HPC hears senate resolution

By REGIS COCCIA
Assistant News Editor

A Student Senate proposal calling for divestment of the University's holdings in South Africa was one of the topics discussed at Tuesday night's Hall Presidents' Council meeting.

Student Senator John Gardiner reported on the Senate's vote on a resolution to impose a deadline for University divestment. According to Gardiner, "the close margin of the vote shows how sensitive an issue it is." "I think a lot of students want divestment," Gardiner added.

"According to the referendum held in March, 60 percent of the students who had an opinion on divestment wanted the University to divest," said Gardiner. Responding to a question regarding the University's involvement, Gardiner said: "I think that Notre Dame's investment in South Africa is about 9 percent of the endowment, about 33 million dollars."

Gardiner said the movie "Witness to Apartheid" will be shown at the CSC Wednesday at 7:30 P.M. and a candlelight vigil will be held Thursday night at 7:30 at the War Memorial. Also, there will be a rally/vigil on Friday at 12:15 P.M. at the CCE (where the Board of Trustees will meet).

Dan Van Hartsma of the Academic Commission of Student Government addressed the council regarding the Faculty Course Evaluation, a computerized listing of course instructor ratings.

SMC Programming Board responds to surveys

By KAREN WEBB

Responses on the success of student government awareness surveys given to students Tuesday night in Saint Mary's dining hall were presented at Saint Mary's Programming Board meeting Tuesday night.

"The questions were good, but dinner time's not a good time to do it," said Vice President of McCandless Lisa Montpetit.

"People usually object to surveys because it's an invasion of privacy," said Calendar Commissioner Mary Carol Cahill, also suggesting the survey, which was given orally, should have been presented beforehand by R.A.'s or through campus mail.

"Freshmen had no clue," said Athletic Commissioner Kim Drahota. "They didn't know positions, offices, anything."

Woman sentenced for Hurley mishap

By MARK PANKOWSKI
News Editor

The South Bend woman who plead guilty to leaving the scene of the accident involving Kevin Hurley was sentenced Tuesday in St. Joseph County Superior Court, her attorney said.

Mary Beth Gallivan, 24, was fined $1,000 and ordered to spend Sundays in the county jail for three months, attorney Victor McFadden said.

In addition, Judge Jerome Frese placed Gallivan on four years' probation and suspended her driver's license for the same period of time, McFadden said. Frese also ordered Gallivan to work eight hours per week at the Northern Indiana State Hospital during her probationary term.

Gallivan had pleaded guilty on Sept. 17 to leaving the scene of an accident involving a serious bodily injury, a Class D felony. The charge carries with it a maximum sentence of 10 years in prison and a $10,000 fine.

"I thought (Frese's) sentencing was at least fair, and possibly much more understandingly made than many sentences I've seen over the years," McFadden said.

Hurley, an 18-year-old Howard Hall freshman at the time, suffered a crushed right leg, a bruised lung and numerous abdominal and head injuries in the accident.

His right leg was amputated below the knee, and he remained in a coma for three months. Returning to Notre Dame this past weekend, Hurley said he has been undergoing rehabilitation since December, 1986, and is now attending classes at a private school.

During Tuesday's sentencing, Hurley's parents spoke for approximately 1 1/2 hours about their son's injuries, McFadden said. "It was a sad thing," he said. "(Mrs. Hurley) talked of his survival as being miraculous."

McFadden said the family's attorney, Robert Canty, also spoke at the hearing.

"He essentially asked that Gallivan be required to work with people with serious injuries, particularly head injuries with disabling results," said McFadden.

Frese followed that recommendation by ordering Gallivan to work specifically with those with mental disabilities, McFadden said.

"It was a tough decision for him to make," McFadden said. "There was no way to compensate the family for their grief and expenses . . ."

At her Sept. 17 plea hearing, Gallivan testified that she was driving north on U.S. 33 at about 2:30 a.m. Sept. 7, 1985, when she hit something that caused her windshield to break. Gallivan said she didn't stop even after the passenger in her car mentioned she might have hit someone.

Both turned themselves in to the St. Joseph County police about 12 hours after the accident. Her companion was not charged in the accident.

During her testimony, Gallivan admitted to drinking 1 1/2 beers before driving, but said she was sober at the time of the accident.

ND students create investment group

By SEAN HICKEY
News Staff

Seven Notre Dame entrepreneurs have initiated an investment group, according to Sam Siewert, a sophomore who is credited with the brainstorming idea.

Unlike the Morrissey Loan Fund, which is simply a student service that loans out money, the investment group is a partnership, according to Siewert.

"It is a partnership investment group...separate from the university," said Siewert. "Basically what we offer over other investment groups is a far smaller personal fee which would ordinarily stop the small-time investors from investing," he said.

Siewert said there were two reasons for setting up the investment group. "It's a chance to make money!" More importantly, however,

Siewert said "it is a chance for students who are interested in investing to brainstorm, get involved, and share experiences."

Siewert said his original idea was spurred on by an entrepreneurial contest currently being held at Notre Dame. "I talked to random students about my idea and found that there was intense interest," he said.

"An investment group works by drawing up a detailed partnership contract stating how the money will be handled, i.e. I.R.S. involvement, pooling initial resources of the group together to serve as a base, and then investing clients' money through a broker. The amount of profit or net profit at the end of cycle is determined by subtracting the brokerage fees and the service management fees from the gross profit," he said.

The legalities of forming an actual business seem complicated, but Siewert said "It is legal."

After consulting a lawyer, Siewert said the contract "is currently being discussed and written up in detail."

According to Siewert, some of these fine points include discussing how money will be handled and how profits, fees, and dividends will be divided. "The brokerage fees will be much less," added Siewert, and "divided proportionally to the amount of money invested by individuals" while management fees levied on individual profits "will cover the cost of running the group."

Siewert said the group decided on becoming a partnership because a corporation has virtually limitless legalities. In addition, he said

Police dogs to stop the panty raid? And you thought we have it bad

"Senate Censures Use Of K-9 Police To Stop Panty-Raids," the headline read. No wayyyyyy, I said.

But there it was, right on the front page of The Observer's April 20, 1967 issue: South Bend and St. Joseph County police had used dogs and tear gas to break up the annual panty raid.

According to the article, the Notre Dame Student Senate reacted by passing a resolution condemning the use of "K-9 dogs and tear-gas bombs as weapons against a harmless demonstration."

During the meeting, Student Body President Jim Fish said about 1,500 students participated in the panty raid on the Saint Mary's campus. Fish said he had gone to the police right after the disturbance ended.

"I was standing talking to one of the policeman when one of those mongrels lunged at me," Fish was quoted as saying. "I never saw such a big grin and bright eyes as I did on that mut. I ran for the nearest tree."

Because of their capture and subsequent identification during the panty raid, eight students received punishments ranging from indefinite probation to expulsion from their dorms, the article said.

One student said he was apprehended while returning to Notre Dame. "A cop came up and said to get into the car. I wasn't too willing to get in," he said. "I started to run, but I stopped when he said, 'Stop or I'll shoot!'"

The disciplinary action came as the result of the first of two panty raids on Saint Mary's that week. The first raid began after a shouting match between residents of Cavanaugh and Breen-Phillips halls. Firecrackers, cherry bombs and shouting attracted the attention of other halls' residents, the article said.

Shouting "We want panties" and "Go Irish," the crowd moved from the quad to U.S. 31. There a sheriff's car had the crossroads blocked, The Observer reported. The students moved around the car and across the road to the threats of the police.

Speaking on a public address system, one deputy told the students, "All right now, you guys, we'll give you one more chance to come back to your own side of the road before we set the dogs loose." The threat was met with jeers and dares, the article said.

The police managed to move the crowd from the front of Le Mans Hall. The students, however, then moved to the front lawn of McCandless, where they "were greeted by a shower of panties, bras, and Sunday pieces of female undergarments floating down," The Observer reported.

Mark Pankowski
News Editor

Police officers, arriving with billy clubs in hand, walked toward the students. The crowd then moved back to LeMans where they were met by police officers and their dogs, The Observer reported.

Held on a short leash, the dogs were walked in the general direction of the students, who were eventually herded back to U.S. 31.

Fish, speaking at the senate meeting, described the dogs as "150 to 200-pound monsters trained to mutilate whatever came within their reach, pulling along a 160-pound cop."

"In one instance the back of a student's coat was shredded like spaghetti," he said. "If it had been a student rather than a coat that monster had caught, there would have been serious injury."

And you thought we have it bad in 1986. At least our panty raids are safe, if not our off-campus parties.

Falwell to give lecture at ND

By CHRIS SKORCZ
Staff Reporter

Dr. Jerry Falwell, outspoken leader of the Moral Majority, will speak Thursday night at 7 in Washington Hall. The title of his lecture, sponsored by the Student Activities Board, is "The Evangelical Vote: Is it Monolithic?"

According to Steve Georgi of the SAB, Falwell will most likely use this lecture as an opportunity to discuss the issue of religious leaders, such as himself or televangelist Pat Robertson, running for public office. Falwell will discuss the likelihood that such a religious leader can persuade those sharing his faith to vote for him and effect a strong church-state relationship, Georgi said.

Falwell comes to Notre Dame free of charge. Georgi said that the SAB extended approximately thirty invitations last spring to prominent individuals asking them to speak at Notre Dame as part of the SAB's Distinguished Lecturer Series.

New minority director named

By DIANE SCHROEDER
Staff Reporter

Getting to know the students and helping them organize their goals is the first step toward solving the problems faced by many minority students at Notre Dame, according to Kenneth Durgans the new minority affairs director.

Durgans replaced Edward Blackwell, who left Notre Dame last summer to take an advanced position at Colby College in Maine, according to Sr. Jean Lenz, assistant vice president of student affairs.

As director of minority affairs, Durgans has several responsibilities.

"I will be involved in the advising and recruitment of minority students, both undergraduate and graduate," said Durgans. "The bottom line is to help the various minority groups to fit in with the Notre Dame community and have their needs recognized."

Durgans said he is still becoming familiar with the situation at Notre Dame, but he believes it is reflective of the situation of minorities in society at large.

"Isolation is the biggest problem minorities face," said Durgans. "It is difficult for many minority students to maintain their cultural uniqueness and at the same time fit in with everyone else."

Durgans attributes such isolationism to the failure of minorities to be acknowledged and to have their needs recognized. He said his first goal is to help minority students understand and organize their goals in order to achieve recognition. By getting to know the students on an organizational level, Durgans said he hopes to help them deal with each other as well as the rest of the Notre Dame community.

"I'm not setting any goals for the students, I'm just helping them organize the goals they already have," said Durgans.

As a result, Durgans said he hopes to see minority groups also doing more activities with each other as an effort to preserve their cultural uniqueness.

Durgans graduated from Baldwin-Wallace College in Berea, Oh. in 1977 with a degree in political science and history. In 1981 he earned a master's degree from Kent State University, and in July of this year he received a master's degree in school counseling from the University of Dayton.

Prior to his arrival at Notre Dame, Durgans served at Wittenberg University and is a member of the American College Personnel Association, the American Association of College Admission Counsellors, and the Mid-American Association of Educational Opportunity Program Personnel.

the group has applied for a tax number from the I.R.S., "as it will want information on individuals in the group and in the future a list of names and the home addresses of investors."

"The group is research intensive," Siewert said, "with an automation of portfolio." This means that there are computer programs which, for example, "determine undervalued stocks in industry according to financial equations," he said. "In other words, the risk is limited" with the financial expertise of the computer.

If a student wished to become an investor in the group, Siewert said he or she could take one of two courses. "If a student has a particular idea as to an investment opportunity, he/she would have to present the idea to the group," he said.

Depending on how convincing the student's presentation is, "the student's idea could be accepted or rejected by a vote of the board members," said Siewert.

A student could also go to the group with money and ask for the group to invest it, he said. Then by careful consideration the group would decide where the best sources of investment would be, "but the management fees would be greater," he added.

The investment board consists of seven members: sophomore Sam Siewert, managing partner; freshman Jeff Heilert, operating manager who calls the broker directly; and sophomore Pat Zelton and freshman Nick Rossi, marketing managers who handle all advertising and promoting.

Charity Ball for Ethiopia planned

LISA DAVISON
News Staff

To promote social and political awareness throughout the country, and specifically at Notre Dame, a Third Annual Notre Dame Saint Mary's Charity Ball For Ethiopia is planned, according to Dan Harrison, chairman of the ball.

The first organizational meeting for the third annual ball in May is scheduled for Wednesday at 7 p.m. in the International Student Organization lounge in LaFortune, Harrison said.

"The meeting is open to anyone who wants to get involved in committees," said Harrison.

Harrison said the committees are selected according to the person's individual interests. "After Wednesday's meeting, we'll choose chairpeople from each committee and they will be my working committee," he said.

Discussing the upcoming ball, Harrison said, "This year I want to have as great a success as the past two years have been."

According to Harrison, the first ball grossed $7,000 and the second ball netted $10,000. "The money goes to the Catholic Relief Fund and they distribute it to the Ethiopia Fund. It goes to direct relief of the starving," Harrison said.

"I believe you have to help people that do need help," Harrison said. "At Notre Dame, we are growing, morally mature human beings and should be more aware of what we could do for other people."

"The first year of the ball, it was estimated that 75 to 100 people were dying every hour," Harrison said. "To me, it was just unfathomable that people were dying like that."

"What we try to achieve is a facilities to students for the event.

In other business, Cahill said anyone interested in Aerobics for United Way, a fundraiser to benefit the United Way, can sign up in the Dining Halls during lunch on Wednesday and Sunday at dinner. According to Cahill, the event will take place Nov. 22 from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. in the ACC. She said positive outreach for everyone to become aware. It's positive, not negative. We want people to have a good time at the ball, but we also want them to think why they're there. The only negative aspect is that people that don't come are those who aren't aware."

The Charity Ball is the culmination of an idea that Harrison and Annemarie Finch had while driving back from break two years ago. "We were thinking how we could actually help people in need, actively assist those really in need," said Harrison.

"Father David Porterfield is the faculty member who was most helpful. He's the guiding light. We needed a faculty member to help manifest our idea and he did," Harrison said.

"The Administration is fantastic, a great help. The most fantastic support is Father Hesburgh.

Aerobics for United Way will consist of three two-hour shifts and feature prizes.

Pasquerilla Hall West Co-President Colleen Kretz, Theodore's HPC representative, said the club offers free chips and pop every night.

Kretz said Theodore's is featuring a DJ this Wednesday and Thursday from 8 p.m. to 1 a.m.

Correction

A description of the divestment resolution in the Student Senate meeting story in Monday's Observer was incorrect. The resolution said "the University should set a specific deadline for corporations engaged in business activities in South Africa to divest unless the Government of South Africa makes significant progress toward dismantling its system of apartheid and takes genuine measures toward negotiating with black leaders. If neither the corporations divest nor the government makes significant progress toward dismantling apartheid by the established deadline, the University ought to completely divest from these corporations."

Church must recognize female participation

"The issue of women's role in the Catholic Church of the 1980's is a controversy that will not fade away," writes 1969 Saint Mary's College graduate Joyce Kenny Cassetta.

Gertie Wimmer

private I

Women are now inspecting their position in the Church, and many are not finding it to their liking. Women have never before thought to find fault with the male patriarchy of the Church or with the decisions that male body is passing on to its flock are now challenging this, and more.

In the forefront of this new movement of women stand several powerful figures. Most irritating to the politic in Rome at this moment is the Chicago-based Sister of Notre Dame, Margaret Ellen Traxler. Although Traxler has been a nun for 45 of her 62 years, she was almost expelled from her order for her involvement with an advertisement that went out in the New York Times in October 1984.

Along with 24 other nuns, she has been under Papal investigation since signing the ad, published under the title "A Diversity of Opinions Regarding Abortion Exists Among Roman Catholics." Sponsored by a small Washington-based group called "Catholics for Free Choice," the advertisement argued that there was more than one "legitimate Catholic position" on the issue of abortion and used as evidence the signature of 97 prominent Catholics.

Traxler claims that the ad was formulated as "a partial response to the highly-publicized anti-abortion statements of Archbishop John J. O'Connor of the New York archdiocese, later elevated to cardinal. His comments, ac-ording to the views of women, were clearly aimed at the Vice-Presidential candidate of the time, Geraldine Ferraro, a member of O'Connor's archdiocese who had come out in favor of pro-choice.

Statistics show that only 11 percent of Catholics disapprove of abortion in all circumstances. "We tried to put it in the mildest possible tones," said Traxler of the ad. "We could have said 89 percent of Catholics approve abortion under some circumstances."

"(O'Connor's speech) was an attempt to rig the election on the basis of this one issue. So we called for some balance in the discussion," said Traxler.

Also among those who had signed the document were two priests and two religious brothers. When the prefect of the Vatican's Congregation on Religious and Secular Institutes Archbishop Jean Jerome Hamer wrote to the offending signers, asking for a recanting of the declaration, only the four gentlemen gave in. The 24 nuns involved wouldn't budge. Traxler said she did not believe that she could have done so (recanted) "under any circumstances."

Even Chicago Cardinal Joseph Bernardin acknowledged that "it was entirely possible that the offending nuns might have been expelled because they 'directly challenged the Church's constant teachings about the immorality of abortion.'" This, however, didn't alter the decision of any of the sister. They held fast to their beliefs.

This may lend to the impression that Traxler has always been merely a trouble-maker within the Church. That is not true. Traxler is, among other things, the founder of the Institute of Women Today, founder of the National Coalition of American Nuns, co-founder of the Inter-Religious Task Force on Soviet Jewry, an adviser to the World

Council of Churches and organizer of countless workshops and projects dealing with interracial justice. Her awards include medals from the State of Israel, Chicago Catholic Women and Saint Theresa's College in Winona, Minnesota. She has been active in causes since her first march for equal rights in Selma, Alabama.

Her main cause at the moment, however, is that of women in the Catholic Church. "(I) view Pope John Paul II as the misguided defender of a dying patriarchal system that represents neither the will of God nor the essence of the Catholic Church." Traxler considers herself representative of two eras, caught between the old way of thinking and the new.

Such a figure of strength is surely necessary in these turbulent times after the Second Vatican Council issued the historic statement urging religious women to ease their old restrictions in order to capture the intentions of their founders, and in the process, to re-evaluate their calling and the form their calling took. While the 1965 statement seemed to many a recognition of the new importance and freedom that the sisterhood was taking, it led to a sharp division between the older, more conservative nuns and those usually younger, more liberal nuns who were delighted with this chance to merge in a small way with the secular life.

Many women of both categories left the order as a result of this seemingly irreconcilable division. Between the year of the declaration's publication and 1984, some 62,000 nuns in the United States alone left the religious life.

Traxler explains the massive exodus quite simply. "Most Catholic nuns were living in an unreal world," she says. She, sees a large part of the problem in the failure of the Church "to minister to all its people," by refusing to ordain women priests."

Through her work with the prison system in Chicago, where she has aided female prisoners through their terms for many years, Traxler has decided in favor of the ordination of female priests. "Male prison chaplains," she explained, "usually do not relate well to female inmates, and for that reason (I) would like to be ordained."

While she seems to inspire controversy wherever she goes, Traxler's most publicized skirmish to date has been against the 1982 endorsement of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops for a Constitutional Amendment, proposed by Republican Senator Orrin Hatch of Utah, which would have allowed state legislatures to restrict or even ban abortions. Along with the National Coalition of American Nuns, which Traxler helped organize in 1969 and which is the first and only organization of feminist sisters in the United States, Traxler condemned the Bishops' support statement. Issuing her own opinion on the Phil Donahue Show, she said that "the Catholic hierarchy would be better advised to educate men on the responsibilities of fatherhood."

All this has been submitted as something different for you to read and for you to form an opinion about. Yes, there was a time when women would simply go to church on the arms of their husbands or next to their fathers and not really think about their purpose there, not within the physical building but within the hierarchy and theology of the Church. There was a time when women who wanted to devote themselves to God and their Church settled down to silence and obedience by becoming Sisters of one order of the other, passively teaching the Word to school children and villagers in far-off lands. But times have changed.

Marching Band gets credit for dedication

Dear Editor:

With all the hubbub lately about who the next Notre Dame president will be and whether the giant sprinkler on the Fieldhouse Mall should be razed or kowtowed to, there is one group on campus who is deprived of the recognition and support it deserves: the Marching Band.

I am a senior this year, and I think I can safely say that in my three years under the dome I have not seen more spirit (the lifeblood of Notre Dame) and dedication in any other group. But it's not just on Saturdays that the Band personifies this spirit. It's every day when they march out to Green Field and monotonously rehearse the songs that echo their hard work and sound A-number-one on Saturdays.

At the risk of sounding corny, I have always maintained that catching the Band marching out to practice on one of my occasional forays to the library, and hearing the fight song and subsequent drumbeat, gives me enough pep to get through an additional ten pages before I visit the land of Nod. I guess you could equate it to a human Vivarin pill.

Seriously, though, I firmly believe that the Band is one of the best things about Notre Dame. Their perpetual spirit and the halftime fun they have provided me with will reserve a place for them in my heart as one of the thumbs-up groups at this place.

I have only one more thing to add: make it a good show on Saturday. I think that seeing the Lions get thrown to the Christians would be much more enjoyable with a little musical accompaniment.

The Board of Trustees is the governing body for all academic, financial, investment, public, and student affairs at Notre Dame, but how many students are aware of their activities and the role the Trustees play in preserving the Catholic tradition and heritage of Notre Dame? The Board has made the major decisions through the University's 142 years of growth, from the admittance of women to Notre Dame to investments of the endowment to the election of each new President.

Father Hesburgh described the Notre Dame's Board of Trustees as "truly unique, a microcosm of our country." "We have Trustees that are black, white, men, women, Hispanic, Protestant, one Jew, and they come from all over the country and beyond," he said. Of the 50 members of the Board, 23 have earned doctorate degrees, roughly half are Notre Dame alumni, and 21 have academic experience as teachers, deans, and presidents of universities. The Trustees represent a cross-section of the country, from New York to California, Massachusetts to Oregon, from Illinois to Texas and Florida. Some trustees even come from as far as London and Panama.

Since the founding of Notre Dame in 1844 under charter from the State of Indiana, the University has been governed by a Board of Trustees, originally six Holy Cross priests. In 1967, however, that clerical Board initiated the first major reorganization of its government in 125 years by giving their sole control of the University to laymen as legal trustees of Notre Dame's endowment. They created the Fellows of the University and the predominantly lay Board of Trustees.

Notre Dame was the first and the largest major Catholic American university to change to shared lay-clerical control. Following Vatican Council II, it was Notre Dame's purpose to give laymen a more active and responsible role in the administration of the University's affairs. According to Father Hesburgh, it was a practical move to add competent and professional laymen to the Board. "The university was getting so big," he said. "With a growing endowment, a hotel business and radio station on campus, and costs of three quarter million a day to run the place, the University budget was far bigger than the budget of the Holy Cross Order."

Father Hesburgh said there were special meetings in 1967 to obtain permission to turn the control and legal assets of the University over to the lay Board. He had to meet with the Holy Cross Order, the state of Indiana, and even with Rome, because the Church needed permission to give away more than $10,000. "The University was already worth a half billion," he said, "and we gave the title and powers of the University over to the Trustees without asking for anything, with no conditions. It had to have been the largest amount ever handed over to lay control."

According to the Statutes of Notre Dame, the Fellows of the University are a self-perpetuating body of 12 members. Six members are Holy Cross priests, or clerical fellows, and six members are lay fellows. Six of these fellows hold office ex officio, namely, the Provincial of the Indiana Province of the Holy Cross order, the President of the University, the Provost, the Executive Vice President, and the Chairman and Secretary of the Board of Trustees. All other fellows hold office terms of six years, and are simultaneously members of the Board of Trustees. The University President acts as Chairman, and the fellows meet annually. The duties of their office include electing the Board of Trustees by a two-thirds vote, adopting and amending the bylaws of the University, preserving the physical property and material goods of Notre Dame, and "preserving the essential character of the University as a Catholic institution of higher learning."

The Board of Trustees is a 50-member body including ex officio members as follows: the clerical fellows and the President and Honorary President of the Alumni Association. All other Trustees serve terms of three years, and two of the Trustees must be recent graduates of the University, one male and one female, under the age of 30, who only serve one three-year term. The retirement age for Trustees is 70, at which time the retired Trustee has the status of Trustee Emeritus, and may still attend meetings, although he has no vote.

The Board meets biannually and its seven standing committees reflect its broad range of University control as follows: Executive, Nominating, Academic and Faculty Affairs, Student Affairs, Financial Affairs, Investment, and Public Relations and Development. The Board approves the budget among other duties, but it is unique from other university boards in that all academic regulations are left to the Academic Council, a 60 member board comprised of administration, faculty, and students.

Father Hesburgh said he would not change a thing about Notre Dame's Board of Trustees. "They are not just businessmen who are barely involved with the University," he said. "I have had no problem at all with the Board, probably because of the members' academic experience, their knowledge about investing the endowment and running the budget, and because so many of them are alumni."

Notre Dame's Board of Trustees will make the decision on a new president to succeed Father Hesburgh's 35-year term this Friday.

note: There will be an interview of the vice-president of the Board of Trustees in tomorrow's issue.

Monkeeshines

features copy editor

I got ready, feeling vaguely like Cinderella on her way to the Prince's place. I was going to see the Monkees. I was going to review the Monkees. It was one of those cases where dreams do come true.

I always wanted to see the Monkees (Who didn't?), but of course by the time I was "old enough," the television super-kids had gone in different directions. Micky (George Michael) Dolenz had gotten into television production in England, where he now lives with his wife and three daughters. Peter Tork (Torkelson) was living with his girlfriend in New York. He had formed a cult-status band called "The Peter Tork Project," about which little was generally heard.

Davy Jones, who I had a crush on before I knew there was a difference between boys and girls, I had last seen on a talk show talking about his lovely wife and his many daughters. Then I knew how old we all had become.

None of them looked old though when they bounded onto the stage at about quarter after nine last night to the roars of the crowd. They were bouncing, singing, joking and gagging like they had so many sitcoms ago, and we couldn't help but respond. Although the press box was relatively calm, from my vantage point (I was standing and dancing) I saw select celebrity feet tapping.

And then the Monkees came on. And they were better than a date to the prom (certainly better than the date I took to my prom!) The concert upon reflection was great, the reliving of a childhood fantasy, a great thrill yet with that aftertaste of pain that came when I realized I could never go back to their era, the era of my childhood, again.

The Monkees made their grand entrance accompanied by the theme from their television program—a style to which their many generations of fans were accustomed. Halfway through, the recording got stuck and the comedy began. With a quite literal explosion the band launched into "Last Train to Clarksville," one of their first commercial hits in the '60s.

"Stepping Stone," "No Time," and "Day Dream Believer" followed while the crowd sang along. The three reunited Monkees took turns singing lead vocals, with Micky taking the majority of the tunes including a rockin' version of "Going Down" which was the equivalent (for him and quite a few members of the audience) of an entire semester of aerobic workouts.

Davy stuck to quieter ballads like "I Wanna Be Free," which he said reflected back to that time when boys liked girls, girls liked boys, and the only one who swung both ways was Tarzan. (You had to be there.) His rendition of "Valerie" brought thousands of squeals from what seemed a largely high school crowd.

About half way through the hour the Monkees spent on stage, Peter got his chance in the spotlight, as he started to tell the history of the band. He sang "Auntie Griselda," a song unknown to many people which I fortunately had on one Monkees album at home. Peter captured the crowds' approval by dancing on the speakers at both sides of the stage, something neither of his cohorts had done."

By the end of the show, only one girl had hugged Davy on stage (Who was that and how did she get up there?, I ask.) All three Monkees had touched hands in the crowd, and several bouquets of flowers were tossed up. They had danced a chorus line—Davy with hat and cane. They had bantered in the old NBC series style, having fun on stage the same way they used to on TV (then with Mike Nesmith, who was notably absent from all press photos.)

The Monkees returned for one encore which included the songs "Listen to the Band" and "Pleasant Valley Sunday." They concluded their triumphant Tuesday night performance by walking off stage in the infamous Monkee walk, a walk which everyone and their best friend had been doing in front of the ACC before the concert. The group left the flowers on stage, (or would have) but I, being the investigative type, received permission from the stage crew to see them. The cards contained girls addresses and phone numbers (sheesh!) which the band never saw—something to keep in mind.

who quickly contributed to the program last year and now see the brunt of the playing time.

Despite finishing with a 12-19 record last season, the then-freshmen gained valuable experience through their court time. The result has been obvious in this year's 25-6 record, a shot at a tournament bid, nine consecutive victories, and a relatively pleased coach.

"We even caught him smiling a few times this weekend," said Waller after the Irish won three matches in as many days.

But Lambert, though pleased, is not content.

"We had a good weekend but we have no easy matches remaining," noted Lambert. "We can't stub our toe. We can't afford a loss if we are even thinking about a possible NCAA bid."

The Irish will be thinking win tonight as they travel to Chicago to face Illinois-Chicago for the first matchup between the two teams. The match will be televised by SportsVision of Chicago on Sunday, Nov. 16, at 5:30 p.m. EST.

Good blend of experience, youth has SMC swimmers looking ahead

By JANE SHEA
Sports Writer

With the arrival of four freshmen and the return of an experienced corps of swimmers that suffered only two graduation losses, the Saint Mary's swim team is counting on a productive 1986-87 campaign.

At least that's according to Saint Mary's head coach Nancy Jo Kuzmitz, who will take her Belles squad into its first meet of the season Friday at North Central College.

"We have a strong team this season," said Kuzmitz, "and a variety of strokes which will add a lot of depth."

This fact, along with a new schedule that features more teams of Saint Mary's caliber, should translate into a good year.

"We are swimming in the NAIA this year," said Kuzmitz, "which is a better association for our team."

Last Friday, the Belles were invited to swim in the Notre Dame Relays where they tied Marquette for fifth place out of 17 teams.

"We swam excellently for our first meet," said Kuzmitz. "The races were close and we were up against some good swimmers."

One Saint Mary's group, the 500-yard relay team, swam particularly well on Friday, placing second in the event. The team, which consisted of senior captains Mary Fisher and Patty Juckneiss, junior Mary Hogan, and freshmen

Erin Tierney and Julie Courtney recorded a time of 5:13.3, the Belles' best finish of the day.

Fisher, Juckneiss, Courtney, and Tierney also swam well in the 400-yard freestyle relay with a time of 4:07.2.

In other competition, meanwhile, Tierney finished notably in the 400-yard breaststroke relay, taking third place with a time of 5:25.3. Swimming with her were senior Margaret Mannion, junior Margaret Kennedy, and freshman Clare Druley.

Tanya Reeves, a sophomore, was outstanding in the 400-yard butterfly relay along with classmate Sarah Maurer, and freshmen Clare Druley and Ann Geigley. Their time was 5:04.9.

feld. "The girls have a great attitude together and they really work as a team. They have progressed a great deal this season."

The strongest asset to the team this season was the consistent play of junior goalie M.J. Beetel. Coming into the net with little varsity experience, Beetel led the defense as it improved steadily.

"The goalkeeping by M.J. became better and better all season long," said Lindenfeld. "Our defense started the season with little knowledge of how the other players would work on the field, but they have learned to work as a group. Our passing has improved and we are more confident."

While the defense supported the team, the forward line was plagued with injuries halfway through the year. Co-captains Corrine DiGiacomo and Mary Wagner, the biggest scoring threats for the Irish, both were lost for the season, substantially reducing Notre Dame's offensive production.

DiGiacomo ended her career shortly after becoming the all-time leading scorer in Irish history.

Looking toward next season, Lindenfeld cannot help but be concerned that the entire forward line for the Irish will graduate this year, leaving more holes to fill for the fall.

"All five of our (graduating) seniors are on the offensive side of the field. We will be losing Meg (McGlenn) at left wing, Corrine at left inner, Steph (Giggetts) at right inner, Mary at right wing and Bernadette Suplick at forward," noted Lindenfeld. "Right now, Annie McGlenn and Debbie Charlesworth (saw) action and (performed) well. They will both be back next fall."

Experience does return, however, at the defensive backs and links, spots where the Irish will look to be especially strong.

"Benet DeBerry, Caroline Berezny and Christine Sweeney are our stalwarts and they will all be back for us in the fall," said Lindenfeld. "We need to become more aggressive and really fight to be a really competitive team. The defense is the solid part of our squad."

Sophomore middle blocker Mary Kay Waller has rolled up a .379 kill percentage and 131 blocks this year to help her Notre Dame volleyball team to its team-record 25-6 slate. Brian O'Gara features Waller and details the team's upcoming action at right.

Waller, Irish keep rolling along; win streak will be on line tonight

The Notre Dame volleyball team puts a team-record nine-game winning streak on the line tonight as it travels west to Chicago to face the University of Illinois at Chicago in a 7:30 p.m. CST match.

The Irish are coming off an impressive three-match sweep of their weekend action, defeating Dayton, Northwestern and Pittsburgh. Those three wins brought the Irish season record to 25-6. That mark ties the team record for the most wins in a season set in 1982 when the Irish went 25-9.

As the Irish as a team are having a banner season, so expectedly, are several of the players. One of the Irish standouts for the past two seasons has been sophomore middle blocker Mary Kay Waller. Waller, a native of Lawrence, Kan., has developed into a major force at the net for the Irish, leading the team and the entire North Star Conference with a .379 kill percentage for 131 blocks in 31 matches.

In fact, Waller is ranked in the top 20 in the nation for her 131 blocks, and is among the country's leaders in kill percentage as well. This is a spectacular feat for any player, let alone a sophomore. But Waller will be the first to admit that this promising career began slowly.

"I didn't play until ninth grade," she said. "My sister was starting the seventh grade and she talked me into it. I was so bad. I had never even touched a volleyball."

Waller improved slowly until her senior year in high school when she led her Lawrence High School team through an undefeated, state championship season that got her named to an all-state selection in Kansas.

Since joining the Irish last fall, Waller has continued to improve steadily. An outside hitter at first, Waller made the transition to middle blocker and has since become a steady force for the Irish at the net.

"Last year was my first year playing middle, and I wasn't sure where I was supposed to be at times," said Waller. "Now it feels more natural. I can concentrate on hitting the ball harder. But I still feel like I'm learning volleyball."

Notre Dame head coach Art

Lambert praised Waller, agreeing that she has improved greatly but has yet to fully tap her potential on the volleyball court.

"She has made good progress from last year," he said. "She is very talented physically, and can go as far as she wants."

Anyone who has attended a home volleyball match this season surely will have noticed the enthusiasm that Waller takes to the court. Whether it be in the form of a wide smile after a kill or a high-five to a teammate, Waller shows her emotions.

"I get really nervous before a game so when I do something good, it shows," Waller said. "We work hard in practice, and I think it's important to have fun on the court. I think you play better if you're trying to have a good time. And anybody would have to admit that it's a good feeling to get a kill."

Waller is a product of Lambert's first full recruiting effort since taking over the Irish in 1984. Waller, Zanette Bennett, Maureen Shea and Whitney Shewman are all sophomores

Field hockey review

Irish suffer growing pains in '86

By MARGOT MACHECA

When it comes down to the number of wins and losses for the Notre Dame field hockey team this season, the Irish may not look overly impressive with a final record of 6-12-1.

Yet the morale and attitude of the squad could not have been more positive during the often trying circumstances that presented themselves through the course of the season.

The Irish began the year with only four returning letter-winners and very few experienced players. In spite of the adversity, the team filled the gaps on the field and accepted the challenge.

And although Irish head coach Jill Lindenfeld would have liked to have amassed a better record over the course of the season, she now stresses the important development that occurred with the team as a whole and the players individually.

"We never stopped trying the whole season," said Linden-

Pollsters upset Penn State's party plans

The pollsters went out and ruined the party. By demoting Penn State to No. 3, they have taken some of the luster out of Saturday's matchup.

There has been gobs of hype about how the Fiesta, Gator, and Florida Citrus bowls have been seeking sponsors to enable them to up their antes for a Miami-Penn State matchup for the National Championship. The increase is necessary to lure Miami away from bowls like the Orange and Sugar, which offer a much larger purse but not the chance for the Hurricanes to defeat No. 2.

But now those bums that cast the all-important votes have sent Penn State down to No. 3. A matchup between Miami and Penn State at this point cannot claim to determine the National Championship exclusively. The pollsters may be saved from ruining the dream matchup if Michigan loses to Ohio State, which would give undefeated Penn State a chance to move back into the second slot.

But that's where the Irish come in.

Although the excitement of beating the third-ranked team is not quite the same as beating the second-ranked team, I don't really think too many people on the Notre Dame side are going to argue. After all, the Irish are 0-2 against second-ranked teams this season. Whether Penn State is second or third, at any rate, they must be undefeated to qualify for any hope of a shot at Miami.

The red-hot Irish have an opportunity to make all the talk of a National Championship matchup just babble.

Notre Dame poses the only real obstacle to that matchup since Penn State only has the Pitt Panthers left on the schedule after the Irish. Without John Congemi, the Panthers lose a lot of their snarl.

But while Notre Dame can ruin Penn State's trip to the dream game, the Irish can rain on a lot of other people's parades as well. Think of the long faces of the selection committees of the Gator, Fiesta, and Florida Citrus bowls if the Irish nix their chances at a Penn State-Miami game. Notre Dame could be the masked bandit that takes away unlimited amounts of revenue and national exposure.

Being the bad guys can be a lot of fun.

The game presents a case where Penn State has nothing to gain, since they are expected to win, and everything to lose, like a shot at the National Championship. The Irish, on the other hand, are in a very different situation. A win against Penn State could serve some notice to some bowl committees to give the Irish more than a passing glance. They can only help themselves at this point. Unfortunately, the Lions are just one step toward any bowl berth, and each step requires a little spring.

But this game is a special one even if there are no bowl representatives chomping at the bit. It presents a little tradition and old-fashioned charm.

The beauty of the game is captured in the uniforms of each team. Penn State has the ugliest uniforms in the nation in the eyes of many, but I don't agree. The simple white-and-blues that look more like some team's practice uniforms represent a little taste of college football in its purest form. Quarterback John Schaffer has been quoted as saying that Joe Paterno would do away with the numbers on the uniforms if he could get away with it. Simplicity has a beauty all its own.

Notre Dame's move to this year's edition of uniform puts it in Penn State's class. They both disdain the players' names on the back, heavy striping and rainbow colors. Traditional black shoes present an aura in which the game of football was meant to be played.

With last year's rain and mud added to all this, you have a picture that only John Madden dreams of.

If you compare scores, the Irish shouldn't have a chance. While the Irish fell to Alabama decisively, 28-10, Penn State went out and left the Crimson Tide red-faced with a convincing 23-3 drubbing. But that's why the game is played on the field. The Irish have come a long way since that debacle, and appear to be primed for a major test such as Penn State will administer.

So while the pollsters may have ruined the party, this game provides at least enough entertainment for a little gathering.
