Of Romero's death Marchers remember anniversary

By VIC SCIULLI
Night News Editor

Bearing "Archbishop Romero — Man of Peace" and "Reagan — Herod" banners, a crowd of 40 people marched from Sacred Heart Church to downtown South Bend yesterday, commemorating the second anniversary of the death of Archbishop Oscar Romero.

The peaceful crowd walked to St. Joseph High School where they were met by more people. The marchers completed their walk with a small service at the Justice and Peace Center and a mass at St. Stephen's Church in downtown South Bend.

Bishop William McManus spoke to the marchers at St. Joseph and led the crowd in a prayer for peace in El Salvador. McManus later commented on the political state in El Salvador, comparing it to our own Civil War. McManus believes that El Salvador can "iron out its own difficulties" without intervention by the United States.

McManus added that the United States must provide Latin American countries with educators and that continued military support will only exacerbate the present problems. "There is a crying need for help. There is a need to restore the Peace Corps. The Soviets are influential with people — the U.S. is influential with military aid."

"There can not be a military solution for a non-military problem," marchers believe that a Christian Democrat victory is the best hope for El Salvador. A rightist victory it is believed, will increase the killing in the country.

Fr. Hesburgh was criticized by the marchers for his decision to supervise the elections in El Salvador, believing there can not be a free said marcher Angelo Capozzi. Like many of the marchers, he does not foresee an improvement in El Salvador after Sunday's elections.

'Hesburgh won't see any fraud in the elections because the biggest fraud, the boycott of the election by the left, has already taken place.'

Another marcher, Charlie Fletcher said, "Even if the guerillas overthrow the government, there will still be a minority running the government in a country where people are uneducated in democracy."

Described by most as "the lesser of two evils" in the elections, the election when one of the three parties is not participating.

"Hesburgh won't see any fraud in the elections because the biggest fraud, the boycott of the election by the left, has already taken place," said Joe Regotti of the Notre Dame El Salvador Solidarity Group. "There will be no chance to get a feeling of the real mood in the country. The best thing would have been a refusal to participate with the State Department as an observer of the elections."

Solidarity group members who have met with Hesburgh believe that he doesn't see himself in the State Department's legitimization strategy. According to them, the State Department is using Hesburgh, "a man of the church" to make it appear that the elections are legitimate. This legitimization, many fear will make the United States justify continued military support for the country.

A national El Salvador Solidarity Rally and March will occur in Chicago on the eve of the election.

President rehires air traffic controllers

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration said yesterday it rehired three air traffic controllers to the flight system, but insisted it was not reversing a general policy barring reinstatement.

White House spokesman David Gergen said he assumed any controllers rehired were found to have been victims of harassment in the strike. "I am not aware of any change in policy," he said.

The Federal Aviation Administration acknowledged that it rehired Joan Plummer, an air traffic controller from San Antonio, Texas, who was among 11,500 striking controllers President Reagan fired in August for ignoring his order to return to work within 48 hours. It also confirmed that two others have been rehired. Spokesman Fred Farrar also said the FAA is reviewing 1,000 such "hardship cases" and that "some of" these fired controllers might be reinstated.

Linda Gosden, spokeswoman for Transportation Secretary Drew Lewis, declared, "There has been absolutely no change in President Reagan's or Secretary Lewis' position on rehiring the striking controllers."

"We have said we will always look at those cases," she said, "where the people may have been harassed or intimidated (into joining the strike)."

Farrar emphasized that Plummer would not be returning to her flight tower job at the Fort Worth Air Route Traffic Control Center. She would work at the Houston Air Route Traffic Center, he said, one of several such facilities that direct airplanes in flight corridors between airports, but not at the airports themselves.

Farrar said the other two reinstated controllers worked in the Great Lakes region and in the Atlanta area. He did not identify the others.

Transportation Department officials, declining to be quoted by name, said they expected no more than "a couple hundred" reinstatements among the 1,000 controllers whose hardship cases are being reviewed.

These officials said they could talk only off the record because of litigation pending before the Merit Systems Protection Board.

Jeff Miller, a spokesman for Lewis, said "in a small number of cases," the government might choose to reinstate fired controllers rather than risk losing appeals filed with the merit review panel.

Candidate claims budget unfair to students

By KELLI FLINT
Executive News Editor

Congress is paying "lip service" to the people of America, and has no intention of balancing the budget, Indiana Congressional candidate Thomas Ward said yesterday.

Ward said he doesn't think student loans should be cut.

"The way I was able to attend Notre Dame and Law school was through loans and scholarships. Without this aid, I might not have been able to become a lawyer."

Ward predicts that "things are going to get worse (economically) before they get better" in America.

"I don't think (Reagan's) programs are going to succeed. He will never be able to balance the budget, cut taxes, and increase military spending.

"Reagan says he is trying to cut his deficit back, but his promise was to balance the budget by 1984."

Father Hesburgh should speak out against the budget cuts, according to Ward. "This is one of the mandates of a Christian institution," he said.

"If they don't do this, how can they expect their graduates to go into the world, speak out and act when they see injustice?"

Ward favors verbal protest against the student-aid cuts. "Members of the Reagan administration won't

Central America

Senator argues U.S. policy

By KAREN MIRANDA
Staff Reporter

Indiana State Senator and U.S. Senate candidate Mike Kendall spoke last night against the present U.S. foreign policy in Central America.

The three-time Notre Dame graduate cited the error of U.S. policy as an inaccurate view of the situation.

"To describe the struggle as one between capitalism and communism is missing the boat," Kendall said.

He defines the conflict in El Salvador as between the general population and the oligarchy that has controlled the land and families for generations, "regardless of the ideological struggle which is or is not going on in the rest of the world."

He terms the "capitalism versus communism" mentality as a misunderstanding of the societies with which the U.S. is trying to deal.

"We do not need to befriend or embrace every regime that simply agrees to oppose or hate nations that we are hostile towards. It is a disastrous foreign policy in my judgement."

Kendall said he does not consider the communist-backed factions in Central America as an inevitable indication of future communist rule, but rather of an operative government which involves all political parties.

The dangers of continued military aid to El Salvador, as Kendall sees them, are an alienation of the general population towards the U.S., increased military opposition by guerrillas via backing from Cuba and the Soviets, and an inevitable and embarrassing withdrawal of the U.S. after the fall of the present government.

Kendall predicted that with or without U.S. military aid, Duarte's government would fall within a year.

His solution is a three-point change of policy by the U.S.

First, the U.S. should commit itself to non-intervention in Central America, and immediately withdraw all military aid.

Second, economic aid to these countries should be continued, and development within the countries encouraged.

Finally, this aid should be conditioned by negotiation and settlement between all political parties.

The Senator cited the foreign administrations of Thatcher in England, Mitterand in France, and Kresky in Germany all as Western world powers that have succeeded in remaining neutral in the Central American question, despite involvement there by communist-backed factions.

Kendall also mentioned his opinion that the C.I.A. has an obligation to answer various accusations by politicians and the news media about its involvement in Nicaragua, and should either confirm or deny its actions.

The role of the C.I.A., he says, should be as an intelligence gathering arm, leaving the civilian government to make decisions on military involvement.

Kendall, a State Senator for three years in Indianapolis, resides with his wife and two children in Jasper.

His campaign offices are in Indianapolis, Jasper, and South Bend, and he welcomes any help from students. Those interested can contact Students for Kendall on campus through Tom Gruscinski.

Nicaraguan junta leader Daniel Ortega told the Security Council yesterday his Sandinista government, Cuba and leftist Salvador rebels were ready for immediate talks with the United States to settle differences. Ortega, who has repeatedly accused Washington of plotting a Central American invasion, addressed a special council session convened at his urgent request. U.S. Ambassador Jeane J. Kirkpatrick, president of the council for March, said Washington was skeptical about Nicaragua's avowed interest in peace while it serves as "an active conduit" for the flow of war materiel to El Salvador and its other neighbors. Nicaragua has denied the American allegation. Mrs. Kirkpatrick told reporters later she did not want to comment on Ortega's peace proposals until she had time to study them. In her address to the council, she called Ortega's charges of an impending U.S.-backed invasion of Nicaragua "as extravagant as they are baseless." Ortega demanded that the Reagan administration "voice its commitment not to attack Nicaragua" and stop what he said was the U.S. policy of aiding armed Nicaraguan exiles in Honduras and the United States. Nicaragua has accused the CIA of supporting and financing armed bands of exiles operating inside neighboring Honduras. — AP Leftist guerrillas launched hit-and-run attacks near El Salvador's election headquarters and outside the capital yesterday in a new drive to wreck the Constituent Assembly voting. The guerrillas fought to within a few hundred yards of the Central Elections Council building in a six-hour attack that began about midnight and ended with the rebels withdrawing under government fire. Shooting also erupted for a second day on a mountain overlooking the principal air base outside the capital, and the government confirmed a rebel radio broadcast that guerrillas had captured the town of Yoloaquin and three surrounding villages in Morazan province, 100 miles east of San Salvador. The Defense Ministry spokesman, Col. Eusebio Coto, said eight soldiers were killed, that the rebels remained in control of the Yoloaquin area and that the army had dispatched reinforcements for a counterattack. The National Guard said the guerrillas also marched through three villages near the town of San Sebastian and had occupied a radio station in Santa Ana, the country's second biggest city, and broadcast warnings to the people not to vote in the elections Sunday. — AP

Masked Arabs hurled grenades at an Israeli army vehicle yesterday, killing one soldier and wounding three others after military authorities fired the two top Palestinian mayors in the occupied West Bank of the Jordan. Three Arab bystanders also were wounded in the grenade attack in the occupied Gaza Strip, and the ambushers fled into a nearby orange grove, the military command said. The Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine, in a statement released in Beirut, claimed responsibility for the ambush. Sgt. Pinhas Grossmark, 30, was the first Israeli killed in a week of Palestinian rioting. Five Arabs have been killed by Israeli gunfire, and two others died Wednesday in an explosion apparently set off accidentally while they were making a bomb. — AP

President Reagan thanked Italian President Sandro Pertini yesterday for the rescue of Brig. Gen. James Dozier from Red Brigade kidnappers, and called terrorism "every bit as threatening to freedom and independence as foreign tanks or nuclear missiles." In an elaborate welcoming ceremony on the White House south lawn and in private meetings later, the two leaders celebrated the bonds between the United States and Italy and each other's dedication to the principles of democracy and freedom. A senior administration official said Reagan and Pertini formed "a mutual admiration society." The official, who declined to be identified, said there was a "light motif" to their talks and no mention by Pertini of his opposition to U.S. policies in Central America, and particularly in El Salvador. Pertini, who spent more than a dozen years in prison for fighting fascism and the regime of Benito Mussolini, was greeted at the White House with a 21-gun salute and fanfare of trumpets. — AP

Six new directors of the University of Notre Dame Alumni Association were elected this week to the national board and will attend their first session on April 29. The 65,000 member association is governed by a nationally representative board of 18 members, serving three-year terms. Atty. John J. Burke III, a 1969 graduate residing in San Diego, Calif., was named to represent West Coast states. He is an attorney for Hughes Aircraft Co. and professor of business at National University. A 1960 business administration graduate and current vice president of Detroit Bank and Trust Co., Terrence E. Keating of Bloomfield Hills, Mich., was named to represent the upper Midwest area. George Q. Evans, an attorney and partner in a Jackson, Miss., law firm, was elected from Region 14. He is a 1963 graduate in business administration. Dr. Patrick J. Barrett, a 1951 science graduate, is director-designate for Minnesota and other northern states. He is president of the medical staff of St. Mary's Hospital in Minneapolis. Representing the New Jersey area will be Richard J. Byrne, president of Walter C. Hurley Construction Co., Shrewsbury. He was graduated in 1952, majoring in business administration. Elected as an at-large director, representing students who have graduated in the last five years, is Hal P. Munger, a Toledo, Ohio architect. Pangborn decision 'lawful'

There are usually two sides to every battle between the administration and students. Unfortunately, one side often pleads "no comment" and the other, "not fair."

The recent episode of the expulsion of five Pangborn students from their dorm on Wednesday, March 10, saw responses similar to these. It is easy to take sides where sentiment lies. It is even easier to take sides without knowing the facts. Often these facts are blurred. But the laws of the University are starkly black and white.

There is no question that the laws of the University regarding the policy in this matter were followed. The question can only be raised with respect to the fairness of these laws, not in the fairness of administrative action which merely enacted these "laws."

This administrative action was explained by James Roemer, Dean of Students. There are two actions which the administration can follow in expelling a student from a dorm, according to Dean Roemer. One is "contractual" and the other "disciplinary." If a student commits a violation of University rules, disciplinary action is usually followed, which can result in a fine, expulsion from the dorm, or dismissal from the University.

The Pangborn case was not disciplinary but contractual. "When contractual measures are taken no blot goes on the student's disciplinary record," Roemer said. This type of reassignment was what the five received.

While disciplinary action can become a complex procedure, contractual reassignment is much simpler. Since the Pangborn incident is a recent example, it will be used here. The students were causing "problems" according to Roemer. Obscene pictures of and obscene phone calls to the assistant rector of Pangborn were among the "offenses."

According to Roemer, there was no proof that any one person did any one thing wrong. This is why measures were contractual. The hall staff decided that they no longer wanted these students in their dorm because of "problems" they were causing. They simply took away these students' privileges of on-campus housing.

The hall staff and Dean of Students have this contractual right. No reasons are necessary according to du Lac, which under the general heading of "Regulations" simply states: "The University reserves the right to transfer a student's residence." All other rules applying to the expulsion of a student from his or her dorm are found under "Disciplinary Procedures."

This is not to say that the Pangborn's hall staff did or did not have concrete reasons. According to du Lac, however, they do not have to. Also, a 48-hour warning is standard procedure and nowhere in du Lac does it say a student must be warned. Roemer agreed that this is not a University rule but that the students were warned.

"These five students have been reprimanded over the years," Roemer said. "Students should be made aware that it is not a 'right' to live in a resident hall. A rector can make a decision that he does not want a student living in his hall anymore and the student loses this privilege."

It's that simple.

According to one of the five Pangborn students involved, there was no University rule broken or no wrong committed by any one of the five. He preferred to call it a "personality conflict," and did not want to comment further so as not to put himself in further jeopardy.

"I'm a second semester senior and I don't want to wreck graduation," the student said. "We know we won't get back on no matter what. We were treated unfairly, but we don't want anything more to come of it."

The administration has quite different reasons for claiming "no comment." In Sean Faircloth's article on the incident which appeared in The Observer the day after, Dean Roemer, Fr. James Riehle, rector of Pangborn, and Fr. Steve Jeselnick, assistant rector of Pangborn, all refused to comment. They continue to refuse to answer any questions about the reasons for the reallocation of these students because they cite the matter as a confidential, private matter.

You could almost say this tendency has become tradition. These officials follow this policy because they want to protect the students involved.

Notre Dame students claim that they have right to know, that there should be better "communication" between the administration and students.

This is true in some instances, but in this case, and many other cases like it, students do not have a right to know. The Pangborn students do not want them to know, naturally, because it could stain their reputations. And the administration supports this.

Many times, reporters for The Observer, student government, and students in general feel frustrated because administrators will not "talk." Many times their frustration is justified and "no comment" seems like a cop-out. But there are some cases, such as the Pangborn incident, in which "no comment" to reporters and those not involved is justifiable and even understandable.

Battles between the administration, hall staffs and students will always arise. Some decisions, policies and issues of justice and fairness will be black and white, but some will remain a murky gray.

Perhaps more people should read du Lac...just in case.

New director

Strake cites Student Union goals

By CECILIA LUCERO
Staff Reporter

Increased participation in on-campus student activities is the objective of newly-appointed Student Union director Steve Strake.

*service to students...
open to suggestions from anyone, including Saint Mary's.*

Strake cited his goals for the 1982-83 school year at the staff induction in LaFortune last night.

The talk outlined several goals for next year's Student Union, including the elimination of homecoming events, which Strake has called a "flop" because of apathy. To compensate, other activities are planned to improve student involvement.

One of the innovations will introduce more live bands and new movies in Chataqua to improve the atmosphere. Strake claims that Chataqua has a fine sound system which has been underutilized in the past. The sound system, similar to a Dolby system, will be used to its full advantage as it will produce special effects for rock movies and other films, such as Tommy and Earthquake.

Traditional Student Union presentations will also be repeated, such as winter and fall Welcome Weeks, and the Country Rock Jam, which has seen great improvement within the last two years.

Strake also plans to alleviate the problem of concert cancellations which has happened more than once during the past year. "Even though it wasn't our fault, we hope to book 'surer' concerts. We really need South Bend to participate. Lack of South Bend ticket sales has caused past failures."

More events to increase hall participation are also hopeful to bring the Student Union and the dorms together. Strake sees the duty of the Student Union as a "service to students...open to suggestions from anyone, including Saint Mary's."

The Student Union staff for the 1982-1983 school year are: Steve Strake, director; Mike Jans, comptroller; David McMahon, assistant director; David Drouillard, social commissioner; Bart Reynolds, cultural arts commissioner; Linda Powers, academic commissioner; William O'Hayer, concert commissioner; Gina Rohrer, movie commissioner; John Kelly, services commissioner; Darrel Nolan, executive coordinator; Molly Nolan, public relations; Andy Abrams, Chataqua director.

The conference, "Lebanon and the Prospects of War and Peace in the Middle East," will begin at 7:45 p.m. tonight with an address by Khalil Itani, the ambassador of Lebanon to the United States.

A panel discussion entitled "United States Interests in Lebanon" will begin at 9:00 a.m. Mar. 27. Panelists will include Morris Draper, deputy assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern and South Asian Affairs; Dory Chamoun, secretary-general of the Lebanese National Liberal Party; Rev. J. Bryan Hehir, director of the International Office of Justice and Peace for the United States Catholic Conference; and Michael Francis, chairman of the department of Government and International Studies at Notre Dame.

A panel discussion entitled "Religious and Communal Currents in the Lebanese Conflict" will begin at 1:00 p.m. Mar. 27. Panelists will include Imam Mohamad Jawad Chirri, director of the Islamic Center of Detroit and spiritual leader of America's largest Muslim and Arab community; Leonard Binder, professor of political science at the University of Chicago; and Basil Collins, professor of geography at the University of Toledo.

A round table discussion to which all conference participants are invited will begin at 8:00 p.m. Mar. 27. The discussion moderator will be Allen Dowty, professor of government and international studies at Notre Dame.

A panel discussion entitled "Lebanon: Key to Peace in the Middle East" will begin at 9:00 a.m. Mar. 28. Panelists will include Paul Jureidini, vice president of Abbott Associates; John Entelis, chairman of the department of political science at Fordham University, and Muhamad Mughraby, an international lawyer and Lebanese political leader.

There will be a summary discussion of the conference at 11:00 a.m. Mar. 28 moderated by Rev. Ernest Bartell, C.S.C., director of the Helen Kellogg Institute for International Studies at Notre Dame. All conference events, which are open to the public, will take place in the center for Continuing Education at Notre Dame.

'Employee-related'

Hewlett outlines company success

By MIKE MONK
Editor-in-Chief

The great success of the Hewlett-Packard Company can be attributed to its placing high priority on the welfare of its employees, said its co-founder and director, William R. Hewlett.

The lecture, entitled "The Human Side of Management", outlined the basic history of H-P and the various policies which have brought the company from its simple origins to its present status as a major designer and manufacturer of sophisticated electronic equipment.

The company was started in 1939 by Hewlett and David Packard in Packard's garage in Palo Alto, California. Today the company employs over 65,000 people in eighteen U.S. cities and 65 countries worldwide and reported revenues of $3 billion in 1980.

Hewlett said Packard and he were products of the Great Depression, and this greatly influenced the way in which the company was to be run.

"We wanted a dedicated and loyal work force," Hewlett said, "and we knew that this could be accomplished only with a very special management approach."

As the company began to grow, Hewlett and Packard started to implement several employee benefit programs which were unheard of at the time. Because the two men realized the importance of every individual within the company, they began a profit sharing plan which equally benefited everyone from the founders to the janitors. In the late 1940's, the company established a medical insurance plan which provided finances for the family of a disabled employee for as long as he or she was unable to work.

More recently H-P has experimented with flexible work hours with mixed results. Currently employees can work any time between 6:30 a.m. and 8:30 p.m. as long as they put in a full eight hours. The program has proven successful and has been implemented in most of the divisions.

Not so successful was a four day, ten hour work week which "failed miserably" according to Hewlett.

These programs and other innovative ideas have earned H-P a reputation as one of the best-managed companies in the electronics industry.

"We just don't talk about taking care of our employees, it's a fact," Hewlett said. He offered several examples to support this claim, the most dramatic having taken place during the recession in 1971. Facing a great loss of business, H-P was considering laying off over 10,000 employees.

Realizing the devastating effect such a move would have upon the jobless workers and their families, H-P instead opted to work every other Friday without pay. No one was laid off and business was back to normal about six months later.

In a further attempt to stress the "human side of management," Hewlett said that H-P makes "strenuous efforts to keep all employees, no matter how deficient they may be in a certain position." Whenever this problem arises, the management tries its best to match employees with compatible jobs, or "lateral motion" as opposed to a demotion or firing. H-P fires an employee "only as a last resort," said Hewlett.

The basic guiding system utilized by H-P is "management by objectives" (MBO) which is a form of participatory management where managers and employees work closely in order to achieve the goals. Although MBO has an mixed track record, it has been working successfully for H-P since its inception.

"With MBO, all the employees feel like members of a team, all pulling together, working toward the same goals," explained Hewlett. "Everyone shares in reaching the goals and everyone profits from them in turn."

All the managers and executives have an "open-door" policy, where any employee at any time can talk or complain to a superior. According to Hewlett, this acts "as a good safety-valve."

Another common practice which is designed as a safety-valve is what Hewlett calls "community lunches," where a senior executive visits a division and has lunch with 15-20 randomly selected employees. This offers the workers an opportunity to address questions and complaints to one of the higher officials in the company.

Hewlett stressed throughout the lecture that a company can never do too much in order to make its employers happier. "I think we must re-invest in the human side of management."

Hewlett spoke before an attentive audience of over 200 students, faculty and business people yesterday in the auditorium of the Center for Continuing Education as a part of the Eugene B. Clark Executive Lecture Series.

Space shuttle Columbia Commander Jack R. Lousma begins a demonstration to show how flying insects behave in a gravity-free environment. (AP laserphoto)

Pleasant voyage

Columbia nears half-way point

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Astronaut C. Gordon Fullerton nudged the shuttle closer to its future as a space freighter yesterday, waving Columbia's robot arm and demonstrating it has the muscle to lift a payload and eventually place it in an orbit of its own.

"If there were any surprises, they were all pleasant," the pilot said. "I'm really impressed with that piece of machinery."

Columbia, sailing smoothly, neared half-way point of its seven-day voyage. Fullerton and Commander Jack R. Lousma apparently had overcome their motion sickness and got some needed rest.

The grab-and-lift was the first test of the Canadarm's capacity to do the job it was built for — depositing and retrieving satellites in space and waving scientific instruments into place outside the orbiter. The arm is assigned its first for-hire duties on Flight 7, scheduled for April 1983, when it will release a German scientific satellite.

Canadian developers of the arm were "ecstatic, or at least as ecstatic as engineers can be," a spokesman said.

Columbia was flying yesterday with its nose to the sun, its tail in the cold shadows. Tomorrow, after 80 hours in that position, the astronauts are to fire three sets of engines in the tail to determine if they have been affected by long exposure to temperatures down to 215 degrees below zero.

The 116-orbit mission would be half over by bedtime and NASA workers were putting the last logistical touches on the burgeoning spaceport being erected on the White Sands Missile Range in New Mexico.

The arm test was a turning point for Flight 3, because it had been delayed by a video failure on Tuesday and there were some fears that the important demonstration might be impossible without it.

In exercising the Canadian-built arm, Fullerton was handicapped in his exacting task by the malfunction. The TV picture was to have guided him to his target.

Using a pair of binoculars and video from fixed cameras in the cargo bay, Fullerton maneuvered the arm gingerly over a package of scientific instruments in the cargo bay, lowered it onto a grapple fixture, and locked on with the crane's wire-snare hand.

With the spindly arm, Fullerton lifted the 353-pound payload and moved it around the bay, careful not to hit other experiments stored there. Eventually the arm should be lifting up to 65,000 pounds.

Then he lofted it high out of the cargo bay, showed the arm extended toward earth, a cloud cover over the southeastern United States providing a spectacular background to the diagnostic package.

Mission Control's Sally Ride said the package — monitoring the shuttle's electromagnetic field — "is getting super data."

The shuttle's stopped-up toilet was still giving trouble, but flight director Tom Holloway said "I think were limping along ... we are thinking about additional steps to take."

Best news of all to NASA was that both Lousma, who vomited the first day, and Fullerton were no longer complaining of feeling ill.

know what the students are thinking about the issue unless they speak out," he said.

"Deserving students are going to be hurt by the budget. This will mainly affect middle-class and lower-middle-class students.

"College may eventually be for the wealthy alone, if these cuts are carried out."

Ward detects an "insensitivity" coming out of Washington now.

"Talented, eligible students won't be able to attend Notre Dame, he said. The Reagan administration will see this as well and good, as long as they aren't in such a position."

Ward participated in Notre Dame's Solidarity march and expressed doubt concerning President Reagan's budget as well as his handling of the El Salvador situation.

"My concern is the way Reagan is talking about 'rearming America', because the end result would be war within six months or a year," he said. "I would like for this to be the major concern of the voters."

Ward added that he does not think violence is an adequate solution to the problems in El Salvador.

"It seems to me the United States is playing games in El Salvador ... turning it into a win/lose situation."

Ward served in the Army during the Vietnam war and cited a major benefit from that experience. "People step back and take a closer look at the circumstances involved in war now," he said.

"I don't think Reagan sees the situation as most people in my district do. I believe my constituents feel we should not be involved in El Salvador — we don't have military or economic interests there."

Ward graduated from Notre Dame in 1970, and earned his JD Degree from the University of Denver in 1974.

Deteriorating situation in Central America

Concerning the deteriorating situation in Central America, a few observations:

1) There is no practical means by which the United States can arrest the violence sweeping the area. The "Roosevelt (Teddy) Corollary" to the Monroe Doctrine asserted a general right to intervene in Latin America in the case of (get this): "chronic wrongdoing or an impotence which results in a general loosening of the ties of civilized societies."

William Buckley

It is not intended as ethnically invidious to remark that history shows a propensity for violence in Latin America. We have our crime in the streets, the Germans had Hitler, the Russians had Stalin and his successors — the Latin Americans incline to massive political violence. During the civil war in Colombia that began in 1948, 300,000 Colombians were estimated to have been killed. That, in American terms, would amount to 4 million to 5 million deaths by violence, far more than have died at war throughout the history of the United States; about 100 times our losses during the excruciating war in Vietnam.

2) This does not mean that the United States should be indifferent to the scale of political violence in Central America, but does mean that we must jealously guard the relevant distinction. And it is this: Where is violence being cultivated, with a view to exporting it? One should not tire of repeating the fatalistic but wise maxim of Senator Fulbright, that the United States government has no proper quarrel with any nation no matter how obnoxious its domestic policies, so long as it does not seek to export them.

3) However grotesque, then, the leaders of Guatemala, or the death squads associated with the government of El Salvador, our concern is with Nicaragua. Why? Because it is becoming a staging base for exported political violence. Why does Nicaragua need an army of 70,000? You will say: to guard against being overthrown by the CIA. But the mobilization was under way well before the United States turned hostile toward the Sandinistas.

And, of course, Nicaragua becomes an arsenal as a result of another staging base, namely Cuba. And Cuba? We all know the answer. Cuba would be prostrate economically if it were not for the Soviet Union.

Our direct quarrel, then, is with Cuba. It is perhaps too late to arrest the decline of El Salvador. The reach of terrorism is underestimated in a country that has never experienced it. But the notion that the elections of late March will establish anything, when the guerrillas have publicly promised death to anyone who votes, is ludicrous. And so the demoralization of an army largely untrained proceeds. Answer?

We have got to get at Cuba. A declaration of war, given the record of its hostility to the United States, could plausibly be framed. But meanwhile it behooves us to blockade Central America, by air and sea, arresting all movement of arms to the area. Our diplomacy should focus directly on harnessing sponsoring resolutions by Latin American nations. And here, Mexico is critical.

Solidarity protests Hesburgh trip

The following is an excerpt of a letter presented to Fr. Hesburgh on March 23rd by a committee representing the ND-SMC El Salvador Solidarity Group.

Father Hesburgh:

The following are reasons for which we strongly urge you to decline your participation in the State Department's mission of observing the March 28th elections in El Salvador.

By refusing direct involvement in the mission at this time, you would be best serving the positive goals we all share and would lend support to pursuing the most logical, forthcoming steps in solution of the crisis, that of negotiation.

I. Elections are fraudulent

The present regime has refused any negotiations with the FDR, the popular based opposition coalition. "...Through the publication by the Army last spring of a list of 138 'psychopaths', 'traitors', and 'terrorists' which the military declared its intention to 'relentlessly pursue.' 'This list included every significant member of the FDR's leadership, as well as many others, and was understandably perceived by those leaders as a sign that the government was not interested in discussion.'" (Congressman Gary Stutes)

II. The political reality of El Salvador will be misrepresented to U.S. observers.

It is unlikely that blatant violations will be visible to observers on election day — the political coercion is taking place now.

III. U.S. Domestic Repercussions

Participation by respected U.S. leaders as observers in El Salvador will be understood by the people of the United States as a sign that the elections are fair and that they truly represent the will of the Salvadoran people. The presence of respected figures, such as yourself, will enable the Salvadoran government to lead the people of the United States and the world to believe that the elections are legitimate.

These non-representative elections will be used by the U.S. States Department to justify its current policy of a United States backed military solution to the problems in El Salvador.

Therefore, those who participate as observers for the State Department in the upcoming elections, are directly serving to legitimize current U.S.

military policy in El Salvador.

IV. Negotiations must precede elections in a political settlement

Statements of Bishop Arturo Rivera y Damas of San Salvador propose that a political solution to the armed conflict requires a different order of events: negotiations must precede the elections.

Out of sixty countries invited by the Salvadoran government to send observers to the elections, only five governments have officially accepted. Of those who declined, most stated they "support a political settlement," implying that these elections are not a step in that direction; they insist that a political settlement must begin with negotiations.

The U.S. Catholic Conference supports a negotiated settlement and condemns current U.S. military policy in El Salvador.

In conclusion, we, the ND-SMC El Salvador Solidarity Group, recognize the complexity of this issue and appreciate the sincerity of your motives in dealing with the situation. You are a highly regarded Catholic leader, respected by Catholics and non-Catholics alike. Through your role as an official electoral observer, millions of Americans will be led to trust in the legitimacy of the Salvadoran electoral process.

As concerned students at Notre Dame, we share with you a profound devotion to truly living Christian values in our pursuit of social justice in the World. In light of these values, we feel the most positive action on your part in bringing about justice for the people of El Salvador, will be to decline the invitation of the State Department and refuse to participate in a strategy that holds little promise for the future of the people.

El Salvador: a lack of alternatives

In this, the second of a two-part series, senior Jim McGillivray analyzes the most practical ways in which the U.S. can deal with the crisis in El Salvador.

Jim McGillivray

No one knows what the future holds for El Salvador or what the upcoming elections will do to the country. Everyone seems to be putting forward simplistic solutions to complex problems.

Killing leftist rebels will deal with a symptom but certainly will not bring about a cure. The desire for land reform, education, freedom and justice cannot be bought off or shot apart.

Enlightened U.S. aid geared toward creating economic stability and self-sufficiency for the economy of El Salvador will be critical for eventual peace in El Salvador.

Guns will not provide a lasting cure, especially when used with an apparent lack of discrimination by government forces.

Duarte is barely able to keep control of the military. He has done as much as any one man could to be a moderating influence, but he is trapped, too. Any more reforms and he will be removed by the Right. Any less, and the moderates will desert him. As it stands now, the Left is obviously dissatisfied. The peasants want land reform and guaranteed survival.

The situation has degenerated to the point where our advisors and their advisors push and agitate for gains which certainly won't be enjoyed by the people of El Salvador.

They probably will not be any better off under a Marxist regime. But they certainly will not be worse off than the present reign of murder and repression.

It is impossible to judge right and wrong in El Salvador; there does not seem to be any "right". We have surrendered everything we believe in to prop up a corrupt, immoral government merely to maintain a point of political honor.

Is it worth it? How much will we put up with? American nuns have been murdered as a warning to the press in general. All of this reflects on us because we support and apparently encourage a strong military handling of the revolt.

We can force the situation into an "us"/"them" choice for the people of El Salvador. All we stand to lose is the point of honor. But the people bear the results and now any of the possible outcomes is a loss for them.

I am not naive enough to suggest that the situation could have developed other than it has. Hard political realities frequently cause "freedom" and "justice" to become mere words.

Duarte represents the only sanity in the government of El Salvador but his position is tenuous. His hands are effectively tied by those who put him in power and a rapidly anti-communist American government devoid of feeling or understanding for a largely peasant population.

That population has seen what we have to offer them. Perhaps with an understanding of rural, essentially uneducated Third World people we could have controlled the flow of economic aid and military hardware in such a way as to be beneficial to all the people of El Salvador. But probably not and it is too late now anyway.

The polarization has taken place and we have driven a large part of the population in El Salvador towards the Cuban-centered communist camp through a simple lack of alternatives. President Reagan can give an "Aw, shucks" and go draw another line in some other country.

For the people of El Salvador there is no such option. That is the way of international politics.

Jim McGillivray

Buffalo exposes naked reality

This weekend at Washington Hall the ND/SMC Theater Department will conclude its 1981-1982 Second Scene series with a production of David Mamet's American Buffalo. First performed in Chicago in 1975 and then in New York in 1977, American Buffalo won both an Obie and the New York Drama Critics Circle Award for Best New Play. Its revival at Circle in the Square in New York with Al Pacino plus an increasing amount of critical analysis has elevated both the play and its author to the front ranks of contemporary drama.

Mamet, however, is no stranger to success. In 1974, his Sexual Perversity in Chicago accrued both the Joseph Jefferson Award (Best New Chicago Play) plus an Obie. Because of the uniqueness of its title it is the Mamet play with which most people are familiar. Other works which are quickly becoming stock pieces at any theater include: A Life in the Theater, The Water Engine, The Woods and The Duck Variations. He also wrote the screenplay for The Postman Always Rings Twice and has a play, Lakeboat, currently running at the Goodman Theater in Chicago.

Of all these plays, none exposes the necessity of illusion in the face of human insufficiency as does American Buffalo. With technical precision, the play revolves to show its characters stripped of both the affected trappings of commonplace mannerisms and the blanketed security of long theatrical speeches. The language is sharp and crisp; to the point where the words actually become the action. The effect is a pervasive lyricism — one of the few contemporary plays that washes in to poetry.

But it is the poetry of the street. The language is explicit but not inaccessible. Jack Kroll said that Mamet is "the first playwright to create a formal and moral shape out of the undeleted expletives of our foul-mouthed time." Mamet's ability to strip reality and theater of its burdening pretensions and to present, not the absurd world of Beckett, but a naked American reality marks the beginning towards a simple yet brutally honest evaluation of both imagination and world. What is glorified is not crowning victory but the sustained relationships that occur between people in the shadows of humiliation. Thus, the ethics of this play lie in the little heaps of dust and decay which are always left behind.

The Second Scene productions follow in the wake of the Theater Department's Subscription Series, but nevertheless, because they are usually student-run they exude a special creative energy that comes from the pure act of playing with the text, with the staging and with the acting. The three previous Second Scenes, Six Characters in Search of an Author, Adieu Emma and Duel of Angels shared this quality and American Buffalo promises to do no less.

American Buffalo will be shown tonight and tomorrow night at 8 p.m. in Washington Hall.

Tarantulas play Beaux Arts Ball

Just a few short years ago, Fred Dubisson was hard at work on a B.S. in mathematics at Notre Dame. Today he is the hard-working bass player for The Tarantulas, a rock and roll band that plays no b.s.

The Tarantulas (formerly known as The Pages) have become one of the midwest's most original and innovative new bands, performing with a dramatic flair that has earned them the accolade of being, "the best live act in town."

The band will be playing at the Beaux Arts Ball tomorrow night in the architecture building. The ball is a tradition that dates back to a 1930's formal ball for the students and faculty of the Ecole des Beaux Beaux Arts, Paris' renowned school of design. The tradition carried over to American schools; the string quartet has since been replaced by more modern music, and the common theme is that of a costume ball.

On stage, the focus of The Tarantulas centers on Dubisson's kinetic bass playing and the showmanship of lead singer Tommy Thompson, who also writes much of the group's original material. The Tarantulas play energetic, danceable rock and roll that spans the musical gamut from Elvis Presley to Elvis Costello.

The cable TV revolution: That's entertainment

I always find something new at my house when I go home — new animals, new furniture or new types of frozen dinners — and this spring was no exception. I was reading the paper late one night and something on the television caught my eye: a commercial for a used car dealer in Brooklyn. That was strange since I was in Milwaukee; I decided to investigate.

Paul Kosidowski

Second Thoughts

"It's cable, stupid," my sister told me.

I was thrilled that our household had finally joined the mainstream of society. I've heard the "cable revolution" is the biggest thing since drip coffee makers and I thought that it was something a responsible citizen should know how to use, just like voting machines and microwave ovens.

There is no "user's guide" for cable television, but there are a lot of schedules. The book we get from Cablevision every month has 48 pages and tells what the programming will be on the four movie stations, the two sports channels, the three out-of-town super cables, the special news channel, and the "cultural" cable. On the inside cover they print a short essay by an aspiring but unknown writer who obviously spends most of his time watching TV.

The local stations are in the newspaper as usual. The schedule for the ARTS channel, another culture cable, is sometimes in the paper and sometimes on the back of the handbills my mother brings home from the supermarket. To get information about the other stations you either have to have relatives in Chicago (in Milwaukee you get four stations from there) or you can watch the special channel that shows a computer schedule of the other 31 stations. The computer also plays soft music to soothe the people who are having trouble deciding what to watch that night.

Having a free evening, I checked the schedules (the computer was "temporarily under repair"). At 7 the movie channels were featuring North by Northwest which is my favorite Hitchcock film and Any Which Way You Can, the only Clint Eastwood movie I haven't seen. Theif and Eyewitness were on at 8. I had heard that both of these are very good. On the sports channels I could watch either tennis or pro hockey. I used to watch tennis on Sunday afternoons with my sister and I remember enjoying that. The one hockey game I have seen was very exciting.

One of the cultural cables was televising the Royal Shakespeare Company's production of Macbeth — no graduating English Major should miss that. The three super cables all had old movies on. I checked my Encyclopedia of Film and found that they were all rated 4 stars, the best you can get. There is nothing I like better than a good, old movie.

Luckily there wasn't another movie on the ARTS station. They were showing a special on Vincent Van Gogh, who is a great artist and led a fascinating life. I've always wanted to know more about him.

The local channels had some good shows on too: Leonard Bernstein conducting Beethoven's 6th Symphony and other "award-winning" programming. Almost everything wins some sort of award these days. I wish someone would rate the different awards and honors so I would know which of them mean anything. I'd also like to know which critics are the most consistent and trustworthy. I'd don't know which one to listen to and theatre and concert tickets are getting expensive.

One thing good about the scheduling of these programs is that everything is always shown more than once. Since North by Northwest was on again at 4:30 the next morning, I decided to watch it then. The intermission of Macbeth would be at about 8:20 which would mean, if my calculations are correct, I could catch the post-game highlights of tennis match during that time. The second act of Macbeth is no great shakes, so I could skip that and catch the last movement of the Beethoven symphony and the ending of Casablanca.

Some of the programs these days are simulcast on certain radio stations which means it's possible to "watch" two shows at once. The best part of Shakespeare is, of course, the language and the Van-Gogh documentary is subtitled for the hearing impaired so I could watch one and listen to the other, while still checking for some good fights in the hockey game.

My first night with cable television was quite an enriching experience. It's difficult to imagine the effect of having so much information and entertainment at the fingertips of the American public. I've been told that we will soon do our banking, shopping and other chores through the magic of television. I think that's fine... as long as nobody interrupts any of my programs.

Suddenly, last summer

A few years ago, a former N.D. student dropped by to see me. He was twenty-eight years old, and he had finally settled down, he said. He had a nice wife and a good job, and he was very happy. Things had been rough for a while, and he had scars, he said. He had had two other marriages, which ended in divorce; there had been two extramarital affairs which had included abortions. He went on to speak of the ways he was now prospering, and mentioned how absolutely lovely it was to see Notre Dame again, now that he could appreciate the place more, after living for a while in the real world.

I almost stopped listening, numbed by what he had told me. He had been a bright, eager young Christian when I knew him as a student; a good-looking kid, who had everything going for him. He was still young, and I hoped he was still Christian; but he seemed a little sad now, shabby before his time. I don't know how he felt over the failed marriages, or what guilt he carried from being involved in two abortions. I don't know how bad he felt making the same mistakes twice.

He wasn't asking me for anything; pity or sympathy or mercy of the Church. He wasn't playing the role of sinner, sick of being soiled, looking for a way home. He was making a progress report of his life, that was all. I was an old friend who happened to be a priest; priests like to hear what has happened; old friends can accept the truth in a casual way, even if it isn't pleasant. A friend would never be judgemental about your errors; he will be tolerant and supportive and infinitely understanding, if he is a man of the world. I was certainly being regarded as a man of the world, and, even when I'm not worldly, I wear the mask well.

I've heard sadder stories. It is hard, by the time you're twenty-eight, to have made enough mistakes so that your life is ruined. A person who has never had to go through the difficulty of beginning again, after life has handed him a temporary defeat, is probably a person who has never risked very much. Yesterday's failures belong to yesterday. Maybe there were sweet days he would remember from the sad times. No experience is entirely wasted; life, at best, is a bittersweet affair.

These were my reflections as a man of the world. "I'm sorry for your problems, pal. Now you love a woman in the marriage that will count. Now will come the children whose birth you will cherish. Now you have the job that will earn your security. Now you can build a home that is full of peace."

These are the words he needed to hear me say, the congratulatory words on his well-ordered life. I assured him that I thought he was now well on the way to saving his soul, and I hoped it was true.

I felt other, stronger emotions that I kept to myself. I could have wept over what he had told me; I was angry with him for making a mess of things, and I was afraid of how well he could handle the future.

Two divorces, two abortions — by age twenty-eight: how did you mess up so badly, I wanted to ask.

Rev. Robert Griffin

Letters to a Lonely God

He probably would have answered: "I was in a hurry." No character defect here; no curse to be blamed, no evil companions leading him down the primrose path of destruction. He was in a hurry, that was all; impatient to get on in the real world. "I was in a hurry" — before love failed, before life cheated, before the first chance had gotten lost in limbo, before chaos disturbed the ruling order.

Innocence, I think, belongs to affirmations, and to the happy choices we assent to. The denials and negations kill us, as when we say no to a love that was offered, or to a life for which we have become responsible. We begin to die from all our refusals; and damnation, if it ever happens, is a final gasping denial, leaving us with the experience of complete wretchedness, because we are terminally unwilling to have innocence forever.

I gave him my blessing before he left; he didn't ask me, but I asked if I could bless him. "From now on, don't be in such a hurry," I said, and he promised me, he wouldn't. That was a few years ago, and I haven't seen or heard from him since.

He went off to live the rest of his life. Neither of us knew whether the worst years or the best years were ahead or behind. Twenty-eight is not very old, but he was older at his age than I was at fifty. Nothing, I think, looks seedier than premature age.

There is a time of life that is golden like the summer. It passes quickly enough as summer always does. When it is over, life will never be as young again. Something wistful begins with the first days of autumn. My friend, less than ten years out of Notre Dame, had entered his September.

The old grads come back. I see the lines that have arrived early in the beautiful faces of people who have disappointed themselves.

The real world, at any age, is the world of your own making.

Direction, Lemmon not Missing

Costa-Gavras is the sort of film director that isn't afraid to go heavy on the politics in the creation of a political thriller. Missing, his latest film, is no exception. In these times of Reaganomics and conservative trends, it is refreshing to see an American movie that is so overtly political. But don't think that this film is some sort of unpolished soapbox. Costa-Gavras is a skillful director who can weave a storyline out of pertinent political issues in order to heighten the dramatic tension that makes his films so riveting.

Dennis Chalifour

Missing is based on the true story of Charles Horman, an American animator and writer who was abducted by the military junta during the Chilean coup d'etat in 1975. As always, Costa-Gavras deliberately leaves the name of the country in the film anonymous in order to avoid particularizing the scandal involved to only one instance. The film opens in medias res as a handful of Americans attempt to lead normal lives in the chaos of their environment. The audience can't help but wonder what on earth is happening as soldiers execute people in the street while a few dance in a ballroom just a few feet away.

Just as we are convinced that Americans at least are safe from the outside violence, Horman is snatched away, setting the stage for the dramatic interplay between his father, Ed (Jack Lemmon) and wife, Beth (Sissy Spacek). Their relationship, which starts out as a male-female duel between liberalism and conservatism, goes beyond the political and becomes a mutual quest for truth amid a sea of uncertainty. Costa-Gavras assembles the film with a shock-style editing scheme giving the entire film a quality of ambiguity that spearheads the quest. Without warning, flashbacks intrude upon the action with various versions of the truth, constantly suspending the audience between the real and unreal.

The ironic clash between the "true story" and Costa-Gavras' study in uncertainty is reinforced by the understatement of ubiquitous violence. Throughout the film, violence is present only in the background as characters dine amidst machine-gun muzak or hop over dead bodies in order to catch a bus.

Ricardo Aronovich's photography is bright and quasi-cheerful while Vangelis' electronic soundtrack is sparse and mostly subdued.

Withholding familiar dramatic tools, Costa-Gavras disorients his audience, hitting them unawares in the manner of a political cover-up. Fittingly, the only scene in the film that uses the tricks of filmic drama serves the function of a Hitchcock MacGuffin, diverting the audience from the focus of the story — the actual abduction.

What may be Costa-Gavras' own coup is Missing's intertwining strands of irony, understatement, and uncertainty is his counter-casting of Jack Lemmon as Ed Horman. From the very first time he is on the screen, Lemmon is the quintessential oblivious American. He is a man forced to come to grips with injustice at a personal level, all the while gaining a truer understanding of his son through his daughter-in-law. Lemmon's performance, surely one of the best of his career, drives the point home with a personal frustration that becomes the heart of the movie.

Viewers checking out of General Hospital

The most overrated program in television history may finally be coming back down to earth. "General Hospital," the ABC weekday afternoon soap opera, has been sinking fast for the last three months in the audience ratings, and it might not be too much longer before "All My Children" leapfrogs past "GH" to reclaim the No. 1 daytime crown.

Please understand: "General Hospital" still is a popular show. But since Christmas, the formerly red-hot serial has lost 25 percent of its viewers, not to mention its leading lady, teenage heartthrob Genie Francis, who played Laura for the last five years.

About 3 million viewers have checked out of "General Hospital" in the last three months. Some of them now watch "The Guiding Light" on CBS, a rejuvenated soap that's enjoying a tremendous resurgence of popularity; others simply aren't watching TV at all during that time slot.

And if that trend continues, General Hospital soon will end its four year reign atop the daytime audience mountain. When that happens, look for "All My Children," a splendiferous soap, (or perhaps even "The Guiding Light") to take over as the most-watched daytime program.

Gary Deeb

How did "General Hospital" waste its enormous viewership? What's transforming so many of its fans into defectors? How could one of America's hottest topics of conversation cool off so quickly? Here are some answers:

• The most obvious cause is the resignation of Genie Francis. At the tender age of 19, Francis was playing such a crucial role for so long. Her Laura character vanished from "GH" in January, never to return. As a result, it appears that many teenage fans of the program have dialed out, despite the continued existence of adolescent rock star Rick Springfield as a major "GH" character.

• Another important factor in the decline of "General Hospital" was last summer's defection of the entire writing staff, led by Pat Falken Smith. Disgusted with dictatorial producer Gloria Monty, Smith assembled all her writers and staged a mass walkout. The group has since assumed the writing chores on "Days of our Lives" on NBC. Monty was so angered by Smith's resignation that her office leaked the inaccurate information that Smith was fired; when Smith threatened legal action against "that crummy, insecure broad," Monty quickly recanted and admitted that Smith had quit on her own.

• Monty and her new writers have thoroughly botched the "GH" storyline. It started going downhill last June with the absurd science fiction fantasy-mystery, and it continues to this day, with Monty & Co. expecting viewers to believe the most implausible events. Even the disappearance of Laura — an intentional look-alike for the departed Miss Francis. Interestingly enough, many of the "GH" cast members privately admit that they now hate the program and are outraged by the nonsensical storyline.

• As the iron-fisted "GH" producer, Monty steadfastly has refused to let any of her underlings develop enough power to handle the program in her absence. Thus, when Monty was out of action for two months because of an operation for cervical cancer, the show limped along while everybody simply waited for the boss to get out of her sickbed.

The downfall of "General Hospital" comes at a time when many other daytime soaps are improving their storylines, pepping up their production values and boosting their grip on the imagination of the mass TV audience.

For instance, the aforementioned "Guiding Light," which has been on the tube continuously for 30 years, has made an amazing comeback — both creatively and in the viewer derby — under the direction of head writer Douglas Marland. "Guiding Light" is now the hot soap on daytime.

And "Capitol," the new CBS soap specializing in sex and politics, will hit the air at the end of this month. To get "Capitol" off to a roaring start, CBS will present a prime-time preview of the show on the preceding Friday night, right after the super-popular "Dallas."

That's an awful lot of action in the potentially lucrative daytime program arena.

With discount clubs

Allin paces Heritage golf field

HILTON HEAD ISLAND, S.C. (AP) — Buddy Allin, using a set of irons he pulled off a discount house shelf only hours earlier, birdied the last five holes on the way to a seven-under-par 64 and a tie for the first-round lead yesterday in the $300,000 Sea Pines-Heritage Classic.

Allin, a five-time career winner who once dropped off the tour for a two-year period, shared the top spot with longshot Mike Donald. Donald, who once made a living as a delivery boy for a florist shop, found himself right at home among the blazing blooms of azaleas, wistria and jasmine that color the Harbour Town Golf Links. He birdied the last four holes to finish off the best round of his career.

Allin, who won four decorations as an artillery officer in Vietnam, and Donald were three strokes ahead of Gibby Gilbert, Mike McCullough and David Edwards, tied at 67.

A big group at 68 was headed by Jerry Pate, the winner last week of the prestigious Tournament Players Championship, and former PGA titleholder John Mahaffey. Also at 68 were Gary Hallberg, Scott Hoch, Ron Streck, Bobby Wadkins, Tommy Valentine, George Burns, Doug Tewell and Howard Twitty.

Tom Watson and Tom Kite were in a large group at 70. Bill Rogers, who used a victory in this event last season as a stepping stone to Player of the Year honors, carded a 72 in the mild, calm, cloudy weather.

Allin, whose last victory came in the 1976 Pleasant Valley Classic, dropped off the tour in 1978 when he became dissatisfied with the constant travel. After two seasons as a club pro in California, he returned to the tour and had been struggling to regain his form since then.

He said he'd had his irons reshaped early this week, didn't like the result, and early yesterday drove to a discount house and bought a set of irons off the shelf — paying the list price of $422.

"No," he replied to a question, "they didn't recognize me."

He didn't have a chance to get them checked for loft and lie, but did it by eye and decided "they looked about right." He stuck them in the bag and went out to play one of the more demanding courses on the tour. He also used a new putter in competition for the first time.

He was two under par for the first

13 holes — "just kind of experimenting," he said — then we on his birdie binge, using five of the nine new irons to set them up.

A 6-iron shot left him a 12-footer on the 14th and he made it. He dropped a 15-foot putt after a 9-iron approach on the 15th. A 7-iron shot stopped within four feet of the flag on the 16th and produced a third consecutive birdie. He scored from about 12 feet on the 17th and 18th after hitting a 5-iron and a 4-iron.

"I had no idea I'd made five birdies in a row until I started checking my card," Allin said.

Versace's Braves will stay well-stocked

NEW YORK (AP) — Dick Versace, Bradley basketball coach, still has a well-stocked cupboard although he loses his entire front line, including Most Valuable Player Mitchell Anderson, from the team that won the 45th National Invitation Tournament title.

Junior guards Barney Mines and Willie Scott, who had 17 points apiece to lead Bradley scorers in the 67-58 NIT final victory over Purdue Wednesday night, will be returning starters for next season.

But Versace said Voise Winters, a freshman forward who averaged 10 points in the first three games of the tournament but didn't play in the semifinal and final games in New York because of an ankle injury, might be the next Bradley star.

"He's an exciting player who averaged over 40 points per game in high school to lead the nation as a senior," Versace said.

The senior front line of Anderson, David Thirdkill and Donald Reese will be missed by the Braves, who finished the season with a 26-10 record.

Anderson, who scored 25 points in the semifinal victory over Oklahoma and 16 in the triumph over Purdue, said winning the NIT and the MVP award was "the greatest feeling I've had in my four years of basketball. I dreamed of getting in the Final Four of the NCAA, but didn't get there. I also dreamed of getting in some kind of national tournament. That's the next best thing."

In winning the title for the fourth time in its 14th NIT appearance, the Braves pulled even with St. John's, N.Y., for the most championships. The Braves' other title years were 1957, 1960 and 1964.

Texas takes lead in NCAA swimming

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Bill Barrett of UCLA broke his own U.S. record in the 200-yard freestyle, while defending champion Texas gained a slim lead in team standings after yesterday's opening competition of the three-day NCAA Men's Swimming and Diving Championships.

Barrett's time of 1 minute, 45 seconds bettered his previous mark, set at last year's National Collegiate Athletic Association championships, by one-hundredth of a second. He finished ahead of second place Steve Lundquist of Southern Methodist.

The defending champion Longhorns ended the day's competition at the Walter Schroeder Aquatic Center in suburban Brown Deer with 72 points, just one point ahead of UCLA. Southern Methodist and California were tied for third at 40, followed by Stanford with 38.

The Texas team of James Britt, Nick Nevid, William Paulus and Eric Finical took the 400-yard medley relay in 3:14.24, with Southern Methodist second in 3:14.42 and UCLA third in 3:14.91.

Robin Leamy of UCLA won the 50-yard freestyle in 19.85.

Andy Astbury of Arizona State took the 500-yard freestyle in 4:18.15. The defending titlist in that event, Doug Towne of Arizona, failed to qualify for the final, as he came in with a clocking of 4:27.09 that was 17th among the 20 competitors in preliminary heats.

Robert Bollinger of Indiana won the one-meter diving event with 545.95 points. The defending champion, Randy Ableman of Iowa, finished ninth.

Gretzky reaches 200 points

CALGARY, Alberta (AP) — Edmonton Oilers center Wayne Gretzky became the first player in National Hockey League history to get 200 points in a season last night when he assisted on a goal in the first period of a game against Calgary. The 21-year-old super star reached the 200-point mark by assisting on a goal by Pat Hughes.

Gretzky won a face-off in Calgary's zone and pushed the puck into a corner where he dug it out against Flames rookie defenseman Steve Konroyd.

Gretzky then passed to Hughes who scored with a 20-foot slapshot.

Cincinnati's LaSalle High School during his prep career. "He looked at Phil Carter and Greg Bell in the backfield and thought he might be able to play somewhere else sooner," says Faust.

Seniors Mike Shiner and Tom Thayer are moving back to the spots they occupied as sophomores. Shiner returns to tackle and Thayer to guard, reversing the switch made last spring.

Senior tri-captain Mark Zavagnin will fill Crable's shoes at middle linebacker after playing the weak side the past two seasons. And junior Stacey Toran, a weak side starter at cornerback, takes over John Krimm's job on the strong side.

"You really don't replace people like Crable and Krimm," emphasizes Faust. "You put new people in their spots and you adapt and change things to their strengths."

Unquestionably, the top priority in the next month will be the same one that's haunted the Irish for three straight springs — picking a No. 1 quarterback.

"We didn't really have an established quarterback last year," Faust states. "It was very close between Blair Kiel and Tim Koegel. Definitely, Blair has the edge going into spring, because he's been a two-year starter. Right now, it's his spot until it's taken away by someone else."

There's a long list of players sitting out workouts to heal injuries. The list includes linebacker Joe Rudzinski (shoulder), defensive tackle Kevin Griffith (knee), defensive tackle Pat Kramer (shoulder), defensive tackle Mike Kiernan (knee), defensive tackle Tony Piccin (ankle), tailback Tom Merrick (knee), and tight end Rob McGarry (knee).

Senior center Mark Fischer has been battling severe viruses and may be out of action for a while. Freshman Tom Doerger, scheduled to nurse a knee injury this spring, might be pressed into service there in a few weeks.

Wingback Van Percy is at full strength after last summer's knee surgery, but he intends to run with the Notre Dame track team. "He'll play a little spring ball for us," Faust says, "but he's not going to have any contact because of his knee."

The Irish are practicing on a Monday-Wednesday-Friday-Saturday format. Scrimmages are slated on two Saturdays — April 17 and 24.

Final Four

Watch for Ewing, Hoyas

Ah, to be in New Orleans.

All this week, the French Quarter has been jammed, no doubt, with more than the usual number of revellers. The greatest show in sports has come to the city of sin, suds and song. Tomorrow is the day many call the best of all for sports fans — the NCAA Basketball Championship Semi-Finals.

The winners will be there. John Thompson, Rob Williams, Dean Smith, John Wooden, 'Kid' Thomas Valentine, the Preservation Hall Jazz Band and the McCray Brothers.

The losers will be there too. Ray Meyer, Billy Packer, John Wooden, Al Hirt, Frank Boggs and, believe it or not, Dean Smith.

It all gets underway at exactly 2:39 CST tomorrow in the cavernous Superdome, before the largest crowd ever to see a college basketball game. And it will, if indications are correct, be a truly great weekend.

Ladieees and gentlemen! Let me introduce the principles for the main event.

Black comes down the court and strikes fear into the hearts of opponents when he raises his fist to signal the offense. Four fingers. Four corners. For-get it.

In this corner, the most consistent team in the country. They own the best record, they've been No. 1 more weeks than anyone else, you saw them last year when this show played in Philadelphia. They are led by the man who literally invented the most popular trend in the game today. They're the Tar Heels of North Carolina!

Perhaps it was unfair to list Smith with the losers above — he's one of the most successful coaches in the game. But let's not get too over-zealous in our praise. He's been here six times before and never gone home with the kewpie doll. This year, however, may be his best chance in many moons. Carolina is awesome — and young. Last year the Heels made it to the finals, and then came back this year with that much more experience under their belts.

Jimmy Black is the only senior of significance — but read that major significance. More often than not, if you can stop him, you at least have a shot at the Heels. James Worthy is a junior; Sam Perkins and Matt Doherty are just sophomores; but the three may already comprise the most powerful frontcourt unit in the country.

Mike Lopresti of the Gannett News Service had probably the best description of Smith's favorite weapon in his story this week: "Black comes down the court, he said, and strikes fear into the hearts of opponents when he raises his fist to signal the offense. Four fingers. Four corners. For-get it."

In this corner, the surprising young challenger. They're quick. They're well-coached. They win almost every other tournament they play in. They were supposed to lose to Tulsa, or Missouri, or Boston College, but they're here. They're the Cougars of Houston.

Houston was No. 5 in team offense this year, but its defense was questionable. Nonetheless, the Cougars made it. "When the tournament started, Coach (Guy Lewis) told us he was coming to New Orleans no matter what," said Williams, the Cougars' scoring machine. "But he told us we were welcome to come with him if we wanted. Now here we are."

Williams and Houston had better not blink, however. They take on Carolina in the first game and, since there will be no consolation game this year, they may not be around long.

In this corner, the once retired champs, looking to do a Muhammed Ali impersonation. They won it all in 1980. They stunk up arenas last year. They struggled early, and even lost their conference. But they're here, and they're the Cardinals of Louisville.

Skip Desjardin

With the inevitable passage of Darrell Griffith to the NBA, the Cards fell on bad times. Pancho, Wiley, Jerry and the McCrays remained, but that winning combination was lost. This year, thanks largely to the addition of two sophomores, Louisville is back. Lancaster Gordon and Charles Jones have made a great contribution. Gordon fills it up from outside, while Jones absolutely is fearless going to the hoop.

The Cardinals looked awesome in the game-that-was-to-be-a-classic. They abused Middle Tennessee State, upset winners over odious Kentucky. But they looked half-hearted in getting by Minnesota. That's typical of this team, and no one knows whether they'll come out hot or cold. If they are on, they can walk all over anyone in the field. If they're not, they can walk all over themselves. Turnovers will spell the difference for Denny Crum's crew.

Finally, in this corner, the giants. Well, one giant and a phenomenal bunch of henchmen. They've got what was billed as the best freshman class in history. They're led by the United States Basketball Writers Association's Coach of the Year. And they just might be unstoppable. They're the Hoyas of Georgetown.

Pat Ewing came out of Cambridge (Mass.) Rindge and Latin High School with very impressive athletic credentials, if less-than-dismal academic ability. He was the most sought after player in the country, and already is proving why. In one season he has matured and developed as much as his cross-district rival, Ralph Sampson, has in three. Though he still has a tendency to want to rip opponents' heads off, and looks childish in that stupid T-shirt, he's the best player in the Final Four.

Thompson has three very talented seniors to provide ballast on a team that includes first-year standouts Anthony Jones and Bill Martin as well. One of the seniors is among the most decorated in the nation. Eric "Don't Call Me Sleepy" Floyd is one of the best. Enough said. But Ed Spriggs provides needed relief when Ewing tires, and Eric Smith just may be the glue that hold the whole house of cards together.

Against Oregon State, the Hoyas put on an unfathomable display. Flawless is probably the best way to describe it.

So watch for Carolina to slow things down, trying to get inside to Worthy and Perkins. Watch the Hoyas, who have outscored their opponents by an average of 16 points per game all season long, play a ferocious zone defense. Look for Smith to conduct the symphonic offensive movements. See Ewing, arms outstretched like a DC-10, swallow shots.

Monday night, watch a classic. North Carolina and Georgetown.

TOURNEY TIDBITS — Jimmy the Greek picks the Heels by six over Houston and the Hoyas by five over Louisville. The real applause for prognostication must go to Playboy's Anson Mount. Before the season even began, he ranked Georgetown No. 1, North Carolina No. 2, Louisville No. 4 and Houston No. 18. Monday's game will be shown on CBS, with tip-off slated for 8:12 p.m. EST. ABC will counter in the ratings battle with the Academy Awards. NBC will give up without a struggle, offering the box-office flop "New York, New York."

Spring practices begin tomorrow at Cartier

By KELLY SULLIVAN
Sports Writer

It hasn't been the most pleasant of winters for Gerry Faust. For the first time in 18 years, the Notre Dame head coach wasn't able to bask in the glory that follows a successful football season. It was a tough assignment to handle for a person with an insatiable appetite for winning.

"I'm hungry," confesses Faust. "I can't wait to start going again."

Spring Football '82

Tomorrow afternoon ends an off-season that may have seemed like an eternity to the coaching staff. The Irish begin the first of 20 spring workouts scheduled between now and the annual Blue-Gold game on May 1. To Faust, spring drills are just what the team needs to erase the memory of last season's 5-6 slate.

"When things don't go your way in football, you don't sit around and complain and make excuses," he explains. "You just go out and work harder at it."

Since December, he's had the players on a program that consisted of weightlifting, quickness and flexibility drills. But the serious business begins Saturday. "We didn't have a good year," he says. "That makes us eager to get started again. We just want to get out on the field and establish the team."

He'll have an abundance of experience out on that field to choose from. The Irish are minus only three first-string players (linebacker Bob Crabbe, cornerback John Krimm and offensive tackle Phil Pozderac). Nineteen starters are back, including the top nine rushers and seven of last year's eight best tacklers. Thirty-nine letter winners return, following the graduation of 18 seniors. And that highly-touted '81 freshmen class, for the most part invisible last fall, hopes to live up to its reputation as Notre Dame's finest group of recruits.

"They'll be a lot more competition this spring," notes Faust, "because we have more depth than last year."

Drills will be run pretty much the way they were last spring, though the coaches want to do a little more hitting and scrimmaging this time around. "We want to be more sure of people before fall," he continues. "We need to put them in more pressure situations and see how they react."

Faust hopes to tackle some major chores during the March-April practices. Specifically, he wants to establish a starting lineup, increase the team's familiarity with the offense and defense, and experiment with some position switches.

"We want to try some people at new places to strengthen the ballclub and strengthen their chances of playing," says Faust.

Greg Bell is returning to the tailback slot. The junior split time at wingback with John Mosley most of last fall. This move prompted sophomore rusher Chris Smith to request a stab at linebacker. Smith played that post, in addition to running back, at

It's been a long four months since the 37-15 Miami defeat that ensured Notre Dame's first losing football season in 18 years. But Gerry Faust is eager to get back on the winning track,

Three women named All-Americans

By DONNA WITZLEBEN
Sports Writer

Three Notre Dame women swimmers were named All-Americans during the 1982 National Swimming and Diving Championships held at Allegheny College the weekend of March 11-13. By Friday the Irish were holding 19th place out of 65 Division III schools participating.

Jeanine Blatt, Kathy Latino and Teri Schindler all placed in the top 12 of their events to qualify for All-American honors.

Blatt, a senior from Dayton, Ohio, was named All-America in three events. She finished with a 5:14.05 time in the 500-meter freestyle to place fifth, and then placed seventh in the 1650-meter freestyle with a time of 18:01.22. Blatt won her third All-America placement with a 2:00.01 time in the 200-meter freestyle, finishing tenth.

Latino, a senior who hails from Poughkeepsie, N.Y., claimed All-America titles in two events with a fifth place finish in the 200-meter butterfly in 2:15.21, and an eighth place finish in the 100-meter butterfly in 1:00.38.

Schindler, a junior from Pittsburgh, placed 12th in the 50-meter breaststroke with a :33.59 time to earn her title.

Also participating in the meet was the relay team of senior Rita Harrington and juniors Lee Anne Brislawn, Sheila Roesler and Jean Murtagh, swimming in the 200- and 400-meter medley relay and the 200- and 400-meter free relay.

"We were satisfied with their achievements," stated a pleased Coach Dennis Stark. "I'm proud of the three All-Americans and their accomplishments. They all did very well."

Gerry Faust: A year in the life

"He's looked at football from both sides now" is how Judy Collins might put it. "Both win and lose..."

This time last year, Gerry Faust was a national celebrity. After 18 years at Moeller High in Cincinnati, he had fulfilled his boyhood dream to come to Notre Dame to succeed Dan Devine as head coach.

Those first few months, he was living out his fantasy. He spoke at every dorm on campus, repeating his story about riding his bike to CYO football as a little kid and whistling the Notre Dame fight song. He could recruit Parade All-Americans and catch a frisbee between his legs with the best of them.

And then there was the first day of spring practice, where Faust was at his best. He scurried around the practice field that day in his best Groucho Marx gait, shaking everyone's hand like only a politician could. ABC's Wide World of Sports was there, and so was everyone else, it seemed. The atmosphere was pure Hollywood.

One year later, it is all just a memory.

Tomorrow afternoon at three, Gerry Faust will initiate his second season of spring practices on Cartier Field. ABC won't be there; Faust will have to settle for Channel 16.

That's what a 5-6 season will do to a future legend. As fun as those first few months were, the fall was twice as bad. Problem is, all everyone remembers is Kurt Becker wasting Bob Crabbe; Steve Bryant outjumping Chris Brown for the two-point conversion; Rick Stockstill picking apart the Irish secondary; Jonathan Williams running circles around the ND defense; and the entire Miami fiasco.

Gerry Faust has learned his lesson the hard way. So, starting tomorrow, things will change.

More hitting. More scrimmages. Pats on the behind being replaced by good, swift kicks.

"In football, when things don't go your way," says Faust, "you don't sit around and complain and make excuses. You just go out and work harder at it."

For someone who had lost only 17 games in his life before last year, Faust took last season's disaster pretty well. Now, he is more determined than ever to give Notre Dame a winner. "When you have a great year," Faust says, "you'd like to get to next season, but as a coach you want to say 'It can wait, let's bathe in the good times.'"

"But when you don't have a good year, you want to get started right away."

The new "get-tough" policy won't be the only change. There are three new assistant coaches, players trying new positions and an assortment of new offensive alignments designed to cut down on missed assignments. And, for all you second guessers, some good news — the wingback concept, for all intents and purposes, has been eliminated.

But some things never change. For the third straight year, there will be a quarterback derby, with Blair Kiel getting the post position to start out. "We're gonna try to come out of spring with a quarterback that we feel we can go with," says Faust. "One that's an established quarterback. Last year, we didn't come out of spring with one. It was very close between Kiel and (Tim) Koegel."

"But if we don't have one by the end of spring, we'll have to see what the freshman (Todd Lazon) can do."

Don't be surprised if Kiel gets the nod next fall no matter what, even if he still hasn't learned to throw a pass on the run. Recall that, after all the practices last spring, the star of the Blue-Gold Game was Scott Grooms, who should contend for the starting quarterback position again this year — at Miami of Ohio.

But Faust sees one advantage in his corner this spring. "I know the players now," he says. "Last spring, I didn't know hardly any of them, and they didn't know me. Familiarity between us and them is really gonna help out."

The 1982 opener against Michigan is still six months away, but preparations begin tomorrow, culminating with the Blue-Gold Game on May 1.

From this day on, though, Gerry Faust will be under the microscope, with students and alumni watching his every move with the most critical of eyes. But those who know Gerry Faust say that he always accepts a challenge.

This may be the toughest one yet.
