OBUD decrees election rules

By MATT GALLAGHER
Staff Reporter

Ombudsman election officials laid out the rules for the upcoming student body president, vice president and senate elections at a meeting for all potential candidates Tuesday night.

Jim Grace and John Wilson, OBUD officials, chaired the meeting and explained the rules as stated in the Bylaws of the Student Government Constitution.

Petitions bearing the names of 150 Notre Dame students must be submitted to the OBUD office by noon on Friday, Feb. 5 for presidential and vice presidential candidates. 75 signatures are due on the same date for those running for senatorial positions, said Grace.

The signatures must be on official petitions and will be checked for validity by election officials, said Grace.

The names of those candidates who successfully complete the petition and who are academically eligible for election will be posted outside the OBUD office on Friday afternoon and will be published in The Observer, Grace said.

The candidates will be allowed to campaign from midnight on Tuesday, Feb. 9 until the following Monday night. Elections will then be held on Tuesday, Feb. 16 in the dorms.

In order to win the election, a candidate must have 50 percent of the votes cast plus one vote. If no candidate achieves an absolute majority, a run-off election will be held on Thursday, Feb. 18, following one day of campaigning, according to Grace.

The presidential and vice presidential candidates will have a strict allowance of $125 to spend on their campaigns, said Grace, adding that senatorial candidates will be allowed to spend $75. OBUD officials will require receipts for all campaign expenses to assure that the $125 limit is not exceeded. They will also review all election materials before they are allowed to be used.

Grace said he and Wilson would be assisted by several other election committee officials to ensure compliance with the rules. "(The committee members) know the rules,"

Plan will standardize time of hall presidents' elections

By NATASHA WILSON
Staff Reporter

The Hall Presidents' Council discussed a proposal to standardize election dates for all hall elections during Tuesday night's meeting at Zahm Hall.

The staggered elections may cause council ineffectiveness because new members join at different times, said HPC co-chairman Bob Daley.

"Instead of having a smooth transition, we just have this rolling period for a couple of months, where confusion is more the rule than the exception," Daley said.

Traditionally all hall elections are held before an April 1 deadline.

Some dorm election dates are regulated by hall constitutions. The majority of the halls have elections between late Feb. and the end of March, Daley said.

Residents of Zahm and Dillon, however, recently elected Steve Hornett and Steve Sewell, respectively, hall presidents.

Several council members suggested that the outgoing presidents attend the first few HPC meetings in April along with the newly elected officials to make the transition smoother.

The presidents agreed to vote on a plan to standardize elections at next week's meeting.

The council also debated the academic commission's proposed plus/minus grading system. The presidents generally supported the idea, but questioned the manner in which it would be implemented.

Notre Dame and Saint Mary's are two of the few colleges in the country without a plus/minus system, said Jim Winkler, co-president of Alumni Hall.

The universities must therefore enclose letters explaining the unique grading systems in students' resumes and graduate school applications, Winkler said.

"With a plus/minus system, we could coordinate ourselves and be on the same par as everybody else," he said.

Pangborn president Liam Canny opposed incorporating the system for the current upperclassmen because of the complications involved with explaining the changes to employers and graduate schools.

Social Security sparks feud

Associated Press

Republican Bob Dole accused rival Jack Kemp of distorting his record on Social Security and playing to the fears of the elderly Tuesday, while Democrat Paul Simon attacked the nominal leader in Iowa, Richard Gephardt, on the same sensitive issue.

Republican presidential hopefuls were meeting with a gun owners group in New Hampshire, where the nation's first primary is two weeks away. The Democrats continued to work Iowa ahead of Monday night's caucuses.

Republican Pat Robertson spoke against abortion and attacked the birth-control advocacy group Planned Parenthood in an appearance before a New Hampshire legislative committee.

"The long-range goal of Planned Parenthood is ... to provide a master race," he said. Planned Parenthood president Faye Wattleton in New York called Robertson's remarks "unfounded and, frankly, ridiculous."

Clearly feeling stung by Kemp's attacks on Social Security, Dole said the New York congressman's tactics may backfire. Both Dole and Vice President George Bush's campaign have criticized Kemp for mailing out information attacking their records on Social Security in brown envelopes that could be mistaken for official information.

"I think we ought to alert senior citizens," the Senate GOP leader said. "It's on the border line of fair campaigning. It's deceptive. You're dealing with the fears of people."

"When anybody distorts your record, you ought to correct it," Dole said.

Great Hunger Clean-Up is organized for April

Planning continues for the second annual Great Hunger Clean-Up in South Bend, a one day event aimed at combating hunger to take place April 16, said Elizabeth Durkin, local coordinator for the event.

Decisions on who will receive the funds raised have been finalized but the work sites which will be involved have not been chosen and the incentive prizes have not been confirmed, said Durkin.

In the Great Hunger Clean-Up, students work together with their community on projects which will benefit the community, said Durkin.

The organization solicits donations from the business sector and individual students get personal sponsors from the private sector added Suzanne Lutze, fundraising chairwoman.

A preacher's wife will be counting her pennies from heaven - more than 120 million of them - for the next 20 years, with a little help from the Illinois Lottery. Barbara Springfield, whose husband, Jim, gave up a $30,000-a-year job to become pastor of a storefront church, won more than $1.2 million in Saturday's drawing of the state's Lotto game. She had purchased only a few tickets and said she kept those hidden from her husband because he preaches that gambling is a sin. So, what does he think of her windfall? "I prayed for her and asked the Lord to forgive her," said Springfield, pastor of Good Hope Free Will Baptist Church, who was willing to overlook the sin in this case. "It seems to me like the Lord is saying, 'Hey, here's your salary for the next 20 years; now preach my word,'" said Springfield. -Associated Press

Law officers arrested Alabama NAACP President Thomas Reed and 10 other black leaders on Tuesday when they tried to climb a fence around the Capitol to take down the Confederate battle flag flying over the dome. Reed contends the flag represents racism and oppression and said that if it was not taken down voluntarily he planned to "enter the Capitol grounds and climb to the top of the state Capitol dome and remove the Confederate battle flag." He said the banner is resented by blacks and "better-thinking white people." -Associated Press

Seniors relax, forget anxiety about next year

It's getting pretty intense down at the Career and Placement office this time of year. Seniors in search of a job can be as irritable as Robert Young before he discovered decaffeinated coffee. I should know, I am one.

Since the beginning of this semester, a week has not gone by when my classmates have not seen me sporting my blue suit and heading for the basement of the library. I am really getting into this interview thing while the getting is good. Sooner or later, somebody is going to make me leave Notre Dame and the confines of a well-organized placement service. I cannot imagine trying to get an interview on my own.

Because no senior is in his or her own private sinking career boat, there are plenty of people with whom we can share war stories about the job hunt. Ask just about any senior and he or she will have an interview story to tell.

One of my friends who works for the paper has labelled himself an "interview geek" until he gets a job. "What's an interview geek?" you ask. When this guy walks into an interview he has already spent at least an hour psyching himself up for possible questions. He does all of the research on a company and then some. He even goes through a sort of mental push-ups to further hone his mind for the interview challenge.

But his "geekiness" does not stop in the interview room. If he watches TV, he looks for commercials an ad agency he is interested in has produced. If he gets a letter from any company, he asks himself aloud (before opening the envelope) if this could be the job offer he is waiting for.

My friend's being an interview geek will pay off, however. As the saying goes, the squeaky wheel gets the grease. Potential employers have never heard a guy squeak so loudly.

My problem with this whole job hunt process is that I am not patient enough. After I have been in an interview for 30 minutes, I wish the guy would just look at me and tell me whether or not I have a job. Instead, everybody gives you the same big grin, shakes your hand and tells you to wait for infinity (or two weeks, whatever comes first) before you get your nickel beer notice (rejection letter is such a nasty term). At that point, you do not know if the interviewer thought you were God's gift to the waste products industry or the biggest schlep he or she has ever met.

Another problem that I have in particular about the waiting factor is that I have been reading Forbes and Fortune religiously for the past year. (If you can't beat 'em, join 'em.)

Needless to say, these magazines do not run

Kevin Becker

Editor-in-Chief

articles about guys and gals two years out of college who are still so low on the totem pole that moving down would put the street people out of work. The pages of those magazines are reserved for the truly elite, the people that many of us would like to be in the next six to eight . . . months.

In every issue, Forbes runs a feature on "The Up & Comers." These articles are about the people to watch in the world of business, people that many of us may be working for in the next couple of years. A sample feature would be about some 27-year-old making 300K a year as he scratches his way up the corporate ladder (making sure not to chip the crystal on his Rolex, of course.)

Recently, Fortune ran a small article on a 30-year-old who had founded a nation-wide yogurt franchise. The barely post-adolescent multi-millionaire was quoted at the end of the article as saying that he felt he missed out on the college experience. For that kind of money, I could be convinced to give up going to Bridget's for a while.

But for now, all that we seniors can do is wait and hope for the best. While we're waiting, however, we might as well wait at Bridget's. For some reason, the frustration of it all seems to go down a lot easier there.

Gunman held teachers, kids hostage in day long ordeal

Associated Press

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. -A gunman was taken into custody and 26 children and a teacher who were held hostage in a day-long siege at a private school were released Tuesday night, police told the children's parents.

"It's over," said Assistant Chief of Police Billy Wilkins. He said the kids were "all right."

Several officers wrestled the gunman to the concrete immediately outside the door to the elementary school building at West End Christian School, where as many as 80 children, four teachers and an assistant had been held hostage Tuesday morning. All but 26 of the pupils and one teacher were released earlier in the day.

"Please don't hurt me," said the gunman, identified by police as James Harvey of San Antonio, Texas. He had invaded the school shortly after classes began and said he was trying to draw attention to the homeless and hungry in America.

"I've done everything you asked," he said.

Police told him he would not be hurt as they put him in a city police car.

The children then walked out single file. Their parents burst into cheers in a nearby gym when told their children were safe.

The children, all in lower elementary grades, and their parents hugged each other and cried as they were reunited in the school's gym. The children kept repeating "We're all right, we're all right" as parents and grandparents said "Thank the Lord, thank the Lord."

The children appeared in good spirits after an ordeal that lasted nearly 12 hours.

Some parents went to their knees in joyful prayer when the assistant police chief announced that the hostage crisis had ended with the children safe.

Reagan attempts to save Contra aid

Associated Press

WASHINGTON -President Reagan made a last-ditch effort to salvage his $36.2 million aid package for the Contra rebels on Tuesday by promising to release money for arms and ammunition only if Congress agrees.

In an Oval Office address shunned by three major television networks, Reagan argued that Wednesday's vote in the House amounted to nothing less than "win or lose for peace and freedom. It is yes or no to America's national security."

"Our support is needed now - tomorrow will be too late," Reagan said, pleading support for the Contras' battle against the leftist government of Nicaragua.

It was unclear whether Reagan's last-minute maneuver would sway those undecided about Wednesday's crucial vote. Prior to the evening speech, Democratic leaders had said the president was likely to lose.

"I think there's going to be a bipartisan group tomorrow against this proposal," said House Majority Leader Thomas Foley, D-Wash.

But Reagan argued that the Contras represented the last hope to prevent the spread of communism in Central America and must not be abandoned.

"If we cut off aid to the freedom fighters, then the Sandinistas can go back to their old ways," Reagan said.

Initially, Reagan proposed that the plan's $3.6 million for weapons would be held back until at least March 31. It would be released only if he found that no cease-fire had been achieved and the Sandinistas weren't abiding by their promises for democratic reform.

In his address, he changed the terms in an attempt to win over wavering lawmakers. He proposed that both houses of Congress decide within a 10-day period whether they agreed with him or not on the necessity for the military aid. Such a resolution is usually considered non-binding by the Congress, but the president pledged to abide by it.

Hunger

Two South Bend charities will receive 40 percent of the money raised: the Hope Rescue Mission, a shelter for the homeless, and Real Services, a nutrition program for the elderly.

A development project in Zimbabwe, a project picked by the Overseas Development Network, will also receive 40 percent of all money donated. These funds will be used to buy fencing for gardens which will aid a program aimed at teaching children to grow their own vegetables. Some of the money will also be used to provide books for a school library.

The remaining 20 percent will be given to the National Student Campaign Against Hunger which is responsible for organizing cleanups all over the country.

To pick the work sites for the event, applications have been sent out to non-profit organizations.

The applications ask if the group has any work which could be done by area students and how many students the job would require. The returned applications are then reviewed and sites are chosen, said Durkin.

Prizes are being donated by area businesses to be awarded to the students who collect the most money.

Last year, prizes included a round trip flight to anywhere in the continental United States, an escape weekend at the Marriot, dinner for two at Tippicanoe Place, and dinners at other fine restaurants in South Bend.

Although prizes for this year have not been confirmed, they will be comparable to those offered last year, reports Durkin.

This year Notre Dame, Saint Mary's, and area high school students have expressed an interest in participating in the event.

Last year was the first year Notre Dame took part in the cleanup. Notre Dame was ranked twelfth of all universities that participated. Approximately 120 students were involved and succeeded in raising $2,000.

Durkin is hopeful that with better organization and more publicity this year will be even more successful.

The Great Hunger Clean-Up is a nationwide event started in the Spring of 1985 by Bill Hoogterp, a junior at Aquinas College in Grand Rapids, Durkin said.

"It should begin with the freshmen, like the Honor Code," Canny said.

Daley said HPC will soon formulate a definite position on the proposed grading system.

Economics graduate student Mike Murdock asked the council for its support of a faculty course evaluation booklet to be published this spring before registration.

The book will contain students' comments on each professor, the amount of work required for each course and the grades they received in that class.

The project will be sponsored by the Student Government Association of Saint Mary's.

The council will meet Tuesday at 6:30 in the Haggar College Center at Saint Mary's.

Applications for Theodore's Student Managers for the 1988-1989 school year will be available in the Student Activities Office after Feb. 5. They must be turned in by Feb. 22.

Phil saw no shadow, spring will be early

Associated Press

PUNXSUTAWNEY, Pa. — Those dreary days of winter got you down? Don't despair, spring is just around the corner if you believe Punxsutawney Phil, the weather-forecasting groundhog who predicted an early thaw Tuesday for only the ninth time in 101 years.

At sunrise, the woodchuck was whisked out of his luxurious burrow in a muddy clearing atop Gobbler's Knob and looked about at a crowd of reporters, photographers and several hundred Groundhog Day celebrators. But he failed to see his shadow.

According to Groundhog Day tradition, if a groundhog sees its shadow after crawling out of its burrow, six weeks of Winter will follow. If it doesn't, Spring will arrive early.

Phil's fame has given rise to furry forecasters elsewhere, who delivered a split verdict Tuesday.

In Quarryville, Pa., Octarao Orphie saw his shadow at 7:11 a.m. The woodchuck crawled out of his burrow at the Slumbering Groundhog Lodge, spotted his shadow, then went back inside to keep warm during predicted cold days ahead, according to his supporters.

A groundhog named Jimmy in Sun Prairie, Wis., also saw his shadow Tuesday morning.

But Buckeye Chuck, Ohio's official groundhog, along with General Lee of Atlanta, New York City's Woody the Woodchuck, and Dunkirk Dave of Dunkirk, N.Y., agreed with Phil.

And West Virginia's groundhogs were indecisive. Concord Charlie saw his shadow, but a grouchy French Creek Freddie finally emerged to rain, a gray sky and no shadow.

Staffer hid, kept cops informed during siege

Associated Press

LUMBERTON, N.C. — When heads were counted during the hostage siege at The Robesonian newspaper, reporter Raymond Godfrey was nowhere to be found. He had slipped away during the confusing early minutes and hidden in a darkened office.

During the next 10 hours Godfrey would become a vital link to Gov. Jim Martin's office, which was negotiating the release of 17 people taken hostage Monday by two armed American Indians who said they were protesting the death of a black jail inmate.

Hostages were released throughout the day until the last seven were freed and Eddie Hatcher, 30, and Timothy Jacobs, 19, members of the Tuscarora faction of the Lumbee Indians, surrendered at 8 p.m.

Hatcher and Jacobs appeared Tuesday before U.S. magistrate Wallace Dixon in Raleigh, who set a probable cause hearing for Feb. 12 on the charges of hostage-taking and possession of sawed-off shotguns. No bond was set, and both were taken to the Federal Corrections Center in Butner.

If convicted, each could receive a maximum of life in prison for hostage-taking, and 20 years and $500,000 fine on the two weapons charges, Dixon said.

When two men charged into the newspaper office, "I backed slowly into the room and pulled the door shut," said Godfrey, 32, who covers city government. "I left the light off, locked the door and grabbed the phone."

After calls to his wife and the 911 emergency number, Godfrey called Lumberton police, describing the intruders, their weapons and other details. Then he had a brainstorm.

"I heard what they were saying about wanting to talk to the governor, so I called his office," he said. "We kept an open line the whole time."

Godfrey provided the State Bureau of Investigation with vital details about the scene in the adjacent room, including his observations on Hatcher and Jacobs' mental and physical condition.

"I told them they weren't threatening anyone and that I didn't see any explosives, which they claimed they had," Godfrey said.

Crouched silently under the accounting manager's desk, Godfrey also dictated the captors' list of demands, which he overheard.

At one point, Godfrey said he climbed on a bookcase and into the small space between the ceiling and a drop ceiling in an effort to find an escape route.

"I thought 'This is it. This is the day you are going to die,'" he said. "I thought about my kids. I began to believe I had to get out."

SEC says computerized selling fueled market crash in mid Oct.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON -Computer-driven selling by large pension and mutual funds fueled the October stock market crash, panic ignited it and nervousness continues to pervade the market, the Securities and Exchange Commission said Tuesday.

The SEC staff, in a report the size of the Manhattan telephone book, said computer trading strategies involving the futures markets were not the sole cause of the stock plummet.

Investor fears about the economy probably triggered declines immediately before Oct. 19, but computer trading by large institutions was "the largest single direct factor responsible for the initial opening declines" on the day of the crash, the report said.

The study was released as the Senate Banking Committee opened four days of hearings into the market nosedive. The leadoff witness was New York investment banker Nicholas Brady, a former Republican senator from New Jersey who headed a presidential task force on the crash.

The SEC said that during critical trading periods on Oct. 19, when the Dow Jones industrial average plunged a record 508 points, program trading accounted for between 30 percent and 68 percent of New York Stock Exchange volume in major stocks.

The computerized selling that day was followed by panic selling over a broad range of stocks, the report said. It said the very existence of computer strategies such as portfolio insurance, designed to protect large pension and mutual funds from price falls, created an "overhang effect," fueling "negative market psychology."

Trading of stock index futures allows an investor to speculate on the direction of the market as a whole. It is faster and less expensive than trading the actual stocks.

The report said "the after-shocks of Oct. 19 continue to affect the markets today."

The continued high pace of futures trading and the resulting wild price swings on the stock market "can have long-term, profound impacts on the participation of individual investors in the stock market," the study said.

That, in turn, hurts the ability of corporations to raise money by selling stock and in the long run hurts the economy, it said.

Despite those findings, the SEC staff said, futures markets are a valuable hedging mechanism and changes should be "effected with great care." It did not support limits on daily price swings in either the stock or futures markets but said consideration should be given to increasing margin requirements in the futures market.

Palestinian shot, wounded in clashes with Israeli army

Associated Press

OFRA, occupied West Bank -A Palestinian was wounded Tuesday in new clashes with the Israeli army, Arab reports said. Jewish settlers vowed to carry out vigilante justice if the army failed to protect them.

The Palestine Press Service and officials at al Ittihad Hospital said soldiers shot a 21-year-old Palestinian, Said Yassin, in the pelvis after protests in the West Bank city of Tulkarem.

The Arab-run agency also said 20 Palestinians were beaten by soldiers during a demonstration in the nearby village of Habla.

The army said it imposed curfews on Habla and Tulkarem refugee camp but could not confirm the reports of injuries immediately.

The latest clashes came after nearly eight weeks of violence in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip. According to United Nations figures, 41 Palestinians have been killed by Israeli gunfire.

In Washington, Secretary of State George Shultz told Congress he had undertaken a new Mideast diplomatic initiative designed to provide "a greater sense of political control" to the 1.5 million Palestinians who live in the occupied territories.

Shultz said various approaches had been discussed with leaders of Israel, Egypt and Jordan, and that he might direct Assistant Secretary of State Richard Murphy to take "a quick swing around" the region to develop them further.

Shultz declined to provide any details of the contacts with Israel, Jordan and Egypt, but he stressed the discussions had moved to the substantive stage from disagreement over procedures, such as whether to hold an international peace conference.

The Israeli army closed four universities for a month and 800 secondary and grade schools indefinitely to quell the West Bank protests. It also imposed or extended curfews on 10 towns and refugee camps in the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

West Bank commander Maj. Gen. Amram Mitzna warned Jewish settlers at a meeting this week to stay out of confrontations with Arab rioters.

"We are the army, and we have to provide security to the Arab and Jewish residents," Mitzna said on Israel radio. "There are cases in which people are trying to take (action on their own) ... We will deal with them."

But settlers have said they cannot guarantee restraint if Arabs continue to attack them.

Grace said, "and they will be watching what you're doing."

Candidates will be allowed to send campaign materials to the overseas studies programs in Tokyo, France, and London, said election officials. They will be allowed an additional $5 to produce nine sheets of paper with campaign information to be sent to the Notre Dame students overseas.

The overseas students will then be allowed to vote via absentee ballot in the presidential and vice presidential elections, said Grace. They will not be allowed votes in the senate elections, however, since they cannot be certain which district they will live in upon their return.

Grace also touched upon the topic of off-campus parties for candidates. "You can campaign off campus at a party...but the hosts can't have it for you," said Grace. "You might campaign at such a function, but you may not be a part of the organization of it."

Grace cited rules in du Lac regarding the spending of money for alcohol at school-related events as the basis of this decision.

Grace said that violations of any of the campaign rules are punishable by reducing the candidate's allotted budget or disqualifying the offender from the campaign. Decisions regarding violations would be made by the OBUD election officials and could be appealed to the Student Senate.

Grace also drew attention to rule number 10 of the Bylaws, which states, "No skywriting, airplane banners, or moving sound trucks are allowed."

ND Grad tells his Nicaraguan story

Editor's Note: A copy of the following column has been sent to Representative John Hiler.

As a resident of South Bend, now living and working in Nicaragua, I believe that it is essential to keep you in touch with the realities of life here. In several weeks, you and your fellow representatives will be debating further aid to the Contra forces attacking this nation. I ask you today to prevent the widening of this war in Central America.

John Kellenberg

In early December, the Contra forces hit a series of small refugee resettlement towns north of the Nicaraguan town of Esteli, killing 12 campesinos, burning houses, a school and its contents to the ground and destroying a health center that served the local community. Meanwhile, a Contra mortar attack launched against the Atlantic coastal town of Puerto Cabezas killed six Nicaraguans, five of whom were under the age of 14.

At the same time that President Oscar Arias of Costa Rica was receiving the 1987 Nobel Peace Prize for his efforts to end the Central American wars, President Reagan was pressuring Congress to provide further assistance for the U.S.-financed Contras. Three days after Reagan's successful lobbying effort, over 1000 Contras struck the northern mining towns of Bonanza, Siuna and La Rosita. The fighting was fierce, and more than 200 Nicaraguans were killed, including 90 civilians.

These are just several events which have occurred in the past month, affecting the lives of the Nicaraguan people and my work here. I am working at the Jesuit-run Institute of John XXIII, a Catholic organization that has grassroots development projects in each region of Nicaragua, as well as distributing food, clothing, medicine, sewing and educational supplies, seeds and toys throughout the countryside to those affected by war.

Supplies from the Institute of John XXIII go out to rural refugee communities, churches and Christian base communities, sewing, fishing, and farming cooperatives, orphanages, maternity hospitals and health centers - locations frequently struck by the Contras in their hit-and-run actions. Jeeps and pick-up trucks with nuns, priests and pastoral workers come to our office to receive supplies - some vehicles with Vatican flags affixed to their roofs in hopes of protecting themselves from Contra attacks on the highways.

Sadly enough, trucks carrying humanitarian aid are prime targets of the U.S.-financed Contras, as the supplies are meant to improve the living conditions of the rural population in this poor nation. Religious and lay workers returning to their communities with supplies have been wounded or killed by land mines set by the Contras on dirt roads between the highway and the rural villages. Likewise, vehicles have been stopped along the road with passengers kidnapped as forced recruits into the Contra forces.

Life in Nicaragua means parents unable to feed their children, as food prices are exorbitant. There is no running water on a regular basis, while electricity is out for hours at a time and gasoline is rationed. A drought over the past year has hit all of Central America, which will mean food shortages in the months ahead. Yet in the United States, President Reagan feels that Nicaragua is a threat to our national security.

All of the money spent on defense weaponry over the past seven years cannot protect the United States from the mothers nursing their babies while making tortillas over a wood fire? Or from the street children of Managua selling Chiclets to passing motorists? Or from the poor campesino farmers trying to raise beans and rice under the hot Central American sun? To the Nicaraguan people and a vast majority of the American public, the war makes no sense.

Despite the peace initiatives attempted by the nations of Latin America, a true cessation of the hostilities here depends upon the will of the United States government to stop funding for the Contra forces. I appeal to you in the name of the suffering people of Nicaragua and in the name of God - stop the bloodshed.

John Kellenberg is a 1984 graduate of Notre Dame and is working for the Jesuit-run Institute of John XXIII as a project administrator.

ND Security worthy of praise

Dear Editor:

Everyone rips on Notre Dame security for all the bad things they do to students. A time has come for students to thank ND security. Last Thursday night, security did an outstanding job of handling a situation in Cavanaugh Hall involving larceny. Security responded moments after being called, and arrested one of two subjects in the crime. The other had fled. Upon giving a description over the radio, it took security merely two minutes to apprehend the second subject.

Notre Dame security deserves a big round of applause for their excellent work. Thanks a lot. Special thanks to officers Dan Kavanaugh, Debbie Qualls, Captain Joe Araman, and Assistant Security Director Phil Johnson. They were only doing "their job," but to us it meant much more. But most of all, thanks for being there when we needed help. We, as Notre Dame students, are truly grateful for the protection ND security gives us. They do a great job.

Humor can thrive without slurs

Dear Editor:

Congratulations to the Lyons Hall staff for constructively criticizing the heartless humor of "fat jokes."

As a Notre Dame Admissions Counselor I have read literally thousands of tributes to the sensitivity, cleverness and individuality of Notre Dame students. Surely every dorm on campus has talent enough to create entertaining and thoroughly delightful skits and programs. To do so would require time, commitment and original thinking - precious commodities to all.

Unfortunately, as many 1988 applicants have quoted in their Martin Luther King, Jr., essays: "It is easier to be immoral in a crowd."

It is this crowd mentality which I challenge the script writers to courageously combat. Who will be the first to produce a "fat free" variety show - trashing the traditional stale jokes and mutually degrading sitcoms? I believe the individuals of the NDSMC community could pioneer a new caliber of entertainment. One which is truly humorous.

The women and men of ND and SMC have much to learn about venerating the Feminine Spirit, Mother God. Eliminating sexist slurs from campus entertainment would be an encouraging forward step.

Why not give Our Lady something she can truly "cheer" about?

Big Ten coaches are split on non-conference games

Associated Press

CHICAGO -Big Ten basketball coaches were split Tuesday on the question of breaking up the conference schedule with nonconference games for the sole purpose of television.

"It's good for college basketball," said Michigan Coach Bill Frieder at the Big Ten coaches' weekly telephone interview. "But I don't know if it will cost us a victory this week. If it does, it will be a big, big disadvantage."

Michigan's 11th-ranked Wolverines lost to No. 12 Syracuse 89-71 in a nationally televised game Sunday, and face Iowa and Purdue this week. Illinois, ranked 17th, dropped a 78-70 decision Saturday at No. 1 Arizona and plays Ohio State and Indiana this week.

"You get so much pressure," said Frieder. "There's money and media pressure. CBS put a lot of pressure on us. Originally the game was scheduled in December, but it was changed for national TV.

"But it was exciting, we played before 35,000 people and the kids enjoyed it."

Illinois' Lou Henson has had two interruptions and is not in favor of such games. Earlier in the season, the Illini had their conference schedule broken for a game against Tennessee.

"I don't like it," said Henson. "Most coaches feel as I do. But it was national television and the No. 1 team (Arizona). From a coach's point, I'd prefer not to do it. But there are a lot of other things you have to look at."

Purdue had a date at Louisville and came off with a 91-85 victory in a game that also had been scheduled for December but moved to January.

"It's because of money and national television and usually they are great games," said Gene Keady of sixth-ranked Purdue. "Our Louisville game was a great one."

Iowa has played two nonconference games since the race started and Coach Tom Davis welcomes all such games for his 13th-ranked Hawkeyes.

"We do it for two reasons, television and national exposure," said Davis. "Those are hard terms to turn down. We saved an open date and told them we'd play anybody in the country, home or away. It's good for the school and the conference."

Jud Heathcote of Michigan State, Gary Williams of Ohio State and Bill Foster of Northwestern are among the coaches who do not have such interruptions because their teams have not been asked to move games for television purposes.

Children of alcoholics fight

accent writer

Until last May, Tina used to go searching for the next man on campus that she could "conquer" sexually.

Alcohol:

the whole story

Because of her sexual, alcohol and drug habits, Tina's parents asked her to leave home when she was sixteen years old.

"I used to say they threw me out," said Tina (not her real name), a current senior in the College of Arts and Letters at Notre Dame. "But my mom just told me I couldn't live there and act like I did. So I left."

Tina found a family to live with until she graduated from high school and came to Notre Dame. "Coming here was great. It was so far away from home. Nobody knew about my past," she said.

It was her past that was indeed sordid. At a young age

Tina started experimenting with drugs and alcohol, mainly through a boyfriend who had introduced them to her. He also introduced her to sex.

"When I was with Tim nothing seemed to matter. He made all my problems go away," she said. "He was fun. We'd get high or wasted and do really crazy stuff.

"Now I know that he was just reinforcing the patterns of behavior that my parents started in me. He used me and I used him."

Tina's father is an alcoholic. During her childhood her parents were busy fighting about his alcohol problem rather than being appropriate role models. They often took their anger out on Tina.

"I won every award there was in high school," she said, "but it just wasn't good enough. I was the family (mess)-up."

What Tina suffers from is common in many adult children of alcoholics (or more simply called "Adult Children"). They develop some of the characteristics of the disease whether or not they ever take a drink.

These characteristics can also be found in children who grow up in other dysfunctional environments, such as those of workaholics, overeaters and other substance abusers. They include addiction to immediate rather than delayed gratification, addiction to excitement, inability to express feelings, low self-esteem, and lying when it's just as easy to tell the truth.

"If a parent has a problem with alcohol," said Sally Coleman, alcohol counselor at Notre Dame's University Counseling Center, "certain things happen that cause family members to adapt in order to survive.

"Life is unpredictable. People take on different roles to learn how to live. It's hard for most Adult Children to trust and really talk about and identify their feelings."

Sally Coleman, alcohol counselor at ND's University Counseling Center

Tina took on the role of the "scape-goat child". She had to be the one to take the blame for family mishaps. She was "forced" into mischievous activity - that was her role.

Unlike Tina, her sister "never made a mistake. She was God as far as my parents were concerned."

Both Tina and her sister, then, had to strive to achieve - Tina to overcome the stereotype that her parents placed on her, and her sister to keep up with it.

"Adult Children are super-achievers," said Coleman. "They put themselves under a lot of stress. When they don't succeed, they not only feel guilt, but shame."

These children had "a missing 'data-base' developmentally. They missed certain things, such as how to interact in social relations. They can't see options," she said.

Adult Children can also find themselves isolated, afraid of

O'Connor and diversity blend in The Lion and the Cobra

KRIS MURPHY
accent writer

Sinead O'Connor is an Irish singer. Her head is shaved almost completely. Her skin color blends with the white background of the cover of her debut album, The Lion and the

Sinead O'Connor

Cobra. The American record-buying public is out there somewhere saying "A bald Irish woman? Weird. Ugly."

Well, boys and girls, Sinead O'Connor is a beautiful woman. She looks more feminine with no hair than most women with three feet of hair, and she doesn't need anybody, least of all me, to tell the world how beautiful she is or what a great voice she has.

Her voice is utterly captivating. It's a powerful voice with a range that's just as effective when O'Connor whispers as it is when she shrieks. She does both and does everything in between while remaining in control. The Irish brogue that pops up in quieter passages serves to make her even more unique.

In addition to her remarkable voice, O'Connor writes or co-writes all her songs and produces and arranges her own material. This is a good thing, too, because her material is so diverse that it would boggle most of today's big-name, highly formulaic producers. O'Connor writes variations of Gregorian chants, African tribal music, opera, and rock and roll. If it sounds like a mess with no continuity, it's not. O'Connor's voice links everything together. Her lyrics are enigmatic, haunting and decidedly distinct. They draw from Celtic myths, urban street life, and biblical and mythical sources.

There is no bad song on the album, but there are several highlights worth pointing out. The album's centerpiece is "Troy", a combination love song, ghost story and epic accompanied by a string arrangement that is the very embodiment of "less is more."

"Mandinka" is the album's only truly joyous tune. It is a strong, simple rock riff composed of alternating electric and acoustic guitars. O'Connor's soaring chorus is perfect, and the song could even be a hit single. "Never Get Old" is the album's most haunting moment as a spoken Gaelic introduction blends into O'Connor's tale of "the only thing that never gets old...."

According to this week's Rolling Stone, O'Connor's The Lion and the Cobra is currently number one on the College Radio Chart, and that's a heartening sign. U2 showed their good taste by asking O'Connor to open several of their Irish and British dates last spring.

The Lion and the Cobra is not an easy record to listen to the first couple times. O'Connor's style is a lot like her looks; harsh and spare at first glance, but extremely beautiful with time. Then again Sinead O'Connor doesn't need me to hype her. Such a singular talent is its own best promotion.

authority figures, frightened of angry people or personal criticism, super-responsible or super-irresponsible, and overly concerned with the well-being of others which allows them to keep from looking at themselves.

Recovery for Adult Children is similar to that for alcoholics. They need to re-learn patterns of behavior which are somewhat "normal".

Last May Tina began treatment for her addictions. She learned that her desire to conquer men sexually stemmed from her desire to be accepted, as well as her desire to control.

"(When I was younger) I never knew what I was going to come home to," she said. "I didn't know if I was going to be greeted with a smile or smacked across the face.

"When I was with guys I could control what was going to happen. I could have it my way. Or at least that's what I thought."

Tina is grateful for the alcohol education information that has been made available to her. Notre Dame plans to expand its alcohol education through the Office of Alcohol and Drug Education which is having its dedication ceremony Friday.

"Most people don't know about being addicted to relationships, especially destructive ones. It sounds so weird," Tina said. "For me, it was behavior that I just didn't have control of."

For Adult Children, this addiction to relationships can manifest itself in what is known as co-dependency. "Co-dependency is an obsession with controlling another person," said Coleman, especially one who appears to need control or help, such as an alcoholic or other type of addict. "In a normal relationship, a person is independent to be interdependent. In a co-dependent relationship, the independence is not there," she said.

For Tina co-dependence meant entering relationships with men who did not care about her. She would do anything to hold onto them. In her attempt to control them, she ended up being controlled by them and by the situations in which she found herself.

Co-dependents enter relationships with people who fulfill their need for abandonment - something their parents taught them. As children they were often isolated or abandoned because of an alcohol problem.

The college environment often allows the "child" in these Adult Children to run rampant. They are thrown into a competitive environment, as well as an environment which asks them to define their roles as sexual beings. Receiving alcohol education in their college years can make a big difference in their futures.

"Sometimes I really hate my parents," Tina said. "But then I remember that the disease was passed down to them. The best thing that I can do is to stop it."

Note: A few of Tina's facts were slightly altered to protect her anonymity.

This is the third in a series of articles on alcohol education at Notre Dame.

Can't wake up and smell the coffee? Blame it on the flu

Associated Press

If you recently suffered the flu and have not recovered your sense of smell, you aren't alone, researchers say.

Some patients complain they are unable to smell things or to taste food after suffering a bout of influenza. Researchers at the University of Pennsylvania and the University of Connecticut first reported the problem and have been looking into it.

It has also come to the attention of researchers at the University of Cincinnati College of Medicine, where patients who come in for treatment at a center for taste and smell disorders have complained of the malady.

It can happen to people who suffer flu or upper respiratory infections, said Robert Frank, a University of Cincinnati psychophysicist. It is common for sufferers with colds or the flu to lose their sense of smell - and, as a result, their ability to taste - briefly during the time of the ailment. But, Frank said, some people do not regain their sense of smell for months, or longer.

"These people are seeing us six months after the flu has passed, and they still don't have their sense of smell," he said in an interview. "We still don't even know if it's permanent or not . . . We don't know for sure right now, but we think there may be people who permanently lose their sense of smell after this kind of episode."

After a period of time, some victims report sensing a persistent, strange odor. Researchers have not determined what that means, Frank said.

"There's some indication in some people we've seen that they get this persistent odor," he said. "We hope that when people report these smells, that's a start of recovery."

About 25 percent of the patients who come to the taste-smell center complaining of a loss of smell have a strain of flu that appears to be the culprit, Frank said.

He said specialists have a theory that the flu viruses may take away the victim's ability to smell by damaging the olfactory epithelium - the skin on the inside of the nose. But, he said, "We really don't know what happens."

University of Cincinnati researchers are preparing an application for a U.S. department of Health and Human Services public health grant to study the problem. They would like funding to follow the progress of people with the loss-of-smell problem, Frank said.

The work could include taking samples of tissue from inside the noses of victims for analysis to determine whether flu viruses cause damage, he said.

Researchers hope to develop treatment methods. "As it stands right now, for a person like this, we really have little idea of what to do," Frank said.

Victims often complain that they have lost their sense of taste, because they cannot taste food. But inability to taste is commonly caused by loss of smell, Frank said. A true loss of taste is rare because three different nerves bring smell information to the brain and it is unusual for all three to malfunction, he said.

The problem can be dangerous when it prevents people from smelling warning odors such as a natural gas buildup in a house.

"One of the big problems is, you can't smell warning odors. There are a lot of older people who can't smell the gas, so they blow themselves up," Frank said.

Frank is researching the problem with David Smith, director of the university's center for taste and smell disorders. Frank and Smith are not medical doctors, but they have training in physics and biology, and specialize in evaluating human sensory systems.

"We still don't really know what the basic mechanisms are for how you taste and smell," he said. "We don't really know what makes certain chemicals important, in terms of how you smell them. In that sense, the study of taste and smell is in its infancy."

"Frankenstein" shows a human perspective

accent writer

Man is created in the likeness of his creator, so the Bible says. Inside every man is a creator, and inside every creator is a man.

This idea is wonderfully depicted in the Guthrie Theatre presentation/Barbara Field adaptation of "Frankenstein," which was performed at O'Laughlin Auditorium at Saint Mary's College last night.

Most people, when hearing the word "Frankenstein," associate it with the traditional image of the original monster - something close to what Herman looked like on "The Adams Family." Barbara Field, with the help of director Michael Maggio, approaches the embedded monster image from a very different perspective - a human perspective.

What better way is there to relate to people than to speak in human terms, on ground level? This is exactly what Field tries to do, and she more than accomplishes her goal. She greatly emphasizes the dynamics of the relationship between a creator and his creation.

The creator in "Frankenstein" is extremely proud of his achievement once he sees his creation come to life, yet he becomes fearful as he watches the destruction that arises. It is his greed, his burning desire to preserve and prolong life, that is his motivation for creating the perfect man. But the problem comes about when the flawless man Dr. Frankenstein thinks he has created turns out to be a horrendous-looking monster.

The performance opens with a very elderly Dr. Frankenstein, lame and lying stationary in the snow, on top of the world at the North Pole. Suddenly, his aged monster, now much wiser to the ways of the world, finds him buried in snow. The creator is unable to move about without his stick, much like a beggar - a low-life. Yet the monster, after months of carefully observing a family in the woods, has learned how to speak as well as feel emotions. It seems the monster has reached a level of immense understanding, a level much higher than that of Dr. Frankenstein.

Through the art of flashbacks, the portrayal of scenes from the past alternately or simultaneously with scenes from the present, the members of the audience have the opportunity to use their minds and make them work. While experiencing the leaps from past to present and back again, it is easy to recognize the constant reiteration of key lines.

One of the first questions the monster asks his master is, "Why do you hate me?" This question arises in one of the clips from the past when a much younger, but equally intelligent, Dr. Frankenstein is with his college professor and mentor, who continuously urges him to do better. Finally, after arriving at the correct answers and passing his test, young Frankenstein asks this same question of his teacher. His professor explains the trials of teaching idiots all of his life and admits that, when finally stumbling upon a genius such as Frankenstein, he doesn't quite know how to act.

Another example of a recurring theme is when old Frankenstein and his monster take a glance at the past as well as at the monster's history of violence toward his creator. When Frankenstein first creates his monster, he is disgusted at the sight of him. All of the monster's efforts to show companionship and gratefulness toward his creator are rejected, thus resulting in the monster's first experiences of pain and true anger.

The monster requests that the doctor make him a mate that will accept his ugliness, someone who can make him happy. When the doctor backs out of his agreement, the monster sees violence as the only means of making young Dr. Frankenstein feel grief equivalent to his own. This violence results in the death of Elizabeth, young Frankenstein's mate. If the monster had to grieve the loss of his love, the price was going to be Frankenstein's happiness.

One other theme that is woven throughout the story is the issue of created versus born. The monster continuously refers to his creation as birth. Yet when an elderly Dr. Frankenstein hears this he corrects him, saying, "You weren't born. I created you."

From the time of his creation, the monster grows in strength while young Dr. Frankenstein gradually weakens. During the time the monster is tied down, and for some time during his escape, the young doctor is bed-ridden. It becomes evident that young Frankenstein is draining energy from himself, almost risking his own life, to create new life. This is similar to the Bible, in which Christ died for all people, so that they would have eternal life.

In the end, the time finally comes for the monster to be destroyed, for fear of lingering violence. The monster is now fulfilled. He has received the answers to his many questions and is willing to die. At this point, by embracing his creator, the monster is able to show the affection he has been forced to hold back during his life. And his creator acknowledges the embrace.

Sorin, Morrissey, Thunder dominating men's IH hoops

By BOB MITCHELL
Sports Writer

While the temperatures outside remain frigid, the competition in men's Interhall basketball remains hot. The early season favorites, Sorin, Morrissey, and Off Campus Thunder, have done nothing to lose their distinction as the best teams. These three teams have dominated the most highly skilled league of the three A divisions - the ACC. They seem to be in a league of their own and destined for head-to-head competition in the playoffs.

Morrissey is the only undefeated team in the ACC with a 5-0 record. The Manorites have already defeated Sorin and are setting their sights on their regular season matchup with O.C. Thunder.

"Basically, we are well distributed in talent; however the key to our team is Kevin 'Star-boy' Keyes," said Morrissey captain Matt Dingens. "He controls the tempo of the game and is our clutch player. He realizes what must be done and gets it done."

Dingens attributes much of the team's success to the physical stature of its players and its depth of talent. The shortest player in the starting lineup for Morrissey is 6-0 and the tallest is 6-5. Opposing teams have a difficult time trying to match up defensively.

Also, Morrissey has the ability to play nine to ten men during the course of the game. This characteristic physically wears down opponents.

"Another critical part of our success is our ability to out-rebound our opponents," says Dingens.

Dingens believes that the toughest opponent in the ACC is Sorin.

"We beat them by ten points during the regular season; however, they were missing some key players. It will be a totally different game with both teams at full strength," says Dingens.

Sorin, the two-time defending champion, has been plagued by injuries to key personnel, yet they have a 4-1 record. Coach Sean Cullinan does not believe that his team has the right ingredients for a championship unless things change.

"We are not contenders in the league unless our key players get healthy," said Cullinan.

So far this season the team has been guided by the play of Kent Graham, Dan Reynolds, and Andy Heck. This trio has been the core of their winning ways. Sorin has beaten O.C. Thunder and has Carroll left to play, giving them time to heal their bodies.

"This is the least talented team I have been on in my four years here. However, I believe that if everyone works hard we will have a chance to win the championship," says Cullinan. "Morrissey is the team to beat. At this point in the season, they are the best team."

In third place, but far from out of it, is O.C. Thunder. The Off-Campus team has posted four victories and one loss. Their only defeat came at the hands of Sorin. The Thunder has yet to play Morrissey whom they will square off against February 6.

David Rivers floats through the lane, finishing off a 78-75 decision to Maryland last night. Dennis Corrigan has details of the game on the back page.

Setzer commits to Irish

Associated Press

GARY, Ind. - Rusty Setzer, an All-State running back and the defending state 100- and 200-meter track champion, has announced he will play football next fall at Notre Dame.

"It came down to a personal opinion. Notre Dame had recruited me since my sophomore year and I felt pretty comfortable there," he said. "I know I'll have to compete, but I'm not afraid to compete against anyone."

Setzer, who plans to sign with the Irish next week, was a first-team All-State selection by The Associated Press as a junior, when he rushed for 1,351 yards. Bothered by an ankle injury late last season, Setzer finished with 958 yards and was an honorable-mention All-State pick.

Setzer joins five other Parade magazine All-Americans who have committed to Notre Dame. The others are: lineman Gene McGuire, linebacker Troy Ridgely, running backs Rod Smith and Kenny Spears, and lineman Lindsay Knapp.

50-0 meet record since joining the Irish in the summer of 1986.

Besides being a contender for a national title, the men's and women's team both feature a legitimate contender for an individual national champion in seniors Yehuda Kovacs and Molly Sullivan. Kovacs, who missed an undefeated 1987 regular season by just one touch in a 5-4 loss in February, raised his career record to 100-7 in last weekend's action. The two-time All-American is the first Israeli athlete at Notre Dame and has been featured by Sports Illustrated, Good Morning America and The Today Show. Sullivan is looking to regain the national championship she won as a sophomore in 1986. The three-time All-American is also very much in the running for a spot on the 1988 U.S. Olympic fencing team.

If you've never seen a fencing meet or haven't touched an epee, foil or sabre since freshman year Phys. Ed., take a walk over to the Joyce ACC Friday or Saturday and watch Notre Dame's best, who just so happen to be among the nation's best.

said. "In the first half, six of our seven turnovers were walking calls. You can ball-fake and pivot-fake as long as you don't move your pivot foot. I thought that really took us out of the game early."

"That disrupted our offensive game inside. We wanted to get them to leave their feet. We wanted to ball-fake inside. This was an ACC crew, and I didn't understand their interpretation. This is the first time we've had that problem all year with that call."

Irish center Gary Voce, who finished with 13 points, nine from the free throw line, agreed that it was a key factor in Notre Dame's early woes.

"It had some effect in the first half," Voce said. "Our gameplan was to ball-fake and shoot or ball-fake and drive. We knew they'd jump (on the fake). We had six turnovers on that, so we had to stop and be more cautious."

In the second half, the Irish made several runs at the Terps, but couldn't close it out. Notre Dame cut the lead to three at 61-58 with 6:13 left to play on a David Rivers three-point play after Sean Connor made a sparkling save. The Terps, though, ran the lead back up to 65-58, and the Irish were unable to get closer than three until Connor hit a three-point shot with four seconds left for the final 78-75 score.

"It's frustrating to lose," Rivers, who finished with a game high 27, said. "You've got to keep your composure and go down and score the next time. You have to try to stop them on defense and try to get the momentum back in our favor."

Ditka, ND's Page in Hall of Fame

Associated Press

CANTON, Ohio -Mike Ditka said it really wasn't fair to have had as much fun as he did playing football and still be elected to the Pro Football Hall of Fame.

The Chicago Bears coach was elected Tuesday along with Fred Biletnikoff, Jack Ham and Alan Page.

"It's mind-boggling," said Ditka, who played 12 years in the NFL as a tight end.

Biletnikoff, a flanker with the Oakland Raiders famed for his timing and exacting pass routes, said, "I can't tell you how excited I am. It's a big, big thrill for me."

Ham, a key performer in the Pittsburgh Steelers' "Steel Curtain" during four Super Bowl victories in the 1970s, said, "I'm ecstatic. I'm going in with some pretty good company."

Page, a cornerstone at defensive tackle on the Minnesota Vikings' famed "Purple People Eaters" defense, said, "(My) whole career was a highlight."

Ditka, 48, out of the University of Pittsburgh, was named NFL rookie of the year in 1961 after catching 56 passes for 1,076 yards and 12 touchdowns. Three years later, he had 75 catches, a record for tight ends that stood for 16 years.

The 6-foot-3, 225-pound native of Carnegie, Pa., did not miss a start in 84 games with the Bears and earned All-Pro honors his first four seasons. He had 427 receptions for 5,812 yards and 43 touchdowns in his career.

After being traded to Philadelphia in 1967, Ditka finished his career with four seasons at Dallas. In 1971, he had 30 receptions and scored the clinching touchdown in the Cowboys' 24-3 victory over the Miami Dolphins in the 1972 Super Bowl.

Biletnikoff, who will turn 45 later this month, spent 14 years with the Raiders. The 6-1, 190-pound flanker caught 589 passes -seventh best all-time - for 8,974 yards and 76 touchdowns.

The native of Erie, Pa., caught 40 or more passes for 10 straight seasons, and his 70 catches for 1,167 yards and 10 touchdowns in 19 postseason games were records at the time of his retirement.

Biletnikoff, now an assistant coach with Calgary of the Canadian Football League, caught four passes for 79 yards to set up three Oakland scores in a 32-14 victory over Minnesota in the 1977 Super Bowl and was named the game's most valuable player.

Ham, 39, missed only four games in his first 10 seasons in the NFL. The outside linebacker from Penn State finished a 12-year career with 25-and-a-half sacks, 21 fumble recoveries and 32 interceptions.

Ham, who is a salesman for a coal company and also a radio analyst on NFL games, traced his success to Joe Paterno, his college coach.

"I was a young kid who didn't have a lot of confidence until I went to Penn State. Paterno ... he's the kind of guy who put me on first team defense in my first year. It kind of made me a little more confident," he said.

Page, a 42-year-old native of Canton, home of the Hall of Fame, became the first defensive player to be named NFL most valuable player in 1971. He was the NFC's defensive player of the year four times and was an all-league choice nine years in a row.

Page, now a staff lawyer for the Minnesota Attorney General's office, said of his selection: "I don't know if it's about time, but it's certainly a nice time."

A graduate of Notre Dame, Page was the Vikings' second pick in the first round of the first combined AFL-NFL draft in 1967. A defensive end in college, he was moved to defensive tackle by the Vikings.

He played 238 games, all but three as a starter, for the Vikings and Bears. Unofficial statistics show Page blocked 28 kicks and had 164 sacks during his 15 seasons. In 1976, he had a career-high 21-and-a-half sacks. Page never missed a game during his career.

Matt Hanzel fires a shot on goal earlier this season. The junior left wing has helped lead the Irish to an impressive 19-2-2 record thus far. Pete Skiko features him below.

High-scoring junior Hanzel adds needed punch

By PETE SKIKO
Sports Writer

If you would have asked Matt Hanzel two years ago what he'd be doing now, he probably wouldn't have said that he'd be the second-line left wing of the 19-2-2 Notre Dame hockey team.

In fact, the word 'hockey' probably would not have even been mentioned.

Hanzel, a 6-1, 175-pound native of St. Paul, MN., was heavily recruited for both hockey and baseball out of Cretin High School, and came to Notre Dame fully expecting to chase baseballs, not hockey pucks.

"I played first base in the fall of my freshman year," said the junior left winger, "and I came out to the last day of hockey tryouts to talk to (then-Irish hockey coach) Lefty Smith. I told him I had decided on baseball, but he talked me into at least trying out, with no strings attached. I felt great out on the ice again, met some super guys, and switched sports right there."

Smith recognized Hanzel's potential, and as a freshman Hanzel saw action in 28 games, scoring two goals and assisting on five others. Last year, despite playing in only 25 of the team's 30 games, Hanzel was third on the Irish in scoring, with 25 points (ten goals, 15 assists).

This year, in 22 games, Hanzel already has 29 points but is sixth on the team in scoring. Matt says that is a great sign for both him and the team.

"It's good for me because I'm scoring at a pretty good pace," said Hanzel. "But it's better for the team that more people are scoring above me. In 23 games we've already scored 150 (actually, 156) more goals than we did all last year in 30 games."

"It's exciting playing on the team this year. We haven't played the toughest schedule, and that might keep us out of the NCAA's. But we seem to know how to win this year. We don't panic when we get into trouble anymore because everyone is confident in our ability to come back."

Hanzel gives a lot of credit to his linemates, sophomore Tim Kuehl and junior Brian Montgomery.

"Tim and I have worked together for two years now," said Hanzel, "including over the summer. There's a real good chemistry between Brian and us on the line. Each of us knows where the others will be on the ice at any time. I think most of the guys on the team can honestly say that we don't lose too much as we go down our first three lines."

Hanzel, who has 13 goals, 16 assists, and one game-winning goal to his credit this year, enjoys this year even more when thinking back to seasons past.

"It's always been fun to play here," said Hanzel. "The guys were always great and I've never regretted it. But whereas there were a few days during the last couple of seasons when I didn't really want to drag myself to practice, this year there is an attitude on the team that we can win, and so practices are more than bearable."

Matt has nothing but good things to say about first-year Irish head coach Ric Schafer, who so far has led the Irish to one of their best seasons ever.

"Coach Schafer has done so much with the program in just one year," said Hanzel. "With the scholarship situation (ten scholarships over four years), a tough but more respectable schedule next year, and the way he can relate to the players, it's hard to expect anything more from him."

"Since the prospects are pretty slim for making the NCAA tournament, of course my goals for the team is to win the rest of the games this season and then take the (ACHA) conference tournament. It's more than possible, and it would be good for the team's confidence next year if we wrap up the year with only two losses. Next year, we lose a lot of key seniors, so I hope I can gear up for a really big season."

Maryland's front line too much for Notre Dame

By STEVE MEGARGEE
Sports Writer

One of them had a freshman tendency to play out of control this season. The other one had just lost his starting spot.

But the two young Maryland front-line players - Brian Williams and Tony Massenburg - both put aside those problems Tuesday night, and their play keyed Maryland's 78-75 road victory over Notre Dame.

"They (Maryland) just pounded us in the post," said Irish coach Digger Phelps. "(Derrick) Lewis and Massenburg just took it to us inside."

"Williams is one of the top (freshman) players in the country."

Massenburg finished with 16 points in just 17 minutes of play, while Williams led the Terrapins with 18 points and six rebounds.

To get the victory, Maryland relied on one outstanding half of play from each of them.

In the first half, Massenburg led the way. Coming off the bench seven minutes into the game, the sophomore from Sussex, Va., scored eight of the team's next 10 points, including six straight at one stretch, to give the Terps a 25-12 lead.

"We knew he was a good athlete," said Irish senior forward and co-captain Gary Voce. "We didn't want him to get going early. We were going to play good post defense, and he just did what he had to do."

By halftime, Massenburg had scored 12 points for the Terps (shooting 6-of-6 from the field). But the forward also had picked up three fouls, enough to keep him on the bench for almost the first nine minutes of the second half.

That's when Williams went to work. The highly-touted freshman center from Santa Monica, Cal., had averaged more than 11 points a game this season for Maryland, but he also had shown flashes of inconsistency... until Tuesday. Playing much of the second half in foul trouble, he still managed to score 14 second-half points. "This is the most control that Brian (Williams) has played with fouls," said second-year Maryland coach Bob Wade. "We told him and Massenburg at halftime to just go out and play basketball. If you foul out, you foul out, just don't be hesitant."

The play of the two underclassmen helped atone for a game in which senior Derrick Lewis, the team's leading scorer and rebounder, did not have his usual input on offense.

Lewis blocked three shots, but was below his season averages in scoring and rebounds, with eight points and five rebounds.

Williams' also came through in the final minutes when the Terrapins were trying to protect their slim lead. The Irish were looking to put Lewis, a notoriously poor foul shooter, on the line.

"Williams came through in the paint when we were trying to get to Lewis," said Voce. "We were trying to get Lewis because he's their worst free throw shooter. I guess they knew that, and they kept him away from the ball."

Well, actually the worst foul shooter on the team is Williams, hitting 42.4 percent as compared to Lewis's 59 percent. But none of that mattered after the freshman calmly connected on both ends of a one-and-one to put the Terps up 73-65 with just 1:07 left in the game.

"When they cut it to three, we called a timeout and I told our guys to settle down," said Wade. "We wanted to get it inside to Williams and Massenburg. I believe Williams played fantastically, both offensively and defensively."

In the last seven minutes, Williams scored six points, hitting a left-handed hook to stretch the lead to seven, nailing a jump shot to put Maryland up by nine with less than two minutes left, and then making his two crucial free throws to all but seal the win.

The two young front-line players played just well enough to hand the Irish just their second home loss in 19 games.

leading the nation in field goal percentage at .532.

While the Irish can shoot, Tennessee can fill up the hoop and has had little trouble doing just that, averaging 92 points per game this season. Much of their offense is created from a full-court press defense.

"They play a man-to-man run-and-jump pressure defense," said McGraw. "In they're half-court defense they just really deny. They get out in the lanes and overplay. They'll put a lot of pressure on the ball so we have to work the ball around and go back door, or get the ball into the post."

The Lady Vols are coming off a 82-79 victory over SEC rival Georgia on Sunday, and head to seventh-ranked Mississippi on Saturday for another conference game.

"(Tennessee head coach) Pat Summitt was on TV last week," recalled McGraw, "and said that 'Next week is a big week for us with Georgia on Sunday and then we go down to Mississippi on Saturday.' She didn't even mention us, so we're hoping they're looking right past us. It's not a big game for them, so we're hoping to catch them off guard."

Notre Dame has been idle since defeating Marquette 85-51 last Tuesday, giving the team a week to prepare for the defending champions.

The Irish frontcourt matches up well with the Lady Vols, as 6'4" center Heidi Buek and 6'2" forward Sandy Botham give Notre Dame the height to contend with the Lady Vols inside. Buek's counterpart, 6'4" junior center Sheila Frost, averages 17.3 points and 8.0 rebounds to Buek's 19.0 points and 9.3 rebounds.

Tennessee's most potent offensive weapon, however, is junior guard Bridgett Gordon, who earned a spot on the all-Final Four first team in last year's run for the championship. The 6'0" forward has led the Lady Vols in scoring in both her seasons at Tennessee, and paces the team this year with 19.6 points and 6.6 rebounds.

Besides Gordon and Frost, the Lady Vols also get scoring punch from 5-10 sophomore Tonya Edwards (14.7 points) and 5-9 senior Lisa Webb (10.4).

"They have four starters in double figures - that's trouble," said McGraw. "We don't feel like they have any particular weakness for us to attack. We're going to try to shut down Gordon and Frost and say 'those two aren't going to beat us.' They're getting 38 points a game between the two of them."

Notre Dame's offense has been productive in its own right. With senior point guard Mary Gavin and freshman Karen Robinson running the perimeter show, junior Lisa Kuhns sharpshooting from 15-foot-plus and the Buek-Botham combination controlling the lane, the Irish have averaged 75.5 points per outing.

"We can score," said McGraw. "We're not worried about our offense. We're worried about getting into it and beating their pressure."

While a victory could perhaps be the biggest in the history of Notre Dame's women's basketball program, McGraw cautions putting more weight into this one game than it deserves.

"A win will give us a lot of credibility, no doubt about it," said McGraw. "A close game will get people thinking, 'Hey, Notre Dame is for real.' But one game is not going to make the whole program. If we win it is a step in the right direction, but we don't want to put so much pressure on ourselves to say that this game is our whole season or whole program."

tonight's contest with Notre Dame. The Lady Vols are 18-5 in NCAA tournament games and have earned two third place finishes, one runner-up spot and last season's national championship. All of that in only six seasons of NCAA play.

On March 28, 1987, Summitt's team won the NCAA championship to give her one of the few coaching honors she hadn't earned previously. The Lady Vols soundly defeated Louisiana Tech 67-44, and now every women's team in the nation is gearing to take the title away in 1988.

"Early in the season, the weight of being national champions weighed heavily on our minds," says Summitt. "We were putting pressure on ourselves, knowing that the title would make teams want to beat us more."

"We had to just go out and be Tennessee," she continues. "We're not total strangers to people gunning for us. We're used to being in a spotlight position, and I think the team has handled being defending champs very well."

As in any sport, the title means more than just a trophy to the Tennessee women's athletic program as a whole.

"You can't put a price tag on the valuable exposure the championship gave us," Summitt says. "Spreading awareness of our program, in our recruiting. But it can be a hindrance, too. 'Oh, Tennessee's loaded, they don't need players,' but recruiting is never easy. We graduate players, too."

Summitt is a leading figure on the women's coaching scene, but she also made her mark in her playing days at the University of Tennessee-Martin, in the 1976 Olympics (silver medal), on the 1975 World Championship team, 1975 Pan Am Games gold medal team and the World University Games.

Obviously, understanding the minds of the players is one of Summitt's strong points. Her Tennessee teams are known for their balanced scoring and depth.

"Another one of our strengths has been strong defense," Summitt says. "It's strange, though; this year we were leading the nation in scoring. That's really outside of the philosophy of most Tennessee teams."

Tonight's contest with the Irish is just one of many tough games in the Lady Vols' demanding schedule. Perennial women's powers on the team's schedule include Old Dominion, Texas, UCLA and tough SEC Conference foes Auburn, Vanderbilt, and Georgia. Despite the schedule, Tennessee is well on its way to another 20, if not 30, victory season.

"The schedule is really competitive," Summitt understates. "It will be tougher from here on out, too. We're going to be tested as a team. We want to build momentum and get experience on the road."

"We've had some close games, against Georgia and South Carolina. We've been in the pressure cooker."

"We're coming into South Bend with a lot of respect for Notre Dame," Summitt says. "They have good personnel, they're having a great year, they're really well coached. We're aware of their talent and record at home. This is a big trip for us."

Irish lose to Maryland 78-75 as late rally falls just short

By DENNIS CORRIGAN
Sports Editor

Sometimes you dig and dig only to realize you've gone too deep. Then you can't get out. The Notre Dame basketball team experienced that situation Tuesday night, falling 78-75 to Maryland. Trailing by as much as 15 in the first half and 13 in the second to the Terps, the Irish couldn't extricate themselves from the hole that poor shooting, 9-of-26 in the first half (.346), had dug for them.

Maryland, on the other hand, was red hot, shooting 57 percent in the first half (16-of-28) and 59 percent (16-of-27) in the second.

"We couldn't stop their outside scoring or their inside scoring," said Irish head coach Digger Phelps, whose squad suffered its second-straight defeat in falling to 12-6. "We got in a hole, came back and had a couple of key plays at the end where we had a chance to cut it to one, but the best we could do was get down to three."

The Irish never led in the game and while their shots weren't falling, those of Brian Williams (who finished with 18 on 8-of-12 shooting) and Tony Massenburg (16, 7-of-8) were dropping from inside.

"We wanted to get it inside to Williams and Massenburg," said Terrapin head man Bob Wade, whose squad now stands at 11-6. "I thought Williams played fantastically both offensively and defensively."

Complementing the Terps potent inside attack was the outside shooting of Teyone McCoy and Rudy Archer, both of whom finished with 10 points.

For the Irish, it was another frustrating loss, as they could never quite cut the lead for the second game in a row.

"Teams like Kentucky and Maryland are just too good to be getting down to," said sophomore guard Joe Fredrick, whose play against the Wildcats earned him a starting nod against the Terps. "This team is too good to be having mental breakdowns at key times. They were getting good shots, while ours seemed to be contested."

The first half was all Maryland. The Terps roared to a 25-12 lead with 9:50 to play in the opening half. Massenburg had come off the bench to drop in eight points. The Irish were hindered by blocked shots and walking calls on the inside, calls that Phelps took exception with.

"I didn't understand the walks in the first half," Phelps said. see TERPS, page 11

Women get shot at defending champs

Volunteers to visit JACC tonight

Facing the defending NCAA champion is nothing new to the Notre Dame women's basketball program. Having a chance to win is.

Tonight the 12-5 Irish host fourth-ranked Tennessee, the defending champions of women's college basketball. The Lady Vols come into the Joyce ACC with a 16-2 record, losing only to fifth-ranked Texas and third-ranked Auburn. Last season en route to their coronation as NCAA queens, the Lady Vols thumped Notre Dame 90-55 before the Irish began a season-ending six-game winning streak.

The 1987-88 Irish are certainly not the Irish-of-old who were trounced by the NCAA champs last year. First-year head coach Muffet McGraw has Notre Dame pressing on defense and running on offense, while at the same time

Vols' Summitt has done it all

Who says you can't have it all?

In the world of coaching, Tennessee's head women's basketball coach Pat Summitt has it all: 11 consecutive 20-victory seasons with the Lady Volunteers, eight Final Four appearances, one national championship (1987) and five gold medals in international competition, including the greatest victory of them all, a gold medal in the 1984 Olympic Games.

"That was really an honor," Summitt says of the Olympic job. "It was as big a challenge as I've ever faced. Looking back, it was more stressful and demanding than I realized at the time. I wouldn't trade it for anything, but I wouldn't do it again."

In 13 years at Tennessee, Summitt has given the women's basketball program her all, establishing a 335-104 record (18-2 this season) coming into

ND fencing teams still silent powers

At a University which so covets national championships, it is ironic that Notre Dame's last two national titles have produced such little hoopla. And it is still ironic as the Irish men's and women's fencing teams quietly chase the top spot again in 1988. But that is the nature of fencing, it seems.

Fencing has never been much of a spectator sport. With masked competitors and several bouts occurring at the same time, the sport is both anonymous and decentralized. Let's just say there will never be TV timeouts in fencing.

But that does not preclude the idea that fencing can't grip an audience, because certainly the intensity and concentration in fencing can be as addictive as that of any other athletic event.

In late March the Notre Dame campus will be the site of the 1988 Junior World Fencing Championships. Branded as the "training grounds for future Olympians," by Notre Dame men's fencing coach Mike DeCicco, the Championships have been held in the Western Hemisphere just five times in its 39-year history. Three of those times it has been held here at Notre Dame.

Before the world's best converge on South Bend, some of the nation's most talented collegiate fencers will come to Notre Dame this weekend. The Irish host men's and women's fencing teams host their only home meets this weekend, facing arch rival Wayne State on Friday afternoon and nine midwestern teams on Saturday. For the men's team and DeCicco, it is a chance to continue a 90-meet winning streak which stretches back to 1984. On the other hand, for the women and head coach Yves Auriol it is a chance to begin another win streak after Wayne State narrowly defeated the Irish last weekend to snap the women's string of 50 consecutive victories over three years.

DeCicco graduated from Notre Dame in 1949 and has been here ever since, becoming the men's fencing coach in 1962. Auriol graduated from Lycee de Toulouse in Toulouse, France in 1955 and came to Notre Dame just two years ago. But these different backgrounds have combined to make Notre Dame a powerhouse in men's and women's fencing. With four NCAA championships (one for the women, three for the men), Notre Dame fencing has become as dominating as any team in Irish history in any sport, including the football 'Glory Years.'

Among fencing circles, there is little doubt that DeCicco is the dean of college coaches. His Administration Building office, where he serves as Academic Advisor for Notre Dame athletes, is filled with hardware recognizing his contributions to the University and the fencing world. His accomplishments are seemingly endless.

Coach of three national championship teams (1977, 1978, 1986), eight undefeated teams and 23 All-Americans. Coach of the Year in 1966, 1975 and 1977. A career record of 502-40 for an incredible .926 winning percentage. Though comparisons are often trite and misused, DeCicco is undoubtedly the Knute Rockne of Notre Dame fencing.

In less than three years, Auriol has begun to create a legacy of his own. Last March, the Irish won Notre Dame's only national championship in a women's sport by capturing the title in the NCAA Tournament held here on campus. Before last week's 9-7 loss to Wayne State, Auriol had a perfect
