Leary exhorts students to 'question authority' during campus lecture

By FRANK J. MASTRO
Staff Reporter

Timothy Leary, speaking before a capacity crowd at Washington Hall last night, encouraged the audience to think for themselves and to question authority.

"It's five key words. I'd like to laser these words into your brain. TFYQA. Think for yourself, question authority," he said, making his first campus visit since 1978.

"A lot of things have changed in 15 years, but not my message. I'm a cheerleader for change."

Leary's witty remarks and sharp criticisms kept the audience laughing for a good part of his two hour oration.

"I have and continue to use mind-altering drugs," he said,"but, I use them prudently, cautiously, with a great deal of planning."

"Everything you hear about drugs is propaganda. Drugs are a matter of choice: You have to think for yourself."

"I see nothing wrong with Yuppies - young urban professionals. What's the opposite of that? An old rural amateur? That's Jesse Helms."

Leary's latest venture has been into the world of computer programming. His first program, "Mind Adventure" is slated for release Nov. 1.

"The word 'computer' shouldn't scare you," said Leary. "The computer is a tool, an instrument for thinking."

He predicted that within the next two to three years there will be a genre of books coming out on interactive psychometrics on computers. "It's a mind mirror. It allows you to dissect your thoughts," he said.

Leary had four chairs behind him on stage, intended to represent the four traditions of thinking - the oral tradition, the feudal tradition, the industrial tradition, and the new age.

According to Leary, the new age began in 1946 with the end of World War II. The birth rate in the Western industrial countries doubled between 1946-64.

"The average 50s kid experienced more realities, surrealities and hallucinations by watching the tube," said Leary.

"I see nothing wrong with Yuppies - young urban professionals. What's the opposite of that? An old rural amateur? That's Jesse Helms. When the going gets tough, the tough turn pro," he said.

He encouraged the audience to sit down at the feet of authority and ask questions like,'What's going on, man?' "Intelligent authorities love to be questioned, but many authorities are not intelligent. Many authorities get pissed off if you question them," he said.

He said seventy percent of the people today believe a society should think for itself, but added,"Ninety percent of the people in power now don't want us to think for ourselves."

"America is the hope of the world. All the european and middle eastern countries know it," said Leary.

He also commented on Catholicism, stating,"The Catholic religion is less dangerous and more hopeful than any other religion. It embraces everybody."

All of the tickets for last night's lecture were distributed in an hour earlier this week. Outside Washington Hall, people were offering money for the tickets, which were free of charge.

"You're talking about a junior Springsteen," said Leary.

After the talk, Leary attended a reception in the LaFortune Student Center.

Yesterday afternoon, at 12:30, a crowd of approximately 500 people gathered at the Fieldhouse Mall patio to hear Leary give a preview of last night's lecture.

Leary stressed his principle of thinking for yourself and questioning authority and his basic message of human freedom.

Leary also appeared in the "Death and Dying" philosophy class yesterday morning and the "Passage to India" English class in the afternoon.

ND kicks kegs from lots

By LYNNE R. STRAND
Staff Reporter

Like the rest of the Notre Dame campus, Green Field will be much more dry this football season.

The new stadium parking lot rules, released last week, prohibit kegs on the parking lot grounds and the tailgating areas.

Since losing a major lawsuit this summer, Notre Dame is taking a much stronger stand "to eliminate any possibility of the abuse and privileges of others," says the letter to permit holders.

"We have an obligation to do what's right for the University. We should be able to tell people they'll have a safe and comfortable time at the game," said Athletic Director Gene Corrigan. Associate Athletic Director Joseph O'Brien added, "The hallmark word is moderation, not abuse. We want to create the atmosphere of a picnic."

The letter to permit holders states,"The University is legally required to be concerned with monitoring safe and proper crowd control and behavior, not only in the stadium, but in the parking lots as well." The letter was sent this week, along with parking passes.

One new rule states,"Large parties requiring the use of tents must obtain prior approval from the Office of the Business Manager." Another says,"Uniformed security officers, mounted sheriff's posse, lot supervisors, as well as roving patrol cars will be on duty in the parking lots before, during, and after the game."

Corrigan said the University's court loss has "changed how schools view the use of parking lots."

Because of an inebriated fan, a woman broke her leg and filed suit against the University. The University won the first court decision, but three judges later ruled a re-trial this summer. The University lost this decision and awarded the woman the damage compensation she had requested.

"Ours is a landmark decision," said Corrigan. "Any event with a parking lot has looked at the decision and is concerned with it. mind, With that in mind, we must amplify our rules of control. We will be carefully scrutinized."

"If we condone large parties, we can be held for liability. We're vulnerable," O'Brien said.

Notre Dame Judicial Council sets goals for coming year

By JOHN GORLA
Staff Reporter

The Notre Dame Judicial Council presented its case to make students more aware of their rights on campus at its first meeting of the year last night.

"We want to aid the student and make him more aware of his rights and the options that are open to him," said Karen Ingwersen, coordinator of the Judicial Council.

The council published the Students' Rights Manual last year as a guide for the student who may be guilty of a university offense, Ingwersen said.

Four committees compose the body of the council, whose members are the judicial board chairmen from each residence hall. Each one has a specific goal to accomplish this year.

The Legal Services Committee plans to contact area lawyers and to act as a type of liason between students and the lawyers, Ingwersen said. This project will culminate in the publication of a list of area lawyers who will assist students and possibly give a discount for the first hour of consultation, she said.

Although in the past there has been some difficulty in getting some lawyers to help students, she said she is optimistic the committee will get the job done.

The Administrative and Rector Relations Committee, according to Ingwersen, will attempt to clarify the discrepancies that exist between the judiciary boards in each dorm. This committee also will help to better define the roles of the hall rector and RAs to help the students know specifically what these roles are.

"The students need to be more aware that these people exist and are here to help us," Ingwersen said.

She noted that both John Goldrick, associate vice-president for residence life, and Ann Firth, director of residence life, have expressed an interest in the students' view of the J-board system and in any suggestions the students have for improving the system.

The DuLac Review Committee will recommend to the administration improvements and changes that can be made to the guide. "One of the biggest problems with DuLac," Ingwerswen said, "is that some areas are barely interpretable and are in need of revision."

She added that this committee was instrumental in publishing the Students' Manual of Rights last year.

Ingwersen said in order to achieve these goals, the council will rely on strong support from the administration. "The administration is very receptive to our ideas," she said.

In Brief

A University of Iowa student government group has allocated $7,500 for students who are denied federal financial aid because they refuse to register for the draft. Collegiate Associations Council voted 9-7 at a meeting earlier this week to create the fund from mandatory student fees. The fund requires approval from Philip Hubbard, vice president for student services. -AP

A convict who spent a decade on death row for killing a man when he was 17 was executed by lethal injection early Wednesday in Huntsville Texas. "About all I can say is goodbye," Charles Rumbaugh, 28, said as he lay strapped to a gurney with needles inserted into his arms. "For the rest of you, even though you don't forgive me for my trangressions, I forgive you for yours against me. "That's all I wish to say. I'm ready to begin my journey." He was the first person in more than two decades to be put to death for a crime committed while under the age of 18. Rumbaugh was convicted of killing Michael Fiorillo, 58, during a 1975 holdup at his Amarillo jewelry store. -AP

Gov. Bob Kerrey said he has only one piece of advice for country music star Willie Nelson concerning the Sept. 22 Farm Aid benefit concert in Champaign, Ill. "Don't give the money to politicians," Kerrey said he told Nelson, who performed at the Nebraska State Fair last weekend. The publicity Nelson is bringing to farm problems is worth more than the $10 million Nelson expects to raise, Kerrey said Wednesday. "I don't think you could buy the kind of advertising attention that Willie Nelson's going to give agriculture," Kerrey said. "He feels very strongly that something needs to be done." —AP

Morris the Cat stole the show from Gov. Mario Cuomo's wife and the state health commissioner at a news conference announcing the cat's starring role in a public service TV commercial promoting good health. Morris, the finicky star of food commercials, was placed on top of the podium the governor normally uses at press conferences for the announcement Wednesday as nine news photographers clicked away. Reporters shouted questions to the famous cat about the national economy and other topics in the news. Morris declined to comment. —AP

Road trip to wedding is cause for as much celebration as Michigan

Frank Lipo

Copy Chief

It's time for a road trip.

This weekend countless Notre Dame and Saint Mary's students will pile in their cars, pack Notre Dame paraphernalia, pull out their road maps, and head north to Ann Arbor.

Although many do not have tickets (and some not even a place to stay), the opportunity to cheer the Irish on to victory in unfriendly territory is too tempting to pass up. And the chance to experience life on another campus, even for a few days, is a welcome one.

I'm also going to be making a road trip this weekend.

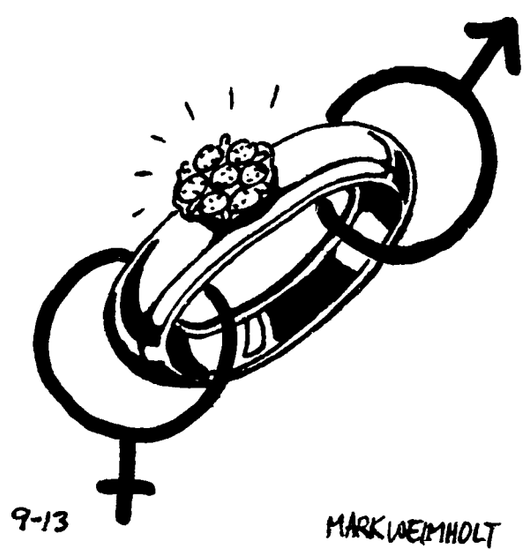
This road trip won't be of the northern variety, like that of my friends and classmates. Instead it will be a western one, to my home, north of Chicago.

I admit it is a little early to be homeward bound. I'm not sick of my classes or even the dining hall food yet. Homesickness is not a factor either.

The reason I'm going home is to attend my sister's wedding.

Everyone has been to a wedding. The scene is etched in our minds: the white wedding dress, the groom's tuxedo, the exchange of vows, the excited and nervous families, the reception. Of course each wedding is different, but our American culture possesses a certain conception of what a wedding should be. We are comfortable with that conception.

I have been a guest at a number of weddings. As a rule I have not been close to the bride or groom. Instead they have been distant relatives or friends of the family.



But that will change this weekend. This is not a wedding. This is The Wedding for my family. For months plans and preparations have been made. This wedding will not draw the attention that the world gave to the marriage of Prince Charles and Lady Di. But it is the most special event in my family in a long time.

That is the beauty of any wedding. A wedding is universal and yet intensely personal. The ceremony is one of humanity's most ancient rituals. Anyone can understand the universality of the wedding ring as a symbol of eternity or the reception as a time to celebrate what has occurred and what lies ahead.

But I'm certain my sister and her new husband will not be pondering universal implications tomorrow afternoon, nor will our two families. On the family level a wedding ceremony is unique. It is special. It is a time for celebration.

Most people probably can see both the universal and the personal elements of a wedding ceremony in their own family's weddings. It is not the individual wedding day alone which is significant. After all, it is only a one-day event, despite the excitement. It is the lifetime commitment of marriage, a universal commitment, which also is being celebrated.

Marriage has come under attack in our society. The divorce rate is high. It has reached a point where the majority of people have been touched by the tragedy of divorce, whether in their own families or the families of friends and neighbors. It would be foolish to ignore the reality of the threat to this institution.

Threatened though it may be, the beauty of marriage (and the wedding ceremony) is eternal optimism. Each couple approaches the altar with confidence that their marriage is eternal. They know there will be problems and that every day will not have the excitement of the wedding ceremony and reception. But each commits their life to the other.

The reality of the threat which marriage and family life face can make a wedding ceremony even more joyful today than in times past. A couple sees a society which makes divorce and living together viable options. Yet they trust in their commitment.

The relatives and friends who come from near and far to share the solemnity and celebration with the bride and groom seem to bring the significance of a wedding into focus.

Although we often lose touch with relatives, in a wedding celebration we quickly become comfortable. After all, we are family precisely because of such wedding ceremonies throughout the years.

Tomorrow afternoon won't be just another Saturday for my family because of my sister's wedding. It will be a time to joyously anticipate a shared future. And it also will be a time to look back with gratitude to the good times and bad times shared by my family.

I won't regret missing my classes today because of this road trip or even missing most of the Michigan game tomorrow. I've got a lot to cheer about at home.

Noted artist joins Saint Mary's staff

Special to The Observer

Artist Linda Plotkin, whose prints have received international recognition, will visit Saint Mary's as artist-in-residence until Sept. 21.

Plotkin will present a lecture on Wednesday, Sept. 18, entitled "New Directions" in room 232 Moreau Hall. The public is invited to the lecture and there is no charge.

Plotkin's prints are known for their color, sense of light and draftmanship. A native of Milwaukee, Plotkin graduated from the University of Wisconsin and received her masters of fine arts from Pratt Institute in Brooklyn. From 1970-77, she taught printmaking at Pennsylvania State University. She has lived and worked in New York City since 1978.

Most of her work is still-life, rich in color and texture. With her skill in portraying the play of light and shadow on everyday objects, she gave the objects a sense of mystery and signifigance. Some of her more recent etchings, lithographs, and watercolors were included in an exhibition at Saint Mary's last spring.

She has exhibited internationally and her work is in many public collections, including the Bibliotheque Nationale, Paris, Brooklyn Museum, Cleveland Museum of Art, Library of Congress, Metropolitan Museum of Art, Museum of Modern Art, San Diego Fine Arts Center, and the Yale University Museum of Art.

Theologian Roland Murphy to give lecture at SMC

Special to The Observer

Father Roland Murphy, an internationally-known Bible expert, will speak on "The Psalms and Prayer" at 7:30 p.m. Thursday, in O'Laughlin Auditorium. The lecture, sponsored by Saint Mary's Religious Studies Department, is free and open to the public.

In conjunction with the lecture, a Bible and stand will be dedicated in Cushwa-Leighton Library at 4:30 p.m. The Bible will be placed prominently in the lobby of the library as a symbol of the primary place of the Bible in the life of the College. The Bible and stand are gifts from a 1985 nursing graduate.

Murphy, the George Washington Ivey Professor of Biblical Studies at the Divinity School of Duke University, will discuss the importance of the psalms and how to use them in prayer. His lecture will be addressed to students and others who are not specialists in the study of the Bible.

According to Keith Egan, chairman of the department of Religious Studies and co-director of the Center for Spirituality, "Father Murphy's talk will be profitable for all who are interested in knowing how to read and pray with the Bible. His lecture at Saint Mary's last fall on 'Love Poetry in the Bible' was very well-received by an audience of over 1,000 and we are very honored to have him return."

Murphy will also serve as a consultant to Saint Mary's this fall on a new introductory Bible course required for all Saint Mary's freshmen. The course is designed as a foundation for prayer, faith and the study of theology.

A member of the Order of the Carmelites, Murphy has also served as editor-in-chief and as a member of the editorial board of the "Catholic Biblical Quarterly." He is a member of the editorial boards of "Concilium," "Vetus Testamentun," "Interpretation," "Theological Studies," "Old Testament Abstracts," and the "Hermeneia" Biblical commentary series.

In 1968 Murphy was elected president of the Catholic Biblica Association, and in December, 1983, he was elected president of the International Society of Biblical LIterature. He has been actively engaged in ecumenical dialogue.

Murphy holds a doctorate from Catholic University, where he taught classes in Semantic languages and Old Testament. He has also taught at Pittsburgh Theological Seminary, Yale, University Divinity School, Princeton Theological Seminary and Notre Dame.

Reagan boosts bill in Florida speech

Associated Press

TAMPA, Fla. - President Reagan returned to Florida yesterday determined to drum up interest in a tax bill congressional leaders say just isn't a top-priority item among constituents more concerned about the trade deficit or South Africa.

Using his own age and inevitable retirement to identify himself with his elderly audience, the 74-year-old, second-term president pressed his campaign against "useless tax dodges" and called charges his tax plan would hurt the middle class "balderdash."

Addressing about 2,600 senior citizens brought together by a national lobby financed largely by corporations that support the administration's tax bill, Reagan said he opposes the present system because it isn't fair.

"I've been preaching the merits of free enterpriee for years," said Reagan, whose 1981 tax cut was attacked for providing the nation's wealthiest taxpayers with the greatest benefits. "Business people provide jobs and create wealth. I have nothing against them; on the contrary, they have my heartfelt admiration.

"What I am against is a tax system that allows some to take perfectly legal deductions that by any standard of fairness are an outrage."

"Every year many Americans pay more in federal income taxes than the giant corporations they work for," he said. "Some individuals go on so-called 'educational' ocean cruises or purchase sky boxes at sports arenas and write them off as business expenses."

It is a message the president has hammered home in speeches in more than a dozen states since he launched his campaign to overhaul the tax system in a Memorial Day address in nearby Orlando.

With references to his own age scattered throughout the speech, Reagan described himself as a senior citizen who has "fought the last election of my political life."

"My friends, in this regard you and I have much in common," Reagan told the "senior citizens forum on tax reform."

"We've lived out a great part of our lives," he said, and now look to the future hoping new generations will enjoy the freedom and opportunity long cherished by Americans.

The forum was organized by Americans for Tax Reform, a coalition of business and community groups set up to lobby for the tax bill. It is financed largely by its corporate sponsors, including Dart and Kraft.

After campaigning almost exclusively for his tax proposal for much of the summer, Reagan's biggest obstacle is in keeping it high enough on the congressional agenda to win action by both the House and Senate before the end of the year.

Leading members of both parties say the plan has captured little attention among voters.

Riot aftermath

The clean-up in Birmingham, England, continues after rioting late Monday night covered much of the city with rubble. Two bodies were recovered from this post office in the city's Handsworth district.

Congress pushes for South Africa sanctions

Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Senate Democratic leaders say they will keep the issue of tougher economic sanctions against white-ruled South Africa constantly before Congress, attaching it to measure after measure "until we win."

But Republicans accuse the Democrats of waging a politically motivated campaign to embarrass President Reagan, whom they said should be given credit and support for revamping his administration's policy toward South Africa. Reagan on Monday issued his own list of sanctions aimed at South Africa's apartheid system of enforced racial separation.

Having failed Wednesday in their second assault on a filibuster preventing consideration of the Anti-Apartheid Act of 1985, Democrats scheduled a third vote yesterday.

But Assistant Senate Democratic Leader Alan Cranston of California said there was virtually no way to build a winning coalition of 60 votes needed to end the debate.

Instead, Cranston said supporters of the legislation will use yesterday's vote to keep the issue alive and will seek to attach the legislation to the pending debt limitation bill, a measure which requires only a majority vote for passage and which President Reagan would likely find difficult to veto.

"I believe we have a majority that will stick on a substantive vote," Cranston said. "We will get that on a bill that is tough to filibuster and is very difficult to veto."

Glemp asks U.S. to abolish sanctions against Poland

Associated Press

WARSAW, Poland - Poland's Roman Catholic primate, Cardinal Jozef Glemp, on Wednesday urged the United States to lift its economic sanctions against this communist nation.

Glemp, who will visit America next week for the first time, also said the Polish church has "begun preparations" for a third visit by Pope John Paul II to his native land in 1987. He said he hadn't talked to the Polish government about it yet.

Asked how he would respond if U.S. officials questioned him about the sanctions Washington imposed following the December 1981 imposition of martial law in Poland, Glemp replied:

"I would say that the sanctions should long ago have been lifted as we are in a difficult situation. I think that the effect is negative for the people." Glemp said without elaborating that the sanctions, which include a ban on agricultural credits for grain purchases, had caused Polish poultry farms to close.

Washington lifted some sanctions last year in response to the Polish government's amnesty for political prisoners. But it left in place the harshest restrictions, including a ban on new credits and the denial of "most favored nation" trading status to Poland.

The Reagan administration said it would lift the remaining sanctions when Polish authorities ease their grip on the nation.

Glemp said Poland should be treated like other Soviet bloc countries.

"The most favored nation clause we deserve in the same way as Czechoslovakia or Hungary," Glemp said. They are the only Eastern European countries to have the special trading status.

Fortunes of war

Frightened Moslem women and children huddle together in the basement of a deserted school in the Bourj El-Barajnah district of West Beirut during recent fighting along the city's dividing green line. The shelter is only about 150 yards from the warfront, where civilians from both sides are the main casualties.

Soviet agent defects; England ejects spies

Associated Press

LONDON - The British government announced yesterday the Soviet spymaster for Britain has defected and has identified 25 espionage agents who are being expelled from the country.

The Foreign Office said Oleg Gordievski, 46, recently had been appointed head of the Soviet KGB office in London but defected because he "wished to become a citizen of a democratic country and live in a free society." He was granted asylum in Britain.

Geoffrey Howe, foreign secretary, called the defection a "substantial coup," for the British security services.

Erik Ninn-Hansen, Denmark's justice minister, indicated that Gordievski had been a double agent for the West since the 1970s, when he served with the Soviet Embassy in Copenhagen.

Ninn-Hansen, speaking on Danish television, said Gordievski "supplied police intelligence with much information, also on conversations he conducted, and he was an extremely important source of information of significance to our security."

The Danish minister said British and Danish counter-intelligence services had been in contact with each other about Gordievski for some time, though he would not go into details.

Britain's Foreign Office would not comment on Ninn-Hansen's statement.

The 25 Soviets were the largest number of alleged spies to be sent back to Moscow since 1971, when Britain expelled 105 Soviet diplomats and trade officials.

The Foreign Office said the Soviets were ordered to leave Britain by Oct. 3.

Howe said Britain had suffered from the 25 alleged spies. "It's clearly serious. They were engaging in intelligence activities of a kind and on a scale that was unacceptable, and this action (the mass expulsion) is therefore necessary for the defense of national security."

Lebanese soldiers rescue Portuguese ambassador

Associated Press

BEIRUT, Lebanon - Lebanese soldiers rescued the Portuguese ambassador Wednesday when Moslem gunmen in west Beirut tried to drag him from his car at the Green Line dividing the city.

In southern Lebanon, an 18-year-old woman died when she drove a car loaded with TNT into a checkpoint manned by Christian militiamen and blew it up. There were conflicting reports of casualties in the car-bombing.

The kidnap attempt was made when Ambassador Louis Gonzaga Ferreira, 57, drove across the Green Line with his wife from the Christian east side into Moslem west Beirut.

Lebanese soldiers manning a checkpoint at the Kasskass-Massaleh crossing ran to rescue him when they saw the gunmen trying to drag him out of his blue Chevrolet. The gunmen fled down a maze of alleyways and it was not known to which militia they belonged.

The ambassador and his wife, Maria, were not injured.

The suicide car bombing in south Lebanon was aimed at a checkpoint of the South Lebanese Army, a militia supported by Israel.

Scientists add to bleak picture of life after nuclear attack

Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Billions of people who somehow survived the first blasts of a nuclear war merely would face drawn-out deaths by starvation, an international scientific group said yesterday in a new study supporting the theory of a crop-ruining global "nuclear winter."

Though an image of total devastation after a nuclear attack may well be accurate for areas around actual targets, one of the report's authors said famine conditions in unscathed areas would be far more typical - as hundreds of millions of tons of black smoke drastically cut sunlight and robbed crops of needed warmth and light from the sun.

"We are left with images of Ethiopia and the Sudan as being more representative of what the world would look like after a nuclear war for most of the people than the sorts of images we have of Hiroshima and Nagasaki," Mark Harwell of Cornell University said at a news conference

He said it estimated famine deaths of one to four billion of the world's five billion people after direct blast and radiation effects of actual attacks cost several hundred million lives.

"The main mechanism by which people would die after a large-scale nuclear war would not be blast effect, would not be burns, would not be radiation but rather would be mass starvation," he said.

The two-volume report, prepared by a special committee of the International Council of Scientific Unions, suggests that black smoke from nuclear attacks on urban areas - the main trigger for a "nuclear winter" - would cause sudden and perhaps long-term declines in temperatures and in light reaching the Earth, even in nations far from those attacked.

The findings basically support those of other groups, including the National Academy of Sciences, which has used atmospheric models as evidence that even a limited exchange could touch off some form of nuclear winter - especially in inland farm areas away from moderating influences of the oceans. The new report is based on more detailed modeling and computer work, the authors said.

The chairman of the study group, Frederick Warner of Britain, former chairman of the British National Committee on Problems of the Environment, said, "This effort represents the consensus of a prestigious body of scientists. It would be a grave error to ignore their findings.

Nicaraguan guerrilla claims U.S. providing military aid

Associated Press

The Hague, Netherlands - A former leader of guerrillas fighting Nicaragua's Sandinista government charged in an affidavit released yesterday that the United States has continued military support for the rebels despite bans by the U.S. Congress and the World Court.

In the sworn statement released by Nicaragua, former Contra leader Edgar Chamorro also charged that the CIA "did not discourage" rebel atrocities, and said guerrilla units commonly terrorized villagers into joining them. The U.S. State Department issued a denial of the accusation yesterday.

Nicaragua has charged the U.S. with waging "armed attacks" to overthrow its government. Oral arguments in the case opened yesterday before the World Court, the judicial arm of the United Nations.

The court, formerly known as the International Court of Justice, has no power to enforce its decisions and depends on voluntary compliance by states coming before it.

The U.S. is boycotting the proceedings, claiming the court has no jurisdiction. The Reagan administration has said the dispute must be settled through diplomatic channels, and has charged Nicaragua with using the court as a "propaganda forum."

13 uniformed security officers and a supervisor over each parking lot attendant. Attendants will be stationed at each gate, which also will insure people of medical and first aid should it be necessary, said O'Brien.

If violators are caught, he said, "We'll tell them they're not welcome, deny their parking passes and if necessary take away their season tickets. They're in the policeman's hands if they are unruly."

"We hope for cooperation. We want nobody on the field nor any pass outs - people leaving the stadium and then returning. We don't have any problems with tailgate parties; the problem is of someone getting out of hand," O'Brien said.

"We know drinking occurs," Corrigan said, "but we don't want to see a bar out there."

Corrigan said several other universities are taking similar steps. O'Brien said Purdue, for example, is increasing security in its parking lot and distributing handouts to fans coming to park.

"Tailgaters should not be equated with keggers," said Charles Lennon, executive director of the Alumni Association. "Kegs seem to encourage more drinking than from a beer can. You can bring beer if you're not abusive," he said.

"We're very supportive of what the University needs to do," Lennon said. "There are plenty of places to get beer if they (the alumni) want to."

Speakes is interpreter for Ronald Reagan

Larry Speakes is a truly gifted man. As far as I know, his ability is unique.

It is the type of gift which we all aspire to have, a combination of mind-reading and prognostication ability which lottery players need and baseball managers desire. However, only Larry Speakes has this gift, and he uses it to perform an invaluable public service.

Kevin Mundy

guest column

As presidential press secretary, Larry Speakes is the only man in the world who can tell us what President Reagan is saying. Not what the President said, mind you, for that is duly recorded on videotapes and transcripts. Larry Speakes, like a modern day oracle, transforms the President's words into some sort of understandable policy, for the Great Communicator is obviously operating too high up in the intellectual stratosphere to be understood by us mortals. Without Mr. Speakes, our Fearless Leader might be called the Telegenic Turkey, for his brief statements would obviously be misunderstood by the majority of the American public, particularly us idiots collectively known as the media.

As proof of this ability, I show exhibit A, the Reagan/Speakes media discussion of South Africa over Labor Day weekend. President Reagan suggested that his "constructive engagement" policy is working, saying, "They have eliminated the segregation that we once had in our own country, the type of thing where hotels and restaurants and places of entertainment and so forth were segregated--that has all been eliminated."

Now a casual observer might misinterpret this. It could be assumed that the high mortality rate among blacks in South Africa is because they are playing tackle football without helmets, and that they are trying to catch bullets fired at them from six feet away with their teeth for sport. Enter Mr. Speakes. "I think the President is talking about in the major cities, where there have been steps in that direction to remove barriers of apartheid."

You see, realism has now set in. The Johannesburg McDonald's now serves blacks, but they must all return to their homelands by dusk. Thanks Larry. Not convinced? Here is another quote from the same time and topic. President Reagan had a comment on Jerry Falwell and his much-publicized criticism of Bishop Desmond Tutu. "You know, we must recognize that the black majority in South Africa is a combination of minorities. There are at least 10 tribal divisions there. (Rev. Falwell) heard that some considered Bishop Tutu a leader; others rejected him as a leader. And this is what he was trying to say."

Here again many of you would misread things totally, concluding that Tutu is a phony. But our man of the hour, Larry Speakes, prevents such a distortion, declaring "The President believes that Tutu is a leader of the black community there. The President has met with Bishop Tutu, and respects him. (Reagan) wishes that Bishop Tutu and other black leaders would participate in the dialogue with the South African government."

I rest my case. Some cynics I know say the only difference between Reagan and Speakes is that the President watches "The 700 Club" and Larry watches "The CBS Evening News," but that is far too simplistic. It is Larry's gift which enables him to make such perceptive statements. When the President leaves office I think Larry should immediately perform the same service for Yogi Berra, another often misunderstood individual. With the Speakes' translation, all of America will learn that "90/ of this game is half mental" really means "it ain't over 'til it's over."

Saint Mary's senior cites the love of her father

dear dad

I cannot begin to tell you, Dad, how much it means to me that you are here this weekend. I have been looking forward to this for a long time and I know we are going to have a great time. It seems that lately we both have been so busy coming and going that we have not always had enough time to spend together. I am so glad of this opportunity to be selfish and to have you all to myself for a whole weekend, not only because it will be fun but because it gives me the opportunity to tell you some things I wish I had told you long ago.

I do not know why I have waited this long. Maybe it is because I was not mature enough before now. I have certainly grown up since I came to St. Mary's. Or maybe because it has not been until now that I have realized the day is coming when I leave home for good and I am finally on my own. At any rate, you probably already know what I am about to say, but it is important to me that I am sure you know.

Dad, you have always been my idol. When I was a little girl you were my big, strong Daddy and you could make everything okay. When I woke up in the middle of the night from a nightmare or a noise in the dark, I knew I was safe because you were in the next room. I knew that you would never let anything hurt me. It scared me so much to see you crying the day grandpa died. I did not think strong daddies were supposed to do that.

But I guess with age comes wisdom and I learned that strong daddies do cry. And even the best daddies are not perfect. They can lose their temper and make mistakes. Yes, they are even wrong sometimes, although I know you have told me that you are always right, even when you are wrong!

But Dad, I still see so much in you that I wish I could be. I see your goodness and your willingness to help others. I cannot think of a time when you did not lend a hand to someone who needed it. I also admire your great sense of humor and your ease with people. I can see why everyone who meets you likes you and why everyone who knows you loves you. You are one of the smartest people I know. We both know it is not the laudes that matter. Finally, I admire your determination and energy. You are the hardest working man I know and sometimes I wonder how you do it, although I know that I am the reason you do it.

I am so proud that you are my father! Do you know that I brag about you all the time? I am also so very lucky that you are my father. I thank God for giving you to me! I also thank you for all the wonderful things you have given me. Thank you for the opportunity to go to St. Mary's. Thank you for being strict with me. I admit there were times when I wished you had not been, but I realize now that it has made me a better person.

Dad, I know it has not been easy raising me. We have had our share of rough times. I guess it is hard when two people are as stubborn as you and I. I want you to know that I am sorry for all the times I have made you angry and for all the times I have made you worry. I know I have been the cause of quite a few of those grey hairs, and it hurts me to know that I have been the cause of some of those tears that frightened me so much as a child.

The good times, though, far outweigh the bad. I have such fond memories of you and the times we have spent together. I think of when I was little and the Saturdays I spent "helping" you at the farm and of the times when my sisters and I ganged up on you for those impromptu wrestling matches. You always won, of course! There are so many good times, too numerous to mention, that I will always treasure. They are times of love, laughter, and happiness.

Dad, I love you so much! In my eyes you are the best. Thank you for being here for our Senior Father/Daughter Weekend.

Liberal arts students are forced to defend choice

Barbara Blanchette

It has been several years since I wore a school uniform, and yet I am still navy and vn leery of clothing which vaguely resembles the navy and navy plaid sets from my past. Not only were they ugly, but they stood for a certain polyester concept of control and order, quite contrary to the opinions I had begun forming.

I wore the uniform because of the threat of "corrective action" if I were to deviate, but after a while, it was easier to just put on the same outfit every day- no decisions.

Since every school in the district had its own plaid or color combination, we also became known by the uniform we wore, grouped together visually by the factor we all resented most.

The last time I visited my high school the students wore a different plaid and were allowed more freedoms as far as breaking out of the iron uniform code. Teachers who once questioned the color of my not quite navy socks now asked equally trite questions about what I was studying in college, and where I went to school anyway. Most of the teachers who knew me squirmed when I informed them I was an English major with a minor in computers. Their usual response included a comment about how good it was I knew something about computers. The fact that I attended a liberal arts school was also rather disconcerting. Most of these such conversations ended with their barrage of advice about how to ignore my English major, and make up for the fact that I was not trained for a specific job.

Have the liberal arts become a fashion of the past, replaced even in the eyes of educated educators by a tailored and therefore sturdy employment future?

It again seemed to be that I was forced into wearing a uniform, that of a liberal arts student. This time when I chose the pattern and made all the rules, I was forced to defend my decision. If the modern academic community has changed so much over the years, how can we explain the return to thinking that trade training and education for the sake of a job should be the only correct pathway in life.

Many of the delicately woven fields in the area of Arts and Letters are fading into dangerously grey piles, sapped by the societal trend to swap the well-rounded education for narrower, more directly serving technical knowlege. Students who were once sent to college for a broad education now must return home to their summer employers, relatives and neighbors bearing magical answers to questions about exactly why they are in school anyway.

It is the nature of the liberal arts to be broader and less specific than the clearer, more defined fields of chemistry and computer science for example. The many different aspects of knowing how to analyze, think logically, create new ideas, and read and write well are all a part of the liberal arts background. All these abilities combine into a general sense of understanding the processes of business and of industry, and a general ability to learn about change and planning, vital skills in most types of employment.

The history of success in these areas is long and varies from Socrates' use of the logical and inquisitive processes to reason and solve problems, to the growing corporate policies of hiring only candidates who have had a more liberal, flexible education. The value of such a varied, broad education is only recently being generally realized. Although some people feel that Arts and Letters is not a valuable tool to attain further ends, society must learn to look into the many threads which compose areas of the liberal arts, like the logical process which governs both math and philosophy, the inquisitive which is important to marketing, history, theology as well as chemistry.

We, in this most unequally accepted area must bear with our convictions and remain confident in our academic choices. Only by dealing with unjust prejudices and moving beyond even our own expectations can we achieve some respect for the fields we've chosen. In bearing out some sense of our individual talent we can exhibit the fine areas of the general liberal arts distinguishing each of our plaids, bringing out the sense that the technical side of life is interdependent with those qualities inherent to the liberal arts education.

Life is too short to spend it being a 'throat'

Carol Brown

in these times

Today marks the eve of the first 1985-86 Notre Dame football confrontation - the Fighting Irish versus U. of M.(GOOOOOOOOOO Irish - Beat Wolverines!!) In light of this, today I will use my column to talk a little about what the Irish will do tomorrow afternoon - WIN!

More to the point, I am talking of winning and competition as it relates to us daily under the Dome. Often, and especially at a highly competitive, goal-oriented university such as Notre Dame, students feel pressure to compete with their peers, to be the best, to win.

Taken in a healthy spirit, this drive for achievement can act as a great motivation to work to be the best that you can be.

It is very important, however, to realize that striving to be the best you can be is very much different than competing to be better than someone else. This is an unhealthy, harmful way to approach winning. It surfaces many times in a condition known as "cuttus throatus maximus" more commonly recognized as "throating out." When this occurs, the "throat" approaches all around him, especially that which is academic, in the spirit of "cutthroat competition," hence the term "throat."

The throat, building a wall of selfishness around himself, hoards his knowledge, refusing to share or help others to learn. In doing so, the throat deprives himself of much he could learn from others. In essence, the throat merely "cuts his own throat." Although it may sound like a cliche, it is very valuable to remember it is in helping each other that we help ourselves.

The throat also follows a highly unbalanced set of priorities. Placing the importance of grades and academic success above all, the throat is forgetting that learning is more than just books - much, much more. He is depriving himself of the vast amount of growth and learning that the total college experience offers students. The throat is forgetting that growth comes from the special interaction and giving of friendships, from enjoying and appreciating God's great world and from just having fun.

Please do not misunderstand my point by equating the throat with the academically motivated; I would hope that all of us are that. Being a serious student, not necessarily a serious person, is a quality to be admired. After all, this is why we all gather at this great place of learning in the first place - to educate ourselves. But I hope we also come here in the hopes that we will excell and grow in all areas of life. Being a throat has nothing to do with the amount of time spent studying. The throat and the well-rounded student may very well study the same amount of hours. The difference between the academically motivated and the throat lies is that to the throat studying is everything and is done in competition with others. The healthy student treats academics as only one aspect of his life, however important it may be. Furthermore, this student merely competes with himself in an effort to better himself; he is not concerned with excelling over his peers.

If the throat thinks he is "winning," he may be, but the only person he is defeating is himself. After all is said and done, what has a throat "won" after hiding his nose in a book for four years? A 4.0 possibly, but what does that mean in real life, life after college? The throat leaves college missing the most important things of all: true friends; real growth as a person; and a knowledge which cannot be obtained through books - the knowledge of how to excell at being human.

So all you throats and occassional throats (sort of like weekend partiers or social drinkers), do not get sore (no pun intended) when I say it is time to break out of your shells! It is time to lighten up and enjoy life. Life is much too short and precious to be wasted on the inside of a book. Take time to reach out from yourself and help others. You may be surprised at how much they will help you in return. Always remember, when things start getting tough and you feel your life being controlled by grades and books, all throats eventually choke or at least get strep.

Barlow very wrong on lack of campus security

Dear Editor:

I am writing in regard to Andy Barlow's article on the "simple solution to the security problem at ND." As a former student security guard, I feel adequately knowledgable to reply to his Viewpoint article. I must first clarify the fact that if the article was written for satirical purposes, its humor must not have made it through the printing press. Furthermore, as a member of this community, Mr. Barlow has failed to understand the importance and the corresponding responsibility involved in writing on the subject of security. Hence, keeping in mind that his article was neither humorous nor responsible, let me point out some of the serious faults of his article.

First, Mr. Barlow states that "There has not been any real trouble in the past," just in the last four months. He continues this falsehood by comparing the campus to inner-city Chicago, saying that "rapes, shootings and theft are becoming common." Barlow is grossly incorrect in his summation of our campus security problems. One, Notre Dame has had only one rape in seven years. If Notre Dame compared to the national average of sexual assaults, there would be close to seven per year. Secondly, the shooting incident of the last month was a freak accident. I do not think it is grounds to rename Cartier Field "Sniper Alley." Barlow's greatest miscalculation, however, is inferring theft on campus has begun to occur recently. I would like him to tell that to the hundreds of students who have had their bikes, books or wallets stolen in the last few years.

Theft on campus has always been a problem at Notre Dame. Yet, the problem is not due to a lack of security. Rather, it is the result of a lack of responsibility and awareness of every member of this community. I do not feel, as Barlow proposes, the need for ROTC to patrol the road to Saint Mary's. I do feel, however, that it is the duty of every student on both both campuses to protect themselves from theft or assault. There is no reason for a female student to walk along that road at night alone; both security forces provide an escort service if the shuttle is not running. This responsibility also includes those students who believe that Notre Dame is an isolated paradise where theft does not exist. These are the students who walk into Security and cry that their new $400 bike was stolen; then when asked if the bike was locked, they reply, "No, but I was only inside for just a few minutes." In conclusion, I would like to repeat my belief that there is no need for our campus to resemble Fort Knox, and become the practice field for an over zealous Marine guard. If students and other community members became aware of the environment around them, and took seriously the responsibility for protecting themselves and others from theft or assault, then perhaps our campus would come to resemble the inner-city of Mayberry, USA.

Birth control need not be taught to our youth

Dear Editor:

Ironically, those who tend to be the most vocal in disagreeing with the Catholic Church's position on birth control are those with the least understanding of it.

In his Viewpoint column of Tuesday, Sept. 10, Bill Krais stated, "the Catholic Church espouses sexual intercourse only as a procreative method." His narrow interpretation of Church teaching is unfortunately common. "Humanae Vitae" merely states that "each and every marriage act must remain open to the transmission of life." What the church espouses is sexual intercourse that is not disassociated from authentic human love - sex that is responsible, mature, giving and receptive to the will of God.

Actually, Krais' basic argument is tenable, the public does need to be educated. His explanation of how (i.e. in methods of birth control) and why, however, reflect distorted reasoning. Under the pretense of courageously addressing the sexual activity of the young, advocates of birth control are retreating from the real challenge. Sure, we could campaign to educate our children about contraception, but then we really are not doing them any favors. Our children need to be educated about their sexuality, about human relationships that are healthy and whole, about respect for others and respect for self. It is a terrible reflection of modern man's understanding of sex if all he can say to his children about it is "you don't want to get pregnant - here's how to prevent it."

Finally, Krais closes his editorial by echoing the infelicitous call of pro-choice advocates: "every child a wanted child." This is a cry of thinly veiled selfishness, one that reflects an unwillingness to defer to other human beings their existence and their needs. It is a cry through which the quality of life ethic reverberates. This ethic holds that human life should be protected only when one is deemed capable of "a meaningful existence." The increasingly common practice of euthanasia, the rising number of abortions performed every year and the recent Infant Doe cases all reflect our society's perilous preoccupation with "quality" beings. In our ardent pursuit of "the good life," we have overlooked the good and we have undervalued life.

Those who embrace the quality of life ethic should listen carefully to the parable of the loaves and the fishes. Perhaps then they will not be so covetous of their possessions and their time, nor so frightened by these "unwanted" human beings.

Paradoxically, these who so often are dehumanized, these who seem to have so little, are the most poignant reminders we have of human dignity and individual worth. Just spend a day with the mentally and physically handicapped at Logan Center and NISH - most of whom would fall into the "unwanted" category - to understand what I mean. If one's capacity to contribute is requisite for "meaningful existence" (as the quality of life ethic suggests) then the lives of these individuals, who give to others unconditionally and without effort, embody a meaning and quality that most of us could only hope to emulate.

Kollman wrong about apartheid solution

Dear Editor:

I would like to respond to Ken Kollman's column of Sept. 9 concerning the complexity of matters in South Africa. I agree with his observation that solutions regarding the ending of the apartheid system will not be simple, but I would like to attempt to respond to his concerns on the question of the constitution of a future South African state in the event of an end to white minority rule.

Kollman pointed out that South African whites, especially Afrikaners, are unlikely to commit political suicide by converting the South African "democracy" into a one-man/one-vote system which would include the black majority and thus transfer political power into their hands.

First of all, one-man/one-vote is an oversimplified concept (especially since what is really meant is one-person/one-vote.) It does not give a full description of a political system, and it certainly does not bestow equal power to all eligible voters as the term might seem to imply. Voters in Rhode Island have more voting power than voters in California simply because of the way membership in the U.S. Senate is allocated. The Senate was established to give equal power to all states of the union, not proportional representation to all voters.

The U.S. Senate was meant to protect small states, and in similar fashion, other institutional means for the protection of minorities have been developed in the various democracies of this world. Should South African whites become a minority without absolute power, these means of protection could be incorporated into the new state's constitution.

Those who have taken an introductory course in comparative government should be aware of the distinction between the "consensus" and "majoritarian" (Westminster) models of democracy. The Westminster model is adept for largely homogenous societies such as the British one from whose parliament the model derives its name. The consensus model, on the other hand, is usually found in countries in which many religious, ideological or linguistic cleavages divide society. It is designed to achieve consensus among the various existing factions by minimizing power concentration and thus avoiding the discontent and violence which arise from political inefficacy and, in the extreme, oppression. A future South African state would certainly be best fitted by the latter model.

Some of the mechanisms for power sharing and protection of minorities included in this model are the following: an upper house (equivalent to the U.S. Senate) with membership based on equal representation of rival territorial, religious or racial groups; proportional representation rather than plurality (winner-take-all) election systems for the lower house. The two previous institutional arrangements depend on equal power in the two houses (balanced bicameralism.)

Other mechasnisms include: federalism or decentralized rule wherein the central government shares power with state and local government; executive power-sharing, i.e. cabinet ministerships allocated equally among parties or rival groups; and, a supreme court with the power to interpret the constitution and review legislative decisions.

We cannot rule out the possibility that some well thought out constitutional arrangement could help bring a stable future to South Africa, but negotiations with legitimate black leaders must take place soon, or the rising tide of violence will wash away all hope of rational solutions.

Quote of the day

"Winning is not a sometime thing. You don't win once-in-awhile. You don't do things right once-in-awhile. You do them right all the time.

Winning is a habit. Unfortunately, so is losing. There is no room for second place. There is only one place in my game and that is first place. There is a second place bowl game - but it is a game for losers played by losers. It is and always has been an American zeal to be first in anything we do, and to win, and to win, and to win.

Every time a football player goes out to play, he's got to play from the ground up. From the soles of his feet right up to his head. Every inch of him has to play. Some guys play with their heads. That's okay - you've got to be smart to be number one in my business, but more important, you've got to play with your heart. With every fiber of your body. If you are lucky enough to find a guy with a lot of head and a lot of heart, he's never going to come off of the field second.

Running a football team is no different from running any other kind of organization - an army, a political party, a business. The problems are the same. The objective is to win. To beat the other guy. Maybe that sounds hard or cruel. I don't think it is.

It is reality of life that men are competitive and the most competitive games draw the most competitive men. That's why they're there - to compete. They know the rules and the objectives when they get in the game. The objective is to win - fairly, squarely, decently, by the rules - but to win. And in truth, I have never known a man worth his salt who in the long run, deep down in his heart, did not appreciate the grind - the discipline. There is something in good men that really yearns for . . . needs . . . discipline and the harsh reality of head-to-head combat.

I don't say these things because I believe in the "brute" nature of man, or that men must be brutalized to be competitive. I believe in God and I believe in human decency. But I firmly believe that any man's finest hours, his greatest fulfillment to all he holds dear, is the moment when he has worked his heart out in a good cause and lies exhausted on the field of battle victorious.

Amidst scarcity they infuse love in summer work

Summer is a time of change. For most students, this change means packing their bags and heading home to a new job and old friends. For 63 Notre Dame students, however, this summer was one of service.

The Notre Dame Summer Service Project program provides opportunities for students to volunteer eight weeks of their summer to the service of the poor or disadvantaged. The projects are arranged through the Center for Social Concerns and alumni groups all over the country.

Organizations interested in obtaining a student volunteer apply to the center, and the Summer Service Project Coordinator, Marty Kenahan, along with local alumni contacts, selects suitable projects.

In February of this year, students began submitting initial applications. The selection committee then interviewed each student, finally chosing 63 students out of the 140 who applied.

Summer Service participants worked in soup kitchens and womens' shelters; with ex-convicts and street people. Their responsibilities ranged from mopping floors to visiting shut-ins.

Kenahan described the responsibilities of Summer Service Project participants as; "Anything that helps the accomplishment of service to the poor." She stressed the fact that these students were not simply "interns," a term used to describe students who receive only observational experience. Most students served the disadvantaged directly.

Those who did not have "hands-on" experience were working in organizational positions crucial to the group they served. The students did not just observe the work of dedicated Christians, they became a vital part of the Christian ministry.

The projects benefit not only service organizations. Notre Dame alumni clubs set up projects in their area, and meet with the students periodically throughout the summer. Through the students, members of the alumni club become more aware of service opportunities; they often become involved personally in students' projects. For Notre Dame alumni, the Summer Service Project participants are an important contact with the University and its ongoing ministry.

Students who participate in the Summer Service Project program receive a $1200 tuition credit to free them from the financial strain of committing 40 hours per week to their projects. Scholarships come from alumni contributions, from grants, or from the service organizations for which the students work.

Anyone interested in a Summer Service Project for next year should contact Marty Kenahan at the Center for Social Concerns.

They begin, eager to understand; they leave, aware of their mission

Jane Anne Riedford
features writer

Students who volunteer eight weeks of their summer obviously expect to give of their energy and enthusiasm, their love and compassion. They find, however that the rewards in doing a project far outweigh the giving.

Their surprising rewards include a better awareness of social issues, meaningful relationships with people in all walks of life, and deep experiences in faith. In addition, students learn lessons that they will carry with them for the rest of their lives.

They see poverty and social injustice first-hand. For example, many youngsters, without the availability of day-care centers, are left alone while both parents are working. Students who encounter these children during their projects see the lack of day-care for the poor as much more than another issue. To them, these children are the prisoners of scarcity, not numbers in a report.

Most Summer Service Project participants work 40 hours a week, and many live in or near their project site. During the course of one day, students would be involved in several areas of service, as the majority of the projects involved combinations of two or more social programs. A student might begin the day serving breakfast at a shelter for homeless people, then spend the rest of the morning in a Legal Aid office. That afternoon, he or she might work alongside other volunteers in a gardening project for the poor.

A question that plagued many students in their work with the poor and disadvantaged was that of acceptance of conditions. Many people, though poor in the eyes of the typical middle-class, have strong faith in God and believe that God will take care of their needs. These people are often happier than the volunteers that help them simply because they have accepted the trials of their lives as easily as the joys.

One young woman found personal happiness through her witnessing of "acceptance of conditions."

She observed, "Many people find it easy to recognize their own unhappiness, yet they find it difficult to know when they are truly happy. For the first time in my life, I've met happy people. They are poor, many are sick, yet they are happy. I've decided that I can be happy if I choose to be happy."

Political views are apt to change during and after a summer service project. Jim Falvey, a St. Edward's junior whose project was located in Washington D.C., had the unique experience of seeing contrasting attitudes from the politicians and the street people, sometimes during the same day. For most of the other students, simply working with the poor improved their awareness of political and social issues.

For example, one student worked for a housing program, which enabled her to observe deplorable housing conditions, governmental red tape, and the shattered lives which result from both.

In the end, Summer Service Project participants are faced with many responsibilities: a responsibility to take action against the injustices they have witnesed and a responsibility to keep learning. Most importantly, they have the responsibility to spread the news of God's people in need.

A canine is man's best friend, not his equal

Letters to a lonely God

As the sponsor and patron of a famous cocker spaniel named Darby O'Gill II, I would like to have a heart-to-heart talk with off-campus seniors who feel that off-campus happiness is owning a cute puppy with a wet nose. Home, for you, meant that the family pooch was waiting to greet you at the door like an animated welcome mat; and so, now your own digs should also have its official greeter.

Let me warn you; if you're starting from scratch, with an eight-week-old animal, you have to work at having a young pet harder than you would have to work at a new marriage.

You're not setting up a partnership of equals, because the dog has only instincts, and you are the member of the team that supplies the brains, the patience, and the money. New babies are even more helpless than puppies; but a puppy seems more helpless than you would like him to be when you hear him whimpering at night, lonesome and strange in a new place, missing the warmth of his mother and the other siblings of his litter. A ticking alarm clock wrapped in a sweatshirt will comfort him into believing he isn't alone. A puppy crying for help isn't sophisticated in his demands for attention; but he isn't dumb, like a toy that stays motionless, asking nothing.

If you're picking out a dog, be sure that you can afford him, and that you have time for him. Dogs don't grow up healthy on table scraps, nourished this way, they can die of malnutrition, because they don't thrive on garbage. Dogs, from birth, are threatened by canine illnesses that can ruin them. They have to make several trips a year to the vet's office, to get the protective vaccines; these visits can cost you $50 or $75 apiece. You owe it to your dog to keep him protected.

Dogs are a domesticated species. That means that they are happy being part of a home with people providing for them and giving them an identity. They are not happy staying in a cellar, waiting for you to stroll home from the campus, after 10 hours away. You can't leave them, untrained, to chew on the furniture and wet on the rug. Maybe that's a sign that you'd be wiser not to have a dog.

I've met half-grown dogs that spent half their lives in a cellar. The lads that adopted them couldn't fit house-breaking into the schedule. In May, when these seniors graduated, the dogs - some of them beautiful enough to be show dogs - were still leaving their calling cards in the middle of the room. Nobody's mother welcomes a collie the size of Bullmoose that treats the parlor like the great out-of-doors. That is why you sometimes meet dogs set loose in the city, turned out by students who got tired of having them as a hobby.

Mutts sporting 57 varieties of bloodlines may have the hearts of champions. The saying is: a pedigreed pooch is no more than a dog; one whose mother didn't move fast enough as an artful dodger is no less than a dog. Knowing that you have a thoroughbred is helpful because you can predict how the dog will turn out in terms of size and habits. Cuteness in a puppy of unspecified vintage isn't enough of a credential unless you're very broadminded about how the product turns out. The dear little castaway without visible parents may be big enough at seven months to work on a stud farm. So, if you're picking a candidate that you wish to be Fido breathing love on you - and you're not a good sport when nature pulls a surprise - don't think it's a kindness to favor the underdog with eyes like brownies melting in milk. It helps to be St. Francis, if you're considering the adoption of a wolf.

Dogs are only dogs. What they are in being dog-like is rather wonderful, so it's a mistake to treat them like people, which only spoils them in doing what they do best. They should be given names, I think, which they can live up to. I feel sorry for creatures with names like Buffy and Taffy, because then you can't tell if they're "sir" or "madam". I hate the question: "Is your dog a boy or a girl?" Actually, I'm tempted to reply, "he's only a dog," hoping to make the point that God created dogs male and female, like all other creatures.

It's a lonely crusade I carry on; however, accuracy in labelling is important. One of the most wonderful pet names I've ever heard is that of Bill the Cat, from "Bloom County". That feline knows where he is going as a rough, tough alley cat. You wouldn't dare to spoil an animal who's had his personality shaped by a wild and crazy monicker like Bill the Cat.

Marty Python, on the other hand, was a hard-luck snake. According to the papers, the police released a thief caught burgling the campus because, in arresting him, they forgot to read him his rights. Nobody mentioned reading Marty Python his rights; the poor, dumb serpent didn't have any rights. Last year, the papers carried another story I wondered about. An underage student was drinking beer at a porch party. The police showed up to check I.D.'s, and the student ran away from them. They pursued him with dogs, the newspapers said. The dogs finally caught him a block away. They didn't hurt him very much, as I remember the details; their teeth didn't break the skin.

Pursuit with dogs is the way they treated runaway slaves, according to "Uncle Tom's Cabin". The police probably don't have a comfortable time when students, half in their cups, snarl at them churlishly. The boys in blue have tough jobs for which I wish to respect them. I hate to read where they've brought down a 19-year-old with the K-9 corps, and let a thief go because they were inefficient.

Snakes shouldn't be running around loose, and neither should dogs. My first Darby O'Gill was arrested years ago. A campus security officer put the cuffs on him, looped through his collar, for running around loose. Walking Darby from the bookstore to Keenan, the officer kept replying, to students who said "Hello, Darby," "My name isn't Darby." He brought the dog home because he was being nice. The dog was in trouble, and it was my fault.

It's the nature of dogs to think that they are welcome everywhere. They don't understand the danger of speeding cars, or the sancity of the neighbor's lawn, or that garbage cans are not left out to be the prizes of a scavenger's hunt.

You can never trust a dog to shift for himself. He isn't just there as a playmate; he's there to be worried over. If you don't take the time to be concerned about him as much as he needs, then you don't love him enough. Unloved dogs don't stand much of a chance of living very long. The world feels there are more important things to worry about than a dog without a master to keep him housed and fed.

Movies

•Tired of reality? Terrify yourself at "Friday the 13th", this week's Student Activities Board feature at the Engineering Auditorium. Starring Betsy Palmer, Adrienne King, and Harry Crosby, this chilling shocker is guaranteed to entertain you. Strange things happen at Crystal Lake Camp. Counselors are murdered, one by one, in a grisly fashion until only one surviver remains. The crazed killer pursues the survivor, a terrified girl, through the moonlit darkness - but is the bloodthirsty maniac the only malevolent force at the camp? Find out at the film tonight or tomorrow night at 7, 9 or 11 p.m. Tickets are $1.50.

•Smile as you enjoy "Life is a Bed of Roses". Appearing tonight at the Annenberg Auditorium, this film is a comedy on the futiliy of man's desire for Utopia. Actress Geraldine Chaplin and actors Ruggero Raimondi and Vittorio Gassman star as a band of characters who attempt to re-experience their birth traumas and begin life anew. The film starts at 7:30 and 9:30 p.m. and tickets are $3.

Summerlin's "Headstart"

COMING ATTRACTIONS FEATURING THIS WEEKEND

Music

•Listen to the Gaelic sounds of "Scartaglen" tonight in Saint Mary's O'Laughlin Auditorium. This Kansas City-based band has a sound all its own, which some say is reminiscent of early rock and others compare to bluegrass. The eight-member group's music, firmly rooted in Celtic folk material, ranges from easy-listening to raucous dance. The evening promises to get your pulse pounding and your hands clapping. Tickets are $4.50, $5.50, and $6.50, and are available at the Auditorium Ticket Office. Notre Dame students receive a $1 discount and admission is free for Saint Mary's students.

Art

•Observe the unusual at the 1985 Lego Americana Road Show. This event includes 10 National Monuments constructed completely from Lego blocks. These interesting pieces will be on display at the University Park Mall thru Sept. 23.

•Laugh until you cry while watching the comedy "Life with Father" tonight and tomorrow night at the Bristol Opera House. This light-hearted frolic through the 1880s is rooted in truth. Characters and incidents are taken from the daily chronicles kept by Clarence Day Jr. about life in the day home. Mother and her four boys plot their serendipitous way to success in an all-out attempt to baptize Father against his will. The show begins at 8:15 p.m. Call 848-4116 for ticket information.

Mass

The celebrants for Mass at Sacred Heart Church this weekend will be:

Father Michael Couhig at 5:15 p.m. (Saturday night vigil).

Father Thomas Blantz at 9 a.m.

Father Peter Rocca at 10:30 a.m.

Father Peter Rocca at 12:15 p.m.

Misc.

•Show your support of Notre Dame's own Albert Summerlin by attending "Inner Vision," an art exhibition and reception to be held at the Colfax Cultural Center. Summerlin is a member of the physical plant staff at Decio Hall who cultivates his artistic talent in his spare time. The event will begin with a reception, tonight at 7, at the Center, on 914 Lincolnway West.

•The exhibition "Eleanor and Barbara," photographs by Harry Callahan, will open Sunday at The Snite Museum of Art. Callahan, well known for his multiple-exposures and high-contrast printing qualities, shot a series of photographs of his wife, Eleanor, and their daughter, Barbara. Extended portraits of the two include straightforward images as well as manipulated multiple exposures. This series shows the most comprehensive, personal, and impressive body of work in Callahan's 40-year career. The exhibition will be on display through Oct. 27 in the Print, Drawing and Photography Gallery between 1 and 4 p.m.

•The achievements of internationally-acclaimed artist George Rickey continue on display until Oct. 13 at various sites in the South Bend area. The Snite Museum exhibit features maquettes and photo murals; Saint Mary's displays jewelry, small sculptures and figurative drawings; and the South Bend Art Center shows medium-to-large indoor sculpture.

•Opening with a reception Sunday in the Women's Art League Gallery of the Art Center is the 1985 Art Center Faculty Exhibition. This exhibit features works in all media by the instructors in the Studio Program at the Center.

New York Mets third baseman Howard Johnson celebrates with teammates Keith Hernandez, Darryl Strawberry, and George Foster after hitting a grand slam in Tuesday's game against the St. Louis Cardinals. The Mets celebrated again last night, as they defeated the Cards, 7-6, to take sole possesion of first place in the National League East. For details on all of last night's NL action, see the Roundup at right.

Hernandez RBI hit beats Cards in 9th

Associated Press

NEW YORK - Keith Hernandez's tie-breaking single in the bottom of the ninth inning sent Mookie Wilson sprinting home from second base, giving New York a 7-6 victory yesterday over the St. Louis Cardinals and propelling the Mets back into sole possession of first place in the National League East.

Wilson led off the bottom of the ninth with his third hit, an infield single to third base off Ken Dayley, 3-2.

Reliever Jesse Orosco, 6-5, was the winner despite surrendering Willie McGee's game-tying home run in the top of the ninth.

Expos 6, Phillies 3

PHILADELPHIA - Hubie Brooks snapped an 0-for-13 string with a fifth-inning grand slam in leading the Montreal Expos to a 6-3 victory over Philadelphia Thursday night, snapping the Phillies' four-game winning streak.

Winner Floyd Youmans, 3-2, gave up two runs and four hits over five innings, striking out three and walking seven. Jeff Reardon notched his 34th save, pitching the final two innings.

With the score tied 1-1, Youmans opened the Montreal fifth with a walk off loser Shane Rawley, 11-7.

Braves 11, Dodgers 6

ATLANTA - Brad Komminsk capped a six-run third inning with a three-run homer and the Atlanta Braves went on to an 11-6 victory over the Los Angeles Dodgers last night, salvaging the final game of a five-game series.

Run-scoring singles by Glenn Hubbard and Dale Murphy chased Los Angeles starter Jerry Reuss and brought in Bobby Castillo, 2-2, who loaded the bases by walking Bob Horner.

Zane Smith, 7-9, who pitched three scoreless innings, was the winner for the Braves in relief of starter Joe Johnson. Gene Garber hurled the final three innings for his first save.

Pirates 10, Cubs 2

PITTSBURGH - R.J Reynolds hit a three-run homer, Mike Brown added a solo shot and relief pitcher Don Robinson capped a six-run eighth with a grand slam homer to lead the Pittsburgh Pirates to a 10-2 victory over the Chicago Cubs last night.

Reynolds' homer, his first since June 22, 1984, came against Dennis Eckersley, 8-6, in the third inning.

Robinson relieved Rick Rhoden, 9-13, in the eighth and personally put the game out of reach with his grand slam that capped the scoring. He then finished up his pitching chores for his third save of the season.

Reds 2, Padres 1

CINCINNATI - Buddy Bell and Tony Perez knocked in first-inning runs and right-hander Jay Tibbs scattered seven hits in eight innings last night to give the Cincinnati Reds a 2-1 victory over the struggling San Diego Padres.

Reds player-manager Pete Rose, who broke Ty Cobb's all-time hit record Wednesday night, sat out Thursday night's game because he got little sleep overnight.

Andy Hawkins, 17-6, allowed six hits while taking the loss.

Tibbs, 8-15, was the winner.

Astros 5, Giants 2

HOUSTON - Kevin Bass doubled and tripled, scored a run and drove in another to spark the Houston Astros to a 5-2 victory over the San Francisco Giants last night.

The victory was Houston's eighth in their last nine games and their 13th in 16 games with the Giants this season.

Rookie Charlie Kerfeld, 2-2, was the winner, pitching seven innings and giving up one run on six hits while striking out three and walking one. Dave Smith pitched the final two innings.

Lowery's club-record 5 field goals boost Chiefs over Raiders, 36-20

Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - Nick Lowery tied a club record with five field goals and Bill Kenney threw a pair of touchdown passes last night, leading the Kansas City Chiefs to a 36-20 victory over the Los Angeles Raiders in a nationally televised National Football League game.

Lowery tied the record of five field goals by Jan Stenerud, who turned the trick on two occasions in 1969 and again in 1971. The victory improved the Chiefs' record to 2-0 while the Raiders, who had beaten Kansas City five in a row, dropped to 1-1.

Lowery's field goals measured 36, 22, 42, 58 and 21 yards. His 58-yard effort with 43 seconds remaining in the first half matched the longest of his career and pulled Kansas City within 14-12 at halftime. His 21-yarder 4:39 into the second half propelled the Chiefs into the lead for good at 15-14.

Kenney, who passed for 397 yards against New Orleans last Sunday, completed 18 of 38 passes for 259 yards against Los Angeles. He threw for two touchdowns in the third period as Kansas City pulled out to a 29-14 lead.

Cornerback Albert Lewis recovered a fumble by Raider quarterback Jim Plunkett in the end zone for the Chiefs' third touchdown and a 36-14 lead with 9:48 remaining.

The Raiders scored first on Frank Hawkin's one-yard plunge with 5:59 left in the first period.

Lowery's third field goal put the Chiefs in the lead at 9-7 with 6:52 left in the first half, but Vann McElroy recovered a Chiefs' fumble on the Kansas City 30 and, moments later, Todd Christensen made a circus catch in the end zone of a three-yard pass from Plunkett for a 14-9 Raider lead.

Later, with the outcome no longer in doubt, Jessie Hester caught a two-yard scoring pass from Plunkett with 6:52 left. The extra point attempt failed.

The Chiefs, shut out of the playoffs since 1971, drew a crowd of 72,680 to Arrowhead Stadium for only their second appearance on prime-time television since 1977.

An unidentified fan covers his face in embarrassment while watching the Texas Rangers lose another game. This particular loss was dealt last week by the visiting Chicago White Sox. Ranger fans did not have to witness last night's 5-3 loss, however, since it came in Anaheim, California at the hands of the California Angels. For details of this game and all the action in the American League last night, see AL Roundup at right.

Guidry wins 19th game

Hassey's 3-run HR beats Blue Jays

Associated Press

NEW YORK - Ron Hassey blasted a three-run homer with two outs in the seventh inning, capping a dramatic six-run outburst that rallied Ron Guidry and the New York Yankees over the Toronto Blue Jays 7-5 last night.

The victory, in the opener of a four-game series, pulled the Yankees within one and-a-half games of American League East-leading Toronto. New York snapped the Blue Jays' four-game winning streak.

Guidry, 19-5, who leads the AL in victories, went eight innings before giving way to Brian Fisher, who pitched the ninth for his 12th save.

Gary Lavelle, 4-7, took the loss.

Angels 5, Rangers 3

ANAHEIM, Cal. - Ruppert Jones tripled in the winning run in the seventh inning last night as the California Angels beat the Texas Rangers 5-3 to move within two games of idle Kansas City in the American League West.

Jones added a double in the first inning, bringing home Rod Carew, to give the Angels a brief 1-0 lead.

Bobby Grich made it 2-0 by leading off the second with his 10th homer and his 142nd as an Angel, breaking his tie with Don Baylor as the club's all-time leader.

Reliever Dwayne Henry, 1-2, took the loss.

Mike Witt's fifth straight victory improved him to 13-7. Donnie Moore worked the final two innings for his 26th save of the year, breaking a record set by Dave LaRoche seven years ago.

White Sox 4, Twins 2

CHICAGO - Greg Walker tripled in two runs last night to break up a 1-1 tie and lead the Chicago White Sox to a 4-2 victory over the Minnesota Twins.

Gene Nelson, 9-9, struck out six and walked one, scattering seven hits, as Chicago won the seventh of its last eight games. Bob James came in for the White Sox with two outs left in the ninth for his 26th save of the year.

Mike Smithson, 14-12, took the loss.

Orioles 3, Red Sox 1

BOSTON - Rookie Ken Dixon threw a six-hitter over 7 2-3 innings last night and Floyd Rayford hit a two-run homer in the third as the Baltimore Orioles beat the Boston Red Sox 3-1.

The homer, Rayford's 12th of the year, followed John Shelby's infield single off loser Al Nipper, 8-11, and helped the Orioles salvage a split of their four-game series in Boston.

Rich Gedman hit a solo homer into the right-field stands in the second inning off Dixon, 7-3.

Niekro goes for 300th win tonight

Associated Press

NEW YORK - Phil Niekro's actions never give a hint of what is ahead. By his easy-going ways, he could be preparing to go fishing, go hunting or win his 300th major league game.

"If I ever ran like the other pitchers did, I'd fall down," said Niekro, a 46-year-old knuckleball specialist for the New York Yankees who tries for victory No. 300 tonight against the Toronto Blue Jays.

"I guess I've been lucky because I let my body tell me what to do, not the clock," he said. "When I'm hungry, I eat, regardless of what time it is. When I'm sleepy, I sleep, regardless of what time it is. Who's to say you have to do everything on a time schedule?"

It's an unorthodox lifestyle, but one that certainly has worked for Niekro, now 15-9, with victories in each of his last five starts.

Niekro hit the majors for good with Atlanta in 1967. He won 23 games in 1969, 20 in '74 and 21 in '79. He threw a no-hitter for the Braves against San Diego in 1973 and was named to the All-Star pitching staff four times.

His 298th victory, against the Seattle Mariners on Sept. 3, was an eight-inning stint that took a lot out of him. He wondered up until game time if he would be able to make his next scheduled start, last Sunday against Oakland.

He made it, going six innings for a 9-6 victory, No. 299 for his career.

If Niekro wins Friday night, he would be the 18th pitcher in major league history to win 300 games and the second to record No. 300 at Yankee Stadium this season. Tom Seaver of the Chicago White Sox reached the milestone with a victory over the Yankees on Aug. 4.

Junior Corinne DiGiacomo of the Notre Dame field hockey team, shown here going for the goal in a game last season, figures to play a key role in the team's quest to improve on last year's most successful record. The Irish will begin the task this afternoon against highly-ranked Ball State at Cartier Field. Terry Lynch previews the contest in his story on Page 20.

pleased with the leadership role she has just naturally taken over."

Fellow veteran and outside hitter for the Belles is sophomore standout Kara Tekulve.

"She's a good athlete," says Lambert of the Indianapolis native. "She's strong and fairly quick and will be doing some good things for us."

Sophomore Colleen Mergens, meanwhile, is in her first year with the team, though Lambert sees her playing a key role as the Belles' setter.

"She has beautiful hands and did a really good job for us on Tuesday night," comments Lambert. "She has a good sense and a real feel for the court."

Classmate Moira Cronan of Overland Park, Kans., the only player not from Indiana or Illinois, is a returning outside hitter and may also see some setting duties.

Freshmen Tami Suth of Mishawaka Marian High School, and teammate Margaret Feldman of Naperville, Ill., both came from high school championship teams and should see a lot of action this season.

"They looked really good (against Lake Michigan)," says Lambert, who helped coach Suth at Marian last season. "Their defense and serving just need some work."

Karen Busk and Kathy Koller, both recent graduates of South Bend's Trinity High School, along with fellow freshman Raulinda "Rauli" Lopez, lack experience but are all working hard and improving according to Lambert.

Busk is an outside hitter, while Koller and Lopez are the team's back row specialists.

Although Lambert would have liked to have had more players try out for the team this year, she sees the youth of the squad as an advantage.

"I can train them to play the way I want," says Lambert. "We've started out well, and now we're going to build. I'm sure we'll have 12 players by next year."

The coach cited academic and work commitments among several reasons why ten of last year's players decided not to return to the team. Although these could have been serious losses to the squad, Lambert feels the team has been able to overcome.

"It doesn't seem to be bothering us," says Lambert. "Everyone is getting a super team feeling and we can accomplish a lot out of that."

Since Lambert is a first year coach in this area, she is not familiar with the competition the Belles will be facing this season. Nevertheless, she has no doubts about the team's goals for the season.

"I want to win the ones we should win and qualify for districts," adds Lambert. "That is our goal at this point."

The Belles, who were runners up in NAIA District 21 last year, will open up tonight's action against Augustana College of Rock Island, Ill.. There will be an array of NCAA Division III and NAIA teams present in the pool play which will end in championship and consolation brackets.

Saint Mary's is guaranteed to play in five matches over the two-day tourney, and hopes to get the 1985 season off to a successful start.

Olympic International Games to be held at Notre Dame. A date for next year's tournament already is being planned, and indications are that the fundraiser will be held in mid-August the second time around.

This year's tournament featured a bevy of sports celebrities, such names as Paul Hornung, Joe Garagiola, Keith Jackson, Rollie Massimino, Mike Eruzione, Hank Stram, Austin Carr and Bill Laimbeer. At this time, commitments for next year's tournament have been received from nearly every one of this year's participants. Larry Bird and Fuzzy Zoeller have since indicated their desire to be a part of next year's event, as well.

As far as the tournament itself went, Gail Goodrich's foursome went away the winner, while Massimino won himself a trip to Las Vegas by capturing closest-to-hole honors.

ND freshman volleyball standout

Shea is just what Lambert needed

By CHUCK EHRMAN
Sports Writer

There is nothing like a little dose of height to help out a volleyball team. And as far as Notre Dame volleyball coach Art Lambert is concerned, six-foot freshman Maureen Shea is just what the docter ordered.

Although it has been a baptism under fire so far for the first year player, Shea has stood tall in the face of pressure, and played well. She has started both games this season, playing full-time against both Kentucky and Ohio State. In those two games she raised a few eyebrows and captured a bit of the spotlight.

There was little fanfare, however, when Shea reported to school early this August to get a head start on the big time college volleyball season. The applause will surely be heard soon enough, though, as her career continues on the upswing.

"It's an experience playing as a freshman," says Shea. "It's a big load to carry, and it's nothing like high school. The game's played at a faster pace on the college level."

But Shea has responded well to the pressure of starting at such an early stage of the season. In fact, her poise and play has been a catalyst for the rest of the squad. As a middle blocker she plays a key spiking and blocking role, so she's always lurking about somewhere near when the ball's in play.

The consistency Shea has at the position is what made her a valuable prospect to several interested colleges. In the end, however, the Irish triumphed in the recruiting war. Shea turned down bids from Kentucky, Miami(Oh.), the University of Cincinnati, and Xavier to play under the Golden Dome.

Shea was a big-play type player in high school, earning all-everything honors at St. Henry High School. Among these awards were two Player of the Year honors from the Northern Kentucky Athletic Conference, of which her team was a member. To accompany these awards, she was also voted her team's Most Valuable Player during both her junior and senior campaigns.

Those awards are past history now, however, and Shea has had to start over in the college game.

One of the keys to her smooth transition into this college game, though, has been the comfortable atmosphere among the members of the team.

"We all get along great most of the time," Shea says. "We work together and always help each other out, and that has helped."

In the two games that the Irish have played so far this season, Shea has helped to size things up at the net, and she is happy with her play so far.

"I've done a lot better than I thought I would," says Shea. "I didn't think I'd be starting when I came here. But I've surprised myself."

Her continued fine play will be crucial to the team's success this season. Hopefully she will be able to turn in a good number of blockbuster performances as the Irish work through a tough schedule.

For now, Shea has gotten her feet wet, and in the process has made a big splash early in her debut season of college volleyball.

Collegiate Driving Championships open to ND students this weekend

By BILL IRVIN
Sports Writer

For those who are not content to merely watch sports this weekend, the fourth Annual National Collegiate Driving Championships will provide an opportunity for competition. The event, sponsored locally by the Student Activities Board, will be held at the Red West parking lot (south of the stadium) Saturday through Sunday. All full-time undergraduates with valid driver's licenses are eligible to enter.

The winner of the local two-day event, which has no entry fee, wins round-trip air transportation and accomodations to participate in the Grand Finals in Daytona Beach, Florida. There, semifinalists will compete for more than $125,000 in prizes, including scholarships and the use of a 1986 Dodge Daytona Turbo Z sports car. In addition, Ocean Pacific Sportswear will be awarding hourly prizes to program participants and spectators.

The NCDC is sanctioned by the Sports Car Club of America (SCCA) in cooperation with the Dodge Division of Chrysler Corporation. Other sponsors include Goodyear Tire and Rubber, Unocal, USA Today and Ocean Pacific. Both the National Safety Council and the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration are involved in the program to promote safe driving techniques, the use of safety restraints, and the hazards of drinking and driving.

The rally course will consist of a serpentine configuration designated by traffic cones and barricades. Sophisticated timing equipment will be employed to measure each participant's time, with one second added to times for each cone moved from its position.

In 1984-85, more than 40,000 students participated in the program. The 1985-86 competition is expected to reach twice that number due to an expanded schedule.

Reaction to the competition among the Notre Dame students seems to be favorable. Junior engineering major and auto enthusiast Scott Patria, who paticipated in last year's program, praised the event.

"It's a fine program," says Patria. "I really enjoyed it. The competition was pretty stiff. I only wish Chevy and Ford would start similar programs."

When asked about the practical applications to be derived from participation, Patria underscored the experience drivers receive in operating under tricky driving conditions.

"The program provides good emergency maneuvering experience," continues Patria. "It succeeds in testing your reflexes, and in determining how well you communicate with the car under a high-performance driving situation."

Freshman defender John Guignon of the Notre Dame soccer team attempts to keep the ball from Wisconsin-Milwaukee's Jimmy Banks in last Saturday's game. Guignon and his teammates won their first game of the season Wednesday, a 3-1 victory over DePaul. Tonight the Irish will try to make it two in a row as they host Wisconsin-Madison at Cartier Field. Greg Stohr describes all the details at right.

Soccer team hopes to continue its winning ways tonight on home turf

By GREG STOHR
Sports Writer

After beginning a seemingly promising season with three consecutive losses, the Notre Dame men's soccer team finally found victory Wednesday by thrashing winless DePaul, 3-1.

The luckless Irish started the year with losses to two nationally-ranked schools, Virginia and George Mason, and then suffered an overtime defeat last Saturday at the hands of an outmanned Wisconsin-Milwaukee squad.

Goals by Mark Bidinger, Bruce McCourt and Tom Gerlacher, however, helped the Irish break the losing streak by propelling their team over the Blue Demons.

"I'm a firm believer that all things balance out," says Head Coach Dennis Grace, "and that things will begin to shift our way."

Things did indeed go Notre Dame's way Wednesday as the Irish dominated the Demons, outshooting them, 19-11, to raise their record to 1-3.

Notre Dame hopes to improve to 2-3 tonight when undefeated Wisconsin-Madison faces the Irish at Cartier Field. Game-time is 7:30.

Bidinger opened the scoring early in the first half against DePaul when he picked up the rebound off a Dave Miles bicycle-kick shot and found the back of the net for a 1-0 Irish lead.

The score remained 1-0 until the second half when McCourt scored his first point in an Irish uniform. McCourt's header of a Kurt Roemer crossing pass sailed just between the right goal post and the diving DePaul goalkeeper.

"It was really a nice header," said Grace. "'Tiger' (McCourt) challenged his man really well."

Tom Gerlacher added a final insurance tally, his second score of the year, in a most unusual fashion. Gerlacher's throw-in from deep in Demon territory deflected off the opposing keeper's outstretched hands and into the goal.

"I couldn't believe it because it shouldn't have happened," said the freshman. "It was a mistake by the goalie."

DePaul foiled Irish keeper Hugh Breslin's bid for his first shutout with a goal late in the second half.

"It's a shame he didn't get the shutout," Grace remarked. "Hugh's been playing extremely well. I feel he's had four good games."

The Irish will need to take advantage of every opportunity tonight against Madison.

SMC volleyball team opens season tonight

By KELLY PORTOLESE
Saint Mary's Sports Editor

When the Saint Mary's volleyball team travels to Elmhurst College in Illinois tonight for its season opener, there will not be too many familiar faces from last year's 18-7 team.

With first-year coach Mary Jo Lambert at the helm, and only three returning lettermen, the Belles' 1985 squad consists of five freshmen, three sophomores and one junior.

On Tuesday night, in order to gain a little experience, the Belles played host to an always-tough Lake Michigan College team in a practice game. Although the Belles dropped four games, Lambert was pleased that the team did stay close most of the way.

"I was pleased with the way the team played," said Lambert. "Our transitions were good for this early in the season. We do have some work to do on defense, serving, and serve receiving, though."

Lambert has been especially happy with the progress and leadership skills displayed thus far by Mary Reidy, the lone junior on the team, and last year's most improved player.

"Mary is a great hitter and jumper," says Lambert of the middle hitter. "She was never trained in the back row but is really going to the floor much easier now. I'm also very

Field hockey team has experience and depth for another solid season

By TERRY LYNCH
Sports Writer

As Notre Dame's field hockey team takes the field today against a powerful and nationally-ranked Ball State team, hopes are high that the Irish can improve on 1984's 15-5-2 record - the best ever in the history of the program.

With 12 returning monogram winners on this year's squad, including junior standout Corinne DiGiacomo and senior Melissa Sommer to lead the offense, the Irish are free of many depth problems and are well-experienced.

"The team played an outstanding game against Valparaiso," says second-year head coach Jill Lindenfeld, in reference to last Tuesday's 9-0 scrimmage victory. "Considering the field, the team scored good goals and passed well."

The Irish, aside from the usual fall-practice sessions, endured an extensive summer training program set up by Lindenfeld to condition her players and to work on some fundamental skills.

"I was pleased with the way the program came out," says Lindenfeld. "The full use of the Astro-Turf really helped our game."

The Irish are extremely optimistic about the season, and today's game against Ball State, ranked 20th in the preseason poll, is no exception.

"They may have the talent, but we have the heart to win," says co-captain Christina Weinmann, who was also the victim of a bizzare shooting incident while practicing earlier this year.

Weinmann's counterpart, senior co-captain Mary Rose Rodgers, echoes those sentiments.

"Ball State will be our toughest game of the season," says Rodgers, "but we have the talent to win. The offense is the best I've ever seen playing at Notre Dame. It's really looking sharp."

Lindenfeld feels that an important part of the offense, the passing, has been excellent during this fall's practice sessions. She has been particularly pleased also with the play of junior forward Beth Bisignano, and by the play of two freshmen, halfback Caroline Brezny and link Christine Sweeney.

At the link position, the Irish will feature the solid play of senior Regina Degnan, while defensively the co-captain tandem of Rodgers and Weinmann will anchor the defense. Between the pipes this year for the team will be senior goaltender Patti Gallagher, who recorded 164 saves in 1984.

The only concerns for Lindenfeld at this point in the season include the loss of Weinmann, the team's best corner-shooter, and the addition of Central Michigan and Northern Illinois to the schedule, two very tough teams. Although Weinmann is back playing on the team, her recovery from the gunshot wound took away valuable practice time.

"Christine is not in top form right now," says Lindenfeld. "She has only practiced one day."

The Irish will take an East Coast swing during the fall break, which Lindenfeld hopes will improve the

Behind the glamour, Pinkett remains a student

Jeff Blumb
Sports Editor

Heisman Trophy candidate. All-America candidate. And Notre Dame student. Allen Pinkett is all of them.

Behind the glamour of Notre Dame's star tailback is a Notre Dame student, no different than any other in most respects. He has many of the same worries other students have — classes, tests and papers. In fact, because of the way he carries himself both on and off the field, some have called him the ideal student-athlete.

Allen Pinkett takes his studies seriously, make no mistake about it. He realizes his football career could end tomorrow, and is ready for the day when the football field will be only a memory. Pinkett is here for his education first, everything else second.

"The biggest thing I'll leave here with is my diploma — no doubt about it," he says. "That piece of paper can open a lot of doors. I take my education very seriously."

At the same time, Pinkett knows he would never be where he is today if it weren't for the support and guidance he has received from his parents over the years. The youngest of three children, Pinkett comes from a very close-knit family.

That support holds today as the Pinketts of Sterling, Va., make the 22-hour round-trip drive to see their son play football each week Notre Dame is at home. If the Irish are on the road and the game is within driving distance, you can expect to see Mr. and Mrs. Pinkett there as well.

"I'm very lucky in that my parents have always been behind me. It has always been that way," Pinkett says. "You could say that one of the big reasons I play football now is to give them satisfaction."

Pinkett's down-to-earth nature is a compliment to his parents in terms of how well they raised him. He shatters any images one might have of the pompous, dumb jock. Sincerity runs through Pinkett's veins.

Team goals come before individual goals. Not that Pinkett doesn't want to win the Heisman or be an All-American, only that he wants to win the national championship more. His totally unselfish attitude is no doubt one reason that teammates elected him a captain for this season.

Ask Pinkett what his biggest accomplishment has been at Notre Dame on the playing field, and he pauses a moment to run through the mountain of memories already gathered. "I guess it was," he starts to say, his sentence stopping abruptly. "No, we lost that one," he corrects himself. "Then, I guess it would have to be. . ."

You see, if Notre Dame doesn't win the game, whatever Allen Pinkett might have accomplished in it means nothing to him. He exudes unselfishness when the choice is between individual and team goals. Within his reach is the most precious of individual honors in college football — the Heisman — yet, that takes a back seat to anything related to the team.

"The Heisman stands second on my list of goals. I would much rather have a national championship ring on my finger," says Pinkett. "I would choose the ring any day of the week. My shot at the Heisman is a legitimate one, but not an outright one. In fact, I don't think I would win it if we didn't do well as a team."

The senior back feels he is fully ready to help Notre Dame toward its goal of a national championship, saying he has never been in better health in his time here. At the same time, he swears the Irish have never been better equipped going into a season, either.

No matter the outcome of this season, though, Pinkett will leave Notre Dame next May with diploma in hand, equipped to handle the outside world. And, while pro football may be on the near horizon, Pinkett realizes that one day he will have to face that world.

A marketing major, he says he would like to eventually get into the advertising segment of a corporation. In fact, over the course of the past four summers, Pinkett gained some experience in the business world, working as a lobbyist for the government relations division of the Motorola Corporation in Washington, D.C. His job involved going to hearings on Capitol Hill and then reporting the proceedings back to his boss.

There's one thing Pinkett isn't likely to have to lobby for should both he and the Irish do well enough this season. That, of course, is the Heisman.
