Housing

A significant part of the meeting was given to discussion of coed housing. No opposition was voiced against men and women sharing the same hall, but there was mixed emotions about the reality of such a dorm on campus.

Mike Cunningham, of Dillon, felt the council should wait before forming a position since the coeducational experience is only two weeks old.

Jim Ferguson, of Howard, felt that any HPC action would be useless. In response to plans to organize coed housing study groups he said, "No matter how many SLCs you have and how much you put into student government, the fate of the University will still be in the hands of the trustees and the administration."

In other matters the HPC agreed to admit a representative from the Old College, and discussed homecoming activities, judicial boards, housing for visiting high school seniors, and a request by the St. Joseph's County United Fund for student volunteers.

SLC elections held in halls today

By Tom Drape

Elections to decide members for the Student Life Council will be held today in each hall. To help determine your choice, the Observer is providing a brief sketch of each candidate.

DISTRICT I (Off-Campus)

Jim Hunt: Hunt is best known as editor of the ND yearbook, Dome, last year. He is also a photographer for the Observer and Dome. Transferring his talents off-campus this year, he would hope to keep the OC's represented.

Tim Schwartz: Schwartz is emphasizing enthusiasm rather than qualifications in his bid. Calling for biweekly meetings rather than monthly, he stated that he would devote 10-15 hours a week to the job.

Bob Sauer: A former stay senator in student government, Sauer was a member of the ND-SMC Constitutional Merger Committee. He was a severe critic of the Township Plan for student government last year.

DISTRICT II (Farley, Breen-Phillips, Cavanaugh, St. Ed's)

Matt Cavanaugh: Cavanaugh is a junior in engineering. Although an evicted Badin Hall tenant, he has yet to decide on a plan for co-residential dormitory.

Juan Manigault: Another junior in Arts and Letters, Manigault has been involved in student body president elections and MANASA. His drawback is his support of monthly meetings, according to the Observer Editorial Board.

DISTRICT III (Flanner and Grace)

Mike Hess: A junior resident of Flanner, Hesse is involved with the campus radio station WSND as a show moderator.

Floyd Kezele: One of the more "experienced" candidates in the election, Kezele's two year record in student government has been described as "impeccable." Floyd has been the vice-chairman of the SLC for the past two years. He is a senior in A.&L.

"Carolina" Nichols: A freshman in Arts and Letters, Nichols would like to see the SLC as the main governing force on campus. He feels he can generate the power for such a goal. DISTRICT IV (Stanford, Keenan, Zahm, Holy Cross, St. Joe, Moreau)

Anthony Abowd: Abowd, a sophomore at Holy Cross, felt an understanding of the role of the SLC is needed for the expanded role of the students under the new constitution. An AL intent, he is a Special Projects Editor for the Observer.

Rich Eschman: Eschman is a senior in Stanford Hall. Choosing not to be interviewed by the Observer, Rich was also unavailable on election eve in lieu of his campaigning.

Bill McLean: A stand-off with Abowd for the Observer's endorsement, McLean also exhibited a knowledge and concern for the future of the SLC and new constitution. He is a soph in Stanford, and currently an Ombudsman.

Mark Knevel: Knevel is a junior at Keenan Hall and an AL intent. Knevel, too, was out campaigning and unavailable for comment.

Dick Singsank: Singsank could not be reached for comment.

DISTRICT V (Alumni, Dillon, Walsh, Badin, Sorin)

Frank Devine: Devine, moderator of the WSND show Contact Notre Dame, as well as a former Dillon Hall senator, has been a prominent figure in student government his last 3 years.

Dennis Etienne: Better known as H-man, Etienne was a main thrust in King Calhoun's bid for the Student Body Presidency. He is currently serving as Executive coordinator for student government, and is a junior in AL.

Rick Hilton: Hilton is a past frosh class president and was involved in the ND-SMC freshman class merger procedure. He is a junior.

DISTRICT VI (Howard, Morrissey, Lyons, Fisher, Pangborn)

Fred Giuffride: Considered the other experienced and outstanding candidate in the election, Giuffride has a long line of student government accomplishments. He has served on several student-faculty committees and the University Academic Council. He is a senior, and has also served as a stay senator. He is presently the editorial page editor for the Observer.

Joe Lipka: Lipka is a senior without a previous student government record. A heavy schedule would hamper his might hamper his availability.

Jim Roe: A junior and Observer night editor and reporter, Roe remained unavailable on his specifics of the role of the SLC.

Kennedy to speak

Senator Edward Kennedy (D-Mass.) will speak on the Notre Dame campus on October 6. Jim Novie, Student Union Academic Commissioner, revealed yesterday that Kennedy will appear for a morning lecture at Stepan Center.

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y. — The General Assembly of the United Nations convened Tuesday for its 27th annual session, and hears its newly usually strong statement, say that the war in Vietnam should be stopped "once and for all." Normally, a General Assembly President in his inaugural address steers clear of controversy.

LONDON — An Israeli diplomat was killed and another injured when an envelope sent through the mail exploded in the embassy. RDr. Ami Shachori, 44-year-old counselor for Agricultural Affairs, was hit in the chest and abdomen by the explosive charge. Theodor Kaddar, who recently arrived to replace Shachori, was slightly injured and hospitalized. Three more explosive devices, in envelopes understood to be addressed to Senior Embassy Officials, were discovered and rendered harmless.

WASHINGTON — The Senate approved a major environmental bill designed to meet a developing "land crisis" by authorizing the Federal Government for the first time to help states develop long-range plans for use of land. The vote was 60 to 18. The legislation represents an evolutionary departure from the traditional practice of private and local control over use of land.

University press in crisis

By Ann Theresa Darin
Observer Staff Reporter

Will the presses continue to roll at the University of Notre Dame Press next year? Presently a substantial loss, $112,000 by one estimate; $17,000 by another, is jamming the presses. Before Rev. James T. Burtchaell, university provost, commits further funds from his academic budget to fund the press, he has asked the seven members of the University Press editorial board to evaluate the program, before the autumn draws to a close.

The University of Notre Dame losses for 1971-72 is quite high compared to other figures in the University budget. According to Rev. Jerome J. Wilson, business affairs vice-president, "It's the one figure in the financial statement that really stands out." But, when viewed with other university presses around the country, its loss is about average. Large state schools can fund their publishing houses with public funds; Notre Dame, as a private school, must rely on its endowment-contribution-tuition revenue to sustain the Press.

Next year, according to informed university sources, the Press will be limited to $50,000. Can the Press survive with such a drastically reduced budget?

Many of the editorial board members polled are hesitant to answer except for Mr. John Ehmann, acting press director. Ehmann believes the Press can keep within the limit. "Our loss this year was only $17,000 and that's a long way from $50,000," he said. However, when depreciation and inventory are figured into the expenses and profits, according to University financial advisors, the loss figure soars to almost a quarter-million dollars.

Many of the financially-troubled university presses have lately merged into consortiums of three or four presses banding together to relieve expenses. However, Press editorial board members are reluctant to support such an action.

"You may wind up by paying as much as before or even more," claimed Rev. Paul Beichner. Ms. Emily Schessberger, recently-retired Press director, squelched the idea at its suggestion. "With the consent of the University of Chicago and the Big 10 schools, they have now dropped everything except a combined distribution center. They all complained about the loss of their identities and the rising costs."

Shriver rallies Penn. Democrats

by Steven V. Roberts

(c) 1972 New York Times

Pittsburgh, Pa., Sept. 19 - The motor launch cruised down the placid Monongahela River last night, as the neon lights on the surrounding hills reflected in the dark water. The boating party included many of the top democratic and labor leaders in the area, and after a roast beef dinner and plenty of wine, Sargent Shriver picked up a microphone and told them:

"I don't care whether you love George McGovern, or whether you like me, that's almost beside the point. The question is, what are you going to do for yourselves?"

In that kind of blunt language, the Democratic Vice-presidential nominee has been bringing this message to the big city, big state politicians: We're all in this boat together, so let's cooperate.

On the basis of three days of campaigning in New Jersey and Pennsylvania, it seems that the McGovern-Shriver team is getting through, at least to the politicians. Shriver's punchy talk was interrupted a dozen times for applause last night, but no line drew a better cheer than this one:

"If Franklin Roosevelt were on this boat tonight, if Harry Truman were on this boat, if John F. Kennedy or Rob Kennedy were on this boat, if Lyndon Johnson or Hubert Humphrey were on this boat, you know what they would be saying - We have to unite to defeat this man Richard Nixon."

Some important people are obviously not sold yet. In Las Vegas yesterday, I. W. Abel, President of the United Steelworkers of America and the district's most important labor leader, was reiterating his position of neutrality in the Presidential Race. Mayor Peter Flaherty of Pittsburgh was conspicuously absent, and Mayor Frank Rizzo of Philadelphia is supporting President Nixon.

Some McGovern people are still not happy about cooperating with the same politicians they have sworn to annihilate. The local leader who drew up last night's guest list omitted some of her old enemies, and only last minute repair work kept a lot of noses in joint.

More seriously, the attitudes of the politicians and labor leaders are not necessarily shared by their followers. The reform movement in the Democratic Party, led by McGovern, has been rooted in the rising educational level and independence of the Electorate, but this year that independence might work against the reformers.

In addition, as Shriver tries to appeal to "traditional Democrats, the cracks in the old Roosevelt coalition show clearly. Yesterday morning, following a meeting with Philadelphia black leaders, a Shriver aide indicated that the candidate favored hiring minorities in roughly the same proportion as they appear in the electorate.

But at a news conference an hour later, Shriver denounced the concept of set "quotas" in the hiring of minorities, an idea bitterly opposed by many labor unions and Jewish leaders. As the conference broke up, the candidate expressed the dilemma to a black newsman this way:

"I want to help you, but I don't want to help you and hurt everyone else. I don't think that's fair."

As it has been developing on the campaign trail, Shriver's appeal to Urban Democrats has three main themes. The first is the invocation of party loyalty, the recitations of party heroes and accomplishments, the insistence that a McGovern-led party is open to all.

The second theme is economics, the traditional democratic issue. Asked at a News conference yesterday to name the most important issue in the campaign, Shriver declared: "The economic issue is most important for most people -- unemployment, welfare, the price of consumer goods."

Again and again he invokes the democratic record -- social security, unemployment compensation, Medicare. The Republicans, he always notes, oppose these measures, and thus do not "care about the working man."

The third thrust is to make people realize one simple fact: The only alternative to George McGovern is Richard Nixon. As one labor leader said on the boat last night, "Richard Nixon finally brought us all together."

DEBBIE BECK for FRESHMAN ASSEMBLY REPRESENTATIVE

PLATFORM:

My platform is not going to be a gimmicky, give-the-kids-everything-they-want, tear-down-the-school kind of thing. I feel that we need honesty and open communications between the freshmen and the upperclassmen and among the freshmen themselves. My job will be to offer to members of my class the opportunity to make their ideas heard. Many freshmen feel that they have no effective way to voice their opinions and comments. Well now, we have the means to do something about this--by selecting two representatives to sit on the Assembly and be a sounding board for their fellow classmates. By running for this council, I am indicating my willingness to work for my class.

Comments and complaints abound among the freshmen. I've found that out in my first two weeks here. By selecting two people who are willing to give the time and effort this assembly requires, we can start off on the right track. I feel I can do the job here and my first hope will be that this election can unify our class. Right now, to many of us, the girls here are just a sea of nameless faces. Through The Assembly, I hope to be able to bring our freshmen class closer together--and by this I don't just mean getting to know the girls on your floor or in your classes--I mean getting to know everyone in all the dorms. This is my number one goal. I hope that you, the students in my class will place enough trust in me to elect me to the Student Assembly. My door is always open and I'm always eager to hear what anyone has to say--and this holds true even if I'm not elected. If you have any questions, problems, or comments, just call me at 4280 or come to room 203 in Holy Cross. Thank you in advance for your support.

JUDY MARDOIAN for FRESHMAN ASSEMBLY REPRESENTATIVE

PLATFORM:

My platform is posted here in the hope that you will only cast your vote for me in the event that you believe the following can benefit our school.

I believe student government should try to accomplish the following:

Work with the college in attempting to establish Saint Mary's as a unique institution independent from Notre Dame but always willing to work in attempting to establish its strengths and weaknesses and this might best be accomplished by embarking on a year of intense self study. Student government can and should take an active role in this.

SMC student government should also make itself more responsible to the immediate needs of its constituency and should work for now as well as for the future. We should be able to provide more for student needs by initiating more interaction between halls on an academic as well as social level. SMC student government should avail itself to those students in need of tutorial help and attempt to establish a course of evaluation booklet similar to that currently being done at Notre Dame, but more complete in its range and scope.

We should also attempt to seek new sources of social outlet for ourselves and the Notre Dame community were applicable to relieve the "party syndrome"; the scope of this should be as diversified and imaginative as we can make it. Finally student government should take and maintain a strong stand on the position of parietals.

I feel that individual halls should be able to establish parietal hours as they deem necessary.

As your freshman representative to the Student Assembly I will try my best to be conscientious in my duties, open to any ideas you might have, and offer to devote sufficient time and interest on the Assembly. I would appreciate your vote.

Sincerely,

Judy Mardoian

Placement Bureau begins sessions

The Placement Bureau will begin their series of Placement Nights tonight for all Seniors and Graduate Students in Arts and Letters and Business Administration.

Tommorrow night, the Bureau will sponsor the same event for Seniors and Grads in Science and Engineering. On both evenings the events will be held in the Engineering Auditorium at 7:00.

The Placement Nights will feature mock interviews, a question and answer period, and the opportunity for the students to pick up the necessary registration materials.

Today, the same students will be receiving in the mail the placement manual. The manual, according to Richard Willemin, Placement Bureau Director, will contain instructions for Seniors and Grads interested in using the bureau's facilities. Also covered in the manual will be the schedule of employer's interviews as they have been scheduled already.

The HPC's Task

A significant part of last night's Hall President's Council meeting was dedicated to a discussion of coresidential housing at Notre Dame. HPC Chairman Butch Ward initiated the discussion and despite his optimism, the Council reacted skeptically.

There was no opposition to coresidential housing voiced at the meeting, but nonetheless, the overriding attitude was one of defeat.

Jim Ferguson, President of Howard Hall, summarized the feeling that was prevalent. "No matter how many SLC's you have and how much you put into Student Government, the fate of the University will still be in the hands of the trustees and the administration."

Reason for Ferguson's skepticism is apparent. Last year the administration and trustees ignored the fact that 18 of the 20 rectors on campus supported coresidential housing facilities. They also ignored a proposition submitted by Alumni Hall urging that Alumni be transformed into a "salt and pepper" dormitory. They further ignored a Student Government report on the choice of female dorms.

It appears that skepticism is the proper attitude.

Time For Initiative

But this is not the time for skepticism, rather it is the time for positive action. In the issue staff:

Night Editor: Jack Frischkorn
Ass't Night Editor: Albert D'Antonio
Layout: Kathy Schwillie, Joe
Day Editor: Mark Luppino
Typists: Diane Chermiside, Dave Rust, Mary Romer, Bullet Night Controller: John Flannigan

recent times, the HPC has begun to drag its feet. Instead of initiating action, the HPC has always reacted to the actions of others. If ever there was a time and an issue for the HPC to take the initiative on, this is it.

The Council is meant to serve the wishes, desires, and needs of the halls on campus. Thus, the coresidential housing issue is one on which the HPC should initiate action instead of stalling until others move first.

Ward feels that the worst thing that can happen would be if the University said no to the coed hall proposals. But the fact remains that if the University says no, they will also be forced in a public forum to give a reason and that alone will be a step forward.

At this time, the University doesn't seem prepared to initiate coresidential housing. But it must also be remembered that five years ago, Fr. Theodore Hesburgh published an article citing the reasons why coeducation would not be good for Notre Dame.

Times can change as can opinions. And the initiative must begin now if this University will ever see coresidential housing in the foreseeable future.

HPC's Responsibility

Therefore, the responsibility seems to lie on the HPC. They have the greatest contact with the halls of any governing organization on campus. If they must serve as an advisory board to a higher organization (i.e. SLC or the Board of Trustees) then let that be the case, for who could advise them better in this instance than the HPC.

The HPC cannot let this issue die. It should unite to resubmit the Alumni proposal. It should develop a number of additional proposals to be offered as alternatives. And it should submit these proposals directly to the Student Affairs Subcommittee of the Board of Trustees.

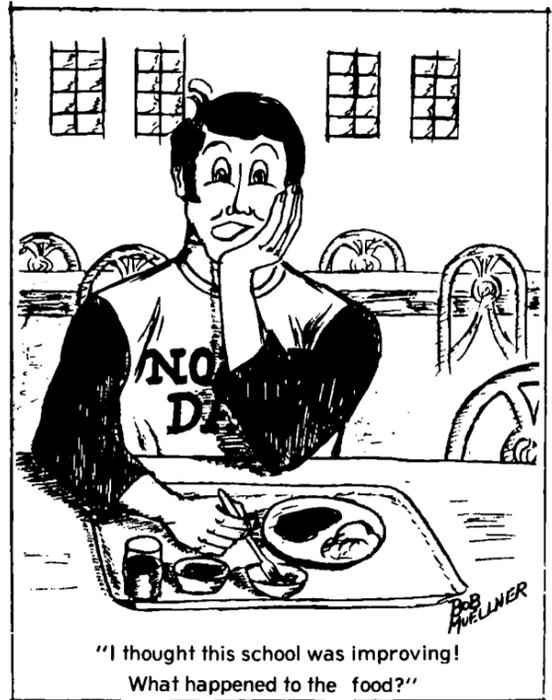

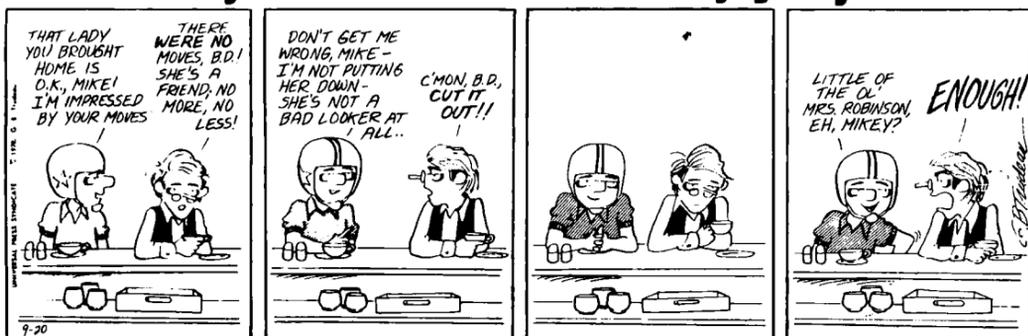

This would handing the trustees a hot potato that they could not ignore. They would be dealing with a powerful and progressive statement from the student body indicating their ideals. It would not be the type of proposal that the trustees could quietly relegate to a committee.

So, the initiative lies with the HPC. It is their turn to lead and to be out front. Action must be forthcoming from them. The responsibility is theirs.

For What It's Worth Clearing the Air

don ruane

A letter written by Student Body President Bob Kersten appeared Monday accusing a staff member of a "conscious attempt to besmirch my flawless character" in an SLC story, and challenging the responsibility and credibility of the Observer in general.

Obviously the staff member is myself, and I want to publicly reply to SBP Kersten's letter, and apologize for my injustice.

There is no need to repeat the quote in question, as it was quite apparent in the SLC story Friday. SBP Kersten is quite correct in his charge of breach of promise, but not libel.

After he made the comment he quickly added "Don't print that." I replied in such a way as to indicate that it would not be used, which was just the same as promising.

It was a gross mistake on my part. I have often criticized other members of the media for allowing other concerns, be they in the interest of one's self or the public, to be given priority over the ethics of good journalism. Just last week I berated ABC and CBS for their stingy roles concerning the use of satellite time during the terrorism at the Olympics.

It also violated advice I frequently give to others around the office, that is, never promise anyone anything in this business, because there is no guarantee you will be able to fulfill a promise in spite of good intentions, or because you might allow other considerations to enter the situation and persuade you to foolishly do something otherwise.

The use of the quote, however, was not intended as a malicious attempt to make SBP Kersten look crude, callous and bold to other SLC members, the faculty, trustees, administration, or any other group or person.

My reasons were as follows: 1. After considering its use, I concluded that the quote was an accurate and forceful expression of SBP Kersten's opinion of the SLC as it appears to him. 2. It is my impression that this is how many students believe the Kersten administration feels about the SLC and many other things. 3. The story was an Observer Insight, which allows for some speculation, interpretation, and editorializing as opposed to a straight news story. 4. SBP Kersten should be more aware of his office, and thus be more careful in what he says while speaking from that office. I feel that he treats his accepted responsibility too lightly, and that the use of this quote might bring the seriousness of the student body presidency to bear a little stronger in his mind. Had I not made the promise, I probably would have used the quote for the same reasons, adding "Don't print that."

In spite of these reasons, I did make the promise and should not have violated it. I apologize and retract the statement.

As for SBP Kersten's other comments in his letter, I would like to set the record straight. As Executive Editor I have a great deal of freedom to write responsibly outside the restrictions of a straight news story. I failed in that responsibility when I used the quote. If you consider this to be representative of the entire staff, so be it; but I prefer to consider it a personal mistake, and not a reflection on the others since they were not aware of the situation.

As for the credibility of the Observer, it did not reach any low point during the campus elections last spring. I believe that this is an understandable, but over-emotional reaction of SBP Kersten to get his point across. The Observer's credibility has risen substantially during the last year and a half, and I hope my mistake has not set it back to any degree.

I hope SBP Kersten will consider this an adequate explanation and response, and that he will be willing to resume his previous relationship with the Observer, with the understanding that it was not a deliberate or calculated attempt by the Observer to libel him or his administration.

Viewpoint

Fr. James T. Burtchaell

In Loco Parentis or Life With(out) Father

The following is the first part of an article by University Provost Fr. James T. Burtchaell which originally appeared in the August edition of Notre Dame Magazine.

Since the article is of general interest to students Fr. Burtchaell has given The Observer permission to reprint it. No passages have been deleted or edited. The second part will appear tomorrow. ed.

Time was when universities and colleges proposed to exercise parental authority over their students. That was a time, be it said, when everything about parenthood itself seemed somehow less ominous: when "family planning" meant planning to have one; when childbirth could be contemplated without the aid of Spock; and when youngsters could generally count on growing up with a single set of parents. But today surrogate parenthood, like its natural model, has fallen upon hard times.

Few today acquiesce in the notion of a university's standing in loco parentis, "in the parents' stead." The last decade has seen this once traditional legal doctrine virtually extinguished by the federal and state courts. The results have gone in both directions. In some cases, students have successfully resisted peremptory dismissal; the courts held that university authorities were obliged to state their rules more clearly and administer them with due process. In other cases, students have failed to win damages claimed for negligence since the colleges were no longer expected to exercise such a careful vigilance over them. Hitherto, nearly all of these cases have, with rising consistency, been holding that the student-school relationship should be that of a citizen to any state agency, just as professors in state schools are increasingly likened to civil service employees. Private schools will not be indefinitely immune to this growing legal tradition and to the philosophy behind it, surely alien to that older view of the campus as a domestic household.

Many university officials seem pleased to shake the onus of supervision that was theirs in loco parentis. The issue of room visitation between the sexes provides a contemporary illustration. When several Oxford colleges announced this year that they would admit their first female undergraduates next fall, Hertford College explained that coeds would lodge in no special wing of college buildings. Asked if that would not lead to cohabitation, the master of Hertford stated emphatically that it was none of his concern. The former president of Parsons College has recently founded another proprietary school in the East with open dorm visitation. Asked the same question, he snorted that he was running a college, not a church.

The most vociferous dismantlers of the in loco parentis policy, of course, have been the students themselves. Entering into the university often relieves strained relations at home between parental authority and the striving for independence by the child. He does not leave home in pursuit of new authoritarian adults, but to breathe new adult freedom for himself. Curriculum requirements, disciplinary rules, university requirements, disciplinary rules, university decision-making bodies without student involvement—all can seem disconcerting to a young man or woman whose driving personal need at the time is to assert his or her own arrival at adult freedom.

Well, despite its unpopularity and untimeliness, the notion of senior members of the university standing in loco parentis to their undergraduate students in one that I should like to sustain.

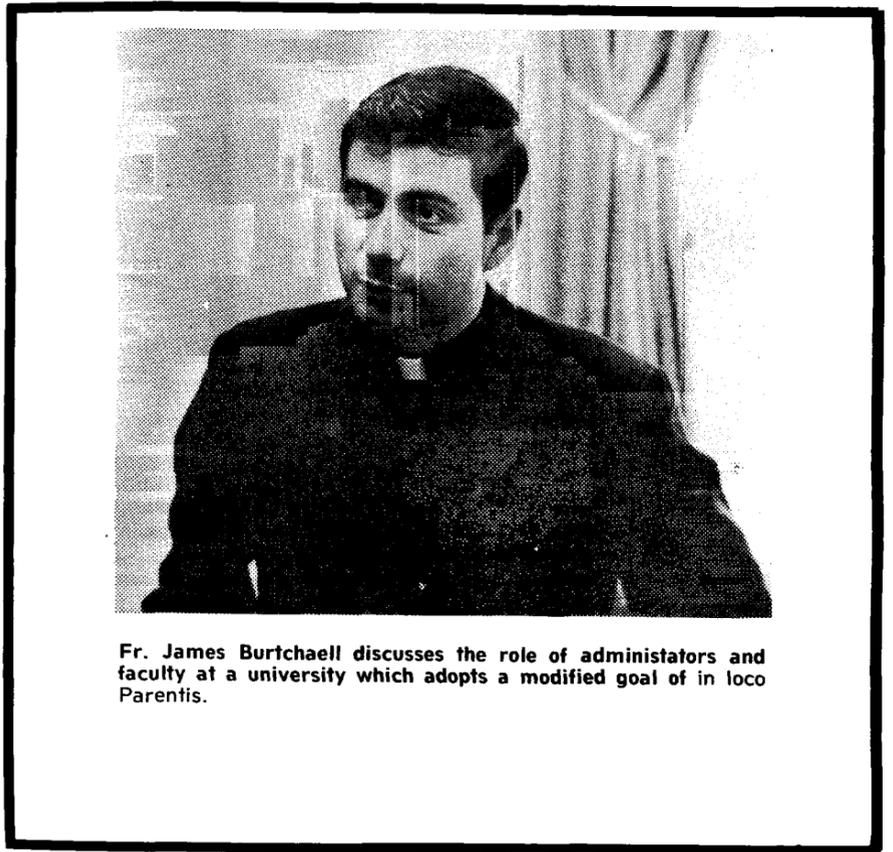

While standing for the formula, I suppose I shape its meaning somewhat differently than its despoilers. It need not imply, for example, that the student is a juvenile, while his teacher is adult. Admittedly, when one says "parents and children" the imagination tends to picture a couple in their twenties or thirties, with the customary two or three children, probably at elementary school age or younger. But surely parenthood is a lifelong identity, and the parent-child relationship remains asymmetrical throughout all the long seasons of its maturation. This same young couple will still be parents—and, please God, actively parents—when they are in their eighties and their children are grandparents. Indeed, parenthood does not lapse when one's offspring move onto their own. It really comes into its own only when one's children are adults.

Nor need that parent-child relation always be colored by authority. One of the frustrations of being mother and father is that so much of the early experience of families demands firm parental control. When comes the time for tearing loose, for taking wing, the season for the children to gather their own privacy and autonomy about themselves—in short, when comes the end of command and control—so many fathers and mothers feel their parenthood lifted from them and are at a loss to negotiate new ways of dealing with sons and daughters. Yet parenthood should have a fuller abundance of gifts to share than that: much of what parents can bestow is only available anyway in those years when their children are no longer dependent upon them. It is a mutual devastation if at the very age when the parent has the richest wisdom and perspective to share with his child, both have likely shut each other off in the belief that the family's interchange is at an end now that they have quit the same roof.

A parent, then, at whatever age or maturity, no matter what his degree of control, authority, or involvement, retains a total concern for every feature of his child's life.

And why should a university educator not stand in the same situation of total concern: in loco parentis? We have the dubious privilege of entering the scene at exactly that awkward and restless period of break-way (a matter of years rather than the crisis of a moment), when young men and women of 18-22 years' age are renegotiating their relations with their parents. They are no longer at their command, nor have they yet cast off lines completely. It is an ambiguous time, and strained, and quarrelsome, and critically influential.

Bear in mind that I speak virtually of our stand at Notre Dame. At virtually all universities in Europe and Latin America, at most state schools in North America, and now in many of our private colleges, too, the senior scholars decline and often repudiate all active concern and certainly all responsibility for the personal growth and integration of the students. The interchange is specifically academic. Students may be fortunate enough to find one or another professor of administrator with a shrewd eye and a giving heart for them, but will more often encounter resentment if they impinge of faculty time or seek their attention beyond what is statutorily required. At Notre Dame it is possible to encounter the same disappointment, but we publicly profess and hold ourselves accountable for a personal regard for our students. I like to think that we live up to this commitment better even than many of those few universities that accept the same charge, and that we do it in some special and precious ways that make our tradition distinctive and deeply memorable.

To assume to stand in loco parentis is to share the fancy fortune of any father or mother of an intelligent young man or woman. Just as at home, in a residential college there is the recurring struggle to determine who is really master of the house, It is no good simply pounding the table, reminding the students that they are on our turf, and showing them the door if they fail to abide by our rules. On the other hand, little challenge and slight growth will ensue if older and younger scholars simply turn their backs on one another. Like parents, academics care about more in their students than they can control and must often forego command in favor of persuasion and debate.

Often, but not always. There is an asymmetrical exchange: teachers always have new insights afforded them by their junior colleagues; yet the whole academic enterprise would not exist save by the common belief that teachers see, hear, and know more and perceive more deeply than their students.

Like a parent, a stringently effective teacher will be appreciated only in retrospect . . . and will often have to do without the satisfaction of hearing much by way of thanks. Like a parent, a teacher invests his mind and heart in the growth of the students he loves, and can only hope that the seed he plants is sound, the soil sweet enough for future fruit. One always teaches with one's heart in his mouth, and doesn't always succeed. But then again he often does.

We are terribly vulnerable and we do our work for love and not for gain—none quite so vulnerable, I imagine, as those who lay aside natural parenthood to give their whole soul and strength to this other begetting and have such single-minded desire that these, their sons and daughters, succeed.

Our vices and virtues are the common domestic varieties. Sometimes we frown too often when encouragement is needed. We can be too protective or not demanding enough, or lose our tempers, and (worse) our wits, and we can give in to the damn and fatigue and simply not give a damn. But there are times when the work goes well, and we sense somehow just when to push, when to wink, when to commend, when to laugh, when to ridicule, when to listen, when to explode.

Particularly in these years when student rights, and dignity, and prerogatives have been struggled for and enlarged, one of the slur words for the over-authoritarian teacher or administrator is "paternalistic." I hope the word can be purged of this unpleasant meaning, for so many of us in the profession do feel that fatherhood is our blood, and while acknowledging the great risk it presents, don't really want to be ashamed of it.

We tend to remain in correspondence with many alumni—and this mail continually impresses me with the similarity of fortune between teacher and parent. One young man who had lived in our hall (Dillon) wrote recently after his first year in grad school.

As you predicted, there is no place like Notre Dame. The University of ----- is such a sterile, lifeless institution—more of a parking lot than a university. The transition from a private, residential university and relatively small enrollment to a public commuter university with an enrollment of about 28,000, was an experience even at the ripe old age of twenty-two. More and More I appreciate the commitment to a university community that Notre Dame has made. I sound like an "alum" already!

Hopefully every set of parents receives a letter something like this after their own son or daughter has moved out of the home into other circumstances.

Watergate affair sparks party feud

by Patrick Collins

(c) 1972 Washington Star—News

Washington, Sept. 19—The Watergate Affair has touched off a behind-the-scenes struggle between the most powerful committees in President Nixon's re-election campaign.

Key antagonists in the feud are Maurice Stans, chairman of the Finance Committee to Re-elect the President, and Jeb Stuart Magruder, Deputy Director of the Committee for the Re-election of the President.

Stans feels the silence imposed on him by Magruder and other Nixon campaign bosses has unjustly exposed him and other finance committeemen to severe criticism over the bugging incident, and Stans' recent notoriety is expected to hamper his efforts to raise money for the Nixon fund drive.

The former commerce secretary has been named in both a congressional staff investigation and a general accounting office report tracing $111,000 in Nixon campaign deductions to one of the seven men charged in the June 17 break-in at Democratic National Committee headquarters.

Through committee spokesmen, Stans has denied any part in the bugging scheme, but he repeatedly has declined to discuss his financing operation, on the advice of campaign officials. At one point Stans prepared a complete statement but campaign leaders talked him out of releasing it.

The feeling at the finance committee is that Magruder or his public relations men would have spoken out in defense of Stans and openly discussed the use of the $114,000. But Magruder has not spoken out or made himself available to the press.

The dispute between Stans and Magruder has seeped down the rank and file of the Finance Committee. Some of these aides are harshly critical of top officials of the Nixon Re-election Committee, and have let their views seep out publicly.

Stans has talked about his problems privately with former Attorney General John N. Mitchell, who resigned in July as Nixon's campaign manager, and, a few weeks ago, Stans even got a cheerful call of encouragement from the White House.

But now Stans apparently has decided to make his own defense, circumventing the campaign committee public relations staff, which reports to Magruder.

This is apparent from the fact that a former White House counsel, Clark Mollenhoff, reported in the Des Moines Register yesterday that Stans had conferred with Nixon counsel John Dean about a $25,000 campaign contribution which was cashed by one of the bugging suspects.

According to Mollenhoff's report, Dean assured Stans that even though the $25,000 contribution came to Stans after April 7, when the new Federal Campaign Disclosure Act went into effect, the donation still did not have to be reported.

The White House counsel based his decision on a provision of the law which says that whenever an agreement to deliver funds is made, it shall be considered a contribution.

In the revised account of the $25,000, the contributor, Dwayne Andreas, a Minneapolis businessman and former supporter of Democrat Hubert H. Humphrey; Kenneth Dahlberg, midwest fund raiser for Nixon and the man who collected the money; and Stans all agree that Andreas promised the contribution last January. They said he reaffirmed his promise in February but did not get around to handing over the cash to Dahlberg until April 9.

Before Dean gave legal counsel to Stans, he was commissioned by the president to conduct a "thorough" investigation of the Watergate incident.

Counseling center sees role as advisor and trainer

by James Abowd

Since 1967 the third floor east wing of the Administration Building has been the location of the Notre Dame counseling center.

Dr. Sheridan McCabe, head of the counseling center staff, sees two functions for the center: advice and training.

Advice, maintains Dr. McCabe, is the traditional responsibility of the center. "We tell students to make the most out of their lives at Notre Dame," Dr. McCabe says. "This means a much broader program than just helping individuals in need."

Dr. McCabe explains that this counseling has three distinct purposes. First, to remedy a bad situation such as grades or majors. Secondly its purpose is to prevent situations in which students are faced with major problems.

Thirdly, counseling produces programs which stimulate student interest.

"In spite of these programs, which are as broad in concept, in concept, student counseling still centers mostly around remedial care," states Dr. McCabe.

Training

Dr. McCabe considers training the second important function of the center. We will train individuals, groups, faculty and staff in whatever capacity necessary," he says.

Dr. McCabe documents this by citing a recent training program in Howard Hall. Last year the counseling center ran a leadership training program for section leaders. "It was successful and many have requested similar training seminars."

On coeducation, Dr. McCabe explains that the center has been working with SMC for four years in anticipation of a merger.

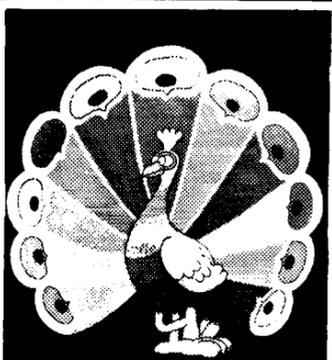

"We have been ready for women at ND. The current counseling staff includes two women one of which is an R.A. in Badin," he says.

Also along these lines, Dr. McCabe explains that Mrs. Susan Roberts, a special assistant to the Provost, has worked extensively with the counseling center. Preliminary discussions have been held with the hall governments of both Badin and Walsh, and this consultation and training will continue in Walsh.

Minority Service

Two new counselors have been added to this program. They are: Ann Williams, a law student with a masters in counseling, and Clark Arrington, also a law student.

Ara set to name qb vs. N'western

Coach Ara Parseghian will provide the answer this afternoon to an oft-heard question of Notre Dame football fans - "Who's going to start at quarterback?"

Early in the fall, the Irish head coach had said, "I'd like to name a number one quarterback by the Northwestern game, but, if no one clearly emerges as the best, we might start the season by using two quarterbacks."

Junior Cliff Brown, who started the last six games of the '71 season, and Tom Clements, a promising sophomore, have been "head and shoulders above the rest of the candidates", according to Parseghian.

The pair have battled for the number one job throughout spring practice and fall drills and it appears that Parseghian has finally decided who's going to be the starter, at least for the first game of the season.

Sources close to the scene speculate that Clements will get the starting nod against the Wildcats, especially in view of the fact that Brown has been slowed somewhat the past couple of days by an injured Achilles tendon.

Clements has an impressive set of credentials that indicate he's more than capable of handling the first string QB chores. He starred in the Blue-Gold game last spring, leading the number one offense to six touchdowns in six possessions. This fall, he has been running well and passing, in Notre Dame's weekly game-type scrimmages, at a slightly better than 60 per cent clip.

With Brown at less than full efficiency, Clements ran the number one offense by himself in Tuesday's practice session while Brown worked with the second unit.

JV netmen win, 7 - 2

Winning five of six singles matches, Notre Dame's junior varsity tennis team breezed to a 7-2 victory over Manchester Tuesday on the Irish courts.

Chris Amato, Bill Sturm, Pat Murphy and David Wheaton won their singles matches in straight sets and Barry Andrews downed his Manchester opponent in three sets to lead the Irish to victory.

Doubles wins by the teams of Amato-Andrews and Mark Peterson and Wheaton accounted for Notre Dame's final two points.

Bob Johnson and Bill Sierks recorded exhibition singles wins for the junior netters while Chip Turner and Joe Zmolek posted a win in an exhibition doubles match.

Cliff Brown--still a starter?

So. Cal. tops national polls

Southern California's 51-6 trouncing of Oregon State Saturday night convinced voters in both wire service polls that the Trojans deserved to be ranked number one in the nation.

Now 2-0, S.C. easily outdistanced runner-up Oklahoma in the Associated Press poll but narrowly edged the Sooners in the United Press International rankings. Oklahoma, which drubbed Utah State, 49-0, Saturday, was first on the U.P.I. poll last week.

The Trojans received 28 first place ballots from A.P. voters and outpointed Oklahoma, 920-840. Southern Cal had just a four point edge in the U.P.I. poll, however, picking up 14 first place votes and 318 points to Oklahoma's 13 number one votes and 314 points.

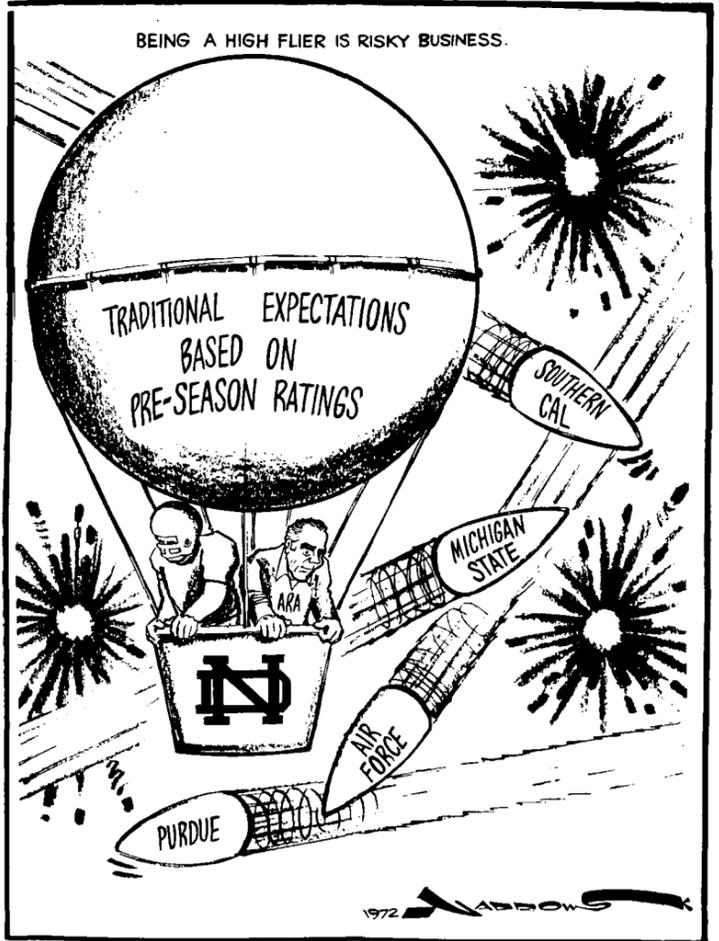

Notre Dame, which opens its season Saturday against Northwestern in Evanston, Illinois, was ranked 13th by both the A.P. and U.P.I. and no selector cast a first place vote for the Irish.

Incorporation only hope for press

Separate incorporation of the University Press from the University is another possible solution. By this action, the Press would lose its tax-exempt, non-income producing status.

"I can see an inherent danger in this," mused William T. Liu, editorial press board member. "The Press director would humanly be steered to take profit as a motive rather than scholarship. This isn't the real objective of a university press."

In its stead, Liu suggests a separate endowment. "I think this might be hard for the University to take," he said, "but this would free the hands of the press director. He could get good manuscripts and not have to worry about the cost. Without a separate endowment, the press director has to act at the mercy of the financial officer of the university."

Julian Samora, youngest member of the Press editorial board, believes separate incorporation may be the answer. "I should see no good reason why it wouldn't work. I wouldn't particularly like that option, but if it would save the Press...why not?"

The Press would find it difficult to merge with the other publishing facility on campus, the Ave Maria Press. Ave is primarily a magazine publishing house and is not equipped to print books.

Publishing at a loss is only one of the problems that Press members will have to cope with when they finally meet to discuss the Burtchaeil letter. At present, there is no meeting of the Press editorial board schedule.

When Ms. Schessberger retired, John Ehmann was appointed as acting press director. However, there is neither a move to make Ehmann's appointment permanent or to appoint a search committee to interview possible replacements. Ehmann's job, his compadres say, depends on the evaluation of the press.

Finally, the very nature of the University Press editorial board constitutes a problem for its members. Of the six members interviewed for this series and Ms.

Schessberger, no one could explain how board members were appointed or what criteria was used. With some members, they were appointed because they published with the press quite regularly. Others had established the Press. Others represented academic disciplines which the Press specialized in. But, across the board, there is no norm for selecting press members.

Because no press member could give the norms, they could not reply why no alumnus in the printing business had been invited to serve on the University Press editorial board in an advisory capacity.

Several members half-replied that the distance and time would prohibit most alumni for participating in the decisions. But, most replied that it hadn't been thought of.

Presently the University financiers are preparing a three-year projected budget. If the University Press's loss escalates as Ehmann anticipates that it will (to $30,000), the Press may very well be the victim of the crunch in private higher education.

But, Ms. Schessberger recalled, the University of Chicago Press was dormant for 10 years in 1870. Then, it discovered Dewey and new life.

There may be an idea lurking around O'Shaughnessy or Galvin Life which when matured may gross more for the Press than the whole University budget. Until then, the Press will wait until "the end of autumn draws to a close" for its verdict.

Dr. Henry to speak at O'Laughlin

On Thursday, September 21, at 4:30 p.m., Dr. Edward Henry, President, will speak at a student-faculty convocation to be held in O'Laughlin Auditorium. Immediately following the convocation there will be a Student-Faculty Picnic on the east lawn of the Dining Hall. Meal tickets will be distributed at the convocation for the picnic. The regular dinner hours have been altered for this meal.

It is at the discretion of the faculty who hold classes at 4:30 on Thursday to shorten the class period to facilitate your attendance at the convocation. If you have a class that conflicts with the convocation-picnic contact Mary Ginn Ptacin - 4620 or Nancy Parker - 4632 so meal ticket arrangements can be made.
