Sophomore Literary Festival brings English poet to ND

By MARY CAROL CREADON
Senior Staff Reporter

British poet Jon Silkin shared some of his poems which reflect his wide-ranging life experiences at last night's Sophomore Literary Festival.

Silkin, one of England's most distinguished living poets, according to the Sophomore Literary Festival program, was born in London in 1930. He is presently living in Newcastle and he described himself as part of the "urban bourgeoisie."

His poetry is as vastly diverse as the periods in his life. He worked as a journalist, a soldier, a manual laborer, a teacher at the University of Leeds, and is currently editor and publisher of the poetry quarterly, Stand. The subject matter of his poetry ranges from politics, history, and religion to nature, love, life, and death.

Silkin's first publication in 1954, "The Peaceable Kingdom," has been described by critics as "the finest first volume of poetry written by a living English poet." Silkin said of the volume, "Ideology is something I have always been involved with" and these poems deal with "the gradual erosion of the aspirations of the peaceable kingdom."

He also writes about "what it feels like to live in England today," and said, so many of his poems are politically founded in the conflicts between the British and the Irish. In one poem, he attacked, "the English men and women who have killed the Irish and sleep easily on it."

Silkin talked about his poetry in a technical sense, which he said few poets will do publicly. While teaching at Leeds, he established a rhyme for his poems that "was flexible and, at the same time, got very close to the rapid British speech." The poetic line he used had three fundamental pulses in it.

Many of his poems reflect certain episodes in British history that especially influenced him. "The Coldness" relates the 1190 massacre of Jews in York, "when 800 Jews took each other's lives to escape Christian death by Christian lives."

Another poem, entitled "Defense," is a sarcastic commentary on a pamphlet which instructed women on how to defend themselves in the event of a nuclear bombing.

In his poems "Carved" and "A Death to Us," he reveals his fascination with death. In both poems, the death of one organism becomes an intrusion on the actions of the living.

Saint Mary's loft policy completed

By KIMBERLY TRENNER
Staff Reporter

Plans have been finalized for raising the level of sleep for some Saint Mary's women.

The loft policy, announced in November, will be in effect fall semester 1985. Patricia Rissmeyer, director of residence life and housing, said, "I think it will provide the students with the opportunity to personalize their rooms a bit more than they are able to now."

Most students are optimistic about the new loft policy. Liz Murray, a freshman residing in Regina, said, "I like it. I think it's a great idea. I don't know if I would buy the whole kit, I think I would just use the blueprints. I would plan on getting one though, especially since the rooms are so small."

Another freshman at Regina, Lisa Nakfoor, said, "I think it's great. It will give the rooms a much more appealing look." Other students felt that the lofts were a good idea but were concerned with their expense. Freshman Kathleen Sinnott said, "I would buy one if they are not too expensive."

The new policy offers the students a company built kit or a blueprint guide for student built lofts. American Wood Products, the company chosen to supply the lofts, will construct them during the summer and will install them in the fall if the students would like them to be assembled.

The prices range from $125 to $183 depending on the type of loft and the quantity ordered. Saint Mary's will not be making a profit on the lofts.

Rissmeyer, who has held her present position since 1983, did not feel that the enactment of the loft policy is a personal success. She said, "I give credit to the students." Regarding school policy changes, she said, "I welcome the opportunity for students to propose new and especially creative changes. Any community has a changing environment. That is what makes my job exciting. I really enjoy working with the students."

The Loft Policy Committee was established through the efforts of Saint Mary's student government. The chairwoman of the committee was Anne McCarthy. Other members included Patricia Rissmeyer, Jason Lindower, Saint Mary's controller and business manager, five residence hall representatives, four resident assistants, and three Saint Mary's student government officers.

The committee conducted a survey last semester to determine student opinion on the loft issue. It was discovered that a majority of students showed an interest in having a loft. Of the 439 students who responded, 81 percent agreed the lofts would make the dorm rooms more livable, and 75 percent said they definitely wanted lofts.

Each loft will be checked by a College inspection team for compliance with the new loft policy. Lofts found in violation of the policy will either have to be altered or dismantled.

Flood waters inundating record books in Hoosier state

Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS - Hundreds of Fort Wayne school students volunteered yesterday to fill sandbags as the city and other northern Indiana communities kept a wary eye on swollen rivers.

Approximately 1,100 people were forced from their homes in scattered areas across northern Indiana as some rivers approached record levels, state Civil Defense Official Phil Roberts said.

In Fort Wayne, the rising waters of the St. Joseph, Maumee and St. Mary's rivers may provide the first test of nearly $3 million in flood-control improvements made after destructive flooding three years ago.

In a manner recalling the community volunteer spirit that saved Fort Wayne from even greater destruction during the 1982 floods, approximately 1,000 students volunteered to fill sandbags and shore up the riverbank along endangered neighborhoods.

"We're hanging in there and holding our own," said Angela Boerger, a spokeswoman for Fort Wayne Mayor Winfield Moses Jr.

High water on some streets, plus the need for volunteers, prompted the closing of city schools yesterday.

Rivers were expected to crest approximately 10 feet above flood stage last night, the National Weather Service said.

City officials said no evacuations had been ordered and they could not estimate the number of people who left their homes voluntarily. Approximately 30 people sought shelter with the Red Cross, city spokeswoman Amy Ahlersmeyer said.

"We're doing real good here," said Carl O'Neal, city director of transportation and engineering.

In Elkhart, high waters of the St. Joseph River forced the evacuation of some homes in southeast side neighborhoods. The Red Cross provided emergency shelter to 14 people Sunday night.

The St. Joseph River at South Bend was predicted to crest today nearly 6 feet above flood stage, just above the record level set in 1982.

"There are a half-dozen homes with water almost up to the door, but they were sandbagged," county police officer Lester Myers said. "I don't see any immediate danger to life in our area." A 20 percent chance of rain was predicted for today.

State police reported Interstate highways and main roads remained open in northern Indiana. Many secondary roads in lowlying areas were flooded.

In western Indiana, a flood warning remained in effect as the Wabash River in some areas reached its highest levels in 26 years. The weather service predicted extensive flooding between Covington in Fountain County and Terre Haute in Vigo County through Friday.

The floods that are soaking Indiana are just part of the flooding across the nation. This scene is from Bowmansville, N.Y. Rain and melting snow have caused flooding throughout western New York state.

Seat belt laws should become more common to save lives

Recently New York state passed a law making it illegal for a person to ride in a moving automobile without having their seat belt fastened. Other states are moving in that direction.

Although the government, especially the federal government, should regulate people's lives as little as possible, this is an area in which the federal government should not hesitate to step in. If all 50 states do not enact mandatory seat belt laws within the next few years the federal government should pass such a law.

There is little doubt as to the fact that seat belts can save lives in the event of a serious accident. The fact has been proven many times over. The reason is just simple physics. Modern cars have been designed to "crumple" upon impact to take some of the force of the blow and prevent it from reaching the passenger compartment. However, this design feature does little good if the occupants of the car do not remain in the car, or are violently thrown around the interior of the car.

When a person wearing a seat belt is in a car that makes a sudden stop, such as would occur when a car hits another car, that person stops as the car does because the seat belt makes the person basically a part of the passenger compartment. The car crumples, which takes a small but very important amount of time. The amount of force a body is subjected to as it decelerates is directly related to the amount of time it takes the body to come to rest.

However, a person who is not wearing a seat belt decelerates much more suddenly, usually it happens almost instantaneously as their head hits the windshield or their chest is impaled upon the steering wheel. The amount of force the unbelted person is subjected to is much greater and is often upon a portion of the body that can be easily injured, such as the forehead or the chest.

One argument against a mandatory seat belt law is that it infringes upon a person's rights to mandate wearing a seat belt while riding in their private car. Although this is a consideration, the key issue is whether one person's right to drive or ride in a car without a seat belt supersedes other people's rights.

In fact, Charles Darwin would not agree with a mandatory seat belt law. The fact that some people choose not to wear seat belts validates his Theory of Evolution. Those who are not intelligent enough to wear seat belts are often killed in the event of a serious automobile accident, while those who choose to wear seat belts have a much better chance of surviving a serious accident. Thus, the less intelligent members of the species are killed off and the species' gene pool as a whole is improved.

Mark Potter

Assistant News Editor

However the key issue in this debate is still individual rights. A person's right to not wear their seat belt ends just as soon as it infringes upon another individual's rights. The right to not wear a seat belt does not include the right to drive up another person's insurance costs. This can happen when a person not wearing a seat belt is injured in an accident, and the insurance company has to pay for their subsequent hospital stay. The insurance company has to recover the money they paid out for that person's hospital stay, so they raise everyone's rates.

The right to not wear a seat belt does not supersede other's rights to quickly and safely get from one point to another on this nation's roads and highways. A person who is injured in a crash causes the roads to be blocked by the paramedics, fire trucks and ambulances that will be sent to the scene of the accident. No one has the right to block up the roads that are used by everyone merely because they wish to exercise their right to not wear their seat belt.

Nor does anyone have any right to endanger the lives of others because they feel that it is infringing upon their individual rights to require them to wear a seat belt. A person who is thrown about the interior of their car and can't stay behind the wheel because they are not wearing a seat belt cannot maintain control of their car and may end up hitting another car. By endangering someone's life that person is infringing upon another's rights. Anyone's right to not wear a seat belt is forfeited as soon as they inconvenience or endanger anyone else by their action.

Senate condemns budget cuts

By MIKE MILLEN
Senior Staff Reporter

The Student Senate last night unanimously approved a statement condemning the Reagan administration for its proposed budget cuts in student financial aid.

According to Student Government Lobby Commissioners Ed Augustine and Karen McCloskey, the new budget provides for a 25 percent cut in aid. Their resolution "finds President Reagan's Budget Recommendations short sighted and ill-advised." They plan to send the petition to Congress and will make form letters available to concerned students.

Student Senator Pat Browne presented a proposal to lengthen parietals by one hour on Sunday and two hours on Friday and Saturday night. Mike Quinn, executive coordinator, said "it seems like we do this year after year. It's beating a dead horse."

Some senate members were in favor of extending only the Sunday hours. Lyons Hall President Joanie Cahill agreed, saying "I think the 1 a.m. Sunday proposal would be a much better idea." Senator Dan McNamara also thought the Sunday proposal to be more realistic.

The senate unanimously passed a resolution confirming the $100 donation to the Ethiopian Charity Ball and urging the Student Activities Board to donate $100 to another organization with a similar cause. Kevin McGovern, student activities board manager, said he would honor the resolution.

Kevin Howard, Keenan Hall president, announced the current status of the Hall President's Council petition asking for an explanation of the senate's action in the Browne/Cahill election controversy. He asked the matter to be dropped and apologized for having to mention the issue. Due to an error in procedure, Howard was denied time to speak. Later in the meeting he was given an opportunity to make his statement.

Quinn, chairman of the Committee for Restructuring Student Government, said his committee had established the areas which their report will concern. He noted the final report as being a "long-range solution," adding he thought it best if the current administration issue the report rather than the incoming one. "I really believe that we know the situation better than the people who are coming in," he said.

Parietals extension passes first test

By ANNE GALLAGHER
Senior Staff Reporter

The extension of parietal hours at Saint Mary's "met with very little opposition" in the Student Affairs Committee, according to Julie Strazzabosco, vice-president for academic affairs.

Discussing the proceedings with the Board of Governance last night, Strazzabosco indicated that the prospective parietal changes passed the first of three tests successfully. "It's now on to the Student Affairs Council and then to Dr. Duggan for the final decision," she said.

A student government survey conducted last semester indicated that students overwhelmingly favored an extension of the existing weekday visitation hours. If this measure is passed, parietals will be extended from 4 p.m. - 12 a.m. on weekdays. They will also begin earlier, 10 a.m., on football weekends.

Strazzabosco pointed out that there was some opposition to the early locking of residence hall doors following the implementation of such hours. The early hours pose an exiting problem to administration and faculty located in LeMans.

Anne Marie Kollman, vice-president for student affairs, indicated that any opposition will not be overlooked. "We have to take into consideration how many people parietals effect positively and negatively; then we have to weigh the odds," said Kollman.

"I feel positive about it, and I am sure the members of the council will have questions," said Strazzabosco, "but I feel sure we will have the answers."

The board also discussed the possibility of a "Meet the Commissioners" night so that interested candidates would be able to meet and speak with the present commissioners about their position. Anne Marie Kollman suggested a half hour, voluntary informational meeting that could be held in the residence halls.

The meeting was closed with a reminder that applications for Board of Governance commissioners will be available beginning Thursday, Feb. 28. Senior Board applications are available until March 1. Both can be picked up at the front desk of the Haggard College Center.

ful poem, "Adam," which recounted the death of his first child in a mental hospital. The baby is compared to a house, "but this house was made up of neither bricks nor stone," rather, it was a "house of flesh and blood." Then Adam turned over and out of his eyes, "two great tears rolled like stones and he died."

Some of Silkin's less somber poems include ones about nature. In "The Violet," he placed one eye firmly on the object and with the other, tried to imagine an analogous human situation. In the poem, he compares the flower's courage in not making its two petals the same size to human obstinance.

While some of Silkin's poems connect two seemingly unrelated subjects, his poem, "Untitled," highlights the contrasting natures of poverty and love.

FAF deadline is approaching

By KEVIN YOUNG
News Staff

If you are one of more than half of the Notre Dame/Saint Mary's students receiving financial aid, March 1 is an important day to remember. It is the day when both Notre Dame and Saint Mary's financial aid offices will begin to examine Financial Aid Forms and distribute financial aid.

With 66 percent of the students at Notre Dame and 50 percent of the Saint Mary's students receiving financial aid, filing a FAF is important business. Since aid is distributed on a first come/first served basis, those who meet the March 1 deadline will better their chances of obtaining aid.

Notre Dame Director of Financial Aid, Joe Russo, said a few things should be kept in mind while filling out the FAF. Make sure both sides are completed, sign the form, and be as accurate as possible, he said.

Even though a signed copy of last year's student and parent's income is necessary, don't wait for the tax return to be completed before handing in the FAF.

To become eligible for a gift, loan or a job at Saint Mary's or Notre Dame, a FAF must be filed. When a student fills out a FAF he/she "becomes considered for everything" said Judith Casey, director of financial aid at Saint Mary's. The FAF is the only form that must be submitted to become eligible for available scholarships or grants.

With the help of this form, the financial aid offices at Notre Dame and Saint Mary's try to provide adequate assistance through any means possible. Often this will result in two or more forms of assistance "packaged" together.

Russo said there is no income cut-off for receiving financial aid; anyone might be eligible. The financial aid office decides who gets money based on need and worth. "A student with a family that earns $75,000 may need financial aid more than a student whose family earns $40,000," said Russo.

Project shows advantages of area

By MAE WHITEMAN
News Staff

"Alive with Pride, South Bend/Mishawaka!" is the name given by a group of local residents, not all natives, to a community project designed to increase awareness of the area's advantages.

The idea began with a committee of seven, approximately 18 months ago, and has mushroomed "to hundreds of volunteers who are donating their time, supplies and equipment," said Dr. Harvey Weingarten, a local dentist.

The community has many advantages which the public seems to overlook, said Weingarten, and the campaign will arouse the awareness of these advantages with television spots, messages on billboards, orchestration at the Firefly Festival, and themes at the Carnival of the Arts, at the Sunburst Weekend, and at the Ethnic Festival's parade (all local festivals.) It will also be featured at next fall's Notre Dame/Army football game.

"Other than these events, what happens to the campaign is up to the people of the community," Weingarten said, "Until summer, the campaign is purely for the people, and no financial enterprising is going to be incorporated in it."

Created, thus far, are the theme song, two television spots, four radio spots, and four full-page ads. They all have unique themes, such as dignity, compassion, and courage.

One example of the spontaneous increase in participation involves George Fischhoff, a successful composer in New York. He wrote the lyric theme song of the project. Only four days after being contacted, Fischhoff, a South Bend native, had the completed tape returned by mail. He sent no bill. To get the rock, country, soul, and middle-of-the-road versions, hundreds of people, such as musicians and audio engineers, donated their services to edit and to arrange the song.

Anyone may become involved in the program. Those interested may write to Alive with Pride, South Bend/Mishawaka, P.O. Box 780, South Bend, In. 46624.

Law School creates jobs for summers

By EILEEN HOFFMAN
News Staff

Making money while working in a public interest law job is a reality because of the Notre Dame Law School Sponsored Fellowship Program.

This program is designed for students who want to offer their time and services to public interest jobs but require financial assistance in order to do so. These fellowships give each student a salary of $200 per week.

Each fellowship awarded is for one year. The program here at Notre Dame, coordinated by Assistant Law Professor Theresa Godwin Phelps, is modeled after a similar fellowship program at Harvard University. Each fellowship is awarded for one year.

Each year beginning in November, the NDLSF program organizes a fund-raising drive and asks members of the Notre Dame law community to donate 1 percent of their summer earnings to the fund. The number of fellowships granted is directly dependent upon the amount of funds collected.

Anyone interested in helping the NDLSF program may do so by pledging 1 percent of their summer salary to the fund. Applications for the fellowships are due April 1. All applicants must demonstrate serious interest in a career as a public service lawyer. All students are eligible to receive this fellowship.

Last year 11 applications were received and two students were accepted into the program. Approximately $2,000 was raised. This year's goal is $4,000.

The primary focus of this program, according to Phelps, is to provide an opportunity to assist the underprivileged in our country.

War veterans deserve thanks, not admiration

Americans have always loved to celebrate anniversaries so it is not too surprising that a group of men gathered this past weekend on a lonely Pacific island 750 miles southeast of Tokyo to celebrate an event that took place 40 years before. On Sept. 19, 1945 three divi-

outside, looking in

sions of American marines invaded an otherwise worthless chunk of volcanic ash to clear it of 22,000 Japanese soldiers and prepare the way for an invasion of the Japanese mainland.

The subsequent battle for Iwo Jima became the bloodiest engagement involving U.S. troops in World War II in terms of the ratio of casualties to combatants. Of the 75,000 marines who hit the beaches, 7,000 were killed and 18,000 were wounded. 20,000 of the 22,000 Japanese defending the island died. The battle of Iwo Jima soon joined the Halls of Montezuma and the shores of Tripoli in the annals of Marine Corps history with the help of a stirring photograph taken by war correspondent Joe Rosenthal of six marines in the act of planting an American flag on the summit of Mt. Suribachi. The battle was further glorified in a popular film called "The Sands of Iwo Jima" starring John Wayne.

And so, 40 years later survivors of the battle returned to the still worthless chunk of volcanic ash to . . . to what? To relive the horror? To honor their dead? Perhaps just to remember?

A much bigger ceremony took place this summer in France to celebrate the 40th anniversary of the invasion of Normandy. Other ceremonies recalled the Battle of the Bulge and the Liberation of Paris. Future celebrations are in the works for V-E and V-J days. In short, 1985 is the year to celebrate, or at least remember, the great battles of World War II.

I certainly do not wish to seem disrespectful of those men who fought in World War II, or of any man who, in good conscience, has served his country in any war. I have never been asked to do so, thank God, and can only imagine the fear, suffering and the sacrifice endured by all who participate. Nevertheless, I find something vaguely disquieting in these celebrations. The speeches, the flags, the bands and the national anthems all combine to leave me feeling uneasy.

Seeing or hearing one of these ceremonies always recalls a movie I saw several years ago. The movie, "The Americanization of Emily," starred Julie Andrews as driver in World War II London who falls in love with an American naval officer (James Garner). The film deals with Andrews' conversion from English propriety, honor and duty to Garner's ethic of avowed cowardice. Garner argues that honoring war heroes glamorizes and dignifies the thoroughly undignified and inhuman act of warfare. The existence of war heroes, he maintains, makes it easier for politicians to convince young men to go to war. What the world really needs, according to Garner, is more cowards, and he proposes himself as the ideal role model.

The movie's inversion of traditional values and unorthodox argument is at first comic and innocent, but the ultimate message is both serious and compelling - heroism propagates war.

To those who have suffered and sacrificed, I give my sympathy and respect (my thanks) but never my admiration. As a society we owe a tremendous debt to our veterans, but we cannot afford to give them our adulation.

If we must ceremonialize our battles, let us remember the rows and rows of corpses that lined Mt. Suribachi, the maimed bodies and the ruined lives. It might have been better if Joe Rosenthal had never snapped that picture.

Glad of Pettifer's war on conventional views

Dear Editor:

Ann Pettifer's iconoclastic views bring a rare breath of fresh air to an otherwise pious and parochial campus climate. Although I do not always agree with Pettifer's premises, much less her conclusions, I am glad that she has declared war on the conventional wisdom and has prodded people into looking at old realities from fresh angles. You should urge her to write more often.

Low attendance is not a reason to cancel event

Dear Editor:

Being the naive, wholesome, yet over-zealous freshmen we are, the scheduled appearance of Father Hesburgh last Monday night seemed like the ideal opportunity to see this semi-mythical man in action.

Attending a presentation on "The Future of Notre Dame" seemed like the proper thing for us, being freshmen, to do.

After trekking across campus to the library auditorium and subsequently falling several times on icy sidewalks, you can imagine our dismay and disappointment when we learned from a note tacked to the door that Father Ted had cancelled due to "unavoidable circumstances."

Thinking perhaps Hesburgh had been called away justifiably by wealthy, donating alumni, you can imagine our shock when we read in The Observer the following day that our leader had cancelled due to a lack of publicity and subsequent low attendance.

We can only hope that when such future events are scheduled that guest speakers will have the courtesy and consideration to fulfill their commitments or at least give advanced warning of cancellation for a somewhat plausible reason instead of tacking a note on the door to avoid possible embarrassment due to poor attendance.

And how does low attendance justify his cancellation anyway? Doesn't Notre Dame claim a real one-to-one relationship with faculty and administration as one of its greater advantages - or have we gotten this all wrong?

Recall election will not strengthen government

Dear Editor:

This is a response to the letter by Edmund Funai on Feb. 18 and his comments regarding the recall of the student government elections. Through his zealous willingness to aid the student government in the restoration of some recently lost credibility, I believe Funai has overlooked two inevitabilities of a recall election.

First of all, he believes Healy should "legitimize his election" by welcoming a recall due to the fact that he was elected by a mere 24.3 percent of the student body. I fully understand that this is a disgraceful percentage, but I believe Funai ignores the distinct probability that a recall election would attract an even smaller percentage of voters. In this way, nothing is legitimized, and the student government will only absorb another shot to its credibility.

Second, the newly-elected officials have a task ahead which includes the reinstatement of integrity to the student government. This will be a difficult enough endeavor without having to worry about a recall election. The recall can only hinder any progress the new government makes.

I fully respect the fact that Funai is "tired of listening to people complaining about student government," but I believe that a recall election will only drag the recent controversy further into the depths of disgrace. It is now time for student government, as well as for the student body, to take positive steps toward the construction of a successful and respectable government.

Appreciates kindness of the football team

Dear Editor:

Now that the football season has ended, Aaron Stevens and his dad, Greg, want to thank all the members of the football team, the coaches and others who assist the team for being so kind to us and for allowing us to share a part of their world - their joys and disappointments. Aaron had a lot of fun and is crazy about them. He wants all of these people to know that he is their number one fan.

Also, thanks to all the students around campus who take time to talk with us when we take our walks. They really make our day.

Pope John Paul II is a worthy vicar of Christ

Dear Editor:

In reply to Ann Pettifer's recent guest column in The Observer, I think that no better choice could be made than Pope John Paul II as the 1987 commencement speaker. Notre Dame is a Catholic university, one of the best in the world. As Catholics, the pope is our spiritual leader. Simply by virtue of this fact, he should be asked to speak at commencement. However, this pope has even more to offer us. He is a good, just man. He is also "charismatic" - not like a Hitler or a Lenin but like a Christ. Growing up, he experienced many hardships. By the age of 20, most of his loved ones had died. He saw his world torn apart by war, yet he kept his faith. He gave aid to many Jews in the ghettos, something for which he could have been killed or imprisoned. He clandestinely studied to become a priest. His defiance, as a young priest, to the communist authorities in Poland should be an inspiration to us all. With his own hands, he helped build a church for his congregation against the wishes of the government. I dare say that we, as Americans, cannot fully comprehend the struggle he experienced as an active, defiant priest in a communist country.

The pope, being of Polish heritage, is conservative. Because of this, it is often said that he does not hear the people on many issues. However, the papacy has lasted for a very long time. It tries to protect its members. The church is wise parent.

The main grievance that I have with Pettifer's column is that her views are too provincial. The pope's actions have far-reaching ramifications, not just immediate ones. He must attempt to please many diverse groups. Being pope means walking a tightrope. As for Pope Pius XII, he did as much as he could to condemn fascism without endangering the Vatican or its neutrality. Remember, the Vatican was in the middle of a fascist Italy. If it is true that the Vatican helped Barbie to flee, which the Vatican denies, it is also true that they helped even more Jews, Americans and other allies to safety, an act which could have brought Nazi occupation of the Vatican.

On the whole, there have been more good popes than bad ones. Many early popes gave their lives for the struggling, young church. Although the church has not been perfect, it has survived for almost two thousand years.

I do not always agree with what the pope says, but I will always feel that John Paul is a worthy vicar of Christ. Whenever a theologian decides to criticize the pope, he or she should first step into the "shoes of the fisherman." Maybe then he could see things from the pope's perspective, as the spiritual leader of one of the largest religions in the world.

"Andree Luminere" is preserved in an autochrome.

Megan McMonigle

Art review

Until March 3, visitors to Notre Dame's Snite Museum are invited to view "Autochromes: Color Photography Comes of Age," The Library of Congress' traveling exhibit of turn-of-the-century color photos.

This exhibition, the first of its kind in the U.S., features 75 autochromes taken between 1904 (when Louis Lumiere invented the process) and the 1930's. The show includes prints from the Library's Arnold Genthe Collection, the National Geographic Society, the Ilford-Lumiere and Jasienski Collections, and the Royal Photographic Society of Great Britain.

From the exceptional focusing techniques of J.C. Warburg, the breathtaking European landscapes of Stefan Jasienski, to the seductively candid portraits of Arnold Genthe, the display presents every aspect of early 20th century life in unexpectedly vivid hues.

Because color photography during the early 1900's was relatively unestablished as an artistic medium with its own unique characteristics, much of the subject matter is similar to what an artist might have painted during the same era. However, as color photography became more widespread, the images produced seem to gain confidence and take on a less posed effect. The artist gradually became more interested with the colors or impressions of the prints rather than the subject matter.

The process of "trichromie" made use of microscopic grains of potato starch dyed red, yellow, and blue. These grains, along with carbon black and silver emulsion spread evenly on a glass plate, enabled photographs to be taken using only one plate, instead of three, as were previously used. The original glass plate images have been transferred to fade-resistant Ilford Cibachrome printing material, preserving the color which distinguishes these extraordinary works of art.

The Thursday Night Lecture Series sponsored by The Friends of the Snite covers the basic theories related to art. Douglas Kinsey, Associated Professor of Art at the University of Notre Dame will discuss "Form and Composition." "Line" is the lecture topic of Saint Mary's College Assistant Professor of Art, Carol Ann Carter. And Harold Zisla, Indiana University of South Bend's Professor of Art will speak on "Color."

The lectures are February 21, March 7 and 14, at 7:30 pm, respectively. An admission charge of $2.00 for nonmembers and $1.00 for Friends and students.

This autochrome captures the serenity of a quiet afternoon.

'Witness:' Harrison Ford meets the Amish

Bob Phillips

Movie review

Samuel Lapp, a wide-eyed ten-year-old Amish boy, was with his mother in a Philadelphia train station waiting for a train to Baltimore. He had never been to a big city before, and he regarded all around him with fascination.

Not able to resist exploring this new environment, he began to wander the station, watching the people go about their daily lives all seemingly protected by an angelic statue that loomed above them.

But the statue was not adequate protection; visiting a Philly restroom for the first time, Samuel saw two well-dressed, dignified-looking men slit a man's throat. Samuel escaped the notice of the murderers, but he must then act as the witness to the murder of a police officer.

Thus begins Peter Weir's latest film, "Witness." In it, he studies the Amish culture found principally in rural Pennsylvania. It is a culture completely unlike our own and it seems to us a hundred years out of date. Finding the murders too powerful to stop, detective John Book returns the Lapp family to their Amish farm and there (much like Samuel earlier) he views a different world.

It is a world without cars or telephones, one in which all inhabitants are friends and they pitch in when help is needed. Most importantly, Book sees a world that doesn't understand the widespread vice and rampant violence in our world.

Much to his credit, Weir doesn't attack city life. Despite all the anger and violence to be found in the city, good people can also be found living and working there. But Weir's interest is in the Amish, and not with the city.

He shares the Amish distaste for bloodshed and focuses on it, making the death of any character no matter who it is, a sad event, with almost all victims struggling desperately for life. There are no deaths to be cheered in this film, as one might cheer a death in a "Dirty Harry film." Every life is respected which is an interesting attitude for the director of a suspense thriller to take.

The film is not only a suspense thriller; it is also sociological study and a romance between John Book and the mother of Samuel. It works well on all three levels.

The romance is effective in that it's understated, with no recourse to sex scenes, which would destroy completely the Amish atmosphere that Weir painstakingly tries to create. The romance is confusing though. Ms. Lapp may be grateful for the protection Book offers in the city but she has no real love for his way of life, nor he for her's. All they really have to offer each other is mutual good looks. Still, Weir treats their relationship with respect and taste.

"The film is not only a suspense thriller, it is also a sociological study and a romance..."

Harrison Ford is surprisingly good as John Book. Usually a wooden actor overwhelmed by flashy special effects, he is given a chance to prove that he can show emotion in this relatively quiet film, and he does it well. This is the first time I've seen him given a chance to act seriously, and I was pleasantly surprised. Kelly McGillis is also good as Samuel's mother, playing the role with the restraint necessary to capture her character's upbringing.

The real surprise of the film was the performance by Lukas Haas, as Samuel. The boy was perfect in the opening of the film as a walking camera, betraying little emotion as he observes the city which seems ready to overwhelm him. His stare catches everything.

When emotion is called for, he's ready, watching the murder with a terrific mix of fear and confusion as he tries to understand a scene he's never imagined before. Even in his own world, his curious stare persists as he studies Book's and the detectives' attempt to understand the new world that surrounds them.

Herein lies the major flaw of the film, making a potentially excellent piece of work into merely a good film. The beginning of the film has a clear-cut center, the boy. We see what he sees, and although we've seen it all before, his fascination makes us equally fascinated.

The boy immediately establishes himself as the most interesting character in the film, and John Book, as his name implies, is a sort of teacher, exposing the boy to the new world of Philadelphia.

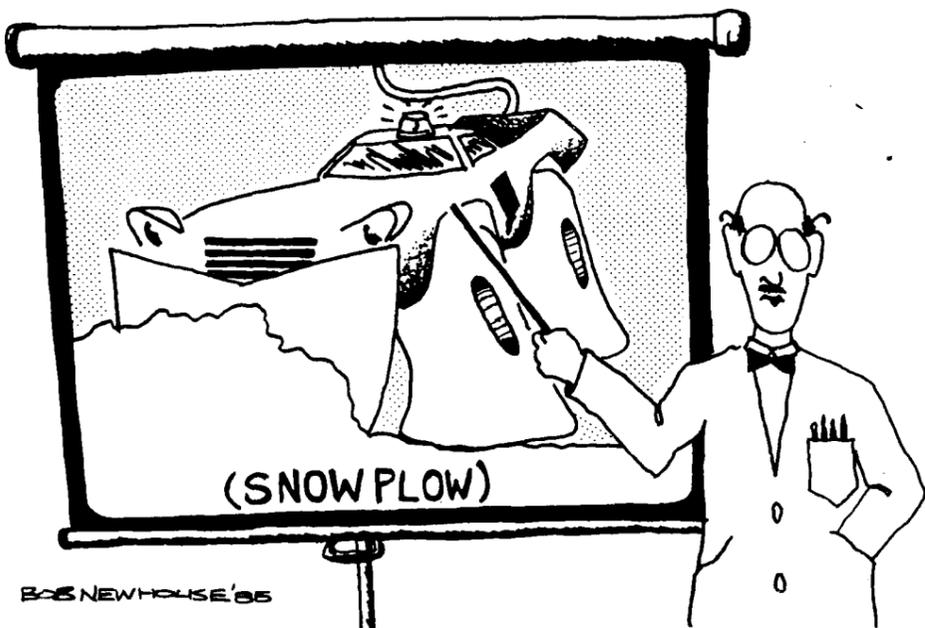

Then we move to Lancaster Pa., the home of the Amish. The boy's role as camera is finished. He virtually disappears, and his presence is missed. Ford is given the opportunity to replace him as fascinated observer, but Weir never makes the connection, making the character of John Book into a detached and somewhat amused watcher.

Book sees the world of the Amish as an interesting sidestep in his life, but no more. Weir may love the Amish, but Book doesn't, and the film loses out as a result.

Despite these losses, the film is worth seeing. Weir's direction is both sensitive and captivating, often gripping us with suspense or lulling us with beauty. And the beauty of rural Pennsylvania plays an important part in the film, a great contrast to a Philly restroom.

The plot is thrilling and the romance fresh and touching. Amish leaders have complained that the film doesn't present their culture accurately, but whether it does or not, the culture that is revealed is absorbing.

Curious endangered species

Karen McCloskey
features staff writer

What's number one on the Indiana State Endangered Species List? You guessed it, the Snowplow.

Snowplows are curious creatures. They can work and work and work without becoming at all tired. They eat only petroleum products and they hibernate in the summer.

Now there's an organization to bring about the rehabilitation of the Hoosier state with this all-too-scarce creature. The Committee to Advocate the Removal of Snow is organizing a campaign to fight the Impassable Road Syndrome which annually decimates the South Bend community.

I.R.S., not to be confused with a similarly dreaded monetary affliction, strikes most often during the cold and flu season. Its symptoms include a powdery-white precipitation, massive school and business closings, and feelings of despair, aggravation, and agitation. Its long-term effects include the deprivation of education and economic retardation. One midwestern university claims to be immune to I.R.S., but

I.R.S. still strikes fear into the hearts of that university's off-campus students and faculty. They know the idea of immunity to be a fallacious one, indeed.

How then, you ask, can we fight this nasty, naughty I.R.S.? Quite frankly, the Syndrome has no real cure, and only one natural predator to control it - none other than the rarest of rare, the endangered Snowplow.

C.A.R.S. wants to reintroduce, or maybe just introduce, the Snowplow to Indiana. By bringing the Snowplow to the Hoosier state, C.A.R.S. members hope to lessen the effects of the treacherous I.R.S. and to improve the general health and well-being of the community.

But C.A.R.S. needs your help. It is establishing the "No More Slush" Fund to finance the purchase of a domesticated Snowplow and its transportation to South Bend. If the fund is large enough, C.A.R.S. members will also purchase a manual called "The Proper Care, Exercise and Grooming of Your Domesticated Snowplow." C.A.R.S. members say that this manual is especially helpful for those, like the Notre Dame/Saint Mary's community, with little or no experience in the handling of Snowplows.

Should the "No More Slush" Fund campaign be successful, C.A.R.S. will proceed with plans for its next superproject. University specialists are already hard at work in Galvin and Fitzpatrick Halls, designing and developing new breeds of Snowplows. Officials say that these Snowplows will be specially suited to clear campus thoroughfares without posing serious health hazards to pedestrians. Testing of the new breed may begin as soon as April in New Antarctica (known previously as the South Stadium Student Parking Lot).

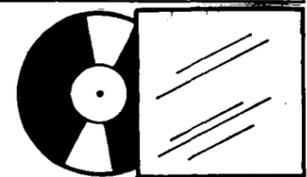

In the meantime, join the fight to save the endangered Snowplow and help to wipe out I.R.S. in our lifetime. Send your contributions to "C.A.R.S.," care of The Observer.

Happy trails, you snowbound domers. And try to spend your spring break in a land where precipitation doesn't take up permanent residency.

A gem of an album

Vic Sciulli

Record review

Provocative, moody, jazzy and bluesy, Diamond Life, the debut album from Sade, is the best album by a female vocalist since Rickie Lee Jones' Pirates and one of the best by a female vocalist in years.

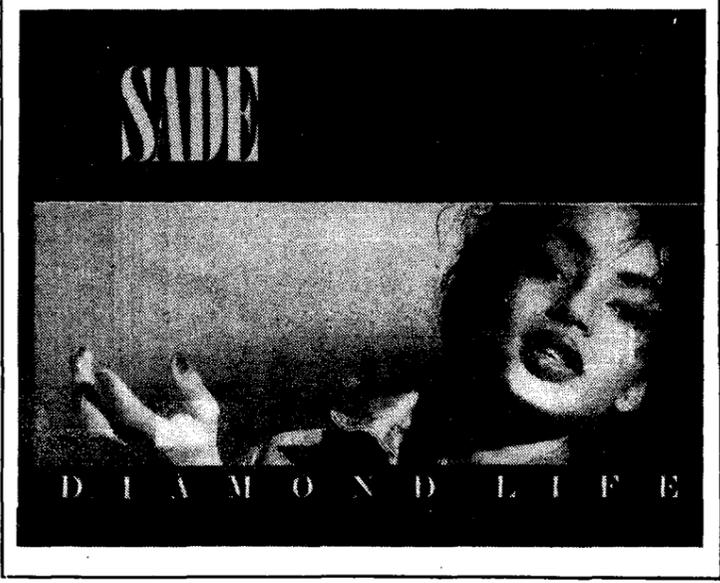

Sade (pronounced Shar-DAY), already a toast of the British scene, stands out in a multi-faceted work which merges the classic sounds of jazz and blues with African rhythms and harmonies. To the sensuous clip of a samba or a pounding Motown pulse, her close collaborator Stuart Matthewman provides atmospheric guitar accompaniment and smooth sax fills. The two are joined by the seamless rhythm section of Paul Denman (bass) and Paul Cooke (drums).

It is Sade, however, who is the spotlight. Her power lies in her ability to fuse her silky smooth vocals with the band's rhythm and blues sound to create a graceful yet powerful musical synthesis. Hints of her enchantment with the sophisticated soul-sounds of early Motown singers abound. In "Your Love is King," Sade's jazzy phrasing evokes memories of the late Bille Holiday's classic vocal sound, while "Hang on To Your Love" and "Cherry Pie" are flavored by a smoky nightclub blues sound.

The Rickie Lee Jones-ish "Sally" is a slower, more intense track. Here Sade's vocals fall to a more desperate, pleading sound, meshed perfectly with Matthewman's gorgeous sax.

Sade co-wrote all but one of the album's nine tracks, the exception being a stunning remake of the 1972 Timmy Thomas hit "Why Can't We Live Together." The song commences with a tribal drum opening with the other instruments working in one by one until Sade's vocals spill over the instruments. Sad and mesmerizing, it is one of the best tracks on a gem of an album.

ND women fencers end season with 12-7 record

By MICHAEL J. CHMIEL
Sports Writer

The Notre Dame women's fencing team finished its regular season on Saturday and continued a string of 13 straight winning seasons with a 12-7 mark on the year.

Disappointing, however, were the results from the season-ending Irish Invitational which showed only two wins for the Irish against three defeats.

According to Irish Head Coach Mike DeCicco, the poor showing was a result of weak performances from the number two, three, and four spots on the squad. Nevertheless, he believes the Irish still have a strong chance to qualify for the NCAA tournament to be held at Notre Dame beginning on March 18.

"As a team, we have a good shot at making the tournament," said DeCicco. "We proved it today. We were very, very close to winning many times... against Northwestern, we were within a touch."

On Saturday, the Irish began the day on a strong note with a perfect 9-0 score against the Chicago Maroons and a nice 14-2 margin over the Purdue Boilermakers. Since women's fencing came to Notre Dame, the Irish have yet to lose to either school.

Entering the noontime hours, however, Notre Dame's momentum slowed. Fencing a strong Northwestern team, they were overcome by a slight 7-9 margin. Against Wisconsin, the Irish realized the same result at the hands of last year's sixth best team in the country.

Against the Wayne State Tartans, the Irish unfortunately ended their season on a losing note. They lost to last year's eleventh place team in the season finale by a score of 5-11. The loss marked the 14th one for the Irish in 15 outings against Wayne State.

While the results proved rather grim, they did nevertheless prove that the Irish are able to compete with the best. The 5-11 loss to the Tartans, was, in the end, an improvement over an early 13-3 loss in which freshman Molly Sullivan accounted for all three Irish wins.

"The three teams that are going to make it to the NCAAs from the Midwest will come from a group including Ohio State, Wayne State, Wisconsin, Northwestern, and Notre Dame," said DeCicco. "I'd like to think that we'll be fencing in the ACC on March 18."

Leading the way for the Irish over the weekend and over the course of the season was Sullivan. The rookie foilist was untouched for the weekend at 12-0. The perfect outing propelled her season record to a team leading 43-4 for the year.

"Right now, Molly Sullivan is fencing tough," said DeCicco. "She will, I expect, make the NCAAs no matter what."

Fencing from the number two and number three spots for the Irish were sophomores Vittoria Quaroni and Cindy Weeks. Quaroni went 7-9 on Saturday to move to a nice 34-21 on the year. Lifetime, she is 48-30. Weeks went 9-8 to go 34-24 on the season. Weeks, at 60-37 in two years, was the only fencer other than Sullivan to win against Wayne State this year as she went 1-3 against the Tartans on Saturday.

Junior captain Janet Sullivan finished a slightly disappointing season at 29-30 as she was 6-10 on Saturday.

A definite plus for DeCicco's squad was a 6-1 performance by sophomore Christina Sardegna. According to DeCicco, Sardegna, at 13-7 on the year, will be looked at closely to perhaps provide an added punch in the NCAA qualifying rounds this weekend in Evanston, Illinois.

Rounding out the Irish roster were senior Celeste Kowalski at 2-1 (11-10), and juniors Linda Gase at 1-1 (4-4) and Cecilia Williams at 1-2 (1-2).

The Irish get back into the gym this week as they prepare for the Great Lakes Championships to be held on Saturday in the ACC and the NCAA qualifying round to be held at Northwestern on Sunday.

Saint Mary's fencers lose three

By ANDREA LAFRENIERE
Sports Writer

The Saint Mary's fencing team fell to 6-11 on the season Saturday at the team's first home meet of the season, where the Belles simply encountered more experienced teams.

"I thought we fenced well," said Belles head coach Mike Weeks. "We just faced some tough opponents." The Belles lost their first meet to Northwestern, 11-5, and then were beaten, 16-0, by Wayne State. The team came back with a victory over Purdue, winning, 11-5, but dropped its last meet to Wisconsin by the same 11-5 score.

"We had some very good competition," said junior Mary Fran Wilkin. "When Wayne State is here it's always a big weekend."

Saint Mary's was scheduled to fence Michigan State on Friday night, but the Michigan State women fencers didn't show.

The Belles' next important meet will be the Great Lakes Championships Saturday at the ACC. Fencing teams from the Midwest area will attend.

Saint Mary's performance at the meet will determine whether or not it travels to the National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics (NAIA) women's fencing tournament later in the season.

Marquette dominates Belles, Irish in SMC annual soccer tournament

By MARY O'CONNOR
Sports Writer

This weekend, Saint Mary's played host to seven other teams, including Notre Dame, in the Saint Mary's College Second Annual Soccer Tournament which was held in the Angela Athletic Facility. Marquette captured the round-robin tourney, with the Belles finishing 1-1-2 and the Irish 0-3.

The tournament was a two-day affair that featured teams from all over the Midwest. Joining Saint Mary's, Notre Dame and Marquette were teams from Hope College, Eastern Illinois, Michigan State, Indiana, Northwestern.

On Saturday, the first day of play, Saint Mary's started off the tourney on a good note, beating Notre Dame as Mary Anne Perri scored the only goals of the game in the Belles' 2-0 victory. Goalie Patty Hatfield was very effective in keeping the Irish from scoring.

Saint Mary's ended the day with a 1-0-1 record after coming away with a hard-fought 1-1 tie with Hope.

Meanwhile, Notre Dame continued to have trouble as a strong

Indiana team defeated the Irish, 4-1. Every other team in the field won or tied at least one game as Michigan State defeated Eastern Illinois and then lost to Marquette, Indiana beat Hope, and Northwestern beat Marquette and then lost to Eastern Illinois.

Saint Mary's found itself in a good position as it began the second day of competition with an important matchup with Indiana. After an intense battle, though, the Hoosiers emerged with a 1-0 win. The loss dropped the Belles into a consolation match with Michigan State, a game which eventually ended in a 2-2 tie. Katy Boldt and Sue Schierl scored the goals for Saint Mary's.

Notre Dame wrestlers pin Warriors during weekend trip to Milwaukee

By CHUCK FREEBY
Sports Writer

MILWAUKEE, Wis. — After last weekend's upset of Nebraska, you couldn't blame Notre Dame coach Fran McCann if he was concerned about a letdown on Saturday against Marquette. Nevertheless, the only things that were down on the mats on Saturday were Marquette shoulders, as the Irish drubbed the Warriors, 33-9.

"We looked good this weekend," noted McCann, whose team completed its regular season with an 8-4 dual meet record. "On paper, it looked like it would be a close match, but we came out and executed and did it with enthusiasm."

That enthusiasm showed immediately, as Notre Dame took a quick 12-0 lead after two matches. At 118 pounds, Notre Dame's Carl Hildinger came up with a fine pin of Jim Uhlin at the 4:50 mark, while teammate Guy Locksmith won by forfeit at 126 pounds.

The Warriors were still in the match, though, as two of their best wrestlers came out at 134 and 142. Marquette's Toni Pecora, who entered the action with a 41-2 record, trailed freshman Ron Wisniewski 5-2 early in the match before rallying for a 7-5 victory. However, Notre Dame's Don Heintzelman stopped the Warriors' momentum, defeating Jim Schmitz, 6-4, to give Notre Dame a 15-3 lead.

"I was pleased with the way Ron Wisniewski wrestled," commented McCann. "He did a nice job against a very tough kid. Then, Heintzelman came back against a kid he has lost to twice this year and beat him, so that was a big match for us."

From that point, Notre Dame began to roll, as Luke DiSabato raised his record to 14-12 with a decision over Seamus Ford at 150 pounds, before freshman Ken Kasler earned a superior decision over Greg Boehm by a 16-4 count.

Lloyd Constable and James Patterson led the Irish in the field events. Constable won the high jump with a 7-1/4 effort, and Patterson took second in the long jump with a 24-5 in addition to triple jumping 47-9.

Freshman standout Dan Garrett ran extremely well in a competitive two-mile race, capturing third place in 9:04.11. Garrett had been sick for a month and had been unraced.

Piane held back his sprinters along with distance man Tim Cannon to rest them for the IC4A's. He is now confident that they and those who competed last weekend will be prepared to run Saturday.

That set the stage for Notre Dame's best wrestler this season, John Krug at 167 pounds, and Krug delivered. The junior from Cincinnati steamrolled over Greg Pachowitz, pinning his Warrior opponent in only 1:36 to give the Irish an insurmountable 29-3 lead.

Senior captain Phil Baty put some icing on the cake with his win at 177 pounds. Baty, who has been in a bit of a slump lately, posted a shutout with a 7-0 whitewashing of Shawn McLaughlin and earned the praises of his coach.

"Phil just came out and dominated the kid," remarked McCann. "He hasn't been wrestling well lately, so it was good to see him snap out of it at the end of the season."

With the final regular season meet now history, McCann has his wrestlers looking towards the NCAA Western Regionals this weekend in Des Moines. "We're pleased with our 8-4 record, but we can't rest on our laurels," says McCann. "We're wrestling with confidence now and our kids are looking forward to this tournament. This has to be our primary goal as a team, and for our individuals as well. I would like to see us finish in the top ten and place a couple of kids in the national tournament."

If the Irish wrestle this weekend as they did Saturday, that may not be just wishful thinking.

ND women's basketball team faces critical rematch against Ramblers

By LARRY BURKE
Sports Writer

The stretch run for the North Star Conference championship begins tonight in Chicago as the Notre Dame women's basketball team takes on the Ramblers of Loyola University in Alumni Gym at 7:30 CST.

The two teams met just six days ago in the ACC, when the Irish came out on top, 84-59. Tonight's contest was originally slated for Jan. 25, but poor weather conditions prevented Mary DiStanislao's squad from making the trip that afternoon. The rescheduling of the Loyola contest for tonight puts the Irish in the unenviable position of having to play three games in a five-day span.

"Obviously I would have preferred to play this game back on January 25," notes DiStanislao, whose squad stands at 15-8 this season, "but this was the only alternative that we had in the situation. It'll be a grueling week for us, but if we can pull out this string of games, then we'll be doing pretty well."

After struggling for most of the first half in the last Loyola game, the Irish eventually made short work of the Ramblers, setting a new team record with 57 points in the second half. Trena Keys led the way for Notre Dame in that contest, scoring 28 points, 23 of those in the second half. Mary Beth Schueth added 17 points and 15 rebounds, while Sandy Botham contributed 17 points and 10 rebounds and Laura Dougherty came off the bench to score 11 points.

Some hot outside shooting by point guard Faith Mimnaugh kept the Ramblers in the game for a while, but Notre Dame ultimately proved too strong inside. Mimnaugh finished with 14 points for Loyola, but the 5-2 senior ended up with just five assists, well short of her nation-leading average of 11.6 per game. Mimnaugh's backcourt mate, 5-8 junior Kathy Leyden, chipped in with 13 points and five rebounds.

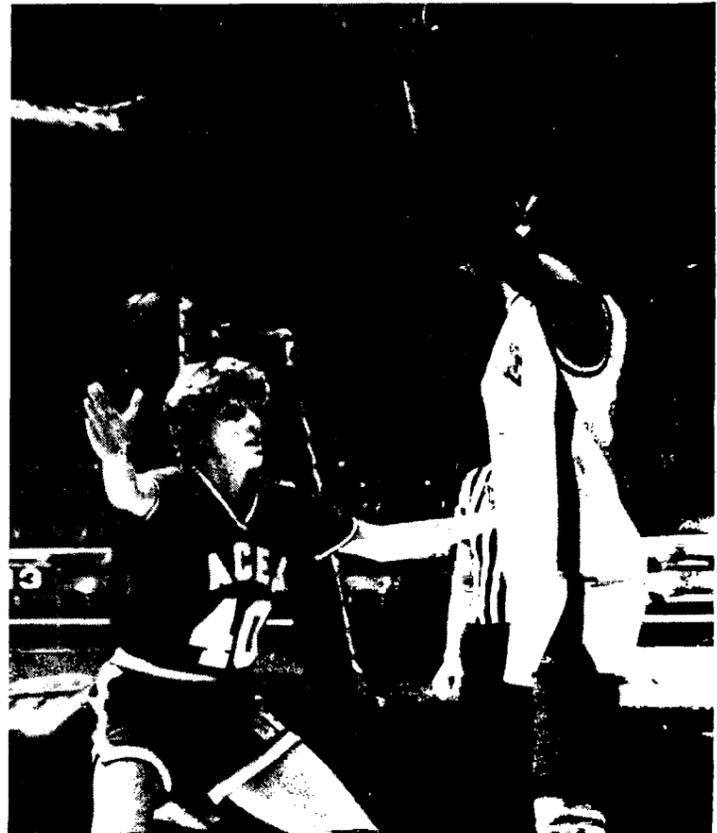

The Ramblers' centers had marginal success against the Irish, as 6-0 junior Sue Busiel netted 14 points and grabbed 13 rebounds and 6-0 junior Maureen McNerney added nine points, but forwards Kathy Meyers and Jackie Huszti were invisible for most of the evening. Meyers hit on just one of five field goal attempts and ended up with just two points in 30 minutes, while Huszti missed all five of her shots from the floor and fouled out midway through the second half after 16 scoreless minutes.

Tonight's task may not be as easy for Notre Dame, however, as the Irish will have to deal with the disadvantage of playing in unfamiliar surroundings as well as the fatigue factor of having played DePaul just two days ago.

"It's a tough week for us," says DiStanislao, "but everybody's really up for it - the players have a lot of extra energy. Still, the bench is going to be key for us, particularly against Loyola. We have the advantage in depth over Loyola, as far as experience is concerned. Laura had a good game for us the last time we played them, and we also have experienced players in Ruth (Kaiser) and Denise (Basford). And with Kathy (Brommeland) and Beth (Morrison) we've got added size coming off the bench.

"I expect more of an up-tempo game from them this time," says DiStanislao. "Loyola will be more comfortable in its own gym, and we're expecting better execution from them. We have to play better defense, move better without the ball, and use screens more effectively in order to win."

Junior Trena Keys will be looking for a repeat of last week's impressive performance tonight as the Notre Dame women's basketball team travels to Chicago to take on the Loyola Ramblers. Last Wednesday Keys scored 23 of her game-high 28 points in the second half to help the Irish pull away to an 84-59 win. Larry Burke previews the game at left.

'A' League playoffs heat up as top seeds advance

The men's 'A' league interhall basketball playoffs are really beginning to heat up. The first two rounds have been played and the loser's bracket has been established.

In the first round, Grace defeated Flanner while Dillon fell at the hands of St. Ed's. The top two seeds of the tournament, Sorin and Morrissey, one and two respectively, received byes in this round and automatically advanced to the next round of competition.

Flanner and Dillon met in the first round of competition in the loser's bracket. Flanner emerged victorious by a score of 48-37.

Second round action in the winner's bracket was highlighted by the top two seeds advancing with narrow victories. Sorin got by St. Ed's for the second time this season, 44-42.

"It was a typical Sorin-St. Ed's game - physical and intense," said Sorin captain Pat Collins.

This was a hard-fought battle throughout. Sorin was down by five at the half, but it eventually pulled the game out by making key free throws and playing solid defense down the stretch.

"We put in a much smaller lineup consisting of four guards and a forward," said Collins. "This forced St. Ed's into many turnovers which were eventually converted into baskets. This was the key to our comeback victory."

In the other second-round contest, Morrissey defeated Grace in another close game, also decided by two points, 47-45.

"We were worried about this game," said Morrissey captain Steve Treacy, "because we had beaten Grace twice within two weeks. Both of those games were tight and we felt that it might be their turn to win a close one."

Like Sorin, Morrissey was down by five at halftime. But by the end of the third quarter, it had a two-point advantage which was maintained for the remainder of the contest.

"We are looking forward to playing Sorin," said Treacy. "They are the number-one seed and will obviously be our biggest challenge of the year. I think we match up well and it should be a great game."

These two teams will clash at 6 p.m. on Thursday in Gym 1. The winner will advance to the championship while the loser will play in the finals of the loser's bracket.

Second-round play in the loser's bracket continued last night when Grace defeated St. Ed's, 49-45. Grace meets Flanner Thursday night at 7 in Gym 1 of the ACC. Meanwhile, St. Ed's will be forced to watch the remainder of the playoffs from the stands.

Although many games have been played so far, there still is a great deal left to be decided before the championship is played on March 5.

In 'B' League action last night, Stanford squeaked past Off-Campus 46-45. Stanford advances in the playoffs and its game against Dillon will be announced later this week.

Belles captain Beth Kreber netted 10 points and grabbed seven rebounds in last Saturday's game against the University of Michigan-Dearborn. Unfortunately, the Belles dropped the decision to Michigan-Dearborn 63-53, lowering their season record to 4-15 with only one game left on their 1985 schedule. The Saint Mary's basketball team made the 200-mile trek north to the University of Michigan-Dearborn Saturday to play its fifth game in seven days. The Belles were unable to come away victorious, though, dropping a 63-53 decision.

The Belles season record falls to 4-15 with one game remaining on their 1985 schedule. Michigan-Dearborn improved its record to 12-8.

"Michigan-Dearborn was a big team. I was pleased with the way we handled their size and battled it out," said Saint Mary's head coach Marvin Wood. "We were down but not out. We were behind by 15 points and could have quit. It's a credit to our players, especially with all the season's losses."

With one Michigan-Dearborn player grabbing a game-high 17 rebounds, superior size and rebounding were definitely the keys to the game as the host team raced to an early 9-4 lead. The Belles were unable to gain control in the first 20 minutes of play and found themselves down by 12, 38-26, at the half.

In the second half of action, Saint Mary's never gave up, and eventually closed the gap to 61-53 with a minute left on the clock. But Saint Mary's was not getting the breaks Saturday, and the Belles were unable to score again.

Overall, Saint Mary's hit only 26 percent from the field while connecting on 13-of-21 attempts from the free throw line.

Freshman standout Tammy Radke led the Belles with 17 points, coupled with five assists. Junior captain Beth Kreber added 10 points and pulled down seven rebounds. Senior center Betsy Ebert also grabbed five rebounds to aid the Belles offensively.

Wood also cited freshman forward Loretta Raycroft for her fine second half of play. "Loretta came in and played well the last seven minutes of the game. She rebounded and played well offensively," he said.

Last night the Belles had their work cut out for them as they went for a season-ending victory. They travelled to Grand Rapids, Mich., to take on Aquinas College, a team which has suffered only one loss this season and is currently ranked in the Top 20 in the country among NAIA schools.

Irish runners fare well

The Notre Dame men's track team had fine individual performances Saturday at the Indiana TAC State Championships to help tune them up for the IC4A Championships next weekend.

"This meet was good preparation for the IC4A's for those who qualified," said Irish coach Joe Piane. Piane employed variety as he started some runners in events different from what they normally run.

One of those runners was John McNelis who took second place in the 1000-yard run with a time of 2:11.53. "He did very well in his
