Reagan abetted Iran-Contra deception, says report

Associated Press

WASHINGTON - President Reagan contributed to a massive deception of Congress and the public in the Iran-Contra affair and bears responsibility for thwarting the law by allowing zealots to seize policy control, congressional investigators concluded Wednesday. "These committees found no direct evidence suggesting that the president was a knowing participant in the effort to deceive Congress and the American public," the Senate and House investigating panels wrote. "But the president's actions and statements contributed to the deception."

"The ultimate responsibility for the events in the Iran-Contra affair must rest with the president," the panels' 690-page final report concluded. "If the president did not know what his national security advisers were doing, he should have."

The report comes three months after the conclusion of summer-long hearings into the secret sales of U.S. weapons to Iran and the diversion of some profits to the Nicaraguan rebels known as Contras.

At the White House, Reagan spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said, "This new report reflects the subjective opinions and not even the unanimous judgment of the committee."

"We are moving on," he said.

The report, in one new disclosure, indicates the administration was deceived when, after concluding that middleman Manucher Ghorbanifar was untrustworthy, it switched to what it saw as a more reliable "second channel" for dealing with Iranian "moderates."

The report said American operatives were dismayed to discover that "the second channel represented the same Iranian leaders as did the first channel, that some U.S. weapons destined for so-called moderates in fact went to Iran's radical Revolutionary Guards, and that one of the "moderates" may have masterminded the kidnappings of at least two of the Americans then being held hostage in Lebanon -- educator Frank Reed and William Buckley, the Beirut CIA station chief who was killed while in captivity.

The report quoted American officials as saying the discovery "really blew our minds." But it said they voiced no objections to the operation continuing.

Re-zoning could limit off-campus housing

By GREG LUCAS
Senior Staff Reporter

A proposal that would re-zone most of the area in the Northeast Neighborhood was recently submitted to the South Bend City Council by Councilman Ann Puzzello.

Re-zoning the neighborhood would restrict further development of rental properties and commercial businesses, said Puzzello. Any property currently being used for rental purposes, however, could remain in that capacity under the grandfather clause, she said.

Still, Puzzello said the implementation of the proposal would probably limit the amount of off-campus housing that would be available to students in future years because rentals could be changed to family-owned homes but not vice versa.

Puzzello claimed re-zoning would act to improve the relations between neighborhood residents and off-campus students. "The thought that they (the residents) weren't being taken over would improve relations," she said.

The bill arose from a joint effort between the Northeast Neighborhood Center and Neighborhood Housing Ser-

United Way Drive raises $3,000 so far

By MIMI TUOHY
Staff Reporter

Nearly $3,000 has been raised so far for the United Way through a door-to-door campaign sponsored by the Notre Dame student government, according to Special Projects commissioner Peggy Woodward.

"The money, which was mainly collected by dorm representatives and Hall Presidents Council members in the dorms, will be used to help the poor and needy in the South Bend area," Woodward said. "Also, $250 was collected in student donations at Senior Bar on November 12."

A goal of $8,000 was set by the student government United Way committee prior to the start of the fundraiser. This amount corresponds to the number of undergraduates enrolled in the university, according to Woodward.

"I really appreciate the people who have supported the events so far," said Woodward. "If everyone could just donate $1, our goal will be reached and many needy people in the South Bend area will benefit."

A "Lock-Up" for the United Way is scheduled for Dec. 3 in the stadium "jail." Any student registered to be arrested will be taken to the jail and will not be released until a $5 "bail" is paid to the United Way. Any students wishing to register names of people they want arrested can do so on Nov. 30 and Dec. 1 and 2 in the dining halls and LaFortune Student Center. The registration fee is $5 per arrest.

Student government conducts the United Way campaign annually. "I hope that the students realize how worthwhile this organization is to our community and donate what they can," said Laurie Bink, student body vice president.

800 to fast for SMC hunger drive

By KATIE KEARNEY
Assistant Saint Mary's Editor

About 800 Saint Mary's students, administrators, faculty and staff members will be abstaining from all meals today as part of the 14th annual Oxfam Fast for a World Harvest.

The nationwide event aims at raising funds to feed the hungry and create an awareness of what it is like to go without food, even if for only one day.

"We view the monetary benefits of this fast as only half the issue," said Cindy Taylor, co-coordinator of the Saint Mary's World Hunger Coalition. "The experience of being hungry for a day and realizing that two-thirds of the world lives every day like that, is just as important."

The Marriott Corporation, which provides the food service for Saint Mary's, will make a donation to the Saint Mary's World Hunger Coalition, according to Taylor.

The funds collected from the fast will be distributed by the international, non-profit Oxfam agency, non-profit self-help development projects and disaster relief in African, Asian and Latin American countries, Taylor said. "South Bend organizations and other U.S. agencies will also receive funds and educational materials," Taylor said.

"Saint Mary's participates in this event because we believe it goes along with the mission of the college to educate on social injustices," Taylor said. "Members of the Saint Mary's community have to realize they have a responsibility to help alleviate hunger."

In addition to the fast, the College's World Hunger Coalition, Peacemakers, Christian Life Community, Student Government and the Justice Education program will sponsor a series of activities to educate students on the myths that prevent the elimination of world hunger.

Discussions and films are scheduled throughout the day in Stapleton Lounge, starting at 11 a.m. with a documentary film on militarism titled "Faith, War and Peace in the Nuclear Age."

In Brief

CBS Inc. announced late Wednesday that it has agreed to sell its worldwide record division to electronics giant Sony Corp. of Japan for about $2 billion. The CBS records group has been increasingly profitable in recent years, helped by hits from entertainers such as Michael Jackson, Bruce Springsteen, Ricky Skaggs and Cyndi Lauper. CBS chairman William Paley said that CBS records "has contributed so importantly to the history of music in our times. I am pleased to note that Sony has earned a global reputation for excellence and is a company with which CBS has had a long and productive relationship."

Let's hear it for lowered expectations

In grade school, a teacher once asked me, "What do you call somebody who thinks the entire world is out to get him?"

I answered, "A realist."

Ever since then, I've had a reputation as a bit of a pessimist. I don't mind that -- it's accurate enough. But lately, it seems to me, pessimism has been getting a bit of a bum rap.

Everywhere I look, I see the virtues of optimism trumpeted.

Books with titles like "The Power of Positive Thinking" and "Choose Your Own Greatness" give blithe assurances that if you just have faith in yourself and think that nothing is impossible, then everything is possible. Reach for your dreams with confidence, and you won't fail, they say.

News programs have inspirational, heart-warming stories about people who struggled against incredible odds and succeeded. When asked about how they did it, they say, "It was hard, but I knew from the start that if I set my mind to it and tried, I would make it."

If you don't believe me, just go over to the bookstore and look at some of the cheesy posters that have uplifting messages like "You must believe to achieve." All of these things don't inspire me -- they disgust and sicken me.

The biggest problem I have with them is that they simply aren't true. Sure, it's nice to hear about people who tried and succeeded. But there are many people who, no matter how hard they try at something, will miserably fail -- look at Gerry Faust. Simply having a positive attitude doesn't guarantee success.

In fact, a positive attitude is a liability. If people go into an endeavor absolutely convinced they will succeed, they will be totally unprepared for failure. Their self-images will be shattered, and their lives turned into meaningless travesties. They will become disillusioned and bitter -- sort of like me.

When I make some cynical comment about an "inspirational" human-interest story in the paper, sometimes people say, "That's horrible how could you say that? Would you rather not have the quadruple amputee swim the Atlantic Ocean?? Would you rather have her just give up??"

This is based upon a misunderstanding of my position.

Some people think that pessimists have to be glum, dour people who wear black and shuffle along with their shoulders hunched over, muttering things like, "Nothing makes any difference. Why should I bother trying at all, since I will inevitably fail? Soon enough, the indifferent hand of Fate will come thundering down and smash me into oblivion anyway."

Tim O'Keefe

I'm not saying anything like that. I don't think we should all just give up, shrivel up and die with a small whimper of self-pity. We all have the right -- even the duty -- to try as hard as possible for goals we care about.

What we don't have the right to expect, however, is success. Maybe it will come to us, maybe not. Our actions are under our control, but many of the things that determine our lives are totally uncontrollable.

This recognition of reality has made me a lot less anxious. I know the universe is a pretty messed up place, and it's prone to pull all sorts of nasty little tricks on me. Because it's beyond my control, I don't worry about it. If something bad happens, that's what I expected anyway, so I'm not disappointed. And if something good happens, it's a pleasant surprise.

That's the key to happiness: lowered expectations.

If you've gotten all the way to this final paragraph, thank you! I didn't think anyone would actually read this column all the way through.

Dissension growing over budget plan

Associated Press

WASHINGTON - White House and congressional negotiators struggled Wednesday to cement a two-year, $75 billion budget deficit-reduction agreement and saw their still-unfinished work coming under attack even from within their own ranks.

"It's pretty weak. A pretty weak package unless you like taxes," said Senate Republican Leader Bob Dole of Kansas, who said many of his GOP colleagues would have trouble voting for it.

"It is so marginal as to be embarrassing," said Sen. Bob Packwood of Oregon, who is among the negotiators and is the ranking GOP member of the Senate Finance Committee.

"It sounds like something less than what most of us had hoped would be accomplished in a summit," said Rep. Byron Dorgan, D-N.D.

The package would reduce the deficit in fiscal 1988, which began Oct. 1, by about $30 billion and cut fiscal 1989 red ink by more than $45 billion. That would more than meet the minimum goal of the Gramm-Rudman law, which requires $23 billion in fiscal 1988 deficit reduction.

The law calls for President Reagan to order spending cuts on Friday, half from the military and half from domestic programs, if the goal is not met.

The group worked Wednesday in an attempt to resolve issues including how to guarantee that the general agreement, especially the spending cuts, would be translated into law.

"If it is not enforceable, just a hope and a prayer... this package will not pass," said Packwood.

"We're proceeding to work out the details of what we hope will be an agreement," said House Majority Leader Thomas Foley, D-Wash., chairman of the negotiators. "I have no reason to be pessimistic," he said.

Asked about those calling the package inadequate, Foley said: "There are always people who want to do more."

The reaching of a bipartisan agreement would help reassure financial markets even if it was limited in scope, Foley said.

The negotiators rejected, during their nearly four weeks of deliberations, calls for bold action -- such as cutting Social Security cost-of-living adjustments or raising tax rates. Although budget experts often point to those areas as fertile ground for closing the budget gap, action there was considered politically unrealistic.

A draft agreement obtained by The Associated Press on Wednesday included unspecified tax increases of $9 billion, plus $400 million in new fees for government services in fiscal 1988.

If you're an Arts and Letters major and looking for employment, don't despair, says John Madden, chief executive officer for the First National Bank in Chicago. See story below.

Executive praises liberal arts

By DIANE HAMMEL
News Staff

There is still hope for Arts and Letters majors, said a chief executive officer for First National Bank in Chicago Wednesday night.

John Madden, a Notre Dame graduate and chief executive officer for First National Bank in Chicago, said that although most businesses still do not recruit liberal arts majors, the picture is not entirely bleak. Involved in banking since 1962, Madden assured the crowded room of liberal arts students that their nightmares from job anxiety will disappear.

Liberal arts majors possess many important attributes for a career in business, according to Madden. Although there is no single foolproof formula for business success, it is always beneficial to be able to communicate effectively, he said.

Madden compared the liberal arts major to the computer wizard, who he said frequently cannot understand people as well as the liberal arts student. The person with the liberal arts degree can envision new possibilities, organize and reorganize and extrapolate what is still worthwhile from old ideas, he said. A liberal arts background does more than give a person technical knowledge. It also can have a great impact on you for the rest of your life, said Madden. It enables you to analyze and sensitize to possibly find more value and meaning in your life, he said.

There is more to be learned about business by reading Shakespeare or Macchiavelli than from successful businessmen such as Donald Regan or Donald Trump, said Madden.

Initial jobs may be difficult to find, but not impossible, Madden said.

Stress hospitalizes students

Associated Press

ACTON, Mass. - Forty-nine students at Acton-Boxborough's junior and senior high schools have been hospitalized in the last three years for the same ailment -- stress and stress-related conditions.

Students blame intense academic competition at the school in the affluent Boston suburb, while administrators point to a failure to teach adolescents how to cope. Experts on stress and adolescence say the problem is not unusual, but that it is not common to hospitalize such students.

A dozen students interviewed Tuesday said they felt pressure from parents to perform well in school. They also cited a highly competitive atmosphere that leads to peer stress and demanding teachers.

"I feel it," said Ed Dischino, a junior. "You can't see it because nobody talks about it in terms of stress or pressure. But it's here."

Principal Lawrence McNulty did not want to talk about stress

Wednesday, saying, "We're not interested in making mountains out of molehills."

But Andy Palmer, the school's counseling director, is keeping a list of students who have been hospitalized.

"We're in an affluent community. There are higher expectations here," Palmer said Wednesday. "I don't think the answer is to lessen the demands but to teach coping skills to help the kids deal with it."

US, Soviet negotiators move closer to missile ban

Associated Press

WASHINGTON - American and Soviet negotiators have removed a major sticking point in the way of a treaty to eliminate intermediate-range nuclear missiles and are close to settling a second problem, Reagan administration officials said Wednesday.

But two tough verifications issues remain on the table less than three weeks before the scheduled arrival on Dec. 7 of Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev for talks with President Reagan.

Two officials, who spoke to a reporter only on condition of anonymity, said the negotiators in Geneva had decided against language in the treaty calling for further talks on nuclear weapons in Europe.

That appears to be a victory for the U.S. side. The Soviets had demanded the provision for further negotiations in an apparent effort to limit American aircraft based in Western Europe.

The treaty deals exclusively with land-based missiles. The U.S. planes are considered dual-capable -- able to carry nuclear weapons or function as tactical fighters. The West European allies consider them vital to defense against Soviet aggression.

The second issue near resolution concerned a Soviet proposal that the treaty contain a noncircumvention clause - a pledge not to undercut the letter or spirit of the missile ban.

The United States argued it was unnecessary.

The officials said some language was being prepared that would be a compromise between the two sides.

Apart from these two sticking points, two major verification problems remain. One is the U.S. demand for more missile information from the Soviets. The other is a U.S. proposal to station inspectors at the plants where the Soviets produce their SS-25 intercontinental ballistic missiles.

The Reagan administration wanted the monitors there permanently to guard against modification of SS-25s as illegal replacements for the SS-20 missiles that would be banned. In its first stage the SS-25 is similar in appearance to the SS-20s.

The officials said the Soviets had offered to allow the inspectors to make periodic checks at assembly plants.

Ousted Moscow party leader appointed to top post

Associated Press

MOSCOW - Boris Yeltsin, the man thrown out as head of Moscow's Communist Party last week and labeled an ambitious renegade, was named to a top government post Wednesday and given the rank of minister.

It was a stunning turnaround in the political fortunes of the 56-year-old Yeltsin, who last week was denounced at length by Soviet Communist Party General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev as a rash colleague who bucked party rules and discipline.

Exactly one week after his ouster from one of the top party posts in the country, Yeltsin was named first deputy chairman of the Soviet State Committee for Construction, the official Tass news agency said.

The new appointment indicates Yeltsin has been restored to a position of respect and responsibility, perhaps as an effort by Gorbachev to quell fears that his firing was a blow to the Soviet leader's economic and social reform program.

According to the Kremlin pecking order, Yeltsin's new job is of lesser standing and influence than his former post, where he was responsible for party and government operations in the capital city of more than 9 million people.

The appointment also bolsters official contentions that Yeltsin is not suffering serious health problems. A Soviet spokesman said earlier this week that Yeltsin had been hospitalized with a heart problem.

Yeltsin began his career as a construction supervisor in the Ural mountains industrial city of Sverdlovsk. Gorbachev brought Yeltsin to Moscow two years ago.

He lost his Moscow post after contending that Gorbachev's program to overhaul Soviet society and make the economy more efficient had not been successful in the capital.

The towering official became a visible and vocal advocate of broader democracy and more responsive government. His unannounced raids on public transit and food shops to inspect the quality of goods and services made him a popular figure, and his removal surprised and upset some citizens.

Re-zoning

vices, a national organization that works to improve deteriorating neighborhoods, said Puzzello.

She said she did not write the bill and has some problems with it herself. She submitted the bill primarily to save the Northeast Neighborhood the "hassle" of trying to submit it themselves, she said.

"Parts of the plan are not good," Puzzello said, explaining that the area cited for re-zoning is too large. The area currently included in the plan is roughly bounded between Hill Street and Eddy and Corby and Madison, she said.

"I felt that there were many problems from the beginning," Puzzello said, adding that the bill would have to undergo changes including reducing the size of the area to be re-zoned. Puzzello said the bill would not be submitted to the city council for a vote before March.

The bill must be evaluated by the Area Planning Commission before it can be submitted to the city council for a vote, said Puzzello.

The bill met with an unexpected amount of opposition at the planning commission's meeting on Tuesday night, but many residents favored the bill.

According to Art Quigley, president of the Northeast Neighborhood Council, the bill is overwhelmingly supported by the residents of the neighborhood. At a series of public meetings at the Northeast Neighborhood Center, Quigley said he estimated that 90% of the people who attended supported the proposal.

Quigley said large amounts of renting and speculation causes a neighborhood to deteriorate. "I think it's just natural if you have a single-family area. People take better care of the houses they own than those they rent," Quigley said.

Quigley said he feels confident the bill will pass in the City Council once the proper alterations have been made. "Nothing is perfect the first time around" he said.

So what's your point?

Charity -

The Notre Dame council has donated over $7,000 amongst five different organizations in the South Bend community. Through Steak Sales and countless hours of volunteer service, we are able to assist these groups dedicated to serving God's neediest children. The only qualification for this work is the desire to give of oneself without hesitation.

Unity -

The Notre Dame Knights are not alone in their quest to unify the Church and her people in obtaining this right in society. With 1.5 million men as allies, the Knights have sought to unite men and women of all races and creeds to fight for life in all stages, to prevent religious bigotry and ignorance, and to end religious hatred. We stand, most importantly, behind our Church and her ordained leaders. But, like a chain which needs strong links, the Knights need every willing and true man to strengthen and expand its chain.

Fraternity -

The Knights of Columbus began in 1882 as a fraternal benefit society for Roman Catholic males and their families. Through a long standing and solid insurance program, the Knights have aided thousands of widows and orphans of deceased members. Today, the insurance program stands as a paragon of efficiency and charity. No brother is denied coverage, nor is his family. These benefits apply to every member.

Patriotism -

Being a patriot is not just waving a flag on the 4th of July or wearing a flag on your coat lapel. It is voting for good candidates and even running for office. It is keeping communities clean and providing playgrounds for the poor children of the cities. It is working hand-in-hand with different faiths to encourage justice and equality under the law. It is loving humanity enough to rid it of the destructive evils of ignorance, pornography, abortion, euthanasia, and poverty. A Knight is a Catholic Christian whose homeland deserves the best life for its people.

Sobering Advice can save a life

HPC should not be billed for food fight

When I was ten years old, I was really into the Cub Scouts. One weekend I left home with my fellow cub scouts for the weekend. We had the time of our lives. In fact, winning the pinewood derby just may be the highlight of my sporting career. I was riding high that weekend and couldn't wait to get home to share my joy with my parents, brothers and sisters. Upon arriving home, I bounded triumphantly through the door and was immediately greeted by my dear mother.

George Molinsky

guest column

"Go to your room, son, and don't come out until I say so. The other children had a food fight while you were away this weekend and since you also are one of my children, you will pay the same price as the others."

"But Mom," I said, "why should I pay for what my brothers and sisters did while I was away for the weekend? Does that make any logical sense?"

"I am your mother. . . I don't have to make sense. Now go to your room, or I'll throw you pinewood derby trophy into the Little Miami River."

In all fairness to my mother, this situation did not take place in my family in Dayton, but in my "family" here at Notre Dame. The administration has decided that the 7,200 students not involved in the food fight after the Michigan game will be responsible for the $1,400 damage caused by 800 idiots back on campus. It is my understanding that each student will be responsible for contributing approximately $.25 to this fund. In addition, Dr. Goldrick has selected our Hall President's Council to be his little tax collectors.

The issue at hand is not the $.25, even though that quarter is more of a burden on my bank account than the $1,400 ever will be to this university's. The real issue is: does this university have the right to send me or you, as students here, the bill for a crime committed by someone else? Are we next going to foot the bill for the trampled grass on the quad, or maybe the goal post torn down by a couple hundred students?

Our representatives in the Hall President's Council used a similar argument in as many as six meetings with University officials. Goldrick simply would not budge. Our leaders considered making a stand, but when Goldrick threatened to raise tuition, their seemingly strong spines turned out to be brittle and crumbled to the floor upon Goldrick's first shove. Mr. Goldrick conned our leaders into thinking they would be acting in our best interest in avoiding the tuition threat.

I challenge the Hall President's Council to stand up for the rights of the majority of students at Notre Dame, who they claim to represent. Let Goldrick raise tuition, if he has the authority to do so. To be equitable he would have to raise tuition, accounting for the time value of money, about $.27 per student. This solution would relieve the senior class of their burden and place it upon the shoulders of the unsuspecting incoming freshmen. Or maybe he could raise tuition by a mere $5 and the University could make a net profit of about 38 grand on this thing. Does the Hall President's Council really think that this university is giving them an option to decide what our tuition will be next year. If they want to build in a fund to cover food fights, our paying a measly 1,400 bucks won't prevent that from happening. I think our hall presidents are flattering themselves if they think they command that kind of power.

Come on, HPC! This is finally an issue where we hold some of the cards, and have sound moral and ethical reasoning to back our position. Not a penny has been collected. It is not too late to make a stand. A stand not for $.25 but for the underlying principle that says we as students will not be bullied, or sweet-talked, into paying for expenses incurred by others.

And if the HPC decides to fail us on this issue, then let them ask to be placed on the university payroll. If they are not going to function as an independent body, representing the students, they should not submit themselves to slave labor at the hands of the University and at the expense of the student body.

Food fighting is one of the worst crimes imaginable, especially if you look at the hunger around the globe. But food fights sometimes happen, as was the case on Sept. 12, here at Notre Dame, and, somehow they must be paid for. Had my wise mother made the decision, she would have collected all the I.D.'s of the students present while they were all contained in the eating area, and punished the offenders appropriately. Obviously, the University blew its chance, and simply intends to spread the bill out over the innocent. I guess our university administration doesn't always live up to family standards.

Get some guts, HPC and do what is right.

George Molinsky is a junior Accounting major.

P.O. Box Q

Top ten ways to pay for the food fight

Dear Editor:

Following the football team's initial victory at Michigan, there were food fights in both dining halls. Much food was wasted and many dishes were broken. The dining hall workers cleaned up the mess, but the 'mess' was just beginning. The dining hall workers wanted to be paid for the extra effort they expended and the broken dinnerware they replaced. For two months, the question raged: Who would foot the bill?

By now, everyone realizes the administration is going to force the entire student body to pay for damage only a select few students were responsible for. Right or wrong (I prefer wrong), we are going to get stuck with the $1,400 tab. How should we pay this bill?

With all due respect to Student Government and their ideas, I suggest they try some of these.

From the home office in Foxboro, Massachusetts, here is the TOP TEN list of ways to pay off the $1,400 food fight debt at the University of Notre Dame:

10. Collect all profits from Heisman Hanky sales.
 9. Steal the weekly "allowance" of any Miami (Fla.) scholarship football player.
 8. Charge Brent Musberger a nickel every time he says, "Here on CBS."
 7. Collect all profits from the new Notre Dame fight song record sales.
 6. Obtain and sell copies of the next Organic Chemistry Exam.
 5. Charge a toll for the use of the library elevators.
 4. Pawn the gold leaf on the Golden Dome.
 3. Collect 140,000 pennies and personally hand them to Mr. Hickey.
 2. Charge a penny for three throws at Dr. Goldrick in a dunking booth.
- And, the number one method of paying off the food fight debt at the University of Notre Dame:
1. Buy all of our beer in Michigan this weekend, and give Mr. Hickey 28,000 empty beer cans.

"Child" is comedy smash

TAMI JENELLE ETTEN

You know the day is going to be hell when there's no diet coke for breakfast. Right? A Thursday in March started that way for the Bradshaw family, the far-from-Cosby, full-of-chaos family of Julie Jensen's play "Thursday's Child" which opened last night at St. Mary's O'Laughlin Auditorium.

The family, headed by middle-aged mother, George Ann Bradshaw, played brilliantly by PLS senior Tracy Fetters, is in for a shock when they discover that she is pregnant.

Her husband, the passive-aggressive Ken Bradshaw, played by junior Communications and Theatre major, Kevin Kennedy has nothing but confusion to add to her condition by stepping in dog mess and being too incompetent to do anything about it (or about his life for that matter).

To add to the chaos, Marcy (Meghan Farley), their eight year old "experimenter", has put fish in the washing machine, Kenny (Michael Murphy), their fifteen year old, has kicked in the car hood, and their sixteen year old, Kenna Lou (Amy McFadden) has been having sex with her boyfriend who is a greek. Or is he a geek?

As the day unfolds, George Ann placidly waits for something to go right. All her overbearing mother has to offer her, with her image projected largely on a curtain behind the set, is a recipe for Weight

Kevin Kennedy as Ken and Tracie Fetters as George Ann in a scene from the comedy "Thursday's Child" which debuted last night and will run through Sunday.

Watchers barbequed chicken. (The secret of which is a can of diet coke--or tab, whichever you prefer.)

Despite the laughs and chaos, George Ann is faced with a major decision to make. She no longer has all the choices she did when she was young. She has to gracefully get out of what she cannot change.

It is playwright and director Julie Jensen's grace which makes this comedy funny, very funny, but not overburdened with laughter that the audience doesn't see the seriousness of what lies ahead for George Ann.

It offers insight to life, if only a release from tension by making up your own rules if the ones that are around aren't working. But then its back to reality.

The play, which was "in the workings for three years" has been reworked and rewritten by the cast and playwright collectively. In its completed form, it is scheduled to be performed by the Capital Repertory Company in Albany, New York, next spring.

The Albany audiences are in for a real treat. A playwright from a small Midwestern college is going to give them something to laugh about. Make sure you beat them to it.

"Thursday's Child" runs through Sunday, November 22. For ticket information contact the O'Laughlin Box Office at 284-4626.

Spyro captivates fans

Spyro Gyra compensated for a half-full Morris Civic Auditorium audience last night by amplifying their unique creation of pop-jazz enough to vibrate within any empty space.

Playing pieces from their older albums like "Alternating Currents" and their latest album "Stories Without Words," the group proved to any doubter that even a pop band with no vocals can captivate an audience for over two hours.

The show spotlighted each band member as a soloist. Even drummer Richie Morales and Latin percussionist Manolo Badrena revealed particular melodies that could only be derived from skilled percussionists.

Badrena, who joined the band last year, fashioned a unique Latin rythm that added a diverse twist to the rest of the jazz. He supplied his own form of vocals, by chanting into the microphone while pounding on his bongo drums, creating a truly Latin mood.

Guitarist Julio Fernandez performed his own "Del Corazon" which began as a mellow Spanish ballad, on a Spanish guitar and progressed into a jazzy orchestration with a Spanish flavor.

Don Schuman shared his keyboard expertise with a series of intense solos, including an untitled creation just completed. The band left the stage to Schuman. He aroused both intense silence and wild cheers with his rich performance which sounded more like a collaboration of talented musicians than a solo effort.

Dave Samuels brought the xylophone from being a tertiary instrument to dazzling center stage. He maneuvered two sticks in each hand, creating jazz-style harmonies in solos like "Mardi Gras" from the "Alternating Currents" album.

But it was Jay Beckenstein, leader of the band, who unified the show. His performance of "Bittersweet" added the mellow touch that was well appreciated after several intense, fast-paced tunes.

The solos complemented each other well partly because of the smooth transitions that linked them. One piece ended and another began before the audience had a chance to do anything but applaud.

A performance by Spyro Gyra, in any other city, would have generated a capacity crowd. But to the small dedicated group in attendance the intensity of one of America's fastest rising jazz bands filled every inch of empty space with rich inspiration.

Co-educational halls?

Compiled by Cara Anthony and Christine Walters

"Co-ed dorms would promote better understanding between men and women. I think that's what this university needs a little more of. I think the University will approach the issue in a rational, step-by-step way."

Trace Murphy
Freshman

"Co-ed dorms are a good idea, but things would be different. I don't see Notre Dame moving in that direction, it's a radical idea for the University."

Ellen Mouch
Junior

"I think the idea of co-ed dorms is great, and I wouldn't mind if my own hall went co-ed. You're going to have to learn to live with people of the opposite sex sometime, so why not during college? Notre Dame should have had co-ed halls a long time ago."

Dave Rosenberg
Freshman

"I'm not sure that co-ed halls would work at a university like this, just because it's always been this way. I wouldn't mind the change, but so many people have gone through this University with separate dorms that it just wouldn't be accepted."

Matt Langie
Sophomore

"Everybody wants them, but no one wants their own dorm changed. If people have to live with someone of the opposite sex on the next floor, they have to worry about locking the door and wearing their bathrobe to the showers. I don't think the University will ever change to co-ed dorms."

Jim DeMarco
Freshman

"Living in an all-women's dorm is one of the things I like about Notre Dame. There's more privacy and it encourages respect between men and women. Also, if we kept parietals, they would be much harder to enforce."

Suzi Criqui
Freshman

"I went abroad last year, and lived in a co-ed dorm. There was no problem with privacy, and it worked really well. I don't see why we shouldn't have them here. People would be more relaxed, but not in a promiscuous way. Notre Dame will probably have co-ed dorms eventually."

Maria Scheidler
Junior

"I like the dorms the way they are now, that's one of the reasons why I came here. I've stayed in co-ed dorms on other campuses and it's a total disaster. Usually the dorms are a mess and people don't respect each other. I don't see Monk Malloy doing anything drastic in his first year as President."

Hitting one of his league-leading 49 home runs here, Andre Dawson of the last-place Chicago Cubs is the National League Most Valuable Player for 1987. Dawson was the second lowest-paid player among Cub regulars this season.

Dawson captures National's MVP

Associated Press

NEW YORK - Andre Dawson of the Chicago Cubs became the first member of a last-place team to be named Most Valuable Player when he won the National League award on Wednesday.

Dawson, a free agent whom no club bid for last winter, led the majors with 137 runs batted in and tied for the homer lead with 49.

He beat St. Louis shortstop Ozzie Smith by a 269-193 margin in voting by the Baseball Writers Association of America.

Jack Clark, Smith's teammate on the National League East champion St. Louis team that finished 18 1/2 games ahead of Chicago, was third with 186. Montreal's Tim Wallach was fourth and San Francisco's Will Clark was fifth. Cy Young winner Steve Bedrosian of Philadelphia finished 16th.

Dawson and the two Clarks were the only players named on all 24 ballots. Smith was named on 22. Two association members in each of the 12 NL cities were eligible to vote.

Dawson came to the Cubs this spring, handing a blank contract to then-general manager Dallas Green. The Cubs, burned by multimillion-dollar free agents contracts in the past, filled in the amount of $500,000, making Dawson the second-lowest paid regular on the team.

But Dawson, 33, prospered with his best year while the Cubs struggled along at 76-85. Dawson batted .287 and played a strong right field while also surpassing his previous top power numbers of 32 home runs and 113 RBI, both in 1983 with Montreal.

He earned an additional $150,000 for staying off the disabled list and an extra $50,000 for making the All-Star team for the fourth time. He did not have an incentive clause in his contract for winning the MVP.

Dawson, vowing last winter he would not return to the Expos for a 12th season, rejected salary arbitration and tested the free-agent market. The Expos offered a two-year contract worth $2 million, and no other team topped that figure.

From the start, Dawson wanted to play at Wrigley Field, where he had hit .346 in his career. At that point, he had averaged one home run for every 16.8 at-bats during the day compared to one per each 37.1 at-bats at night.

Lyght had good reason to feel nervous before the season started. The Michigan native only had to look at the Notre Dame schedule and see Michigan and Michigan State as the first two opponents.

"The Michigan game was a really big game for me, and a lot of my friends were at the game. It meant a lot that we did well," says Lyght. "My interception against Michigan State was my biggest thrill so far. I knew a lot of the players from the team and a lot of the coaches. I got to play a lot in that game, and I was really happy we did well."

But it was Lyght's blocked punt in the second half of the comeback attempt against Pitt that first had the freshman catching the eye of the students.

"It was a confidence builder," says Lyght. "During the game, when we were losing, I was on the sideline and was thinking, 'I have really got to do something to help the team,' and since I was on the special teams, when they called for the blocked punt, I knew that was a way to help the team."

Of course, if Lyght really had his choice, he would be lining up with the offensive unit, as he did in high school, even though Lyght isn't exactly complaining with his playing time.

"I thought of myself as a better offensive player (in high school), but everyone else seems to think of myself as a better defensive player.

"I've had a lot of playing time, and I've enjoyed playing against such quality teams. Brandy Wells has taken me under his wing and has shown me a lot of the in's and out's of being a college defensive back."

Lyght might not be seeing much time with the offense, but it looks like he truly has found a home in the defensive backfield.

Preseason All-Americans Rivers makes AP's first team

Associated Press

NEW YORK- Notre Dame point guard David Rivers has battled back from a near-fatal automobile accident in June of 1986 to earn a selection on the 1987-88 Associated Press preseason All-American team.

He was voted to the squad along with Kansas forward Danny Manning, Syracuse center Rony Seikaly, North Carolina forward J.R. Reid and Michigan guard Gary Grant by a nationwide panel of sportswriters and broadcasters.

Grant says he would trade his selection to the 1987-88 Associated Press preseason All-American team for a Big Ten title and a good showing in the NCAA Tournament.

"It's an honor to get selected to a preseason All-American team, but right now, I'm just looking forward to the season and I would just like to make sure that the team does well," Grant said Wednesday after the team was announced.

"I feel that if the team wins a Big Ten championship and does well in postseason play, the individual awards will follow," he added.

Manning was the top vote-getter in the balloting, receiving 60 of a possible 64 votes. Seikaly had 40, Reid got 36, while Rivers and Grant had 33 and 32, respectively. All are seniors but Reid, who is a sophomore.

Grant, one of the nation's best two-way players, averaged 22.4 points, 5.4 assists and 2.7 steals a game. He led Michigan, ranked ninth in the AP's preseason poll, into the second round of the NCAA Tournament last spring.

Manning was the only repeater from last year's initial AP preseason team, which included seniors David Robinson of Navy, Kenny Smith of North Carolina, and Steve Alford of Indiana, each of whom, like Manning, was chosen for the All-American team after the season.

Louisville's Pervis Ellison was the other player selected to last year's preseason team. Reggie Williams of Georgetown replaced him on the postseason All-American team.

Manning, the Big Eight player of the year, averaged 23.9 points and 9.5 rebounds per game for the Jayhawks last season while making 62 percent of his field goal attempts.

Reid, one of the most heralded freshman ever to enter Coach Dean Smith's program, was the Atlantic Coast Conference rookie of the year last season, averaging 14.7 points and 7.4 rebounds per game.

Seikaly was the center last season as the Orangemen, No.1 in the pre-season, came within a point of the national championship, losing 74-73 to Indiana. The 6-10 native of Greece averaged 15.1 points, 8.2 rebounds and 2.1 blocks last season while shooting 57 percent from the field.

The 6-foot Rivers averaged 15.7 points and 5.1 assists last season while playing almost 37 minutes a game in leading the Fighting Irish to the NCAA's round of 16, and is expected to be at full strength for his senior season.

scare the Orange Bowl committee. But that scare is probably not enough to encourage the committee to opt for Notre Dame Saturday.

"As far as we're concerned, there are still some options that could open up if we beat Penn State," Notre Dame Associate Athletic Director Roger Valdiserri said Wednesday. "We'll just have to wait and see."

Some schools lobby through the media for certain bids, as Jimmy Johnson and Miami did this year in requesting an unconditional bid to the Orange Bowl. But Notre Dame has maintained a low profile when it comes to that kind of thing.

"We don't make deals ahead of time," Valdiserri continued. "That's not our style."

A couple of hours after Saturday's game, all the speculation will end. And Notre Dame's chances for a bid to the Orange Bowl probably will end as well.

Baker makes last year count

By BRIAN O'GARA
Assistant Sports Editor

California and volleyball. A marriage made in the sands of Laguna Beach, Mission Beach, and many other hotspots along the Pacific coast.

Southern California has long been known as a volleyball mecca. Four years ago, senior Kathy Baker left that warm scenario to come to Notre Dame. While her high school friends and teammates were choosing such volleyball powers as Southern Cal, San Diego State and Long Beach State, Baker headed east to play for a team in only its fifth year with a varsity volleyball program. The Irish had only one season above .500 up to that point.

"All my friends were staying in California," says Baker, "but I wanted to be different. I wanted to get out on my own. I loved volleyball, but I wanted to get a good education too."

Four years later, Baker and her Notre Dame teammates are 29-9 against a schedule which included six teams ranked in the Top 20. The Irish are big favorites to capture their second consecutive North Star Conference championship this weekend in Chicago. The program has had three winning seasons in the past four years, and has been a win or two away from an NCAA Tournament bid for two years running.

"Kathy Baker has been instrumental in getting this program where it is," said Notre Dame head coach Art Lambert.

This weekend's NSC championship will be the last time Baker and fellow seniors Jill Suglich, Kathleen Morin and Gretchen Kraus suit up for the Irish. For all four, it marks the end of a four-year career that has seen a mediocre program turn into a challenger for the NCAA Tournament.

"This is it," says Baker. "Since my freshman year in high school I've been competing in volleyball. Life will be different without it. We have a good record but we wanted to go to the NCAA's. A lot of the team's we lost to were in five games. If we had won some of those games, it could have been a different story."

In last year's 33-7 season, Baker saw action in only 34 of Notre Dame's 136 games, second lowest on the team. This fall, as the Irish have compiled a comparable 29-9 record against a much more difficult schedule, Baker has been a consistent starter and played in 89 of the team's 130 games, third highest on the squad.

Why the big change in playing time? It's not that experience is so important, considering the Irish returned all of last year's starters and two seniors have seen more bench time this year than last. The difference is within the mind of Kathy Baker.

"Last spring and summer I worked out a lot," said the senior, "and something clicked about being a senior. I took on a completely different attitude --that this was the last time through, my last year of Notre Dame volleyball. The game of volleyball was always important to me, but I decided to make it one of the most important things in my life."

That new attitude has been apparent to anyone at an Irish volleyball game. No. 2 is no longer cheering from the bench, but drawing cheers from the crowd for her hustle on the court.

"Kathy Baker's attitude and efforts and drive, in my opinion, are what athletics are all about. I feel fortunate to have had the opportunity to coach her."

In last year's North Star Conference tournament, Baker earned second-team all-tournament honors with a strong performance. She and the Irish hope to repeat last year's success beginning Saturday when they meet Valparaiso and Marquette at 11 a.m. and 3 p.m. respectively. The tournament semi-finals will be held Sunday at noon, with the finals slated for 2 p.m. that afternoon. All games will be at DePaul's Alumni Hall.

"We've beaten those teams once this year," said Lambert of his team's status as favorite, "but that really doesn't mean anything."

"This will be a chance for us to generate some momentum and chemistry to carry over into the spring," continued the head coach. "I really liked some of the things I saw against Western Michigan, despite the loss. It looked like we might be awakening."

The Observer / David Fischer

Edwards to stay on as Indians' chief

Associated Press

CLEVELAND - Doc Edwards, who was promoted from bullpen coach to manager midway through the Cleveland Indians' disastrous 1987 season, was rehired Wednesday to manage the team in 1988.

Edwards directed the Cleveland to a 30-45 mark after taking over on July 16 when Pat Corrales was fired. The Indians were 31-56 under Corrales.

Their final 61-101 record was the worst in the majors, and Edwards said he and new team President Hank Peters were prepared to do some dealing to strengthen a pitching staff that had a 5.28 earned run average, also worst in the big leagues.

"When you finish last, you have to be open to anything," the 50-year-old Edwards said. "You have to listen to any offers. I don't think you can say anyone's untouchable at this point."

Edwards also said he wanted to improve Cleveland's defense, which committed an American League-high 153 errors, by letting a number of players settle into one position. Joe Carter alternated between outfield and first base, and Cory Snyder spent time at shortstop and in the outfield last year.

"We're going to settle Joe Carter into one position," Edwards said, adding that Carter's best position is the outfield. "Cory Snyder, who's trying to harness a cannon of an arm, is going to be our right fielder."

He said he wants to keep Brook Jacoby at third base, countering speculation that Jacoby might be moved to first to make room for Eddie Williams, a promising third base prospect.

Peters, the former Baltimore Orioles executive hired by the Indians earlier this month, said Edwards signed a one-year contract. Peters indicated that no one else was seriously considered for the job.

Edwards projects a laid-back attitude that he says he prefers when dealing with players.

"I would rather just sit in the corner of the dugout like Casey Stengel used to do -- write down the names of the first nine guys who show up at the ballpark and let 'em win," Edwards said. "If someone comes to the ballpark and plays hard if you let him alone, I'll do that. But if I have to hang on somebody's belt, I'll do that."

Edwards was in his second full season as the Indians' bullpen coach when he was named manager.

Irish go international in pre-season games

Women top Wales, 70-41

Special to the Observer

After a slow first half the Notre Dame women's basketball used a second-half surge to dump the Wales National Team, 70-41, Wednesday night in LaGrange, Ind.

Playing at the Prairie Heights High School gym to improve community support for the team, the Irish got off to a slow start offensively, and led 27-20 at halftime.

But after leading only by seven at the half, Notre Dame doubled up on Wales, outscoring the opponents 43-21 in the second half to win handily.

Sandy Botham and Heidi Bunek led the offensive surge for Notre Dame in the second half.

Botham scored 15 points with six rebounds. Bunek, who scored 14 points, led the Irish with nine rebounds.

Notre Dame also got results from its backcourt. Freshman guard Karen Robinson, who scored 10 points in last weekend's Blue-Gold game scored in double figures again. The Turnersville, N.J., native had 12 points for the Irish. Senior guard Mary Gavin, Notre Dame's career leader in assists, led the team in that category with 10 on Wednesday.

Mary Gavin (above) helped lead the Notre Dame women's basketball team to a 70-41 win over the Wales National Team on Wednesday, and AP All-American David Rivers (below) leads the men's team against Zadar, Yugoslavia, tonight at the JACC.

Men take on Zadar today

Special to The Observer

The Notre Dame men's basketball team will play its final exhibition of the season Thursday night at 7:30 against the Zadar Club of Yugoslavia. Tickets to the game are a part of the student season ticket package.

As of late Wednesday afternoon, lower arena seating was available. Tickets sales end Thursday evening with sales to the freshman class and those upperclassmen who have yet to purchase their tickets. The price of the package is $80 for lower arena seats and $64 for bleachers.

When Zadar pulls into town, it will be making the seventh stop of its nine-game tour. The tour began Nov. 10 at Valparaiso and ends this Saturday night at DePaul. The Irish coaching staff arranged Zadar's tour, maintaining its ties to Yugoslavian basketball. The Irish toured Yugoslavia this past summer.

This will be the last tune-up for the Irish before they travel to Bloomington, Ind., to open the season against the sixth-ranked and defending national champion Hoosiers. Notre Dame opens its home season against Boston University Dec. 8.

Lyght 'finds a home' with ND's defensive backfield

By STEVE MEGARGEE
Sports Writer

When freshman Todd Lyght offers from Michigan, Michigan State, UCLA and Arizona State to attend Notre Dame, he was expecting to lead the Irish to glory by catching passes.

Instead, he's making his contributions by preventing people from catching passes.

Lyght's talents at both wide receiver and defensive back at Powers High School in Flint, Mich., caused the Ann Arbor News to name him the top player in Michigan last year. But after spending a couple of days at wide receiver for Notre Dame, he was switched to the defensive backfield. He hasn't left since.

"I liked wide receiver better, I like to catch the ball, the fact of being an offensive threat and being able to score," says Lyght. "I was recruited by everyone really at both positions. Coach (Lou) Holtz told me I'd play wide receiver, and then he told me to move to defensive back because that's where our needs were.

"He told me I'd move back in the spring, but now it doesn't look like I'll move back."

You could forgive the Notre Dame coaching staff for being unwilling to make the switch. Lyght has filled in at both cornerback and free safety for the Irish, helping the team survive injuries to veterans Corny Southall and Brandy Wells. And he has secondary coach Terry Forbes more than happy the freshman ended up in the secondary.

"I feel pretty confident he's found a home here," says Forbes. "He's made it very well. He's intelligent, has good football sense, and he really understands the things we're trying to do in the secondary. He's a very valuable person to us right now."

After settling in at defensive back during fall practice,

Bowl politics make it the destination Dallas

The Orange Bowl team-selection committee tried its best to make one, but the only deals to expect in the next few days are deals with airline companies for holiday flights.

One flight in particular: South Bend to Dallas for New Year's Day.

It is beginning to look like the Irish are virtually locked into a spot in the Cotton Bowl on Jan. 1, although members of the Notre Dame Athletic Department and the Irish football team are still clinging to the slim chance the Irish have for a spot in the Orange Bowl.

The Orange Bowl committee presented the Cotton Bowl committee with a proposal last week that would have set up a game for the national championship in the Orange Bowl, committee chairman Pete Williams said Wednesday when contacted at his Miami office.

The Orange Bowl proposed that the winner of the Nov. 28 Miami-Notre Dame game would play the winner of this Saturday's Oklahoma-Nebraska game for the title. The Cotton Bowl would then take the loser of the Miami-Notre Dame game to face the Southwest Conference champion, Williams said.

But that deal was never made, and is not being pursued.

"We (the Orange Bowl committee) made the proposal, and I think that speaks for how highly we regarded that possibility," Williams said. "We thought it was a good proposal, but it wasn't accepted."

The Cotton Bowl, which has been struggling in the network television ratings on Jan. 1 in recent years, obviously is drawn to Notre Dame because of its national image and the year the seventh-ranked, 8-1 Irish have had. Cotton Bowl representatives in the Notre Dame pressbox during home football games confirmed their interest and seem confident in the prospect of signing Notre Dame when the bids come out Saturday at 6 p.m. The Irish probably will play the winner of the Thanksgiving Day game between Texas and Texas A&M.

"The Orange Bowl has their business, and we have ours," Cotton Bowl representative Jim Brock said. "We want to do what's in the best interest of the Cotton Bowl. This is a business deal. We have no animosity toward the Orange Bowl, the University of Miami and we certainly have no animosity toward Notre Dame."

The Orange Bowl will not wait for the Notre Dame-Miami result before extending its bid. The selection committee already has announced that it will make its choice Saturday along with the Cotton Bowl.

The Orange Bowl committee is not at liberty to discuss the particulars of its upcoming choice, Williams said, but had listed its top four last week as Miami (8-0), Syracuse (10-0), Florida State (9-1) and Notre Dame. Syracuse and Florida State will accept bids to the Sugar and Fiesta Bowls, respectively.

That leaves Miami and Notre Dame, and the decision will be made before the two teams square off against one another.

Unfortunately for the Irish, Miami is the logical choice. The Hurricanes are undefeated while the Irish suffered a 30-22 loss to Pittsburgh. Miami is third in the Associated Press poll while Notre Dame stands seventh. And the Hurricanes will be favored when the Irish travel south a week from Saturday.

Miami plays 12th-ranked South Carolina after the contest against Notre Dame, and the chance of a loss to both the Irish and the Gamecocks has to
