Reagan to visit Moscow for talks with Gorbachev

Associated Press

WASHINGTON - President Reagan announced Wednesday he would go to Moscow from May 29 to June 2 for his fourth summit meeting with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev and his first visit to a nation he once branded an "evil empire."

The five-day visit will mark the first trip to Moscow by an American president since Richard Nixon's 1974 summer meeting with Leonid Brezhnev. Later that same year, in November, Gerald Ford met with Brezhnev in the Soviet port city of Vladivostok.

The summit's intended centerpiece was the signing of a treaty to scrap 30 percent to 50 percent of the superpowers' long-range bombers, missiles and submarines. However, Reagan already has suggested an agreement will not be ready, saying time is too limited.

Secretary of State George Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze reported Wednesday night that differences remained between the two sides on the accord.

The two said in a joint statement they would meet again in Moscow on April 21-25 and also in May, but did not indicate where that session would be held.

"Both sides have worked hard and some progress has been realized in a number of areas, but much more needs to be done," the statement said.

Shevardnadze, asked if a treaty would be ready, said through a translator: "it is possible. This is not an easy task. This is a very complicated task, but we are becoming convinced that it is doable."

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said the president would spend all of his time in the Soviet capital, following the pattern set by Gorbachev when he remained in Washington during his December summit with Reagan. However, first lady Nancy Reagan is planning a day trip to Leningrad.

bringing the first of many outbursts of laughter throughout the lecture.

Art Buchwald, introduced as "the clown prince of American journalism," offered a variety of humorous insights on American politics and society during the 1988 Red Smith Lecture in Journalism at Washington Hall Wednesday night.

Buchwald, currently a syndicated columnist for the Los Angeles Times, appears in over 500 newspapers in the U.S. and abroad.

"It is no accident that after you had the president of the United States speak to you two weeks ago, that the Red Smith lecture series would ask a humorist to tell you what he said," Buchwald started his speech, Ronald Reagan was a common target for Buchwald's humor during the lecture.

"I worship the very quicksand he walks on," Buchwald said. "Reagan's greatest feat is to make the country feel good about things that are bad."

After reciting the Gipper's deathbed scene from "Knut Rockne-All American," Buchwald told the audience "I have good news for you, the Gipper isn't dead. He's alive and well and taking a nap during dinner at the White House."

Buchwald poked fun at the

ND Security campaign: "Saved by the Belt"

By DEIRDRE FINN

Notre Dame Security, in conjunction with the Hoosiers for Safety Belts organization, is sponsoring a campaign to promote the use of safety belts in the University community.

"The main goal of the campaign is to get everyone in the University community to wear his safety belt at all times," said Mike Shreve, a Notre Dame Security officer and one of the organizers of the campaign.

The campaign focuses on the Saved by the Belt Club, whose members have all been in car accidents and were saved because they were wearing their seat belts.

"We hope that students who are members of the club will encourage other students to wear their seat belts," said Assistant Director of Security Phil Johnson.

Security officers are working with state and city police to actively enforce the state law requiring front seat passengers to wear safety belts. Drivers on city roads, who are stopped for another traffic violation, may be given a warning or ticket if they are not wearing their seat belt. Safety belt tickets, however, will not be given on

New Jersey life is quite an experience

The Indiana license plate on my car says to go "Back Home Again." Well, over break I did. Back home to New Jersey.

Many people indiscriminately rag on New Jersey. Phrases like "armpit of the nation," "toxic wasteland," and "what exit do you live on?" come up often in connection with the place. Most people who rag on the place haven't even been there, or else never saw anything besides the Jersey Turnpike. That shows how much they know.

People in Jersey are different. We are packed into less space than any other state in America, and are squashed between New York and Philadelphia besides. Millions of New Yorkers come and leave their garbage on our beaches and their money in our casinos. It's a busy place, New Jersey is.

Most people in the state have a get-it-done-yesterday attitude. They have to survive. More people means higher prices, more competition for jobs, more crime. It also means more bars and more parties.

Growing up in New Jersey definitely affects kids. They grow up faster. My little brother is in seventh grade, and has already gone through a girlfriend or two. He knows all about cursing, sex and illegal drugs. We won't mention what my little sister knows since my folks read this column.

Junior high school kids in other states think shooting BB guns at traffic signs is neat. In Jersey, kids think sex and alcohol are neat. We had a drug bust at my junior high school once. The police arrested and booked 54 students. Our school was supposed to be one of the cleaner ones.

I'm not sure quite why Jersey does that to kids. Maybe it's the constant stream of violence on the local news. "Murder, death, rape, fire. Details at 11."

Maybe it's just the dense population. Twenty million people live within fifty miles of New York City, many of them in the Jersey suburbs and in Newark and Jersey City. It's crowded and hot in the summer.

Most people there seem to thrive on it, though. People move to Florida and move back six months later. It doesn't even occur to most people to leave. Out of a graduating class of 476, I am currently the farthest west. Many graduates simply found jobs and apartments and live-in boyfriends and girlfriends.

I went back to work this break at Domino's in Keansburg, a shore town complete with seedy boardwalk and rundown bungalows. It struck me what different lives my co-workers led.

Mark McLaughlin

News Editor

They worried about paying the rent and bowling nights and scoring on dates. They looked at me as a foreigner, not with malice or resentment, just as someone different because I'd gone "out west" to school.

Sometimes I think they're right. They're happy without trying to get a degree and make money and be successful. They simply make the best of a hard place to live.

There's a place very near Keansburg called the Spy House. It's a holdover from the Revolutionary War days when patriots used the place to spy on the harbors of New York. It stands right on the beach. If you go there at night, you can see the homes and bars and lives of millions of people lit up on the shore. The water glows orange from the light (you can read a book by the light thrown off by the suburbs and New York City). The Verrazano Narrows Bridge stretches across the river in front of the towers of the city.

It uncannily resembles the gates to Hell. New Jersey is very much like that, on the edge of Hell. It's something that changes people for the better, though. Living there teaches you a lot about people.

I wouldn't give it up. I don't think I could anyway.

Think of your best friend.

Now, think of your best friend dead.

Don't drive drunk.

Noriega attempts to expel U.S. economic adviser

Associated Press

PANAMA CITY, Panama - A U.S. diplomat was given 48 hours to leave Panama on Wednesday, the third day of a general strike that has virtually shut down the country but has not loosened Gen. Manuel Noriega's grip on power.

David Miller, an economics counselor, was the second American diplomat ordered out by the Foreign Ministry, which gave no reason for its decision.

In Washington, the State Department said Wednesday night it would ignore the order because the United States considers the government that issued it illegitimate. It gave the same reason for rejecting the previous order against Terence Kneebone, head of the U.S. Information Service in Panama, who remains in the country.

Panama is out of cash because Washington cut off the supply of U.S. dollars, the Panamanian national currency, in its effort to drive Noriega into exile. Federal grand juries in Florida indicted Noriega last month on narcotics and money laundering charges.

Some opposition leaders were frustrated Wednesday that the general strike had not loosened Noriega's grip on the bankrupt nation.

"We're well aware of the situation, that Gen. Noriega appears unmoved by all the human suffering," Jose Mulino, an attorney, said at a news conference. "We'll be considering new strategies. I'm not sure what it will take," Mulino said.

Mulino is prominent in the National Civic Crusade, an alliance of about 200 professional, business, labor and other groups formed last June to lead the campaign against Noriega.

He and other opposition leaders vowed to continue the strike.

Economy expanding; prices show slight rise

Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The government delivered two welcome pieces of economic news on Wednesday: consumer prices rose just 0.2 percent in February and the economy in late 1987 expanded at the liveliest pace in nearly two years.

Falling energy and food prices in February helped restrain the rise in the Labor Department's Consumer Price Index after a 0.3 percent increase in January.

For the first two months of the year, prices increased at an annual rate of 3.2 percent - much better than last year's moderate 4.4 percent inflation.

In a separate report, the Commerce Department said the U.S. economy grew at a brisk 4.8 percent annual pace in the final three months of last year. It was the second upward revision in the fourth-quarter GNP, estimated a month ago at 4.5 percent and in January at 4.2 percent.

The department said better-than-expected performance in exports, consumer spending and business investment led to the latest revision, which pushed growth for the year to a rate of 4 percent, compared with 2.2 percent growth in 1986. It was the biggest annual increase since a 5.1 percent rise in 1984.

The 4.8 percent fourth quarter growth followed a 4.3 percent growth in the July-September quarter and was the fastest quarterly growth rate since an increase of 5.4 percent in the first three months of 1986.

Recent economic reports have shown an economy that rebounded quickly from last October's stock market collapse. Analysts see little likelihood of an election-year recession.

officials in Reagan's administration who said the Iran-Contra scandal was to help "moderate Iranians."

"In case you are wondering what a moderate Iranian is, it's an Iranian who has run out of ammunition," Buchwald explained.

Reagan will also go down in history as "the Great Communicator, even though he keeps getting his facts wrong," he added.

Buchwald had targets other than Reagan to attack with his satirical barbs.

An economist "is someone who will tell you 1,000 ways how to make love, but doesn't know any women," he said.

Buchwald told of an Amtrak administrator who was so depressed over cuts in his budget that he lay down on the train tracks between Washington, D.C. and Philadelphia and waited for a train to run him over.

"Fourteen hours later, he got hungry and decided to go home," he said.

The trade deficit could be taken care of by "making every Japanese businessman go to the Harvard Business School, so they'll be as screwed up as we are," Buchwald said.

Some items in the news are so bizarre Buchwald admitted even he couldn't make them up.

As an example, Buchwald told of the Sultan of Brunei who believed he was giving $10 million dollars to the contras. Ollie North gave the sultan a Swiss bank account number that was wrong and the money ended up in the account of a Swiss gentleman who spent the money.

"When asked why he spent it (the money), he said, 'I thought it was mine.' I could not make that up," Buchwald said.

"Then you take the Jimmy Swaggart story," Buchwald continued. "I made that up."

Buchwald also elicited laughs from the audience at the expense of Notre Dame.

Buchwald had asked Notre Dame to send some information about the campus before his lecture. The University complied by sending a book on undergraduate courses and the decidedly larger football press guide.

Buchwald also noted how on previous trips to Notre Dame, people who asked him if he liked the campus became disappointed when he answered "fine."

Random Indiana truck check finds serious safety defects

Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS - A random check of trucks traveling Hoosier interstates last week showed that 42 percent had serious safety defects, the Indiana State Police said Wednesday.

Inspectors at eight checkpoints last Thursday looked at 647 trucks and ordered 270 out of service until defects were corrected, according to Sgt. Guy Boruff of the state police motor carrier division.

Missing or defective front brakes accounted for 44 of the out-of-service citations, Boruff said.

The other top categories of serious violations involved inoperative lights and defective tires, Boruff said.

Inspectors spotted nearly 2,500 violations, or an average of almost four for every truck inspected, Boruff said. Trucks with less serious violations weren't ordered out of service.

"We're concerned as a state agency," Boruff said of the survey findings. "But we do feel our inspection program is having an impact."

The 42 percent figure was up from October, when the last random inspection was conducted at the request of the Federal Highway Administration.

Some 31 percent of trucks inspected last fall were ordered out of service, Boruff said. The increase in this round of inspections could be attributed to more inspectors on the job and better training of what to look for, said Boruff.

Pole sitter will end stand after record falls

Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS - Melissa Sanders, who has earned about $10,000 for cancer research and claimed a pole-sitting world record, said Wednesday that she will carry some regrets with her when she descends from her perch today.

"I'm going to miss the birds on my balcony and the crazy drivers going by down below," the 19-year-old Arizona native said Wednesday. "But it all boils down to a lot of problems."

Sanders, who has spent more than 500 days aloft, three-stories high above a southside intersection, said she was disappointed to have fallen far short of her initial goal, to raise $100,000 for cancer research.

"I wish things were different, but stuff happens," Sanders said sighing. "I'm just going to take it day by day."

Mauri Sanders, who broke a similar pole-sitting record in 211 days in 1959, said her daughter was riding high as she entered the final day of an adventure that has been an emotional roller coaster.

"Melissa is running on sheer adrenaline at this point," said Mrs. Sanders.

Miss Sanders said she planned to spend her last night in the 42-square-foot shack atop telephone poles with friends.

Part of her evening was to be spent preparing a speech for today's festivities.

The teen-ager's fiance, Keith Seal, was on hand Wednesday afternoon, helping Miss Sanders prepare for her descent. The two met after the 24-year-old California man read an article about Miss Sanders and decided to contact her by phone. They announced their engagement in August, before ever having met.

"He's great. He's been just great," Miss Sanders said, adding that she would share her first post-pole dinner with Seals.

Mrs. Sanders said her daughter will face certain unexpected challenges when she returns to terra firma.

"For one thing I'm going to have to sue for slander and defamation of character," said Mrs. Sanders.

"If we could save one life with this campaign, it would be worth it," said Shreve.

Cherish friendship during Lent

We all ask far too little of God, and we forget that friendship is a two-way street. But this thing we call "religion," our Catholic faith, is and must be about friendship with God, or it is about nothing at all.

Thomas D'Andrea

guest column

Perhaps the time we are farthest from realizing this is during the season of Lent. Lent, after all, has its demands—more religious obligations. So, if we have some vague sense of the meaning and purpose of Lent, we grit our teeth and give up a few things. The spirit with which we do this is far from exemplary. It is as if Lent brought with it a new burden, one added to our weekly chore of having to shuffle off to Mass on Sundays. Of course this is entirely the wrong picture of the forty days, but we have to understand, we must understand, what is wrong with it. We must understand why this dim view of Lent is a product of our own dimness, dullness and self-absorption, and not the characteristic of an otherwise splendid season.

Lent, we have heard, is a time for conversion of the heart. If this is true, there is at least one startling consequence that follows from it. God, that Being who created us, even, out of a very peculiar love, enfleshed Himself and occupied our frankly small portion of reality (and hammered nails, and paid taxes, and died, we mustn't forget, a frightful and humiliating death for our eternal well-being) does not want mere external sacrifices during Lent. The worth of a gift, after all, is not strictly equivalent to the difficulty one has in giving it; a gift is not to be prized solely or even primarily to the degree it inconveniences its giver. Undoubtedly, a gift's true worth has something to do with the sentiment, the intention, with which it is given. (The tired old "It's the thought that counts" suggests this.)

So during Lent God wants more of what is on the inside—more real affection, or if that sounds too sentimental, more real friendship. He wants more of the heart and less going-through-the-motions-to-avoid-guilt attention. God, after all, matters much more than our excessively self-directed concerns. If we miss the opportunity to grow in friendship with our Creator during the season of Lent we alone are to blame.

How then can we strengthen that friendship in the two remaining weeks before Easter? I've heard of a practice common but a generation or two ago that could be just the thing to redeem an otherwise unspectacular (i.e. not because unnoticed but because lifeless) Lent. At Notre Dame we are blessed with, among other things, more tabernacles per square foot (per acre?) than probably anywhere. Now it is one of the shocking truths of our faith that Christ, fully God, fully man, resides, as man and as God, with soul and body, in each of the tabernacles where there is a consecrated host (an amazing friend this infinite, all-powerful being who limits Himself so).

It used to be that in the course of entering or leaving one's dorm during the day one would stop by the chapel and acknowledge God's presence (no small thing)—perhaps converse a bit (true friends are never lacking in topics of conversation), at no less thank Him for that tremendous love which loved us into existence, loves us through time and loves us, hopefully, to complete happiness in the beyond. Is such a practice too ambitious for us? Are we so lacking in courage that we are incapable of doing this? Are we not too busy? But surely once a day, one time leaving the dorm and once in entering, would not be too much for us.

What a great resolution with which to end Lent! God will be happy—He will have won a bit of our hearts; we will be happy, having overcome self-inflicted formalism and engaged in something interior and authentic and eminently manageable, and Lent won't be such a gloomy affair after all. Who knows what good things might come out of such spontaneous trafficking of friends (an all-powerful being is a good friend to have)...?

Besides, a heart is a terrible thing to waste (on oneself).

Pax Christi expresses thanks

Dear Editor:

We wish to publicly thank all who helped us with our demonstration Wednesday, Mar. 9, at the Joyce ACC. We especially thank Rex Rakow, Director of Notre Dame Security; John Goldrick, Associate Vice-President of Student Affairs; and University President Father Edward Malloy for their support and approval. We also wish to thank The Observer for both running the five articles on various issues before the Reagan visit and demonstrating professionalism in other articles. With its help and the work of many others, we were able to sound a clear message of protest to several Reagan administration policies. We feel the action was executed in an orderly and constructive manner and such efforts were the result of good communication and cooperation. Finally we thank the entire student body for being tolerant of our interpretation of the Christian gospel. On behalf of Pax Christi-USA and all who have special concern for the poor and powerless—not to mention those who wish to see us survive into the next millennium—we say thanks.

ND investments ignore apartheid

Dear Editor:

It is entirely unproductive to require business students to take a grueling course in informal logic, if their professors are to go about spouting the most outrageous nonsense.

Consider the comments of Father Oliver Williams, Associate Provost and management professor, concerning the divestment of Notre Dame's holdings in South Africa: "When you're in an evil situation, and you think you can make it better and overcome the evil, you should stay in there and do it... if you simply pull out, you have no leverage to make things better."

While this is a laudable sentiment, it is completely inconsistent with the fiduciary responsibility associated with investing the University's endowment. The point of having a large endowment, of course, is to allow the University to attract better faculty, build better facilities and keep tuition affordable. It follows that the endowment must be invested both safely and as profitably as possible. The only reason the University has South African stocks in its portfolio is because they are (relatively) safe and profitable.

If the University were really following the policy outlined by Father Williams, it would be increasing its South African holdings in order to be in a better position to "overcome the evil." It is not doing that, of course, since investments in South Africa are neither safe enough nor profitable enough to justify further holdings than the University now has.

Given that the University has a responsibility not to throw away endowment money on bad investments, it is clear that when South African investments become either unsafe or unprofitable, the University will divest itself of them. Williams' pious mouthings about maintaining "leverage" are simply inconsistent with the prior obligation which the University has to use donors' money wisely. People do not give money to Notre Dame for it to be lost in South Africa.

So when it comes right down to it, the only reason the University still has investments in South Africa is that they are profitable. And when they become unprofitable, you may be certain that the University will divest. In the meantime, Williams has one thing right when he says that "we can all agree that apartheid is evil." Given his meager talent in logic, it is no surprise that he cannot make the inference that Notre Dame is profiting directly from evil. If the administration holds our Christian values as dearly as it says, it should renounce the tainted gold of P.W. Botha's racist regime and divest now.

Lowe plummets with 'Pinker'

accent writer

Nick Lowe has always been sort of a confusing dude. What is he? He's put out a few great albums. He's written a few great songs. He's a recognized producer and a competent bassist. He's not a real college radio favorite. He's not a critical favorite anymore. Not since "Cruel To Be Kind" has he had any real popularity.

The music doesn't help matters either. In one album, it can be country, rock and roll, reggae, garage, or blues. You name it. His songs are, by turn, deathly serious and overly goofy. Who is this guy?

Well, unfortunately the answers aren't found on "Pinker And Prouder Than Previous." Even the title makes no sense. It is his first album in almost three years and the seventh in his spotty career. His last effort, "Rose of England," was one of the under-appreciated gems of 1985. Here, he just sounds confused.

It immediately struck me as a real disjointed album, and one glance at the back sleeve reveals that all these songs were recorded in either London or Austin, Texas, between spring of 1986 and early 1987. I don't know why he waited so long to put it out unless he realized how scattered it was and was waiting for some Divine Inspiration that never came.

Only five of the eleven songs here are "pure" Lowe. Two are co-written, and the other four are covers of other people's songs. Lowe has always had great taste in other people's songs, and this album is no exception. This is the first Lowe album I've ever heard where the covers blow away Nick's originals.

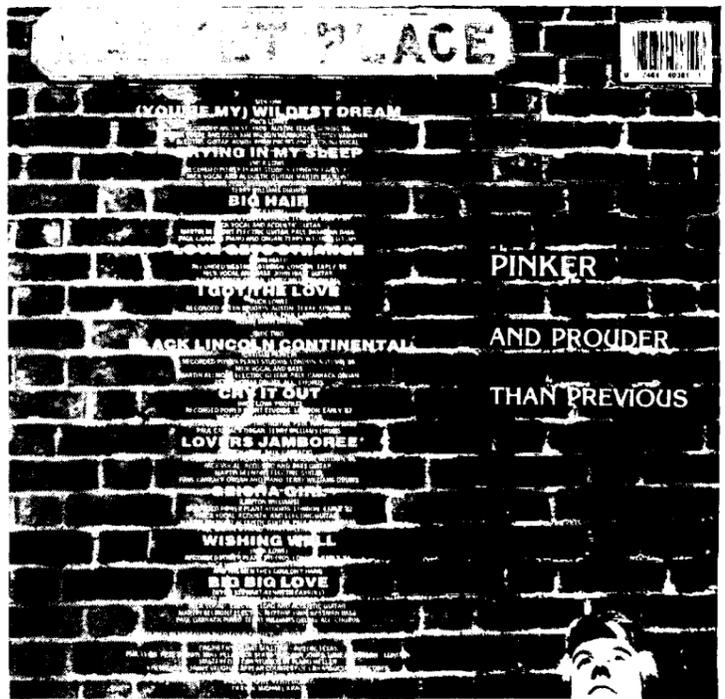

The first song he covers is the fourth song on the album. It is undoubtedly the album's only transcendent moment. The song is "Love Gets Strange," written by John Hiatt whose "She Don't Love Nobody" stood out on Lowe's last album and whose own latest album, "Bring The Family" (on which Lowe plays), is still drawing critical praise. "Love Gets Strange" is a mid-tempo workout featuring Hiatt's own great rhythm guitar work. It has lines like, "This love is like a wrestling match," and "There ain't no window open...and there is no door to get out of before this love gets strange." For the first time one the album, Lowe sounds comfortable. Unfortunately, it doesn't last long.

The other cover songs range from Graham Parker's sleek "Black Lincoln Continental," a sort of bubble-gum punk shout to Lawton Williams' simple country skiffle "Geisha Girl" and finally to the last song "Big Big Love" which sounds like the songs Lowe used to write. Corny, but with a knowing wink and a shrug.

The real Lowe songs sound almost unfalteringly like somebody else's. On both "Crying In My Sleep" and "I Got The Love," Lowe's ugly Everlyl Brothers obsession rears its white little head. Nick might have been better served by just handing these two over to the real Phil and Don.

"Lover's Jamboree," which was co-written with AOR wonderboy wanna-be Paul Carrack, sounds like every song Dave Edmunds has ever written and, of course, there's ol' Dave guest-producing this one. Yawn.

Other songs range from failed jokes ("Big Hair") to decent, yet muddled attempts at roadhouse blues ("You're My Wildest Dream").

On only two of his own songs does Lowe show what he's capable of. The first is "Cry It Out," a lilting, reggae/country fusion that sounds like the "White Album" era Paul McCartney turned on to Bob Marley. It works purely on the basis of its lyrical and musical simplicity. The other song that shows Lowe worth his proverbial salt is "Wishing Well." Opening with a gnashing verb guitar line and joined by "The Men They Couldn't Hang," Lowe rises to the occasion in a song about a guy who wishes he left his girl where he found her, "down by the wishing well" where "her perfume, like a promise, stole my reason." He needs more like these.

Overall, this album is really disappointing. Lowe is already sinking sadly into the bottomless bargain bin in the sky and, though "Pinker and Prouder Than Previous" shows that he can still pull it off when he wants to, it does nothing to brake that descent.

Gift for center devoted to peace

Associated Press

The widow of a man whose dream was world peace has found a way to further his ideas more than 40 years after his international best seller on the subject was published.

Wendy Reves, a native of Texas now living in France, has honored her late husband, Emery Reves, by committing $3 million to endow the Center for International Studies at the College of William and Mary to insure that vital issues on world peace are studied and perpetuated.

"When I read Reves' book, 'The Anatomy of Peace,' I am struck by the provocative and penetrating nature of his ideas," said Dr. James A. Bill, a noted authority on the Middle East and director of the Center.

The major premise of "The Anatomy of Peace" is that as long as there are nation-states with geographical boundaries and competing interests, war is inevitable.

"His predictions on nation-states have been born out a half century later," said Bill. "We continue to live in a violent world of war and international conflict." Since the book was published in 1945, "Nations have continually been in conflict with each other."

Reves proposed an international federal system whereby a higher rule by law would wield ultimate authority. According to Bill, "This international structure must have the force of law and the agreement of the great powers behind it to be effective."

Reves, however, was critical of both the League of Nations and the United Nations, which he believed were unequal to the task of keeping the peace.

"It may be time to go back and look at Reves' ideas," said Bill. "Perhaps we should re-examine his perceptive diagnosis and then work from there. With nuclear arsenals ever-present, the stakes involved in this enterprise could be no less than human survival."

The Reves gift will endow virtually all of the activities of William and Mary's Center for International Studies. It will be used to establish a distinguished visiting scholar-in-residence program and to fund academic conferences and research, library acquisitions, multimedia resources, and scholarships. The endowment will also be used to establish a peace prize recognizing an individual who embodies Reves' commitment to international peace.

"This endowment provides a gigantic and generous boost to our program," said Bill. "Our concerns in international studies are basic; they deal with survival. We're interested in studying whether violent conflict is inevitable to mankind," he said. "We're concerned with the issues of war, peace, world order, international justice, and U.S. foreign policy. International studies are designed to enable us to confront sensitively and realistically these kinds of problems."

According to Bill, a very basic way of promoting international problem-solving is through the study of foreign languages. "William and Mary already has the foundation of a strong international studies program because of its longstanding emphasis on foreign language study," he said.

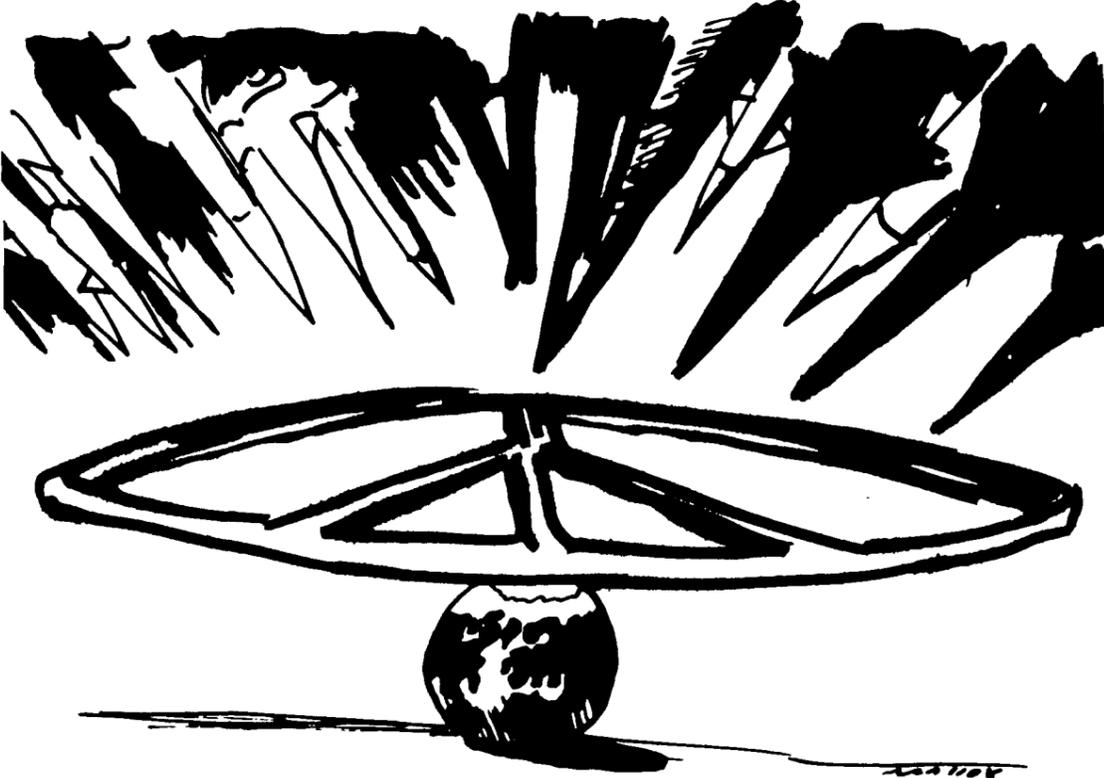

The Center for International Studies serves as a coordinating office for William and Mary undergraduates majoring in international studies; this includes East Asian, Latin American, and Soviet-Russian studies, as well as international relations. A minor is offered in African studies.

The Center also oversees the operation of thirteen study-abroad programs in locations ranging from Europe and the Caribbean to the People's Republic of China.

Mrs. Reves became interested in supporting international studies at William and Mary through her contact with friends in Williamsburg who share her late husband's commitment to world peace.

Frank Shatz, a local newspaper columnist, told Mrs. Reves of William and Mary's plans for the center. Shatz, an emigre from Czechoslovakia, had read "Anatomy of Peace" before fleeing the Communist takeover of his country.

"It became my bible," said Shatz, "transforming me into a faithful disciple of Emery Reves." During Shatz' first return to Europe, he decided to visit Reves to "pay my respects to the man who had so profoundly influenced my outlook on world events."

Golf team heads to EKU

Tourney follows impressive showing in Florida trip

By WILLIAM STEGMEIER

Sports Writer

Coming off an impressive showing in Florida over Spring Break, the Notre Dame Varsity golf team will compete in the Eastern Kentucky University Spring Golf Classic this weekend.

Golf teams from the Big Ten and Mid-American conferences, as well as major independents from District IV, comprise the 18-team field for this 54-hole event. Notre Dame finished eighth in this event last year.

"Our spring trip was extremely beneficial in our preparation for this year's EKU Invitational," said Irish coach Noel O'Sullivan. "We had some fine performances, and our conditioning has put us in good shape for the rest of our schedule." The golfers started their spring trip by winning a triangular meet with Embry-Riddle and Flagler University at Riviera Country Club in Florida. The Irish shot a combined total of 307, outshooting Embry-Riddle by five shots. Junior Pat Mohan led the way with a round of 73.

Next up for the Irish was the Palm Coast Intercollegiate, where Notre Dame got to play at the Arnold Palmer-designed Matanzas Woods and Pine Lakes courses, as well as at Palm Harbor. The team shot combined scores of 332, 320 and 316 at the courses, respectively, with the round of 320 coming in a downpour at Matanzas Woods.

Notre Dame's performance had O'Sullivan feeling optimistic.

"A team score of 320 or lower shows that your team has been competitive with some of the best," said the 16th-year Irish mentor.

Senior captain and number-one golfer Dick Connelly performed exceptionally well at the Intercollegiate. Connelly placed 23rd out of 168 golfers, with a score of 233 for three rounds. Looking ahead to the rest of the season, the Irish have their only dual meet of the season against Lewis College.

Soviet team to visit SB

Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS - The Soviet National Junior basketball team will include a May 10 stop at South Bend in its visit to the United States this spring.

The Soviet team will be in the United States during May for a 10-game tour against Amateur Athletic Union club and regional teams, the AAU has announced.

The tour has been sanctioned by the Amateur Basketball Association of the United States and will be played under international rules.

Games at Jonesboro, Ark., on May 11 and Columbia, S.C., on May 17 will be televised live by ESPN.

Last year, the Soviet juniors compiled a 7-2 record during a tour of the United States.

Keady has a friend in KSU coach

Associated Press

WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind. - Purdue's Gene Keady and Kansas State's Lon Kruger, whose basketball teams play Friday night in the NCAA Midwest Regional semifinals, have a lot in common.

Both are native Kansans, both are graduates of Kansas State, both began their coaching careers in Kansas and both have a tremendous admiration for the other.

"He's someone you like to see win ... except for this game," says Keady.

This game at the Silverdome in Pontiac, Mich., of course, is the next to last hurdle to a trip to the Final Four. And those games, appropriately, will be in Kansas City.

"Lonnie's team is a clone of what he was like as a player (at Kansas State)," said Keady. "They play hard, they play smart and they can shoot it. And he coaches a lot like Coach (Jack) Hartman."

Kruger was the Big Eight Conference player of the year in 1973 and 1974, leading the Wildcats to conference titles under Hartman, a man Keady credits for much of his own basketball philosophy.

By the time Kruger was in college, Keady was well into his coaching career at Hutchinson (Kan.) Junior College. From there, Keady moved to Arkansas, Western Kentucky and Purdue. Kruger, meanwhile, became an assistant to Hartman at Kansas State, then head coach at Pan American and, two years ago, succeeded Hartman at his alma mater.

"I've known Coach Keady for a long time, ever since I was in college," Kruger says. "I've followed his teams wherever he's been. And I've always had a great deal of respect for how tough-minded and well-disciplined his teams are."

Purdue beat Kansas State 101-72 last December in Mackey Arena.

Sullivan wins her second national title

By STEVE MEGARGEE
Assistant Sports Editor

Any disappointment the Notre Dame women's fencing team may have felt after coming just short in its national title defense on Tuesday can now be washed away.

The Irish came back with an exceptional performance in Wednesday's individual championships at Princeton, N.J. Senior Molly Sullivan won the second national title of her career, sophomore Anne Barreda placed third in the nation and Kristin Kralicek finished in 13th place.

"I'm very glad she (Sullivan) won the title again this year," said Irish coach Yves Auriol. "I thought she'd win. We had a bout plan, and Molly followed it to perfection.

She waited and prepared her attacks well."

Sullivan had won the national title in 1986, but she placed third in the individual championships last year after Notre Dame had taken the team championship.

In the finals this year, Sullivan met Wayne State's Loredana Ranza. Wayne State had won the national title over Notre Dame by a 9-6 score on Tuesday.

Sullivan came through with a 9-7 victory over Ranza to win her second national championship in three years. It was the first time the North Andover, Mass., native had defeated Ranza after losing to her four times earlier this season. Sullivan recorded a 15-0 record for the day. "I think just because I lost to her so much I knew what not to do, and I basically knew how to fence her," said Sullivan. "It was the first time I fenced her in an eight-touch bout, and I think that's totally different from a five-touch bout. I thought I could beat her in an eight-touch bout."

As the first woman scholarship fencer at Notre Dame, Sullivan became the first Notre Dame woman fencer to win two national championships and earn a spot on the first-team All-American list all four years of her collegiate career.

"I'm happy to win this, and this is how I wanted to end my college career," said Sullivan. "I feel I have a lot more to do personally like making the Olympic team."

The team for the 1988 Seoul Summer Olympics will be announced in June.

If not for Sullivan, Barreda may have had a chance at taking the national title. After having a tough time at the beginning of the day, Barreda advanced to the semi-finals, where Sullivan eliminated her with an 8-1 victory.

Barreda went on to beat Yasmine Topcu of Wayne State, which placed her third in the nation. She held a 10-6 record for the day and earned first-team All-American honors.

"I was wondering early in the day if she could bounce back after struggling," said Auriol. "A few other times she had given up, but today Anne proved she can fence with anyone when she's right."

The most surprising performance of the day may have come from Kralicek. The junior from Portland, Ore., was not originally scheduled to fence. She learned at 10 a.m. the day of the competition that she would be taking the place of an injured Wayne State fencer. As the last-seeded fencer

Behind the pitching of Brian Piotrowicz (above) and Erik Madsen, the Notre Dame baseball team swept Bethel in a doubleheader Tuesday afternoon. Both Piotrowicz and Madsen came through with complete game victories.

Irish take two from Bethel

Piotrowicz, Madsen lead baseball team to sweep

Special to The Observer

Strong pitching performances by Brian Piotrowicz and Erik Madsen powered the Notre Dame baseball team to a doubleheader sweep at Bethel on Wednesday afternoon.

Piotrowicz pitched a six-hitter in the first game, an 8-2 Irish triumph. Erik Madsen hurled a three-hitter to give Notre Dame a 2-1 win in the second game.

Notre Dame, which now sports a record of 8-10, scored eight runs in the first four innings of the first game to cruise to victory.

Senior shortstop Pat Pesavento scored from third on a Bethel error to give the Irish a 1-0 lead in the first inning.

Notre Dame scored three runs in the second inning, with the key hits being a double by James Sass that scored Mike Moshier and a single by Greg Vogele which brought home Sass.

After Bethel scored a single run in its half of the second, the Irish built up the lead once again. A Tim Hutson solo home run (his seventh of the season) and an RBI single by Mike Coss made the score 6-1 in favor of the Irish.

Notre Dame closed its scoring with a two-run fourth inning, keyed by Dan Peltier's two-run single.

Bethel scored once in the bottom half of the fourth to account for the final 8-2 score. The complete game victory by Piotrowicz marked the sophomore's first win since last April 11 against Tulane.

In the second game, Madsen pitched a perfect first four innings. The Irish scored twice during that time with single runs in the first and third innings.

A two-out bloop single by Moshier scored Peltier for the first run, and Peltier's double in the third inning scored Pesavento for the second Irish run.

Bethel came back with a run in the fifth. After scoring without the benefit of a hit early in the inning, Keith Bueche single with two outs to break up Madsen's no-hitter.

With the Irish leading 2-1 in the final inning, Bethel loaded the bases with nobody out. Madsen struck out the side from there to secure the win and doubleheader sweep.

Madsen struck out 11 while walking just one batter in the seven-inning contest. For the season, he has a won-loss record of 4-1 and an earned run average of 3.73. The junior from Great Falls, Mont., has allowed just one run in his last 15 innings of work. In his last 22 and one-third innings, he has struck out 19 while walking just two batters. Madsen has a 31-7 strike out-walk ratio for the season.

The Irish next face Wisconsin this Friday at 2 p.m. in Notre Dame's first game at South Bend's new Stanley Coveleski Stadium.

Lacrosse eager to open home season, excite fans

By PETE LaFLEUR
Sports Writer

The Notre Dame lacrosse team plays for the first time at the Edward W. "Moose" Krause Stadium this weekend as the Irish open their home season with a 3-1 record.

The team has eagerly awaited the opportunity to play on the new field, but they will have to wait one more day than expected. A Notre Dame track invitational has forced Saturday's game against Wooster out of Krause stadium. The game with the Fighting Scots instead will be played on Carrier Field or in the Loftus All-Sports Complex, depending on the weather. Contrary to an ad in yesterday's Observer, the game will begin at 2:30 p.m. (not 1:30 p.m.).

Nonetheless, the Irish will officially open play at Krause on Sunday at 1:30 when they play an exhibition game against Windy City, a club team from Chicago. But whoever they play or whenever they play, the team is just eager to play a

"We only played before maybe 100 fans on that whole trip and we are kind of on a roll now, so we are excited to play before a good showing of home fans," said senior tri-captain

Tom Lanahan. "A lot of times people have said that they didn't know when the games were, but hopefully this year more people will be aware of the games and how exciting they are."

Lanahan said that Saturday games are usually the best to attend. Only six home games will be played this season, with three of them on Saturdays. He also stressed that lack of knowledge about the game shouldn't stop people from coming out.

"I never talked to a person who saw a game and didn't like it," said Lanahan. "Most saw the game and wanted to know even more about it."

Lanahan said one could describe the game to those who are unfamiliar with it as a combination of soccer and hockey.

"There's a famous saying back East that lacrosse is the fastest game on two feet," he said. "The game is fast paced and offensive oriented (there are often upwards of 20 goals per game). People also like the physical nature because there's a lot of hitting and checking."

The Irish are eager to begin their quest for a Great Lakes conference title and possible NCAA berth, and that begins with the season opener this weekend.

Lanahan said fans should watch for the play of senior attackman Jeff Shay.

"Jeff has been working very hard, and as the year goes on his play will sometimes decide whether we win or lose," said Lanahan. "Jeff plays on the crease and is who the middies and other attackmen usually look to when they are double-teamed."

Shay has been somewhat of a surprise scorer so far with eight goals, including two hat tricks, and three assists. Fellow attackmen John Olmstead and Brian McHugh also have helped carry the scoring load for the Irish.

Olmstead has scored three hat tricks on his way to 12 goals and five assists while McHugh, the team's strongman, has tallied eight goals and six assists.

The Irish hold a 5-1 series
