Hijackers give up pirated cruise ship; 1 American killed

Associated Press

PORT SAID, Egypt - Palestinian hijackers of an Italian cruise ship with as many as 511 people aboard surrendered yesterday, but the captain of the ship said the terrorists killed one American passenger.

One passenger "was thrown into the sea apparently by the hijackers and died," Prime Minister Bettino Craxi told a news conference at his office in Palazzo Chigi in downtown Rome.

Craxi identified the victim as Leon Klinghoffer. In Cairo, passengers who got off the ship said Klinghoffer, 69, was from New York City and that he was accompanied by his wife Marilyn. They said Klinghoffer suffered a stroke earlier this year and was in a wheelchair on the ship.

Craxi said the ship's captain told him by radio the hijackers killed Leon Klinghoffer, 69, of New York City, and threw his body overboard.

Capt. Gerardo De Rosa said in a radio conversation with state-run Italian television last night that a terrorist who had blood on his clothing admitted to the murder. The captain spoke from the liner Achille Lauro, which was about 15 miles outside Port Said, preparing to sail for Ashdod, Israel, at 2 a.m. (8 p.m. EDT) on the voyage of 8 to 12 hours.

When asked whether he could confirm the killing Craxi had reported De Rosa said, "Unfortunately, yes. How it happened is difficult to explain in a few words. However, they told me, 'Now we have killed one.'

The captain said he was told of the murder at 3:05 p.m. Tuesday, the day after the pirates took control, while the Achille Lauro was outside the Syrian port of Tartus on Tuesday.

"They made me write it down and told me to call Tartus," De Rosa said.

The U.S. State Department late yesterday confirmed Klinghoffer was killed, according to a spokesman for his family.

The Italian Foreign Ministry said the terrorists surrendered to representatives of the PLO. They were taken to the Port Said Naval Base and were still there seven hours later, at midnight local time or 6 p.m. EDT.

"The hijackers, who number four, will leave Egypt," Foreign Minister Esmat Abdel-Meguid said. "There were no demands." He did not say where the hijackers would go.

A top Egyptian official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said three hours after the surrender that the travel arrangements of the pirates were in military hands "and they may have left by now." He said the PLO negotiator was Hani el-Hassan, a political adviser to chairman Yasser Arafat. El-Hassan was visiting Egypt when the ship was hijacked Monday night off Port Said.

The PLO denied involvement in the hijacking and Arafat said in an interview yesterday with French television from Tunis, Tunisia, that the pirates were not PLO members.

"They don't belong to the PLO. It is clear and obvious. . . . We have no information about them. But the moment the Egyptian authorities agree to hand over these persons to us we will investigate" and, if circumstances warrant, "we will punish them."

The pirates claimed to be from the Palestine Liberation Front, one of eight guerrilla groups in the PLO that split into three factions during a 1983 revolt against Arafat.

De Rosa said the four pirates took over the ship at about 1:30 p.m. Monday, firing Soviet-made sub-machine guns and brandishing hand grenades and other explosives. He said they herded the passengers onto a lower deck.

One terrorist came onto the bridge, "first fired some shots into the ground screaming in Arabic and then told me to head to Tartus."

"I was continually guarded on the bridge with submachine gun," he said. "They hoped to find asylum in Syria," he said, and when the Syrians

South Africans have prayer rally; wary blacks stay home from work

Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa - Tens of thousands of South Africans of all races attended prayer services yesterday to "repent for the national sin of apartheid," while blacks around the country stayed home from work in droves.

Police headquarters in Pretoria said mobs killed two blacks early yesterday in black townships outside Port Elizabeth in eastern Cape Province. Both were victims of increasing black mob violence against people who may be seen as collaborators with the white government. Tires were placed around their necks and they were doused with gasoline and burned to death.

After telephoned bomb threats, Anglican Bishop Desmond Tutu and about 100 other worshippers abandoned their prayers briefly in a downtown Johannesburg cathedral, one of hundreds of church services conducted across the country.

Witnesses reported black youths attacked some workers as they returned home to black townships, although organizers said they were not seeking a general strike.

Townships that have been caught up in 14 months of bloody rioting that left more than 750 people dead appeared relatively calm during the nationwide display of support for peaceful change in the national system of institutionalized racial separation.

The "prayerway" was arranged last month by about 400 church leaders from 48 Christian denominations who launched a National Initiative for Reconciliation. Tutu, the 1984 Nobel Peace Prize winner, initially asked the group to endorse a week-long boycott of work to press for race reforms, but the church group decided instead on a single day of prayer.

The church group called on people to join services and "accept their complicity in the apartheid system" and "to repent for the national sin of apartheid" in a voluntary show of solidarity with victims of race segregation.

Despite the absence of a formal work boycott, many thousands of blacks stayed home rather than risk confrontations with roving gangs that sometimes confront workers returning home on "stayaway" days.

In Soweto, the huge black township outside Johannesburg, army troops and police fired tear gas to break up crowds of youths, witnesses said, and about 30 youths were arrested for allegedly setting up burning barricades on a main road and stoing cars and buses.

A crowd of about 70 youths armed with rubber whips and stones chased commuters returning home from work. One middle-aged man was cut by a stroke from a whip, a reporter who witnessed the incident said. An army patrol dispersed the youths.

Possible Senate budget surplus remains unusable

By MARK DILLON
Senior Staff Reporter

The Student Senate will wait until February to decide what to do with an approximately $11,000 budget surplus because they do not know how much of the money they will receive, according to Student Body Treasurer Eric Parzianello.

The Notre Dame administration estimated two weeks ago that the senate would receive approximately $10,000 in extra revenue from student activity fees based on the projected number of students expected to attend Notre Dame.

"Each year the senate budgets for $245,000 based on a conservative estimate of 7,000 students enrolling multiplied by the $35 student activity fee. This year $256,000 was placed in our account," Parzianello said.

"This year 7331 students were enrolled at Notre Dame," said Parzianello, explaining the extra money. "The 331-student difference, multiplied by the activity fee, created an approximately $11,000 surplus. This is the money the senate began to debate."

The senate last week began debate on how to allocate this additional money in the budget. Joni Neal, director of student activities, said at that time that the $10,000 did not exist.

But Student Body President Bill Healy disagreed with Neal. "The money does exist," he said.

"However, the figure quoted may be wrong."

Neal could not be reached for comment.

Although the $11,000 is in the senate account it cannot yet be allocated, Parzianello said. "The money must remain untouched until the deadline for student withdrawal has passed sometime in mid-February," he said.

According to Parzianello, each student withdrawing before the February deadline is refunded the $35 activity fee. This refund will come out of the $11,000 surplus.

Frederick Baumer of the University's General Accounting office said he was sure that one-half of the 331 extra students would withdraw from Notre Dame.

Therefore, instead of the $11,000 surplus being added to the senate budget, approximately $5,000 to $6,000 will be added, Baumer said.

The senate budget committee, chaired by Parzianello, was given permission to allocate the $6,000 budget surplus with the approval of Vice President for Student Affairs Father David Tyson.

Parzianello said the senate budget committee has "decided to wait until after the February withdrawal deadline to allocate the money. It makes good business sense to wait until we know exactly how much we will be receiving."

Healy said he was not upset by the confusion or by the time spent debating money that will not be received until February.

"Unfortunately it's not a new situation. It happens every year. Because of the turnover rate of student government, we're all new so we weren't sure of the policy," Healy said.

He added that the senate budget debate of the money was worthwhile. "I think it was fruitful debate," Healy said. "We talked about where the money will go and how it will be allocated."

Although Healy said the ultimate decision rests with the senate budget committee, he said he hopes to be able to give more money to each of the classes through joint events with student government.

Students must utilize every forum to make their opinions known

In the past few months I have spent as the assistant Viewpoint editor here at The Observer, it has been my job to read virtually every letter and column that has appeared on the Viewpoint pages. Although these opinions have been written by a large cross section of individuals on campus, many of the letters and columns reflect the same theme: frustration with the way the administration forces us to live at this University.

In just the past few weeks, letters filled with complaints and observations about how the administration treats us like children and how that affects our lives have poured into the office. The main issue now is the Dillon tailgater; a few weeks earlier it was the memorial fountain; and, I am sure, a few weeks from now another pressing event will take precedence.

The letters and columns have been fantastic. They have shown that a greater number of students now, more than ever, care about what is happening around them. General consensus has it that most have been well-written, forceful and have stated a valid point. But what ever comes of this?

It is so frustrating day after day to see a myriad of well-intentioned people take the time to show concern for themselves and their community by expressing an opinion publicly only to have nothing come of their action. Students are making their opinions known, but no one ever listens.

It's time for someone to begin to listen to the students of this University.

It is sad to say that students cannot point to anyone who can take their opinions directly to the administration. We, as students, have no one to represent us. Student government seems to have lost focus of the reason why they were elected. I do not know whether it is by choice or by some pressure from the administration they choose to spend their time squabbling over petty issues that concern only student government itself, such as their budget and elections. Frankly, I don't care. In my mind, they now hold the status of a social events planning commission.

Until student government is comprised of a majority of students who want to represent this student body not because it will look good on a resume or because it gives them a feeling of power, we will go on being unheard. The job is ours. We, as the entire student body, can make a difference. If we cry out as a group to be heard and keep demanding some control over our lives, instead of getting tired and frustrated after a couple of weeks, someone will have to listen.

Students are rightfully angry when they hear of students at other universities who have input into the policy that controls their lives. It is ludicrous to even hope to dictate policy at this University, but we should at least demand to know why policy is implemented and be able to offer our point of view. We should not be treated capriciously.

Maybe we are partly at fault because we do not listen when the administration tries to explain itself. We must compromise. They have to cooperate also, however. There can be no more ivory-tower decisions. It is atrocious that the administration virtually ignores the input of its students.

More than enough times I have heard people telling others that if they do not like Notre Dame, they can "go somewhere else." That statement serves no constructive purpose. Most of the people here never would leave simply because the students make this place fantastic. But we have an already weak social life further limited by a plethora of rules and regulations, and the administration is almost tyrannical in disciplining us no matter where we go. Is it so wrong to feel frustrated about these situations?

Of course it isn't. It is wrong, however, if we live with the frustration and do nothing about it. We can do something by writing letters not only to The Observer, but to administrators, faculty members and, if the situation calls for it, to alumni and parents.

We can be heard.

We can influence the image of this school, and the Dillon incident proves that the administration knows that. Let's use that influence so that the next time we say we love Notre Dame, we don't have to mean just the people.

Plans for SMC florist continue to take root

By HELENE GOUDEAU
News Staff

Things may be coming up roses at Saint Mary's if plans by faculty and students to re-open a florist on campus are successful.

The florist shop was closed this year when the shop's owner and College officials decided the shop was not in the best interest of Saint Mary's, according to Saint Mary's Controller and Business Manager Jason Lindower.

Director of Student Activities Mary Anne O'Donnell, Assistant Professor of business and economics William Shannon and several of his students would like to see the business re-opened. They are planning a project to determine the College's needs in this area but have not disclosed a tentative date for the re-opening yet.

In order for a florist to operate successfully at Saint Mary's, "There must be significant volume from the formal dances," Lindower said. Because the students' desire to buy flowers varied with the number of dances, the business became unstable, forcing its termination, Lindower said.

He added that the boutonnieres purchased by Saint Mary's students for dances were less expensive than the corsages purchased at Notre Dame's Irish Garden and did not generate enough revenue to justify the shop's continuation.

During the SYR and formal season, Lindower said, the shop's owner often lacked the stock necessary to meet the students' needs. Lindower said the College thought the only alternative was to close the flower shop.

Center for Spirituality at SMC will represent the roles of women

By MARY FRIEL
News Staff

The Center for Spirituality at Saint Mary's College hopes some day to become synonymous with the words "women's leadership in the Church," according to Doris Donnelly, co-director of the center.

Women's leadership has become a hot topic in Church circles, Donnelly said, citing the American bishops promise to attend to this issue and the Pope's claims that he wants women to be active and involved church members in ways fitting the 80s and beyond.

The Center for Spirituality is taking steps to create a place where women can discuss topics of concern for women and men in the contemporary church, Donnelly said.

"What's missing from the scene," she said, "is a place where professional Catholic women can get together and brainstorm, listen, plan. Because Saint Mary's never lost its identity as a Catholic women's institution, it's the ideal place for such an ongoing forum."

During the spring semester, the center is offering a "Book of the Week Symposium" to be held on Wednesdays in Stapleton Lounge. The symposium will revolve around the theme of "Spiritual Roots." Twelve presenters have been invited to choose a current or classic book written on or about a woman who influenced their spiritual journeys and to lead a discussion on their selection.

Bishop John D'Arcy of the Fort Wayne-South Bend diocese is the guest on April 9. Delores Leckey, Executive Secretary of the USCC Bishop's Committee on the Laity, will be present on March 19.

On April 17, Sister Sandra Schneiders, professor of theology at the Jesuit theologate in Berkeley, Calif., will deliver the second Madeleva lecture. Her topic will be "Women and the Word: Gender in the New Testament and the Spirituality of Women."

Donnelly received her degrees from Manhattanville College, the University of Southern California and Claremont Graduate School. She taught at Princeton Theological Seminary and St. John's University before coming to Saint Mary's.

Senate pushes for balanced budget

Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The Senate, voicing bipartisan anxiety over an accumulated federal debt nearing $2 trillion, voted 75-24 yesterday to force the government to balance its annual budget in six years.

The Senate then approved and sent to the House a measure to temporarily extend the government's borrowing power by $5 billion, a stopgap measure designed to keep the government's checks from bouncing for another week.

House action on the stopgap measure was expected by day's end. The balanced-budget debate had stalled action in the Republican-led chamber for days on a debt limit extension, exhausting the Treasury's supply of cash.

Encouraged by the developments, the Treasury Department announced it would go ahead with an emergency auction to borrow $5 billion to keep the government afloat.

The auction will provide the government with just enough money to get by for the next few days.

Approval of the amendment, at the end of a six-day deadlock, cleared the way for action on a separate, short-term hike in the national debt. The interim hike, which also must be approved by the House, would allow Congress to leave for its Columbus Day recess this weekend without threat of the government defaulting on its obligations.

White House spokesman Larry Speakes said, "We are of course pleased with the margin; we applaud the vote as a step in the right direction."

"We look forward to final Senate action . . . including a permanent debt extension," Speakes said, adding that the administration hoped for House action "as early as possible" to get the measure to a House-Senate conference committee.

Government spending would have to match receipts beginning in fiscal year 1991 and remain balanced from then on. The deficit for fiscal 1985, which ended Sept. 30, was about $210 billion.

Massachusetts raps public smoking

Associated Press

BOSTON - After a lengthy debate over public health and personal liberty, the Massachusetts House gave initial approval Tuesday to a far-reaching series of bans and restrictions on smoking in public.

As the mingled smoke from cigarettes, pipes and cigars floated up to the domed ceiling of the House chamber, members endorsed the proposal on a roll call of 109-49, including many smokers in the majority. It requires another House vote before going to the Senate.

"What we are trying to do in this bill is create a presumption of non-smoking in public places," Rep. Cile Hicks, one of the lead sponsors, said during debate.

If enacted, the bill would create an outright, statewide ban on all tobacco smoking, including cigarettes, cigars and pipes, in elevators, food stores, mass transit, courtrooms and all government meetings.

It would also ban smoking, except in designated areas, in courthouses, schools and colleges, museums, libraries, trains, airport terminals, hospital lobbies, bingo parlors and all public buildings, including the Statehouse but not the House chamber.

In addition, the proposal would require special sections for smokers in restaurants with 75 or more seats; smaller restaurants would not be affected.

Other provisions would require the state's colleges and universities to provide no-smoking rooms in dormitories and would create no-smoking sections in all nursing homes.

Owners and managers of buildings would be responsible for posting appropriate signs, and victims of unauthorized smoking could complain in writing to local health officers. An earlier version of the bill included civil fines for violations, but the redraft contained no penalties.

Rep. Roger Goyette put down his cigar and led the opposition to the bans and restrictions.

"A lot of people that smoke, smoke because it's a relaxation and, of course, it's a pleasure to them," Goyette said.

Blizzard dumps disaster on West

Associated Press

A storm hurled as much as two feet of snow across nine states with peak winds of 81 mph, closing schools and making highways treacherous Tuesday. But for North Dakota grain farmers it was just another bad day in a miserable month.

"It's the same rainy, wet story that has been told for the last six weeks," said Dan Dhuyvetter, Burke County agent in Bowbells, N.D. "There is a good 50 percent of the grain crop left unharvested.

"We have a lot of standing grain and the weight of the snow is starting to pull it down to the ground. Even if we do get some good weather from now on, I think we'll still be leaving quite a bit of crop in the fields."

Travelers' advisories were posted in parts of Montana, Wyoming, Colorado and Minnesota as well as in North Dakota, where winds up to 35 mph were blowing the snow into drifts Tuesday afternoon.

The storm, which dropped 25 inches of snow at Shonkin, Mont., and two feet at Mosquito Spring, Idaho, drifted south. Travelers' advisories were posted for northeast Nevada and the Lake Tahoe area. Gale warnings were in effect for the western Great Lakes and snow was falling Tuesday afternoon from the northern plains to the central Rockies.

In northern Utah, where accumulations reached 18 inches, roads were clearing Tuesday. The storm, which had peak wind gusts of 81 mph Monday at Rawlins, Wyo., also dusted parts of South Dakota, Oregon and Idaho with snow.

In Colorado's mountains, skiers were out early at the Berthoud Pass resort to enjoy the fresh snow.

Record low temperatures were reported in 16 cities from Eugene, Ore., to Montana, with Great Falls, Mont., posting a low of 12 degrees. That knocked 6 degrees off the record for the date set in 1966.

Cut Bank, Mont., was the nation's ice box Tuesday at 8 degrees.

In North Dakota, the harvest of spring wheat and durum wheat, already 25 days behind schedule in some areas, was put off again as the storm dumped up to 14 inches of snow in North Dakota.

"If we had a solid week of good weather we could go out and get it finished," said Robert Carver, director of the North Dakota Crop and Livestock Reporting Service in Fargo. "It's hard to believe we can't do that."

Snow accumulations ranged up to 14 inches in Sawyer, N.D., a town of 417 just south of Minot. Rain fell in southeastern North Dakota Tuesday morning.

Hostage's relatives react to killing

Associated Press

NEW YORK - A family celebrating the release yesterday of Americans held hostage aboard a hijacked cruise ship was stunned to hear a report that a relative had died during the ordeal.

Reached at the Manhattan apartment of Leon and Marilyn Klinghoffer, Jerry Arbittier, the couple's son-in-law, said he had not been told his father-in-law had been killed, as Italian Premier Bettino Craxi announced.

"Has this been confirmed? has it been confirmed?" he asked. He declined other comment, saying he wanted to check with the State Department.

A white House official who declined to be identified said the Reagan administration had not confirmed the report but was in touch with the Italian and Egyptian governments.

Only a half-hour earlier, Arbittier's wife, Lisa, told a news conference how relieved she was the hijacking was over.

"When I first heard the news, it was an incredible feeling. I just held my breath and then I screamed, 'Let the party begin,'" said Mrs. Arbittier.

"It feels like a giant anvil has been lifted off our chests," she added.

Klinghoffer had suffered two strokes, was partially paralyzed and had to take medication for high blood pressure, Arbittier had said Tuesday.

Before the report of the death, other relatives expressed relief that the hostages were freed.

"I just want to hug them and kiss them," said Gerry Revzin of Chicago of her sister and brother-in-law, Evelyn and Paul Weltman.

The Weltmans' names had not been on an earlier list of Americans believed aboard. But Revzin said the State Department contacted one of the Weltmans' sons today to advise that the couple were on the ship and called again later to say they had been freed.

refused entry, "they told me to head towards Libya."

De Rosa had said by radio Tuesday evening that no one on the ship was injured. About a dozen Americans were aboard, and earlier unconfirmed reports had said two were killed.

Asked why the Palestinians surrendered, Craxi replied: "We aimed at weakening and isolating (them), first politically and then in actual fact. Everyone did his part. Syria prevented the docking of the ship in its ports and forced it to find other moorings, which it did not find.

"The Palestine Liberation Organization mobilized, and favored a positive solution. All these actions put the hijackers in a situation of weakness and all the paths were closed except those of surrender."

White House spokesman Larry Speakes said President Reagan had dispatched U.S. Ambassador Nicholas Veliotis from Cairo to Port Said with orders to inspect the vessel to determine whether one or more U.S. citizens had been killed. Speakes said that after waiting several hours for word of the fate of the passengers, Reagan's decision to send his own envoy was announced.

Speakes said the United States "will do everything possible to see that those responsible" for hijacking the vessel are brought to justice, regardless of the arrangements Egypt made.

Of the hijackers, he said, "We do not know where they are."

Congress approves further Afghan aid

Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Congress secretly has approved about $250 million in further covert military aid to rebels fighting the Soviet-backed regime in Afghanistan, Senate sources said yesterday.

One source, who with the others asked not to be identified by name, said the money will be spent to buy large quantities of ammunition, small arms, grenade launchers, and anti-helicopter air defense weapons.

"It will enable them to replenish their stocks," he said. "It's a one-time replenishment. There is nothing being introduced that is brand new or especially esoteric. It's the kind of thing easily available anywhere in the world."

He said he could not confirm reports that the weapons may include the British-made Blowpipe portable missile system, used by Britain during the 1982 Falklands War with Argentina.

The issues of the long Soviet occupation of Afghanistan, and covert aid by several nations to the Afghan resistance, are virtually certain to be raised in the summit meeting in Geneva next month between President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev.

There was some annoyance in Congress over the latest aid request because the Reagan administration asked for the funds late last month, immediately before the end of the 1985 fiscal year, the source said.

And he said there was some concern over the size of the request.

"We're reaching a position where a lot of us think there should be more debate on this program," the source said. "There is a lot of money involved."

Reagan answers USSR on weapon reductions

Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The Reagan administration, in a detailed response to Mikhail Gorbachev's arms control proposal, said Tuesday the Soviets have to drop their insistence on scuttling the U.S. "Star Wars" program for negotiations to succeed.

"It's a precondition that must be dropped," a senior official said of the Soviet effort to stop research, testing and development of anti-missile systems to protect the United States and its allies.

In a White House briefing for reporters, the official said the Soviet proposal was faulty on at least a half-dozen grounds, including a halt to new U.S. trident nuclear submarines, Midgetman intercontinental ballistic missiles and Stealth bombers.

But, he said, "It is a proposal. It is a place to start."

Specifically, he singled out two elements of the proposal the Soviets put on the negotiating table last week in Geneva, Switzerland.

One would establish a ceiling of 1,250 nuclear delivery vehicles - bombers and missiles that carry nuclear warheads. "That would be worthwhile," the official said, since the Soviets' current total is above 2,000. But he said that some details were still incomplete.

The second promising overture, the official said, was the Soviets' "willingness" to set a ceiling of 6,000 nuclear "charges," or warheads and other atomic explosives. "That would be positive," he said.

The official, who demanded anonymity before talking to reporters, said Reagan was setting no time limits on negotiations in order to try to produce an agreement that would make deep cuts in the arsenals of the two powers.

Basically, the Soviets have called for a 50 percent cut in nuclear missiles and warheads, but in ways the Reagan administration says would increase Moscow's ability to launch a "first strike" against the United States.

The White House distributed charts designed to show an overwhelming Soviet advantage in various aspects of the arms race and to support the U.S. argument that in some respects the proposal was unfair.

The U.S. missiles deployed in Western Europe would be counted against the allowable American total of strategic weapons. To get under the ceiling, the administration would have to choose between scaling down U.S.-based intercontinental ballistic missiles or stripping the NATO allies of their American nuclear umbrella, the official said.

Teen-age Soviet defector assumes U.S. citizenship

Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Soviet-born Walter Polovchak, who at age 12 refused to return to his homeland, severed all legal ties with Moscow Tuesday as he took the oath of U.S. citizenship at a Capitol Hill ceremony.

"I know a lot of people take their freedom for granted," Polovchak, now 18, told an audience of about 200 well-wishers.

"I don't and I never will," he continued. "God bless America."

His swearing-in culminated an unusual five-year-long battle to stay in the United States despite his parents' decision to return to the Ukraine in 1980 after a brief taste of American life in Chicago.

At the ceremony, Polovchak directed this message to his parents: "I wish you well and hope someday we can be together again. But it will have to be in the West because as long as I live, I'll never set foot in the Soviet Union."

The ceremony and birthday reception for Polovchak, who turned 18 last week, were sponsored by Liberty Institute, a politically conservative group, along with several other organizations, including the Freedom Federation, a coalition of ethnic groups whose members have fled communist-dominated countries.

Julian Kulas, the young man's attorney, said that while Polovchak still resides in Chicago, he decided to hold oath-taking in Washington for several reasons.

"And we thought it would be very apropos to do it here . . . this being the nation's capital and Washington having been very helpful to us in these five years of Walter's struggle," Kulas remarked.

Kulas also said the groups organizing the celebration had supported Polovchak's refusal to accompany his parents back to the Soviet Ukraine and his subsequent legal wrangle.

"We have had considerable moral support . . . from these organizations during the past few years and they have shared Walter's concern about being able to remain in this country," Kulas said.

Transfers now call Notre Dame campus home

There is a minority on campus with whom I am proud to be associated. It is not related by race, creed, sex, or ethnic group. No, I am speaking of none of these groups; I am talking about the transfers here at Notre Dame.

Joan Wrappe

Talking loud and clear

There are various reasons why transfers feel the need to go here, but the most frequently uttered response I have heard is that Notre Dame is their first and only choice, and they would settle for no less. I know of one transfer who had applied two or three times before he was accepted. He certainly was determined and dedicated to get his goal.

Being a transfer myself, I know how determined you must be. The years spent before entering into the school are much like the ones in high school. Academics are top priority. Next, one must utilize his available time to get involved. This is extremely important because those clubs and activities will help decide whether or not an applicant is worthy of admission. It is tempting, however, to lose sight of the transfer goal if one becomes too involved.

Having obtained my goal, I now perceive certain qualities transfers possess. The determination they had as applicants turns to pride when they become students. I do not think they have more pride than the rest of the community; however, I feel they express it more easily. I know of four transfer girls who sewed "Go Irish!" on their plaid pants for the Michigan game. It was their way of announcing their presence and expressing their joy of being here.

After discussing the topic of transfers here at Notre Dame with some friends, a consensus was reached that transfers on the whole are well-rounded individuals. They do not live in dorms. Rather, they are forced to live off-campus until housing is available. Because of this fact, transfers must take on responsibilities which are usually options. Besides the phone bill, they must be conscious of utility bills, food, and transportation to and from school daily. Transfers do not have the luxury of maid service or laundry service, either. These added responsibilities make the transfers more conscious of their being at Notre Dame and of their purpose in attending the school.

Transfers appear to be a little more open-minded. Most Notre Dame students attended Catholic high schools. Notre Dame is one of the most reputable Catholic universities. It, too, teaches similar morals and beliefs. Transfers have been exposed to different attitudes and beliefs than those stressed here. For instance, many colleges and universities that transfers attended had co-ed dormitories. Because they were exposed to both sexes in a different atmosphere, they are better able to communicate. All of these aspects allow transfers to be more individualized on the campus.

I do not want to mislead the Notre Dame community to believe that I think transfers are better than any other student. I just view them as individuals who offer much to the University, and I am thankful they are widely accepted and appreciated.

The University has become institutionally false

*The whole race is a poet that writes down
The eccentric propositions of its fate
- Wallace Stevens*

These reflections are an attempt to come to terms with the deep separation existing between what I have learned to expect from this University and what it is, between what it preaches and what it actually stands for. Undoubtedly, the religious parochialism of

guest column

Notre Dame exalts its contradictions; hence, issues such as discrimination against women, obscure investment policies, rampant anti-trade-unionism, lack of internal democracy, failure to take students as serious mature subjects and subtle faculty extortion, become especially touchy. I would argue, though, that some of these traits are not particular to Notre Dame but are present in most institutions of higher education throughout the world.

I believe that the cause of faculty and student resentment against the university (in the most general sense of the word, a body of institutions) lies not at being conscious of the above contradictions. After all, some Americans resented military involvement in Vietnam, but they nevertheless actively challenged this foreign policy. Such is the nature of the democratic discourse. Moreover, some members of this community are sincerely committed to find out and improve when possible Notre Dame's record of labor mistreatment and investment policies. This kind of resentment is positive because it springs from a great conflict between different ethical conceptions which ultimately result in a change of the status quo. The resentment I am referring to is a deeper one. It evolves into a cynicism that borders on complete apathy, destructive criticism or even total solipsism. Its root is the feeling that intellectual effort in the University has become institutionally false.

What do I mean by institutionally false? The realization that I am part of an impersonal and amoral machinery whose main objective is to produce ideas to be sold in the commodity market. The University is a factory of research, seminars, publications and intellectual debates that aims at minimizing costs and maximizing output to assure survival. We are all caught in a vicious circle: to produce alumni that will eventually finance the University or to produce research that will increase its reputation. The winner survives and gets the chance to produce more. And then, I feel that the University is actively concerned with power and honor and not with knowledge and truth. That is why my intellectual effort is a fallacy: what am I promoting? What is more virtuous: power and honor, or knowledge and truth? I understand that it is the latter, but I realize that I am in a situation I cannot escape. And I resent it.

If this is so, why do I keep studying? The experience, though institutionally false, is deeply rewarding. In interacting with faculty and other students who share the same concerns and doubts, in this fraternal dialogue, an answer that saves me from utter despair is unveiled. Beyond market considerations, I realize the University's intellectual paraphernal is also a rigorously aesthetic urge to generate bodies of cathartic language, texts, fictions and propositional flora - be it religious, philosophical, artistic, or business and engineering like. I long for that secure feeling that results from creating my own proposition about life: the imagination labors, and I become the local hero of my philosophic system, my novel or poem, my computer program, my life.

In this painful and (why not?) joyful space - as when the tide is low and the sand is wet - in which truth plays hide-and-seek with me, I embrace with love my only alternative: to gesture with precision, idleness and beauty, the precarious objects of my contemplation. Then I feel euphoric to know that the vague terrain of language leaves me so much virgin space between myself and others, that I am able to freely exist within the tensions, ambiguities, boundaries and fallacies of the University: the collective and eccentric proposition of our fate.

Legalize euthanasia so those dying have a choice

Mercy killing. These two words placed together automatically imply the controversy which is aroused when the issue of euthanasia comes up. Can the premeditated ending of human life ever be justified or considered merciful? So many stands exist on this question that it appears unanswerable, and yet it must be addressed. Should the law be allowed to limit a person's right to die with dignity?

Lisa Perez

in perspective

The courts and doctors are consistently discussing the right of critically ill patients to refuse medical treatment, but as of right now the law is against euthanasia. And why is that? People have the right to live life in any way they choose. According to the Constitution, people have the right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. Do people not have the right to death when they can no longer live in bodies that are trapped and riddled with pain and disease? It is not a decision that can be made rashly, and euthanasia should not be considered unless there exists no realistic chance for recovery. Only after serious contemplation with a doctor about the future effects of the illness should a patient consider euthanasia. Life is precious and the taking of it should not be haphazard or without serious contemplation.

There often arises the comparison of euthanasia to the condoning of suicide, but the two are incomparable. Suicide is usually an emotional outcry for help, and once that help is offered, the individual's mental health and attitude can improve. Mercy killing is different. When a person has a totally degenerative disease such as Alzheimer's or inoperable cancer where no cure is forthcoming, they, perhaps, might choose death over their painful lives. And it should be their choice to die with dignity - not the courts and not the doctors. The choice between life and death is too intensely personal to ever be decided by someone else.

That also differentiates the reasoning between abortion and mercy killing. While both are taking a life, they cannot accurately be compared. A doctor cannot ask the unborn child to make the decision between its life and death; with euthanasia, the person making the final decision is the person who will be dying. The final choice with euthanasia remains (or ought to) with the person whose life is directly involved.

There then might lie a solution to the euthanasia issue - it should legally be a choice made by the patient. Mercy killing should never be advocated as the sole solution to illness but it should be permitted if the patient chooses it. A close and careful watch should be kept by the law and the doctors so that euthanasia does not become rampant or haphazard. But these people must not be the deciding force. The lawmakers have no comprehension of the enormous pain and suffering of the critically ill and should not force them to live their lives trapped in a cage of pain. Instead, euthanasia should be legalized so that it can be the choice of those who are critically ill. Dying with dignity should not be a crime.

Notre Dame should divest to help the oppressed

For some time I have watched, with a sense of unease, the growth of a culture of boosterism on the Notre Dame campus. In recent years it has taken on a more visceral quality. At

football games boosterism has a place - the stadium is its natural ambience. When it is institutionalized in other areas of the University, however, its dangers become apparent. It would be worrisome, for example, if we adopted this style to discuss the investment issues at Notre Dame, specifically our holdings in corporations that do business in South Africa.

Boosterism inhibits critical reflection. It is fun in an atmosphere of gamesmanship, but carried into academic or moral discourse it generates delusion, fantasy and a sense of unreality. I cannot count the times I have heard top administrators refer to Notre Dame as the greatest Catholic university in the world - indeed in all of history. Surely, if this is the case, it does not need proclaiming - least of all by Notre Dame officials - and if this is not the case we sound plain silly to ourselves and to outsiders.

The problem, in all likelihood, is a by-product of Roman triumphalism. Having been raised in an atmosphere of Irish-Catholic triumphalism, I pick up the scent very quickly. I am sure that my father, a third order Dominican, had a hard time accepting the idea of salvation for those not of our faith. Then Vatican II came along and proceeded to dismantle the theological underpinnings of triumphalism. Sadly, poor old Vatican II has become unfashionable among many successful North American Catholics. What was a burst of creative, ecumenical energy has given way to reaction and fear of change. With the reassertion of hierarchy over collegiality, triumphalism has made its reappearance.

One totally inappropriate place for this chest-beating celebration of ourselves, is the liturgical setting. On a number of occasions during past weeks we have been told what a fine, caring, super bunch of people we all are, especially when we get together to pray at Mass. It appears that the scriptural passage about the pharisee and the publican (Luke 18: 9-14) has gone missing from Notre Dame Bibles! Then there are those court clerics in our midst who have invented what my wife calls the sacrament of extreme unctuousness.

It is time to take stock and to begin to apply the brakes to this rampant blarney. Other distinguished universities and colleges do not engage in such solipsistic nonsense. I have children who have attended places like Swarthmore, Oberlin and Earlham, so I have had opportunities to read their alumni magazines. The ethos on those campuses is very different. Swarthmore, a small, Quaker school with a formidable reputation, is modest in a way that the confidently distinguished institution can afford to be.

I said at the outset that I have an agenda for raising this matter of boosterism. Notre Dame is wrestling with the South African investment issue once more. While our track record to date has been timid, our rhetoric has been thunderous. We have condemned apartheid yet at the same time we have refused a moral leadership role on divestment. Oberlin College in Ohio did not indulge in pantomimes of moral self-congratulation - it just divested its stock.

At our last Commencement, Notre Dame gave the Rev. Beyers Naude, the courageous South African clergyman, an honorary degree. Naude was calling for divestment as far back as 1976. The presence of this prophetic Christian graced our campus last spring, it would be good for us if we would now heed his call to do our bit to end apartheid. Moral blarney and boosterism will not bring the white government in Pretoria to the negotiating table with legitimate black leaders. A threat to divest, coming from an influential university in the Christian tradition like Notre Dame, would help.

Peter Walshe is professor of government and the director of African Studies at Notre Dame.

ND moves in the right direction on apartheid

Dear Editor:

We were pleased with the recent decision of the University Trustees to appoint an Ad Hoc Committee on South African Investments. Now that the Committee is about to report to the full Board of Trustees, we look forward to a revised Notre Dame policy on South African investments, one that will be ethically defensible and effective in contributing to the growing anti-apartheid movement across the country.

There is much at stake in this issue for our Notre Dame community and we applaud the efforts that are being made to educate the campus, particularly during the observance of Anti-Apartheid Week, Oct. 7-11. We ask our colleagues and students to take "time out" to examine the ethical and political issues that the continued existence of apartheid raises, not least because the University has substantial funds invested in corporations that continue to operate within that system.

Dillon got kicked in the tailgater by Goldrick

Dear Editor:

Once again, I am chafed. Someone had to take fun two, maybe three steps too far. Having a tailgater at Ann Arbor, with kegs yet? Where is our decency, our decorum, our memory of the game? Everyone knows that kegs are forbidden on campus, and Michigan is a campus, mind you. Du Lac applies everywhere.

You may have guessed by now that I am a Dillonite, a "scum of the earth" as that wretched little ditty goes. Admittedly I was in attendance at the we-got-kicked-in-the-tailgater. And unfortunately, I must confess I did partake in some of the pleasantries which went on in Ann Arbor. Where was my head? What was I thinking? What is the capital of North Dakota? It is with outrage how I look back upon my actions, those which I recall. My conscience has been all over me, worse than when I pulled that Tylenol thing awhile back. I thought lighting candles at the Grotto would help relieve the pressure of my guilt, and then look what happens.

Fortunately, I attend Notre Dame, where justice is swift and sure. The administration recognized Dillon's hand in this out-of-control, fun event and moved quickly. "Let's take away Dillon's SYR and make them do community service." The instrument has not yet been invented that can measure the hurt I felt when I heard the news about the canceled dance. I had already picked out my outfit for the evening, a nifty little ensemble, if I do say so myself.

Alas, I guess it was not to be. It is probably all for the better anyway. I probably would have loaded up on warm beer and stale crackers and ended up treating my date like a piece of meat on a hook or worse, as an unequal. And that is regardless of whether she is a conniving little Saint Mary's husband hound or an ambitious, worldly Notre Dame woman. There really is some good in everything, Toto.

As for the community service, well, that is how offenders are punished in the real world, and we are just one step away from there. Or is that from reality? No matter. I thought Dillon's blatant disregard for the rules would end with the reign of Bernie "Czardo" Pelligrino but I see that I was mistaken. Current President John "Am I on TV's Practical Jokes, Bleeps, and Blunders, Mr. Goldrick?" Husmann has continued this trend. It is disgusting. It is degrading. It is the greatest. I just want the Notre Dame/Saint Mary's community to know that there is one Dillonite who is sorry for these uncalled for actions. And when I find him, I will tell you.

Pettifer's 'negativism' is backed as justified

Dear Editor:

In a recent letter to the editor, Ann Pettifer was criticized for being too negativistic and was challenged to find something good to write about in future letters. This letter was in response to a series of letters Pettifer has written to The Observer, on a variety of issues. Perhaps I misread Pettifer's most recent letter. I did not interpret it as a personal attack on Janet Smith or Smith's work at the Women's Care Center. Rather, Pettifer seemed to be citing sexism, as the root cause of the problems that the center deals with. It is because of sexism in our society, that such services are needed. As for having something good to say about sexism . . .

However, this particular letter appears to be criticizing criticism in general, which is a much more serious matter. It implies condonement of censorship in a subtle form: "If you don't have anything good to say, don't say anything." While this attitude may seem appropriate for certain social settings, it is certainly not appropriate for the editorial page of a university newspaper.

Furthermore, this particular student (and I suspect a good many others) seems to find Pettifer's "negativism" distasteful, even offensive. This should come as no surprise. Indeed, negative criticism itself seems old-fashioned today. The prophets of today's "feel-good" philosophy are attempting to relegate all negative criticism to recent history; to the 1960s and the Vietnam War era or the 1970s and high inflation, the hostage crisis, the energy crisis . . . as if there were no justification for criticism in the 1980s! Need we be reminded of the problems of today? Apparently, we do.

Pettifer, keep up the good work.

16,433 die a silent death and inhumane burial

Dear Editor:

As I was reading Monday's Chicago Tribune, I came across an article which brought a sickening feeling throughout my body. The article reported the mass burial of 16,433 human beings in six coffin-like boxes during a funeral service in East Los Angeles.

This was not a headline article with big, bold letters proclaiming the disaster, nor did it appear at all on the front page. Rather, it received only a one paragraph blurb tucked away on page 12.

I wondered how the editor could justify such disproportionality. The reason, it appears, is that these dead human beings were aborted fetuses. Does a fetus rate any less respect than that endowed in all human beings?

It is very disheartening to live in a country which proclaims the inalienable rights of individuals to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, and which then passes a Supreme Court decision allowing for the murder of millions of defenseless lives. Somehow, and at some time, this insanity must stop. Reporting this tragedy as a mere item of news trivia is not the answer.

Kawabonga! Why not throw a theme party?

Shelli Canfield
features writer

Think about it. What is your typical party? It amounts to a bunch of idiots glued to a couple of kegs, drunk and stupid and telling gullible girls how they went shark-hunting in the Great Barrier Reef with Uncle Jacques (really a reformed Hare Krishna) and the Calypso, and that's the reason for the artificial leg.

Somebody inevitably blows chow in the sink, somebody passes out only to wake up with one eyebrow shaved off and "MY MOTHER EATS KITTY LITTER" written across his forehead in India ink, furniture gets burned, windows get smashed, someone starts fights, and some poor girl is getting emotional because her one true love is getting beautiful with her best friend. It's a great big mess, and everyone has a great big headache the next day.

It's glorious.

It also gets very old, if you go to enough of them. And it's very expensive. Most college students simply do not have the coins to replace all the furniture and get the walls repainted. People drive home drunk, and everyone is likely to make at least one enemy by the end of the night.

Who needs it?

This revelation is probably what is responsible for the advent of the theme party. Theme parties are very easy parties to attend. Everyone immediately has something in common, they are all dressed as foolishly as you are. It also guarantees instant conversation: "What are YOU supposed to be?" They can be really stupid and really fun.

My own theme party days began when I was in high school. A bunch of us had a REDRUM party. Remember "The Shining?" Remember the little boy who went around with a bent finger and croaked, "Redrum. Redddrummm. REDRUM!" So, we had a REDRUM party. Everyone wore red and a bunch of dumb stuff like that. (I mean, you really don't want to hear it, OK?) It was incredibly stupid. And a lot of fun.

The kind of people who are willing to go to theme parties are fun people. Dumb people might go, but they don't dress up or do whatever else is required. Hang them up and beat them like pinatas. (That's one way to have fun.) It's a guaranteed good time.

In my sorority days in South Carolina, we had a huge riotous party every year, with a band or two and theme. It was, for reasons I won't go into, called the "Tri Delta Brawl." One year, the theme was "I Wish I Were...". Obviously, you learn a lot about people from this kind of party. You learn who wants to be a Skid Row bum, wants to work in a Bud factory, who wishes they were an Oscar Meyer weiner (No lie.) It is potentially pretty rank, but it's a blast. Another year, the theme was "Saturday Morning Funnies, Friday Night Fun." Naturally, it was on a Friday night and everyone dressed as their favorite cartoon character: the Jetsons, Gumby and Pokey, etc.

Fraternities can get pretty creative, too. I'm not talking about the usual toga action, although it still happens all the time. Frats supply some of the best theme parties. For example, one party was called "Boxers and Button-downs." (So take a wild guess at what everyone wore.) Things weren't always so preposterous, though. The previous year, the theme was "Leather and Lace" (Do you think I'll get kicked out for this?) MTV was big one year, mainly because it was so easy to dress for. Anyone can string earrings through their ears, braid their hair, and be Bob Marley.

The point is to utilize what you have and be creative. Got a beach? (So make one.) Have an oyster roast. The day of the Kentucky Derby? Dress in your best derby duds, turn on the tube, get out the mint juleps, and you're there. In fact, you're better than there, because I know for a fact that NOBODY who goes to a horse race ever actually sees a horse.

OK, enough of the practical stuff. Have a Casino Night. Everyone dresses their best (black tie, not black cords), plays games and throws their money around. Naturally, people pay a nice cover for this - A LOT of people. Because, at the end of the night, two lucky campers get their name drawn, and morning finds them heading for Las Vegas or Monte Carlo or wherever. If you ever have just one theme party, make Casino Night it.

Want something quiet and a little more controlled? "Trivial Pursuit" and the old Monopoly boards are favorite stand-bys. I can't guarantee that they will always be calm. I was once pursued by a crazed Park Place purchaser, and the shock of the event left me comatose for a whole year. In spite of the potential dangers, theme parties that involve games are fool-proof, because everyone participates.

"Saturday Night Live" is another favorite, because people have all kinds of fun being Doug and Wendy Whiner. You wouldn't believe the things people will do to look like coneheads, either. And who hasn't been to a MASH party? It's so uncomplicated. Everyone has those mold-green cotton p.j. things, and if they don't have those, it is a written rule that they have those hideous camouflage things. Of course, you turn the channel to MASH, but it usually ends up as a long-playing video when someone turns on the tunes.

The best theme party in the whole world? Mine, naturally. It was about three weeks ago, and it wasn't even really intended to be a theme party. It just sort of ended up that way. Nobody was asked to dress a certain way. It was just a celebration we had, because one of the girls having the party with me just bought a new bed. (Don't laugh. I had a bash once just because I bought a new highlighter pen. Is that a theme party, or what?) We had those tacky pink plastic flamingoes everywhere, wearing mod sunglasses and paisley ties, and those dumb sunflower things people put in their yards so the wind can blow them around... you know. We even had streamers - Can you believe it? - everywhere, and a plastic wading pool right in the middle of the hallway. Her old mattresses were set up at the base of the stairs, 16 steps worth, and old Salvation Army ironing boards.

"WHAT?!", you say?

The mattresses were our landing pad. We took the ironing boards, folded flat, to the top of the stairs, stood on them - backwards, two at a time, and even on each other's shoulders - and "surfed" all the way down the stairs at about 200 mph until we hit the mattresses. It was hilarious. One girl sprained her ankle, I still have scars on my wrist, and I think at least two other people are still comatose.

The girl who hurt her leg got into the wading pool, and a bunch of guys pushed her down the hill until she fell over on her face. (And she's the one who bought the bed!) People were jumping on the mattresses, and the wading pool ended up on some guy's head while a lot of fools did a hat-dance around him. All our flamingoes were stolen.

The next morning, ironing board legs, sandwiches (?), mattress stuffing, flamingo legs, cups, pieces of wading pool, and unknown people were littered all over the building. I felt like a Flood Relief Volunteer cleaning up, but it was worth it. One guy told a lady (his hairdresser) that he lived at Castle Point, and she said, "I heard there was a really wild party there. Everyone had these ironing boards..."

Maybe you had to be there. But, the point is, creativity - and sometimes spontaneity - is key. The fact that people acted as incredibly stupid, and had as much fun, as they wanted to was also a factor that made our party a success. Three rooms and the whole hallway (and staircase) were open, and something different was going on in each one. The theme party had been elevated to a whole new height. Stupid? You bet.

And people are still laughing.

Personals reveal personality of ND and SMC

Chris Dallavo
features writer

Upon entering the dining hall, preparing to do battle with the day's so-called lunch, most every Notre Dame and Saint Mary's student picks up a copy of the day's Observer. After skipping over reports of the latest national disaster, the "Star Wars" peace talks, and the latest exploits of Nancy Reagan, he turns to the most interesting part of the paper, the personals.

The personals section is where students are free to print most anything they want, at a nominal cost.

There are some regulars in the personal section which can always be counted on. Someone seems to be infatuated with Richard Bach and his book "Illusions." Every day we are all treated to a profound quote from this man, which I know everyone looks forward to.

Then, for all of the heavy drinkers around, the Oar House lets us know that they are open for carry outs until 3 a.m. And, as in every other paper in the United States, somebody is always thanking St. Jude for granting some favor or prayer, or asking St. Anthony to help them find something that they lost.

It is not surprising that in schools the size of Notre Dame and Saint Mary's, there is at least one birthday every day. More importantly, by reading the personals, we all get to know whose birthday it is. Be honest, how many people have called some guy or girl they did not know and said "Happy Birthday?" If you were drunk you are excused.

Recently, some people have had a fetish about Jello. For some time now, there have been little references to someone who has a fantasy about green Jello - sounds interesting.

The personals are great for inside jokes, especially if you have a comment about your friend's SYR date, or something along those lines. They also present an opportunity for one to express his sense of humor. For example, "And on the eighth day, God called himself Frank," and my personal favorite, "HEY RICHARD CRANIUM!!!" Think about that last one.

People are always looking for rides in the Personals (even though they can't escape University authority), lost rings (maybe they should give St. Anthony a try) and tickets, why don't these ads get put under the Tickets section? I wonder if their prayers are ever answered? Maybe they should ask St. Jude?

Some people seem to think it is amusing to put in personals written in a foreign language. Very funny. These are the kind of people who do sick things to your cat. Do they think that it is humorous to have something printed and have no one understand it? Apparently, it is meant for that "someone special," which is fine. However, it takes a lot more guts to say something in a language that everyone understands, and it is more meaningful as well.

Another common personal is a request by various clubs and organizations to attend their games and functions. These are a good way to publicize their upcoming events, and are especially effective if they are done in a humorous manner. For instance, after the shooting of a field hockey player this fall, an ad appeared for one of their games which said, "Come see the most dangerous game in town." Not too many people showed up for the game, but maybe it was because everyone was scared.

Anyway, next time you have an Observer, don't just put it on the bottom of your tray and spill chicken gumbo soup on it. The personals are a great place to go for a laugh, or to thank a friend for a "fun" weekend. By the way, did ODIN come yet?

DESPERATELY SEEKING "FILA" BACK-PACK

To whoever it may concern: On Tuesday, October 8, between 11:45am & 12:15pm, my back-pack disappeared from the South Dining Hall. The heel was a good one, approximately $500 in merchandise, but only worth one-quarter of that to the possessor. Contents were of personal value: one TORTS book, pens, highlighters, etc., but more importantly my glasses that I use to see and read with and my whole semester's worth of notes for all my classes! As it appears, I am in serious trouble without my notes and glasses. Who ever said Law School was easy? Any information leading to the return of any of these articles would be appreciated. Please call 277-0192 or stop by the Law School Library anytime.

their talents in a particular sport have an opportunity to go on to college, to get an education, on a full scholarship," Davis said. "They receive the highest level of coaching, health care and training, and at the same time receive the highest level of education available at that institution."

"I don't think either the institution or the student-athlete is exploiting the other. There are instances, though, where the student-athlete has been exploited by an institution, but I think that's in a vast minority of cases."

Raymond Baumhart, S.J., President of Loyola University in Chicago, added another perspective on the subject, taking a position somewhere between that of Phelps and Davis.

"Most college athletes are not being exploited," he said. "At most schools, there are none being exploited. Few women athletes are being exploited. In some sports, such as lacrosse or field hockey, none are being exploited. The only cases we have of exploitation are a few male athletes in the revenue-producing or image-enhancing sports."

The evil demon in all this, the almighty dollar, comes largely from one source, network television money. Peter Lund, President of CBS Sports, also was on hand last night to defend the networks' position.

"We are only a buyer of rights sold to us by various colleges and universities," said Lund. "We do not control how that money is spent. We do feel, in a somewhat strange sort of way, responsible for what is going on, but, again, we can't control the individual schools."

Last night's moderator, James

Reilly, Assistant Vice President at Loyola, made his own observation on network television's relation to college athletics. Reilly surmised that when a network carries a game, it makes money, and that when a scandal hits, it also makes money. Either way, scandal or no scandal, the networks do well, he concluded.

It also was brought out that a student-athlete on full scholarship is entitled to room and board, tuition and fees, and up to $900 in a Pell Grant if financial need is shown. Phelps, meanwhile, suggested that student-athletes be paid a stipend in addition to that which they now receive.

"Last year's NCAA tournament for basketball grossed $32 million," Phelps stated. "All we would need to do is take $4 million off the top of that and divide it up among the 270 member schools - $1,000 a month per player times 10 months - and we could afford it."

Phelps claimed that such a practice would eliminate such illegal "nickel and dime" offenses as ticket scalping and gifts to athletes from booster clubs and alumni.

Davis and Baumhart both opposed the suggestion of the Notre Dame basketball coach, though, with Baumhart pointing out a potential problem with any proposal giving money only to scholarship basketball players.

"Within a week, a member of the track team will file suit charging discrimination," countered the Loyola president. "It would cost us a whole lot more money than what you've suggested."

The topic of pressure within college athletic circles later arose in the panel discussion. Phelps was first to say that perhaps society overemphasizes the importance of college athletics.

"It bothers me when people say their school is going to fold if the football or basketball teams don't do well," Phelps said. "That's a cop-out. Take a look at the University of Chicago or Northwestern. They don't have outstanding teams in these sports, yet they're still fine academic institutions."

Baumhart, agreeing with Phelps about the existence of pressure to win in college athletics, argued that academics always must come first.

"All groups associated with (Loyola) - students, administrators, faculty, staff, alumni and the Chicago community - want a good basketball team," said Baumhart. "But first, they want a good academic program."

"Vince Lombardi may not like this, but winning is not the only thing. The value of competition is very important. Learning how to lose also is very important. Our society puts too high of a value on winning."

Davis quickly followed by stating that all of the discussion up to that point had been looking back on the past. We must turn our attention forward instead, he said.

In the end, all parties agreed that the fight to clean up and improve the system must be an ongoing one. Baumhart, however, noted that college presidents cannot afford the time to continue fighting the problem the way in which they have in recent months.

Davis offered an interesting observation near the end of the evening's discussion.

"Now in the NCAA, the leaders of intercollegiate athletics are using reforms in intercollegiate athletics as a means of reforming society," he said. "They're moving to provide some leadership example for society to follow."

No doubt, the fight for such reforms will be a long and arduous one.

Valenzuela lifts L.A. to 4-1 win

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES - Los Angeles stole an offensive play from St. Louis last night, and Fernando Valenzuela pitched the Dodgers to a 4-1 victory over John Tudor and the Cardinals in the first game of the 1985 National League playoffs.

Bill Madlock, acquired by the Dodgers five weeks ago in a trade with Pittsburgh, was the offensive catalyst in both innings in which the Dodgers scored.

Valenzuela worked 6 1/3 innings for his first victory in nearly a month, and the Dodgers scored their runs with the help of an error, a stolen base and a two-out squeeze bunt, offensive tactics more commonly thought of as belonging to the Cardinals.

The opportunistic Cardinals, meanwhile, wasted one opportunity after another against Valenzuela.

The best-of-seven series, which opened before a Dodger Stadium crowd of 55,270, continues tonight with a match of right-handers Orel Hershisier, 19-3, of the Dodgers against Joaquin Andujar, 21-12.

The Dodgers scored one run in the fourth on an error, a stolen base and a bloop single by Pedro Guerrero, then scored three more in the sixth and chased Tudor with the help of the bunt. Tudor, who had won 20 of his last 21 decisions, had taken a three-hitter into the Dodgers' big inning.

A loss to Valenzuela on July 20 was the only blemish on Tudor's record after a 1-7 start. Valenzuela was rebounding from a poor finish that saw him go 1-2 with five no-decisions in his final eight starts. His last win of the regular season came on Sept. 11 against Atlanta.

With two out in the second, Smith singled for the Cardinals, then stole second base. But Tudor grounded out to second and another threat had evaporated against the clever Dodger left-hander.

Tudor, meanwhile, retired the first seven batters before giving up a single to Sax, who drove a 1-0 pitch up the middle. Sax was sacrificed to second by Valenzuela for the second out of the inning, and Mariano Duncan grounded out to third for the final out.

Again in the fourth inning, the Cardinals had a two-out runner after Pendleton reached on a bunt single to third. His bunt was fielded by Madlock, whose throw looked to be in time but pulled first baseman Enos Cabell's foot off the bag. Pendleton, however, was quickly dispatched when Valenzuela picked him off first and the Cardinal baserunner was put out in a run-down.

The Cards got the leadoff runner on in the following inning, but again failed to score. Porter led off with a single to right, but Smith followed with a routine fly ball to left. Valenzuela then struck out the next two batters, Tudor, on an attempted two-strike bunt, and Coleman.

American League page 14

In each of the first two innings, the Cardinals had runners on second with two out, but each time failed to get the key hit to bring in a run against Valenzuela.

Tommy Herr doubled to left field with two out in the first, and Valenzuela then walked Jack Clark on a 3-2 pitch. But Cesar Cedeno blooped out weakly to Sax at second and the inning was over.

No. 6 singles player

Szajko asset to SMC tennis team

By CHRISTINE FORTIN
Sports Writer

Contributing team spirit and talent to the Saint Mary's tennis team, freshman Charlene Szajko has proven herself to be quite an asset.

She currently plays in the No. 6 position and holds a 9-4 record, which is the best win-loss record on the team.

Szajko added two wins to her record last Saturday when the Belles played in the Notre Dame Invitational. She was the only team member to pick up a win for Saint Mary's in the matches against Cincinnati and Marquette.

Saint Mary's had met Marquette earlier in the season, but Szajko lost to her opponent that time.

Saturday, Szajko lost the first set to Marquette, but she did not give up and won the match in a tiebreaker in the third set.

"Charlene is good enough to move up to a higher position," said Belles coach Debbie Laverie, but Laverie said she is reluctant to make the transition because Szajko is doing so well in the No. 6 position.

Szajko, a Mishawaka resident, has been playing tennis for eight years and teaches tennis to students and adults during the summer. In high school, she played No. 2 and No. 4 singles. She was awarded most improved player her sophomore year and received the mental attitude award her junior year.

Szajko, a nursing major, said she was attracted to Saint Mary's because of its small size. She likes the benefits that Saint Mary's has to offer, especially the individual attention in the classroom.

Although tennis was not a factor in her decision to attend Saint Mary's, she said she enjoys playing with the team and intends to play all four years.

"Playing with the team is a good experience and I feel that I am improving with every match," she said.

"Charlene is the kind of player every coach wants to have," Laverie said. "She has a lot of potential and works hard to execute instructions."

Szajko said she feels her role on the team is no different from anyone else's. She prefers college tennis over high school tennis because of the higher degree of competition and the Belle's spirit of team unity.

Laverie said that Szajko has risen to the high level of play and contributed to the team as a whole.

"Charlene is a good team player," Laverie said. "She always cheers on the other players and promotes team comradery."

The Belle's next match is Saturday morning when they play host to Taylor University. The match is slated for 10 a.m.

ball past the diving Breslin into the lower left corner at 74:33 to give the Warriors a commanding 5-2 lead.

Martin Mangialardi scored for Notre Dame at 75:52 to make the final score close.

Grace, meanwhile, said he can only speculate as to why his squad has not played with intensity in the first half.

"I can't put my finger on it," he said. "It could be the fact that we've only won three ballgames out of 14."

"I hope it's not the fact that they don't believe in themselves. This weekend will tell the tale."

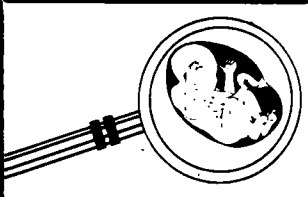

The Irish will play Vanderbilt and the host team in the Illinois State Tournament Saturday and Sunday.

Golfers get 2nd in MCC tourney

Special to The Observer

The Notre Dame golf team finished in second place in the Midwestern City Conference Championship at the Golf Club of Indianapolis Tuesday.

The Irish finished the 54-hole tournament behind national power Oral Roberts in blustery weather.

Senior captain John O'Donovan was named to the all-conference team with a three-round total of 240. O'Donovan's rounds of 76, 80 and 84 gave him fifth place overall.

Rich Connelly missed the all-conference squad with rounds of 76, 80 and 86. John Anthony hit 248 for the Irish, and Chris Bona finished at 251.

Senior Steve Fuhrer, who hoped to repeat on the all-conference team, was forced from the competition with an eye injury after the second round. His 76-80 pace put him with the leaders after that round.

Butler finished the tournament in third place, and Evansville was fourth. Medalist for the tournament was Nick Classen of Oral Roberts, who hit 225, with rounds of 72, 74 and 79.

Irish Head Coach Noel O'Sullivan said he was pleased with the second-place finish for Notre Dame.

Noel O'Sullivan instructs John O'Donovan

"I'm delighted to say that the team performed well," he said. "When your team is expected to come in second, the pressure is on."

"It really does not matter if you represent a name school, because teams like Butler and Evansville came to the tournament to upset us."

The Irish were able to handle the pressure, however, and they now have a second-place trophy to show for it.

Notre Dame has finished third in the tournament in two previous trips.

3-0 after escaping a strong threat by Fisher by the score of 1-0.

"We got off to a sluggish start, and we underestimated them," said Holy Cross captain Frank Loughlin. "It was our toughest game so far." The game's only goal, occurring midway through the first half, was scored by Kahlil Shalabi. The Hogs have yet to be scored upon after three games.

Cavanaugh improved to 3-1 with a victory over Carroll on Monday night, as Mark Burdell scored on a breakaway with two minutes left in the game, breaking a 1-1 tie. Cavanaugh survived a late first-half defensive lapse which saw them at a 1-0 disadvantage at halftime. Matt Zyniewicz scored the equalizer midway through the second half for Cavanaugh.

Grace "B" won its first game of the season last Saturday in exciting fashion against the same Carroll team. Tied 2-2 after regulation on goals by Jim Grace and Phil Castilano, Grace "B" used a sudden-death shootout goal by captain Tom Mall to get Grace on the winning track with a 3-2 victory.

The West European League saw perhaps the fiercest battle of the week, as Zahm "A" defeated a luckless Sorin team by a score of 3-2. Zahm "A" got on the board early on captain Bill Lane's goal, but Sorin was to even the score on a penalty kick later in the first half. Tom Keating put Zahm "A" back on top with a goal right before halftime.

Second-half action quickly heated up, as Sorin once again tied the game at two. However, Sorin's hopes for a victory were once again dashed when Matt Tfohl of Zahm "A" scored with three minutes left in regulation. Zahm "A" evened its record at 2-2; Sorin fell to 0-3.

Traditional West European powerhouse Flanner "A" rumbled through the week with victories over Keenan and Zahm "A", improving its record to 3-1. In last Sunday's game against Keenan, Flanner "A" used second-half goals by captain Bill Johnson and Ed Sparinchak to roll to a 2-0 victory.

"Keenan was our best game so far," said captain Bill Johnson. "We really got it together in the second half."

Flanner "A" came back on Tuesday against Zahm "A", rebounding from a 1-0 deficit to win, 2-1. "We didn't go after them too hard," remarked Johnson. However, Flanner "A" recovered with goals from Doug Feeney and Nat Vories to go on and win the match.

Over in the East European League, the "Mud Cup" was played on Saturday morning between Dillon I and Pangborn. After the mud was slung and the cold rain had fallen, Dillon I prevailed by a 2-0 score. The Dillon attack was fueled by a two-goal performance by Mike Carney.

Pangborn rebounded from its loss in the quagmire yesterday with a 5-0 tarring of Holy Cross "B", on two-goal performances by John Drew and Mike Jakob, and an added goal by Jeff Laurenson.

In other East European games, Stanford remained undefeated as it showed up to beat an apathetic Flanner "B" squad, 5-0. The talented Studs were no match for the ten Flanner "B" players who showed up to play. Goals were provided by Dan O'Donnell, Rob Zelinski, Jim Byrne, "Boo-Boo" EL-Farhan and John Quinn.

This weekend will prove crucial to many teams still hoping for playoff berths. Howard will try to prove that it is for real as it goes up against an extremely tough Morrissey "A" squad (Saturday, 11 a.m., North Stepan). If Howard passes that test, all eyes will be on its game against St. Ed's. Keenan may be the last team to be able to beat O.C. Crime this season in the West European League, and in fact Keenan must win to preserve any playoff hopes it might have (Saturday, 11 a.m., North Stepan).

One final game of interest over in the East European League is the match between Dillon I and Stanford, where the undefeated Studs go up against an unknown, and possibly quite talented, adversary (Sunday, 2 p.m., North Stepan).

A.L. playoffs

Blue Jays earn two-game lead

Associated Press

TORONTO - Al Oliver slapped a single to left field with two outs in the 10th inning, driving home Lloyd Moseby from second base and capping a two-run rally off Kansas City relief ace Dan Quisenberry that gave the Toronto Blue Jays a 6-5 victory yesterday and a commanding two-game lead in the American League playoffs.

Moseby had been the center of controversy in the top of the 10th, when Kansas City scored to take a 5-4 lead.

But the quick turnaround in the Blue Jays' fortunes sent the best-of-seven series to Kansas City for Game 3 tomorrow night with the Royals in an unenviable position.

The Royals started as if they would easily snap their nine-game postseason losing streak, taking an early 3-0 lead. But this game was full of twists, and the 10th inning was the most dramatic of all.

Willie Wilson scored from second base when center fielder Moseby trapped Frank White's single with two outs in the top of the inning, giving Kansas City the lead for the second time.

White hit a hard liner up the middle. Moseby came charging in, reached down and scooped up the ball, raising his glove as if he had made the catch.

Second base umpire Ted Hendry ran toward Moseby but did not make an immediate call. Hendry looked toward crew chief Dave Phillips, who was on the right-field line, for help, and Phillips waved that Moseby had trapped the ball.

While all this was happening, Wilson, who led off the 10th with a single and stole second, scampered home.

Different angles showed different results on the replay. From the side, it looked as if the catch was clean, but head-on, it appeared the ball had taken a short hop into Moseby's glove.

Moseby threw up his arms in disbelief at the call and left fielder George Bell kicked his glove. Toronto Manager Bobby Cox raced onto the field and huddled with all six umpires at second base, but the play stood.

But in the bottom of the 10th, the Blue Jays showed their character. Tony Fernandez led off with a bouncer that shortstop Onex Concepcion grabbed, but double-clutched and threw late to first for an infield hit. Fernandez moved to second on a groundout by Damaso Garcia and scored to tie the game 5-5 when Moseby singled to right.

With Bell at the plate, Moseby got to second when first baseman Steve Balboni failed to handle a pickoff throw by Quisenberry.

After Bell fled to center, Oliver - acquired in midseason from Los Angeles - slapped an opposite-field single to left, and the speedy Moseby scored easily ahead of the throw from Lonnie Smith.

Reliever Tom Henke, who gave up a tying home run to pinch-hitter Pat Sheridan in the top of the ninth, got the victory, while Quisenberry took the loss.

Henke entered the game in the eighth after Gary Lavelle walked leadoff batter George Brett. Lavelle had replaced Dennis Lamp, who retired all 11 Kansas City batters he faced after coming in with one out in the fourth and a runner on third with Kansas City ahead 3-0.

Kansas City Manager Dick Howser saw his personal postseason record fall to 0-11 - including three against the Royals as manager of the New York Yankees in 1980 - as the Royals lost for the fourth time in five extra-inning games against Toronto this year.

When the series resumes tomorrow at Royals Stadium, Howser will send Bret Saberhagen, 20-6, against Doyle Alexander, 17-10, who pitched the division-clincher for Toronto last Saturday.

For a moment, it looked as if the Blue Jays would win in nine innings.

Moseby, hitless in eight previous playoff at-bats, singled to ignite an eighth-inning rally and scored on a sacrifice fly by George Bell to give Toronto a 4-3 lead.

Moseby, who went 0-for-5 Tuesday night and was hitless in his first three at-bats in Game 2, slashed a one-out single off Quisenberry. He then stole second on the first pitch to Bell and continued to third when catcher Jim Sundberg bounced his throw to second and the ball went into shallow center field for an error. Bell then drove a pitch to the edge of the warning track in right-center field for the sacrifice.

But in the top of the ninth inning, Henke failed to protect that lead. On a 2-2 pitch, Sheridan homered to right field to tie the score, 4-4. One out later, Henke walked Buddy Biancalana, but Smith then struck out and pinch-runner Concepcion was caught stealing for a double play.

In the bottom of the ninth, Rance Mulliniks singled with two out, but Quisenberry struck out Ernie Whitt, one of three original members of the expansion Blue Jays of 1977, to send the game into extra innings.

Sheridan's homer marked the second time within a week that Henke allowed a tying homer in the ninth inning of a key game. Last Friday, he gave up a homer in nearly the same spot to New York's Butch Wynegar with two outs in the ninth in a game the Yankees eventually won, delaying the Blue Jays' first division title by one day.

When Sheridan's hit cleared the fence, the crowd of 34,029 - about 10,000 below capacity and the smallest playoff crowd since Game 4 of the 1974 AL playoffs between Baltimore and Oakland - was plunged into silence. They had sat through a gray afternoon that brought a couple of brief sprinkles and forced the lights at Exhibition Stadium to be turned on from the start. But for the second straight game, the temperature was ideal for baseball. It was 68 degrees when play began.

A hit batter seemed to rile the Blue Jays in the sixth, and they quickly struck for two runs that made it 3-3.

With two outs, Bell was hit in the side by Kansas City starter Bud Black. Bell, suspended earlier in the season when he kicked Boston pitcher Bruce Kison after getting hit by a pitch, stared at Black as he slowly walked toward first.

Black walked toward Bell, but home plate umpire Dale Ford got between them before anything developed.

Cliff Johnson followed with a single that moved Bell to second, and Black bounced a wild pitch that put runners on second and third. At that point, Cox sent Lou Thornton in to run for the slow-footed Johnson.

Jesse Barfield battled Black to a full count, fouling off three 3-2 deliveries, then hit a bouncer up the middle for a single that tied the score.

Wilson had shaken the Royals out of their doldrums in the third inning.

Biancalana, the No. 9 batter in the lineup who hit just .188 this season, led off with a single and took second as Smith grounded out. Wilson then lined a 0-2 pitch into the left-center field seats for a home run, and he celebrated the occasion by clapping his hands and pumping his fist into the air as he rounded first base. The Blue Jays' fans countered by throwing the home-run ball back onto the field.

Key struck out Balboni to get out of a two-on, two-out jam later in the third, but Kansas City drove Key from the mound the next inning.

Soccer team loses 8th as Marquette rolls, 5-3

By GREG STOHR
Sports Writer

Dennis Grace is perplexed. The Notre Dame Head Soccer Coach says he cannot figure out why his team always seems to play a weak first half.

It was a poorly-played first half that cost the Irish a win yesterday on Alumni Field, as Marquette roared to a 3-1 halftime lead en route to a 5-3 victory over the home squad.

The loss dropped Notre Dame's record to 3-8-3.

"I'm tired of playing 45 minutes instead of 90," Grace said afterward. "In the first half we're just not playing. I don't know why. It baffles me."

Marquette, now 10-3, quickly took advantage of the Irish sluggishness yesterday. Steve DuFauchard picked up an errant Notre Dame pass and rolled a shot past outstretched Irish keeper Hugh Breslin for a 1-0 Warrior lead 10:25 into the contest. The Warriors then took a 2-0 lead at 21:55 when James Tutaj knocked in Dan Stadler's cross from the left side.

"When the game started, we were not interested in playing with intensity," said Grace. "When you play good teams they're not going to let you do that. They are a good team, and they took advantage of it."

A 15-yard Dave Miles blast off fellow Irish tri-captain Chris Telk's pass found the upper left corner of the Warrior net at 31:18 and cut the margin in half. The visitors immediately answered, however, with a John Slawson goal at 34:13 to make the halftime score 3-1.

Marquette outshot Notre Dame 16-3 in the first half. The Irish did not force Warrior goalkeeper Mike Dietrich to make a single save during the opening 45 minutes.

In the second half Notre Dame showed signs of life. When Bruce "Tiger" McCourt banged the rebound of his own shot into the net at 56:53, the Irish closed the gap to one goal.

"In the second half we came out and played finally," said Grace. "We did some nice things."

Marquette, though, secured victory with two goals in just 41 seconds. Tom Wetterman blasted a shot into the upper left corner at 73:52, and DeFauchard bounced the

Powerhouse teams begin to emerge from interhall soccer competition

By TERRY LYNCH
Sports Writer

The men's interhall soccer schedule bravely slogged its way through yet another week of games, as divisional powers began to emerge in anticipation of the post-break playoffs.

In the South American league, St. Ed's took the driver's seat with a 3-0 defeat of Zahm "B" on Monday night. Guy Rymysa started the scoring early for undefeated St. Ed's with a goal only three minutes into the first half, followed a while later by Dave Warth. Gene Pilawski netted the third goal for St. Ed's with five minutes remaining in the first half.

"We played really well in the first half," said St. Ed's captain Charles Higgs-Coulthard. "Playing against the wind in the second half was a big factor, plus we subbed a little."

St. Ed's still must play an upstart Howard team, which also boasts a 3-0 record. That showdown, although scheduled for last Saturday, was postponed and will be played sometime in the near future. A divisional title probably will be at stake when the game is played.

In other action, Grace "A" defeated Morrissey "A" by a score of 4-0, led by a two-goal performance by Chuck Papandrea.

Close matches dominated the play of the topsy-turvy North American league, as Holy Cross, Cavanaugh and Alumni all still have claims to the divisional title. Holy Cross improved its season mark to

The time has come for Head Coach Gerry Faust and the Notre Dame football team to take some action to correct the problems facing them. Larry Burke discusses those problems in Football Notebook below.

Phelps says athletes are exploited

By JEFF BLUMB
Sports Editor

CHICAGO - Lo and behold, Notre Dame basketball coach Digger Phelps was at it again last night. His personal crusade to clean up college athletics continued at the Chicago Press Club and the message was loud and clear: today's student-athlete is being exploited by the nation's colleges and universities.

"Yes, our college athletes are being exploited," said the Irish coach. "The number of cases is increasing each year. We can look at the example of Memphis State from this past summer. Since 1972, there hasn't been one black basketball player who has graduated from Memphis State, and only 10 percent of all their players have graduated."

"We can take a look at the NBA and see that below 30 percent of those playing in the league today have degrees. And in most of those situations, it's the minority student-athlete who is being exploited because of his talent."

Other panel members of last night's Dialogue television program entitled "Exploitation of the College Athlete" did not agree completely with the views of Phelps, however. NCAA President John Davis, leading off the discussion, suggested the other extreme.

"I think we have a situation where young people who have developed

Irish are at the crossroads of '85 season

The Notre Dame football team will not play a game this Saturday, and the way things have been going lately, it may be just as well. The players and coaches can use the time off to rest, regroup, and most importantly to get things together.

But when the 1985 season resumes in Notre Dame Stadium on Saturday, Oct. 19, the moment of reckoning will be at hand. The opponent will be Army, another undefeated service academy team that employs a wishbone offense. (Sound familiar?)

For Notre Dame, there is a great deal riding on the Army game. It may, in fact, be Notre Dame's last chance to salvage its season. The Irish have reached the point where they can either find themselves as a team and start playing with some consistency, or just keep on making the same sort of mistakes that have become all too familiar this year.

The talent is there for this team to put on a strong finish. But it's up to the coaches and the players themselves to get on the right track.

Quarterback Steve Buerlein had some thoughts to that effect after Notre Dame's 35-17 loss to Purdue, the low point of the season so far.

"We can play with anybody," said Buerlein. "That's why this season has been so frustrating. If we can just go out on the field and execute and gain some consistency, then we'll be all right. But we can't wait any longer."

No, they can't. While it may already be too late to salvage the '85 season, there's no doubt that if the Irish don't es-establish some consistency now, things are going to get even worse. All it takes is a look at the schedule to establish that fact.

After Army comes Southern Cal, a team that was in the Top Twenty two weeks ago before suffering a 24-0 defeat at the hands of Arizona St. on Sept. 28. The Trojans are just 2-2, but appear to be getting things together again, as evidenced by their 63-0 pasting of Oregon St. last Saturday.

Notre Dame concludes its four-game homestand with Navy (1-3) and Mississippi (2-2-1), two teams that aren't particularly strong. But things get tougher after that, when the Irish face Penn State and LSU in the next two weeks. Both teams are currently undefeated and ranked in the Top Twenty. The Nittany Lions are eighth, and will take a 4-0 record into Saturday's nationally-televvised contest with 10th-ranked Alabama. The 2-1 Tigers held the No. 8 spot last week, but slipped to 20th after Saturday's loss to Florida.

The Irish wrap up their season in Miami, where they have not won since 1977. The Hurricanes dropped their '85 opener to Florida, but have since come back to win three straight, including a 45-10 victory at Boston College.

Can this year's Notre Dame team hope to win against that sort of competition? Not if it keeps making the same crucial mistakes, keeps committing the same mental errors, and keeps taking the same inopportune penalties.

What has made all these mistakes even more critical is the times at which they've occurred. The Air Force game is a good example. It seemed that whenever the Irish moved the ball deep into Falcon territory, the offense self-destructed. If the Air Force game had been played on a 70-yard field, the Irish would have scored 40 points.

Notre Dame's first four games have brought to light plenty of problems, the biggest of which could be the team's attitude. Are the players willing to do what it takes to turn things around?

"I think it's all up to us now," said senior defensive back Pat Ballage. "It gets to be frustrating, because it's been four years and things haven't changed. The danger is that the team could get into a losing attitude. You worry about getting used to losing. But I don't think that will happen to this team."

"The guys that are pumped up are the guys that want to win. But it's hard to pinpoint exactly what it takes to get up to win."

Whatever it takes, the Irish had better put their finger on it soon.
