Paris—The North Vietnamese delegation to the Paris peace talks announced that Le Duc Tho, Hanoi's chief negotiator, would arrive for a further round of private talks with Henry Kissinger. That was the only clear signal to come out of the 167th session of the formal, four-sided talks as each side met ambiguity with ambiguity. But outside the session, the North Vietnamese spokesman was unequivocal in ruling out any participation by a Saigon delegate in the secret talks.

Baton Rouge, La.—Two black men were killed and one was wounded during a day of violence at the campus of South University in Baton Rouge, La., where students set fire to two buildings and exploded a bomb in a third. Gov. Edwin W. Edwards immediately closed the school, ordered resident state student to go home and said the school would remain closed at least through Thanksgiving.

Washington—Members of the civil rights commission have agreed to submit their resignations so President Nixon can have a free hand at the start of his second term. It was an apparent reversal of a policy the agency has followed since 1964 when members refused to grant President Johnson's request their resignations on the grounds it would jeopardize the Commission's independence.

New York—Pepsi-Cola will become the first American consumer product manufactured and sold in the Soviet Union. PepsiCo, Inc., announced an agreement with the Soviet Ministry of trade to begin marketing the soft drink in the Soviet Union next year.

Indiana may keep present drinking age

by Patti Shea
Staff Reporter

Construction plans for an on-campus bar at Notre Dame included in several LaFortune renovation proposals will be discarded unless the 1973 Indiana General Assembly votes to lower the legal drinking age.

Changes in 450 sections of state law involving age with the exception of the drinking age will be recommended to the legislature in early January by the Age of Majority Task Force, according to Arden R. Chilcote, Indiana legislative council director of research.

Stressing the 1972 legislature's failure to override the Governor's veto of the lower drinking age last spring, the Task Force has failed to include a change in the legal age for the purchase and consumption of alcoholic beverages in its recommendations. "I personally doubt the Indiana General Assembly is likely to change the laws in this respect," Chilcote stated in reply to a letter inquiring in to legal aspects of building a bar on the Notre Dame campus, by Student Government Director of Research and Development Jim Clarke.

Preliminary designs

Several preliminary designs for LaFortune student center renovation include a student bar according to Clarke. "The construction of an on-campus bar is important to the University," he commented. "Students wouldn't have to travel to Michigan and the drinking and driving danger would be eliminated."

Citing the lowered federal voting age of eighteen, Dr. Robert Ackerman, director of student activities, favored the lowering of Indiana's legal drinking age and the construction of a bar on the Notre Dame campus. "Provided we could do some creative things with the changed law like an education program for students on the use of alcohol."

Pointing out that other universities with student bars find "they are an interesting enterprise," Ackerman noted, "Here the school is able to control what happens in the bar and participate in the total education of the college student."

No sneaking

Urging that students work to put the proposal of lowering the age of majority for drinking before the legislature, Ackerman stated, "If the legal age were lowered and an on-campus bar established, students wouldn't feel the need to have to sneak around or drive up to Niles to drink."

In addition to passage of a state law, Notre Dame as a private institution would have to approve changes in present drinking policies on campus according to Fr. Riehle, dean of students before a student bar could be built.

No action yet

"Although the University prohibits drinking in the stadium, for instance, which is not against state law," Riehle pointed out, "in the case of lowering the age of majority, the University would go along with state law."

So far, no formal action by the University or students has been taken to press for the lowered age of majority since last year's student government attempt to join other Indiana universities in support of the change.

"Everyone just assumed that the law would be changed," Clarke explained. The bill was vetoed by the Governor and the legislature did not override the veto.

"More push"

Stressing that the change, which would be an important requirement for an on-campus bar, could not be passed without pressure, Clarke urged, "Students have to start putting some push into their efforts."

Ackerman suggested that Notre Dame student government join with other universities including Indiana and Purdue which are working for the lowered age of majority. "By making public statements and uniting with other universities in the state, students could produce an effective lobby effort to lower the drinking age in Indiana," he contended.

Listing neighboring states Michigan, Ohio, and Kentucky which have lowered their legal drinking age requirement, Ackerman said, "There is no reason why the change should not be made. Indiana has remained an island of virtue in a cultural vacuum for too long."

Acad Council gives nod to officer changes

The Academic Council Thursday gave initial approval to the article covering the academic officers of the University in the Faculty Manual revision recommended by its steering committee.

Major changes included incorporation of the new offices of provost and vice president for advanced studies; addition of the concurrence of the elected members of the Academic Council in the appointment of the provost; addition of students to search committees for the provost, the deans of undergraduate colleges and the Freshman Year, and the vice president for advanced studies; establishment of formal review for major University officers, and enlargement of formal consultative procedures in the appointment of department chairmen to include all department faculty rather than only senior members as before.

During discussion, the Council rejected by a voice vote a motion to substitute the Faculty Senate for the Academic Council as the body which provided for the faculty and student members making up the search committee for the provost.

In its discussion of the revised Faculty Manual article on the faculty, the Council voted to keep the four current categories of faculty—teaching-and-research, special research, library and special professional—and added a fifth, non-regular faculty, which includes visiting, adjunct, part-time, guest and retired emeritus faculty.

At its next meeting, the Council will resume discussion on the section of the Faculty Manual revision dealing with academic freedom.

Hesburgh resigns from Civil Rights Commission Chair

by John Abowd
Editor-in-chief

University President Fr. Theodore M. Hesburgh tendered his resignation yesterday as the Chairman of the Civil Rights Commission. The letter of resignation came at the request of President Richard Nixon.

The letter, mailed yesterday, came as the result of a request last Monday from Fredrick Malek, a member of Nixon's administrative staff. In the one sentence resignation Hesburgh said, "In compliance with your request transmitted by Mr. Frederick Malek of the White House Staff I hereby submit my resignation as chairman and member of the United States Civil Rights Commission. Best regards. Sincerely yours, Theodore M. Hesburgh, C.S.C."

All six members of the commission were asked to resign as a part of Nixon's 2,000 man shake-up of White House personnel.

Acceptance likely

Nixon has made no formal reply to Hesburgh's resignation but White House Press Secretary Ronald Ziegler said yesterday that the administration believed Hesburgh wanted to resign rather than continue to serve under Nixon.

Notre Dame's 21 year president denied saying that he intended to resign if Nixon was reelected. The widely reported story which broke before the election said that Hesburgh "Offered to resign the chairmanship (of the Civil Rights Commission) in the event of a landslide reelection of the President." (The Observer, October 31)

Hesburgh sent a telegram to Ziegler yesterday clarifying the administrative story on his resignation.

The telegram said: "Despite recent irresponsible news articles to the contrary I did not, repeat not, say that I would resign if President Nixon were reelected. When asked to comment about this story at the time, I simply denied it. What I did say was that if I were asked to resign by the reelected President, as is his privilege, I would. He did ask, and I did resign. After 15 years of service on the Civil Rights Commission, I should appreciate having the record honestly stated."

Hesburgh, who was appointed to the commission in 1957 by President Dwight Eisenhower and appointed chairman in 1969 by Nixon, indicated that he expected a formal reply today.

Reversal of precedent

In 1964 the Civil Rights Commission refused to resign when President Lyndon Johnson requested resignations as a part of his blanket administrative shake-up.

The commission claimed in 1964 that it was an independent agency and not a part of the White House staff.

Hesburgh called the President's right to include Civil Rights Commissioners in his blanket resignation request a "a good legal question" but continued saying that "Nixon has the prerogative to chairman."

Hesburgh noted that tendering his resignation "was not important, but what President Nixon does about it is."

Past record

In his four years as chairman the Civil Rights Commission, and Hesburgh in particular, has been highly critical of Nixon's policies on civil rights.

The two major areas of disagreement have been busing of school children to promote racial integration and the role of federal agencies in promoting civil rights.

On the busing issue Hesburgh has supported the one way busing of children from inferior schools to schools of higher quality. His most recent defense of this position came in an October 29 article in the New York Times in which he said, "If the only way to get students from bad schools is to bus them, then bus them. Keep in mind the standards established by the Supreme Court—not to bus in a way that will harm the child's health or his education."

The Nixon administration has supported the constitutional amendment which would prohibit busing to promote racial integration.

In the last year and a half the commission has issued two reports chastising federal agencies for their poor performance in the area of civil rights.

Among the agencies criticized is the Federal Housing Administration which the commission accused of promoting the white flight to the suburbs by supporting racially discriminatory housing codes and mortgage policies.

Other members

The other five members of the Civil Rights Commission have also agreed to tender their resignations according to the New York Times.

The commission consists of three Republicans, two Democrats and an independent (Hesburgh).

The Republicans are Dr. Stephen Horn, Vice Chairman and President of the University of California at Long Beach; Maurice Mitchell, Chancellor of the University of Denver and Manuel Ruiz a Los Angeles lawyer.

The Democrats are Mrs. Francis Freeman, St. Louis lawyer and Dr. Robert Rankin, professor of political science at Duke University.

Late bulletin

Nixon accepts

Hesburgh resignation

(c) 1972 New York Times

Washington, Nov. 16—The White House said tonight that Father Theodore Hesburgh had resigned as chairman of the United States Commission on Civil Rights and that President Nixon would accept the resignation.

Gerald L. Warren, assistant White House press secretary, said the White House staff had requested the resignation. But he said the request was made because Hesburgh had said during the presidential campaign that he would resign if President Nixon were re-elected.

Hesburgh's resignation stemmed largely from a disagreement between him and the President on the issue of school busing. During the campaign Hesburgh described busing as "the most phony issue in the country."

On Oct. 28, he was also quoted as saying that he could "not survive if the President is re-elected—either by his wishes or my own."

In South Bend, Ind., where Hesburgh is President of the University of Notre Dame, he said that he was drafting his formal resignation tonight, but it was understood that he had already acknowledged to White House staff members that he would step down.

Meanwhile, there was disagreement over whether resignations of other commission members had been requested by the White House. Several commission staff members admit the resignations had been requested.

SMC officials hail new co-ex rules; But fail to confirm renormalization

by David Rust
Staff Reporter

St. Mary's College president Edward Henry and vice president for academic affairs William Hickey declined last night to herald the letter published in yesterday's Observer concerning co-ex programs as the complete "renormalization" of relations between Notre Dame and Saint Mary's.

"I'd say this is a step," said Hickey, member of the five-man task force that put together the new policy over the past few months. "I'd say it was a step in the right direction. But right now it's hard to say" whether or not this will have a positive effect on the normalization of relations between the two schools.

"I think it's a careful probing for ways that Notre Dame and Saint Mary's can cooperate, each in its own self-interest," added president Henry. "I don't want to make any predictions, though. I don't want to arouse any false expectations among our students."

Dr. Hickey also reported that the guidelines referred to in yesterday's letter that were to be established by each school individually for distribution of each's given 3,000 credit hours, have for the most part been worked out by Saint Mary's.

SMC department chairmen meeting with Hickey have drawn up a policy on distribution of the hours which will come up before the dept. heads for a vote this Monday. Hickey expects them to be passed with minor changes and hopes to have copies of the guidelines released to each SMC student by the time they return from Thanksgiving vacation.

He also announced that his group will hold an open session for students the day after the final decision is made and the official statement is released to clear up questions and misunderstandings concerning the new policy.

Both Hickey and Henry said that discussion of special library fees and restrictions on athletic facilities did not concern the five-man committee which hammered out the new co-ex policy.

"It never came into the discussion," said Hickey. "As far as I know, there never has been a fee for Saint Mary's students wanting to use the library. It's been free access as far as I can remember."

In relation to restrictions on use of ND athletic facilities, Hickey said, "There has existed in the past a $50 per semester fee on those facilities for Saint Mary's students who wish to use them, and I assume this same fee will be applied next semester."

The co-ex policy change letter, signed by Notre Dame provost James Burtchaell and Henry, dropped all "individual charges" for Saint Mary's students who will be taking courses at Notre Dame next semester, besides those special fees normally incurred in the course of classwork.

Rationales given for the change, creating a new policy labeled by yesterday's Observer article as one that "reverts back to that which was obtained (at) the inception of the program in 1965," were given by the letter as the desirability of an "educational enrichment" and a "better procedure that would make co-ex opportunities more freely available to students on campus."

Hickey was restrained in his feelings on what the new policy means to relations between Notre Dame and Saint Mary's, which have been confused since the merger failure last year.

"I think we've been considerably more optimistic in the past than we are now," said Hickey. "There have been cases when we assumed that relations between schools were good, and then problems came up and we found that they weren't so good."

The letter is symbolic of a rebeginning rather than a completed renormalization, said Hickey. "Now in a kind of sense we're back to where we were four or five years ago." The difference now, he added, is that the schools hope that "we'll approach it more intelligently this time."

President Henry put Saint Mary's interests in relations with Notre Dame in line with its policy of establishing links with local schools.

"St. Mary's is always working towards relations with other institutions of higher learning," said Henry. He reported that his school is involved in just that kind of work with Indiana University at South Bend and Bethel College in South Mishawaka.

With reference to Notre Dame and Saint Mary's specifically, Henry said, "I'll continue to work towards improvements of relations between both schools."

University president Theodore Hesburgh said that relations are "as normal as (they) can be." He would not comment further on the Burtchaell-Henry statement, saying that "it stands on its own two feet."

Fr. Burtchaell could not be reached for comment.

Sen. Hart to keynote Civil Rights lectures

Sen. Philip A. Hart of Michigan will be the speaker at the second annual Civil Rights Lecture Series sponsored by the University of Notre Dame Law School April 5 and 6, 1973.

The well-known Democrat, who is a member of the Senate Judiciary Committee, will concentrate on the legislative contributions and prospects for the civil rights movement, following the historical perspective offered by the series' first lecturer, Earl Warren, retired chief justice of the United States, who spoke last April.

Jurists and other area representatives in the Senate and Congress will be asked to join Rev. Theodore M. Hesburgh, C.S.C., president of Notre Dame and longtime chairman of the U.S. Civil Rights Commission, in presiding at the three major lectures.

A member of the Senate since 1958, Hart has played an active role in the civil rights legislation presented to his committee for action. He is a 1934 graduate of Georgetown University and a 1937 graduate of the University of Michigan Law School.

Hart has served as Michigan corporations and securities commissioner, as U.S. attorney for the eastern district of Michigan, as lieutenant governor of the state for four years, and as legal advisor to former governor G. Mennen Williams. He was re-elected to the Senate in 1964 and 1970.

The format for the Notre Dame talks includes public lectures on Thursday evening, April 5, and on Friday afternoon and evening, April 6. The remainder of the senator's two-day stay on the campus will include informal discussions with students and interested faculty members.

Open session on tap for the SLC

by Mary Janca
Staff Reporter

The Student Life Council will hold an open meeting for all interested students on Monday, Nov. 20 at 4:15 in room 112 of the Center of Continuing Education to discuss proposals concerning various aspects of on-off-campus student housing.

"What we're trying to do is resolve the situation of overcrowding that Notre Dame had last year in the residence halls and try to prevent it from happening again," explained Dr. Ackerman, chairman of the steering committee of the SLC.

"We want to look into four specific areas," continued Ackerman. "These include room pick procedures, the stay-hall system, the problems associated with selecting halls for women, and the steps used to determine who moves off-campus."

Concerned members of the administration, and student body have been invited and are scheduled to speak on various topics in this area.

According to Ackerman, Fr. Flannigan, associate vice-president of student affairs, will discuss the type of planning which the Student Affairs office is conducting on the housing problem.

"We've also invited Fr. Reilly, who is dean of students and director of housing," said Ackerman, "and who is ultimately concerned with this question."

The rectors of both Badin and Walsh Halls, Kathy Cekanski and Joanne Szafran respectively, will talk on the factors involved with selecting a hall for women, and of the needs of women students.

Also at this meeting, Sr. John Miriam Jones, chairwoman of the SLC subcommittee on campus life, will present the committee's recommendations on the selection of women's residence halls, and the determination of what students will be forced to live off-campus in the 1973-74 school year.

Previously, the campus life committee determined that the hall or halls selected would be located on the North Quad, in order to distribute the women more evenly on the campus. Both Grace and Flanner Halls have been ruled out, however, due to difficulties of security and location.

Chris Singleton and other representatives from a committee of the Hall Presidents' Council, will report at this time, on its findings, in regard to the stay-hall system.

A Rectors' committee, under the direction of Fr. Andrew Ciferni, Holy Cross Hall rector, will then discuss the selection of students who will reside off-campus and the room-pick procedure.

Subsequently, the difficulties of living off-campus will be presented by Student Government's Off-Campus Commissioner.

Time will also be allowed within the program schedule, according to Ackerman, for any interested student to express his own views, and make suggestions.

Throughout this meeting, concluded Ackerman, "we're trying to present an opportunity for interested people in the Notre Dame student community to voice their opinions on these matters, so that when the Student Life Council has to make a recommendation on all of these factors, we have as wide an input as possible."

"Hopefully, then we can stimulate those interested in these problems, and get them to come to us to let us know what their thinking is, and how they got to where they are in their thinking," he said.

Oglesbee only candidate

SMC Vice President election held today

by Mary P. Egan
Observer Staff Reporter

St. Mary's Student Government is holding the election for the position of Student Body Vice President today. SMC residents may vote in the lobbies of their halls from 10:00 AM to 4:00 PM. Day students and Off-Campus students may vote in the lobby of LeMans Hall.

Sue Oglesbee, the present Student Body Secretary, is the only nominee for the position of Vice President. Nominations closed this past Tuesday at midnight.

"Oglesbee must gain a majority of the total votes cast in order to win. Voter may vote for the single nominee, abstain, or write in a vote on their ballots," stated Student Affairs Commissioner Barb McKiernan. McKiernan will supervise the election.

Should Oglesbee win, another Student Body Secretary will be chosen by the President and Vice President.

Sue Welte, the former Student Body Vice President, vacated the post to become President in the wake of the resignation of former SBP Jean Seymour.

Sue Oglesbee: The only candidate for St. Mary's Student Government Vice President.

Mayor hails student volunteers

Mayor Jerry L. Miller of South Bend has proclaimed Monday, November 20, as Community Volunteer Day in the city to honor students of the University of Notre Dame and Saint Mary's College for their plans to provide Thanksgiving dinners for an estimated 200 needy area families. A charity basketball game is planned for 8 p.m. Monday in the Athletic and Convocation Center, featuring the prospective first and second teams of the 1972-73 Notre Dame basketball team. Admission will be by gifts of non-perishable food or cash contributions which will be used by the students to purchase turkeys and other perishable items.

Halftime entertainment for the game will be a basketball contest matching Notre Dame women against a similar squad from Saint Mary's. The two teams will meet for the first time in the history of the two schools in an abbreviated exhibition of 20 minutes.

Services of parking lot attendants, ushers and security personnel will be donated at the game so that the entire proceeds will go for food to the needy. More than 2,000 items of food were collected at a similar game last year in Coach Richard "Digger" Phelps inaugural year at Notre Dame.

Miller, in his proclamation, also noted that more than 1,000 students are volunteering spare time hours in a variety of community projects.

He said these endeavors merited his whole-hearted support and urged other members of the community to join him in attendance at the game.

For the same cause, the Student Union is showing the movie Anne of the Thousand Days. Admission for the movie is twenty-five cents and proceeds will go for the same purposes as the basketball game.

Quota committee decides on admissions for females

by Jim Gresser
Observer Staff Reporter

The University Quota Committee reached a decision yesterday on the number of female students they feel should be admitted to the university next year but would not release the exact number.

According to Fr. James Riehle, Dean of Students and Director of Housing, the committee's recommendation must be approved by the University Officers before it will be revealed to the public. The officers will either accept the committee's recommendation, alter it themselves, or refer it back to the committee.

Sr. John Miriam said that this definite decision on the quota would be reached "fairly shortly," probably before the end of this semester.

The quota must be decided upon soon because of the need to begin admitting the new students. The Admissions Department cannot admit students until they know how many women they can accept.

Sr. John Miriam added that the University does not want to recreate the housing crisis of this year and this is another reason for reaching the decision as soon as possible.

The committee's recommendation basically follows the outline which plans for one-thousand female students by 1975. Sr. John Miriam Jones, Assistant to the Provost said that the committee's recommendation for next year's quota would allow for approximately two thirds of the 1975 quota. She said that this would set the total enrollment of women next year between six hundred and seven hundred women.

After the University Officers decided on a quota, the Office of Student Affairs will begin deliberations as to which hall will be converted for female residents.

The Quota Committee consists of the deans of the colleges, John Goldrick, Director of Admissions; Emil T. Hoffman, Dean of Freshman year; Leo Corbaci, Dean of Admissions; Rick Sullivan, Registrar; Fr. Riehle and Sr. John Miriam. The Committee is chaired by Fr. Ferdinand Brown, Associate Provost.

The Ugly Precedent

There are two sides to the resignation of Fr. Theodore Hesburgh from the Civil Rights Commission but they aren't that all clear.

Hesburgh contends that his fifteen years on the commission have been "a great experience that I am glad to have had." He notes that over 70 percent of the commissions recommendations have been accepted--a situation which he rightly claims represents "enormous progress."

He also rightly notes that "many people have committed their lives and talents to the civil rights struggle-and I imagine it will go on."

The struggle made difficult

The question is not whether the struggle will go on but whether the Civil Rights Commission will continue to function as a strong and unrelenting advocate of minority rights under a chairman appointed by Richard Nixon.

To say the least Nixon's record on civil rights has been far from impressive.

--He has refused to enforce a Supreme court ruling calling for the use of in-terdistrict busing to promote racial integration of school districts. Instead he has called consistently for Congressional authorization of an amendment to the constitution which would prohibit busing to promote racial integration.

--He has refused to use the federal guns to force suburban municipalities into revising discriminatory housing codes.

--He has completely ignored the city of Washington, D.C. with its 80 percent black population.

The litany could go on but Nixon's record is not the point. The issue is that the Civil Rights Commission could be reduced to an ineffective playground for people who would dive into the law books to find rationalizations for Nixon's poor civil rights policies. And it could easily become just that if Nixon (or any of the presidents who succeed him) can simply replace a critical Civil Rights Commission with one more favorably disposed to his own policies.

The ugly precedent

The idea that a President should be surrounded with administrative aides who support his policies is basically sound.

There are, however, good reasons why the Civil Rights Commission should preserve a healthy measure of its autonomy from the Presidency.

The federal government is the principal enforcer of most of the civil rights legislation in the country for the simple reason that only federal legislators have been able to escape local reactionaries long enough to pass laws that have some teeth in them.

Over the years the Civil Rights Commission has been the gadfly that kept the federal government honest. If the President could replace at will the members of the Government Accounting Office one could hardly expect that that agency would completely wipe-out the watchdog effect that the agency now possesses.

There is no doubt that the federal government needs to be kept honest. The justice department is only able to enforce about ten percent of all federal laws at any given time. Without a considerable amount of prodding it would be possible to ignore civil rights legislation for decades until a popular outcry similar to the one that rose up in the 1960's forced the President to use the civil rights tools already on the books to their fullest effect.

The big maybe

Hesburgh believes that the Civil Rights Commission might function more effectively under chairman more to President Nixon's liking. That's an awful big maybe. No doubt the past four years on the commission have been frustrating for Notre Dame's president. Nevertheless, no one can reasonably argue that the commission has reneged its watchdog role.

The biggest loss to the country is not the loss of one particular man who happened not to get along with the President--it is the loss of one agency that held one of the unique place in the federal hierarchy that permitted it to be an effective counterforce to its own creator. We can only hope that the civil rights movement has come far enough to carry on by its own momentum. History, unfortunately, doesn't reinforce that hope very much.

Charity Basketball

Monday night at 8:00, the Irish cagers will be taking the court for the first time in the 1972-73 season. Yet the foe they will be playing against won't be Michigan or Ohio State or even Valparaiso. The Irish cagers will be trying to defeat the loneliness and sorrow that comes with an impoverished Thanksgiving day.

While millions of other Americans settle back in their chairs to watch the Nebraska-Oklahoma football game after a resplendent feast, hundreds of South Bend families will be suffering...suffering because they cannot afford a Thanksgiving day banquet...let alone a television set to watch college football on.

It is this kind of suffering that those cagers are trying to beat.

Digger's Debut

The basketball game will be Digger's Debut and it will be an intrasquad match-up of Phelp's boys. And just as last year, admission to the game can be purchased for 50 cents or with gifts of non-perishable foods.

The organizers are attempting to round-up enough food and cash to feed 200 families. The money collected will go towards buying turkeys for the families while the non-perishables will be included in the meal

All the benefits of the game go to the needy. All services necessary for the operation of the event are being contributed by ushers, attendants, and security.

An excellent opportunity is being presented to Notre Dame and Saint Mary's to really show their concern for the community around them. Many hours of preparation have gone into setting up the affair and all that's necessary for a successful project is the support of the students.

Community Volunteer Day

South Bend mayor Jerry Miller thinks enough of the project to declare Monday, Community Volunteer Day in the city.

We think enough of the project to strongly urge all ND-SMC students to actively participate in this game. When those Irish cagers come off the floor Monday night, make sure that the winners are not only the ones who score the most points.

For What It's Worth

Second Hand
Rosa and
Dr. Fern
don ruane

Letters to the editor frequently make the best reading in any newspaper, because they show the extremes of people who read the publication.

Usually the letters will rake a newspaper for its coverage of some event, accuse it of slanting the news or trying to control opinions. Sometimes they are letters praising the local official or project and letters which debate the issues.

Letters that make it to The Observer usually put The Observer or some poohbah on the carpet, and proceed to pull it out from underneath the target. Sometimes they criticize the entire place for not living up to expectations or predictions.

Cosmic Stronghold of the Universe

One such letter crossed my desk last week from a law student here just over three months. It was an open letter to the Notre Dame community expressing the author's intolerance of the Christian community idea continually thrown in her face since she arrived. For the author, the idea holds the implication that Notre Dame is "some sort of cosmic stronghold of the universe."

Her intolerance "reached Vesuvian heights" after she met Evelyn, an MSU art student, and some of her friends who were here for the Feldhaus art competition earlier this month.

Evelyn told the author that she and her friends were given quarters on the dirt floor of the Fieldhouse after two communications with Dr. Thomas Fern, chairman of the art department, had assured them they would be provided with adequate housing. Evelyn also complained of the cockroaches, cold showers, filthy toilets and drunk red-blooded Notre Dame men who wandered into the building and tripped over Evelyn and her friends.

According to the author, the group was invited to the art conference. Besides the dirt floor, the group had trouble with the "Blue Meanies" - our campus rent-a-cops whose officious pretention it is to keep undesirables from invading the bastion of the "Christian community." The security guard, in short, would not let Evelyn, et al, to drive on campus to set their display up in the Fieldhouse.

Evelyn added to her bad report card on the art department, according to the author, by saying there was no cooperation to provide or sell them videotape equipment, or find a place where they could buy it. They wandered through South Bend for three hours in search of a supplier.

The conclusion according to the author is that the MSU contingent got nothing but grief for willingly spending their own money and time to share their ideas in accordance with the University's invitation. The author states that many left early in disgust, and won't be back to again share the "Christian Community."

Following Up the Letter

Now it is not Observer policy to follow up every letter we receive, but this one raised some serious questions about Notre Dame and especially the art department.

Since Dr. Fern was singled out, I contacted him about the letter and asked him to explain.

First, Dr. Fern corresponded with Rosa Patino, and not an Evelyn. I tried to reach Patino, but she was not listed in either the East Lansing or MSU telephone directory.

Second, Patino and her friends were offered the best housing within 15 minutes of their arrival, of some 100 rooms the art department had arranged for participants, but they refused, according to Fern, because they felt most of their time would be spent assembling their project in the Fieldhouse and preferred to stay here so they could work as late as they pleased. They stayed in the poetry room which has a floor. Fern added that he was told they stayed two nights in Badin.

Third, the group did have problems at first with the "Blue meanies," but they talked with Fern who solved the situation. He added that there was more trouble later in the week when the MSU group frequently drove on and off campus.

Fourth, the Feldhaus competition publicity noted that no equipment would be provided. Fern said he was not asked at any time if they could buy a video tape from the art department; and the audio visual, where the the group sought a tape, could not supply matching equipment. He added that a member of the department spent a good deal of time trying to assist them, and that the department rented an extra long extension cord, and 40 foot ladder for the students.

Fifth, the competition was sponsored by the Mid-American College Art Association, and participation was contingent upon acceptance of a pre-submitted project. Notre Dame was host, but invitations weren't involved. It was a matter of advancing to competition/finals.

Finally, Fern said the MSU students were the only group to complain, and that they left early. Concerning the letter, he said it was not justified and inaccurate.

A natural defensive move right? I doubt it.

The Occasional Misfits

Most letters which come to The Observer are well written, but there are occasional misfits which reach to great depths of shallowness in the criticism.

I think this is one of those letters. Besides being riddled with 22 examples of typographical errors and broken margins; and being written on two different types of paper; the author has taken second hand facts at face value from someone whose acquaintance she has just made.

Letters are an important part of newspapers. They provide a public forum for those who aren't in the position to generate news in any other way.

However, it is only a sound forum if it is factually based. Alleged facts from roommates who are in no position to get the real facts, or those overheard in dining hall conversations are not sound enough on which to base criticisms. It doesn't take much to make a phone call to confirm something.

It may take some of the black humor out of the letters page, but at least it will be more accurate and informative.

Keep them letters coming.

Opinion

You Can't Appreciate the Sun

ken wright

Somehow the cycle of the year has brought us to these days again. The upperclassmen know them well. These days seem hard to tell apart from one another especially since many flow together as our studies keep us up all night and each day we are greeted by the same gray bleakness in the Indiana sky.

The summer has faded beyond the point that we can cheer ourselves by recalling all the joys it had for us. Ahead of us lies such a demanding task that we cannot see beyond to the month of sweet respite waiting for each and everyone of us no matter how well we perform the tasks that lie between now and then.

Not as many of us are smiling now, some have not performed so well and some are so lonely that they don't realize how many feel the same way.

We walk about the campus each lost in our own miserable interpretation of November. We each carry two keys. One we use to lock out the rest of the world and with the other we open the little spaces where we are supposed to hear from the world outside, beyond the shadow of the dome.

My concern right now is with those who have not experienced this part of Notre Dame before. Those who have not adjusted as fast as others who are doing so much better. Those who right now are groping for whatever it will take to get them in a better frame of mind so they can return to their walk on the road of academic excellence which led them to du lac this autumn and now has seemed to vanish from beneath their feet. I am talking to all of you with pink slips.

You are all extremely lucky! You shall learn so much more about yourselves before the semester's over. I'm not saying that the final weeks in this semester shall be the best times you've ever had for they most likely will be the worst time. A good number of you shall find an inner strength you never thought you had before and it shall lift you past these hard times. But through your acquaintance right now with frowns and bad feelings you shall all, no matter if you push up your grades or not, learn just how great the smiles and good times are.

...on Nixon, the Towers

Nixon's victory

Editor:

My first reaction to the re-election of Richard Nixon was one of surprising, almost frightening, apathy. I knew it was coming, and I more-or-less resigned myself to its inevitability. This reaction of mine bothered me for several days. I wondered how many other people in this country received the election in the same manner as myself. How many other people, who were once concerned and involved, had simply given up all hope for a better America and resigned themselves to the way things are.

I thought back over the entire campaign. Richard Nixon deceived, in my opinion criminally, the American people. The frightening thing is that his deceptions, lies, and criminal acts won himself the Presidency for another four years. In his post election comments, the President promised us that peace was soon to be at hand (a rather drastic switch from his pre-election "Peace is at hand"). He promised once again to bring us all together, to give the American people a "moral" America that we can all be proud of. Four years ago Richard Nixon promised us the same things. His record in office makes a mockery of the things he's promised and a mockery of the American people. For they are the ones who re-elected him.

It's very easy for us, who live in a college community, to forget all of this and bury ourselves in our books and our personal interests. After all none of this really affects us at the moment. Someday, however, we'll all have to leave this closed atmosphere and face the world as it really is. Perhaps we'd all better start giving a damn again before there is nothing left to give a damn about. The nation sat around and watched Richard Nixon and his policies be re-lected. Are we to be caught still sitting around in '76?

We write concerning a statement made in the lead story of the Nov. 14 issue of The Observer. To wit: "The campus life committee voted unanimously that the hall or halls selected (for women's residence next year) should be on the North Quad so that the concentration of women would not be in one place. The committee also ruled out the two towers, citing safety and location problems. Safety and location problems? What about us poor (male) schnooks living in the two towers now?"

female o-c

Editor:

I noticed in today's issue of The Observer (Nov. 14) that the SLC had supported the idea of requiring all female Notre Dame students to live on campus next year, unless these students live with South Bend relatives.

While the number of women students desiring to move off-campus is probably very small, I feel we have a serious cause - and ought to be allowed to choose where we would live next year.

First, most women students are transfer students and this means that they're not eligible for any financial aid from the University until they have been at the university for one year. The transfer student not only loses such benefits as a scholarship, but she also cannot live more cheaply by moving off-campus.

Second, one does not have to live at Notre Dame all the time to be "a Notre Dame student." Many upperclassmen especially would appreciate a change from dormitory living. Since many transfer students come from nearby St. Mary's, there is no need to familiarize these students with "what it is like to live at Notre Dame."

Finally, why not apply the rules regulating student life fairly? All other minorities (and majorities) that attend Notre Dame are allowed to live off-campus after one year's residence at the University (with the exception of scholarship students.) This year is a change-over year for Notre Dame as it begins coeducation. But the whole process is so "numbers-conscious" that it is easy to feel like a token female - especially when one can be viewed as another number living in a certain hall. Notre Dame doesn't seem to remember that it could expand coeducation by a few precious numbers more if it allowed some of its women students to live off-campus - as well it allows male students to move off-campus.

Notre Dame is basically a residential university and most students want to live here (after all, they chose to come here.) But for the sake of a justly-applied rule and also to allow more flexibility within coeducation, I strongly advise the SLC to change its position rather than support a definite discrimination.

Sincerely,
Jan Reimer; Badin

Lithuania - a case for civil rights

saulius matas

Roman, a young university student, walked through the streets of his hometown on his way to the city park. It was that brief time of year which every citizen of Kaunas cherishes - the season of the linden blossoms. This blossom has a special place in the hearts of the Lithuanian people. Freed from dreary months of frost and darkness, the blossoming of the linden trees signals the advent of better days.

Like every other Lithuanian, Roman loves the blossom's scent and each year he allowed himself to be swept into the glorious times of Lithuania's past. He used to sit in the park and dream of the time when his ancestors had carved out a mighty nation, which stretched from the Baltic to the Black Sea and from the border of Poland to the very outskirts of Moscow. An ancient race still pagan, the fierce Lithuanian warriors had crushed the German Teutonic Knights at Tannenberg (1410) and had then embarked on the conquest of Russia. For as long as he could remember, he had loved this time and taken pride and consolation from it.

But things were changing now. Books were changing. History was being manipulated. More and more, the children were using other words. - Russian words. In a way they were right. Roman knew that the Lithuanian Empire was but a spark of night within a never-ending struggle for freedom. But in that struggle - there was the glory. There was a thousand-year-old history of resistance. The endless struggles have left their marks in every street, in every castle ruin, in every broken monument. Every hillside speaks out with the remains of burned-out villages and the graves of myriad heroes. It might as well have been a myth. He thought for a time. His expressions changed: from fear, to sadness, to determination. Today, he would proceed to the park.

On this sunny day in Kaunas in May of 1972, Roman Kalanta sat down in the city park, which is called Freedom Square, and set a match to a gallon of gasoline which he had poured over his body. No one in Lithuania, or in the entire Soviet Union for that matter, had to ask why he did it, for it was all too clear. His suicide was followed by three other Lithuanian burnings and massive protests throughout the country. During Kalanta's funeral open rioting ignited when a girl was manhandled by police after she had lain down in the street with her arms spread in the form of a cross. Thousands of students and workers attacked Communist Party and secret police headquarters, shouting "Freedom for Lithuania!" Eventually, tough riot-control paratroopers were called into Kaunas and hundreds were arrested. This was the biggest demonstration to occur in the U.S.S.R. within recent memory. Significantly, it was but one facet in an increasingly powerful "civil rights" movement in the entire Soviet Union.

Lithuania's is a struggle for her history. Her language and traditions, which trace back almost five thousand years, are the things the Lithuanians cherish the most. But the Soviets are determined to wipe out this long tradition.

But the truly frightening aspect of this plan is its global extent. What many westerners do not realize is that the Russian people comprise little more than fifty per cent of the total population of the Soviet Union. The rest are members of twenty ethnic groups, each with a unique language and culture. With the aim of creating "a single common socialist culture with a single common tongue", the ethnic Russian rulers in the Kremlin have taken on the task of Russifying 112 million people. The western world's ignorance of this genocide greatly simplifies their task.

To fight this tyranny, non-Russian nationalist forces and Russian liberals have formed what is now known as the Soviet civil rights movement.

In less than a decade, the movement has created the Samizdat, which circulates effectively throughout the Soviet Union. Democratic-minded dissidents have organized around their churches—notably the Jews, Catholics and Baptists. In 90 per cent-Catholic Lithuania, 17,000 dared to sign a petition in the winter of 1972 to party chief Brezhnev and to Kurt Waldheim of the United Nations in which they asked for enforcement of Soviet constitutional guarantees of freedom of religion that are now being violated. Finally famous authors and scientists such as P. Yakir, A. Solzhenitsyn, and A. Sakharov have proclaimed to the free world—with eloquence and anguish—the Kremlin's injustices.

However, the movement has hardly been as effective as it had hoped to be. It succeeded in stirring up national and liberal consciousness; but the result has been a severe crackdown by the KGB. So far the police have not been able to curb Samizdat entirely, but they have closed down many churches and more than doubled the penalty for "anti-Soviet activity" to seven years imprisonment. In addition, the civil rights activists are faced with the one problem they had not expected: the West's unwillingness to listen—or even to acknowledge them! Only the U.S., Canada, and Western Europe have the bargaining power to put pressure on unjust Soviet actions, but these very same nations encourage the oppressors by ignoring the dissidents. Alexander Solzhenitsyn, in his Nobel Prize acceptance speech, castigated the West as well as the Soviet Union for "comfortably ignoring all the groans, the stifled cries, the destroyed lives, as long as these remain at a distance." Going on, he writes: "The timid civilized world has found nothing with which to oppose the onslaught of a sudden revival of barbarity, except with concessions and smiles."

Possibly because of our skepticism with our own government's policies, we reject such issues as stale, anti-communist propaganda which died along with the end of the 1950's. But keep this in mind: this combination of nationalist and civil rights issues is a new development in the Soviet Union. They are not some band of reactionary bourgeoisie working for the re-introduction of the capitalist system. Roman Kalanta was a member of the Communist Youth League. They are merely people, fighting for their basic human rights of history, language, literature, and religious belief. They are risking their necks, even they have taken their own lives, as they must have an active and determined world opinion on their side if they are to succeed in any significant way.

The movement asks of those who are listening to voice their opinion on these matters. But make it a definite and active yes or no. The future of twenty cultures, of 112 million, would not be decided by our refusal to become committed.

Letters To A Lonely God love story that ends a mystery

rev. robert griffin

This is the real story of a boy and a girl - it is not a love story; at least it is not a love story in the usual sense. It is a story so recent it is still happening. It could not have happened if two people, for different reasons, were not profoundly concerned about one another. It could only have happened at a place like Notre Dame where the lives of good people touch the lives of sad people in a city of the Lonely God.

Bill is a student living in one of the halls at Notre Dame. He is a quiet boy, full of goodness and human concern. He is a Catholic, but his religion is not so intense that he never misses Mass on Sunday. His faith is of a kind that questions dogma, but in his charity, he is very close to Christ.

Early this semester, Bill received a phone call from a girl named Cindy in South Bend. It was one of those situations, common enough around here, in which a town girl dials a Notre Dame number, seemingly at random, in hope of finding a pick-up or a friend. As sometimes also happens, the girl Cindy was, according to her own admission, a prostitute. Bill, lonesome like lots of other Notre Dame guys, was not in the market for making deals with a prostitute; but by the time he was aware of Cindy's profession he had become sympathetically attached to the idea of helping a girl living without options in a life of squalor.

In a city where, it is said, young girls are being daily trapped into a life of prostitution through being hooked on drugs, Cindy's story was plausible enough. For several years now, Cindy, eighteen years old, has been a prostitute. Her brother Tom is her pimp; he keeps her line through an addiction to heroin. Also prostituting and hooked on drugs is a younger sister, Chris, age fourteen. This is the story that Cindy told Bill.

Bill is not a crusader, but he is a decent, sensitive human being. His reaction to this sad tale was predictable: he offered help. Cindy's response was, she wanted to be helped very much.

Now the rescue operation of two teen-age prostitutes enslaved by drugs may seem very simple: you get names, addresses, and a pair of policemen, and you raid the premises of the brothel. But what if the affair is complicated by the pimp's connection with the underworld? What if you are told by professional men, called in as consultants, that the last well-meaning kid who tried to help a local prostitute was found dead as a supposed suicide? What if you are told that the last local girl who tried to escape the prostitute's game ended up dead from the effects of an abortion, and who was not even pregnant? You can't help prostitutes escape if they insist that their lives and yours are in mortal danger from a syndicate of crime with connections in every city to hunt you down and kill.

Early on, Bill, sensing he was in beyond his depth, came to consult me, so that we could be in beyond our depth together in trying to aid these girls. Through him, for weeks, I was informed of a parade of horrors both of us were helpless to interrupt, for example, the story of Chris's abortion. For five days, Cindy told us, Chris lay bleeding after the abortion. I tried at that time to arrange for both girls to see a gynecologist; but Chris, frightened by the fear of an arrest for undergoing an illegal operation, informed her brother Tom, the pimp. Cindy was punished by beatings and by fixes of heroin withheld. Later there were other details of punitive measures inflicted: Lighted matches held to the nipples of the breast until first class burns had developed, and tattoo marks of the word prostitute traced in indelible ink on the abdomen, placed there, Tom said, so that the girl would be ashamed to try to see any other doctor than the one employed by the trade.

The hero of this story is Bill. Through hours on the telephone with Cindy, he listened; it is not easy to be a good listener when you are hearing about outrages for which someone should be hanged. But Bill listened and consoled and advised, and he was sick at heart the whole time. Together, we planned how the girls might be helped. We did not dare to move too precipitously, for Cindy warned us of police connections her brother had; and even city lawyers told us that the cops were not to be trusted. Besides, we had only Cindy's word that the whole mess was true, and how well can you trust a self-professed heroin addict to distinguish between fact and fantasy?

On several occasions, we met Cindy and briefly talked with her. She was a plainlooking little thing, very shy and rather sweet. She looked like the not-quite-with-it girl in your high school class whom no one ever asked out; she was not all bonde and brassy like some hookers I have seen in New York. But she didn't have to wear wigs and hot pants and gladiator boots, like the New York hookers, Cindy told Bill. She was not a street walker; instead her brother brought the johns to the house, and the way-out, weirdo johns at that.

Gradually, Bill collected the facts of Cindy's life: the addresses where she lived, the bars where her brother hung out, the aliases they had sometimes used in hustling. With the emergence of facts, we began to check out Cindy's story, only no one in South Bend seemed to have heard of Cindy and her pimp, this operator on the drug scene, this kingpin in his own stable of lust. Then one day, Cindy gave us a new story: a campus student, she said, had become involved with another prostitute on her premises. The girl had left the brothel with the student and had returned with him to Notre Dame, where she was now living in his room. All of the facts given us were carefully checked out, but there was no shred of evidence to verify the story, and a lot of evidence against it.

Finally, in recent days, Cindy phoned to say her brother had forced her into marriage with a native-born Italian. The Italian needed marriage to an American girl, she said; otherwise he would have to leave the country as an alien. Cindy had been chosen as the bride to keep him here; she was heartbroken, she said, at the role forced upon her. A check with the County Clerk verified that once again, there were no facts to support the story. There was no filing of the intentions to be married, no record that the marriage had taken place.

Faced with the facts of no proof, Cindy told us she was going away on a honeymoon with her new husband. Her husband and her brother, she said, were gradually taking her off heroin, and her husband was talking of having children. Having children might be impossible for her, she said, because of the damage from an abortion she was forced to undergo several years ago.

Cindy said she was in love with Bill, and she had begun to imagine he was in love with her. Now, she said, she knew that a love affair between them was impossible, because Bill could never love her as anything more than a sister. Bill, who had always known this was true, could not disagree.

This is a real story, and only the names have been changed. I do not know which of Cindy's facts are true, and which were the fantasies of a lonely girl. I hope that the horrors are all untrue, and that they were bids for attention from Cindy, who looks like the girl in your high school class who was never had dates. I honestly feel that this is a love story: Cindy in love with Bill, who was possible one of the few people who was ever kind to her in a non-exploitative way; Bill loving Cindy like an older brother caring for a troubled child.

In think there are lots of lonely girls in South Bend who look for attention from students on this campus. I think students hear a lot of hardluck stories from the girls in town. The problem with this particular story is that there are so many unanswered questions; as Bill remarked, it is like a puzzle that has been destroyed before half the pieces are put together. Among all the confused details that tell of pimps, drugs, abortions, torture, police corruption, and girls in trouble, only two facts stand clear: one girl thought enough of one boy to tell him apparent lies; and one boy had enough compassion for a girl he was not in love with, to risk helping her, even when he thought it might be mortally dangerous to himself.

Those of you who have also listened to hardluck stories; in your own attention to tales of sadness, have you also heard the story of these teen-age girls sent hustling by their brother? Can you confirm the story, or deny its truth, or somehow give it an ending?

This is the story of a boy and a girl. It began as a love story. I would feel sorry to see it end simply as a mystery. That is one reason Bill and I have shared the story with you.

No, this is not a rerun of a past column but a brand new one since the paper is not publishing next week. First I must correct a few mistakes from my last column. Patton airs at 9:00 on 28 Sunday instead of 8:00 and The Green Berets airs at 8:00 on 16 Saturday (tomorrow) instead of 9:00 as reported. I get a little mixed up at times. One more correction, the Patton Museum is in Fort Knox, Kentucky, not Texas. Oh well, I was close: give or take 1,000 miles or so.

We have just about everything this coming wee, comedy, fantasy, drama, music, and horror; and most of it is worth your watching (remember vacation is next week). On the drama side, next Tuesday on 28 Brian's Song can be re-seen. It was the highest ranked movie last year and, after an unsuccessful run in theaters across the nation, ABC bought it back. A jock's version of Love Story, this film concerns itself with the relationship of Gale Sayers (played by Billy Dee Williams) and Brian Piccolo (played by James Caan—The Godfather) the first black and white to room together on the road for the Chicago Bears. This Emmy award winner traces their training and Piccolo's tragic death from cancer in 1970. Jack Warden ("Wackiest Ship in the Army" and "N.Y.P.D.") won an Emmy as coach George Halas. The film kicks off at 8:30.

In typical television competitive style NBC has scheduled West Side Story at the same time as Brian's Song. This winner of ten academy awards (topped only by Ben Hur with eleven) shows the feud between the Sharks and the Jets as the leader of the Hets, Richard Beymer, falls in love with the sister of the leader of Sharks played by Natalie Wood with her singing dubbed in by Marnie Nixon. George Chakiris copped an Oscar as the leader of the Sharks and Rita Moreno, who played his girlfriend, took an Oscar home also. This modern day version of Romeo and Juliet also features Russ Tamblyn and Simon Oakland and some great scenes and songs. The blades flash at 8:00.

Monday has the Neil Simon movie adaptation of one of his Broadway smashes Barefoot in the Park on 16. With Robert Redford repeating his Broadway performance and Jame Fonda at her sexiest before Barbarella (a pretty bad movie incidentally), this flick is filled with the typical Simba one-liners guaranteed to break you up. Tip-toe through the tulips at 9:00.

Chitty Chitty Bang Bang, based on the Ian Fleming (he wrote the James Bond books for those who have been in the library for the past ten years) novel, is strictly for kids and is probably why it is set for Thanksgiving day. With Dick Van Dyke, this film has a car that flies, which is not so original since Disney had Fred MacMurray steering a flying flivver in all those Absent Minded Professor-Flubber-Sone of Flubber flicks years ago. Anyhow, it takes off at 9:00.

Live a Little, Love a Little on Friday on CBS at 9:00 is another Elvis Presley flick with an inane plot too simplistic to be worth mentioning here. Skip it. Once Upon a Time in the West is set for the ABC Sunday Night Movie on Nov. 26.

How to Succeed in Business Without Really TRYING. Another Broadway musical brought to the screen, has Robert Morse ("That's Life") turning in a great performance ranking with that of another con man, Robert Preston, in The Music Man. For some good laughs, tune in Saturday Nov. 25 on NBC at nine. Incidentally, for those who are leaving next weekend, all times listed above are Eastern Standard Time and substitute your local affiliate station for NBC (16), CBS (22), and ABC (28).

There are two made-for TV flicks next week that have not been seen before. Gargoyles (Tues. 9:30; CBS) has Cornel Wilde ducking half-men, half-bat creatures in the Carlsbad Caverns of New Mexico. I hope he watches out for the bottomless pit because that's where the flick will be rated with the opposition from ABC and NBC Tuesday. All My Darling Daughters (Wed. 9:30 on ABC) has Robert Young trying to relieve his "Father Knows Best" days. Regular Marcus Welby viewers may be in for a shock when they tune in at 10:00 and find him married to Eve Arden and with four daughters.

Trivia: ABC and CBS have announced their cancelation plans for a few of their shows. ABC axed Alias Smith and Jones and The Sixth Sense replacing Alias with two situation comedies and Sense with The Men to see if it does any better. Kung Fu will be seen weekly on Thursdays at 8:00 and The Streets of San Francisco will follow that at 10:00. Owen Marshall will move to Wednesdays at 10:00 following the Wednesday Movie of the Week moved back an hour at 7:30. Julie Andrews will be moved to Saturdays at 9:00. CBS is moving Carol Burnett to 10:00 on Saturdays (Julie and Carol will then be back to back) and transplanting Mission: Impossible to Fridays at 8:00 and Sonny and Cher to Wednesdays at 8:00. Anna and the King is axed and Dick Van Dyke will replace it. "The Sandy Duncan Show" is also canned and "Mannix" will be seen at 8:30 Sundays instead of 9:30. A new detective show entitled "Barnaby Cobb" has Buddy Ebsen ("The Beverly Hillbillies") in the lead at 9:30 those nights. Confused? How do you think I feel? What you see above is the abridgement of a New York Times two column by five inch article!

yes - innovators in a world of similarity

joseph abell

Yes is one of those extremely rare kinds of groups that does something that is so necessary to the rock music scene, and yet is so hard to do: innovate.

The Yes sound, one I like to call "orchestrated rock," is a completely different one from the kinds of music drifting from the windows of the practice room of most groups. It finds a unique cross between the classical orchestration of symphonies and the latest of the rock trends. Out of this strange combination comes a kind of music that is like the Moody Blues: virtually alone in its field.

Ah, you say; what about groups like Rare Earth, Flash, Emerson, Lake and Palmer, and even the aforementioned Moody Blues? Don't they fit into this "orchestrated rock" category too? Not really. E, L&P are much more classical-oriented, and dependent almost solely on a single instrument. Rare Earth, while as varied in instruments as Yes, doesn't have the sophisticated complexity of the English group. The Moody Blues are basically a rock and roll band with mellowron and flute overlaid, a combination that gives an "orchestra" effect, but is far from the complicated interaction of Yes. And Flash is literally a spin-off of Yes.

And back in those good old days, when Kaye and Banks were with the group, the sound (and the popularity) were something totally different from the current Yes sound.

The first album, YES set a pattern. It was the beginning of a series, a very primitive beginning, that was to slowly define itself in its own terms and develop into a complex sound. There was little of the totality that is seen in later albums, and the keyboards especially seem limited in scope compared to later efforts. But on the whole, an excellent beginning that went exactly nowhere on the market.

So, try again. Time and a Word. The same format: a few non-original works surrounded with Jon (changed from the more formal John on Yes) Anderson-Chris Squire tunes. A bit more ambitious, perhaps, a bit more pretensive, but still well done. While the tunes for the most part are fairly pleasant, a few melodic lines here and there stand out, most notably from the choruses from short things called "Sweet Dreams" and the title track.

On to album number three, and a change of personnel: Exit Peter Banks, enter Steve Howe, from Tomorrow, boy wonder guitarist. Described by former Mothers drummer Ainsley Dunbar as "brilliant—he'll be starting his own group soon," Howe brings a new vitality into the Yes sound. And suddenly, The Yes Album has become one of the biggies. Not the biggest, but much better than the first two. A single is pulled off this one that actually makes it: "Your Move," a part of the longer "I've Seen All Good People." A deceptively simple tune, one that fortunately hides the Yes complexity on the rest of the album in its popularity. But no matter; album owners know the thrilling soar of "Starship Troopers" and the abrupt but natural shifts of motif in "Yours Is No Disgrace."

But the real move into the limelight is with the next album, last year's blockbuster at Notre Dame, Fragile. Adorned with a new Yes logo and a fancy new cover artist, Fragile showed Yes at their best yet.

And the reason can be summed in two words: Rick Wakeman. While on tour, keyboardist Tony Kaye became indisposed and Wakeman was asked to cover. The group and Kaye had had a fallings-out recently anyway, mostly about Kaye's reluctance to vary his fare from organ with peripheral moog and piano, and this tour was the turning point for Yes. The group was so satisfied with virtuoso Wakeman that they dumped Kaye in favor of the five-keyboard

And what a result in Fragile! The single, "Roundabout" hit the top ten around the country establishing Yes with the Top 40 set, while the album rose equally quickly, setting Yes firmly in everybody's mind. Granted, the album wasn't as smooth as it could be, with those five individual pieces breaking up the group efforts into isolated segments. But with the exception of two of those pieces, the songs themselves showed where Yes had come: to a place that isn't afraid to try new sounds and make them part of a whole.

And finally, the climax of this developing process: Close To The Edge; an album that is nothing short of a masterpiece of modern rock. Made up of only three songs, Close To The Edge is Yes' destiny. There was no place else to go.

The long title track, reminiscent of E.L&P's Tarkus and Tull's Thick As A Brick (with a hint of Days of Future Past), is an incredibly coherent statement musically. Lyrically, it doesn't make a whole lot of sense, but somehow that doesn't matter: it's not what Anderson says, it's the way the sounds of the words blended into the rest of the musical web. If he has to say "Luther in time," it's because the music needed that kind of "u" sound; who cares if the phrase is nonsensical? And the other side of the album is likewise. In "Siberian Khatru," the total sound calls for a series of short phrases: Anderson supplies them. The same for "And You and I"'s repetition of the title six or seven times. It's the effect that counts.

Again, the key is keyboards. Rick Wakeman has stretched his musical muscles and now takes on five keyboards (piano, electric piano, mellotron, moog, and organ), as he does in concert, a sight that is fascinating. With the five keyboards, he produces an entire orchestra-like effect, one that very definitely works.

And work in concert it does, too. The music reaches out, grabs you, assaults you. And you find yourself coming back for more. That's Yes.

The Jesus People: what's happening? what's in store?

Billy Graham, one of the superstars in the evangelical movement, has been in the business for quite awhile. Blasting out against sin and corruption, he addresses his audiences with "fire and brimstone," championing the cause of Jesus Christ.

Reverend Spurgeon M. Dunnam, III is a minister in the United Methodist Church. He is currently the editor of The Texas Methodist, a chain of over 100 church newspapers across seven states. He is also the general manager and editor of the United Methodist Reporter, a newly created national newspaper of the United Methodist Church. Rev. Dunnam lives in Dallas, Texas.

Reverend William Toohey is a Roman Catholic priest in the C.S.C. order. He is currently the head of campus ministry at the University of Notre Dame. He is also on the central staff of the Vice-President of Student Affairs and has recently organized a year-long program on human sexuality with Fr. Thomas McNally.

Len Biallas is a layman of the Roman Catholic faith. He is currently a professor of Theology at the University of Notre Dame. He is a former C.S.C. priest who left the priesthood last spring "to better involve himself in his ministry." He is also the first C.S.C. priest to leave the order and remain on the faculty of the Notre Dame Theology department.

Last in a series

Only recently, large religious gatherings, projects, and community involvements have become prevalent in the Jesus movement. Events such as the highly publicized Explo '72 and the Billy Graham crusades have focused national attention on the religious activities of youthful Jesus people. How important are these large events and happenings?

"I'd like to dwell on the word 'happening,'" Biallas commented. "A happening is the element of adventure, and if the element of openness can come into their (youth's) lives through some happening or adventure and they recognize that their lives are not just suffering, alienation and anonymity, but a series of happenings, or a story, rather than a narration of one facet after another, then I'm all for it."

He pointed out one drawback to major events such as Explo '72, however: possible detractor from an overly structured plan.

"To the extent that there's a lot of organization, it's going to work against this sort of thing," he said.

But he was quick to add that the effort could take one of two directions: one like the peaceful, successful happening of the Woodstock Pop Festival, or one like the fatal tragedy at Altamont, California during a Rolling Stones concert.

Biallas described long-range efforts like Key 73 similarly, saying that they "could go either way."

"It (Key 73) could be a rejuvenation of the excitement of service and fellowship, or it could become over-institutionalized and stifling," he said.

Dunnam sees the major evangelistic events most importantly as symbols.

"Explo was symbolically significant because so many people came from so far to increase their knowledge and ability to witness the gospel," he said.

A second reason for the importance of the events according to Dunnam was that they were religious events, as opposed to secular ones.

"Most of the symbols of our times have been secular movements - very few have been religious," he said.

He criticized the Explo effort for its concentration on a single set of theological ideas. The Campus Crusade for Christ, sponsors of Explo '72, "boxes in" the possible range of religious expression to that of their own theology, he claimed.

"The Explo people weren't encouraging the kids to develop their own faith and understanding and express it in their own way," he said.

"What they're doing is completely valid as far as it goes," he added, "but it doesn't go far enough."

Dunnam cited the Explo '72 goal as that of taking the gospel to the world, a goal he described as "noteworthy."

"But," he cautioned, "the question is whether or not they're taking the whole gospel."

Dunham also commented on Key 73, pointing up the weakness in the loose structure.

"Nearly anyone could participate on his own level," he said, which could detract from higher levels of the program.

But he praised Key 73 as "the best approach to evangelism" because it "recognizes the differences between faiths and accepts all of them."

"Whether a great deal is accomplished or not (in the major events) is debatable. Much of it is good, but a small part of it could cause some harm," he concluded.

Fr. Toohey again looked to the fruits of the Jesus people for the importance of their giant events.

"The real significance is Is our country any better because of this?" he said, emphasizing that the importance of the events are the results, both ultimate and immediate.

"(Those results) are somewhat measurable in the transformation of the individual who attends them," he said.

Crosslakes A comment Joseph Abell

Evangelism: what would make a reporter interested in such a thing as evangelism? Sure, the Jesus freaks are all around and everybody sees them spreading their "good news" as if it were something everyone else had never heard of. And everybody puts up with some of it, scorns some of it, and listens to the rest. So what's interesting?

Last summer, I found out. I live in Dallas, Texas, the site of the largest convention the Jesus People have ever had. Explo '72 flyers were out and even up here at Notre Dame as early as last January. As the summer began, the eyes of Dallas became more dilated with expectation. And finally, it was here, or rather, they were here: all 75,000 of them.

But I'll have to clarify that--Campus Crusade for Christ had arrived. Bill Bright's organization was in the limelight, and it was fascinating how he made sure that nobody stole that limelight.

The Jesus freaks seemed to have found a certain kind of Jesus and refused to even consider any other kind. Bill Bright's Four Laws seemed to be the only laws; Campus Crusade seemed to be the only way to heaven. And that bothered me.

The Jesus freaks seemed to be the most confident bunch I've seen in a long time. "Don't worry about things," they said, "Jesus will take care of it; trust in Him." You could hear the capital "h". That bothered me.

And the Jesus freaks were convinced that they could save you, me, anybody. They leisurely strolled around, blank grins on their faces, yelling to their friends "Praise the Lord!" and "Marathana, brothers!" and waving their index fingers, the "One Way," around as if they were popsicles. And that bothered me.

Quite frankly, I got sick of it. The stubbornness that Campus Crusade was the only means to salvation was frustrating. The continual verbal barrage, trying to convert me on the average of three times an hour, was tiring. The easy confidence that everything will be "taken care of" was disheartening--after all, this is the generation that's going to inherit the earth? And as for their "One Way," many times was I, and many other Dallasites, emptied to show them "the Other Way," and it sure wouldn't have been an index finger I would have waved!

I don't pretend that all Jesus freaks are like the ones I met at Explo --I hope they're not--but I sure became disillusioned with the movement. It was so damn pretentious and flashy when something like this should have been real and meaningful.

Hence, the interest in Jesus freaks and the new evangelism in general. And my conclusions, after Explo '72, Key 73 and talking with religious leaders, Protestant and Catholic? I don't know. I just don't know. I side with all three: I can see Len Biallas' odyssey. I know I'm on one, though I don't know where I'm going. I can see Rev. Dunnam's cycles--evangelism had to come back sometime. But most of all, I can see Fr. Toohey's concern: why aren't they doing something about our situation? What is the point of just praising Jesus all your life?

I can't buy the kind of Jesus Campus Crusade is peddling. I'm not too sure I can buy the kind the Catholic Pentecostal groups or the Charismatic Renewal groups have either but those are something I'm still not too familiar with. All of them seem so full of gnosticism and plastic that I wonder how anyone could stomach it. A plastic God I don't need--there are enough here on earth.

Pre-teaching elective offered next semester

Once again next semester, the College of Arts and Letters, under the direction of the Collegiate Seminar Program, will offer an elective course dealing with the theory and practice of collegiate education, preparing second semester juniors from any college of the University to eventually design and teach - for credit - their own college level discussion course.

In describing the program, Professor Thomas Musial, Associate Director of the Collegiate Seminar, said that

Welk prize to children

A gift of $1,000 from the Lawrence Welk Foundation, Santa Monica, Cal., will be used by the Office of Student Volunteer Services at the University of Notre Dame to assist in financing cooperative programs with area youngsters.

Rev. David Schlaver, C.S.C., director of the office, said a portion of the gift would be earmarked for paint in the refurbishing of a "Sunshine Room" at the Northern Indiana Children's Hospital. Other sums would be used for field trips and special instructional material for both retarded and exceptional children.

Extermination program instituted to halt the roach problem in halls

Several university departments have launched a new program to curb the roach problem in residence halls, according to Edward Riley ND's Environmental Health and Safety manager.

Some of the residence halls are now experiencing a rather severe roach problem. An accelerated extermination program has been instituted by Maintenance Department in cooperation with the Environmental Health and Safety office," announces Riley in a recent letter to the Observer.

Riley listed factors that encourage roach problems. He mentions exposed food, and used furniture as breeding grounds for roaches. He also indicts sloppy food sales rooms.

about 30 second semester juniors will be selected for a preparatory course, SEM 421.

The course will give them the opportunity to reflect upon and analyze what has happened to them as individuals since their freshman year, gain a critical perspective on the strengths and weaknesses of their own college education, study some of the major problems of higher education with reference to a variety of theories, of education, and analyze models of colleges and courses that attempt to put these theories into practice.

The course is also a preparation for a unique sequel course, SEM 422, that enables students to put theory into practice as actual seminar teachers. In this respect, the preparatory course will help students design their own syllabus for a section of the Freshman Colloquium course, SEM 181.

The program, Musial explained, is based on the hypothesis that the best way to learn is to assume the role of a teacher. Students who successfully complete SEM 421 will enroll in SEM 422 during the following semester as seniors.

In SEM 422, each student is responsible for planning and teaching a course which meets the purposes of liberal education as he understands them, and attempts to resolve the special learning problems of freshmen as he becomes aware of them through experience. Sections of SEM 181 generally consist of about 8 to 10 volunteer freshmen. All the teaching seniors meet together each week with a faculty member to whom they are responsible to discuss the problems and possibilities arising from their section of the FY Colloquium. Seniors earn three credits for their teaching activities. They may repeat SEM 422 for a second semester if they choose.

Course book due Monday

The Course Schedule booklet with the courses offered at Notre Dame for the upcoming spring semester will be ready for distribution this Monday, November 20.

"The schedule" booklet is out earlier this year to permit counselling before the Thanksgiving break," says Marc Carmichael, assistant registrar.

Carmichael mentioned that this earlier publishing was made possible through the cooperation of the Observer.

"We are trying to get it out as soon as possible to eliminate the zoo at pre-registration time," says Carmichael. "Doing the book through the Observer made this possible."

The Registrar's office hopes to eliminate some of the indecision that causes scheduling hassles by giving the students more time to see their advisors and decide their schedules.

This year's Course Schedule will not look like any of the previous booklets. It will be printed on larger sized newsprint instead of the smaller white bond of the past several years. This is the first year the Observer was asked to help publish the booklet.

Professor Musial is currently inviting applications for participation in this program, and what they believe they can contribute to the program. They should also include a word about their own education, and their current grade point average.

The applicant must include in the letter the names of two faculty members who can be consulted as referees since recommendations will be necessary to arrive at a final selection of the students who may participate in the program. Letters of application must reach Prof. Musial in the Collegiate Seminar Program office, 346 O'Shaughnessy Hall, on or before November 30.

Two meetings are scheduled to discuss particulars of this program and to answer any questions that students who are thinking of applying might have. The meetings will be held on Tuesday and Wednesday afternoons, November 28 and 29, at 4:15, in room 105 O'Shaughnessy Hall. Seniors who are currently teaching sections of the FY Colloquium will also be present at these meetings to discuss their experience in the program.

Mitchell discusses psychokinetics

Mitchell: By feeling a presence of material things, "you can indeed become aware of your own consciousness."

by Pete McHugh
Staff Reporter

Imagine concentrating on an object and with no physical contact or any outside force, being able to move that object. Dr. Edgar D. Mitchell, former astronaut and sixth man to walk on the moon, described the actual occurrence of such a psychokinetic movement during his lecture on "Consciousness—the Ultimate Enigma" at the auditorium of the Center for Continuing Education last night.

Mitchell said that presently associates of his have witnessed and recorded the psychokinetic moving and even bonding of metallic rings by a man in their West Coast research laboratory. Their findings will be published in a scientific journal in the near future he said.

Good evening earth people "Good evening earth people" was the manner in which Mitchell addressed the capacity audience. He began his talk by asking the audience to participate in a self-awareness experiment.

Telling the people to relax and concentrate on where they are, he told them to put their awareness to the front of their heads and feel its presence. Then he told them to move it to the back, right and left side. He said by feeling a presence you "can indeed become aware of your own consciousness."

The former astronaut went on to give his views on the use and misconceptions about science. Science is at its best when it allows man to live harmoniously he said. However, he stated, "Science is not our only way of knowing."

Citing ESP and intuition as alternative options to knowledge, he said that we use "very little of our total potential." He described these as nonrational means to knowledge.

Science and religion
He stressed that religion and science are not "mutually exclusive realms of thought" as the Academy of Science stated recently. Isaac Newton and Albert Einstein were mentioned as scientists who saw an enigma behind the physical world which we would denote as God.

Recalling his lunar flight he described the earth as being a tiny blue and white jewel "in the vast darkness of space. He called this compelling view "a glimpse of divinity" which "has led me to reestablish my philosophy."

Another idea that he emphasized was "the illusion of objective versus subjective thought." "To be objective is to be neutral, emotionally uninvolved," he said. He felt that the two types of thought are aligned with the subjective often manifested in the concepts of consciousness and self awareness.

Consciousness can only be studied he said. Though we do not know exactly what it is, we can describe it. Mitchell believes it is a "Necessary and sufficient condition for the universe." It is present in all life even in DNA and RNA structures he said. Self-awareness is characteristic of only man, according to Mitchell.

"The feats of science are wondrous to behold" he stated, listing various advances such as the polio vaccine, and the harnessing of atomic energy. They are "a direct result of the objective technique of science."

However, he also mentioned the many bad effects of science: biological warfare, atom bombs, and pollution. This he felt demonstrates the need for expansion and use of our consciousness which is "the ground of both subjective and objective thought."

Concluding the lecture he asked the audience to "seek to know yourselves and God, and serve humanity."

Mitchell's lecture was the first of a series of lectures sponsored by the Arthur J. Schmitt Foundation in its Challenges in Science Meetings to be presented this year. Prior to the lecture, Dr. Emil T.

Hoffman, Dean of the Freshman Year of Studies, speaking in behalf of the college of science and its student science council, announced that Notre Dame will be the site of the 25th International Science Fair at a date to be announce.

Dr. Bernard Waldman, Dean of the College of Science, introduced Mitchell and described his broad educational and military training.

While the lunar module pilot on Apollo 14, he participated in a mental telepathy experiment with four people on earth. Waldman called the results of this experiment "statistically significant."

Local artists plan exhibit this weekend

On Saturday and Sunday, Nov. 18 and 19, from 9 a.m. to 7 p.m., the South Bend Artists Guild will have its first art show at the Guildhouse located at 718 E. La Salle St., South Bend, Ind.

The show will include sculpture, paintings and drawings which will be offered for sale. Intermittently during the show, the music members of the Guild will play and the writers will have poetry and prose readings.

The Guild was formed by Jim Young on the principle that art will develop individual talent more fully if shared with other artists. Community sharing of the arts is an extension of that principle and the basis for the show.

ND icers visit Pioneers, defending WCHA champs

by Stan Urankar

Notre Dame will run up against a major hazard in their hopes for WCMA supremacy this weekend when they travel to Denver to face the defending conference champion Pioneers in a four-point series at the Denver Ice Arena.

Fourteen lettermen return from Coach Murray Armstrong's 1971-72 squad that finished with a 27-11-0 record, and Irish coach "Lefty" Smith acknowledges the prowess of the high-scoring Denver veterans. "Even though they lost Vic Venasky to Los Angeles and Tom Peluso to Chicago (both NHL), they still have a lot of scorers to lead them."

Pete McNab, the third-leading scorer in the conference last year with 51 points (65 overall), returns as do veteran centers Rob Palmer (14-25-39) and Ed Hays (12-32-44). Star defenseman Mike Busniuk has moved to the front line, so the Pioneers won't be at a loss for points.

The defense in a question mark for the Pioneers. With starters Mike Christie and Ross Woodley graduated and Busniuk switched to a forward, the only blueliner with solid game experience is sophomore Bob Young. "Denver did get one of the top recruits in Bruce Affleck (frosh defenseman from Nelson, B.C.)," Smith added, "so he should be able to help improve their defense."

Goalie Ron Grahame, who co-captains their season's edition of the Pioneers with Hays, is a capable goaltender, as he posted a 3.5 goals-against average and came up with 30.3 saves per game.

Notre Dame will return all-time leading scorer John Noble for his first action of the season. The senior center from Toronto, Ontario, who has been out of the lineup with a leg injury, topped Irish point-scorers last season with 19 goals and 42 assists for 61 points, and will take over the playmaking chores between high-scoring wingers Eddie Bumbacco and Ian Williams.

Paul Regan will move back to center the second line for D'Arcy Keating and freshman Pat Novitzki, a switch that Smith says "will balance out the scoring ability of our lines." Three sophs will skate for the third unit—Pat Conroy centering for Mike Dunphy and Ray DeLorenzi.

The Irish also will continue the "five-man" squads that Smith has instituted this year. Bill Nyrop and Steve Curry will be on defense with Noble's line. Bill Creen and Mark Steinborn will work with Regan, Keating and Novitzki, and Ric Schafer and Les Larson will continue with the sophomore line.

"With that double win over Michigan behind us, our attitude for this weekend has been really good," Smith commented. "The idea of having the personnel to handle the job is in our minds. Now, it's just a matter of putting it to use."

Denver and Notre Dame have met eight times in history, with last season's 7-2 opening game playoff loss the only runaway. Four of the games have been decided by a goal, with the only Irish triumph coming in a 4-2 verdict at the ACC in February of 1971.

Irish swimmers stage fund raising marathon

Notre Dame's varsity swimming team will hold a swim marathon this Sunday from 5-9 p.m. in the Rockne Memorial Pool.

The swimmers are aiming for a non-stop, endurance effort of 200 laps of the pool—a distance of 5,000 yards, or two and one-half miles—and, in return, their sponsors have agreed to give each swimmer a penny, a nickel, or whatever, for each lap he swims.

Each fall the ND swimmers have tried to raise money to continue their training over the Christmas Break and to help support the Logan Center. In past years they have also ended their Christmas vacations early, and have had to pay additional room and board for the use of University facilities.

The swimmers have an opportunity to use excellent living quarters in South Bend over this year's semester break, but the new facilities will require three times the amount of money needed in past years.

The marathon won't be the swimmers' only fund-raising project. The team has also been operating hot dog stands and selling programs and peanuts before ND's home football games.

ND's swimmers will donate a percentage of the money earned to the program at the Logan Center. The team—through the Dolphin Club—has aided the Center for many years, and it is not uncommon for team members to give up their free time to work with the children at the Logan pool.

Anyone interested in contributing should contact Jim Kane (3414) or John Balthrop (1741).

ND-Miami closes '72 home slate

by Jim Donaldson
Sports Editor

Notre Dame and Miami clash Saturday afternoon in Notre Dame Stadium and, although both clubs will be sure to have their minds on the matters-at-hand, it's likely that visions of soft Southern climes will be flitting through their heads.

After a glimpse of Indiana's November weather most of the Hurrican athletes will probably be anxious to return to the warm, sunny skies of Miami. The Irish too are dreaming of Miami, but for an entirely different reason.

Victory over the Hurricanes tomorrow is virtually certain to insure Notre Dame of a spot in the Orange Bowl game held New Year's night in Miami, annually one of the nation's major bowl games. It has been strongly hinted that Nebraska would be Notre Dame's opponent in the Orange Bowl.

The Irish are naturally anxious to test their skills in such a prestigious bowl against the powerful Cornhuskers, national champions the past two years, but, as coach Ara Parseghian point out to his squad, "Everything is contingent upon beating Miami this Saturday."

Despite a mediocre 4-4 record, the Hurricanes of coach Fran Curci are a solid ball club, boasting a strong running game and a quick defense. After losing their first three games, the Hurricanes won four in a row, defeating Tulane, Houston, Army and Nevada (Las Vegas), before bowing to arch-rival Tampa, 7-0, last Saturday.

"Miami was coming along well until they were shutout by Tampa," Parseghian noted. "Now they'll be even tougher because of having lost and being in a 'bounce-back' situation."

"They can move the football," Parseghian continued, "and their record is misleading—they gave Texas a tough battle (losing 23-10) and then beat Houston and Army in a convincing manner (33-13 and 28-7, respectively). Don't forget, they gave us a struggle last year in Miami." Notre Dame defeated the Hurricanes last season 17-0, after leading just 3-0 at halftime.

Miami's offensive strength lies in an explosive running game.

ND's offense, which has executed well all season, will have added incentive for a good game tomorrow—the chance of an Orange Bowl bid.

Utilizing a pair of big backs, Chuck Foreman, a 210-pound All-American candidate, and Tom Smith (218), the 'Canes can grind out the yardage. Foreman is the club's top rusher with 484 yards and Smith has gained 391 yards rushing. Quarterback Ed Carney can also carry the ball, having rushed for 115 yards this fall.

When the Hurricanes go to the air, Foreman is again the man they look for. The multi-talented back has more than twice as many pass receptions as anyone else on the team, making 23 grabs, good for 308 yards. Split end Witt Beckman is the number two receiver with 11 catches.

Carney, a sophomore who started the year as the 'Canes third-string quarterback but has moved up because of injuries, is only a fair passer, completing just 53 of 124 attempts for two touchdowns. He has been intercepted eight times.

And, if the Irish play pass defense as well as they did last week, when they bombed the Air Force Academy's highly-touted Rich Haynie to only eight completions in 25 attempts and intercepted four passes, the 'Canes may have real difficulty moving the ball through the air.

Notre Dame switched out of its normal 4-4-3 defensive alignment last week into a 4-3-4 in order to better cope with the Falcons' dangerous passing game and the results of the switch were outstanding.

"Anytime you hold a team that is averaging 36 points a game to just one touchdown (the Irish beat the Air Force, 21-7), it's pleasing," Parseghian said.

"Without question, I think the alignment switch aided us a great deal," he continued. "After our performance against Navy (the Irish gave up 17 first downs

Londergon, Neville claim doubles crown

Kevin Londergon and Tim Neville claimed the ND doubles tennis open with a 6-4, 6-2 win over the team of Jeff Thompson and Tom Birsic.

The finals pitted the Blue and Gold division champions, with Neville and Londergon representing the Gold division on the strength of their 6-3, 6-3 victory over Don Wendelin and Jim Paladino.

This set the stage for the final round, which was played at the ACC. The score of the final match—6-4, 6-2—was not indicative of the caliber of play. Many deuce games were involved, and Neville and Londergon won primarily on the strength of their strong serving.

The victors, by winning the finals in straight sets, finished the tournament without losing a set.

In soccer, Alumni will play Off-Campus I for the championship this Saturday. Off-Campus I, which has yet to allow a goal, lost last week to Alumni (by default) in the double-elimination tourney, passing to the Middies) and realizing that we were up against Haynie and some fine receivers that had caught 17 touchdown passes, we felt it necessary to increase our speed in the secondary. We did that by switching to a four-back defensive coverage and using more variations and the set-up worked very well."

Mike Townsend was the top performer for the Irish defense, intercepting three Haynie passes to tie a Notre Dame record for pass interceptions in a game. The junior defensive back has swiped six passes in the last three games, several of those thefts coming on acrobatic grabs.

Although hampered by a number of questionable penalties, Notre Dame's offense accounted for 386 total yards against the Air Force, and with the return of halfback Darryll Dewan, fullback John Cieszkowski and freshman speedster Art Best from the injured list, the Irish may be able to get their potent attack in high gear tomorrow.

Eric Penick leads Notre Dame's rushers with 666 yards, one of the top outputs by an Irish running back in recent years, and he is nicely complimented by powerful fullback Andy Huff, who has gained 467 yards thus far. The Irish have six other backs, quarterback Tom Clements, Dewan, Gary Diminick, Cieszkowski, Wayne Bullock and Best, who have gained over 100 yards thus far.

Besides being a fine runner (376 yards), Clements has done a sound job as a passer in his sophomore season, completing fifty per cent of his attempts (61 of 122) for four touchdowns.

Split end Willie Townsend (16 receptions) and tight end Mike Creaney (14 grabs) are Clements' favorite receivers.

"I've been very pleased with the performance of the offensive team this fall," praised Parseghian. "They've shown great improvement over the team of a year ago."

Certainly, an impressive offensive showing against the Hurricanes would enhance Notre Dame's bowl chances. And the Irish, like the 'Canes, would like very much to go to Miami.

The first time

Four years of memories collected dust until this weekend, when the first of many "last times" approaches the class of '73. The years past quicker than I would have believed, or in retrospect, quicker than I had wanted them to. Saturday against Miami will be the last time that all the seniors will be in the Notre Dame stadium as players representing the Fightin' Irish, and corny or not, I'm sure a real tear will pass my cheek.

It doesn't seem like three years ago that Theismann and Gatewood were household names, and yet it was. It doesn't seem like three years ago that two scared stiff sophomores ran onto the field in Evanston Ill. to play the Wildcats of Northwestern University, and yet it was. John Dampeer and I started that game against N.U. three years ago, and today, some thirty games later, we find it hard to remember where all the time has gone. Playing tackle and tight-end for three years alongside of each other, we've seen every defense and blocked every blitz so often, that you'd be hard pressed to find one we haven't seen. And it evern seems to have gotten to the point that if John or I don't recognize the defense, invariably, it means that they've lined up wrong.

This is the last game Dampy and I will play together for Notre Dame; he's been a great captain and a great friend, and I'll miss the times we've spent together. But after Saturday, one more collegiate game and it's all over: all the pain and heartaches, all the sweat and joy, all the friendships and victories of football, all the feelings that can never be recaptured, all the times we can never make the same...wish and try as we might.

Some of the names won't be so familiar this Saturday, but these are the guys who have labored for the same four years behind the scenes, not scoring touchdowns or getting their pictures in the paper, but contributing as much to our team victories as anyone else: Joe Borbely, Jim Bulger, Ed Fiber, Denny Gutowski, Walker Holloway, John Mariani, Dan O'Toole, Tyrone Robinson, Tom Wright, to name a few.

Mark Breneman, Tom Devine, Greg Hill, Steve Niehaus, and Greg Szatko, won't be able to suit up for our home finale, but their's is in the future. Pat Steenberge, Jom Roof, Bob Johnson, Tom Freistroffer will all be watching from the sidelines too, but their's is the added grief of not having another chance, another season to play. Their personal season ended in some cases, before ours even began. This is a great bunch of guys and I take my hat off to them.

As I run off the field after the Miami game for the last time, I think I'll keep my chin strap and not give it to some little kid as I've done 15 times before. For this is my last time, my own moment. And as I run through the goal posts for the last time, they too will close behind me forever as a football player for Our Lady's school, and so I'll take my hat off to her too—and somehow cherish my moment, and quietly wipe away the tear.

— Mike Creaney

Football picks

Every game is important in college football. A team can never have a "letdown", no matter who it's playing. Just look at last Saturday's games, in which previously unbeaten Ohio State was stunned by Michigan State, Louisiana State suffered its first loss, at the hands of undefeated Alabama, and Nebraska barely escaped a setback against solid, but unheralded, Iowa State, settling for a 23-23 tie. As it's been so often said, any team can beat another on a given day. Trite, but true.

The nation's top teams figure to be on their guard this week, however. All of the major bowls will be extending bids sometime after six o'clock Saturday night and none of the major bowl contenders wants a surprise loss tomorrow to spoil their hopes for a happy New Year. Alabama, Oklahoma, Nebraska, Penn State, L.S.U., Auburn and Notre Dame are all in the running for spots in the major bowl games and all of them will be in action tomorrow, trying to improve their credentials.

Since The Observer won't be publishing next week because of the Thanksgiving vacation, the selections for both this Saturday's and next week's games will be made in this column, 25 choices in all.

Here they are:

Notre Dame over Miami (Fla.) — The Hurricanes have the scent of oranges on their uniforms and the aroma ought to bring out the best in the Irish.

Penn State over Boston College — The Nittany Lions are the best team in the East.

Tennessee over Mississippi — This has been a disappointing year for the Rebels and the Volunteers aren't going to help Ole Miss morale one bit.

Texas over Texas Christian — The Longhorns have their eye on yet another Cotton Bowl appearance.

Oklahoma over Kansas — No problem for the Sooners.

Ohio State over Northwestern — Not even the SPCA can stop the wildly angry Buckeyes from dismembering the 'Cats.

Nebraska over Kansas State — The Cornhuskers don't figure to be in a real friendly mood, either.

Auburn over Georgia — Playing at home gives the Tigers an edge here.

West Virginia over Syracuse — The Mountaineers have a score to settle with the Orangemen.

Colorado over Air Force — Look for a Buffalo stampede in this pairing of intrastate rivals.

Michigan over Purdue — They're smelling roses in Ann Arbor.

Delaware over Bucknell — No one can dispute the Blue Hens' claim to the small college national title.

Southern Cal over UCLA — The Trojans haven't beaten their crosstown rivals since 1969. A win here would give them revenge — and a Rose Bowl berth.

Georgia Tech over Navy — The Yellowjackets plan to spoil the Middies' hopes for their first winning season since 1967

Upset of the Week:

Missouri over Iowa State — The Tigers have been shocking "better" teams all season. The Cyclones may get blown out of Columbia.

November 23rd or 25th

Harvard over Yale (25) — The Crimson will have red faces if they don't beat the Elis in "The Game".

L.S.U. over Florida (25) — The Gators can't whip the Tigers, not even in their home "swamp" of Gainesville.

Purdue over Indiana (25) — The Hoosiers will kick the Old Oaken Bucket.

Missouri over Kansas (25) — This closes out the '72 campaign for the Tigers, who are much happier than they were after last year's 1-10 season.

Penn State over Pittsburgh (25) — The Nittany Lions ought to finish up 10-1, Pitt, 1-10.

Nebraska over Oklahoma (23) — A win here would go a long way toward restoring the badly hurt Cornhusker pride.

Dartmouth over Penn (25) — If Dartmouth gets by Cornell on the 18th, the Big Green can wrap up another Ivy League title with a victory over the improved Quakers.

Texas over Texas A & M (23) — They just don't make Longhorn - Aggie games like they used to.

Arizona State over Arizona (25) — After a Sun Devils triumph Saturday night in Tempe, the sun won't be shining Sunday in Tucson.

Upset of the Week:

Ohio State over Michigan (25) — Presuming that the Wolverines get by Purdue, they'll come into Columbus undefeated and ranked no worse than third in the country. The Buckeyes would love to spoil Michigan's perfect season and write their own Rose Bowl tickets in the process.

Last Week: 10 of 14, 1 tie .700 Season't pct: 109 of 149, 1 tie .730
