HPC proposes alcohol 'contracts'

By JANE KRAVCIK
Staff Reporter

Suggestions for the punishment of students who abuse alcohol were part of the Alcohol proposal passed last night at the last Hall President's Council meeting of the semester in Flanner Hall.

A food sales proposal was also passed.

The proposal suggested that the first time a person is caught drunk to the point of being destructive to himself, others or property, he would be given a warning. If the student is caught drunk again, he would have to sign a contract saying that he would not drink for two weeks, and then would not get drunk for two more weeks. A copy of the contract would be sent to the students' parents. If the student broke the contract, he would be sent to the dean of students.

HPC members generally supported this suggestion. Dillon President Bernie Pellegrino said, "this really zeroes in on the abusive drinker. We've used this policy in Dillon for a couple of years. From what I've seen, it does work."

"So many rectors are afraid to go out on a limb," said Zahm President Bob Johnson. "If they are given rules, they won't feel like they are stepping out of bounds. We're trying to help drunk people on campus, not hurt anyone."

Having men's and women's dorms co-sponsor parties was another suggestion included in the proposal. Flanner Hall President Paul Sheridan said, "If we even out the ratio and more girls are around, guys will have more to do than drink."

Other suggestions included: having only beer and wine in party rooms, cutting off alcohol at a designated hour, having student activities strive to sponsor at least one non-alcoholic event each weekend, having more space available for non-alcoholic events, and having alcohol education be a mandatory rotation in the freshmen physical education.

The food sales proposal passed included the following guidelines: health and fire regulations would be given to the food sales commissioners at the beginning of each year, communications would be encouraged between the Environmental Safety Board and hall food sales managers, each food sales would be inspected at the end of each September, and each food sales would be subject to further unannounced inspections at any time.

Brian Callaghan, student body president, spoke at the meeting as did Andy Tucker, Ombudsman director.

Callaghan asked HPC for their ideas on compensation for student government members. "Right now, it looks like course credit will be given, like an internship," he said. Later, Callaghan added, "there are too many consequences to money rolling."

Callaghan also discussed the preferential treatment given Student

Scholastic has 'renewal' tradition

Editor's note: This is the third in a three part series on People of Praise, a charismatic group on campus.

By KEVIN BINGER
Copy Editor

Few members of the Notre Dame chapter of People of Praise are much concerned with the rift between the ghosts of Charismatic Renewal past and present.

This year's seniors were eight years old when Bill Storey split with the Charismatic movement, 13 years old when Josephine Ford was kicked out.

One of those seniors is Jim Ganther, editor-in-chief of The Scholastic. The two previous editors, Beth Healy and Chuck Wood, were also People of Praise members.

All three say that the succession is a coincidence and The Scholastic is not a forum for People of Praise ideas.

People of Praise involvement reached a peak last year under Beth Healy, now Beth Healy-Preuss. Five People of Praise members were on the editorial staff and several more wrote articles during the year.

This year Ganther is one of only two People of Praise members on the board and only one People of Praise member has written articles for the magazine. Ganther predicts that next year's editor will not be from the Charismatic community.

The community has no political ideology, according to Ganther, who said members range from the extreme left to the extreme right.

The three editors, however, have guided The Scholastic through some major style changes.

Wood, editor during the 1981-1982 school year, called the editorial style before he took over the "Saturday Night Live school of journalism."

"There seemed to be a philosophy of going out of our way to appear as 'intellectually rebellious' as possible," Wood said of the style at The Scholastic for the four years before he took charge. "I had questions about some of the things they chose to present and the ways they chose to present them."

One thing Wood objected to was the obscene language allowed by previous editors. One headline in 1978 read, When Hell freezes Over. An article in 1979 read, It seems like everything came together, all the shit.

Fiction in the pre-Wood era often dealt with sex. One article in 1978 read, He had once found himself showering in a girl's dorm. ...There was an immediate ebb of masculinity and a rise in the throb of his pulse. He learned then that one should avoid combining eroticism and embarrassment while surrounded by sleepy hordes of wet, naked females.

Wood thought they were writing just for the shock value and wanted to make a change.

"Since Notre Dame is a Catholic university, it made sense that the magazine should take on difficult issues with a Christian approach. I knew it wouldn't serve the students to make it (The Scholastic) some sort of evangelism. That's not what the magazine is supposed to be."

Wood was involved in the Charismatic Renewal before he came to Notre Dame and now belongs to a People of Praise community in Falls Church, Va.

Healy-Preuss was the only person to apply for the editorship at the end of the year and followed closely in Wood's footsteps.

"I consider The Scholastic to be an opportunity to look at issues more in depth," Healy-Preuss said. "I'm going to write about the things that are important to me, and for a Catholic, those are things that involve social justice."

"Two of her magazines were devoted to 'Spirituality and Social Justice,' and her The Last Word columns dealt with issues like abortion, taking Advent seriously, and seeking the truth in education instead of material gain. Both Wood

Schultz suggests link in bombings

Associated Press

LISBON, Portugal — Secretary of State George P. Shultz said yesterday there "quite likely" is a link between the U.S. Embassy bombing in Kuwait and attacks on American facilities in Lebanon. He warned of possible retaliation.

"If the offenders can be clearly identified, then I think there will be ways of getting at them," Shultz said at a news conference.

He declined to elaborate, and it was not clear if he was speaking only of American retaliation or of joint action involving other countries.

At least seven people were killed and more than 60 injured in the Kuwait bombings Monday, including the driver of the explosives-laden truck that smashed into the embassy compound and blew up. There were no American deaths.

Shultz said the bombings in Kuwait, which included attacks on the French Embassy and Kuwaiti government installations, were part of a "pattern of violence of this kind" throughout the world.

"I think it is a serious international problem and steps do need to be taken," Shultz said. "Beyond that, in terms of U.S. action, I do not want to comment specifically."

The secretary also said that, "certain countries seem to be systematically behind" international terrorism. He named only North Korea, which he said was responsible for the recent bombing in Burma that killed more than 20 people, including a number of top South Korean government officials.

Shultz said a great deal of information has been received on the Kuwait bombings and is being studied. Asked if it appeared connected to the bombings of the American Embassy in Beirut and the U.S. Marine headquarters there, Shultz said: "I think that is quite likely."

U.S. officials have declined to publicly blame any group for the bombings.

Observer, Hesburgh reach impasse

By JEFF HARRINGTON
Assistant News Editor

Negotiations over an Observer decision to join the University's budget system have reached an impasse with University President Father Theodore Hesburgh refusing to sign an agreement with the paper that Observer officials have requested.

In a letter to Observer Editor-in-Chief David Dziedzic, Hesburgh wrote that "relationships among organizations of the University have been traditionally familial in nature. Therefore, it is not my intention to sign a contract with The Observer."

"I believe that the relationship of the past years has been one of trust and should continue in that fashion," he continued.

Dziedzic said yesterday the newspaper "will not go under the (University) Budget Unit Control System until some particular questions are settled and we have some basic assurances in writing."

"I am very disappointed that (Hesburgh) is unwilling to sign an agreement," Dziedzic added. "In essence, we will be turning over $20,000 (currently in Observer bank accounts) to them and I don't see how we can be expected to turn over that amount of money... without some sort of written arrangement."

The Observer submitted a proposal last week agreeing to place its finances under the University budget system pending several conditions. The University had ordered the paper to join Notre Dame's internal budget system by Jan. 1 after cases of financial mismanagement and a $7,000 deficit were uncovered in a University-conducted audit of the '82-'83 Observer operation.

In his letter to Dziedzic, Hesburgh agreed to most facets of the Observer proposal, including: establishing a three-member arbitration board to judge cases of editorial interference by the Administration,

In Brief

The 1984 presidential campaign may just be getting underway during the first part of next semester, but the elections for student body president and student senate will be in full swing. Election day has been set for Feb. 14, but petitions needed to qualify candidates will be available Feb. 1. Two informational meetings for prospective candidates have been scheduled for Jan. 30. Elections for class officers and off-campus commissioner will be held March 5. Rules for the elections, which were approved at this week's student senate meeting, are very similar to last year's except for a new provision requiring candidates "to behave ethically at all times." Students will elect one senator from each of five districts. The SBP ticket will also include a student body vice presidential candidate. — The Observer

A check for $1,816.30 was presented to the Northeast Neighborhood Council Monday night by the organizers of the "Guttin' It Run," a 24-hour relay run held before the Air Force football game Nov. 19. Jim Kirschbaum and Rich Dyer organized the event to help residents of the Northeast neighborhood pay for food and utilities this winter. The run began on Friday at noon, and 20 runners rotated throughout the day and night. Dyer said that a total of 187.5 miles were covered by the volunteers. "The student response was great," said Dyer. "It was incredible to see their (the council members') faces," he said. "We doubled their treasury." The Northeast Neighborhood Service Center will allocate the funds, said Dyer. — The Observer

A Niles woman belatedly reported an assault and attempted rape occurring early Monday morning near the East Gate on Juniper Road. Campus security officials were contacted after the victim was told by Michigan and St. Joseph County officers to report the incident to Notre Dame. The woman said she was giving an acquaintance a ride to his South Bend home when he removed the keys from the ignition and tore her clothes. Neither the man nor the woman is connected with Notre Dame. — The Observer

A $105,000 suit will be filed against the University in St. Joseph County Circuit Court by Val St. Charles and his legal counsel Attorney Brian May. St. Charles was dismissed from the University in October for allegedly assaulting Notre Dame security guards at the Main Gate. The suit will be filed on Friday, December 16. St. Charles alleges that he was assaulted by security and was subsequently treated illegally by the administration during the disciplinary proceedings.

Of Interest

Superdance '84, to benefit the Muscular Dystrophy Association, is being organized by the Center for Social Concerns and nine South Bend area high school Distributive Education C. Associations. The dance marathon, scheduled for March 17, is intended for high school students, so as not to conflict with the Mardi Gras danceathon. Notre Dame or Saint Mary's students, however, will be needed to help prepare for the event. A meeting of those interested will take place today at 7 p.m. in the Center for Social Concerns. — The Observer

Between 20 and 30 transfer students are expected to enroll in the University in January. Orientation activities and a welcome ceremony are being planned. Karen Klocke and Mike Attnessey will be holding a meeting of students interested in working on this project today at 6 p.m. in the LaFortune lobby. — The Observer

ND Right to Life reminds those who signed up for the January 23 "March for Life" in Washington, D.C., that the $15 deposit is due today in the Right to Life office. The march will protest the eleventh anniversary of the Supreme Court decision to make abortions legal in the United States. — The Observer

A Christmas Sale to benefit Sister Marita's Primary Day School will be held in the main concourse of the Memorial Library at Notre Dame tomorrow and Friday from 10 a.m. until 10 p.m. Gift items include hand-knitted hats and scarves, pottery, Christmas cards, all donated by students and friends of the school. Proceeds will be used to help inner-city children in a special, intensive reading and math program which Primary Day School provides. The third annual sale is sponsored by the Senior Advisory Council. — The Observer

Weather

Ninety percent chance of rain today, breezy and mild. Highs in the mid 40s. A 90 percent chance of rain early tonight with snow likely late. Lows around 30. Snow showers and colder tomorrow with temperatures sliding down through the 20s. — AP

'Twas the night before finals

*'Twas the night before finals and all through ND
Not a creature was sleeping, not even me.
The books were piled up ten feet high on my desk
In a desperate cram for tomorrow's test.*

*I longed to be snuggled all warm in my bed
But visions of failure flashed through my head.
So with my eighth mug of coffee and my third midnight snack
I turned to my books for one last attack.*

*When out on the quad there arose such a clatter
I sprang from my desk to see what was the matter.
Away to the lobby I flew like a flash tore open the shutter and threw up the sash.*

*The Dome on the crest of the shoulder-deep snow gave a luster of midday to objects below.
And what to my wondering eyes did appear but a miniature golf cart and eight cases of beer*

*With a little old driver, all dressed in red
I knew in a moment it must be St. Ted.
Over the rooftops the courses they came and he whistled and chanted and called them by name,*

*"On Heineken, Michelob, Miller and Schlitz
On Budweiser, Lowenbrau, Lite and Schmitz,
To the top of the Dome! to the top of the sky!
Now dash away boys, and we'll leave this place dry."*

*I walked back to my room and was turning around
When down the fire-escape St. Theodore came with a bound.
He was dressed all in red from his head to his foot and his clothes were all tarnished with ashes and soot.*

*He was merry and plump, a right jolly old elf and I knelt when I saw him in spite of myself.
His wry little mouth was drawn like a bow and the hair on his head was as white as the snow.*

*He spoke not a word but went straight to his work and pulled all my Christmas lights down with a jerk.
"Stop it," I shouted, "Just look what you've done!"
He said, "This is N.D. you cannot have fun.*

*As Al Haig told me the other day
"I'm in control here, there's no room to play."
Now get back to your studies and please don't pout."
I said, "It's past parietals, you'd better get out."*

*He said, "Try and stop me," and his round little belly
Shook when he laughed like a bowl full of jelly.
He opened my fridge door and said with a frown,
"This thing is filthy, let's shut it down."*

*He emptied my bar out and when he was through
He grabbed my Observer, saying, "I'll take this too."
Then laying his finger aside of his nose and giving a nod down the 'vator he rode.*

But I heard him exclaim as he sank out of sight,
"Big brother is watching, so have a good night."

Silky's to serve as unofficial ND HQ

By MARY PACE
news staff

The Hyatt Regency in Memphis will be the official Notre Dame Alumni and Team headquarters for the Liberty Bowl; the unofficial headquarters will be located at a bar named Silky's Sullivan's.

Silky's bar is located in Overton Square in Memphis and Silky encourages all Notre Dame fans to stop by while they are in town. "This isn't the Orange Bowl or the Rose Bowl, but we put ten times as much effort into the Liberty Bowl, so this will be ten times more fun."

"We're going to light a fire under you, and make you live up to your 'Fighting Irish' image", promises Silky.

The bar itself is really four bars in one and it can hold up to 700 people. "My bar is strictly Irish, and we have pictures and paintings of outstanding Notre Dame people all over, and we've got the fight song too."

Silky says he'll "show y'all some real Southern hospitality," which of course includes serving his famous 'diver' drink (contents not revealed) which is served in a paint bucket.

At the Hyatt, the president of the Notre Dame Club of Memphis, Don Stark, is in charge of events. "All 204 members of the marching band, the cheerleaders, and the leprechaun will be at the pep rally, being held on Wednesday, Dec. 28 at the Hyatt, and afterwards there will be dancing to a live band."

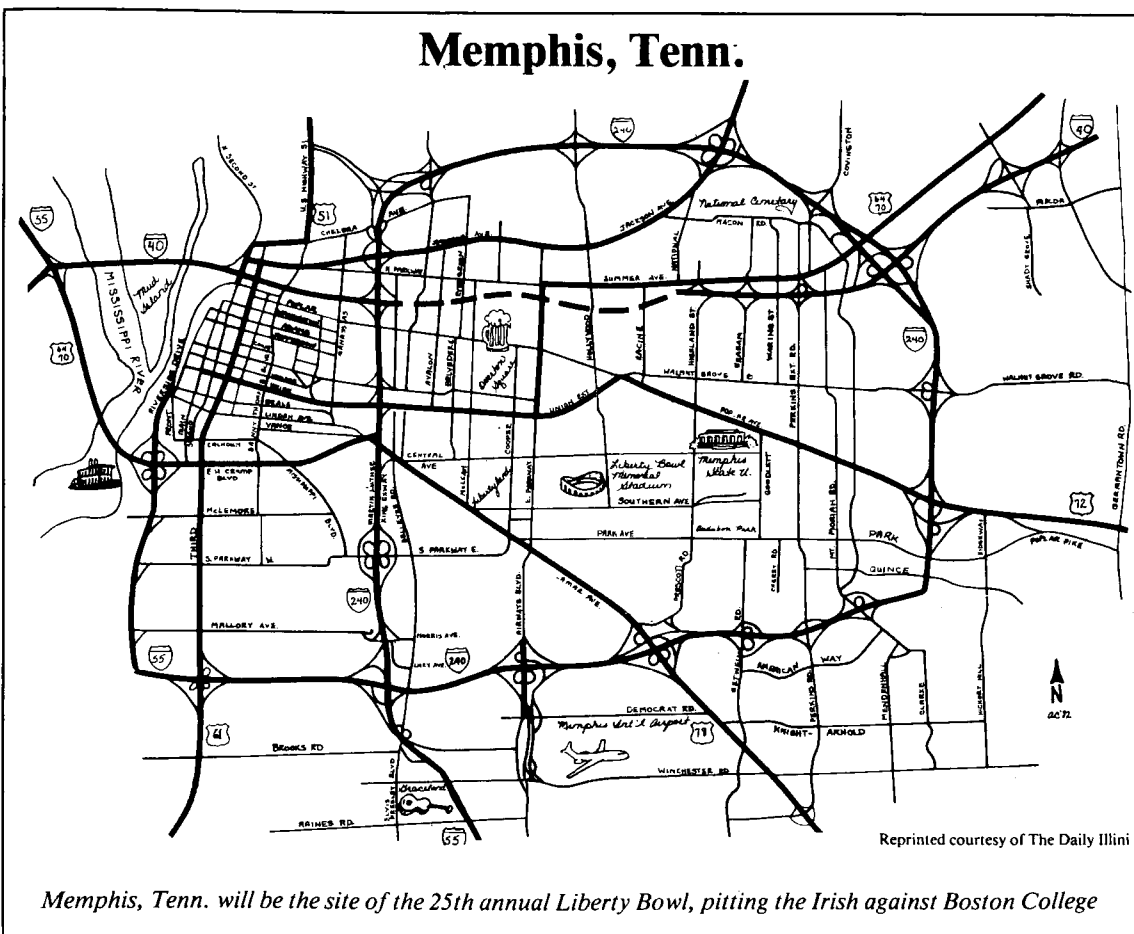

"There will also be a buffet supper at the coliseum, located adjacent to the stadium. It will start at 4 p.m. Thursday, with all you can eat and all you can drink for a fixed price. "Hopefully we'll have buses going to the coliseum for the supper, and then from the stadium after the game," said Stark.

Also on Thursday, there will be a mass and a continental breakfast at yatt at 9 a.m., and a post-game celebration beginning at 11:30 p.m. Stark predicts a good time for all. "At first there was a lot of mixed emotions in Memphis, with regard to the bowl game, because these are two Catholic teams, and there are few Catholics here, and these are two non-area teams. But now, you can't beg, buy, or borrow a ticket around here."

The football team has no plans for any special appearances aside from press conferences, and dinners planned for them with official Liberty Bowl Organization members. Stark states that "the members of the Notre Dame Club of Memphis will welcome the team upon its arrival at the airport."

Unfortunately, Professor James Ward was unable to organize a parade for the Liberty Bowl. "Since the game is on Dec. 29, rather than Jan. 1, we really have little time to work with, and to ask students to dedicate themselves to help with this type of activity is really asking them to give up their time for Christmas."

But then, as Silky says, "Memphis is going to give ya'll so much fun, such a good time, and so many fantastic memories as a Christmas present, so come early, and rest a lot before you come."

Memphis offers Irish fans more than football

Editor's note: The following story was supplied to The Observer by Stu Lerner, a senior at the University of Illinois. Lerner previewed the city of Memphis for the Daily Illini before Illinois' Liberty Bowl appearance against Alabama last year. With Lerner's approval, a few changes were made to give the story a little Irish flavor.

By STU LERNER
Editor, Daily Illini

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — The bowl draught is over. On Dec. 29, the Irish will face 13th-ranked Boston College in the first post-season appearance since the 1981 Sugar Bowl. Memphis plays host to the annual gridiron affair, and the city has a tradition of rolling out the red carpet for visitors, at least in one hotel.

A red carpet ritual is performed twice a day at the Peabody Hotel on Union Avenue in downtown Memphis. Even if you are not staying at the Peabody you should stop by there to see the ducks. People always talk about the ducks, referring to a fifty-year-old tradition begun on a fancy.

The manager of the hotel and a friend were duck hunting and wondered what would happen if they brought back some ducks and put them in the fountain in the hotel lobby. The ducks have been there ever since. Twice daily at 11 a.m. and 5 p.m. the five ducks walk down their red carpet either to or from the fountain.

While at the Peabody, have a look at DUX, one of the hotel's nicer restaurants. Though more for the suit-and-tie crowd, the restaurant has a free taco bar for happy hour, along with 2-for-1 drink specials from 4:00-7:00 p.m. Also, look for Christmas season drink specials at the lobby bar.

While the ducks are in the water, try to go down to Front Street right on the River and take a tour of the Mississippi. Another way to go is to see Mud Island, a monorail ride away from downtown.

Mud Island offers a restaurant with best view anywhere in town. The Riverfront Terrace overlooks the river, but don't overlook the Terrace's semi-formal restaurant. Only those properly attired need apply.

Other places on Mud Island include the Harbor Landing and the Yacht Club Bar. Both are reasonably priced and inviting if you are out on the island. Another good reason for wanting to see the island is the Riverwalk. A marvel to behold, the Riverwalk is a half-mile-long scale model of the Mississippi. Every step is equivalent to one mile. You can walk from Cairo, Illinois, to New Orleans and not tire.

Back on shore some of the most popular eating places include Doebl's Dock and Captain Bilbo's both on Wagner between Beale and Union. Blues Alley has "the last of the Mohicans as far as blues is concerned." Located on Front Street, this place has an authentic blues band and a 70-year-old lady who can sing and dance you into the ground.

Since the previous restaurants are known primarily for their seafood, steak lovers might like the next choices. The Butcher Shop on Front Street lets you pick your steak — from a 14 oz. filet to a 28 oz. t-bone — from a freezer and cook it to your taste. Right, you cook it yourself. Of course if you're afraid of ruining your fine filet you can let them cook it for an extra dollar. All steaks are $10.95 with bread, salad and baked potato. The place is huge and they really pack 'em in during Liberty Bowl week. The best time to come here is before 7 p.m.

Across the street at the Riverlatch is where some of the Butcher Shop's regulars have followed their favorite chef, Adolf. If you've had a long night you can always go to the Gridiron, open 24-hours a day.

Unfortunately the most popular rib joint in town will be closed during Liberty Bowl week. Charlie Verga's Rendezvous serves the best ribs anywhere, but the place annually closes from Dec. 24 to Jan. 3. At any other time, to get there you have to enter from the alley, straight down from the Peabody.

"Overton Square is the Bourbon Street of Memphis," says Silky Sullivan, owner of the bar by the same name. His bar is the center of Overton Square also known as Midtown, basically the Madison Avenue bars and restaurants. At the very western edge is Bill and Jim's. They provide a large dining room and delicious, huge home-baked rolls. They also serve a creation called Rock Bottom Pie, a delicious combination of chocolate, vanilla and rum. The bar is inexpensive and good for students. The drinking age in Tennessee is 19, by the way.

On the Square, most of the college students go to Silky's to drink. Darnell Smith is "the funnest bartender to watch." Watch him move at Silky's front bar as he prepares the Diver, a now-famous institution in Memphis. The Diver is served in a gallon bucket with plenty of straws. Another drink that is well spoken of is The Boweevil. This secret concoction comes in a nice glass which you keep. Sullivan also has plenty of oysters and shrimp at the bar along with gallons of Coor's beer.

While Silky's is a Memphis tradition, right next door is another well-known name, Wink Martindale's. Martindale is host of television's "Tic-Tac-Dough" and can be seen mingling with guests at his upscale lounge and restaurant.

Also on the Square is TGIFriday's, a reasonably-priced restaurant and bar (they have nightly specialties) and Gonzale's and Gertrude's for Mexican cuisine. Swenson's is a popular ice cream shop. Bombay Bicycle Club provides a nice atmosphere though it is more upscale locals.

The nightlife in Memphis also has much to offer. In the eastern part of town, about four miles from Overton Square, is Dooley's and Confetti's. They are located off of Poplar Avenue in a shopping mall. Confetti's requires that you be 21-years-old. You must also pay a cover charge of a couple dollars. Right next door to them is Dooley's where most of the local Memphis State University crowd goes. Tivia's is right down the block from them. "Those are all meat markets," said one local bar-goer.

The area near the airport has a strip of hotels and fast food eateries. But most importantly there is Graceland.

Graceland is like a town unto itself. Presley's mansion is located on Elvis Presley Boulevard. You'll know you're on the right street because there won't be any street signs, everybody steals them.

Across the street from the mansion is the Graceland Center, a shopping center of Elvis souvenirs. Tours of the house are unimpressive unless you idolize the "King."

Watch the tricky left-turn lanes and the middle lane on Union Street, which changes direction at different hours of the day.

Most of all, Memphians are open and a little bit laid back. They are more than happy to help you. So take the Indiana Toll Road west to I-57 south of Chicago. Take I-57 south to I-55 and you'll hit downtown Memphis. From Notre Dame the trip takes approximately eleven hours.

Fire aboard shuttle discovered by NASA

Associated Press

SPACE CENTER, Houston — Space shuttle Columbia was on fire as it landed last Thursday with six astronauts and the European Spacelab on board, but the accidents were not noticed until the next day, NASA officials said yesterday.

The shuttle, returning from a highly successful 10-day mission, caught fire inside a rear compartment as it approached its landing at the deet lakebed runway at Edwards Air Force Base, Calif., officials said, and after it came to rest on the runway, a small explosion occurred in a rear compartment.

NASA spokesman Steve Nesbitt said the fire occurred in two devices called the auxiliary power units. These devices burn a fuel called hydrazine to generate electricity to drive the craft's hydraulic system. The hydraulics are used to move flight control surfaces and to deploy the landing gear.

Nesbitt said the fires apparently were caused when leaking hydrazine touched hot surfaces on the APUs and ignited as the craft glided into the oxygen of the atmosphere.

He said technicians were unaware of the fire until Friday, when a panel was removed at the rear of the spacecraft. The technicians found a compartment blackened and scarred by the fire and apparent explosion.

Glynn Lunney, the space shuttle program director at the Johnson Space Center, said the problem appears to be "pretty straightforward," but that a space shuttle mission scheduled for January will not be flown until the problem is understood.

"It could be something as simple as leaking O rings, but we need to know why it leaked when it did," said Lunney.

Lunney emphasized that at no time were the astronauts endangered by the fire and explosion.

Studies indicate that the fire started about two minutes before Columbia landed late Thursday afternoon. The landing was normal.

About 15 minutes later, after the APUs had been automatically shut-down, hydrazine that was trapped in a control valve exploded. More fuel leaked and burned, but the fire stopped when the leaked fuel was exhausted.

Health benefits hurt by employment upturn

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — With more people returning to work, Congress appears less inclined to enact a program to protect the health benefits of workers who lose their jobs.

"It appears to us that bill is dead as a result of strong opposition in the Senate ... The declining unemployment rate nationally takes off pressure for the program," said David Runkel, of the Pennsylvania state lobbying office in Washington.

The two-year, $1.8 billion Senate proposal would require private firms to keep laid-off workers on company health plans for 90 days after layoff. After that, federally subsidized low-cost health insurance would be available for those with no other coverage. The program would avert the need to sell cars, houses and other assets to qualify for Medicaid.

The civilian jobless rate fell from 8.8 percent in October to 8.4 percent in November. It had hit a recession-high 10.8 percent in December 1982. The Labor Department reported yesterday that all but five of the states showed lower unemployment rates in October than a year earlier.

Republican Sens. John Heinz and Arlen Specter of Pennsylvania, who introduced the bill last March, insist they will not give up.

Gas line punctured in Saint Mary's lot

By MARY JACOBY
News Staff

An unusual accident punctured a gas line Monday morning at Saint Mary's College. The break occurred south of the LeMans parking lot near the bus stop, according to Robert Foldesi, director of personnel at Saint Mary's.

The puncture resulted when steel posts used to keep cars off of the grass near the drive between Moreau and LeMans Halls were moved back to allow snow plows more room to work. One of the posts punctured the plastic gas line.

The South Bend Fire Department and Northern Indiana Public Service Co. crews corrected the problem within an hour.

The Fire Department used a 'sniffer' to detect gas level t s, determining that LeMans and Moreau Halls would not have to be evacuated.

The repair crews have corrected all problems caused by the puncture, according to Foldesi.

and Healy-Preuss stressed that their editorial philosophies were influenced by Catholicism, not by People of Praise. Healy-Preuss started writing for The Scholastic several months before joining People of Praise.

Ganther was one of several people Healy-Preuss urged to apply for the editorship for 1983-84.

"I suggested to a number of people that they apply," she said. "I was pleading." She had no interest in being succeeded by a member of People of Praise, she said, just in being succeeded by anyone.

Ganther, a senior business major who worked on his Navy battalion yearbook before joining The Scholastic, said he joined because he was interested in journalism and that he knew Healy only well enough to say hello to her at meetings.

Ganther's editorial style has been markedly different than Wood's and Healy-Preuss'. "You don't see many social justice stories this year," he said.

His main objectives have been to do a humor issue (which comes out this week), a football issue (which will come out in January) and to cover the less well known sports more thoroughly.

"I always took my relationship with the Lord very seriously," Ganther said. "When I came here it almost bit the dust; a lot of partying, a lot of peer pressure pushing the wrong way."

He went to a party sophomore year that turned out to be a People of Praise party and it turned his life around.

"It helped solidify the values I thought I was losing."

NBC's Wheel of Fortune provides winners, losers and Disneyland

By MYCHAL SCHULZ
News Staff

Notre Dame freshman Paula Miranda won $5,000 on NBC's Wheel of Fortune and law student Jim Slattery won $1200 and a swimming pool.

They rolled back to Notre Dame last week with fellow students Jack McCormick and Fred Nelson, who weren't so lucky, after a weekend of taping and a visit to Disney Land.

The taping took all day on Saturday, Dec. 3. All five shows were taped that day and none of the contestants knew which show they would be in until 15 minutes before hand.

"That kept me nervous the whole time," said Nelson.

The one thing that none of the contestants were prepared for was the tight security. "You couldn't talk to anybody, and when you went to the bathroom you had to have an escort," stated Nelson. This also surprised Miranda, who added, "You could not even have eye contact with anyone in the audience."

They've had problems in the past with people giving away answers, so I guess it's a good thing."

"The afternoon was spent going over rules and regulations, what to do and what not to do, and what to expect," Miranda said. "Then we had to sign a document which stated that if we broke the rules, they could take our prizes away."

"I didn't know what to expect, so nothing really surprised me," said Nelson. "Everyone was very friendly, and people went out of their way to be friendly."

Miranda added, "I tried not to think about the show and what to expect, or what would happen. I wasn't nervous until I got on the plane."

Although Collegiate Week has already been aired, Slattery can be seen in February on the regular show.

While in California the four stayed in the homes of Notre Dame alumni.

Nelson said, "It was disappointing in a way because I didn't win much, but the experience was worth it. All in all, I had fun."

Asked if she would appear on a gameshow again, Miranda replied, "Definitely. It was a once in a lifetime thing, but I'd do it again."

setting up a petty cash allotment of approximately $1,000 for the paper, allowing staff members to be considered as exceptions to the financial aid policy, and allowing the Unit Budget System to act as an accounting function for The Observer.

Dziedzic said, however, that Hesburgh did not respond to several points in the Observer plan.

Among the areas of contention, according to Dziedzic, are the salaries of full-time employees, the selection of the arbitration board and budget unit director (the person who will approve the Observer budget), the manner of raising and lowering student fees, and the right of the paper to take itself off of the University budget system.

Hesburgh could not be reached for further comment.

The issue may not be resolved before Christmas but that will probably not hinder the collection of next semester's student fees for the paper by the University, Dziedzic said.

Commission proposes uniform age

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan's commission on drunken driving proposed yesterday that Congress set a minimum legal drinking age of 21 and cut off federal highway funds to any state that fails to enforce the standard.

The panel, presenting its report to Reagan at the White House after 18 months of study, also calls for a mandatory 90-day suspension of a driver's license on the first conviction of drunken driving, plus either 100 hours of community service or a minimum of 48 hours in jail.

In addition, the commission urged elimination of plea bargaining in drunken driving cases and establishing a "presumptive" breath test standard for drunken driving suspects. A person with 0.08 alcohol concentration would be presumed to be driving under the influence, and would be found illegally drunk if tests showed a concentration of 0.10.

The proposal for enforcing a national minimum drinking age of 21 immediately ran into trouble at the White House and elsewhere in the Reagan administration.

Presidential spokesman Larry Speakes said, "We strongly support his recommendation but think it is a state action that should be taken, not a federal action."

Jim Burnett, chairman of the National Transportation Safety Board, who has campaigned in state capitols across the country for a legal drinking age of 21, said the proposal withholding of federal highway funds for non-complying states would needlessly complicate the issue.

The tactic proposed by the commission is similar to the one Congress used in 1974 to set a national speed limit of 55 miles per hour. As a presidential candidate in 1980, Reagan and the Republican platform on which he ran urged repeal of the speed limit law, but he never actually proposed repeal legislation.

In Phoenix, Gov. Bruce Babbitt of Arizona said through a spokesman that he supports raising his state's legal drinking age from 19 to 21 but believes "the threat of cutting off funds is a poor way of doing business."

After hearings in September, the 32-member commission headed by former Transportation Secretary John A. Volpe concluded that congressional action was needed because only three state legislatures had heeded its call one year ago to adopt a 21-year legal drinking age for wine, beer and liquor.

So far, 19 states have enacted laws setting a minimum drinking age of 21. A recent government report, however, said courts often are lax in enforcing those laws.

The panel said Congress should provide that any state failing to abide by the national standard would have federal financing of its interstate highway repair projects discontinued by the transportation secretary.

"There is evidence of a direct correlation between the minimum drinking age and alcohol-related crashes among the age groups affected," the panel said.

Reagan, in accepting the report, did not comment on any of the panel's recommendations. He did say that "for those between the ages of 16 and 24, alcohol-related crashes represent the leading cause of death."

The National Safety Council has cited an eight-state study by the federal government and state surveys in Michigan and Illinois as evidence that raising the drinking age would have a dramatic effect on the number of auto accidents and deaths among young people.

The commission recommended "mandatory substantial minimum fines" for all drivers convicted

American ships bombard Syrians; Israeli vessels shell Palestinians

Associated Press

BEIRUT, Lebanon — American warships bombarded an anti-aircraft position in the Syrian-controlled Lebanese mountains yesterday after two U.S. Navy jets were fired on during a reconnaissance mission.

Pentagon officials in Washington said the cruiser Ticonderoga and the destroyer Tatnall hurled shells from 5-inch guns at an anti-aircraft position in territory held by pro-Syrian militiamen. But the Syrian army command in Damascus said Syrian positions were the targets of "premeditated aggression" by the United States.

In other developments:

—In northern Lebanon, Israeli gunboats shelled Yasser Arafat's PLO loyalists trapped in Tripoli.

—Snipers in west Beirut raked a French peacekeeping patrol with machine-gun fire during the morning, killing one paratrooper. An Islamic group claimed responsibility for the ambush.

—A bomb blast wounded two Israeli soldiers as their convoy was driving into Sidon, Lebanon, the Israeli military command said.

—Bombs exploded after sundown at two Christian churches in largely Moslem west Beirut. Police sources said three people were injured at one of the churches.

As the violence escalated, President Amin Gemayel scrapped plans to weld Lebanon's warring factions into a coalition Cabinet.

In Washington, officials said the Ticonderoga and the Tatnall fired a total of 35, 70-pound shells at Druse-held territory overlooking Beirut. The Druse are aligned with the Syrians in the Lebanese fighting and some Druse fighters operate from Syrian-held territory.

The retaliation came after two Navy F-14s drew at least two surface-to-air missiles and "multiple rounds" of anti-aircraft fire from an area about 12 miles from the coast, the officials said.

In Damascus, the Syrian army said in a communique: "at 3:17 p.m. (8:17 a.m. EST), two American F-14s flew over our positions in the upper Metn (central Lebanon) area. Our air defenses confronted them and forced them to fly back towards the sea."

The Syrians have vowed to fire on U.S. jets whenever they fly over their positions anywhere in Lebanon. U.S. fighter-bombers first struck Syrian positions in central Lebanon on Dec. 4 after two F-14s were fired on during reconnaissance flights.

The Syrians shot down two of the attacking jets. One American flier was killed and another captured by Syria.

Discriminatory problems continue in South Africa

On Tuesday, Nov. 1 whites in the Republic of South Africa voted in favor of a new constitution — new, but not any different with respect to the principles of apartheid which in their modern form have been a reality in South African social and political life since 1948.

The constitution will have a significant effect on the lives of all groups in South Africa. For the extreme right wing of white politics,

Laura Curliss

Guest column

the fact that two other ethnic groups, Coloureds (people of mixed race) and Asians, will each have a chamber in the new Parliament, is enough to let the specter of integration, out of their extremist "closet of anxieties."

The Coloureds and the Asians, who will have 80 and 40 seats respectively in their separate chambers (compared with 166 in the white assembly) do not know how much influence they will have in molding legislation, but their influence is not likely to be great.

Given this distribution of seats and the fact that a separate, white-controlled body, the President's Council, has the final say if any disagreement arises between the ethnic houses on pan-South African issues (economic policy and national security), the Coloureds and Asians clearly have an inferior status.

On the positive side, this constitution does provide a forum for the Coloureds and Asians to voice their opinion and legislate on "safe" issues pertaining to their own ethnic group. This is seen by Afrikaner voters as a major concession.

How might the Coloureds and Asians view this constitution? Apartheid legislation has gradually taken away privileges from these groups. For example, Coloureds lost their rights to vote for representatives in the Cape Town parliament. The Group Areas Act of 1956 applied apartheid ideology more rigorously in the cities. The letter resulted in the bitter uprooting of Coloured communities that had been living in white areas for years.

Even though they will now elect representatives to sit in their own chambers, the bitter history of enforcing apartheid on these two groups is not likely to create a great deal of optimism with the new structures.

And what of South Africa's 21 million blacks? These people are legally required to obtain passes to even enter the "white" areas of South Africa. Only 13 percent of the land has been designated as black homeland.

This means that blacks are considered foreigners in 87 percent of South Africa (the area occupied by the country's 5 million whites). The other 13 percent of the country is divided into several mini-states called Bantustans (homelands). Blacks must be satisfied with the right to vote in these mini-state governments for they have no part in the new constitution. For this reason and others, the South African Bishops Conference has condemned the new constitution.

Many think the only effective way to effect a change is increased guerrilla violence and the eventual overthrow of the government, even if it takes 30 years.

Supposing that a well-equipped, well-trained and highly organized South African military force could be defeated by a guerrilla movement, what kind of society would be reborn from such violence? Would the whites be given a proportionately equal voice in government? Would the black majority be able to integrate all the races into society after a violent revolution?

If such a South Africa would feed on hate as much as the present one feeds on fear, then integration, much less a genuine love of neighbor, has little chance of becoming the reality. The anger that many blacks feel could make this guerrilla struggle a success, but it might lead to a countervailing black racism.

In fact, black racism has no historic roots in the black consciousness movements in South Africa. A non-racial system of government was the major goal for the African National Congress from its formation in 1912 to its banning in 1960. To embrace any kind of racist hate would have been to surrender to the principles of apartheid and thus to lose their moral argument which gave the movement the hope for an integrated South Africa.

The injustice systematized in South Africa is certainly abominable, and all Christians and humanists around the world should be actively pressuring the South African government to respect the rights of all its people. Moreover, this new constitution can only be seen as one more abomination to the Africans.

Realistically, South Africa has become a national security state and has, so far, eliminated all anti-apartheid threats from any political group in the country. The underbelly of South Africa lies in its dependency upon black labor, Western capital and Western markets. If any pressure toward positive, peaceful change can be applied, it will have to be helped by the West.

Five hundred American corporations invest in South Africa. Given our own history of upholding, in principle, the equality of all people, even if our practice is sometimes wanting, we should try to support these ideals by applying economic pressures.

One way to start would be to ban all further investment in the apartheid system. Or private companies and concerns, like our University, could voluntarily do this.

As students we can show our support for peaceful integration and respect for the dignity of all people in South Africa by doing what we try to do best at the time in our lives — making the effort to learn more about the socio-political situation in that country. Only then can we read about this new constitution and realize that it is a perpetuation of apartheid principles. It makes Africans foreigners in the land they have occupied for thousands of years before the first Dutch farmers landed at the Cape in 1652.

P. O. Box Q

Rats! It's not the students' fault

Dear Editor:

The Dec. 9 issue of The Observer featured an evaluation of the food sales in each of the dorms. I was shocked to hear that my dorm, Stanford Hall, is infested with ants and roaches. But I guess Stanford is lucky because, according to the report, three other dorms have rodent infestation.

Are these the same dorms that are so eloquently described in the pamphlet distributed to incoming freshmen when they must select a dorm?

Granted, some of the food sales' conditions are less than sterile, but many of the violations are nothing that an afternoon with a bucket of soapy water wouldn't solve. But what can the students do about rodent infestation in their dorm? There seems to be some neglect by the administration.

Further, this evidence of mouse infestation will be used against food sales operations and, ultimately, the student body. Closing food sales would not exterminate these mice.

So before condemning food sales, how about giving the students a chance to clean up their act? And if the administration provides dorms without rodent infestation then I'm sure we'll see a marked improvement in the food sales' conditions.

Spirit is central to CILA

by Tracy Oakes
features staff writer

As social ethics and humanity are receiving increased attention in the world today, more and more people are taking action. One such organization that promotes action is CILA, the Community for the International Lay Apostolate. CILA is an international organization functioning in the Notre Dame/ Saint Mary's community providing students with the opportunity to participate in services promulgating social justice.

Tim Murphy, a senior engineering major in Morrissey Hall, currently presides as chairman of the ND/SMC chapter of CILA. According to Murphy, CILA members are committed to promoting social justice through educational and community service projects. Spiritual support is the overriding theme throughout the organization. CILA's goals include integrating their unique experiences — gained through service projects — with academic life on campus.

Among the community service projects presently in operation are the Home Visitation Program, in which students volunteer their time to visit and offer companionship to elderly residents living alone in housing projects in the South Bend area; the Justice and Peace Center which focuses on offering aid and information to the poor through justice education; Corvillia House, a home for disabled children and adults; El Campito, a children's day care center; and Portage Manor, a residential facility for the elderly. Club members all participate in efforts to teach, care for, and entertain the individuals of these institutions.

CILA also provides funds for students who wish to engage in summer service projects abroad. Mexico, Appalachia, Canada, and California are a few of the locations of these projects.

A tentative plan of CILA is to institute Saint Hedwigs Outreach program. Saint Hedwigs would stress work ethics to underprivileged children.

Anyone desiring more information about CILA should contact Tim Murphy at 283-3657.

Solving a weighty problem

by Judith Martin

Dear Miss Manners — This is a "heavy" problem: What does one say or do to prevent well-loved but overweight friends and relatives from crushing one's furniture? Must one sit by with a brave but sickly smile and try to make light conversation while watching one's furniture become bent and mutilated by their "too, too solid flesh"?

One cannot but disagree with one's spouse who, on beholding his favorite with the chair with the newly defunct springs, advocated sending a letter starting out "Dear Fatso," and ending with a plea to lose weight before visiting again.

Although one does not wish to hurt the feelings of one's elephantine friends, one would like to be able to protect one's furniture from more extensive damage.

Gentle Reader — Please get a grip on yourself. Miss Manners can understand your going to pieces every time you contemplate the springs striking whacky poses in the chair, but you must remember that well-bred people get angry at individuals, not classes of people. We hate our friends because they break our chairs, not because of their shapes, races, religions or creeds (unless their creeds include not caring about material objects that belong to us).

Yes, there is a way to protect your furniture. Get a good, friendly grip on your friend as he arrives, and steer him away from delicate chairs to an indestructible one by saying, "You'll be more comfortable here — that chair is too fragile."

We never send nasty letters to well-loved friends, but the one you should compose and not send should say, "Gee, thanks for busting my furniture," not "Dear Elephant-face."

Dear Miss Manners — Several months ago, I hosted a dinner party for 10. During the course of the evening, one individual had too much wine to drink and spent a very audible 10 minutes in the bathroom paying penance.

This episode halted conversation among my other guests with a rapidity which made my palms damp. When I inquired if I could be of any assistance, another guest was requested, and their departure soon followed.

In the days and months that followed, this person neither apologized nor alluded to this incident and, largely as a result of this, faded from my circle of friends. My feeling at the time was that someone who was unable to handle himself better in a social situation was more a liability than an asset.

My questions are: Was an apology from this guest appropriate? Was I ridiculously stuffy or unreasonable to expect one? Was it, in fact, my obligation to inquire about his condition? Most of all, Miss Manners, I don't want to be a hopeless prig about all of this.

Gentle Reader — In that case, you must be a little more charitable in your assumptions. As little enthusiasm as Miss Manners has for aligning herself with that person making a mess in your bathroom, she is bound to point out that his was not the only inadvertent social error of the evening.

In these crude days of blurring out everything, so to speak, people have gotten out of the habit of practicing social oblivion. When someone leaves the room at a dinner party, it is the obligation of all to maintain the social fiction that no one is speculating about where he is going or what he is doing. Sitting around in silence, listening to someone throw up, is not in the best of taste. Only if the person's behavior becomes visibly dramatic may you say, "I'm afraid you're not well — would you like to lie down? Or may I have someone see you home?"

The polite thing now is to treat it as a minor social accident long since forgotten. If you really want to be gracious, you will invite him again with no reference at all to what happened, which will relieve him considerably. Miss Manners' guess is that he will then behave perfectly. If not, at least you will know that last time was no accident.

Circle of service

by Tracy Oakes
features staff writer

Claiming over 800 chapters worldwide, Circle K International is the one of the world's largest service organizations. The first Circle K club was established in 1947, under the sponsorship of Kiwanis International, an organization of adult males devoted to service, on the Carthage College campus in Illinois. Since then, the number of clubs has expanded in conjunction with the Kiwanis Club's influence. Circle K emphasizes leadership training, ethical practices, and most importantly, personal involvement in today's social and environmental problems.

Since its reactivation in 1981, the Notre Dame chapter of Circle K has maintained a high degree of involvement in volunteer projects and in various fund drives in the area. Club president, Wes Gainey, a senior in Flanner Hall, has led club members in promotion of the objectives of Circle K. Examples of the club's community service include its tutoring of children at La Casa, a community help center in South Bend, and visiting and assisting residents of DuComb Correctional Facility, an institution for persons involved in minor criminal offenses.

On campus, Circle K's "golf-cart express," ferries temporarily or permanently disabled students between classes and dorms. Earlier this year, the club sponsored a 24-hour basketball relay for the Muscular Dystrophy Association. Teams from across campus participated in this event and donated a sum of money to the cause. By the time the final whistle blew both the gold and blue teams' scores were in the hundreds and Circle K had raised a notable amount for MDA. Last year Circle K sponsored the "Quarter Mile of Quarters." The proceeds once again went to MDA. The club also participated in a snow softball game and a walkathon for the March of Dimes.

For anyone interested in membership in the ND chapter of Circle K, all meetings are held on Wednesday evenings at 6:15 in the Center for Social Concerns.

Adopted at the age of 103

In the midst of studying, test-taking, paper-writing and student activities it seems as though this life in the fast lane never slows down. However, about 45 students at Saint Mary's know a slower pace of life does exist right on their own campus. These students have become acquainted with many of the retired sisters of the Holy Cross who live on campus, by partaking in the "Adopt-a-Nun" program.

Any interested student is able to volunteer at the beginning of the year. Soon after, each is assigned the name of one of the sisters. The students then meet their adopted nuns and visit whenever possible. This year about 125 students signed up for the program initially, on Activities Night. Only 45 of these, however, have remained involved.

This fact is no disappointment to the program's coordinator Elaine Suess. "We always have a lot of sign-ups at first. I'm thrilled that 45 of them have really gotten into it."

"It's gotten bigger and better," according to Suess, "two years ago we had very few involved and last year we had 30."

Evidently, the program cannot stand too much growth. There are only 40 retired sisters who have agreed to be adopted (a few have been adopted twice, as it is). The sisters range in age from 52 to 103 and many are immobile.

While "Adopt-a-Nun" is not a group oriented volunteer service, there are a few group activities being planned. "It's unbelievable the way they (the sisters) follow Notre Dame sports," says Suess. "We'd like to plan a mini pep rally for them in the near future and maybe invite some team players."

One of the sisters' favorite activities is Bingo. They have already had one Bingo party complete with refreshments and prizes on Nov. 12. The group would like to schedule two or three such parties next semester.

The general response from both the adopters and the adoptees seems positive. According to Sr. Noel who assists in "Adopt-a-Nun," the sisters look forward to the visits. "On special occasions, some girls bring flowers or plants and the sisters just love them."

Are you aware that more than one billion people in the world are undernourished; that 15 to 20 million people die each year of hunger-related causes; that the world currently spends an average of 550 billion dollars a year producing, buying, and selling military weapons?

The World Hunger Coalition is a group of Notre Dame students whose main objectives include informing other members of the Notre Dame community about just such facts. Among the Coalition's other goals are the provision of direct financial aid to those in need and the encouragement of personal and spiritual growth. The Coalition attempts to achieve these goals through different educational media such as speakers, films and articles, interaction with the poor in the South Bend area, celebration of Masses, and most visibly, the Wednesday fasting program.

The fasting program involves over 800 students who have pledged to abstain from lunch in the dining halls 11 times per semester. The dining halls in turn donate $1 per person for each day of fasting. The entire sum of money accumulated, approximately $9,000, is used to help fund agencies that educate the poor with the intent of making them self-sufficient.

The Food Waste Survey was another effort of the Coalition to raise the consciousness of ND students. On October 6, Coalition members stood at the tray return line and counted the items of food which had not been eaten. The final results of the survey estimated that over 105 gallons of food are wasted every day in the South Dining Hall alone.

The World Hunger Coalition was formed on September 24, 1974 by Father Don McNeill and a group of students as a result of a World Food Conference in Rome. Today, concerned students are continuing to promote more social concern about the problem of world hunger and to provide direct relief for the needy.

A siren wailing in the night, police lights flashing in the dark, twisted metal and broken glass littering the highway, a crushed body being lifted from the wreckage of an automobile; a summer's worth of similar images were enough to anger Tom Selvaggi, a junior microbiology major into action. After working in the emergency room of an area hospital during the summer months following his freshman year, Selvaggi returned to school determined to do something to heighten the public awareness of the problem of drunk drivers.

He researched the question of alcohol-related accidents, and was amazed at the statistics he discovered: over 26,000 people die at the hands of drunk drivers a year; with thousands more injured; over 50 percent of all highway accidents are alcohol-related; one out of 10 people, on the average, who pass you on the road during the weekend could be drunk. Additionally, he heard accounts of drunk drivers still being allowed to drive after having alcohol-related accidents. Selvaggi talked to his hall rector, Fr. David Garrick, about a proper response to the problem. Inspired by the counseling of Garrick and Professor William McGlinn, Selvaggi founded Students Against Drunk Drivers (SADD).

With the idea of a student organization in mind, and encouraged by the support of his advisors, Selvaggi scheduled an organizational meeting. Although only three people attended the first meeting, extensive press coverage prompted a second meeting, with a much larger turnout. Selvaggi learned firsthand the problems of creating and developing a new service organization.

"When I got the response that I did, I had to settle on some realistic goals that would help the organization to heighten public awareness of the problem of drunk drivers," he recalled.

He decided to put out a pamphlet containing information about the problem. Working feverishly before the Christmas vacation that year, Selvaggi managed to assemble and distribute just such a pamphlet to students on campus with the help of his supporters.

Since the organization's slow beginnings, Selvaggi has embarked on new, more ambitious projects. SADD has distributed posters of the Michana Coalition on Alcohol and Other Drugs on campus, and has aided other area organizations, all towards the goal of helping to develop healthier attitudes among students toward drinking and driving.

SADD's latest project involves the Court Administered Alcohol Program (CAAP) in South Bend. Working with various other organizations, SADD will seek to educate those in the program about the laws and effects of drunk driving.

Selvaggi seeks to channel the drive and emotion that the issue creates, into positive measures that affect students. He views SADD primarily as a public awareness group working towards this end. "It's a group, run by students, yet going beyond the campus boundaries. In our area, we want to be educating all ages capable of drunk driving."

"We're seeking to highlight the tough laws that are out there to hinder drunk drivers, but at the same time, let people know that help is available if they need it. Drunk drivers are not 'bad people' per se. They need a positive, rather than a simply punitive, response. But compassion for those who put others' lives in danger by their actions must be balanced against excusing their actions. With this, I hope SADD can help."

In the future, Selvaggi plans to develop a high school visitation program, issue pamphlets at high-risk travel times, as well as participate in the CAAP. "I want to be able to relate individual incidents, and to bring the emotions of the situation, instead of just using statistics."

Selvaggi welcomes any help. Anyone willing to speak on the subject at area high schools, or relate personal incidents to highlight the situation for others are encouraged. Anonymity will be respected. "I feel that people on our level are most effective with high school students, since we were so recently one of them. High school's the place where people develop their habits of drinking. If we address the problem there, maybe we'll affect more people."

SADD is very much the inspiration of Tom Selvaggi; however, it is not his organization. "I'm going to Rome next semester, but I'll be leaving a good structure in place. After all, this issue is so much bigger than any one of us. Hopefully, time will see SADD successfully serve the public to make them aware of the problem of drunk drivers," said Selvaggi.

Created out of the desire to do something positive, SADD has emerged, serving the campus and the community in heightening awareness of the drunk driving problem. SADD is on its way.

Doug Flutie — One-Man Offense

Eagle quarterback has put Boston College on list of powers almost singlehandedly

By JOHN GILL
and MICHAEL ROLFES
The Boston College Heights

CHESTNUT HILL, Mass. — It will be remembered as The Day — the day that turned around the fortunes of Boston College football.

Absorbing a 38-0 pasting at the hands of Penn State, disgusted Eagle coach Jack Bicknell looked down his bench in desperation for something. Anything at all.

In a devil-may-care, got-nothing-to-lose move, Bicknell put in his fourth-string quarterback, a 5-9 freshman who had never called a collegiate signal, a local boy who was given the last scholarship because nobody else would take it. His name was Doug Flutie.

Rolling out of the pocket more often than not, Flutie passed for one touchdown and moved the ball for more yardage than the other helmets had done in more than three quarters.

Two weeks later, Flutie eluded a fierce defensive rush, throwing from all trajectories and angles for 347 yards against then-No. 1 Pitt. BC lost to the Panthers, 29-24, but found the savior who would return the Eagles to national prominence after forty long years of mediocrity.

On Dec. 29, Flutie will lead his Eagles to the Liberty Bowl against one-point underdog Notre Dame in what Eastern sportswriters are building up as the 'Vatican Bowl.'

"Everyone admires Notre Dame," said Flutie. "Even as a little kid, you sense the tradition and the legend almost. It's certainly a thrill."

Over the last two years, Flutie has established himself as the best player in New England since Albie Booth stomped around the hallowed grounds of Yale more than forty years ago. He recently year he placed fourth.

Penn State has been Flutie's favorite victim — the junior from Natick has thrown for 900 yards against the Nittany Lions, including 520 last year. This year's performance was more satisfying, though, because BC toppled their Eastern rivals for the first time ever, 27-17.

"He's a one man offense out there," said Penn State coach Joe Paterno. "He just goes out there and goes bang-bang-boom, six points."

Bicknell and Flutie hope Notre Dame will join Penn State, Clemson, and Alabama on the Eagle's casualty list.

BC's all-time leading passer is even more dangerous because of his daring attitude and ability to run. Combining fast feet, an accurate arm, and uncanny instincts, Flutie and his impressionistic flair for the game provides BC with an exciting, sometimes devastating, albeit erratic vanguard.

Refinements in parts of Flutie's game have allowed him to realize his potential. He doesn't abandon the pocket as quickly as he was once wont to do. He picks out his secondary receivers better than last year. Most importantly, he has become a more consistent overall quarterback. He has cut down on his interceptions (20 in '82 compared to 15 this year) without taking the edge off his aggressive style.

"He has a much greater technical feel for the game now," offered Bicknell in praise of his quarterback. "He's more in control now, but in a good way. Flutie is controlled by Flutie, not by us. The key to his play is that he controls the game, but he still does it his way. There are certain things we don't want to coach out of him."

Things like spontaneity and improvisation. Things like the last-second chest pass Flutie suprisingly dumped on tailback Steve Strachan to beat Temple in October. Things like a 34-yard quarterback draw to beat Temple last year.

Things like two last-minute drives to avert upsets by Rutgers and Syracuse in 1982. Things like two fourth quarter marches to sting Alabama amidst snow, sleet, rain, and even a power outage. Things like charisma that any coach would be a fool to screw around with. Let Flutie be Flutie.

One of Flutie's most valuable attributes is his ability to read a defense on the scrimmage line, and call audibles. Case in point: an 80-yard TD bomb checked off on the first play from scrimmage against Holy Cross last year to take away any ideas of upset the Crusaders might have had after scoring on their first possession. Final — BC 35-10.

Flutie called an audible to nail the coffin on Alabama this season. Result: a ten-yard rollout touchdown pass on the short side of the field to fullback Bob Biestek.

The Catholic Super Bowl: Doug Flutie and Allen Pinkett are main characters in Liberty Bowl

By LOUIE SOMOGYI
Sports Writer

How things change.

Before 1969, when Notre Dame broke its 42-year policy of no bowl games, the University was criticized for having a policy of not accepting bowl invitations.

Now in 1983, Notre Dame is once again being criticized greatly for its bowl policy — this time for accepting an invitation to a bowl.

Criticism and cynicism has run rampant on campus and around the nation ever since the 6-5 Notre Dame football team accepted the Dec. 29 Liberty Bowl offer to play against 9-2 and No. 13-ranked Boston College.

"I'm not worried about it," says Notre Dame Head Coach Gerry Faust. "The way I look at it is that, if the Administration and athletic board made the commitment to go, and if the players want to go, then why not?"

"It is going to give the young men a great educational experience, it gives the seniors the opportunity to go out with a deserving win, and it's a tremendous challenge for all involved, which is great. In life you have to accept the challenges rather than back down from them."

In essence, it promises to be one of the most exciting and interesting bowl matchups this year. Besides matching two Catholic and highly-accredited academic institutions, it showcases perhaps the greatest "Think Small" campaign since Volkswagen came to America. Though Boston College quarterback Doug Flutie and Notre Dame tailback Allen Pinkett both stand at 5-9, they are head and shoulders above the crowd in college football when it comes to displaying their athletic ability on the football field.

Finally, this is a springboard or program-building opportunity for for both teams. In Boston College's case, it's a chance to win its first bowl game in 42 years and continue its tremendous rise from the ashes of an 0-11 season in 1978. The last and only time the Eagles won a bowl was in Frank Leahy's final season at Boston College in 1940. Leahy took over in 1941 at Notre Dame and proceeded to lead the Irish to four national titles in 11 years.

Since Jack Bicknell took over at Boston College in 1981, the team has gone from 5-6 to 8-3-1 in 1982 — including a 33-26 loss to Auburn in the Tangerine Bowl — to 9-2 this year. Besides defeating Penn State and Alabama this year, the Eagles dealt the Clemson Tigers their only defeat of the year. A victory over Notre Dame would add more than just another feather in the Eagles' cap since it is being touted as the biggest game in their school's history.

The Irish, on the other hand, have traveled tough roads since 1981. A loss to the Eagles would only add to the disenchantment with the football team that has become so prevalent on campus. A victory, though, could help restore at least some confidence in the team and perhaps even in its beleaguered coaching staff. It would also help kick off the 1984 campaign on a positive note.

The main question, of course, is, "Can the Irish defense stop Flutie?" Besides having passed for over 2,700 yards and 17 touchdowns, Flutie has also managed to pick up 241 yards on the ground to rank fourth in the nation in total offense.

"Flutie is a difficult person to stop," says Faust about the man who finished third in the Heisman Trophy balloting this year. "The thing that really scares you about him is that he has a real knack of finding a second receiver when his primary target is not open. Plus he's a very quick and elusive scrambler as well as a good runner."

Thus, the main strategy that the Irish will try to employ against Flutie is blitzing him occasionally while keeping him contained in the pocket at the same time. This way the Irish hope to pressure him into some bad passes and keep him from scrambling around in order to buy some more time for his receivers to get open.

The receivers, led by second-team all-American Brian Brennan, combine with Flutie to give the Eagles a first-rate passing attack. Brennan has latched on to 66 passes this season while averaging over 17 yards a reception. Flanker Gerald Phelan has averaged over 19 yards a reception with his 22 catches, while tight end Scott Gieselmann has been the bread-and-butter man on the shorter passing routes with 45 catches for an average gain of 12 yards.

The offensive arsenal doesn't stop there. The Eagles have a very potent rushing attack that is led by tailback Troy Stratford. Despite missing three games with an injury, Stratford has gained 810 yards rushing while averaging five-and-a-half yards each time he carries the ball.

The key, though, will rest with Boston College's offensive line and its ability to stop Notre Dame's strong but inconsistent front line. The Eagles front line is anchored by Bicknell's son, Jack Jr., who at 6-1, 254 pounds is the smallest member of the unit. In the early losses to Michigan State and Miami, the Irish pass rush was non-existent. In the next five games the line simply destroyed its opposition and led the defense to a No. 3 ranking in the nation. Against Pitt and Penn State the line's performance once again tailed off. If Flutie is not pressured by the line, then the secondary, which intercepted only seven passes this season, could be in for a long night.

Linebacker Mike Kovaleski and nose tackle Jon Autry will be ready for the game after missing action late in the year because of injuries.

Offensively, Notre Dame will have its own 5-9 Heisman Trophy candidate for 1984 in its backfield. Tailback Allen Pinkett, who accounted for an incredible 513 yards of total offense in the last two games, is raring to go again as he will lead the offense against an experienced and aggressive Boston College defense.

"They are very big defensively," says Faust, "and they combine both their quickness and aggressiveness very well. They are also very experienced since their starters are predominantly seniors. They have an excellent secondary and they like to blitz you a lot."

The secondary is indeed talented as reflected in the 17 interceptions that the four starters have grabbed against enemy quarterbacks. They have also limited opposing teams to a 47-percent pass completion rate. Other stalwarts on defense for the Eagles include second-team all-America linebacker Steve DeOssie and nose guard Mark Ruth who made 80 tackles and eight sacks this year despite having to ward off the usual double-team blocking that a nose guard faces.

The Irish quarterbacking chores will be split between senior Blair Kiel and freshman Steve Beuerlein. "Blair will start," says Faust, "but both will play a lot."

The kicking game seems a little suspect for the Eagles. Kevin Snow and Brian Waldron have combined to convert only 29 of their 40 "automatic" points after touchdowns, while also combining for a 10-for-22 effort in the field goal department. That is one intangible that can make the difference in this ball game.

A second crucial intangible could be emotion. In all their wins this year, the Irish came out smoking in the first quarter and set the tone for the rest of the game by just obliterating their opponents early in the game. In those six victories, the Irish outscored the opposition 82-3 in the first quarter. In the five defeats, however, Notre Dame scored a total of 14 points in the first quarter — all against Michigan State — while the opposition scored 34 of its own points.

If the Irish come out flat and fall behind early again, they will be hard-pressed to make a comeback against the explosive and fired-up Eagles. Making an early sack or interception against Flutie, however, or scoring first in the game, could do wonders for Notre Dame's confidence.

"It will be interesting to see how our players will react in this game," says Faust. "Their character will be really seen now."

As a springboard for the 1984 season, the Notre Dame football team could well do without another belly-flop.

... Flutie

Flutie has been blessed with good receivers, particularly this season. Senior Brian Brennan was plagued by injuries last year, but has come back this season to make second team all-American. Tight end Scott Geiselman copped honorable mention honors. Unheralded Gerard Phelan has good hands and makes a number of big plays.

In addition, a running game blossomed this year, especially in the form of Troy Stradford. Stradford's running and receiving talents have taken considerable pressure off Flutie and his targets. Flutie's numbers were nearly as good without the ground game, but BC's more diversified attack has made them a more successful team.

When injuries set in, and Stradford and Biestek were out for the West Virginia game, BC was forced to an exclusively aerial attack. Flutie threw for 418 yards, but the Eagles lost, failing on three separate occasions to score from within the five.

Flutie's storybook career at BC has not gone unnoticed. He graced the cover of Sports Illustrated in October, and has played color man to ABC's Jim Lampley and CBS's Brent Musburger on their Saturday scoreboard shows.

The BC athletic department is smiling, too. BC's network appearances against West Virginia, Penn State, Holy Cross, and Alabama have put $2 million into the school's coffers. The Eagles looked destined for the Fiesta Bowl before Syracuse tripped them up.

Flutie has been BC's full page ad for the future. The junior Speech Communications major is articulate, a good student, shy in spite of his stardom, a guy whose parents still drive him home after most football games. He doesn't act or look like most football players, he's just Doug.

With a year of college football left, the future is bright for Flutie and for Boston College football. Bicknell has signed a five-year contract, recruiting has never been better, and Doug Flutie has a year left to set untouchable figures in the BC record book and get his college diploma before the pros beckon for him and his magic.

John Gill and Michael Rolfes are the associate editor and sports editors for The Heights, an independent student weekly at Boston College.

Isiah Thomas scored 47 points and Detroit scored eight straight points late in the third overtime to give the Pistons a 186-184 victory at Denver last night in the highest-scoring game in National Basketball Association history. The old record for one team was 173 points Feb. 27, 1959 by the Boston Celtics in a regulation game. The two-team record was 337 points, when host San Antonio defeated Milwaukee 171-166 in a triple-overtime contest on March 6, 1982. ## Underclassmen improving Wrestlers impressive in tourney

By JOE BRUNETTI
Sports Writer

The Notre Dame wrestling team will enter its first home triangular meet of the season today with a head of steam after coming off an impressive showing in the Olivet Nazarene Tournament.

Last Saturday the Irish placed second in the tourney, depending on how you look at it. The "official" results of the tournament have Notre Dame losing to Illinois State by a half point. However, Notre Dame wrestling coach Brother Joseph Bruno, C.S.C. has the Irish losing by a larger margin.

The craziness doesn't stop there either. At the conclusion of the 190-pound final, the last match of the tournament, an Illinois State wrestler refused to shake hands with Notre Dame wrestler David Helmer, and he also used abusive language. These two infractions should have led to a two-point deduction from the Illinois State team score, which would make the Irish the winners, but no such deduction was made. And so, Illinois State is still the "official" winner, but the official "official" team scores will not be released for a few weeks

In spite of all this madness, the Irish put forth an impressive showing, with Irish wrestlers either reaching the finals or coming in third in all weight divisions, except for the 158 and heavyweight divisions. In the 158 division, Louis Carnesale suffered a knee injury in his first match and did not finish the tournament, and the Irish did not enter a heavyweight wrestler.

Helmer seems to create excitement everywhere he goes. In his third match of the tourney, he excited the fans by tying his ISU opponent 4-4 with a takedown as time ran out. Helmer then won the match on a referee's "criteria decision."

Only a freshman, Helmer has been jumping weight classes, wrestling at both 190 and 177. "I am very impressed with Dave's improvement," said Bruno. "He has been wrestling very well at 190, so I'm sure he would be doing much better at 177."

Junior captain Phil Baty (177-pound) and John Krug (167), a sophomore, "I'm used to seeing Phil do so well that I kind of expect it. But it is great to see a younger guy like John improve so much each time he wrestles."

Kevin Staveley-O'Carroll proved to be a surprise in the 150-pound division by placing third in the tournament. The Olivet Nazarene tournament was the sophomore's first taste of collegiate tournament wrestling.

The Irish, 6-0, will open their home schedule today against North Central Illinois and Defiance of Ohio after being on the road for their first seven competitions of the 1983-84 season.

"This is our last meet before Christmas and it would be nice to remain undefeated in our tri-meets," says Bruno. "After this meet we will have a chance to heal our injuries until the end of December. A win sure would be a great Christmas present."

The wrestling squad begins its home season at 7:30 p.m. in the ACC pit, and maybe with some support the Irish will get an early Christmas present.

Landmark case?

Punter challenges USFL's actions

Associated Press

PHOENIX, Ariz. — Bob Boris, a former University of Arizona punter who has gone to court to challenge United States Football League rules against drafting underclassmen, says he's deadly serious about his action, which could have long-range ramifications for pro football.

Boris, 25, is seeking damages for being forced to miss the 1983 season due to the USFL's rule barring players from being signed before their eligibility ends. The suit contends that the USFL's eligibility rule — and similar rules in the National Football League and Canadian Football League — violates federal antitrust laws.

"This case is going to turn out to be a landmark in college football," says Don Meyers, a Phoenix-based attorney for the USFL's Arizona Wranglers, who predicts it could eventually go to the U.S. Supreme Court.

Although a trial date has been set for Sept. 11, 1984, in Los Angeles, Boris said he hopes a federal judge will summarily rule in his favor on Jan. 23. The judge also could dismiss the suit or allow it to proceed to trial.

In 1982, as a junior, Boris shared the Arizona Wildcats' punting duties and had a 47.5-yard average through the first three games. He was declared academically ineligible soon afterward and dropped out.

So he signed up with a San Diego-based sports management firm and wrote various USFL clubs requesting tryouts. All replies were negative.

"They said they felt for my position, but they weren't going to let me play because they'd have shown bad faith with the colleges," said Boris. "That's when we decided to go to court."

Last December, however, 1982 Heisman Trophy winner Herschel Walker — a junior running back at Georgia — signed with the USFL's

New Jersey Generals and "I figured the doors would be open," Boris said. "I thought I would be able to sign right away."

"But the USFL said no, that Herschel was an exception. Why? I don't know. I don't see how they can say that's good for one person and they can't do it for anybody else."

Last month, Boris said the USFL declared him a free agent, and he tried out last week for both the Chicago Blitz and the expansion Oklahoma Outlaws.

If he ends up signing with either team, Boris said it can only help his case since it shows he had the ability to play in the league.

Women's basketball

Irish begin extensive road trip

By MIKE SULLIVAN
Sports Editor

The Notre Dame women's basketball team will not exactly be dashing through the snow on a one-horse open sleigh over the semester break as it travels to the Northeast, Midwest, and deep South in a span of two weeks. However, it will be racing around basketball courts in Boston, Louisiana, Texas, Ohio, Indiana, and North Carolina trying to show people around the country that Notre Dame deserves national attention.

The eight-game schedule which begins tonight, when the Irish play host to Western Michigan at 7:30, will mark a crucial point in the season as Mary DiStanislao's team should find out how good or bad it really is when the break is over.

"By the end of the break, we'll be halfway through our season," says DiStanislao. "We'd better know by that time what kind of team we have."

Through the first six games, it has been difficult to tell how good the team is. The only time the Irish have played well in all phases of the game was against UCLA — a game won by the Irish. In every other game, they have had problems rebounding or shooting or turnovers, resulting in a mediocre 3-3 record.

"We have to hit a consistent groove," says DiStanislao. "It seems there's always something we don't do well in a game. When we don't turn over the ball much, we get out-rebounded by 20, and, when we have a rebounding edge, we have more than 20 turnovers.

"I'm just looking for a good performance from the players," explains DiStanislao. "I don't think about whether we're successful if we go 7-1 or 6-2 because I don't think in those terms. I'll be happy if we play well."

If the team "plays well," DiStanislao should get a good indication of how much she can expect this season. That does not necessarily mean the team will win all eight games, however, as two teams which have won national championships in the past, Louisiana Tech and Old Dominion, will take on the Irish. The Irish will have to play nearly flawless basketball to beat either team.

However, before Notre Dame takes to the road to play these powerhouses, it will get a two-game shakedown period to work out some of the inconsistencies. The games against Western Michigan and defending Mid-American Conference champ Central Michigan (December 21) will give the Irish their last chance to play on their home court until next semester.

Things get much more difficult in a hurry, however, as the next opponent will be powerful Old Dominion in the first round of the Nike Christmas Classic at Boston College. Marianne Stanley's Lady Monarchs, who reached the Final Four in last year's NCAA Tournament and who have won two national championships, lost 6-8 All-American Anne Donovan, but remain very strong. They have excellent players in Medina Dixon and Lisa Blais.

The second-round opponent in the tournament will be either Virginia or Boston College, two programs that are building like Notre Dame's. No matter who the opponent is, though, this game should be a very important test to see which program has progressed faster.

A few days after the B.C. tournament, Notre Dame travels to Greenville, N.C., to take on the Pirates of East Carolina. Cathy Andruzzi's team lost five players from last year's team that lost by two points to Notre Dame in the ACC. However, the Pirates are known to be a much tougher team to beat at home than away.

The journey continues back to Cincinnati where the Irish will open their first season of conference basketball against the Muscateers of Xavier. An unknown quantity, Xavier is led by guard JoAnn Osterkamp who averaged more than 21 points a game last year.

Last season is what the next opponent, Louisiana Tech, remembers. The Lady Techsters do not remember last year's 81-39 rout of the Irish; they remember how they lost the national championship they had held for two years. They almost never lose at home, and they return three potential All-Americans — Janice Lawrence, Debra Rodman, and Kim Mulkey — who are playing their final year at Tech. As DiStanislao says, "They will be very, very tough."

If Notre Dame gets out of Louisiana alive, it will end its road trip with a game at Southern Methodist. SMU is another program that is building toward national recognition and a win over the Irish would help out the task.

On the other hand, a win over Old Dominion, SMU, Louisiana Tech, or Virginia would also make DiStanislao's job of building a national power much easier. On January 15, 1984, the day of the SMU game, she will know how far she has to go.

with the Crusaders. They will return on Dec. 27 to begin a week of preparation for LaSalle, a game which should be a good measuring stick for the team to see where it's at this season.

"When we come back after (the) road trip, we've got a good idea of what we are as a team," says Phelps.

LaSalle is paced by all-America candidate Steve Black. The 6-3, 185-pound guard has averaged 19.8 points over five games this season.

"This kid Black is a great guard," says Phelps of the LaSalle star. "He's as good as Pax (John Paxson). I sincerely feel that Steve is one of the top guards in the United States in the college ranks."

Explorers' coach "Lefty" Ervin, in his fifth year at the reins, has been around LaSalle for a long time as a student and assistant coach, in addition to his time as head coach, and feels that Black is one of the best ever at LaSalle.

"In my twenty years here at LaSalle, I have never seen a better pure jump shooter on the collegiate level than Steve," says Ervin.

LaSalle is currently 3-2 with losses to St. Joseph's (Penn.) and Army. Even so, the Explorers are not a team to be taken lightly.

"They've got three starters back with Black," says Phelps. "LaSalle is the team to win the Big Five this year, not Villanova."

The Explorers face Villanova this Saturday at home and will play in the Maryland Invitational before taking on the Irish Jan. 4 in the Spectrum in Philadelphia.

Also losing from last year's LaSalle squad that lost to the Irish, 68-56, at the ACC is 6-9 junior center Albert Butts. Butts is averaging 14.8 points a game this season along with 11.4 rebounds.

The Irish lead the series, 10-2.

Notre Dame will next travel to Worcester, Mass., to play different Crusaders. This time they will be facing Holy Cross.

The Crusaders play in the Metro Atlantic Conference and are coached by George Blaney, in his 12th year at Holy Cross. Blaney led Holy Cross to a 17-13 record last year and the Crusaders have lost only one letterman of any consequence off that team.

Holy Cross holds a 2-2 record this year, with wins over Dartmouth and Harvard and losses to Army and Providence. The Crusaders will play in the Rainbow Classic in Hawaii and at Boston College, among others, before meeting the Irish on Jan. 6.

The Irish lead the series between the two teams by an 8-2 margin and have not met the Crusaders since the 1976-77 season.

Phelps thinks this year's game will have special meaning, though. "It'll be like the football team and Boston College," says Phelps. "It'll be a crusade for them. The Crusaders become a reality."

After the Holy Cross game, Notre Dame will travel from the East Coast to the West Coast for a Jan. 9 game with Washington in the Seattle Kingdome. The Huskies are 2-2, having beat Texas Tech and Missouri and losing to LSU and New Mexico. They still must play St. Mary's (Calif.) and Washington State, as well as in the Cabrillo Classic, before facing the Irish.

The matchup will be the first for the two teams and will be a homecoming of sorts for Irish point guard Jojo Buchanan, a Seattle native. Buchanan is currently out of the Irish lineup with tendonitis in his right knee, but is expected to be back in time for this game. The Irish coaching staff is aiming for the LaSalle game to be Buchanan's return to action.

Notre Dame will finish their road trip with a Jan. 11 game at Eugene, Ore., against the Ducks of the University of Oregon. Don Monson, former Idaho coach in his first year at Oregon, leads the Ducks, who were 9-18 a year ago.

Oregon is 2-2 right now, with wins over Pacific and Wichita State and losses to Colorado and Minnesota. They will face Brigham Young, California, and Stanford, as well as play in the Far West Classic, before meeting the Irish.

As with Washington, it will be the first time Notre Dame has met Oregon.

"People are going to like the Notre Dame game," says Monson. "Digger Phelps' style of coaching and the national attention Notre Dame receives will make this a big game for us."

For sure, the Irish have their work cut out for them after what should be an easy win over Valparaiso. And when the students return to campus in January, they will have an indication of how good this team is and can be in the future, just by looking at how the team fared on its extended road trip.

Ken Barlow slams home two of his team-high ten points in last night's victory over Cornell. Forward Jim Dolan also pulled down a game-high 12 rebounds. Notre Dame won, 55-48.

Notre Dame offense still struggling but eludes Cornell's hopes of upset

By THERON ROBERTS
Sports Writer

The Irish scored their last nine points from the free throw line and hung on to defeat Cornell University, 55-48, last night at the Athletic and Convocation Center.

The Big Red of Cornell were forced to foul the Irish in the last two minutes of the game, sending Notre Dame to the charity stripe 14 times. The Irish converted nine of those opportunities to stretch their lead to 55-44, before Cornell scored its last two baskets.

The Irish again looked sluggish in the early going. After tying the game at 2-2, Notre Dame went three and a half minutes without scoring until Joseph Price canned one from long range.

The Big Red also had problems scoring at the outset of the game, going more than six and a half minutes without a point after Drew Martin had opened the game's scoring, and Cornell was unable to capitalize when the Irish went cold.

After Price hit another jumper, the Irish committed three turnovers before Jim Dolan broke another scoring lapse, lasting 3:40, by following his own missed shot.

With 11:27 left in the half, the two teams had combined for only 12 points on the scoreboard.

The two teams proceeded to trade baskets, and Cornell came within three at 21-18 after Brad Bomba, the game's leading scorer with 16 points, broke loose for a layup.

The Irish tallied the last four points of the first stanza to lead 25-18 at the half. Cornell had shot only 9-24 in twenty minutes.

"I thought we were a little tight on our shots in the first half," said Tom Miller, coach of the Big Red. "We were getting the shots we wanted, but we were not making them. If we had hit more of our open shots, it would have been close at the half."

Turnovers again plagued the Irish in the first half. Eleven times they squandered scoring opportunities by throwing the ball away.

The Irish came out like gamebusters in the second half, scoring eight straight points. Kempton had two baskets during the spurt, including a slam dunk after a Price steal that brought the crowd of 10,581 to its feet.

When Ken Barlow scored on a move through the lane, Notre Dame opened its largest lead of the game, 35-19. Kempton then drew his fourth foul at the 13:39 mark, earning him a seat on the bench.

Although his team was hot from the field, four straight misses resulting from poor shot selection prompted Irish coach Digger Phelps to call a time-out with 11:23 remaining.

Less than three minutes later, Phelps called another time-out, as five straight points by Cornell cut the margin to 39-32. With 2:49 remaining, Cornell pulled to within six, 46-40, but because they had committed only three team fouls in the second half up to that point, the next three fouls against the Big Red gave the Irish the ball out of bounds, and the clock continued to run out, as did hopes of a Cornell upset.

From then on in, Notre Dame put the game out of reach at the free throw line. Dan Duff hit five of six free throws when they counted. On two occasions, a scrambling Dolan kept the ball in play when a free toss was missed at the Notre Dame end, forcing Cornell to foul again.

Cornell was badly outmanned in the game, as only three players scored for the Big Red until John Bajusz fired home a long jumper with 0:31 remaining. In addition to Bomba's 16 points, Martin had 14 and Ken Bantum chipped in 12.

Barlow led the Irish with ten points, eight of them coming in the second half.

The Irish height advantage was evidenced by the 31-21 rebound margin. Dolan was high man for the game with 12 caroms.

However, the Irish offense continues to have problems putting points on the board against not so worthy opponents.

"I think that if we get some continuity going in our offense, we'll be able to get a lot more open shots and not commit the turnovers," Barlow said. "Teams have been sagging in on us a lot, but if we could hit those shots from the wings it would open the inside game back up."

Notre Dame, now 5-3, has another chance to find its shooting touch before the New Year when they host Valparaiso next Wednesday.

Five games over Break

Notre Dame to evaluate progress

By JEFF BLUMB
Assistant Sports Editor

Hoping to get their offense on track, the Notre Dame basketball team will host Valparaiso next Wednesday, before going on a four game road trip after the New Year which will see it travel to both the East and West Coasts.

But before the Irish can worry about any of these games, they must first put their mind on finals. "Now, we've got to have everybody get through their final exams and have them eligible for second semester," says Notre Dame coach Digger Phelps.

When finals are over next Wednesday, the Irish will meet Valparaiso for the 27th time in the history of the two schools. The Irish hold a 25-1 lead in the series with their one loss to the Crusaders coming in the 1920-21 season, the second time the two teams played.

Valparaiso plays in the Association of Mid-Continent Universities, a conference that most Notre Dame students have never even heard of. Fourth-year Valpo coach Tom Smith will bring a team to the ACC that lost two lettermen off of last year's 13-15 squad, which lost to the Irish 108-70.

Senior swingman John Meyne leads the Crusaders. His 18.9 ppg a year ago topped all Valpo players.

The Irish players will head home for Christmas right after the game

Some thoughts after a fall to forget

This has been a semester to forget as far as Notre Dame athletics are concerned. Sure, there have been some good points to the semester — the cross country team's big win in the National Catholic Meet, the women's basketball team's upset of UCLA — but the bad far outweighs the good.

I'm sure most people would not like to recreate the events of the first semester. After all the frustration, disappointment, disgust, etc. that the fall brought, people would just as soon look ahead to the next semester to see if the basketball teams — both men's and women's — can put "Top Twenty" back into the vocabulary of Notre Dame major sports.

There is one event remaining, however, that could bring back many of those bad memories. I don't have to mention it by name, because anyone who reads "Fate" or the classifieds knows what I'm talking about, but, for those who still don't know, I'm talking about the Liberty Bowl.

Before I talk about the Liberty Bowl, however, the air needs to be cleared of a few things.

What right does The Observer or a person who writes for it have to criticize the football team? In order to ask this question, as many football players have done, one would have to ask a similar question — why should the football team receive much more press than any other sport, and what right do the players have to be treated as more important than the average student who isn't featured in a story?

The answer is simple. The average person outside the University bases his or her opinion about the school on how the football team (and, to a lesser extent, the basketball team) performs. You don't hear friends back home ask you about the faculty or Father Hesburgh. They want to know what's wrong with the football team.

While this shouldn't occur, the plain fact is that it does. It is asking a lot of college-age students to deal with this, but, for every player who has to deal with it, there are a hundred more who would love to be in his position.

That is why the performance of the Notre Dame football team is so important to those who are concerned about the reputation of the school.

Notre Dame students are probably more concerned about the school's reputation than anyone else. That is why it is the duty of The Observer, the student newspaper, to cover the team more closely than any other team.

Mike Sullivan

Sports Editor

For most of this past season, however, there really has been nothing positive to report. Sure, the great performance of Allen Pinkett was positive, but the overall results — losses — were usually negative. That is why this column has been negative so many times this year.

But, while this column reflects a student's opinion of things, it does not reflect the feelings of only one person. Rather, I think it reflects the opinion of the majority of the students. Granted there are some people who disagree — most of them are players — but the majority of the students have a very negative feeling — or no feeling at all — about the football team.

This leads us to the second question — just because we, as students, criticize the football team, does it mean we are not real fans?

I quote a very important member of the team who usually acts as team spokesman: "We don't want fans who are going to criticize us." If this is the requirement to be a fan, there will be no "real" fans left to pack Notre Dame Stadium every Saturday. My definition of a fan is someone who is sincerely concerned with how his or her team performs. If something is right, a fan will cheer, but, if something is wrong, he will criticize fairly until it is made right.

I feel that most Notre Dame students are being fair when they complain about the team's performance. When you have a team that is supposed to be more talented than any of its opponents and still loses, something is very wrong. When this happens for three years, a fan begins to feel his criticism is going unheard and, at this point, either criticizes more or gives up. Most Notre Dame students have given up. As soon as the team begins playing as it is capable, though, the students will be back in full force.

If this were Northwestern where nothing is expected from the team, the bad performance of the team would not be so newsworthy. But this is Notre Dame and, while winning is very important, it is the actual performance on the field that concerns people. As the saying goes: it is not whether you win or lose, but how you play the game. The Notre Dame football team, as a whole, is not playing the game as well as it can. If it is, then you have to wonder why we have been told by experts that there is an incredible amount of talent wearing Notre Dame jerseys.

All that the students are asking is that the team play hard for 60 minutes, and acts as if its opponent, whether it be Air Force or Penn State, is the greatest team in history. I think that if the team could do this, it would never have a season like the past three again.

Now we have the Liberty Bowl to worry about. Whether or not the school should have elected to go is a moot point — the die has already been cast — but it does appear the athletic department is playing Russian roulette with the team. The odds are that the outcome will have little effect on anything, but there is that chance the reputation of Notre Dame football will be ruined even more.

Notre Dame has nothing to gain in Memphis but respect, which hasn't been much of a driving force for the team this year. Boston College is looking to make a name for itself.

Boston College wants to bury Notre Dame, but Notre Dame really doesn't have any strong feelings about the Eagles.

Doug Flutie and Allen Pinkett should have great days, but Pinkett will probably need more than 250 yards to have a chance of offsetting Flutie's arm.

These reasons alone are enough to make Notre Dame a heavy underdog.

There are some people who think a crushing win by Boston College will be best for the Irish because it will show them that they are not as good as they think. But, while they may have a point, we, as true fans, cannot root against Notre Dame. All we can hope for is another surprise. All the surprises lately have been unpleasant. Maybe, on December 29, we will finally get a pleasant surprise.
