WASHINGTON - The fire aboard a Soviet submarine could not have triggered a nuclear explosion or even a big Chernobyl-like release of radioactivity, American experts said Sunday.

The Soviet crew aboard the submarine apparently managed to put out the fire that killed three of their mates Friday, and the vessel began limping across the Atlantic toward Europe Sunday, first on its own power and then under tow from a Soviet merchant ship.

Ray Pollock, an authority on the nuclear submarines with Georgetown University's Center for Strategic and International Studies, said, "I would think the probability of a nuclear detonation coming out of this is essentially zero."

Retired U.S. Rear Admiral Gene R. LaRocque, director of the Center for Defense Information, said, "There is no danger of a

Kiel, ND acquitted in accident lawsuit

By BUD LUEPKE

Former Irish quarterback Blair Kiel and the University of Notre Dame were granted a summary judgment in their favor last week in a lawsuit filed against them for injuries suffered in a traffic accident.

Superior Court Judge William Whitman handed down the decision ending the lawsuit in which former Notre Dame law student, William Kovalcik was seeking $150,000 from the University and Kiel.

The dispute dates back to Aug. 24, 1983 when a bike ridden by Kovalcik, now an attorney in Johnstown, Pa., collided with Kiel's car. Court records say Kiel was northbound on Lake Road at the time of the accident and was returning to his residence after a practice. Kovalcik was bicycling on a concrete path on the Notre Dame campus and collided with Kiel near the Lake Road - Saint Mary's Road intersection.

Kovalcik broke his left leg and suffered a cerebral concussion and muscle and nerve damage in the accident. According to court records Kovalcik said he is dependent upon ambulatory aids because of the injuries inflicted by the accident.

Kovalcik filed suit against Kiel for negligent operation of a motor vehicle and against the University for negligent maintenance and construction of an intersection. Kovalcik claimed his view of the intersection and its stop-sign were obstructed by foliage, according to court records.

Kovalcik's wife, Margaret Hayes, was also a plaintiff in the suit seeking retribution for loss of her husband's security, society and companionship.

Court records show that Kiel claimed he came to a full stop at the intersection and that Kovalcik rode into the side of his car. Kovalcik said in the court records that he could not recall whether he had come to a full stop before the intersection but that Kiel drove into him when his bicycle was halfway in front of Kiel's car.

Real words of Christ debated at semi-annual seminar

By JULIE DARNELL
News Staff

The question "What did Jesus really say?" is being debated by scholars from the Westar Institute and members of the Notre Dame faculty at the fourth semi-annual Jesus seminar. Meetings are taking place at the Center for Continuing Education Oct. 4-7.

The Jesus Seminar is a group of over 110 New Testament scholars who have embarked on a 10-year project to determine which of the roughly five hundred New Testament sayings attributed to Jesus are historically authentic and which were placed in his mouth by gospel writers and the early Church.

A critical approach to the New Testament in this regard was introduced by the founder and director of the Jesus Seminar, Robert Funk, said Adela Collins, a theology professor at Notre Dame.

Collins said Funk believes that most people today take a fundamentalist or traditionalist approach to the New Testament and the life of Jesus. The Jesus Seminar offers a new method for biblical interpretation.

About thirty New Testament scholars will join members of the theology department, including Adela Collins, Josephine Ford, William Peterson, John Collins and Harold Attridge, to determine which sayings go back to an actual historical Jesus and which are merely inventions of the early Church.

Participants of the meeting at Notre Dame will concentrate on thirty-one of the "Kingdom sayings" found in the synoptic Gospel of Mark from "Q", a hypothetical source of sayings also believed to have been used by Matthew and Luke, and in the Apocryphal Gospel of Thomas.

Roman Catholics, Methodists and Baptists are some of the denominations represented at this ecumenical seminar, according to Collins.

Collins said, "Each scholar and each reader of the New Testament has some picture of what Jesus was like, and that influences what you're willing to consider as going back to Jesus and what you would not be willing to consider." Members of the Jesus seminar, however, hope to reach a consensus among the diverse opinions.

Many conclusions will be based on historical and literary-style arguments. "If a saying presupposes something that was only a reality after the death of Jesus - if it presupposes Church organization - then it would seem like that it's a saying that arose in the early Church," said Collins.

During the meetings, participants will discuss a mail ballot they took prior to the seminar on the historical authenticity of the "Kingdom sayings." Scholars rated each of the thirty-one sayings with a code based on the colors red, pink, gray and black. A red vote would indicate the

Festival showcases foreign cultures

By JENNIFER GRONER

The Multicultural Fall Festival, an event intended to showcase various foreign cultures with a focus on the international students at Notre Dame, begins today and will continue through Saturday, Oct. 11.

"The purpose of this event is to increase the awareness of the significant contribution of multiculturalism here at Notre Dame. Particularly since the Notre Dame community is comprised of so many diverse cultural backgrounds," said Lisa Boykin, the minority concerns commissioner, one of the organizers of the festival.

Each day there will be a lithograph display in the Snite Museum, a St. Francis Shoppe display in the library foyer, and a multi-cultural dinner in the dining halls. Also various ethnic clubs will be highlighted at the Fieldhouse Mall.

In addition to these events Fireside Chats in the International Student Organization Lounge are planned. These chats will feature professors who have traveled in Europe, Latin America, China, Africa, and the Middle East. "We are encouraging students to participate in the Fireside Chats, because it provides students and faculty an excellent opportunity to interact on a more informal level," Boykin said.

Other activities will include a lecture given by Dr. George Feifer on Russian culture in Washington Hall today at 7 p.m. in Washington Hall. Prior to this lecture, footage of Russian television will be shown in the New Orleans Room from 2 to 5 p.m. Also planned is a lecture on life as an American Indian to be given by Billy Mills Oct. 10 at 8 p.m. in Washington Hall. The movie, "Running Brave," the story of Billy Mills' life, will be shown Wednesday, Oct. 8 at 9 p.m. in the Center for Social Concerns.

To enable students and faculty members to become better acquainted, a faculty and student reception will be held in the Snite Museum Oct. 8. Various works of art also will be exhibited at this time.

The Taste of Nations gala celebration is the only event for which an admission will be charged. The $2 charge is necessary to offset the cost of the food and entertainment which will be provided. These will include international cuisine and music, African dancers, dance contests, door prizes, and an American music survey. The Taste of Nations will be held from 8 p.m. until 1 a.m., in Stepan Center.

Low pay, low respect are rewards for self-sacrificing teachers

As the year continues, an increasingly frequent question asked of seniors is "Who are you interviewing with and what do you plan to do after graduation?"

Being an English major, I usually hear the "Are you going to be a teacher?" variation of this question, delivered in tones ranging from slight incredulity to open consolation.

I used to react with rather fierce denial when asked this question; after all, I rather naively believed I was going to set the world afire in a fast-paced and lucrative career. I certainly wasn't going to teach.

My attitude, like the attitudes of those who sympathetically questioned me, was not particularly surprising; it was merely a personal expression of the low-regard in which modern society holds teachers and their profession.

In my case, however, the circumstances are a little different than an uninvolved observer reflecting a simple social more. My father is a teacher, and has been for the last 22 years.

I used to wonder what could compel a person to endure low wages, poor working conditions, little chance for professional advancement, and the low job status which a success-oriented society has attached to the teaching profession.

In a recent national survey, a former teacher driven from her profession because of financial considerations noted, "People view teaching as a no-talent, no-challenge occupation," and my observations while growing up validate this statement.

I remember the anger and confusion I felt when a friend's father casually remarked "Those who can, do; those who can't, teach." I can still vividly picture the cold fall days when my father and his colleagues were forced to walk a picket line in order to achieve the raises which other professionals automatically received. And I remember the contempt and often cruelty which permeated popular opinion of teachers during these strikes.

According to the report of the Carnegie Task Force on Teaching as a Profession, "average teacher pay, which has increased by 23 percent over the past three years, now stands at $25,240." Hardly a lucrative salary, and one which most teachers must augment with income from part-time jobs. My father, for example, used to tune pianos and play in a band to offset his low wages.

This low salary is ironic when one considers the multi-faceted duties society expects teachers to perform. Teachers must not only be educators, but psychologists, disciplinarians, counselors and role-models. They receive constant criticism for not performing these multi-faceted duties and are blamed for the developmental and social difficulties of many of the nation's children. Society's tax aversion, however, makes a true commitment to upgrading salaries and working conditions hypothetical at best.

Yet my father, and thousands like him, continue to teach. Clearly, their motivations are beyond the realm of monetary and social success. They are compelled to teach by a sincere commitment to education.

Mary Heilmann
Assistant News Editor

Henry Brooks Adams wrote "A teacher affects eternity; he can never tell where his influence stops." This idea that a teacher can shape the future is not mere rhetoric; next to parents and family, teachers are probably the most influential figures in a person's life. I remember the English teacher who introduced me to Shakespeare's verbal mastery, the history teacher who made chronological and often dull texts come alive for me, the physics teacher who patiently explained to me the vagaries of scientific laws, trying to touch some part of my hopelessly unscientific mind.

All of these people had a profound effect on my life, enhancing it through the benefit of their knowledge and experience, shaping it by unearthing untapped talents and potentials. Perhaps it is this satisfaction in helping others realize their goals that causes teachers to sacrifice some of their own ambition and continue in an socially-denigrated profession.

Now when people ask me if I want to teach, my "no" answer is no longer based on some misguided notion that "bigger" opportunities await me, but on the practical admission that I don't have the dedication and selflessness that the teaching profession requires and respect for my father and the many others that do.

Career Day to feature 30 careers

By GREG LUCAS
News Staff

Students will have a chance to speak with representatives from 30 careers at the Arts and Letters Career Day, taking place Tuesday in the lower level of the Center for Continuing Education from 12 p.m. to 4 p.m.

Careers such as advertising, communications, health care, insurance, para-legal services and small business ownership will be represented.

"Career Day provides students with a perfect opportunity, in one afternoon, to get a wide range of information about a variety of careers," said Associate Director of Career and Placement Services Paul Reynolds.

Most career representatives also will distribute literature about the career to interested students.

Reynolds, who originated and has coordinated the program for eight years, said, "This is not a recruiting effort." He said the program is an informal chance for Notre Dame and Saint Mary's students to discuss career opportunities with people from the business world.

Although the program is designed primarily for upperclassmen in the College of Arts and Letters, all interested students are encouraged to come, said Reynolds. Career Day usually does not draw a large percentage of underclassmen, as most freshmen are uncertain of their major and are "not thinking three and a half years down the road," said Reynolds.

"The most important thing is not to be apprehensive to go up and talk to someone," Reynolds said. Students who go to Career Day will be given a map of the layout of the booths and a list of potential questions that could be asked. "The sheet of questions is meant to be used as a guideline to help students avoid simply wandering through," said Reynolds.

It is also important to remember the business people at Career Day are not there to represent their companies, so much as to give students better insight and perspective into the career in general, said Reynolds.

A large part of the success of Career Day could be attributed the amount of time that is put into planning it. Reynolds said he has to begin the general planning of next year's program on the day after graduation.

In the eight years since the origin of the program, Career Day has typically attracted about 400 students per year. Reynolds reported companies and business people also have expressed strong enthusiasm for the program.

Reynolds said he always receives positive comments from the career people about the attitudes of the students who attend.

Rivers receding after Midwest flooding

Associated Press

Rivers slowly receded Sunday from record flood crests in Oklahoma and Illinois, where an estimated 45,000 people were forced from their homes over the past week, and more were evacuated in parts of Missouri.

Water crested during the night at one Oklahoma city at a record 18 feet above flood stage, leaving snakes swimming for safety, and a levee break flooded a Missouri town.

Little or no rain fell Sunday across the region, which got up to 2 feet in the past week, but almost 12 inches of rain fell in 24 hours in Texas, causing scattered flooding around the western town of McCamey.

Damage in Illinois was estimated at $34 million Saturday.

There was no way to estimate damage in Missouri, said Steve Finefrock, a state Civil Defense official, but U.S. rep. James R. Jones estimated damage in his district at $140 million.

Finefrock said an estimated 30,000 people had left their homes at one time or another over the past week because of flooding. About 3,800 families or 15,000 people had sought shelter in Illinois, a state public health spokesman said Saturday. Hundreds more fled their homes in Missouri, and Kansas Adjutant General Ralph Tice estimated 1,500 to 2,000 had evacuated in his state.

nuclear explosion. ... It would be well nigh impossible."

James Bush, a retired Polaris submarine captain who is LaRocque's associate director at the center, said: "there is no danger of a nuclear weapons explosion on board. There is certainly a danger of a rupture of the nuclear reactor."

But if that happened, the sub would sink, he added, and "in the bottom of the ocean and 15,000 feet of water ... you would just not have a dangerous situation."

The Soviet Yankee class submarines are nuclear powered and designed to carry up to 16 missiles with nuclear warheads that can strike targets up to 1,800 miles away. The troubled sub was part of a fleet of Soviet subs that patrol off the U.S.

coast, poised to attack, just as American subs with missiles keep a similar watch off the Soviet Union.

But the U.S. submarines since 1960 have carried solid fuel missiles - a propellant less volatile than the liquid fuel that experts say most of the Soviet missiles still employ.

Pollock said that if that liquid fuel got mixed with oxidizers on the sub, "then they could have a jim-dandy fire," even under water. Such an all-encompassing fire could spew radioactive materials, but not on the magnitude of the damaged Soviet reactor of Chernobyl, he said.

Secretary of State George Shultz, asked on ABC TV's "This Week With David Brinkley" if one of the nuclear missiles targeted on the United States could be accidentally triggered, replied, "According to our experts, the answer is no."

opinion that the quotation definitely goes back to a historical Jesus, whereas a black vote would signify a conclusion that the passage, although attributed to Jesus, is in fact only an invention of the early Church. Following the discussions, a second poll will be taken.

The thirty-one "Kingdom sayings" make up a small part of the nearly five hundred sayings attributed to Jesus in the New Testament. At the conclusion of the Jesus Seminar participants hope to reach a consensus on these sayings according to the color key system, Collins said.

In addition the Jesus Seminar will be working toward reaching a consensus on all five hundred of Jesus' sayings. At the completion of the project, scholars hope to publish a color-coded edition of the New Testament which would distinguish between those sayings which are decidedly authentic, those which are probably authentic, and those which are believed to be simply inventions of early Church writers and teachers.

Pope attacks divorce, abortion

Associated Press

LYON, France -Pope John Paul II pursued his attacks on abortion and divorce during a rural Mass on Sunday, calling them signs of sickness in society, but his message evoked a tepid response from the audience.

On his second day of a four-day visit to France, the leader of the world's 800 million Roman Catholics was surrounded by heavy security as he traversed the countryside before returning to Lyon late Sunday.

Police carefully scrutinized the crowds at the Mass in the Burgundy town of Paray-Le-Monial and during an earlier visit to a small ecumenical community called Taize.

At Taize, pathways used for contemplative walks were thick with gendarmes. A bell-tower was converted into a watchtower with sharpshooters at the ready. Security men peered out from neighboring corn fields and cow pastures.

John Paul said at the Mass that rising abortion and divorce rates were signs that modern civilization is developing a "heart of stone."

Speaking in an open field of green grass before an estimated crowd of 100,000 people waving colored scarves, the pope urged Catholics to work at conserving "a heart of flesh, a heart that has a human sensibility and a heart that lets itself be conquered by the Holy Spirit."

He said the increasing number of broken families and abortions were "signs of a real and true sickness that hits at people, couples, children and society itself."

He noted that economic conditions, influences of society, uncertainty about the future and other reasons are put forward as explanations, but said "this cannot . . . justify that a fundamental good be abandoned, that of the stable unity of the family."

There was polite applause as the pope spoke out against abortion, but the overall response seemed subdued.

Though 80 percent of the French people consider themselves Catholic, polls indicate a steady erosion in the number who attend Mass regularly and who support the pope's positions on moral issues, particularly sexual matters.

Healthy games can become dangerous obsessions

We live in an obsessive culture. We want the best, the most, the greatest, and we are willing to sacrifice our health, our families and our bank rolls to achieve "the good life."

Carol Brown

on second thought

Gone is the casual jogger, the devoted family man, and the laid-back college student of yesteryear. Instead we have the fitness freak, the stressed workaholic executive, and the overachieving study monster.

The weekend jogger is now training for the marathon. What was once an invigorating romp along the beach has become a mad pursuit of endurance and stress fractures. Why are these emaciated, knob-kneed, drawn-faced sadomasochists running themselves into the ground? For health, of course.

And what about the young women who are so obsessed with being thin that they are starving themselves. Why? Because being so thin you can see your bones leads to a successful, better life. . . right?

Here is a classic: the workaholic father who has pushed his blood pressure to new heights. Now that is achievement. Maybe he is a little stressed now, but when he gets that new Porsche he will finally be happy, right? Oh, but remember he is doing it all to make a "better" life for his family. Tell that to his family when daddy misses Junior's birthday, and is too busy to realize his marriage is falling apart until mommy files for divorce.

Then there is the college student who has learned all he knows about college life from books. So what if he's never seen a football game or been to an SYR; he has a 4.0 and an ulcer to prove it.

In our obsessiveness we have actually created modern diseases. Stress and anorexia rate in the top ten. Maybe I missed the boat, but since when have self-denial and overwork become virtues? ("Hey, you know I really admire that guy. He's a big-time self-denialist.") Come on.

What are we pushing for? Why do we work ourselves into the ground? In search of a better life? In search of happiness? Sorry, it just doesn't work that way.

Sure, goals are important. We have to work for something right? Right. But how far are we willing to go?

The only real goal is to live how we want to live. Of course, maybe we want to live as obsessive health nuts, workaholics and throats. But will the happiness we are striving for, sweating for and sacrificing relationships for be there when we finally reach perfection? Can we ever reach perfection?

The point is, perfection does not equal happiness. We can never be thin enough, rich enough or smart enough to make ourselves happy. I forget who it was who said that happiness is not something we can reach for, it just happens along the way. We want happiness so much that we deny ourselves the freedom to be happy. We work too hard for it. Maybe three jobs and two ulcers later we will realize that it was there all along. We were just too busy to see it. But why waste 60 years to discover this?

This is not an article written by a leftover flower child as a plug against goals and ambition. Go for it! Just know when to stop. If the cost is your friends, family, health, or sense of humor, the price is too high.

If your nose has been in a book so long you have forgotten that grass is green, if you have had more meetings with your boss than you have had with your family, if you are working out so much that you are too tired to toss a football with friends, stop and look at yourself. What is it all worth? Has a healthy pursuit become an obsession? How much is too much?

Blair Sabol, former fitness addict and health columnist for Mademoiselle, in changing her obsessive attitude toward fitness wrote: "I find it very boring to get so pure. You have to have a vice. You have to smoke or you have to have a Scotch. You need a little friendly bacteria in you" (Chicago Tribune, Sept. 28, 1986).

She is right. Everyone needs to skip a class, splurge on something totally impractical, take an extended vacation or indulge in a double-thick cookie crumble shake occasionally (I know I do).

P.O. Box Q

Nicaraguan gives first hand account of reign

Dear Editor:

Jurgen Brauer's article of Sept. 23 was interesting, but inaccurate. And as for the summer, I was going to school, and all my friends at Notre Dame were working or studying, not whiling away the while.

As a Nicaraguan citizen I can tell you that the road the Sandinistas have taken is of their own choosing and not due to military pressure. As early as December of 1979, just 5 months after Somoza's departure, they were cracking down on freedom of the press. I know so from first hand experience, not from 3rd or 5th witness accounts. I was told to shut my mouth by a Sandinista officer for inquiring about the shutting down of a small paper that had sprung up. The man had a gun as well. So much for the press freedom we were to enjoy. . . I dare not ask about LaPrensas "infinite shutdown" now.

Early in 1980 one of the Orega brothers made a statement about economic policy: "We shall hang all the bourgeoisie from trees along Nicaragua's roads." This is their idea of mixed company, before the contras were of any significance.

That 67% of the vote you quote is the count only of those who voted. Most people did not vote. Arturo Cruz, former Sandinista Ambassador to Washington, formed a coalition that included most independent parties and withdrew because they had reason to believe that there would be no respect for the final vote. The censorship prevailing then was lifted for two weeks before the election. That is not enough time to educate 3 million people on the views of a political party, is it? Your saying that those elections were valid is like asking me to believe what Bayardo Arce said before the elections: "Elections in Nicaragua will not be a bourgeoisie raffle; the people of Nicaragua have already chosen the Sandinista Party as their popular Vanguard."

And here is where the misconception lies. The afternoon that I hid two kids in my jeep and drove them away from the National Guard I did it to help them and cooperate in the national effort to oust Somoza. I could have been shot along with them that afternoon, but the last people in my mind were the Sandinistas. And most Nicaraguans acted in this fashion; rich, poor, middle class.

It was a time all Nicaraguans were united behind one national effort, and that was to oust Somoza. Pegged to this was the idea of freedoms. No one had in mind to hand power to nine thugs.

And how do they maintain power if most people do not like them? It is simple; they intimidate people. Guns are extremely useful for this, and there are other methods of coercion. Food rationing and neighborhood spy committees where the head receives perks from the government. This happens in Nicaragua. It creates an environment of fear which keeps most people in line. Another fear-some practice are jails, many of which are located in suburban homes.

The standard of living has sharply declined. By their own admission, exports were close to a billion in 1978, they are now about 300 million. Food rationing and coupons are used now. Cooking oil is now Russian bear fat, which gives food a rancid taste. I can remember taking polio vaccines in the early 1960's, for free. Much of what the Sandinistas boast is mythological. This decline began before the contras were of any significance. There is no meat in the markets and the contras do not function in the cattle growing regions yet. It is a propaganda feat to blame the contras.

Education is better, you say? I do not agree. Do you know how they teach children to add? By drawing rifles and hand grenades on a piece of paper...one hand grenade plus one hand grenade equals two. Do you know how they teach them to read? With thoroughly politicized material, slogans included. This is not education, this is brainwashing to serve the aims of a political party.

The Sandinistas have intentions for Central America as well. This has been shown beyond any doubt by the capture of arms shipments in Honduras of trucks destined to El Salvador. It has been shown by captured Honduran subversives who were trained in Nicaragua by Cubans, and captured terrorists in Costa Rica with connections to the Nicaraguan embassy there. Nicaragua is a safe haven for all Central American subversive groups. You may see their leader resting in Nicaragua and well guarded.

The victims in Nicaragua are the victims of the Sandinistas. We welcome the help we receive from the United States and the more supplies we receive the more people will join the contras.

The contras are men and women, living heroes, who risk their lives every day to fight Sandinista tyranny. The Sandinistas deserve to be held by the nose and kicked in the pants. They are following dictator Somoza's footsteps at a quicker pace.

The Sandinistas do not negotiate with us because any of our demands are mortal to them: freedom of assembly, freedom of press, free speech, free elections, respect for honestly acquired property. We will settle for no less and there is no reason why we should.

There are many tough situations in life requiring courage, and I certainly have both courage and backbone to see the situation in Nicaragua as it has developed.

Students 'capitalize' on learning opportunity

features writer

Washington D.C. is one of the best cities to learn about the duties and responsibilities of professionals by working alongside them. This past summer three Notre Dame students took advantage of an opportunity to live and work in Washington. Seniors Sophie Twarog, Dave Immonen and Mike Hofbauer experienced the challenges and excitement that this fast-paced city offers.

Twarog spent her summer working in Washington through Notre Dame's Kellogg Institute for International Studies. The Institute offers three human rights programs for work abroad: Washington Office of Latin America, Organization of American States and the Center of Concerns through which Twarog was employed.

With an $800 grant, Twrog spent two months studying the effect of third-world debt on the poor in underdeveloped countries. Her main objective was assisting Notre Dame economics Professor Ken Jameson in composing a paper dealing with this issue. The completed paper will be released later at a conference on debt.

Twarog had access to the Library of Congress for her research on the origin of the debt crisis. However, her task was not only researching the debt, but also performing general office duties such as answering phones and holding weekly Wednesday luncheons. While touring the city in her spare time Twarog attended congressional hearings, visited the World Bank, various museums, music festivals, and the Hispanic Festival.

By working in Washington Twarog was better able to understand and take a new perspective on the third-world debt crisis. This is an important topic for her because she plans to pursue a career in developmental economics or public health.

Twarog considers the city "a community--not just a work place."

"I love it," she said, "All of its people are like one great museum--and I love museums."

An economics major, Dave Immonen, felt lucky to hold a position in the International Trade Commission dealing with the Japan/United States trade relations. For three months Immonen was on special duty in the trade representative office which regulates the President's trade negotiations team.

It was Immonen's job to stay on top of the issues. His main responsibility was monitoring the trade affairs between the two countries, and his work consisted of a great deal of writing, statistical analyzing and reading.

Using current statistics, Immonen generated reports to help answer questions from congressmen during the several congressional hearings that he covered.

Although Immonen has traveled to Washington many times, he still finds the city "a great place to be." During his stay he attended concerts in small clubs to hear the bands he had been following, and he also visited art exhibits and theaters.

Accounting major Mike Hofbauer learned first-hand what duties an accountant performs by working in Washington. Hofbauer was employed for two and one-half months at Ernst and Whinney accounting firm where he was responsible for auditing financial statements for a hospital, a trade association and various other corporations.

During the summer he reaffirmed his career goals by taking a look at what he would be doing in the future. Having performed the tasks for which he is now studying has been beneficial for Hofbauer--particularly in his auditing class where he had on-the-job experience.

"There was always something to do in the city," said Hofbauer.

His favorite activities were playing squash, softball and especially volleyball near the Potomac. Other sites of interest included a sidewalk cafe adjoining a bookstore and all-night cafes hosting live bands. While in town Hofbauer also attended the Monkees concert, but what impressed him the most was the Fourth of July celebration on the White House Mall with its bands, fireworks and national symphony.

"It was just like a huge party," said Hofbauer.

For these three students, Washington D.C. proved to be an interesting city for working, learning and having fun.

Martial arts are physically fun

features writer

The martial arts are alive and well at Notre Dame. On campus there are currently three different styles taught: two by student teachers and one by a local teacher. This allows the students to pick the style best suited for their needs and desires. One caveat, those seeking to emulate Bruce Lee movies have to look somewhere else, as control is the first rule of the arts.

The exact history of the martial arts is lost in the mists of time. Legend has it that it accompanied Buddhism from India into China with the monk Bodhidharma. Bodhidharma spent seven years on a mountain top in front of a wall waiting for students. According to the myth, he "learned to listen to the noise of the ants screaming." When the students arrived, they had trouble staying awake due to his long teachings and meditation periods. Bodhidharma developed a series of exercises designed to keep his students awake.

These exercises stressed breathing and stretching. They gave strength to limbs and vitality to the breath. The movements imitated those of the animals. These teachings became the basis for the Shaolin temple in China.

As the Chinese empire grew and its culture spread, other cultures were exposed to the martial arts. The arts were imitated and copied to suit the needs and limits of the culture. When the arts were transported to the West, they were modified even more. There is no longer any one "pure" style. They are all variations of a central theme.

The martial arts began as part of a religion. In China they are still taught in conjunction with philosophy and religion. The West has stripped the religious aspect from the arts and uses the systems simply for self-defense and physical conditioning. Some Western instructors feel this is unfortunate and attempt to include the philosophical teachings of the martial arts in their teachings.

One such person is David Scott who heads the Notre Dame Kung Fu Club and teaches Northern Shaolin Red Dragon style to his 15 to 20 students. Scott believes that harmony is the key to Kung Fu. One does not meet a hard attack with a hard attack because that breaks the harmony. In Kung Fu, one turns the attackers force against him and redirects the attack. In practice it is similar to ballet: a precision ballet of mind, spirit, and body.

The techniques taught are partially for conditioning and partially for self-defense. Kung Fu does not require a person of immense strength or height since the purpose is to use the attackers own force against him. Kung Fu is a way of life for its students.

Scott teaches Kung Fu every Monday from 7 to 9 p.m. and from 6 to 8 p.m. on Saturday. Classes are held at the Rockne Memorial in room 219. He charges $75 per semester but he does not charge for testing.

The Notre Dame Martial Arts Institute is headed by Gary Cooper. Its students learn both Tae Kwon Do and Jui Jitsu. Tae Kwon Do is a traditional martial art that promotes defense through a strong offense. It involves many strikes with both the feet and hands. Jui Jitsu teaches defense through defense.

Though self-defense is one of the club's purposes, its main purpose is fun. The club attends tournaments each semester where students can test their skills against others. What motivates the Institute's students? Most join to learn self-defense and have fun; they stick with it for the challenge.

Cooper's class meets on Fridays from 4 to 6 p.m. and from 6 to 8 p.m. on Sundays. Classes are also held in room 219 of Rockne Memorial. The charge is $45 per semester with an extra charge for testing.

The Tae Kwon Do club is taught by local martial artist, Steve Travis. Travis has been teaching Tae Kwon Do in the Mishawaka area since 1975. The primary purpose of the club is self-defense, followed by physical and mental conditioning. Travis believes that self-defense begins in the mind, and a practitioner of Tae Kwon Do should have enough control over his actions to either stun, maim or kill an opponent, depending on the circumstances. Sparring is taught so students can learn to react, block and attack. This helps the students who attend the many tournaments in which the club participates.

The club meets every Thursday from 7 to 8:30 p.m. in the Athletic and Convocation Center. The charge is $45 per semester with an extra charge for testing.

The martial arts are hard work. They require many hours of exercise and attention to detail. But the students feel that the end result is well worth the physical pain. Students do not have to be physically fit to join one of the martial arts classes. All styles teach physical conditioning along with their techniques.

Men's cross country slowed by rain

By KATHLEEN MCKERNAN
Sports Writer

The Notre Dame men's cross-country team splashed through the Burke Memorial Golf Course Friday on its way to a 10th-place finish in its own Notre Dame Invitational.

"We just ran terrible," said sophomore Dan Markezich. "It was not a good meet. Everyone ran bad -except Mike O'Connor."

The freshman O'Connor, turning in his second-consecutive solid performance, finished third with a respectable 24:59 run in the swampy course.

"It was a mess," freshman Tom O'Rourke said. "It was the muddiest meet I've ever been in. It had been raining all week, so the course was really slowed down."

"The course was a lot worse than last week," Markezich agreed. "There was a big lake that we had to run through right in the middle of the course."

Lake is hardly an exaggeration for the puddle the Irish and the other teams, which included last week's National Catholic champs St. Thomas, had to swim through.

"The lake was knee-deep," O'Rourke said. "We had to go through it three times -and there was no way around it."

Nine of the 13 other teams finished ahead of the Irish. Eastern Michigan came away with the championship. Edinboro finished second and St. Thomas came in third. Also ahead of the Irish in team competition were Bowling Green, South Florida, Mankato State, Malone, North Central and Wisconsin-Lacrosse.

Individually, Ron Johnson of Central Michigan came in first with a 24:54 run. Eastern Michigan's Don Johns placed second at 24:55. Notre Dame's O'Connor, coming off a fourth-place finish at the National Catholic Invitational, improved his placing to third and lost only 19 seconds off his time despite the swamp.

Notre Dame's other runners didn't do so well. Dan Garrett's 25:35 was not bad considering the course's condition. He finished 21st overall. Markezich came in 59th; Tom O'Rourke ran the course in 26:43; co-captain Rick Mulvey turned in a 26:57 mark and finished 76th in the 96-man field.

Notre Dame's difficulties in staying together as a group during the race became apparent with the distances between the runners.

"We have been trying to run as a group," O'Rourke said. "We do it in practice, but we get in a meet and it doesn't seem to work. If we want to win, we really have to do it. But we're all different types of runners, so it's tough."

"We're sort of looking forward to getting off our course in a couple of weeks," O'Rourke continued. "We haven't done that well here."

In addition to their poor showing Friday, the Irish finished fifth in the National Catholic Invite and lost to Ohio State in a triangular with the Buckeyes and Michigan State.

"It just was not a good meet," Markezich concluded, "but we have two weeks to get ready for the Indiana Intercollegiate in Terre Haute on October 17."

to pass the Irish back into contention. Both signal-caller Terry Andrysiak and Beuerlein, who suffered a concussion on the Bennett hit and was woozy for much of the game, did a nice job running for their lives, but it proved impossible to get any offense generated.

"In the second half, it just got very frustrating," said Andrysiak, who went 3-of-12 with one interception in the second half after a good (five-of-six) first half. "We weren't moving the ball and they dominated. It was very distracting. It takes your mind off the game because every time you go to the line you're looking to see where they're coming from."

Notre Dame's offensive numbers in the second half reflected the Tide's awesome defensive effort: zero points allowed, four turnovers, 3-of-17 passing, a total of 98 net yards.

"Their pass rush was the key to the game," said Beuerlein. "They put a lot of pressure from the outside and they took us right out of it in the third quarter. One thing is for sure; that Bennett gave me a couple of good whacks today."

Perhaps Beuerlein can find some consolation in the fact that he's not the only one to ride on the Tide's Bennett all the way to the turf. Bennett already has five sacks this year to go along with his career mark of 21 caught-behind-line plays.

"The game was won by great defense the entire game," said Alabama head coach Ray Perkins. "Bennett is a prototype linebacker, at least one of the top five players in America."

Perkins would get no argument from the Irish.

Sobering Advice can save a life

Irish volleyball earns first shutout, breezes past Marquette, DePaul

By RICK RIETBROCK
Sports Writer

There have been a lot of storms with high winds in South Bend lately. But this past weekend, Notre Dame volleyball opponents were the only ones getting blown away.

The Irish started the weekend by breezing past Marquette, 15-2, 15-6, 15-2. DePaul was next, and the Irish dumped the Demons, 15-2, 15-0, 15-4, in the most lopsided win in Notre Dame history.

The shutout in the second game was the first ever recorded by Notre Dame.

Head Coach Art Lambert said the Irish are where they want to be now.

"This string of road games we have coming up is what it's all about," he said. "This is crunch time and if we approach each game with the same attitude and same effort, I have every confidence that we'll do very well."

The easy weekend began with Marquette taking a 2-0 lead, but it was short-lived. Maureen Shea and Whitney Shewman turned things around quickly, with six kills in a run of 10 straight points that paved the way to an Irish victory.

The second game started slowly and Marquette used several tips to grab a 6-5 lead. This time it was Gretchen Kraus and Kathy Cunningham that led the Irish charge to a 15-6 victory.

The 5-6 deficit was the last one the Irish faced all weekend.

The final game was rather sloppy, but the Irish were never threatened and took an easy 15-2 victory.

But things were even more fun against DePaul.

DePaul came into the season ranked 11th by Midwestern coaches, but the Blue Demons could not compete against Lambert's squad.

The first game featured fine play from Mary Kay Waller, Shewman and Cunningham against DePaul's attack of tips and dinks. The Irish won 15-2.

The next game made history. Zanette Bennett started with three quick kills to go with a pair of Cunningham aces, a Waller kill and a DePaul receiving error to give Notre Dame a quick 7-0 lead.

The Irish continued to use strong blocking and DePaul errors to get the whitewash.

The Irish finished with a 15-4 rout to complete the weekend.

Lambert was a bit surprised with the ease of the victories, and added that his team did not play all that well.

"I thought we'd beat them, but not by that much," he said. "I'm absolutely thrilled with the victory, but I never thought we got in sync either offensively or defensively. We didn't really pass that well, either."

Lambert said he was especially pleased with the play of Bennett, who had been switched from the middle-blocker position to an outside hitter.

"Zanette's made the change, and it's not that easy," he said. "She changed up some of her shots and kept in her rhythm better than she had been."

The match also marked the first appearance of the "Z Corner" at the ACC. Several students hung a "Z" from the bleachers for each of Bennett's kills, an answer to various "K" corners at baseball games.

The Irish are now 12-4, their best start in history, and are headed for a string of road matches that begins with a Tuesday match at Illinois State.

Women fall to Detroit

By THERESA KELLY
Sports Writer

The Notre Dame women's cross-country team ran into hard times against the University of Detroit Saturday. The Detroit team placed the second-through-fifth finishers to win the dual meet between the two schools.

Irish runner Julia Merkel won the race, establishing a course record of 19:02 for the 5000-meter course. Merkel led from the outset and continued to widen her lead throughout the race.

"Julia ran very well," said Coach Dan Ryan of his number-one runner. "She is always in the hunt to win every race we run."

Sophomore Theresa Rice also ran well, placing sixth overall and second for Notre Dame with a time of 20:06. In what is only her first year running cross country, Rice has become an important part of the Irish team.

"As she becomes adjusted to the sport, Theresa has run better and better," said Ryan.

The rest of the Notre Dame team did not fare so well on soggy Burke Memorial Golf Course. The entire Detroit team finished ahead of the Irish number-three runner. The teams appeared evenly-matched in two previous meetings, each finishing ahead of the other once at the Hillside Invitational and the National Catholic Cross Country Championships. Detroit definitely proved itself against the Irish here Saturday, however.

"We should have been more competitive," said Ryan, who was disappointed with the 2:01 time-gap between his first- and fifth-place finishers.

"The gap has usually been between 1:24 and 1:37," said Ryan. He attributed Notre Dame's poor showing to lack of competitiveness and the illness of freshman runner Linda Filar. Usually the number-two finisher for the Irish, Filar ran the race, but was slowed by weakness caused by an upper respiratory infection.

The Irish hope to bounce back with a good race Saturday at the Southwestern Michigan Invitational.

Eagles stop potent Falcon offense

Associated Press

Everything that was perfect turned imperfect for the Atlanta Falcons yesterday.

They took the NFL's top-ranked offense, a 16-of-16 success ratio when they took the ball inside the 20-yard line and a 4-0 record into yesterday's game against Philadelphia.

But the Eagles stopped the Falcons from scoring when they went inside the 10 on their first two possessions and went on to win, 16-0, Philadelphia's first shutout since 1981.

In other early games Sunday, it was Cincinnati 34, Green Bay 28; Cleveland 27, Pittsburgh 24; Detroit 24, Houston 13; Los Angeles Raiders 24, Kansas City 17; New England 34, Miami 7; Chicago 23, Minnesota 0; New York Giants 13, St. Louis 6; and Washington 14, New Orleans 6.

The Eagles' offense struggled early, but Junior Tautalatasi and Ron Johnson turned short passes into long gains to set up a touchdown and field goal late in the first half.

Raiders 24, Chiefs 17
Jim Plunkett fired the go-ahead touchdown pass and the Los Angeles Raiders, helped by a "communications breakdown" when the video replay official tried to disallow an earlier score, rallied to beat Kansas City.

Jack Reader, the official in the video replay booth, ruled that Dokie Williams was out of bounds on a 12-yard touchdown pass from Marc Wilson in the second period. But umpire Jim Keck misunderstood Reader and mistakenly let the play stand.

Williams' score was the first of three straight Los Angeles touchdowns as the Raiders erased a 17-0 deficit. After Williams' controversial catch, Napoleon McCallum scored his first NFL touchdown on a 12-yard run and Plunkett, off the bench when Wilson suffered a hand injury, put the Raiders on top with an 18-yard touchdown pass to Jesse Hester.

Patriots 34, Dolphins 7
Tony Eason threw two touchdown passes and New England scored on five of its six first-half possessions as Miami fell to 1-4 for the first time since Don Shula became coach in 1970.

Eason, who completed 12-of-16 passes, threw touchdown passes of 2 yards to Willie Scott and 38 yards to Irving Fryar before suffering bruised and possibly fractured ribs in the final minute of the first half when he was sacked by Mack Moore.

Crimson Tide rolls to 28-10 victory over Irish

The Observer/Justin Smith

Alabama's Cornelius Bennett (97) zeroes in on Notre Dame tailback Mark Green (24) in the Crimson Tide's 28-10 victory over the Irish on Saturday. Marty Burns has the game's details at right, and features the play of the highly-regarded Bennett below.

Alabama's impressive win was easy as one-two-three

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. -All in all, Alabama's 28-10 victory over Notre Dame was as simple as one-two-three.

One punt return by speedy 'Bama wide out Greg Richardson, two crucial scores by even speedier 'Bama wide out Al Bell and three touchdown passes by senior quarterback Mike Shula added up to a Crimson Tide whipping over the Irish before 75,808 noisy Legion Field patrons.

The impressive win upped second-ranked Alabama's season record to a perfect 5-0, while Notre Dame, still struggling to put all the pieces together under Head Coach Lou Holtz, fell to 1-3.

The big-play offense and special teams of the Crimson Tide may have put the points on the board and won the headlines, but it was a fine defensive effort on both sides of the ball that characterized the contest. And, ultimately, it was the stronger defense of Alabama, led by the incessant attack of Tide linebacker Cornelius Bennett, that decided the ballgame.

"I really must pay special tribute to a fine, fine Alabama football team," said Holtz. "They came prepared to play, and it was no fluke. The better team won today.

"Bennett and the whole team can put tremendous pressure on you, and they forced us into a lot of turnovers."

On the day, the Irish committed five turnovers, two of which were promptly converted into touchdown scores for Alabama. The Crimson Tide, meanwhile, were hurt by only one of their three turnovers, when Irish quarterback Steve Beuerlein connected with flanker Tim Brown on an eight-yard scoring pass after Shula had the ball jarred loose at his own 11-yard line by Notre Dame linebacker Darrell Gordon. That touchdown pass pulled the Irish within a touchdown at 14-7, but it was as close as they would get.

But, as has been the case all season for Notre Dame, mistakes in the kicking game and poor coverage on one or two plays allowed the stymied Alabama offense to put points on the scoreboard.

"It shouldn't have been so high-scoring because the defense on both sides of the ball played hard," said Gordon. "But it was the one or two big plays we gave up that beat us. We shut down their run, but then the big play hurt us."

Bennett sparks Alabama defense

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. -He came like a Crimson Tidal Wave out of the Bermuda Triangle.

Cornelius Bennett, a.k.a. 'Biscuit,' charged out from behind the Alabama defensive line, whipped past two surprised Notre Dame blockers, and let his 6-4, 235-pound mass sail full force into Irish quarterback Steve Beuerlein's chest.

Ouch! Beuerlein, who was attempting to run a naked bootleg and who therefore never saw Bennett until immediately before impact, hit the ground horizontally and laid there for a few minutes without moving.

"I never saw anything, I just felt the hit," said a still-dazed Beuerlein after the game. "I remember getting up slowly and looking around. Everybody was talking to me but I couldn't hear their voices."

Around Oklahoma, they call what Bennett did a 'Boz' in honor of bad-boy Sooner linebacker Brian Bosworth. Bennett, however, does not like to get too excited about great hits that disable players, as his main opposition to the Outland and Butkus Trophies does in Oklahoma. Well, maybe he gets a little excited.

"Well, you know I don't try to hurt anybody but that's my job," said Bennett. "My mind was made up before the play started to go get him, and nobody picked me up. I just had a big smile the whole day because I really did have some fun today."

"That hit he made?," asked teammate Curt Jarvis, who recorded a 13-yard sack of his own that spoiled one Notre Dame drive. "That was probably one of the most vicious licks I've ever seen on a quarterback. I think that kind of set the tempo for the rest of the day."

Irish players were a bit more certain than Jarvis that Bennett's hit turned the momentum around for good. The capacity crowd of well over 75,000 literally shook the ancient rafters of Legion Field with delight at the hit, and then continued hollering while Beuerlein and Notre Dame stalled on the drive. That exuberance turned into absolute mayhem on the ensuing punt when 'Bama's Greg Richardson returned the kick 66 yards for a touchdown to put the Tide up for good at 7-0. Incidentally, the last player who had a shot at Richardson, Irish punter Dan Sorenson, was taken out by -who else -Bennett.

"Bennett and the whole team played extremely well," said Holtz. "His quickness, especially on the astroturf, is amazing. That (sack) really gave them the momentum and excited that crowd."

Things turned from bad to worse in the second half, as Bennett and crew really began penetrating toward whatever Notre Dame quarterback happened to be in the game trying Losing streak continues as soccer team drops pair

Special to The Observer

The Notre Dame soccer team dropped two contests over the weekend.

On Friday against Wisconsin, the Irish took a 1-0 lead on midfielder Rolfe Behrje's goal, but the Badgers scored twice and downed Notre Dame, 2-1.

Yesterday the Irish traveled to Milwaukee to take on Marquette. The Warriors scored the first goal of the game, but Notre Dame's Joe Sternberg evened the score at 1-1. Marquette, however, notched the game-winning goal with less than 20 minutes to play to give the Warriors a 2-1 victory.

This game, much like the Bowling Green contest, was very physical, with 60 fouls and six yellow cards issued by the referee.

The losses extended the team's losing streak to three games and left it with a 9-4 record.

Notre Dame faces regionally-ranked Akron tomorrow on Alumni Field at 3 p.m. This is the team's only home game in the month of October.

Notre Dame joins growing list of NCAA ticket-violators

Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS- Notre Dame, along with three other Indiana schools- Ball State, Purdue and Indiana State- has been added to the growing list of universities with some football players in violation of an NCAA rule on the use of complimentary tickets.

In compliance with the NCAA guideline, each university has suspended complimentary game pass privileges for those athletes in violation.

Indiana confirmed Wednesday that 26 of its football players had lost all or part of their four-ticket complimentary allotment for the season.

When contacted by the Indianapolis News by telephone last Thursday, representatives from Notre Dame, Ball State and Purdue revealed that some of their players also were in violation.

Notre Dame Athletic Director Gene Corrigan said the figure was confidential, "but it was a fairly good number."

Under last year's NCAA guidelines, each player was allotted four tickets per game, which he could distribute only to family members and fellow students. As an example, girlfriends who didn't attend the school were not eligible for a ticket. The athlete was not allowed to give the passes to anyone else or sell them. The players who violated the ticket rule lost one ticket per infraction, but did not lose any eligibility.

"My viewpoint of NCAA rules is that you've got to do your darndest to stay within the framework," said King. "But you can stumble over some of those rules and not even know what you are doing sometimes and break 'em."

"The whole thing irks me," said IU coach Bill Mallory. When a kid loses his tickets because of last year, it's a shame. It's a ridiculous rule.

"It's been awhile since something has come out that has got me more uptight than this."

"It's nit-picking," said Corrigan. "The regulation was designed to prevent players from selling tickets for a profit."

None of the five Indiana schools was found in violation of selling tickets since the players never have possession of the actual tickets. Their guests are on a pass list.

Still, Mallory said he had no qualms about players selling tickets.

"They have four tickets and they can do what they want with them. Students will be out there selling them. They'll scalp 'em. If they've got some games where they can pick some extra bucks up on, I don't think there's anything wrong with that. It's been going on a long time."

Representatives from all five universities felt the penalties were too severe for the crime.

"I think we need to take a look at it after all of this has shaken down," said Corrigan. "I hate to see the players penalized for leaving a ticket for a friend, but unfortunately we had to take some tickets away."

In one case at Notre Dame, a player left a ticket for a high school coach. As it turned out, the coach could have received a ticket from the Notre Dame coaching staff.

"A family gets to be rather nebulous sometime," said King. "How far does family go? Stepfather? Common-law mother and father? It's a rule that needs to be looked at carefully to see that some legitimate people don't get penalized."
