Spanish rebels surrender after 18-hour siege

MADRID, Spain (AP) — Denounced by their king and military commanders, rebel officers surrendered yesterday after holding government leaders and members of Parliament hostage for 18 hours in a dramatic attempt to overthrow Spain's fledgling democracy.

Lt. Col. Antonio Tejero Molina of the para-military Civil Guard, gave up the coup attempt after a night-long standoff. Deserted by many of the 200 men who had stormed the Spanish Cortes (Parliament), Molina agreed to formally surrender, symbolically in the former office of Spain's late dictator Generalissimo Francisco Franco.

There were no casualties, although Tejero Molina fired his heavy army pistol in the air six times during the takeover and other rebels sprayed the rotunda of the Cortes with submachine gun fire, raining down plaster on the lawmakers as they dove for cover.

It was not immediately clear whether Tejero Molina was promised the safe conduct out of the country that army negotiators offered him during the siege. Before giving up he was quoted as saying, "I will have to pay with 30 or 40 years in prison."

Government ministers and the 350 members of Parliament forced at gunpoint to their desks through the night, filed out of the building to cheers of "democracy, democracy" from a crowd of thousands of jubilant Spaniards.

"We were tranquil, we were calm, because calm is the fundamental element in situations like this," said Deputy Pedro Bofill, his shirt rumpled and his tie askew after the long ordeal.

The end really came 11 hours earlier when King Juan Carlos went on national television and ordered military commanders to "take all necessary measures to keep the constitutional order."

The army obeyed and Juan Carlos passed the most crucial test of his five-year reign.

Appearing on television in his uniform of commander in chief of the armed forces, the 43 year-old monarch declared, "the crown ... cannot tolerate in any form, actions or attitudes of persons who try to interrupt the democratic process of the constitution."

The king's intervention cracked what little military backing the rebels had secured. All but one of

Lawler foresees strong social network

Next year's newly approved Student Union Director Bill Lawler's plans for 1981-82 include restructuring the Social Commission to increase its effectiveness through cooperation with individual halls.

"The social atmosphere at Notre Dame centers around the hall," Lawler said. "We'll have the Social Commission go to halls and say we have this or that coming up and ask for the hall to co-sponsor the event.

"We also want the halls to come to see us," he said. "The Student Union could provide funds if several halls wanted to combine and sponsor something."

Other plans call for more concerts, a centralized publicity office, and combining the SU ticket office and record store.

Lawler, a junior, who is the Contemporary Arts Commissioner, is one of two applicants for the director's position. The Student Senate confirmed Lawler's appointment Monday night after his selection by the SU Steering Committee.

The recently abolished SU Board of Commissioners approved new directors in the past. Under the new constitution, the Senate must approve the selection of SU director and comptroller.

Rich Coppola, present SU director, said that the change in procedure does not alter SU operation. "The Senate is just another body for the Student Union to deal with," he said.

Next year's newly approved SU comptroller is Matthew Barrett, a junior accounting major.

"I see myself as a policy advisor on finance," he said. "I hope I can help Bill on the business side.

Judy awaits 'a better life'

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Convicted murderer Steven T. Judy told his foster parents that he knows "there is a better life after this one, so I might as well get started on it."

Judy, 24, a former Indianapolis construction worker, is scheduled to die March 9 in the electric chair for the murders of a young Indianapolis woman and her three small children.

He has resisted all legal efforts to halt or delay his execution at the Indiana State Prison at Michigan City.

His foster parents, Robert and Mary Carr of Indianapolis, have been the condemned man's only visitors except for his attorney, Steven L. Harris of Morrisville.

Harris said Judy "doesn't want me or anyone else to do anything or file any stays.

"I have not heard anything for some time from the American Civil Liberties Union, but it would not surprise me if they tried to file something to stop the execution. I still don't believe it will do any real good without his cooperation."

A spokesman for the ACLU said Monday that the organization has not decided what, if any, action might be taken to halt the scheduled execution.

"We are still trying to talk him out of this," said Mrs. Carr. "We are trying to convince him that he would have a good chance in a new trial with more doctors, but he still feels that society is not ready to deal with a person like him and he is not going to wait in prison until it is.

"He's been sick since he was 9 years old. He needs mental treatment or to be studied so that doctors might learn how to prevent or treat the future Steven Judy's."

Instead, however, "They are just going to strap him down in that chair, and he's going to let them kill him," she said.

WEDNESDAY FOCUS

"Steve is holding onto a rope of reincarnation," she said. "He makes it all sound so logical that he wants to die, to be done with this life and start another, better one."

Harris says Judy believes "there is a spirit in his present life but not that there is a heaven or hell."

Judy does not have extensive knowledge of the religions in which reincarnation is an important theme and he has no specific idea what form his reincarnation may take, according to friends.

Aside from his morbid jokes and discussions of final arrangements, Judy "is in such good spirits it almost makes you sick," Mrs. Carr said. "He acts like death will be a total relief.

"He gets a kick out of how some people feel uncomfortable around him," she said. "There is a bit of challenge for him to convince some people (that he wants to die)."

Harris stated, "He thinks that once the electricity starts the pain will be short-lived."

Judy joked that the black hood to be pulled over his head when he is in the chair "is just so the spectators don't get sick."

Mrs. Carr said Judy "tells us to think of his death as if he had cancer or some other terminal illness and forget it in six months."

Judy insisted he knew what he was doing and became angry when the Carrs questioned his sanity. "He said he would have to go to court and lie that he doesn't love us if that is what it takes to keep us from trying to intervene in the execution," she said. "He is really making it hard for us to help him.

"I know that the Chasteens are really hurting over their loss," she said. "But to me, Steve is sick and ought to get treatment rather than the electric chair."

Judy was convicted in the rape and strangulation death of Terry Chasteen, 21, and drowning her three small children.

Judy has spent most of his time watching television in his cell, and he does not sleep well at night, Mrs. Carr said.

He has received a great deal of mail, including requests from religious leaders and news reporters asking for interviews. Prison officials have prohibited such personal or telephone conversations with Judy.

A woman on death row in Texas wrote to Judy pleading that he "accept Christ and not die" as it would help clear the way for more executions, Harris said.

Murday-Kenney ticket highlights experience

By MIKE DUPLESSIE
News Staff

Don Murday and Tara Kenney focus on experience in their candidacy for Student Body President and Vice President.

Don Murday is the president of Carroll Hall, and serving as Executive Coordinator of the Student Government. He cited a multifaceted viewpoint on the Student Government, "In working in the dorm as Hall President I see the problems individual dorms face, and in working with the Student Government I see the problems that confront the Student Body as a whole."

Tara Kenney is the president of Lyons Hall, and also holds a position on the Student Senate as a HPC representative.

The basic issue of the Murday-Kenney ticket is "a push for increased social space." Murday has twice researched, formulated and presented proposals to the Trustees concerning the need for a student center, and contributed to the nightclub-coffeehouse renovation effort for the second floor of LaFortune.

Murday and Kenney also advocate further work on the Student Senate that Paul Riehle has laid the groundwork for, as a viable representative body which must continue as an essential link in student communication.

Security is also heavily stressed in their campaign, through many viable campus plans ranging from increased lighting, and the placement of emergency telephones around campus, to the development of safety systems in each dormitory.

Don Murday, in conclusion, explained how his experience would facilitate his work with the Administration, "working with everyone in the Administration I have developed a mutual respect with the university officials. They know I am sincere in what I am doing, and they list ten to what I have to say. That is something that cannot happen overnight, but must be developed over years of working together."

President Reagan served notice yesterday that his response to the "very interesting" overtures of Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev could hinge upon the Kremlin's role in arming El Salvador insurgents. At the same time, the chief executive said the United States has "no intention" of entangling itself in a Vietnam-like conflict in El Salvador, even as Pentagon officials disclosed that more American military advisers may be sent there. Reagan, in his first public comment following Brezhnev's call Monday for a summit and new arms talks, declared that Moscow's alliance with Central American revolutionaries "would be one of the things that should be straightened out" before any such meetings are set. — AP

The nation's governors formally endorsed President Reagan's budget-cutting efforts yesterday, but declared they will "vigorously oppose" any attempt to force state and local governments to pick up the costs for programs like welfare and medical care for the poor. Closing the winter meeting of the National Governors Association, the state executives declared they "share the president's concern about the high inflation, high unemployment, and low productivity that afflict the nation's economy..." And "We share with the administration the belief that federal expenditures must be brought under control, and we are prepared to accept budget cuts," the resolution said. But the goal they don't share, the governors stressed, is Reagan's hope of eventually eliminating welfare — along with the tax sources to pay for it — from federal responsibility. "We will vigorously oppose any attempts to shift costs to state and local taxpayers," the resolution said. And the governors added they would oppose any element in the presidential program which imposed an "unfair and disproportionate burden on the poor." — AP

A New York state appeals court yesterday upheld the first jury verdict against a firm that manufactured DES, a drug linked to cancer in some women whose mothers took it during pregnancy. The decision could pave the way for hundreds of such lawsuits nationwide. The Appellate Division of state Supreme Court unanimously affirmed a Bronx jury's landmark verdict to award Joyce Bichler, 27, of San Francisco, damages totalling $500,000 in her suit against Eli Lilly & Co., brought to court as a representative of the drug industry. During a five-week trial in 1979, it was never proven the Indianapolis-based firm had made the pills Ms. Bichler's mother took during pregnancy and which Ms. Bichler said caused her to suffer cancer at age 18 and require a radical hysterectomy to remove her cancerous reproductive organs. The 1979 verdict found that all producers of DES or diethylstilbestrol, a synthetic hormone once used to prevent miscarriages — share responsibility for adequate drug testing. — AP

U.S. narcotics traffic is so large and violent that the FBI must take a bigger role in attacking it, an idea that J. Edgar Hoover resisted tooth and nail, according to FBI director William H. Webster. "The federal government has to take a hard look at its effectiveness in drug enforcement," Webster said in an interview on his third anniversary as FBI director. "Vast amounts of drugs are coming in from outside the country, overwhelming the resources of Customs and the Drug Enforcement Administration." Hoover, who ran the bureau from 1924 to 1972, continually beat back congressional efforts to thrust drug enforcement on his agents. With the Reagan administration committed to greater federal efforts to combat violent crime, Webster said, "When we attack the drug problem head on, it seems to me we are going to make a major dent in attacking violent crime." — AP

Prince Charles, heir to Britain's throne, will end his bachelorhood this summer, marrying "girl next door" Lady Diana Spencer — 12 years his junior and whose older sister was one of his girlfriends. The Buckingham Palace announcement of the couple's engagement was issued through the Press Association, Britain's domestic news agency, yesterday. It ended months of speculation that the discreet and demure 19-year-old kindergarten teacher — his 16th cousin once removed and herself of royal descent — had captured the 32 year-old prince's heart and would eventually become the Princess of Wales. The prince gave her a ring described by Buckingham Palace as an oval sapphire surrounded by 12 diamonds set in 18-karat gold. No precise date was set for the wedding, but the prince said it will probably be in "late July." — AP

Spectators filled the room and spilled into the Statehouse halls yesterday as the Senate Public Policy Committee began taking testimony on a bill that would abolish the state's Alcoholic Beverage Commission. Bill author Sen. John B. Augsburger, R-Syracuse, said "it's time to pull our heads out of the sand and revise Indiana's alcohol licensing laws, which are based on a 1935 post-prohibition statute. He is sponsoring a bill that would eliminate the ABC, abolish the current system of awarding permits and liquor licenses based on quotas and replace it with a free enterprise system. Augsburger said he wanted to eliminate the quota system that's now in effect because it doesn't fulfill the original intent of decreasing alcohol consumption, and the system has "caused opportunities for corruption." — AP

Jean Harris was convicted yesterday of murdering Scarsdale Diet author Dr. Herman Tarnower, her lover of 14 years who had jilted her for a younger woman. The charge carries a mandatory minimum sentence of 15 years to life in prison and a maximum of 25 years to life. Mrs. Harris sat at the defense table with her four attorneys and displayed no reaction as jury foreman Russell Von Glahn pronounced the word "guilty" three times for the murder charge and two weapons counts. But two defense lawyers burst into tears at the table and Mrs. Harris turned to one of them, Bonnie Steingart, and patted her knee consolingly. Judge Russell R. Leggett ordered Mrs. Harris immediately remanded to the Westchester County jail to await sentencing on March 20. — AP

A Spirited Gamble

Only in Domerland could a traditional campus activity — the Mardi Gras — provoke a legal dilemma, that dilemma being the question of what is paramount: the spirit of a law or the law itself? Allow me to explain.

As reported several months ago, the campus' Mardi Gras may have run its last course. The diocese, you see, plans to enforce a regulation prohibiting church-affiliated gambling. Apparently such an activity is not in accordance with Church doctrine. Unless granted some sort of dispensation, Mardi Gras then will become illegal.

The only reason that this year's festivities proceeded as planned must be credited to the diocese's Bishop McManus. The bishop realized that benefiting charities — already counting on Mardi Gras contributions — had budgeted with these contributions already in mind, according to one Mardi Gras official. "I would not be Christian to Indian-give funds promised.

Dismissing the Church for a moment, let us examine the Mardi Gras itself. Somehow the tentative abolition of the event confuses me. Though I am not a gambler, I can find only overwhelming reasons for advocating the annual tradition.

Here we have (or shall I say bad?) an event that fosters cooperation between Notre Dame and Saint Mary's. Saint Mary's, incidentally, possesses an abominably high dropout rate, according to some of their student government officials. These students attribute a large portion of the attrition to unmet social expectations. SMC women enroll with perhaps the illusion of vast amounts of contact between the College and the University. SMC women quickly learn they must hop on a shuttle and make an effort to get involved across the street. Many must find such an arrangement quite inconvenient.

Mardi Gras, however, provided over a week's worth of reasons for hopping on the shuttle. Instead of "coming over" to eat Huddle cheeseburgers, watch movies or study on the library's second floor, Saint Mary's students were not just visitors last week. They played important roles in the Mardi Gras' production. One would then presume that Saint Mary's women appreciate Mardi Gras, for the activity encompasses both campuses.

From the perspective of this side of the street, Notre Dame has developed a nasty, notorious reputation for a lack of campus activities. Short of standing in the stadium's bleachers, one rarely gets a sense of "campus," per se. There is definitely carmarderie within the halls here, but how often do halls unite on large scale. I can count the events on one hand.

Mardi Gras, however, involves the entire campus, unifies halls, and grants everyone an opportunity to participate — be it by selling tickets, building booths or simply attending. The true beauty of the event,

Mary Fran Callahan

however, that offsets it from the few other campus-wide activities, lies in its fiscal facet.

Mardi Gras makes money, and all money made goes directly to needy local charities. We are not speaking of insignificant sums; we are dealing with double digits and thousands of dollars. The charities benefiting from the event do not rank among the "corporate" charities such as the Heart Fund and the Cancer Fund. Such money could be deemed petty cash by such "conglomerates." The Mardi Gras charities include such places as St. Marita's Primary Day School and Logan Center, to mention just two. These charities have no estates routinely bequeathed to them; these charities depend on Mardi Gras.

In short, both campuses are happy; the administration obviously supports Mardi Gras since officials allow it to be held in Stepan Center; some lucky winner takes home a new car; students win prizes for selling tickets and — of paramount importance — charities benefit.

This is why I am confused.

The Church is upholding a law — regardless. They are even, enforcing their anti-gambling regulation to the point of outlawing church bingo. What could be more harmless than groups of senior citizens or suburbanites engrossed in occasional games of bingo? Such an activity, however, constitutes gambling, according to the diocese.

The diocese appears to ignore the spirit of the law. For a body professing to be the legislator of the Church's doctrines, it is undermining its own objectives. Looking at rules and regulations from a words-on-paper perspective, the diocese is discounting the human perspective and the objective of benign bingo games and Mardi Gras. Perhaps it is naive to think that gambling in the case of Mardi Gras reflects a Christian principle since deserving have-nots benefit. An event produced for charity's sake surely does not prohibit Christian objectives.

Does the Church believe that the likes of bingo and Mardi Gras will send solid churchgoers to Las Vegas' casinos to gamble away all their earthly possessions, then proceed to lose their faith and alas, lead lives of decadent debauchery?

The Church needs to soften its stance slightly, for it appears to be gambling — with its own principles.

Murphy-Dziminski triumph in SMC election

Kathleen Murphy was elected president of the Saint Mary's Class of '84 yesterday, while Carol Dziminski was triumphant in the race for president of next year's junior class. The results of the runoff were announced by Margie Quinn, Saint Mary's elections commissioner.

Ms. Murphy, whose running mates were Elaine Hocter, vice-president; Denise Drake, secretary; and Maureen Hughes, treasurer; received 63 percent of the vote.

The remaining 1981-82 junior class officers are: Beth Bunker, vice-president; Catherine Burns, secretary; and Anne Clarke, treasurer.

"We're not here to make money or break even," he said. Last year's SU deficit was budgeted at $90,000 with the cash flow running at $200,000 to $300,000.

"We're not as interested in making a profit as in serving students," said Lawler. "The SU gets a large percentage — maybe 75 percent — from the student activity fee."

"It's a choice. You can plan to lose money or you can price things out of student's means," he said. "Students pay an activities fee so they're getting their money back."

Besides next year's plans for a centralized SU publicity office, Lawler would like to see more SU-sponsored concerts.

Though it is difficult to predict what dates are available in the future, Lawler said, the Michigan area is good for concerts because groups can be "block booked." Groups appearing at other area schools can be booked to include Notre Dame on their stops by this procedure.

Notre Dame joined the National Entertainment and Campus Activities Association this year to get assistance in scheduling concerts.

Lawler said he didn't envision cutting any activities next year because of expense. "The budget remains fairly steady, taking inflation into consideration," he said.

The new director takes office April 1 and is beginning to select his staff for next year. He encouraged students to apply for SU positions.

Outgoing director Coppola said, "I think Bill is very qualified — he is a good guy. He has proved himself as Contemporary Arts Commissioner. He has done a commendable job. I have no doubts as to his success next year."

Graveside roses

Class honors O'Hara

By SHEILA SHUNICK
News Staff

Eighteen years have passed since the first rose arrangement was placed in front of the tomb of Cardinal John O'Hara. Since that time, fresh roses have always been present at the Cardinal's burial site in Sacred Heart Church.

The Class of 1928 initiated the endowment fund which, through accumulated interest, has supplied the everpresent flowers.

O'Hara was Dean of the College of Commerce at the University of Notre Dame from 1920 to 1924. As Prefect of Religion from 1920 to 1933, O'Hara set the pattern for religious life at Notre Dame, and was known for his abilities as a confessor.

In 1933, he became vice-president of the University and served as president from 1934 to 1939. On Jan. 12, 1940, he was consecrated Bishop at Sacred Heart Church for the Military Ordinariate. On May 8, 1945, he became Bishop of Buffalo, and on Jan. 9, 1951, he was installed as Archbishop of Philadelphia.

In 1958, Bishop O'Hara was made a Cardinal by Pope John XXIII.

Cardinal John O'Hara died on August 18, 1960, yet is continually remembered in roses.

Conversation with Gil Scott-Heron

Anthony Walton

Gil Scott-Heron is in many respects a Renaissance man. He's a noted novelist, poet, musician and general social critic. He has written three novels and a book of poems, recorded 13 albums and has had several hit singles, among them "The Bottle," "Johannesburg," and "Angel Dust."

He is a graduate of Lincoln University and received his masters in English from Johns Hopkins. He has taught at the University of the District of Columbia. Scott-Heron and his group, the Midnight Band, have appeared on Saturday Night Live and recently finished a tour with Stevie Wonder.

During his recent visit here, I had the privilege of talking with him at length. His thoughts on subjects ranging from America's future to black literature appear below.

Q: You've done a number of different things artistically, written several novels, a lot of poetry, and have recorded 13 albums. In view of all this, what do you perceive as your role in the community?

A: I'm a blues-ologist. Everything I do comes out of that, falls rather comfortably under that category. Art as a rule, or at least artists, according to Paul Robeson, have a responsibility to either help liberate their community or to further oppress it. Being an exponent of the former, I try to do things in an artistic fashion that I think will help inform or educate the community. A very good example of what I'm talking about is a letter I received from a 10 year-old girl telling me that some people at school tried to get her to try angel dust, but because she had heard our song about it, she knew it was bad and didn't do it. That's what it's all about.

Q: Was there any one event, or any kind of artistic catharsis that made you know that this was what you wanted to do?

A: I'm not really an advocate of the instant anything. I believe that my life and the experiences I had in Tennessee when I was growing up living with my grandmother, who was a radical before anybody knew what radical meant. She taught me to believe that if you didn't stand for something you'd go for anything, and she had me involved with things, and influenced by them. The first time I became aware of the NAACP was in 1958, and in January 1961 I became one of the first three black children to attend school with white kids in a previously all white junior high school called Tigris in Jackson, Tennessee. I mention that because in terms of something political, or socially political, I had not done anything before. I was twelve at the time, and a lot of the things that politicized me came about at that time. From as far back as I can remember there were signs that said white on one side and colored on the other, or Negro here and white over here. And from the very way that the town was set up, there was literally another side of the tracks that most black people lived on the other side of, all those sort of things that keep all but a fool from knowing that there were certain standards and a certain dichotomy that my life consisted of. More than anything else there was the fact that life made me recognize that there were certain obvious differences that had to be dealt with as long as people were uncomfortable about them. And the people who were on the wrong side, in terms of the tracks, knew that there was something wrong with it. So then you either get down on it or you get away from it, so our attempt has been to change those kinds of things as subtly or as directly, but as quickly as possible.

Q: What writers and musicians influenced you the most in artistic terms? I've heard you mention people like Langston Hughes and Jean Toomer. Who were some others?

A: Well, all of them did, for the most part. You see my master's degree comes from the writing seminars at Johns Hopkins and I've been interested in writing for as long as I can remember. There's a literary history of black people writing in America that goes back to 1789 when the first volume of black poetry was published in this country. I think that just about everybody I read had some influence one way or the other. Martin Delaney, the father of black nationalism, David Walker, as well as the poets who came through the Renaissance period, Countee Cullen, Claude McKay, Jean Toomer. I don't believe that there are any black writers or thinkers whose thoughts that I have read whose ideas do not fit into the time that they were writing and the history that we now accept as being a part of that chain that links all the way back to when the first slaves came over here to where we are now. There is an almost inescapable pattern that relates to the progress that the people made, not only in terms of their thinking, but in terms of their potential to grasp and transfer ideas that concern their situation in this society. I believe that anybody who writes or creates something artistically, either musically or literarily, in whatever respect, all of them inherit the legacy of those who did it before them in this country. With that in mind, there's a tremendous amount of influence and inspiration available for people who are concerned about how we are developed in this country. Musically, it depends on what instrument I'm into at the time. If it's the bass, I might want to hear some Buster Williams or some Richard Davis. Sometimes it's the keyboards. I like to hear Alice Coltrane, some McCoy Tyner, some Cecil Taylor. Sometimes it's the sax and I'll listen to Pharoah Saunders, John Coltrane, and Archie Shepp. All those people have at times provided the background music for whatever was happening with my life and have given me the sort of atmosphere that allowed me to be my most creative.

Q: How did you get involved with MUSE (Musicians United for Safe Energy, promoters of the No Nukes album and film.) and how do you think that turned out?

A: Well, they called me up, and hopefully it didn't turn out yet. I'm pretty pleased with how it's developing. I suppose from the "South Carolina" tune and from the tune on Detroit they figured that they would invite us so that they would have somebody on the show that would actually know what they were talking about. Robert Christgau of the Village Voice started off his review talking about how, at least to his knowledge, we had produced more tunes about nuclear power and the dangers of nuclear power than the rest of MUSE put together. So in spite of the fact that the public in general seems to feel that John Hall or Pete Seeger are the only people in America ever concerned about nuclear power, we beg to differ and can document our differences. Since 1974, when I first heard of the waste depository down in Barnwell, South Carolina, aside from the proliferation of nuclear power plants which started ten or twelve years before that, there has been a need for people to say something, to have some sort of opinion about nuclear power. The only things that Americans can deal with are crises, so even if they see something coming that ain't correct, they'll wait until it's a crisis so they can really have a nervous breakdown about it. (laughs) Personally I never like to let things get so bad that there's nothing you can do about it but complain and criticize. I would rather start commenting on it the moment that I see it going wrong, so that at least for as long as it takes from that point on, I am able to make comments and try to influence people in some other direction.

Anthony Walton's column, Outside Wednesday, will continue on Friday's editorials page, when Gil Scott-Heron will answer questions on Reagan, racism and nuclear weapons.

Bengal Bouts return Sunday

The 51st edition of the Notre Dame Bengal Bouts will commence Sunday afternoon in the Athletic and Convocation Center at 1:30 with quarterfinal action. Under the direction of first-year bout director Dr. Richard Hunter, the Bengals program heads into its second half-century hoping to continue the fund-raising and boxing traditions carried out by bout director emeritus Dominick 'Nappy' Napolitano for the last 50 years.

All proceeds from ticket sales will go to the Holy Cross Missions of Bangladesh. Student season ticket packages for Sunday's card, Wednesday's (March 4) semifinals and next Saturday's (March 7) are available at the ACC for $2. Individual tickets for the quarterfinal and semifinal rounds are priced at $2 for ringside and $1.50 for general admission (lower arena).

Tickets for the finals, which will be aired for the third consecutive year by NBC's SportsWorld, are listed at $3 for ringside seating and $2 for general admission stubs.

McManus helps turn corner

DONNA WITZLEBEN
Sports Writer

"If you don't push yourself, the team won't improve. You have to push yourself in order to improve," said Tricia McManus, a veteran forward for Notre Dame's women's basketball team.

McManus, a 5-11 junior from Oak Ridge, Tenn., has been on the team since her freshman year. She averaged seven points a game as a rookie and nine points per game her sophomore year. This season, along with the second highest minutes played total for the Irish, McManus is averaging seven points a game. She also gets her share of rebounds with six per outing.

McManus has seen the women's basketball program take a big leap into Division I play. The team now holds a 9-13 record. "There are a lot of obvious changes schedule-wise," she said. "Our schedule is tougher and our coaches are better. It is a real switch because your attitude has to change. The pressure is on — not so much the pressure to win, but there is pressure in practice and you have to take a very positive attitude towards it. Sometimes it is hard because we work things out in practice and then in the game it just doesn't click."

Notre Dame Head Coach Mary DiStanislao speaks very highly of her veteran forward. "Tricia is quite a leader and she always gives a good effort. She is quite deceptive in that she appears laid back, but she is really our most consistently aggressive player. She is a terrific kid."

McManus reciprocates her coach's feelings. "Coach DiStanislao is a really good coach. She knows basketball inside and out. I've learned a tremendous amount this year from her. I have a lot of respect for her."

The team has two games left this season and then it is on to the Division I tournament. Whatever the outcome, you can be sure that Tricia McManus will be back next year, bringing her leadership and talent to help build a strong foundation for a rapidly improving women's basketball program at Notre Dame.

"You know, it's really funny," he says, "because this is similar to the way my high school career went. I didn't really play too much my freshman year, and my sophomore year was just mediocre. I didn't really peak until my junior and senior years. Things are going the same way here, so I guess I'm not too upset."

Varner may not be too upset now, but last spring, he was upset enough to contemplate a transfer.

"Yeah, I was thinking about it," says the New Kensington, Pa., native. "It's so hard to come to a school after playing so much in high school, and then not play at all. Like last year, I think Villanova was the first game I didn't play. I was so mad, I felt like crying. I think I got dressed before the kids even got back to wait for autographs."

"After something like that happens, you start thinking of all the schools you could be playing at, and scoring all these points. I think my parents wanted me to transfer. My mom was really mad that I wasn't playing more, and that's unusual because she normally doesn't get very upset. But neither one of (my parents) ever said anything. I stayed because the way I look at it is, once you make a decision, you have an obligation to stick to it and make it work. So I figured I'd stick it out."

"I guess it has just taken me a while to adjust to his type of play," Varner says. "You look at a guy like John (Paxson) — he was able to come in and adjust right away — but it has just taken me a little longer. I'm starting to get a lot more confident and comfortable on the floor, though."

One of the persons who has helped, and is helping Varner through any rough times, is senior tri-captain Orlando Woolridge.

"O is a very unusual person," says Varner chuckling. "He's pretty crazy. But he's been a big brother-type person to me. In fact, he was the main reason I came here, him and Dave Waymer. When I visited here, they showed that they were really interested in me, not like some of the other schools I looked at, where they didn't really care if I went there or not. All the players here seemed like they really wanted me to come."

Bill Varner is very quiet when he talks, almost to the point of shyness. This shyness lends itself to a belief that he is a very sincere person. One has no trouble believing him when he says: "I like signing autographs; I think it's fun. If there were a hundred people waiting for autographs after a game, I'd stay until the last one was signed. When you see a little kid standing there, with these big eyes, there's nothing you can do — you gotta sign it. If you don't, it might break his heart."

Varner has a dream of playing in the NBA, a dream he has entertained since he was very young. He also says, "It would be nice to be a lawyer." Either way, his goal is to make a lot of money.

"I've always had this dream," he says. "I always wanted to be rich and make all this money, because this dream I have is to walk through a poor neighborhood just throwing money out to all the little kids. That would be kind of neat."

Bill Varner, humanitarian? Yeah, maybe.

Bill Varner, upset college athlete? Yeah, maybe.

Bill Varner, sincere nice-guy, soon-to-be college superstar? Yeah, probably.

ATTENTION: PRE-MED STUDENTS

How will you finance your medical education? Tuition costs at medical colleges throughout the country are increasing at an alarming rate. Student loans and grants are often inadequate to cover even minimum expenses associated with a four-year medical curriculum.

The Army Health Professions Scholarship Program may be the solution to your problem. We will pay the full cost of medical school tuition and required expenses for books, supplies and equipment. Furthermore, you will receive a monthly stipend of $485, which is scheduled to be increased in July, 1981. In return, you agree to a promise for future service as a Military Medical Officer. Graduate senior medical students apply for Army Graduate Medical Education... you will be surprised at the quality of our training programs, the desirable locations of our Medical Centers and the salaries of our residents.

The Army Health Professions Scholarship Program currently provides financial support for more than 1400 medical students... we hope that we can help you also. Call for details.

Junior forward Tricia McManus has been a stabilizing force for the Notre Dame women's basketball team in its transition to Division I play. (See related story on page 6)

So Wilcox has resigned himself, or, better yet, dedicated himself to education at Notre Dame. He has maintained a 3.0 average in economics since a grade scare at mid-semester in October of his freshman year and set a course for his future away from the basketball court.

"Knowledge is the most important thing going in the world," says Wilcox. "My goal throughout life is to be able to assume as much knowledge as I possibly can. I like economics because it deals with problems that are going on right now and problems that are going to become much worse in the future. I'd like to combine my knowledge of economics with a situation dealing with poverty people — people that really don't get the chance to assume knowledge and have to turn to other people. I'd like to bring them some enlightenment as far as knowing their environment."

While some athletes find life without games a suffocating experience, Wilcox seems to have come to an early realization that he doesn't want to spend the rest of his days in mourning, choking on memories. He refuses to attack Digger, as well.

"There's no hate or clash involved between us," says Silky. "It's just that he's not letting any ballplayer that comes through here change his personality and I'm not letting a coach or anybody change my personality. We both have a lot of respect for each other as a person.

"I feel I've got a direction in life and I'm going to live that life the way I want to," he says. "It's going to take a while for people back home to understand Stan Wilcox as he is now. That's kind of sad because basketball is only a minute part of me, a minute part of life. Basketball didn't blossom the way I wanted it to, but I've learned much more here than I ever expected."

Wilcox sees two or three years of European ball or semi-pro ball in his immediate future, only because he feels there's still some basketball left in his system. From there, however, graduate work and employment in a service-related field in New York is the plan.

"New York is still the biggest, best city in the world," says Silky. With a gesture to an east window of The Huddle, he adds, "Everything comes from that-a-way. Besides, that's where my roots are, that's where my family is and that's where (my wife) Linda's family is. That's where I'd like to be."

Like Stan says, once the people back home get to know him as he is now — four years older and so much wiser — they'll find the real games aren't measured in playing time.

Stan Wilcox sure isn't.

Varner fills sub role patiently

By MARK HANNUKSELA
Sports Writer

The Notre Dame media guide says of Bill Varner "... rates as complete ballplayer who combines quickness and shooting ability on court ... averaged better than 27 points, 15 rebounds and five assists per game as a senior ..."

The current Notre Dame Sports Information release says of Bill Varner "... averaging better than five points, two rebounds, one assist and eighteen minutes playing time per game ..."

Bill Varner has been a key sub for Notre Dame all season long and is anxiously awaiting his chance to start in 1981-82.

Now no one ever said the adjustment to big time college basketball was going to be easy. It never is at a place like Notre Dame, where everything high school players come in and have to re-adjust to a new system. But no one ever said it couldn't be done either.

"Everyone here has had the same problem," says Varner. "You see a guy like Barry Spencer going through the same thing right now that I did last year. It's just so hard, you know."

Irish coach Digger Phelps has said that recruiting here is basically done on a two-year plan. The plan goes something like this: Recruits come in and get enough playing time so that when they're sophomores, they're ready to contribute.

Bill Varner is now a sophomore, and while he isn't contributing as much as he'd like, he's definitely contributing.

"Bill Varner made the play of the game," says his coach of Varner's steal in the waning moments of Sunday's game against Virginia. "Everybody talks about the last ten seconds, but there would not have been a last ten seconds if it weren't for Billy's steal. He's got a role on this team, and he's playing well in that role. He's becoming a very good player."

Varner has had other moments when his contributions to this Irish team have been significant. Five times this season, Varner has scored in double figures, including a career high of 12 against Fordham.

In the second Irish meeting with San Francisco, Varner got the first start of his Notre Dame career and scored six points, grabbed five rebounds, and dished out a team high 10 assists in 38 minutes of action. Varner also started last Monday's near disaster with Fairfield, and scored seven points in 36 minutes.

That's the kind of playing time Bill Varner got used to in high school, and that's the kind of playing time he would like to see in college. But he's not too worried. He's seen it all before.

Wilcox finds new direction

"...Playing time is not what Stan Wilcox is about."
Tracy Jackson

The capacity crowd in North Babylon High School's under-sized gymnasium was an overwhelming backdrop for the final home appearance of New York State's soon-to-be Class AAA champions. Indiana Head Coach Bobby Knight and assorted cohorts from the ranks of NCAA basketball institutions provided the celebrity atmosphere Long Islanders had come to expect whenever North Babylon took the court.

Of course, there was one player who had Knight and the rest of the recruiting hounds drooling — namely Stan Wilcox.

The kid they call 'Silky' was, according to the Hoosier leader, the best high school guard in the class of '77. Wilcox didn't disappoint Knight, either. Silky played his customary, complete game that evening — fast-breaking, wheeling, dealing, scoring and robbing the opposing backcourt blind — and every move made was smooth as... Well, you know.

But Indiana was not the place for Wilcox. Nor Syracuse, nor Rutgers — the other universities in Wilcox' final four.

No, Silky wanted to play ball at Notre Dame. And all kinds of folks back in New York still wonder what ever happened to Stan Wilcox and where he went wrong. Not only friends, but family members have expressed disappointment with Stan's situation at Notre Dame.

"I feel bad that I have a lot of friends back home," Wilcox reflects, "who have been close to me but don't understand me now because they haven't been with me these last four years."

"When I left North Babylon to come to Notre Dame," he continues, "everybody saw me as Stan Wilcox the basketball player. And that's all they're seeing when I come back home, that's all they relate to."

What 'they' see is Stan Wilcox sitting on the Notre Dame bench. Rarely, in this, his senior year, has Silky been called on by Irish coach Digger Phelps at a moment when the outcome is still on the line. With the addition of seven recruits to the Notre Dame squad in the last two years — including a backcourt genius named John Paxson — Wilcox has seen his own role drop from sixth man to something more like ninth man. That's a drop in playing time of about ten minutes.

"I spent the first couple years here getting used to the program, getting used to Digger and seeing if I could come into a role where I would start for him," recalls

Assistant Sports Editor

Wilcox. "Sophomore year was when Digger had promised me my chance to start. I really thought it was a little too soon because the style of player I am and the style of play Digger runs are almost like two opposites. I found a lot of difficulty in making that transition from the free-wheeling, open-court type player I was in high school to a more regulated game (from the coaching standpoint) where Digger's making all the decisions and calling all the plays."

Wilcox, like any player, went through some depressing times when he began to see the playing time fade away. He never became another Ray Martin — the Irish point guard of the mid-seventies. He never got to show that Nevada-Las Vegas style of play Sports Illustrated once called his forte. No, Wilcox just brought himself to an understanding with Phelps about returning to a fill-in role once it became apparent players like Bill Hanzlik were developing from Notre Dame guards into first round NBA draft choices. But Silky didn't seriously consider leaving school.

"I didn't want to transfer because I was happy here," he says. "My main purpose here was getting a degree that really meant something. Basketball here was like a lot of things in life — losing a girlfriend or something like that. I've just learned through the experience and tried to broaden myself as a human being. I think I've grown and matured because I know for a fact, basketball isn't everything."

On the court, there have been special moments for Wilcox. The 6-3 guard was instrumental in two wins over UCLA. Two free throws at Pauley Pavilion in 1979 clinched an 81-78 Irish win and eight points last season against the Bruins in the ACC contributed to Notre Dame's 77-74 victory. Wilcox filled in as a starter for six games at the beginning of last season when Hanzlik sustained a hand injury.

But the highlights have been as infrequent as Wilcox court appearances in 1980-81, considering the potential he once demonstrated to all the experts.

BOOK OF THE MONTH CLUB? — A special press conference has been scheduled for Friday morning at 10 a.m. at the Morris Inn to announce the release of Digger Phelps' second book, entitled Digger Phelps and Irish Basketball. The book, co-authored by Notre Dame graduate and ex-WNDU-TV reporter Pat 'Chip' Scanlon, should be available for purchase at the bookstore on Friday afternoon.

Should you wish to have the book signed, Phelps will attend an autograph party at the bookstore on Saturday morning from 10 a.m. to 11 a.m.

GUNNING FOR THE FLYERS — Saturday afternoon's matchup with the always-high Dayton Flyers, scheduled for a 1:30 p.m. start, marks the 17th meeting between the two schools. The Irish own a 10-6 edge in the all-time series, the first installment of which was contested in 1909. The series has been renewed annually since 1970, with the Irish winning seven of the last 11 meetings including a 62-54 decision last season.

Dayton always plays intensely against the Irish, and many seniors still remember the 66-59 setback the Flyers handed the Irish at the end of the 1977-78 season, throwing a damper on Notre Dame's upset of defending national champion Marquette only one week before.

YES, VIRGINIA, THE SHOT DID COUNT — Many upperclassmen may also recall the 1979 Dayton game, in which then-sophomore Orlando Woolridge established himself in dunk-dom with his first 360 degree, behind-the-back, over-the-head (from the pike position) stuff. Woolridge, the most recent addition to the long and crowded line of Irish heroes, earned NBC Sports' most valuable player honors for his last second shot on Sunday afternoon.

The Mansfield, Louisiana native has scored in double figures in 37 straight games and boasts a .665 (131-197) field goal percentage for the season, good for third place in NCAA rankings. Woolridge could very well shatter Bruce Flowers' single season field goal efficiency record of .656 (107-163) set during the 1978-79 campaign.

LOST HORIZON — The Rosemont Horizon is without doubt one of the most poorly equipped and uncomfortable sports arenas the Irish have played in all season. Evidence of this ranges from the inadequate parking facilities and lack of public rest rooms, to the reformatory-like decor (inside and outside) and scant leg-room. Even the locker rooms were a level above the court so that players had to go up and down steps in order to get back and forth. All this was further complicated last Sunday by a cold rain which converted several unpaved parking lots into quagmires. Chicago should have smartened up and built an efficient public arena without the corner-cutting which characterizes the Horizon.

HOMEWARD BOUND — Before the Irish face Dayton on Saturday, they will entertain the Red Flash of St. Francis on Thursday evening at the ACC. The Irish own a smudgeless 6-0 slate against St. Francis, and enjoyed a relatively easy 96-43 victory during their last meeting over Christmas break in 1979.

Notre Dame boasts an impressive 14-1 record in the ACC this season, and an overall mark of 162-28 (.853 winning percentage) since the facility opened in 1968. Over the last nine seasons, Phelps-coached Irish squads have suffered only 10 defeats in 121 home games.

I DIDN'T KNOW IT WAS LOADED — The Irish have been shooting the lights (or at least the backboards) out of most every place they have played this season. Their .559 team field goal percentage stood second to Oregon State's .575 clip last week, but their .510 (25-49) effort against Virginia pulled that average down to its present .557 percent level.

The Irish sharpshooters have hit better than 50 percent of their floor shots in all but two games this year and have topped the 60 percent plateau eight times. In fact, the school standard of 53 percent set during the 1973-74 season is in jeopardy.

BORN TO RUN — Senior All-American Chuck Aragon may eclipse the magic four minute barrier in the mile this weekend. He ran a 4:00.24 anchor leg for the Irish distance medley team at the Central Collegiate Championships over the weekend, and competition at the prestigious Illini classic in Champaign, Ill. could be all the incentive Aragon needs.

Not only did the distance medley team of Jacques Eady, Rick Rogers, Tim Macauley and Aragon qualify for the NCAA Indoor Championships, but they did so running for the first time together in 1981. Aragon has thus qualified for the NCAA Indoor Championships in the mile and half mile along with the distance medley team. Teammate Steve Dziabis only fell 1.2 seconds shy of the NCAA qualifying standard for the 600-yard run and could make the 1:10.2 time at Champaign as well.

WHAT YOU DON'T KNOW WON'T HURT YOU — One of the best kept secrets around Notre Dame is that Irish women's coach Mary DiStanaslao has been searching for her 100th career coaching victory for the past two weeks.

In fact, it was such a secret that DiStanaslao did not even know about it.

When Mary D. arrived here last spring, her career totals from Northwestern incorrectly listed her as 89-27, when in fact she was 90-27. Thus, since the Irish upended St. Ambrose on February 7 to even their record at 9-9, DiStanaslao has been reaching for the century mark.

The only problem is that four losses have come between Mary D. and number 100.
