Reagan ends meeting with King Hussein

Reagan, concerned about Jordan's interest in buying Soviet arms, concluded two days of talks with King Hussein on yesterday saying the Middle East kingdom's security "is a mtter of historic and enduring concern to the United States."

Publicly, the two leaders glossed over their differnces on methods of pursuing peace in the region, and addressed merely their common goal of attaining Middle East peace.

As Hussein's limousine pulled away; Reagan was asked whether the king persuaded him to support a Saudi Arabian peace plan. "No," Reagan replied. "We just found we agreed on many things.'

By the same token, there was no indication Hussein had been convinced to change course and support the Camp David accords, which the United States insists is the basis for pursuing peace.

Hussein said Monday the Saudi proposal was "worthy of consideration.'

Standing with Hussein outside the Oval Office, Reagan said, "The security and well being of the Hashemite kingdom of Jordan is a matter of historic and enduring concern to the United States.

"We agree that reinforcing this WASHINGTON (AP) - President friendship is a primary goal and discussed how our relations can be strengthened," Reagan declared. He did not elaborate.

> For his part, Hussein, who has conferred with six other U.S. presidents, said, "This particular meeting at this particular time in comparison with all my previous visits to Washington has left me more reassured than any in the past and more confident of the future." He did not spell out the reason for his optimism.

> Hussein leaves Washington Thursday after meetings with congressional leaders and Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. Hussein will make what aides say is a major address Friday in Los Angeles.

> Before leaving the United States on Nov. 12, the king will stop at Fort Bliss, Texas, to view a display of military firepower, including improved Hawk ground-to-air missiles.

> senior American official Α knowledgeable about Hussein's talks with Reagan said the king wants to buy Soviet air defense weapons of a kind unavailable to him from the U.S. arsenal. He gave no details.

> Administration officials had hoped in this visit to convince Hussein of relying on the United States as its sole supplier of weapons.

'Absolute protection' Vault stores vital documents

By DAVID EINSTEIN Associated Press Writer

SANTA CRUZ, Calif. (AP) - The Western States Underground Storage Vaults company advertises "absolute protection" for vital documents.

They aren't kidding.

Their vault, in an old railroad tunnel in the Santa Cruz mountains 70 miles south of San Francisco, originally was billed as able to survive a nuclear holocaust.

Today, depositors ranging from IBM to Walt Disney, from the Rolling Stones to the Defense Department, keep records there to insure their survival in an increasingly perilous world.

"With malcontents and revolutionaries blowing up banks and casinos, people have a need to protect their records," said Western States president Dan Tinney.

Opened in 1954 under the name Western States Atomic Storage Vaults, the vault was an answer to the fears of the Cold War. As those fears subsided the name was changed -- "The word 'atomic' scared everybody to death," Tinney said - but Western States' directors still point to the "vulnerability of Western cities."

"Although the United States has been spared the menace of enemy aggression thus far, the threat grows with each passing year," says a brochure. "Western cities are regarded as inescapably primary target areas for atom bomb-laden enemy planes supported by a submarine fleet having guided missiles. In contrast, top echelons of Civil Defense do not regard isolated mountain areas as targets." Whether thanks go to the Soviets, terrorists or just fear of an earthquake, business at the vault has grown steadily - up between eight percent and ten percent each year. Tinney said. Today, two-thirds of the 300.000 cubic feet in the vault is filled, mostly with microfilm. In addition to the papers of leading corporations, records of universities, cities and 46 of California's 58 counties are stored in the 246foot-long tunnel, kept at a constant 63 degrees and 46 percent humidity. "We have 16mm and 35mm microfilm records dating back to the 19th century down there," said Warren Slocum, assistant recorder for San Mateo County. "In the event of a natural disaster, a bank realy wouldn't be the most secure place to store these.

crete walls and is very secure. If there was a disaster, we could recreate the records of our office."

The most secure areas of the vault are those used to store classified Pentagon documents.

"The Defense Department has their own strong safes they bring in there," Tinney said. "Nobody gets in there."

There are at least half a dozen other vaults in the country, Tinney said. In fact, Western States was patterned after the Iron Mountain vault in New York. But that, like other East Coast vaults, is in an abandoned salt mine, not a railroad tunnel covered by a mountain.

In addition to the obvious security of a three-ton steel door, four guards and a burglar alarm system hooked into the local sheriff's office, the vault offers economic advantages, Tinney said.

"Companies don't have to pay insurance on their property, which would be high," he explained. "They

GOP thinks about new taxes decisions, although sources said the chairman, Sen. Pete Domenici, R-N.M., outlined a proposal designed to balance the budget in 1984. Proposals circulating among Senate Republicans for several weeks have called for multibilliondollar cuts in benefit programs and a three-year tax increase of at least $50 billion.

Baker's discussion of a "national defense fund" appeared to be a recommendation that Congress consider establishing a way of earmarking money for defense like the one used for Social Security.

An agreement guaranteeing at least 15 internships for Notre Dame and Saint Mary's students has been reached between television station WNIT and the Department of Communication and Theatre.

WNIT is the Michiana area's PBS affiliate at Channel 34. The station is located in Elkhart, approximately 20 minutes driving distance from the Notre Dame/Saint Mary's campus.

The internships will carry a weight of three credit hours toward a major in the Department of Communication and Theatre. Students must, however, devote eight hours each week to their intern work at the station during the course of the semester. Hours have not been fixed, but can be negotiated with the station ownership.

First priority for the internships will go to declared majors in the Communication and Mitchell Lifton, department chairman, noted that the internships will place students in a variety of areas of television station operations. Some of the openings include positions in traffic, programming, planning and development, community affairs, and in television production.

"This arrangement will provide students with a really significant opportunity to participate in the work of an operating television station," explained Lifton. "And hopefully, it will not be a one shot affair. In other words, we plan to offer such a program each sememster in the future."

The application process has not yet been finalized, but will begin soon, according to Lifton. More details about the program and the upcoming application process are available from the Notre Dame/Saint Mary's Department of Communication and Theatre.

payroll tax, not the income, estate and other levies which provide money for defense, social programs and most other government services.

Sources said there were several ideas under discussion to provide money for such a Pentagon account. Without mentioning the "defense fund." Baker himself said on Monday that Congress should expedite the removal of price controls on natural gas and pass a "windfall profits" tax at the same time.

White House spokesman David R. Gergen said President Reagan remains opposed to a "windfall profits" tax on natural gas and has not actively considered a national sales tax to finance defense spending.

Addressing the difficulty of providing funds for both defense and social programs, Baker said, "I am searching for a way to get them out of competition with each other."

And while he flatly rejected a proposed national sales tax, an idea don't have to hire extra security guards to protect it. And we also perform a great deal of clerical work that saves them many hours."

Tinney, an 84-year-o t ld retired railroad man, says the tunnel was not the first choice for the vault when he and several others began looking in 1950.

"Our first thought was to start the vault near Carson City, Nev., in some old gold mines, but they weren't suitable," he said.

"Then we planned to build in San Francisco, but we found out the cost of excavation alone would be $8 million to $10 million."

Another idea involved using abandoned Yosemite Valley Railroad tunnels in a scheme combining vault storage with mushroom growing.

Finally, Tinney and his associates found a tunnel that until 1940 had been used by the "Suntan Special," a train that ran between Los Gatos and Santa Cruz. They got it for a fraction

A 35-year-old Indianapolis man was arrested Tuesday on preliminary charges of criminal confinement with a deadly weapon after police received a report that two women were chained to a bed in a house. Charles Webster, 35, was being held in the city jail pending a court appearance Wednesday. Lt. Jerry Barker, a police department spokesman, said officers received a call about 7:30 a.m. from a man who had been in the house. He reported that Joani Blair, 29, owner of the home, and Rose Thurman, 21, were being held against their will. According to Barker, Webster, a former Martinsville resident, had lived in the house six to eight months, but Miss Blair told Webster to move out last week. He refused, and Miss Blair was handcuffed and Webster allegedly chained her to a bed during the past week, keeping her a virtual prisoner, according to Barker. She told police Webster had freed her for short periods. AP

Two men have been charged in Pawtucket,

R.I. with taking part in a scheme to withdraw money from a dead man's account, officials say. Police said James Picchi, 30, of Lincoln, and Lloyd May, 30, of Pawtucket, were arrested Friday. Picchi was charged with uttering and publishing as true a withdrawal slip for $2,650 and May was charged with conspiracy, police said. According to police, a man identifying himself as Kevin I. Walsh produced a passbook Oct. 22 and withdrew $2,650 from Walsh's savings account in the form of a cashier's check payable to James Picchi. A teller who learned of the transaction reported that Walsh's obituary, which said he had died five days earlier, had been in the morning newspaper. Lt. Milton J. King said police were waiting for results of Walsh's autopsy and were investigating his death. -AP

The California Supreme Court is reviewing the case of a teacher who contends he should be given probation rather than a prison term for a sex offense. Billy Joe Lock, of San Bernardino, argues that a judge meted out a sentence based solely on the violation and the fact he was a teacher. Lock was sentenced last year after he pleaded guilty to one count of lewd and lascivious acts upon a child under 14. Superior Court Judge Clifton Allen found Lock to be a mentally disordered sex offender and sentenced him to five years. The Court of Appeal affirmed the decision, saying the the defendant "was a teacher who took advantage of handicapped children in his special education class." -AP

A Detroit attorney is suing the Federal Aviation Administration alleging that the dismissal of striking air traffic controllers has caused a "dastardly deterioration" in air service. In the suit filed Monday in U.S. District Court, Leonard Jaques demanded the controllers be reinstated and the air traffic control system be restored to its level previous to Aug. 3, when the walkout began. The suit says Jaques' law firm operates two private airplanes to fly attorneys to 21 branch offices. Also named as defendants were the U.S. government, the Department of Transportation and its secretary, Drew Lewis and FAA administrator J. Lynn Helms. An FAA attorney in Washington said he had not seen the suit and could not comment on it. -- AP

Urbain Giaume, one of the major figures in the "French Connection" heroin smuggling network, has died of cancer in a prison hospital in Paris, French newspapers said yesterday. He was 68. Giaume was sentenced to 20 years in prison in July 1978 upon conviction of leading a ring that smuggled a ton of pure heroin into the United States between 1969 and 1974. The value of the heroin at that time was estimated at $4 million. He was released from prison last April because he was dying. But after a public outcry a court returned him to jail. Full-time OC director needed

When student representatives met with Trustees during semester break, Off-Campus commissioner Kathy Jurado proposed that the Administration appoint a full-time Off-Campus Housing Director, noting that the current director, Brother Edward Luther, already has a "full-time job" as rector of Morrissey Hall.

Jurado added that Bro. Luther is the only University representitive responsible for off-campus housing, and Bro. Luther agrees that he does not have the time and energy to put into all of the problems that come under the position of housing director.

"The decision to appoint a full-time director is entirely up to Fr. John Van Wolvlear(Vice-President for Student Activities)," he said. "I certainly encourage Van(Wolvlear) to appoint a full-time director, because I believe the need is there."

In addition to a full-time director, Jurado proposed that the Administration incease the staff of the offcampus housing office, which currently consists of Bro. Luther and a secretary.

Bro. Luther believes that a full-time director with student assistants could be very effective. "The office space we now have is adequate, but there is a need for full-time assistance," he said.

Another problem Jurado cited about the office is the inadequacy of the housing list. She claimed that often, listings appear that already have been leased, adding that when a unit is leased the off-campus office should be notified so that they can adjust the list.

There is no system for student or landlord to check back and tell the off-campus housing office that a unit on the list is rented, according to Bro. Luther. "There should be check-back. This is part of the problem. I don't have time to do check-back," he added.

Bro. Luther noted that the off-campus housing office started before 1956, when only students who were 21 years or older could have apartments. "We are beginning to get a little more organized," he said.

Currently 2385 students live off-campus(300 less than last year) at a monthly cost of $85-115 per person. Jurado believes that if off-campus life was made more attractive for students by organizing more neighborhood activities, upgrading the quality of available housing, etc., enough students would move off-campus to eliminate the possibility of a lottery.

"If realtors and landlords are encouraged to improve conditions, the crowding on-campus would be alleviated," Bro. Luther said. "The crime situation also has to be looked into. Police should be encouraged to take care of those areas in which students reside. At this point, apartment complexes and townhouse areas can be safer than, for example, the St. Louis Blvd. area homes.'

... Bro. Luther agrees that he does not have the time and energy to put into all the problems that come under the position of housing director.

If a substantially higher number of students moved off-campus, more on-campus housing would also be available for graduate students. This would benefit the 500 graduate students, primarily male, who are forced to seek housing off-campus each year, according to Graduate Student Union Representative Dennis Staffelbach

The Campus Life Council (CLC) Task Force recently presented a resolution to Fr. Van Wolvlear, proposing a full-time off-campus housing director.

Fr. Van Wolvlear said "we'll know in a couple of days" whether or not he will appoint a full-time director, adding that he is in the process of responding to the resolution the CLC presented. "I will offer no comment until Don Murday receives my reply," he noted. "They (student government) will get the answer first."

Considering the advantages, it seems a full-time offcampus housing director, complete with full-time staff and student assistants, would be a worthwhile investment for the University.

Laarman speaks on nuclear war

JOHN KISSELL News Staff

Last night, Ed Laarman, a PhD candidate in Theology at the University of Notre Dame spoke on the topic of "Nuclear War, Just War, and Christian Faithfullness", to about 60 people in Hayes-Healy Auditorium. Mr. Laarman compared various theories of nuclear deterrence withthe doctrine of the Just War. The lecture was sponsored by the Notre Dame/St. Mary's Pax Christi, as part of the observance of Nuclear Freeze Week.

Mr. Laarman's conclusion was that the possibility of nuclear war and the prelude to such a war - the arms race — can never be viewed as just because it failed to meet the criteria for a just war.

As it developed over many centuries, the doctrine of the Just War came to include these conditions, among others:

1. Just Cause - resulting from an attack, loss of property and/or life, and to punish those guilty of evil;

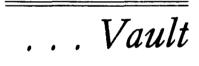

2. Discrimination - securing the immunity of non-combatants; 3. Proportion - the good effects outweighing the bad; and

4. "Win-ability" - that such a war could be won.

These criteria cannot be met because of the nature of nuclear deterrence, and also because of the possibilities of nulcar war. The official policy of deterrence -- Mutually Assured Destruction (MAD) - as affirmed by both of the super-powers in SALT I, is based on the ability to kill large portions of either population indiscriminately. Even when a policy of counter-force is employed. the strategy of aiming missles at military targets, the ability to contain such a war, let alone win it, are very questinable.

Mr. Laarman said that the position of nuclear pacifists, in affirming the Just War theory, must be in opposition to any use of nuclear weapons,

Molinelli comments on strip, second book

By ROBERT MAROVICH News Staff

"I've enjoyed doing 'Molarity," commented cartoonist Michael Molinelli after an autograph party celebrating the pubication of his second book, "Don't Make a Right." "I've enjoyed the opportunity to know that that little space in The Observer is going to be there and I have to fill it."

Molinelli, a graduate student in architecture, began sketching the strip his freshman year at Notre Dame. At that time, there were no comic strips in The Observer.

Molinelli presented the newspaper with a series of previously drawn strips, and "Molarity" was printed once a week. Later in the year, "Molarity" was published once a month. Molinelli said that the strip then was used only to fill space until night editor and managing editor Steve Alben initiated the daily publication of the strip in the spring of the cartoonist's freshman year.

"People were still looking over my shoulder; they weren't sure I could handle it," stated Molinelli, because Observer editors were "sensitive" about some of his material. "There were a few cartoons they felt were not in the best interest of the Notre Dame/Saint Mary's community and shouldn't be published." Molinelli noted that as he established "Molarity," readers began to trust him.

According to Weinberger U.S. must prepare for Soviets

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Soviet Union apparently thinks it could win a nuclear war with the United States, Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger said yesterday.

As a result, Weinberger told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, the United States must prepare for the possibility of being hit by more than a single nuclear strike.

Weinberger testified at a hearing on the Reagan administration's $180 billion, six-year strategic arms package, including the B-1 bomber and the MX missile.

He was asked by Sen. Claiborne Pell of Rhode Island, the senior Democrat on the committee, whether the Soviet Union or the United States regards a nuclear war as winnable.

"I have seen nothing that indicates the Soviet Union does not believe it could win," Weinberger said. "When you look at the arsenal they have amassed over more than 21 years, I have to conclude that that is the assumption which underlies all of their thinking."

As to the U.S. view of a nuclear war, Weinberger said, "We view it as something that we should make every effort to deter."

"We do think the Soviets by their actions have indicated they must think it is winnable," he added.

Sen. Joseph Biden, D-Del, asked Weinberger if he thought it was realistic to think of a nuclear war "that would involve strikes beyond several days."

"I don't know if it is realistic," he replied. "But if this situation is what we are faced with, you cannot hope to meet it or to deter attack unless you have the kind of capability that will enable you to respond."

"It appears that they (the Soviets)

WASHINGTON (AP) — The are at least planning on more than wiet Union apparently thinks it one strike," he said.

Weinberger said the administration's arms package will strengthen the U.S. position in strategic nuclear arms negotiations, which he said are expected to- get under way next spring.

He said the U.S. position would be "weakened very severely" if Congress rejected either the proposal for 100 B-1 bombers or the interim plan to base MX missiles in existing missile silos.

Gen. David Jones, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, told the committee that reinforcing the missile silos to withstand attack will cost "only a small part" of the estimated $5 billion to $7 billion cost of putting the MX missiles ito the silos.

Weinberger denied during the hearing a Washington Post story suggesting that the United States, working with Saudia Arabia witout the knowledge of the Senate, planned a massive network of command, naval and air defense facilities in the Persian gulf region.

"There is absolutely nothing to it whatsoever," he said. "It came out of whole cloth. Nothing was kept from the Senate. There is no secret treaty."

Weinberger said it was true that, in the event of a Soviet attack on the Persian Gulf oil fields, the United States would seek the use of additional bases in the area.

drawn "Molarity" was the strike against The Observer that he and a fellow illustrator, Pat Byrnes, initiated in April, 1981.

The strike, which lasted approximately one week, concerned the illustrators' complaints that they were being treated, as Byrnes put it, lower than "the lowest of journalistic castes."

The illustrators' demands included use of a cartoonist's lounge, use of the Observer van, a pension plan, and a masseur. Molinelli noted, however, that there were no hard feelings between The Observer and the illustrators. "But you must know that the whole thing was bogus." He added that he never saw the masseur and concluded that the masseur was in San Diego with Byrnes. Once Molinelli established "Molarity," Juniper Press, the only student-run publishing firm in the United States, approached him concerning the publication of strips he had run in his first two years at Notre Dame. Molinelli consented, and On the Road to Selling Out was published during his senior year.

The publication was not without a struggle, however. Said Molinelli: "I was told the title was somewhat depressing and would hinder the sale of the book. The book went into three printings, sold three thousand copies, and the bookstore ordered more copies from Juniper Press."

With the local success of On the Road to Selling Out, Molinelli was approached this year by Juniper Press with the plans to publish another book. "Don't Make a Right was easier to get through," Molinelli said. "Once I had proved myself with the first book, they were very willing to cooperate with me on my title and on my format. I didn't have to prove myself again."

"As far as 'Molarity' at Notre Dame, it will end as of this year. I want to recognize that it existed at a certain place in a certain time and leave it at that." Molinelli added that he had sent his work in a somewhat modified fashion to five syndicates, with no success, although he has not yet heard from one of the syndicates.

Molinelli concluded: "Molarity' just hit me as a word that applied to what I wanted and was obscure enough to take on a new meaning.

"Just like the titles of my books. however, they do have some meaning, but to explain them would be like explaining a joke."

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan signed legislation Tuesday that gives priority medical care to Vietnam veterans who have been exposed to Agent Orange or other defoliants.

"I expect this provision to be implemented in a manner that will not add to budgetary costs of Veterans' Administration medical care and treatment," Reagan said in a written statement.

The bill also gives priority hospital and outpatient care to other veterans who may have been exposed to iodizing radiation from nuclear testings after World War II and extends for two years the time in which Vietnam veterans may use G.I. Bill education benefits.

The president noted that the bill authorizes a small business loan program in the VA for disabled and Vietnam veterans.

FBI territory Reagan urged to restrict CIA

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Intelligence Committee urged the Reagan administration yesterday to scrap its proposal to let the CIA infiltrate and try to influence U.S. organizations.

After a one-hour closed meeting, Committee Chairman Barry M. Goldwater, R-Ariz., said the panel unanimously agreed to recommend that the administration retain the almost complete ban on CIA infiltration of U.S. groups imposed by then-President Carter in January 1978.

"The CIA is designed to do foreign intelligence, period," Vice Chairman Daniel P. Moynihan, D-N.Y., said after the meeting.

Goldwater and Moynihan also announced that the committee staff had completed gathering information in its investigation of CIA director William J. Casey and would write a report, which will be made public.

Goldwater said, "No basis has been found for concluding that Casey is unfit to serve as director of central intelligence." But Moynihan said, "The ultimate findings will await the conclusion of that report." They said they could not predict when that report would be finished.

CIA spokesman Dale Peterson had no comment on the committee action, but a Reagan official, who declined to be identified, said last week the administration was committed to studying any recommendations the panel makes even though Reagan has the authority to sign it on his own.

The committee has been reviewing a draft presidential order governing intelligence agencies which was prepared by the Reagan administration as a replacement for Carter's order.

The Reagan draft, a copy of which was obtained by The Associated Press, would have given the CIA authority, for the first time, to infiltrate and secretly try to influence the activity of domestic groups.

Infiltration could be authorized "for any lawful purpose" as determined by the CIA chief or his designee. Attempts to influence such groups could be undertaken if the attorney general found that constitutional rights would not be violated. Carter's order restricted both infiltration and influencing basically to the FBI, and required approval of the attorney general for both.

"... the CIA is designed to do foreign intelligence, period..."

Democratic congressmen had criticized the Reagan proposal as an intrusion on civil liberties. They said it was unnecessary in view of the FBI's existing authority and possibly would violate the National Security Act of 1947 which banned CIA domestic activity.

Asked about the panel's recommendations, Goldwater said, "The main thing was a deletion. We went back to the original (Carter) language on undisclosed participation in domestic organizations."

Goldwater did not detail any other changes recommended by the full panel, but noted that individual senators would be allowed to forward their suggestions to the administration.

Professors sponsor tour of urban Chicago

By GUS TAMBORELLO News Staff

Professors Irwin Press and Richard LaManna sponsored a tour of Chicago for 28 students from Professor Press' "Urban Anthropology" and Professor Lamanna's"Sociology of Poverty" classes.

The tour, now in its fourth year, lasted 15 hours and took in much of urban Chicago. Press said that the trip grew out of his and LaManna's "concern with the urban phenomena."

The tour began on the Dan Ryan Expressway, which is itself controversial because it displaced many blacks and concentrated them in areas such as the South Side. Many groups have been displaced through the years, which characterizes the vast urban growth of the nation's second largest city, according to LaManna.

The first stop was the market on Maxwell Street, which features vendors from many ethnic groups and shoppers from all over town.

Items such as stereos, clothing, and hubcaps are sold in the market, many of which are inexpensive and reportedly stolen.

People have come to the market on Sunday mornings for over 80 years. The market is known for it's unique items and what Press terms the ever-present hagglers.

One of the main purposes of the tour, according to LaManna and Press, was to note the great"homogeneity of the urban areas."

Because of the large numbers of immigrants, housing and city services have been a problem for many years, resulting in cities containing "large populations which must be fed, housed, transported, entertained, educated, and healed," according to the professors.

The professors noted the contrast between the inner city and the North Shore area along Michigan Avenue, emphasizing that poverty in Chicago is right at the doorstep of some of the city's very wealthy inhabitants.

Press, who attended the Unversity of Chicago and Northwestern University has experienced what he calls both the swanky and nitty gritty parts of town.

The tour made six stops other than the Maxwell Market and the University of Chicago. The students visited Water Tower Place, Shedd Aquarium, Chinatown, the Cabrini-Green housing project, an Irish pub, and an authentic Greek restaurant.

"Women in the Church?" Sr. Marietta Starrie, CSJ

Editorials The Real Reagan

Imagine this: You're sitting in a cafe in Munich, West Germany. You're a twenty or twenty-one-yearold German discussing your plans for the future with your boy or girlfriend. You've been thinking about getting married and you're dreamily discussing your future.

Then a bulletin comes over the the television. The picture cuts to the American president, one Ronald Reagan, who is discussing the possiblilities of war in the next few years. Reagan, in his usual off-hand way, informs the group that he is addressing, national newspaper editors, that he could foresee "a limited nuclear exchange in Europe where the superpowers would not press the button and escalate it into all-out nuclear war." Most comforting if you live in Omaha or Leningrad, but if you live in West Germany, you might get the sneaking suspicion that the future is slowly being cancelled.

Aside from the unsettling content of this statement, one has to wonder about the propriety of making such a statement. The president of the United States is supposed to be "the guardian of the free world," yet this president feels most comfortable casually discussing the annihilation of Europe.

_ The same president is equally comfortable talking about "getting government off our backs'' and 'ending handouts'' even though they are going to impose hardship and suffering upon significant portions of the population. He is insisting upon the implementation of a economic program that is already crumbling around him, and in the face of all that, still insists that the nation has to spend 1.5 trillion dollars on military hardware, much of which would not address the real needs of the military. He criticizes and threatens Libya and Kaddafi, allows a cabinent member to say "we're going to fix that little man," while we remain that country's largest customer (in effect subsidizing the subsidizer of international terrorism.)

Or this pearl of wisdom: "It's obvious that prosperity doesn't decrease crime—just as it's obvious that deprivation and want don't necessarily increase crime...Men are basically good but prone to evil." Which implies that blacks, Hispanics, and other economically deprived ghetto residents are by nature evil criminals, while all those folks out in the suburbs are innately good and pure.

Such a list can go on and on. But there is neither space nor need. These contradictions should raise a few questions, like exactly what is going on, but there doesn't seem to be much discussion about it. Reagan has had almost a year to prove himself, and I think the answer is clear. He doesn't know what he's talking about, on just about anything.

Remember the "killer trees?" The "fascist New Deal?" How about Reagan the biologist: "Oil slicks help clean the ocean." The most disturbing aspect of all of this is the way that the country willingly accepts this kind of blus t ter as national policy. Sure, Reagan is a nice guy, he probably doesn't mean any harm, but it looks as though he may cause quite a bit anyway.

Reagan's disarming personality (no pun intended) allows him to get away with things that just about any other politician would be crucified for. He has sold the country a bill of goods on economic policy that is only headed for disaster, unless he retreats from his current headstrong positions. Remember the television speech to drum up support for the tax cut last summer? Reagan carried this through by the power of his personality (although there is some evidence of dirty tricks like staged phone calls) and got his bill passed. Now, in November, it looks as though he may have to use his personality to get it unpassed, or the rest of his promises will come undone.

Anthony Walton

The recent AWACS episode is another example of his persuasive powers. Whether or not this was a wise decision remains to be seen, but Reagan's 'personal touch' pulled it off. But again, even if he isn't the psychopathic war-monger he often resembles, he can be just as dangerous.

It is becoming increasingly clear that this man doesn't (and never did, but that's another story) have the qualifications necessary to running the United States, but we are stuck with him for at least three more years. In the end, his bluster on economics, crime, Libya, and whatever else he decides to pontificate on in a given week don't count for much. The economy is pretty much going to go its own way, crime will continue to rise until certain necessary steps are taken, and Kaddafi will meet the end that comes to all despots.

The specter of nuclear war, however, is another matter. It is has been a position of this administration since the campaign that nuclear war is 'winnable,' whatever that means. Now Reagan is apparently outlining the terms under which it would be 'won.' Where is the uproar? Aside from a few 'liberal' columnists, there has been no remark on this position. Europe is becomingly increasingly agitated; there are protests weekly against the current military buildup. Perhaps they are concerned because they will bear the brunt of the 'victory.

Through these sorts of statements, as well as the obvious policy of Reagan's advisors to keep him out of all unrehearsed encounters with the press, we are being shown that the real Reagan is doing as well as his history would indicate; he's a B-Movie actor without anything to say that hasn't been handed to him. To speak so glibly of wanton destruction, he must not understand the horror of nuclear war. That wouldn't be hard to understand, as the closest he has ever come to the military was as an actor in Army training films. Let's just hope he doesn't get his chance to win the war he keeps talking about.

Prose and Prejudice

Garry Wills

Tom Wolfe, the stylish literary brawler who keeps a punching bag by his typewriter, is at it again. In his new book, "From Bauhaus to Our House," he takes on the architectural establishment.

Even if you disagree with Mr. Wolfe, you have to admire his outspoken assault on entrenched nonsense. He says "the Bauhaus atmosphere," which gave us modern architecture, is a more proper subject for "group psychologists" than for architectural historians. He tells us Le Corbusier's work "progresses shortly from special pleading to false witness."

His final judgment on modernism? "In the jet age these ideas of the 1920's began to wear a very quaint and half-timbered look. This, of course, made it easier for some feeble intellects to 'adopt the modern style,' and we are all familiar with the dandified figures in the drafty and obsolescent sports cars who practice modern architecture as if it were a finished period style..."

You can't beat Wolfe for vigor of style, can you? But: I've not been quoting Wolfe at all. I've been quoting an article written in 1955. It appeared in Architectural Review, and was written by the esteemed critic Reyner Banham. Bauhaus pretensions were punctured a quarter of a century ago. Mr. Wolfe does not know that. The list of things Mr. Wolfe does not know is astonishing. Take this sentence from his new book: "There were no manifestos in the world of art prior to the 20th century."

If we go back only two centuries, we find manifestos setting the program for many artists - Burke on The Sublime, Gilpin on The Picturesque, Hogarth on The Line of Grace, Lessing on The Classical, Reynolds on The Grand Style, Diderot on Sentiment, Ruskin on Pre-Raphealitism, Pugin on Gothic. Like most *reactionaries, Wolfe yearns for the past without knowing much about it. The burden of his new work is that Americans should have denied intellectual visas to the Bauhaus architects, so a genuine American style could arise. This ban on suspicius foriegners amounts to setting up a House Committee on Un-American Houses. The "socialism" of Gropius and Le Corbusier made dupes of us all. In this book, in other words, Mr. Wolfe is once again joining his fellow dandy, William Buckley, in giving elegant verbal poses to nativist prejudice.

Mr Wolfe's politics are unintentionally comic — modernism was no more "leftist" than some of the things it displaced and Mr. Wolfe praises (e.g., social realism). But commie hunters' ability to identify their prey is in inverse proportion to their ardor for the task.

More important, the idea that an SAmerican style can be bred by banning foreign influence is at odds with all our experience. American style did not grow by isolation, but by cross-fertilization. Even such pungently American products as Benjamin Franklin's Poor Richard and Mark Twain's Colonel Sellers had foreign models — respectively, Swift's Isaac Bickerstaff and Dickes' Wilkins Micawber.

Who was more American than Franklin? Yet the best student of his vocabulary, L.M. MacLaurin, found that he deliberately avoided Americanisms. For that matter, Noah Webster's American Dictionary has been falsely described as nationalistic in its emphases. Webster repeatedly said that America's language is the same as England's and "it is desirable to perptuate that sameness."

But the traffic was never one way Franklin gave to the old world, after taking from it. His Poor Richard appeared in France as Bonhomme Richard and supplied Europe with more than the name for a boat. American architects, as well, had already helped form the international style before it came back to these shores for praise and ridicule. Sealing borders to keep out un-American thoughts is a sign of intellectual poverty, not strength. It is the kind of thing the Russians do. The real effect of our reactionaries is always to make us imitate the enemy they fear most.

P.O. Box Q

Dear Editor:

I would challenge any reader to make sense of the legal details of your October 30 story on the withdrawal of tenure appeals by two former faculty women in the Delores Frese suit. That is a serious flaw in your coverage, but one with which I cannot deal. Another flaw, however, is that The Observer interviewed only Frese and made no attempt, apparently, to check with English faculty on the various Appointments and Promotions Committees which turned down her tenure request on four occassions. Although it is both tedious and painful to return to this issue, the university administration has been persistently silent on the matter while Frese, whose fictions of life are as inadequate as her fictions of art, has been flamboyantly and self-aggrandizingly vocal. It must be said again — and again, I fear — that no charge of discrimination by the English faculty against Frese has ever been proved because the University, for its own labyrithine reasons, "settled" with Frese while denying her charges. An overwhelmingly majority, however, of every English committee that turned down Frese's appeal for tenure wanted the case brought to trial on precisely the grounds that Frese's record was not exemplary and did not justify promotion. Evidently because she was rich enough, leisured enough, and obsessively willful (something that in whole or part the other women in the suit were not), Frese was able to obtain from the University what she was not able to achieve on her merits from the English Department — promotion and tenure.

Over a period of years Delores Frese has been publicly and privately abusive of university administrators and of her colleagues - including, very recently, Madonna Kolbenschlag, whom she now claims to support "100 per cent." I would uphold any minority individual or group - faculty or student - who can prove discrimination at Notre Dame since the political basis of this intellectual community should be generous imaginative equality. At the same time I would caution anyone who feels harassed to see an estimable model Delores Frese, the only female among seventy-six to profit from her suit. Amid the ethical rubble of the Frese suit, my most chilling reaction is a sense of humiliation on behalf of the main actors in this contemptible performance — humiliation compounded and intensified because the actors themselves have no awareness of their own ridiculousness.

> Yours very truly, Joseph Duffy Professor of English

Kelli Flint, Executive News Editor, replies:

While I am grateful for Professor Duffy's response to the Frese story, I would like to point out that following a previous column (September 9, 1981), I contacted Professor Duffy and two other members of the English faculty for a response to allegations Delores Frese made against the English department. None of the professors agreed to assist me in writing an article in response to her charges. They all, in fact, reminded me of a letter submitted the week before, which stated their disapproval of the tenure settlement. My offer still stands, and I welcome the input of the English faculty regarding this issue.

Theology alternative TCS gives rewarding experiences

As I look back on my undergraduate years at Notre Dame, the course that stands out most in my mind, the course that had the greatest impact on my life, was a course entitled: "Theology and Community Service (TCS)." This course promotes a new way of learning and different way of "doing theology."

In TCS I was given the opportunity to reflect on my faith, to explore the idea of Christian service and to begin a process of putting some of the questions I have about life into a theological context.

Theology and Community Service involves visiting two people in a nursing home, reflecting about the experience of the visits in a journal, sharing reflections with others in small group discussion and writing a comprehensive case study. For me, these elements marked the beginning of a process of making my faith truly my own, not just what I was told it should be.

After I was in this course I saw service as a more integral part of my Christian faith and I consequently became more involved in community service and social justice groups on campus. Even after graduation and after I was married, I , with my husband, looked for ways in which to continue the development of faith, especially related to the service dimension. We decided to spend a year working with the Church in an inner-city area.

When deciding on what type of service to do, I remembered how much I enjoyed visiting the two people in the nursing home while I was in TCS, and I decided to work in a neighborhood center which was geared toward the needs of senior citizens. During the year I was able to visit the homes of elderly persons in the neighborhood as well as help them with transportation and emergency assistance. My favorite aspect of my job, however, was working with some high school students who visited senior citizens. I was able to set up a modified TCS course with them so that they could reflect on their experience and try to integrate it with their faith and what they were learning in their religion courses

Now that I have returned to Notre Dame to work at the Center for Experiential Learning and to pursue studies in theology, I have the privilege of being on the teaching team for TCS with Sr. Judith Anne Beattie, C.S.C.; Fr. Joe Carey, C.S.C.; and Fr. Tom Maddix, C.S.C. 1 am excited to see that students continue to have this opportunity to integrate their faith with a service experience in the context of this course.

If you are interested in this course you may pick up more information at the Center For Experiential Learning, 1110 E. Memorial H ibrary, X2788. The course is limited to 18 students, usually 9 men and 9 women, so you are encouraged to pick up the essential pre-registration materials soon and sign up for an interview with the teaching team early in the advanced registration week.

Another course that offers an opportunity for reflection on the dynamics of service through reading and discussions is "Reflections of Service." This one-credit course is designed for students who are presently involved in a community service project or are planning to do volunteer work after graduation. More information on this course is available at the Center for Experiential Learning.

My hope is that many students will take advantage of these opportunities to serve and reflect on the experience. Doing this in the disciplined manner of a course can have life-long benefits.

Cockroaches infest student's way of life

Life at Notre Dame has proved to be everything that I figured it Lwould be. For months before I arrived upon the campus, I wallowed in my visions of parties, recreation and fun. I have already found the friendly upperclassmen next door that I dreamed would be there to assist me with every tough calculus problem and research paper I encountered. For the most part, the university abounds with at least semi-intelligent life. Even the weather has been enjoyable--no doubt it has accomodated itself to fit my expectations. Marc Ramirez

Overall, the living is easy and I can always find a friendly face around every corner.

However, there was one thing that apparently had slipped my mind in my mind's preparation for campus existence.

I thought that I had left them all behind at home where they would terrorize my family by night, always in numbers, always by surprise. How could I forget them? One of the oldest surviving species on this planet? In my eager anticipation of the joys ahead, I must have stupidly ignored the possibility of cockroaches roaming my room. Oh, sure, other hall residents are bothered by trivial creatures such as flies, and some rooms have had the rotten luck to be invaded by an occasional moth. I can handle flies and moths, but do I get flies and moths? Noooooo! My room is infested with roaches that look like they escaped from a museum while the National Guard wasn't looking.

Roaches have always disgusted me. Since the age of six, when I used to make a habit of capturing helpless insects for fun, the cockroach has been the insect I have flatly refused to lay a finger on. Something about that corpulent brown body makes me shudder more than do any other of life's terrors (i.e. kisses from Aunt Gertrude, Dining Hall chicken, Emil quizzes, etc.).

I can still recall the night when my roommate and I spotted the first roach in our room. Greg was at his desk agonizing over the laws of supply, demand, and increasing costs; I was cuddled com- fortably in a beanbag chair writing a letter to an HTH while mellowing out to the sounds of Emerson, Lake, and Palmer. A sudden rustling noise behind the heater drew our attention. It sounded big, whatever it was. It sounded massive. My roommate suspected a fugitive cat or squirrel.

Then I saw it. It was big and massive, straight out the Guinness Book of World Records.

"Oh my God!" I yelled, flying out of my seat. "It's a cockroach!"

"What kind of cockroach?" asked my roommate calmly. "A German cockroach! I can tell by his accent! How should I know what kind of cockroach-"

"No, I mean, is it a big one?"

"I'm still looking for the sign on his back that says 'Oversized Load'."

"Well, kill it."

This is where I drew the line. By now I was cowering in the safety of the upper bunk, hoping that the monster would go away. There was no way I was even going to step close to that cockroach, much less kill it. A bazooka would have been handy at the time.

I have a number of excuses filed cleverly in my mind for an occasion such as this one. Unfortunately, I never patented them and have heard others use them as well. For those who are also squeamish when it comes to clobbering a cockroach, here are some of them: "I'm too tired."

- "I'm just not in a roach-killing mood right now."
- "Killing a roach is against my religion."
- "You first."
- "You do it. Your shoes are dirtier than mine."
- "Lemme just wait until he insults my family heritage."

Luckily, I just happened to be in the top bunk, so I used the excuse about being tired and tried to act as if I were sleepy. Greg was forced to dispose of the creature himself, and he did so in one swift blow with his Nikes. This deed reminded me of a line from a poem I once wrote entitled "Ode to a Souisbed Cockroach":

'Tattoo You' keeps on rolling

A fter listening to this album, Mwhich hit number one on the Billboard charts after only two weeks on it, one can hardly believe that the Stones have been recording for 18 years, and all are pushing 40. They have regained some enthusiasm for what they have always been best at — no-frills rock, both fast and slow — and the result is one of the best Stones LPs ever.

Perhaps because of the short layoff since Emotional Rescue, their last album of entirely new material (released in June 1980), this album comes off as being fresher and less contrived than any Stones album since the early 70s. Also, Tattoo You is the first Stones LP in recent memory which was not preceded by rumors of the band's imminent breakup. As if to prove it, they are currently on their most extensive tour in years.

The Rolling Stones Tattoo You

This album is also noteworthy because of its material, particularly side two, as that side consists entirely of slow songs. Mick Jagger and Keith Richards long ago proved they could write good ballads ("As Tears Go By," "Angie," and "Fool to Cry" are three examples). However, they had not dedicated a whole side of an LP to them before this. Maybe the Stones are mellowing with age, but the intensity is there: surprisingly, all of them are quite good, especially "No Use in Crying" and "Waiting on a Friend."

Yet the Stones have not completely betrayed their advancing age in Tattoo You. As side two is all ballads, side one is all rockers. "Start Me Up" is very reminiscent of past Stones classics like "Jumpin' Jack Flash" and is the most powerful leadoff single from a Stones LP since "Tumbling Dice" from Exile on Main Street. "Slave" and "Little T & A" are also good — the Stones can still rock when they want to, and be good at it.

Overall, this is the most consistent Stones album in years. Only two of their other releases since Rolling Stones Records was formed (1971) do I find myself able to listen to without wanting to skip around — Sticky Fingers and Some Girls. I have come to expect wild inconsistency in their performances from track to track; this is not there in Tattoo You, an album worth every cent I paid for it. I haven't been able to say that about an album in quite some time. This is casily one of the ten best of 1981.

The seventh trivia quiz

Well, I think I have a permanent spot on the page now. You should start to see this every Wednesday that there is a paper. Now I can rest a little easier...and also get back to the business at hand, that is, entertaining and frustrating you while you get sick on lunch.

By Tim Neely

The answers to last week's quiz on short song titles are as follows:

"Bc" - Neil Diamond
 "Him" - Rupert Holmes
 "SOS" - Abba
 "Fly" - Yoko Ono
 "Babe" - Styx
 "Orly" - The Guess Who
 "MTA" - The Kingston Trio
 "Don't" - Elvis Presley
 "Jet" - Paul McCartney and Wings

10. "Dazz" – Brick

This week's quiz can be justifiably called Seconds Out. I will describe second events in popular and rock music history, or second place finishes, or something like that. All you must do is answer the questions. Good luck!

1. In America, what was the name of the Beatles' second album?

2. John Denver has had many hits since his first biggie, "Take Me Home, Country Roads." That particular record spent 23 weeks in the Billboard Hot 100. Which Denver single is in second place in weeks on the chart?

3. This famous band holds the dubious honor of placing five singles at number two without ever having a number one. Who are they?

4. What was the second song during the rock era to spend ten weeks at number one (by title and artist)? 5. In Eddie Rabbitt's hit song "Step by Step," what is the second step? 6. In the '50s doo-wop ballad "Book of Love," what does chapter two say?

7. And finally, in another '50s doowop ballad, "The Ten Commandments of Love," what is the Second Commandment?

8. Who gave the rock and roll world Sloppy Seconds? And who came back for a Second Helping?

9. The most successful Beatles LP of all time on the charts was Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band. Which Beatles LP is second on the list?

10. Contrary to what Casey Kasem would have you believe, the longest a song spent at number two without ever hitting number one during the rock era is not six but seven weeks, and held by only one record, not three. Name this once-popular record by title and artist. mote childred out to a of a billed obtained of the second

"I didn't care--I didn't think--about the roach's life. I considered not the chance that he had children or a wife."

As is usual with cockroaches, they attack in numbers, and not more than ten minutes later Greg had to commit insecticide once again.

I'm still terrified of cockroaches, and any small sound in my room causes me to jump. Why do they pick on me? Just once I'd like to drift off to sleep without the fear that THEY are lurking in the shadows, waiting for me.

I can hear them now...

29th straight loss? Northwestern tries again

CHICAGO (AP) - Michigan State Coach Frank "Muddy" Waters is the kind, fatherly type who finds himself in "an unenviable" position when his Spartans Saturday are expected to tag Northwestern with a recordsetting 29th straight defeat.

The Wildcats last Saturday lost to Wisconsin 52-0. It was their 28th straight defeat and left them with a share of the record held by Kansas State and Virginia among major colleges.

"It's an unenviable position," Waters told the Chicago Football Writers Tuesday in a telephone interview. "I have mixed feelings about it. We don't want to be a party to that record but if we lose that's worse.

"There's no joy in seeing anybody set that kind of record," he said, "it's too had people have to keep track of things like that.

Northwestern hasn't found the magic formula and lacks experienced personnel," Waters said. "Still, we're not in a position to be overconfident. We're still hungry. We'll not be down for Northwestern.'

Waters' words were taken in by Northwestern rookie Coach Dennis Green who found no consolation in the fact that the Wildcat streak had reached 20 defeats before he took the coaching reins.

"I didn't think of the 20-game losing streak when I took the job," said Green, "not that that would have made any difference. Sure this team is only 0-8 but somebody has to mon up.

"We've lost 28 games for a reason." Green said. "The program is not where it should be in this conference. I'm proud to be at Northwestern. By no means did 1 at least a couple of inches. His upper take the job with my eyes closed. We have to keep our nose to the grindstone. We have to make an effort every week."

Green said he'll have a group of prospective recruits at Saturday's game.

Some people have told me 'No. not now." " said Green. "But why not? Let them see how they can fit in. Every game starts zero-to-zero although it is hard to believe."

The losing streak might have been halted in the season opener when Northwestern scored late in the game against Indiana to make it 21-20. Instead of going for the tie, Green opted for two points but the Wildcats failed.

In retrospect would Green now have gone for the kick and a possible tie?

"As soon as we missed the two-point play I wanted to go back but it was too late," said Green. "But we felt we had a shot at it. I'd rather tie than lose but, then, I would rather win than tie.'

As a result, the television networks will be doing interviews on the Northwestern campus this week and the Wildcats will be in the college football focus Saturday.

Buttons saying "Stop State at 28" are being distributed. But that will be difficult. Michigan State is coming on strong having won two of its last three games with the loss being a 27-26 decision to powerful Purdue.

front, with Reggie Theus and a healthy Ronnie Lester in the backcourt. Awesome.

Instead, the Bulls must find an alternative. They've got to save face, and their draft choice.

"We could let him sit out the whole year," ponders Thorn. "But that's not a good alternative for us or for him. I don't think it would ever come to that.'

Of course it wouldn't. Woolridge would go back in the draft pool, and Chicago would get zippo.

"If it comes to a total impasse," Thorn admits, "I think you'd have to look at a trade. He has a lot of value because of his potential."

That potential has increased since last year's NCAA playoffs. At practice last week, Woolridge appeared to be about an inch taller, and players say he has increased his vertical leap by body is even more well-developed than it was when he was here.

"Teams that were interested in him before the draft are still interested. I hope we don't have to trade him. But if we're at a total impasse. ...

So Orlando Woolridge waits. One day there is talk that the Bulls are ready to give in: the next day he is convinced that he's going to be traded, probably to San Diego or Cleveland. The following day things are up in the air again.

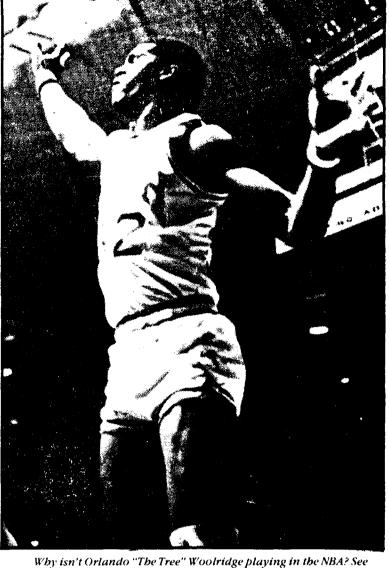

In the meantime, Woolridge is working out, staying in shape. All he wants, he says, is a chance to play. It's all he's ever wanted.

that Greg gives us is a little more speed."

One thing the coaches are very pleased with is the injury situation - almost everyone walked off the field one hundred percent. Faust, too, has recovered from the fall he took against USC. "Yeah, I was able to run out of the tunnel Saturday," he laughed. "I told the team you gotta be tough in this game — I coached with pain, so they can play with pain.'

On the other side of the blackboard, the Irish offense has exploded for 45 first-quarter points, their highest point production in any quarter.

SOCCER HOPEFULS — Rich Hunter's Irish soccer team is currently rated sixth in the Great Lakes Region, and a win over Bowling Green on Thursday could very well clinch a berth in the NCAA tournament. Bowling Green is rated fourth in the region, with Wisconsin-Green Bay fifth, but the latter is on NCAA probation. An Irish win should thus vault them into at least fourth place, and guarantee an NCAA bid.

FIGURED IT OUT? — Hint number two...Michigan is not one of the teams. There are no Big Ten teams involved.

SHOW STOPPER – Irish All-American Bob Crable, who was more than a casual acquaintance of Navy running back Eddie Meyers last week (only 39 yards in 18 carries), is only 16 tackles short of the Notre Dame record for most career tackles by a linebacker. Bob Golic (1975-78) owns the school standard of 479 stops while Crable trails with 463, 109 this year. Even more impressively, Crable has led the Notre Dame defense in tackles in 28 of the 30 games he has started in an Irish uniform.

A TOUCH OF CLASS — It takes quite a man to admit his mistakes, and Irish coach Tom Backhus showed what he was made of this week. After failing to introduce tight end Pete Buchanan at last Friday's Navy pep rall, Backhus sent a letter to The Observer, part of which is quoted below:

"I made a terrible mistake in not introducing Pete Buchanan with the players I coach.

"There are a number of people I want to apologize to for this mistake. I want to apologize to the students and Notre Dame friends of Pete, for he exemplifies every good quality this University stands for. I apologize to his teammates, because Pete Buchanan is as fine a team player as there is. I apologize to his parents, because he is a young man they have every right to be proud of.

"However, most of all, I apologize to Pete, a man who deserves the very best out of life, who will experience just that, and who J hope in years down the road, to be considered a friend."

STILL DON'T HAVE IT? — The third and final quiz hint...Three of the four teams have played Notre Dame within the last year.

GRID-DINING — The 1981 Notre Dame football banquet will be held December 10 in the ACC. Tickets may be reserved by calling Rich Sherman of the Notre Dame Club of St. Joe Valley at 282-2393 or 272-5887.

TURNER TRIBUTE — The Observer Landon Turner Fund is close to the $1000 mark, thanks to a very generous weekend. Over $150 was collected at Friday's pep rally, and $400 was collected at the ACC on Saturday morning when Digger Phelps opened basketball practice before the football game. In fact, Phelps even stopped the scrimmage with 23 seconds remaining to explain to those watching what the Fund was all about and how much donations were appreciated.

THE ENVELOPE PLEASE — The four teams which have won all four major bowl games are Georgia Tech, Georgia, Alabama and Notre Dame. The Irish thumped Stanford 27-10 in the 1925 Rose Bowl; beat Texas 24-11 in the '71 Cotton Bowl, 38-10 in the '78 classic and Houston 35-34 in the '79 affair; held off Alabama 13-11 in the '75 Orange Bowl; and nipped the Crimson Tide 24-23 to earn the national championship in the '73 Sugar Bowl.

ing. Woolridge and his agent, Larry Fleischer, are asking for a lot of money. That cannot be disputed. However, the price they are asking is still between the salaries going to the players chosen one pick ahead and one pick behind Woolridge in last spring's NBA draft.

The Bulls argue that Woolridge is unproven, and not worth the estimated $350,000, guaranteed for four years, that he's asking for. But Danny Vranes is getting about $400,000 a year for being the fifth pick overall, and Steve Johnson is getting roughly $300,000 a year for being the seventh man to go. Neither of them is a proven star.

The powers-that-be in the Bulls organization say they are determined to bring a winner to Chicago. But they also say that NBA owners should work to bring down inflated player salaries.

"Players make too much money," they say from their Ivory Tower. "Somebody has to take a stand against this madness. Somebody has to teach pro sports team owners a lesson, and we're just the guys to do it."

It's a little known fact, but two of the part-owners of the Bulls are Lamar Hunt, and that greatest of all over-spenders, George Steinbrenner!

Good company is what you make it. So make it special, with General Foods[®] International Coffees.

Orlando Woolridge has simply become the latest victim of the Ebeneezer Scrooge of the NBA, Arthur Wirtz. The Bulls principal owner makes the Wrigleys look like Andrew Carnegie.

"That's a criticism we've heard before," admits Thorn.

So, it looks very unlikely that the Bulls will sign Woolridge. That's too bad, because they need him, as a player, and as a a drawing card.

"We do need another forward," Thorn says. "The league is tougher this year. We're going to have to be better. We can't be just the same as we were last year."

How true. Chicago was almost there. They beat the Knicks in the play-offs, and played Boston tougher than anyone ever expected before being eliminated. Woolridge could very well have made the difference. Imagine it. Artis Gilmore, David Greenwood, and Woolridge up

Miami game rescheduled

HURRICANES RESCHEDULED - ABC-TV has elected to move Notre Dame's season-ending showdown with Miami to Friday, November 27, the day after Thanksgiving. ABC officials have set the game for a 3 p.m. EST start in the Orange Bowl.

Sports

Thus, the Penn State-Notre Dame game will not be televised by ABC, allowing Penn State to appear against Alabama or Pitt, and allowing ABC to broadcast the Oklahoma-Nebraska, USC-UCLA or Michigan-Ohio State battles on November 21.

WRECKS RAMBLE IN - Saturday's Irish clash with Georgia Tech marks the 30th and last time that the two teams face off, since the Yellow Jackets enter the Atlantic Coast Conference next season. The Irish own a 24-4-1 edge in the all-time series and have won nine of the last 11 games.

Georgia Tech had originally appeared on the Irish slate in 1982 and '83, but their entrance into the ACC forced the Irish to drop those two games and pencil Pittsburgh into the open slots.

LIKE KISSING YOUR SISTER - Georgia Tech pulled what had to be the upset of last year's football campaign when they tied Notre Dame 3-3 in Atlanta. The Irish were 7-0 going into the game and had earned the nation's number one ranking the week before after a convincing 33-0 triumph over Navy. The Irish managed 252 yards of total offense while limiting the Yellow Jackets to 140, but a 47-yard Harry Oliver field goal late in the last quarter salvaged the tie for Notre Dame and kept them unbeaten.

Ironically, Georgia Tech invades Notre Dame Stadium with that same 1-7 record, while the Irish are riding high from a convincing 38-0 victory over Navy. Let's hope there is no deja vu.

BOWLING FOR DOLLARS - This year's first (and possibly last) Irish Items Sports Quiz: Name the four NCAA teams which have won each of the four major bowl games (Sugar, Cotton, Orange and Rose Bowl). The answer appears at the end of the column.

HOME, SWEET, HOME - Heading into the final home contest of the 1981 season, the Irish boast a 181-52-3 (.773) record in Notre Dame Stadium. The Irish are 9-2 vs. Georgia Tech in the facility, 13-2 on the Notre Dame campus, and have not lost to the Yellow Jackets here since a 14-10 setback in 1959

SENIOR WEEK - Heading into their last game in Notre Dame Stadium, the senior class owns a 28-13-1 overall record and 16-6 ledger in Notre Dame Stadium. Only three seniors started for the Irish last week: linebacker Bob Crable, right tackle Phil Pozderac and cornerback John Krimm. Classmate Kevin Griffith also opened at right end, but due to a previous injury he will be eligible for another year of play.

HIGH MARKS - The Irish established several more season-high performances against Navy, as was probably expected. Notre Dame's 249 passing yards was the most since Rusty Lisch and Tim Koegel combined for 321 yards at Tennessee in 1979, and its 442 yards of total offense was the best since the 509 yards the Irish gained against Michigan State in 1980 (half of which belonged to Phil Carter). Notre Dame scored three touchdowns on passes for the first time since the last game of the 1977 regular season.

On the individual side, Blair Kiel enjoyed his second straight career-best performance, completing 13 of 23 passes for 225 yards, the most yards by an Irish quarterback since Lisch's 248 yards in that same Tennessee game. Freshman Joe Howard, starting his first game for the Irish, caught five passes for 115 yards, the most real estate earned by an Irish receiver since Tony Hunter caught five passes for 131 yards against Southern Cal during his freshman year in 1979.

GIVING UP? - Here is the first hint for the quiz...No, USC is not one of the teams. In fact, there are no Pac-10 schools.

PUTTING OUT - The Irish also had several other 'best since" performances on the scoreboard last week:

•They shut out an opponent in three straight games for the first time since the Irish blanked North Carolina in 1965, '66 and '71

•They recorded their biggest shutout over Navy since a 47-0 victory here in 1969.

•They enjoyed their biggest winning margin over Navy

(38 points) since notching a 56-7 victory in 1970.

•They scored 38 points in a game, the best offensive output since a 40-15 win over Miami in 1979.

•They won a game by 38 points, their best margin of victory since a 48-10 triumph over Miami in 1977.

DON'T CROSS THIS LINE - The Irish defense maintained their unblemished first-quarter record during Saturday's shutout. Notre Dame's defense has not been scored upon in the first quarter this season and has only been nicked in the first frame of three of the last 24 regular season games. In that span, the Irish have surrendered only 19 points in the first 15-minute segment.

The last appearance at home for the Notre Dame women's volleyball team resulted in a split decision. The night began with Notre Dame losing and ended up losing the match. to Purdue University-Calumet in Against Bethel, Notre Dame three games, 11-15, 15-10, and 5-15. The Irish then came back to beat Bethel College after being down by seven points, 12-15, 15-6, and 15-8. The team's record is 15-20 going into the State Tournament at Valparaiso next weekend. The entire tri-match was dedicated to the two seniors on the team, Kathleen Dages and Jan Yurgealitis. Flowers were presented to both girls by the players and by the Varsity Crowd before the first match. Dages' return to the line-up was one of the highlights of the night. Dages has been out of action for close to six weeks with an ankle injury she received early in the season. Her cast was cut off last week with this game being the culmination of a week of rehabilitation and practice. Another highlight of the match was the performance of the players off the bench. In particular, sophomore Terese Henken and freshman Julia Pearson entered the game at key moments to spark the Irish offense. Henken exhibited her power hitting and able blocking skills while Pearson proved that she possesses all-around agility in the front row.

Serving was a key factor in both matches for the Irish. Against Purdue-Calumet, the Irish threw 13 serves out of bounds or into the net received power serving by both Mo Morin and Josie Maternowski. the pass, you just can't start any kind of offense, which makes it impossible to win." The matches last night demonstrated the truth of Pagley's statements. The Irish will now have one day in the gym to try and remedy their problems before the next tri-match at Lake Michigan College against the host team and Sout-

Faust says big plays key to Irish victory

By KELLY SULLIVAN Sports Writer

Saturday's big win over Navy gave the Irish coaching staff plenty of reasons to be optimistic about the football team's progress. But a lot of people are still asking, 'Is it fair to measure Notre Dame's improvement against an opponent like Navv?.

"The jury will be out on us and everyone else until the season's over," answered Gerry Faust yesterday. "But I still think we looked precise, we hit very well, we executed well and we were exciting."

The reason for all that excitement? "We finally broke some big plays," explained Faust. With Notre Dame's revamped line-up, the Irish now have a deep threat in three positions, split end, tight end and wingback. "And that's going to make a difference in how teams defense us now," he added.

Because the offense registered their highest score of the season, many fans walked away from the Stadium Saturday thinking the Irish abandoned their somewhat conFaust and his staff called for only one more pass play in the Navy game than they did against USC, but more were completed and three were for touchdowns.

"That's what people remember," offered offensive coordinator Tom Lichtenberg. "Most people probably think all of a sudden we decided to just come out and throw, but we didn't go into that game with any more ideas offensively than to just be sound and execute better."

Lichtenberg stressed the point that much of the improvement can be credited to two factors: the quarterbacks are reading the defenses better and the receivers are running their routes better. "It's not that we haven't wanted to open up the offense all along," he insisted. "But factors like the injuries, the transition, the other team's defense - that dictates what you can and can't do."

If the Irish hope to keep producalso running at number two tailback behind Phil Carter. "When you've got good athletes, you try to get them in the ball game as often as you can," he added. "And one thing

Yet, the passing on the night was not good. The Irish, as a team, passed with only 50 percent accuracy. This percentage is extremely low when compared to its 80 percent passing accuracy earlier in the season. The decline in passing seems to have caused a slump for the Irish. They have won only three matches in their last nine.

Coach Van Slager seems to feel that the problem is rooted in the lack of practice time. "We've played so many matches and we've been on the road for so long that we never get a chance to practice. We just keep playing games. As a result, our fundamental skills have really suffered."

Defensive specialist Jackie Pagley explains, "It has a lot to do with concentration. If the concentration isn't there, the pass won't flow. Without servative attack overnight. In fact,

Woolridge : The Story of Yeab, The Waiting. It's the hardest part.

Tom Petty

The National Basketball Association's regular season opened last weekend. Across the country, in places like The Summit, The Fabulous Forum and The Boston Garden, giant men and ulcer-ridden coaches began the ridiculously long road to the world championship.

Orlando Woolridge had every reason to believe that he would be among the giants. Just four months ago, he was on top of the world. He had made it out of the swamps of Louisiana, graduated from Notre Dame, and become the sixth man chosen in the NBA draft.

But somewhere along the way, he woke up, and the dream was over. Suddenly, Woolridge found himself in the real world; a world dominated by deferred payments, guarantee clauses and free agents.

So last weekend, when the other members of the Chicago Bulls were in Indianapolis to begin their season, Orlando Woolridge was back on the main court of Notre Dame's ACC, practicing with his former teammates.

'We want to run our business on a business-like basis," says Jonathan Kovler, the managing partner of the Bulls. That, in effect, means Chicago doesn't want to pay Woolridge what he's worth.

"It puts us in an awkward situation," admits Roc Thorn, who is the Bulls' general manager. Thorn is also in the awkward situation of trying to build a winning team without spending any of the owners' money.

The situation is more than awkward, it is embarass
