Security Council formally ends Persian Gulf War

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The Security Council announced a formal end to the Gulf War on Thursday, accepting Iraq's pledge that it will pay for war damages and scrap its weapons of mass destruction.

At 6 p.m. EDT, Iraqi Ambassador Abdul Amir al-Anbari entered the council chambers and received a letter containing the official cease-fire declaration.

A Feb. 28 truce declared by the U.S.-led allied coalition halted hostilities, but only the Security Council, which authorized the use of force to oust Iraq from Kuwait, could rescind the state of war.

The letter from council president Paul Norderdaeme, the Belgian ambassador, formally capped a war that began Jan. 17 with a blistering allied air campaign. The fighting concluded in late February, after a furious 100-hour land offensive that drove Iraqi troops out of Kuwait.

The allied forces lost something more than 200 lives in combat. Iraqi dead are estimated in the tens of thousands. Thousands more Iraqis have perished since in internal uprisings and in Saddam Hussein's suppression of them.

The letter to Iraq noted Iraq's acceptance of the council's terms and concluded, "the conditions ... have now been met and that the formal cease-fire ... is therefore now effective."

The council's cease-fire resolution, passed April 3, included stringent demands for the destruction of Iraq's chemical, biological and nuclear weapons and payment of war damages to Kuwait.

It set a 120-day timetable for steps to destroy the arms.

The ban on selling Iraq weapons of mass destruction and long-range ballistic missiles, and the technology to develop them, will remain in effect indefinitely.

By Aug. 1, a year minus a day after Iraq invaded Kuwait, the Security Council will review its ban on other arms sales to Iraq "taking into account Iraq's compliance with this resolution."

Lafayette Square complex ends first year of operation

By SIOBHAN MCCARTHY
News Writer

After just one year in business, Lafayette Square Townhomes still have a few kinks left to iron out, according to manager Christopher Matteo.

"I'm happy with it. After the first year of any business, you're always ironing out the bugs. We think we've got a pretty good handle on it," said Matteo.

Located just one mile southeast of the Notre Dame entrance on East Jefferson Boulevard, Lafayette Square Townhomes are available to all student members of the Notre Dame/Saint Mary's community.

Currently, 20 of 21 available units are being rented. "For next year, we are adding an additional 9 units. Of those (30), 28 are pre-leased," said Matteo.

Four and five bedroom units are available with a washer and dryer, dishwasher, central air, and patio in each facility. Maintenance service covers all but plumbing costs, he said.

■ Other complexes /page 9,10

Students pay for utility costs. A security system, which includes a front and back door motion detector as well as front and rear porch lights, is an option for each unit. Residents must pay extra for this option.

A security guard is also present during breaks to ensure safety, according to Matteo.

One major concern among Lafayette Square residents is the amount of available parking space. Only two spaces are allotted for each four and five bedroom unit.

Matteo initially promised residents that parking would become available as soon as "we acquired the (additional) houses" across the street. For a few months, student parking needs were appeased with the extra parking spaces.

However, construction is now underway for next year's additional apartments and parking has been expressly forbidden in these areas due to possible danger posed by construction, he said.

"Temporary parking has been taken away for safety. Eventually parking will become available again. It's going to depend on construction," said Matteo.

"Something desperately needs to be done. It's just too dangerous to be parking cars in the street," said resident Jen Salmon, a Notre Dame senior.

Senior Mark Budde also had qualms about the parking situation. "There are two spots available. There are five of us and we just so happen to have five cars," Budde said.

"My car was parked down the street and it was stolen," Budde said. He said he didn't think the thieves would have come into the the lighted Lafayette Square Complex to steal it, if there had been space available.

The only (additional) available spaces are on Eddie and Francis," said fourth year law student Kelly Gilchrist. She said she felt that these areas were dangerous and initially, poorly lit.

"I was really worried at first when they didn't have a light in the parking lot. It was pitch dark," said Gilchrist.

Matteo has since installed lights in these areas.

Despite Gilchrist's concerns for her safety, ND senior Beth Bolger said she feels very safe at Lafayette Square. "Security has been great because we paid for a security system. We had a false alarm once and the police were there within two minutes," she said.

Salmon agreed. "Our security system works fine," she said.

But third-year law student John Lake said he did not feel security at Lafayette Square was up to par, blaming the construction of the facilities for the problems. "The security is not the best. For three months we couldn't lock the deadbolt and our sliding door wouldn't close. It's just not very well built," Lake said.

"It's not very safe neighborhood," he added. "We've had numerous problems with vandalism."

Lake also said that he feels the insulation in the units was poorly installed, which has had an impact on the utility costs. This discrepancy presents a troublesome give-and-take situation for Lake, as he said "the rent is relatively low, but you have to pay utilities which winds up making it more expensive."

Salmon agreed that insulation is a problem at Lafayette Square. "There are definitely drafts," she said.

"(Utility costs) were higher than what we thought they were going to be," said Budde.

"All the insulation within the units has been inspected and approved in accordance with state and local building codes," according to Matteo. "I have not had any complaints about it all. Our gas-forced air heating

Demonstrators show no regrets

Abortion is a life and death situation. It is more than a topic open for discussion. And, according to the four Notre Dame students arrested last Friday for criminal trespassing at the Women's Pavilion, the pro-life movement is calling for action.

Junior Elsa Scheidler, sophomore Bill Keen and freshmen Katrina Hilton and Claire Johnson, all Notre Dame students, were among the more than 100 anti-abortion protestors arrested by police last Friday morning for blocking the entrance to patrons of the Women's Pavilion, 2010 Ironwood Circle, where abortion services are offered.

Plans for a protest began in October at a regular pro-life meeting held on campus. Friday's protest was organized by the Fort Wayne-based North East Indiana Rescue group.

Operation Rescue, as the group is called, is a passive organization that does not use physical or verbal violence as methods of protest. Non-cooperation with the police is encouraged as a means to buy time in preventing expectant mothers from entering the clinic.

Non-cooperation refers to the protesters' method of making their body limp when being arrested, thus lengthening the amount of time to complete the arrest.

"Our intention was to give mothers and babies another chance," Keen said, in reference to the protest that led to their arrest.

Women's Pavilion, according to the Notre Dame protestors, performs nearly ten abortions per day between the hours of 8

INSIDE COLUMN

Censorship is a sign of larger problems

"Help! Help! I'm being repressed." This infamous quote from Monty Python's 'Holy Grail' sums up the collective frustration of my bookstore team, Box the Compass, with the tyrannical Bookstore Basketball censorship committee. While I agree that obscene and overly abusive names should not be allowed, the censorship of the original name we submitted is emblematic of a serious attitude problem present at Notre Dame.

Michael Whitman
Accent Designer

'We Like Sex A Lot' is not obscene, offensive, or in anyway abusive. It is just a simple straightforward statement of fact. The only thing wrong is that it contains that awful three-letter word which, if the administration had its way, would be stricken from all the dictionaries on campus. Maybe if our name had been 'We Like Sex As Long It Is Only For Procreation And In The Context Of Marriage And Is In Compliance With Canon Law' it would not have been censored.

The denial of sex and sexuality is unhealthy (just read your Freud) yet the Administration seems bent on repressing all sexual expression. The result of this denial is evident in the predominantly impotent male-female relationships, the lack of recognition for alternative views of sexuality and the ever present yet unpublicized problem of rape. If the University would encourage students to expose their sexuality in the open instead of driving it underground, these problems could be dealt with in a healthy manner.

Furthermore, as long as I'm griping, the University's ban on sex is nothing short of ludicrous. Sex is a beautiful part of humanity's inherent nature and prohibiting it is analogous to forbidding the birds to sing and the bees to buzz. It is true that Notre Dame is a Catholic University and that students choose to come here knowing the University's rules. This does not mean, however, that they choose chastity. Yes, despite the administrations best efforts short of chastity belts, to control the student body, there are people at Notre Dame who have sex. (Or so I've heard.)

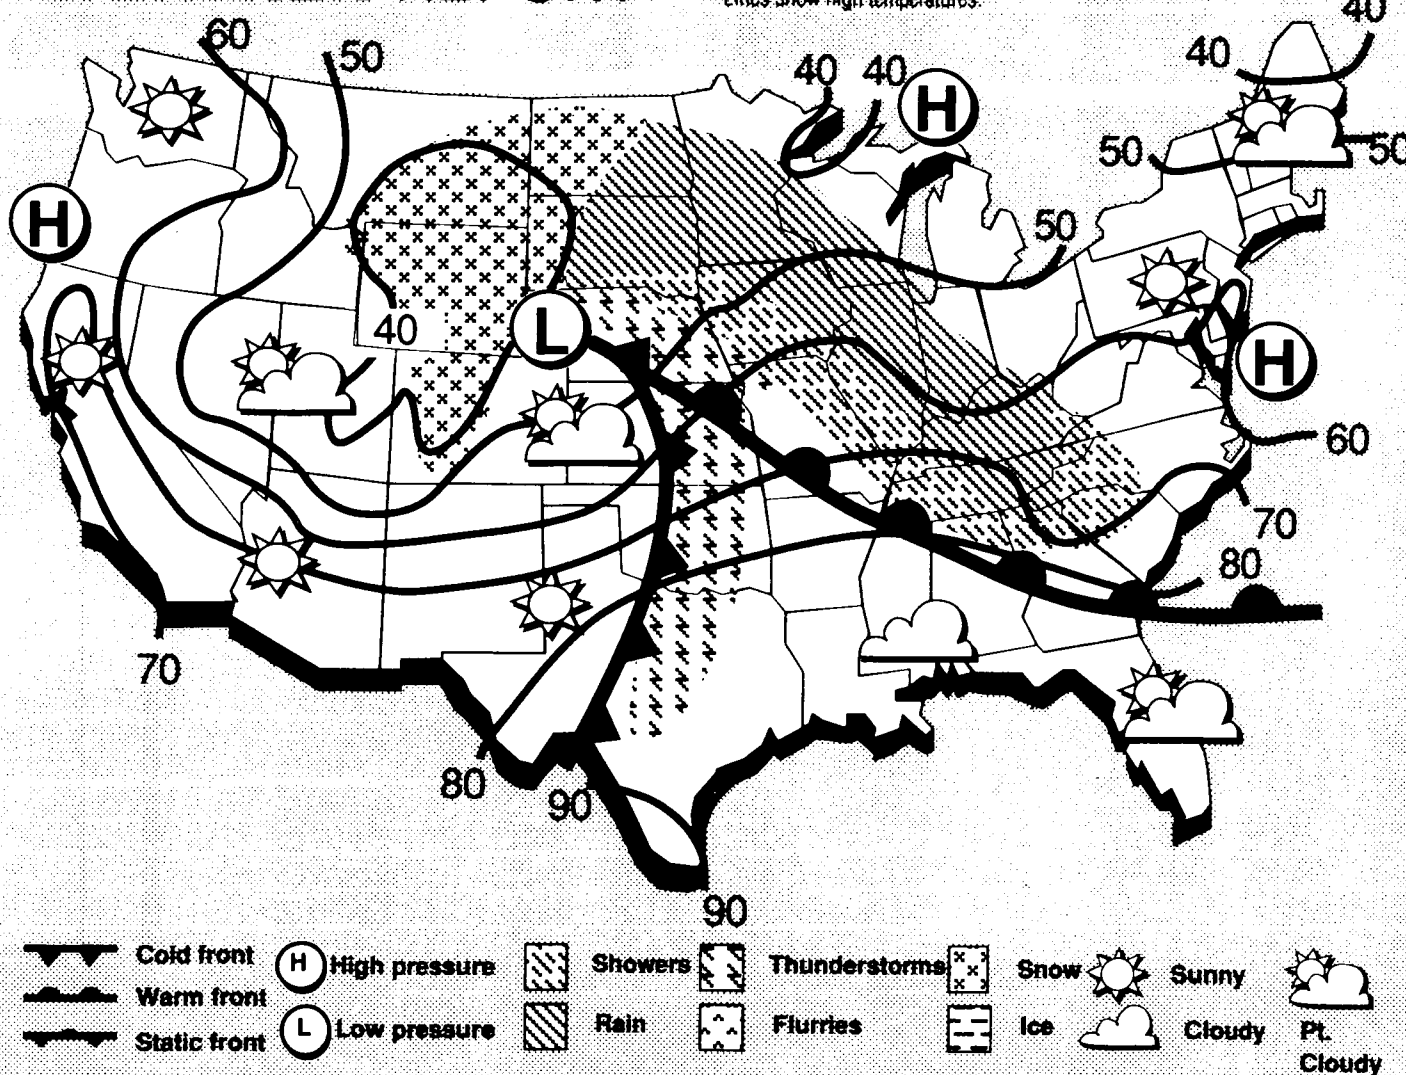

Even for those students who agree with Catholic doctrine regarding sex, the University's sexual prohibition is insulting. Chastity and all Catholic virtues are meaningful only if they are chosen, not imposed. Religious virtue which is not chosen is empty. Forced chastity has no more value than following the speed-limit. In order to choose the Catholic view of sexuality there must be a choice. There is no choice according to the Administration only repressive dogma.

In conclusion, I know that this column will not change anything. I am only writing it to articulate my frustration. The Administration's rate of change is similar that of the continental drift. But I've won a small battle. Despite Bookstore censorship, my team and I would like to declare that, 'WE LIKE SEX A LOT'.

The views expressed in the Inside Column are those of the author and not necessarily those of the Observer.

Fire strikes St. Peter's Basilica

■VATICAN CITY — A small fire in the sacristy of St. Peter's Basilica sent up a column of black smoke Thursday evening but caused no injuries or damage to relics in the nearby treasury, police and news reports said. The sacristy is in a domed wing of the basilica, connected to the main part of the church by a corridor. The treasury, an exhibit room for tourists, is in the same wing. It was closed for the day when the fire broke out. An Italian policeman said he was on duty in St. Peter's Square at 5:55 p.m. when he saw smoke coming from a second-floor window and called in an alarm. The fire burned for about 20 minutes before put it out, said the policeman, who declined to be identified by name.

Abdul denies backup singer's claims

■LOS ANGELES — Pop star Paula Abdul went on the offensive Thursday in the biggest musical flap since Milli Vanilli proved to be phony baloney, insisting the lead vocals on "Forever Your Girl" are forever hers. The singer-choreographer appeared at a Hollywood news conference to counter claims by backup singer Yvette Marine, who alleged in a Superior Court lawsuit she had "substantial participation" in some songs on the top-selling album. Miss Abdul explained the use of "guide tracks" in recording, a practice in which artists learn songs by listening to a demo by another person. Miss Marine's lawsuit claims the backup singer's guide tracks were used to strengthen Miss Abdul's voice. Virgin Records claims the vocals were left out.

Josephson emphasizes ethical decision-making

By CAROLINE CLARKE
Saint Mary's News Writer

Most people dial 911 in an emergency. Troubled businesses simply call Michael Josephson.

Josephson, founder of the non-profit Joseph and Edna Josephson Institute of Ethics, spoke at Saint Mary's Tuesday evening about the increasing need to improve people's ethical decision making skills. The institute is for public benefit and is an active organization emphasizing conduct, not theory.

A UCLA law graduate, Josephson spent 20 years as a law professor at Loyola Marymount University in Los Angeles. His ethics seminar is available to executives, governmental officials and interested individuals. A featured speaker for the IRS, NBC and CBS, he has made a great contribution to businesses.

His workshops have inspired a California law passed in 1990, making the attendance of all state legislature to Josephson's class mandatory.

Josephson stated that professional responsibility courses abound, yet an ethics course carries a negative connotation. Most people assume that such a course entails dogmatic teaching about what is right and wrong.

"Ethics is the courage to say you will play by groundrules," he noted. "Our standards are not our standards unless we do not uphold them. Character is how you act when you think no one is looking."

Numerous studies by the institute indicate record levels of cheating by all age groups. Josephson admitted that cheaters often do succeed in life. One of the prime motivations for cheaters is that they make things a moral imperative.

"They elevate the importance of their tasks," he said. "In many situations, people ask what can I do rather than what should I do. They want to see how much they can get away with."

Josephson defined an ethic as, "a value that the absence or presence of will lead to a moral judgement of a person. A value, on the other hand, is any core belief motivating our behavior."

He cautioned that all values are not in the moral values. If we subordinate ethical values to non-ethical values, we've given up any claims to ethics.

"Lies deprive another person of autonomy, robbing them of information to make a decision," he added.

Josephson targeted his speech to the students, recognizing them as the future businesspeople.

"A person must take courage and be willing to fail," he said. "It requires being a lot stronger than counterparts who may take the easy way out."

ND, Saint Mary's students to participate in Christmas in April

By KELLEY TUTHILL
Editor-in-Chief

Last Saturday, skilled laborers along with 60 Notre Dame students started the work that will undoubtedly make a difference in the lives of many South Bend residents.

This Saturday, approximately 2,700 volunteers from Saint Mary's and Notre Dame, along with volunteers from the community, will work hard to improve the St. Casimir's/Ford Street neighborhood through South Bend's third annual Christmas in April.

A major improvement from years before is that the Christmas in April committee will try to ensure that every volunteer has meaningful work to do, said Phil Johnson, assistant director of Security and committee chairman.

On Saturday morning each house captain has been instructed to assess the needs of the individual house and determine if there are too many volunteers. In this case, a house captain can offer to the volunteers the option of working elsewhere, including neighborhood improvement projects such as park clean-ups.

"We'd rather have them (the volunteers) reassigned than not have anything to do," Johnson said.

In the event of rain, Johnson said some adjustments may be in order. Depending on whether the rain is particularly heavy, some outside work, such as painting may be cancelled.

He asked that those planning on working outside be dressed appropriately in case of showers on Saturday. It may be necessary to send people home if the rain impairs the volunteers' ability to do work, he added.

Johnson said that volunteers who signed up prior to the deadline should have already received letters with specific assignments. With the large number of volunteers already signed up, he said additional volunteers are not needed.

Workers should meet at 7:45 a.m. in front of the Alumni/Senior Club. Coffee and donuts will be available for all volunteers. In addition, lunch will be served at each work site.

At the end of the day, all involved with the project are invited to attend a celebration at the West Side Democratic Club, 617 South Warren Street.

Johnson said the work that has already been done in the Saint Casimir's/Ford Street neighborhood is tremendous. "The great number of volunteers is really heartening."

Gray: Church and state beome more intertwined

BY KEVIN GRUBEN
News Writer

Rev. Donald Gray, canon of Westminster Abbey, last night discussed today's relationship between the Church and politics in Great Britain.

Gray, who is the chaplain to Queen Elizabeth II, received his degree in theology from the University of London. Before moving to Westminster Abbey, Gray did ecumenical work in parishes in England's northern provinces.

Gray began his lecture by stating that the topic of the interaction between religion and politics is similarly as sensitive in England as it is in the United States. He pointed out that the recent Gulf War has once again brought up the fact that the two are intertwined in one another.

"Intercessions such as those made by political leaders such as George Bush during the war have become more and more common," he stated.

He continued by giving a brief history of the relationship between the state and the Church in England since the time of the establishment of the Anglican Church until the present. Gray said that recently there has been a sharp decline in the number of those who have been attending Anglican services.

In actuality, although there are more members of the Anglican Church, Gray said the Roman Catholic Church has a larger percentage of attendants in England.

Despite this decline in Anglican attendance, he said there have been recent movements within the government to gain more power. The Worship-Doctrine Measure, which was passed in the 1970's gave the Church a great deal of power over its own affairs, something it has not always had in the past.

Gray said, however, that this drive towards power independent of the state by the Church has not gone unchecked by conservatives in the British Parliament. As Gray pointed out, "Vigorous backlash was led by Margaret Thatcher herself."

He went on to cite two examples of the tension between Christianity and conservatism in English politics. He first talked about a document entitled the "Faith in the City Report" which was issued by the Church in 1985 and which received much opposition from conservatives in government.

The report discussed certain changes that should be made by the Church, including better employment of the clergy, better distribution in funds, improvements in education and an increase in size of its urban programs. Conservatives were wary of the report, which showed an increase in the initiative of the Church.

The second example Gray brought up was that of the Falkland Islands War of 1982. After the end of the war, Robert Runcie, the Archbishop of Canterbury, was asked to make a speech at a Thanksgiving service at the Parliament. Runcie, a staunch proponent of the establishment of the Church in the English government, was critical of the conservatism which was present in Parliament in his speech.

The tension between the English government and the Church still exists today.

"I hope we can hold it (the establishment) in trust so that we can share it with our other Christian brothers and sisters someday," Gray ended.

The lecture by Gray was sponsored by the theology department.

Holtz: Positive attitude is key

By PETER LOFTUS
Assistant News Editor

Overcoming both adversity and doubts about self-image as well as having a sense of purpose are essential to motivation and leadership, said Notre Dame head football coach Lou Holtz.

Holtz, who in 1988 employed such methods to coach his team to an undefeated record and a national championship, last night told a packed Hayes-Healy auditorium that a positive attitude is the key to success.

"Leadership is nothing more than having a sense of purpose," said Holtz, "having a basic confidence in what you're doing."

In spite of his self-professed inferior intelligence, Holtz displayed a remarkable knack for lecturing, holding the audience's attention with humorous anecdotes about his players, colleagues and family members. And though it was sponsored by the Management Club and management department, his message was in no way directed only to business students.

To illustrate his point about attitude, Holtz noted that in 1976 he signed a promising 5-year coaching contract with the NFL's New York Jets, a job which "should have been the epitome of happiness." However, because he went into the job with an unstable attitude, he only lasted 8 months before he left the team.

By contrast, Holtz's coaching stint with the University of Minnesota in the early 1980s was marked with success and happiness, mainly because of a positive attitude, he said.

"(My coaching career at) Minnesota was one of the most rewarding things I've ever done," said Holtz.

In answering his own question, "If the key to leadership and motivation is as simple as having the right attitude, why doesn't everyone have one?" Holtz cited three reasons:

•Adversity: "In the next 12 months, everyone will have at least three crises," said Holtz, underscoring his point that since everyone faces adversity, it can't be used as an excuse for not having attitude.

Holtz listed several moments of adversity in his life, including his parents' divorce, the loss of his own college sweetheart and, of course, adversity in football.

The ND alumni provide a constant source of adversity for Holtz, he said jokingly. In his first year, they demanded that he field a "competitive team." He did so, but then they demanded that he win. He did the following season, but then the alumni told him to win all his games. He did so again, but then he was told "to win by a lot."

To stress the importance of fundamentals, Holtz instructed his listeners to practice the same timing drill, involving clapping hands, that he uses with his players.

Adversity is a part of life, said Holtz, and its importance lie in each person's ability to react favorably to it. He added that adversity should not prevent a person from taking chances in life, saying that to be average was less than desirable.

"To be average, to me, is nothing," said Holtz. "I'd rather fail 20 times than not try at all. You have to take chances."

•A lost sense of purpose: "When you set your goals, remember: WIN," said Holtz, referring to his anagram for "What's Important Now."

"Too many people lose their sense of purpose in life," said Holtz. He recalled his preparations for the 1988 national championship game against West Virginia in the Sunkist Fiesta Bowl. The month preceding the game was divided into various sections, each of which focused on academics, football, Christmas with the family and finally on building a sense of family within the team.

"As a football team, we want to educate and graduate our players and win," said Holtz.

Holtz also told his listeners, many of whom were business students, that they must focus and capitalize on people's needs, using the success of fast-food chains like McDonald's and Domino's as illustrations.

"I like strawberries," Holtz said, but he doesn't use them as bait when fishing.

•Low self-image: "Ninety-five percent of the people in this world do not believe in themselves," said Holtz. "You can't be good if you don't have a good self-image."

He listed three rules for maintaining a positive self-image: do right, do the best you can and follow Jesus Christ's Golden Rule. One can follow these guidelines by answering three corresponding questions: "Can I trust you?", "Are you committed to excellence?" and "Do you care about me?"

Concerning trust, Holtz touched on the recent NCAA allegations against his conduct as coach at Minnesota.

He explained that he paid for a former athlete's correspondence course, and felt justified since the student had no intention of playing football for Holtz. He also lent money to a recruit whose wallet was stolen, admitting it was "the dumbest thing I ever did," but also adding that "I felt I'd done the right thing."

Holtz was cleared of all allegations by the NCAA rulings committee last month.

Holtz also touched upon student support for ND basketball coach Digger Phelps. He said that students are obliged to support their coaches, and that it is up to the administration to determine who coaches.

Dean Winicur leaves ND post without regret

By PAUL PEARSON
Associate News Editor

Daniel Winicur, dean of administration and registrar at the University of Notre Dame, said he will leave Notre Dame with no regrets.

Winicur announced Thursday he will resign both positions June 30 to join Franklin College in Franklin, Ind., as vice-president for academic affairs and dean of the college.

"I learned how to work with all kinds of different people," at ND, Winicur said. "That's something I will take with me forever."

Winicur said that his job at Franklin will be very similar to that of University Provost Timothy O'Meara, whom he called "a good model."

According to Winicur, the main difference between Franklin and ND is their different emphases. "Notre Dame considers itself a premiere national Catholic research facility. Franklin has made a commitment to quality teaching and counseling of undergraduates."

Winicur considers the introduction of Direct Access Registration by Telephone (DART) his greatest success at ND.

While he said he has achieved everything he set out to do at ND, Winicur believes that the University should continue working on making student information available to all departments in the University. "It's getting there, but it's going slow," he said.

Winicur's wife, Sandra, will remain at Indiana University - South Bend as chairwoman of the biology department for the time being. "She still has one year left on her term."

Dean of administration since 1985, Winicur first joined the ND faculty in 1970 as an assistant professor in the chemistry department. Prior to his appointment as registrar in 1983, he served as assistant dean of the College of Science for four years. He also served as a research scientist in ND's Radiation Laboratory.

Winicur plans to remain at ND through Commencement next month, but will take June off to prepare for the move to Franklin, which is approximately 20 miles south of Indianapolis.

Robert Gentile, Assistant Secretary for Fossil Energy of the U.S. Department of Energy lectured on conservation and energy efficiency Thursday. Gentile urged the development of new technologies.

Gentile: U.S. finds 'equilibrium' between energy and environmental concerns

By BECKY RITZERT
News Writer

Never in history has both energy and the environment ranked so high on the United States' agenda of concerns, according to Robert Gentile, Assistant Secretary for Fossil Energy of the U. S. Department of Energy.

"Recent world events have certainly brought energy back to the center stage," said Gentile. But he added that, "the conflict in the Middle East was about much more than oil."

"We live today in a world that's found a new sense of environmental conscience," stated Gentile. "Membership in environmental groups far exceeds membership in political parties."

The United States is finally achieving a much needed "equilibrium" between energy concerns and environmental concerns, according to Gentile.

"For too many years, the pendulum has swung from one issue to another," said Gentile. "Every time we turned from one to the other, we lost our sense of balance," he added.

President Bush set up a "National Energy Strategy" about two months ago which, according to Gentile, is a step toward a national energy policy.

"The National Energy Strategy tries to impress upon the American people that we can neither conserve nor produce our way out of this dilemma. We must do both," said Gentile.

Gentile pointed out that much has already been done in the way of conservation.

"Today in the U. S. we consume the same amount of energy that we consumed in 1973," said Gentile. This is in spite of an increase in the number of homes as well as in the Gross National Product.

"That is an incredible feat in conservation," said Gentile. He added that no such accomplishment has been achieved anywhere else in the world.

Further conservation and energy efficiency depends upon advanced technologies which are currently being developed, said Gentile. But he said that until these technologies are ready for implementation, we will continue to rely on fossil fuels to meet our energy needs.

"It is a myth that we can't tackle problems such as acid rain and still use fossil fuels," said Gentile.

Gentile offered the example of "fluidized bed combustion" of coal, which is now replacing the pulverized coal technique which has been in use for more than seventy years.

"It's unique in that the clean-up occurs as you burn the coal," said Gentile. "The pollutants are converted back to a more useful resource," he said.

The $5 billion Clean Coal Technology Program is the government's largest single energy and environmental initiative.

There is just as much effort going into the development of energy technology as there is going to the defense technology which the American people witnessed during the recent war coverage, said Gentile.

"It is important for us to transport the new technologies to the third world," added Gentile. If we fail to do so, according to Gentile, we hurt ourselves as well as the other countries.

"We are a tremendously energy rich nation," concluded Gentile, but our greatest resource is "the innovation."

P.I.M.E. MISSIONARIES

Fulfilling one's life through a missionary vocation

The Pontifical Institute for Foreign Missions (the PIME Missionaries) is an international community of Catholic priests and laymen who make a lifelong commitment to continuing the mission of Jesus Christ in the modern world. We live the Gospel in Bangladesh, Brazil, Hong Kong, India, Japan, Myanmar, Papua New Guinea, Philippines, Taiwan, Thailand and West Africa among the poor and unchurched. Founded in Italy in 1850, a group of diocesan priests, at the encouragement of their bishops, grew in their understanding of just precisely what God was calling them to be. A missionary must be open to dialogue, prayer and selfless service, especially to the poor. The missionary must learn how to be a sign of shared faith between well established European and American local churches and peoples where the Church is just beginning. The missionary must know how to announce the Kingdom of God while being a force for transformation of those societal values which do not build up that Kingdom.

If you are a young man between 18 and 35, in good health and spirits, excited to live your faith in the missionary way described above, send in or call for information today.

Kurdish rebels ambush Iraqi forces in Northern Iraq

KORE, Iraq (AP) — Kurdish rebels on Thursday ambushed Iraqi troops trying to punch deeper into the mountains of northern Iraq, killing at least 12 soldiers and knocking out two tanks and an armored personnel carrier.

The rebels said two guerrillas were killed.

The attack by Saddam Hussein's forces came less than 24 hours after Washington announced it had warned the Baghdad government over the weekend not to launch an armed actions against Kurdish areas.

Rebel commanders said their success against the Iraqi troops was made easier because the army had not used its deadly helicopter gunships. The U.S. warning specifically forebade the use of military aircraft.

Meanwhile, Baghdad extended an amnesty offer for some rebels, but the mass exodus of the Kurdish population continued. Scores of refugees, particularly babies and old people, are dying daily from exposure, malnutrition and disease.

In a mountain pass leading to Iran, during one of the frequent violent storms, mothers wrapped babies and small children tightly in blankets to protect them from a lashing by hail. They plodded up the steep road, drenched to the skin.

At the ambush scene — a natural line of defense formed by a steep line of low rocky mountains — reporters counted 12 bodies of Iraqi soldiers on the road next to the damaged armor. Two wounded soldiers lay on the ground, groaning in pain.

"Damn Saddam for causing this!" said one of the Iraqis, his face half covered in blood.

"I did not fire a shot. The officers made me do it," moaned the other.

The rebels said they would evacuate the wounded as soon as they could find transport.

They said rebels firing from the ridges above killed more Iraqi soldiers who tried to advance along the road in a three-pronged attack at dawn.

When reporters arrived a few hours later, the craggy ridges on either side of the road continued to reverberate with cannon fire and the crash of exploding shells.

The army kept up intermittent shelling against the rebel-held mountaintops, but the shells were off target and harmlessly kicked up puffs of smoke.

Jubilant turban-clad guerrillas flashed victory signs as they walked amid the corpses and the damaged tanks, paying no attention to the enemy fire.

This was the second army attack repulsed by the rebels at the same spot.

Reporters counted eight dead soldiers and one tank and two APCs knocked out in a rebel ambush the previous day.

The twin rebel successes underscored the vulnerability of the army when it tries to venture into the Kurdish mountain hinterland.

The ambush scene is next to Kore, a village about three miles from the summer resort town of Salahuddin, the last of the lowland Kurdish main cities regained by the army from the rebels on Sunday.

In London, Hoshiyar Zebari, a spokesman for the Kurdistan Democratic Party, maintained the Iraqis were continuing to use gunships against the rebels around Salahuddin and Zakho, farther north near the Turkish border. There was no independent verification of his charge.

Salahuddin is about 15 miles northeast of Erbil and is within the area north of the 36th parallel where U.S. officials warned Iraqis not to interfere with refugees and efforts to aid the fleeing Kurds.

Many of those fleeing were skeptical that the Bush administration's warning to Iraq will provide them with any real protection.

"We don't trust Bush's words any more," said one refugee in Diana, a town at the bottom of the Haj Omran pass leading to Iran's border.

"We cannot trust Saddam after what he has done to our people. We want safety for our children," said one refugee mother.

Iraq, trying to win back the Kurds' confidence, said a general amnesty will be extended by a week for people inside Iraq and two weeks for those outside, according to a statement by the official Iraqi News Agency monitored in Cyprus.

The amnesty, offered this month and due to expire Friday, was for everyone who took part in the rebellion except "for acts of murder, rape, or theft which took place under the conditions of the incidents of rioting and treachery."

INA said the deadline was extended because of difficulties in communication and "the obstacles created by the aggression in the northern region of the country."

During a reporter's journey along the pass Wednesday and Thursday, it was jammed with hundreds of thousands of refugees. Some estimates put as high as a half-million.

A solid line of tens of thousands of families on foot continued their trek toward Iran, undeterred by mountain storms.

Refugees complain that no foreign refugee aid dropped in the border region reached the people in the pass.

One man said 18 people died in his small section of the road the previous day.

P.E. Women discuss background differences

By DANNIKA SIMPSON
News Writer

Culture and experience met at Pasquerilla East last night as women of different ethnic backgrounds discussed their experiences in America and at Notre Dame.

"P.E. Women Around the World" was organized by the Multicultural Committee of Pasquerilla East and Year of Women to help students understand what it is like to be a minority at Notre Dame.

All of the women who spoke agreed that people need to accept the differences that exist among cultures and make an effort to meet people from different backgrounds.

Paulita Llopis and Vanessa Prado, students from El Salvador, feel people should try to meet those from other countries. Llopis said, "This world is becoming more global... You can be friends with any and everybody. It makes you grow so much."

Adanna Fails, an African-American student, said that people need to respect the fact that everyone is not the same.

Some students felt Notre Dame students do not make an effort to learn about different cultures.

Maria Santos, a Filipino-American and one of the organizers of the event, said, "Many people at Notre Dame do not show an interest in learning about who I am... I just wish there was more education about diversity in this world." She also said that the only people she can truly identify with are other Asian-Americans.

Chomroth Un echoed Santos' thoughts saying, "I have not found one single person who can understand me totally."

She also said some people think "something is wrong" with her because she holds different opinions on things such as dating and drinking. Un also said, "I think they (Notre Dame students) should be more open-minded."

Some students said that coming to Notre Dame has helped them to recognize their heritage. Many of them said they did not feel connected with their particular ethnic group while growing up.

Valli Vairavan, an Indian-American, said she did not feel different until she was an adolescent. She also said her family started an "ad hoc" demonstration to promote peace when Indira Ghandi was killed. She said this is when she felt connected to her Indian culture.

Fails, who attended a predominantly white schools said, "Coming here has given me a different perspective on life."

Santos said she has learned more about herself by just living around people of so many different backgrounds.

Other students said they had taken their background for granted before coming to Notre Dame but now they want to share their culture with others.

Loan Tong, Vietnamese-American said she wants to take advantage of her background when she moves into the workforce.

Anita Verdugo, a Mexican-American and co-organizer of the event, said "I want to share (my Mexican-American heritage) with others, but I almost feel that I don't know enough of it."

Technology applied to ethics

Special to The Observer

Preston Covey and Robert Cavalier, developers of Project THEORIA, will present an educational program that applies computer and video technology to the study of ethics Thursday, April 18.

THEORIA stands for Testing Hypotheses in Ethics/Ethetics: Exploring the roles of Observation, Rationality, Imagination and Affect. The project was developed at Carnegie Mellon University at the Center for Design of Educational Computing. It uses technology to immerse the user in controversial case studies.

Two case studies will be featured in the Notre Dame presentation. In "A Right to Die? The Case of Dax Cowart," the videodisc presents the famous case of Dax Cowart, a victim of severe burns, blindness and crippling injuries who persists under treatment to insist that he be allowed to die.

Through interviews with Cowart and other principles in his case (his doctors, lawyer, mother, etc.), the user investigates basic ethical issues regarding quality of life, autonomy and competence. Throughout the case, the user must address the central dilemma—whether Dax should be granted his request to die and why.

The second case is "Art of Forgery? The Case of Han Van Meegeren." This videodisc makes resources from museums and libraries around the world accessible to the user.

The program is set up as a detective story in the context of a real art world scandal that occurred at the end of World War II.

The user must examine and weigh the evidence to determine whether a given painting is in fact an original Vermeer, as claimed by the art experts, or a forgery, as claimed by Van Meegeren.

The presentation will be from 2 to 4 p.m. in the University of Notre Dame's ETS Theater, located in the basement of the Center for Continuing Education.

The event is sponsored by the Office of University Computing Services and The College of Arts and Letters as part of the Technology for Academia series.

Abortion

a.m. and noon. Through the efforts of the group, it was confirmed that they prevented three abortions from occurring last Friday. It was also confirmed that only one abortion actually took place on Friday.

These are results that please the protestors for "20 percent of those turned away from a clinic do not return," said Johnson.

Keen stated he is "confident that we did save a life."

The students arrested emphasized their belief that in abortions "women are the victims...they are being exploited...it's a matter of money."

Keen cited cases of false abortions where the patient was not pregnant and the abortions were still performed. The group also stated that an abortion can be performed through the ninth month of pregnancy.

The student protestors said Operation Rescue, in an attempt to gain cooperation of the police, notified the authorities of Friday's protest. Consequently, the group was met and arrests began about an hour into the protest.

Over 100 anti-abortion protestors were immediately processed by having their pictures and finger prints taken, said Scheidler. All protestors withheld their names and the group was kept together, she added.

"Withholding our names had a two-fold purpose," said Scheidler, "it identified us with the nameless victims of abortion and it enabled us to use our anonymity as a bargaining chip with the prosecutor's office."

At first the prosecutor's office charged protestors with criminal trespassing and with resisting arrest and demanded an excessive bond, according to the group. The clinic's demands delayed processing until Monday.

Details of the demands presented to the group by the clinic were unavailable at press time, but the clinic does have the right to file a civil suit against the protestors.

The students and other protestors were released Tuesday after giving their names, accepting probation that prohibits them from being on clinic property (for four months) and consenting to pay fees from their five day jail stay plus court costs.

Protestors also had to "agree not to disagree that they had trespassed," said the group.

"This does not imply that we are guilty...we aren't," Johnson said.

Scheidler offered an analogy that Operation Rescue uses in defending the group's "not guilty" plea.

"If you see a child in a house burning, you are willing to trespass into that house to save the child and it is not considered breaking the law," said Scheidler.

In response to their five-day jail stay in the National Guard Armory, Keen said "...a five day jail sentence is nothing in comparison to the death sentence of an aborted child."

"Moral neutrality doesn't exist...it can't," Hilton added.

"If this [protest] offends, perhaps our action will move other students to make a choice, a true choice for life or death," stated Scheidler. "It is better to take a stand either way than to remain indifferent and apathetic."

For Scheidler, Hilton and Keen such a protest was a first-time experience for them. Johnson, however, has been on five over the past year and this weekend marked her sixth protest and her sixth arrest, as well.

If asked if they would protest in such a manner again, each student replied that they would. The group hopes that more of the student body will participate.

"If even only one-twentieth of the student body at Notre Dame had participated, the arrests would never have occurred," said Johnson. The number would have been too great for police to handle, she added.

"It was one of the best things I have ever done," Keen said.

Keen reminds students that "Notre Dame and Saint Mary's are dedicated to the memory of Mary, the mother of God. Mary was an unwed teen...imagine if she had had an abortion."

Baker presents Israeli Middle East peace proposal to Syria's Assad

DAMASCUS, Syria (AP) — Secretary of State James Baker III brought Israel's proposal for a regional peace conference to Syria today after drawing a positive response from Egypt.

Baker arrived here this afternoon and headed directly to a meeting with Tunisian Foreign Minister Al-habib Ben Yahia before a scheduled session with Syrian President Hafez Assad.

Baker briefed the Saudi foreign minister, Prince Saud al-Faisal, on the proposal in a meeting at a downtown Cairo hotel that lasted 2 1/2-hours, an hour longer than scheduled.

"Fine" was the only comment an unsmiling Baker would make as he left the early morning meeting for Cairo International Airport to fly to Damascus.

"Any instrument that can lead us to a peaceful solution I'm sure Egypt is willing to support," Egyptian Foreign Minister Esmat Abdel-Meguid said Wednesday night after Baker outlined the Israeli plan.

Even separately, Saudi Arabia and Syria could push the proposal along or stop it dead.

Baker will wind up his pulse-taking among Arab nations Friday in Geneva when he sees Jordanian Foreign Minister Taher al-Masri.

The Israeli proposal calls for a regional meeting of Arabs, Israelis and Palestinians under U.S. auspices.

Baker immediately called for Soviet co-sponsorship, provided Moscow establishes full diplomatic relations with Israel after a 24-year break.

Also the talks, in the U.S. view, would be based on Israel's trading territory for peace.

Despite a skeptical reaction from the semiofficial Egyptian press, Abdel-Meguid said "this is an idea that is very interesting. We will certainly discuss that very seriously, with an open mind."

The statement after Baker had met for 90 minutes with Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak and Abdel-Meguid gave U.S. diplomacy a measure of momentum as the Bush administration tries to set up peace talks.

Baker called the discussion "fruitful and useful." However, he also told reporters that "the problems we are addressing are extremely difficult, they are intractable, they are of very long standing."

Before Baker flew to Cairo from Jerusalem the Egyptian press indicated Mubarak might confront Baker with a five-point plan of his own calling for Israel to relinquish land in order to gain Arab acceptance of its existence.

Other provisions in Mubarak's plan included a halt to new Israeli housing construction on the West Bank and in Gaza and the establishment of a Palestinian state.

The Egyptian leader did not rule out the regional peace conference proposed by the Israeli government — provided it was to lead to an international conference.

Israel's plan would have the conference held under U.S. auspices, preferably in Washington. Palestinians would attend in a mixed delegation with Jordan, but not members of the Palestine Liberation Organization.

pay a percentage of its oil revenues into a U.N.-administered fund to repay damage claims against Iraq made by other countries, their citizens or corporations.

Iraq capitulated in a 23-page Iraqi communique received last Saturday at U.N. Headquarters. The letter complains at great length about the "iniquitous" resolution, calling it a U.S.-Israeli plot. But it concludes by saying Baghdad "has no choice but to accept this resolution."

Noterdaeme's reply did not remark on the Iraqi complaints. It said only that their letter "contains official notification of the acceptance, irrevocable and without qualifying conditions, by Iraq of resolution 687 (1991), in accordance with paragraph 33 of that resolution."

Changes in the text of the letter recommended by legal experts from various U.N. Missions had delayed the official cease-fire declaration for days.

The council was expected shortly to approve a list of national contingents on a 1,440-member observer unit that will monitor the Iraq-Kuwait border.

The contingent was to include, for the first time, the five permanent members of the Security Council — the United States, Britain, China, France and the Soviet Union. The peacekeeping operation is expected to cost $123 million for the first year.

Cabin boy lone survivor of ferry fire

LEGHORN, Italy (AP) — A cabin boy was the only known survivor from a ferry that burst into flames after colliding with an oil tanker in thick fog, port authorities said today. At least 139 people were missing and feared dead.

"There's little hope of finding survivors at this point," a Civil Defense spokesman told Italian radio after Wednesday night's collision some 2 1/2 miles off this northwestern port.

The tanker also caught fire after the 10:30 p.m. collision, but all 28 of its crew members were reported safe. Port officials said the tanker's crew jumped into lifeboats after fighting the flames without success.

Rescue workers said the sea was covered by huge sheet of flame after the collision. Initial reports said the impact had opened a hole in the side of the tanker, spreading oil into the sea.

Civil Defense and port authorities said 72 passengers and 67 crew members of the 6,187-ton ferry were missing. All were believed to be Italian.

The ferry, Moby Prince, had just left Leghorn for Olbia, Sardinia, and the tanker, the AGIP Abruzzo, was at anchor, port authority chief Sergio Albanese told state-run RAI-TV. The tanker is owned by the Italian oil company AGIP.

As dawn broke and helicopters were sent up, rescue workers reported that the fire aboard the tanker was dying out but the ferry was destroyed and there was no sign of life in the water.

The cabin boy, who jumped into the water, was taken to a Leghorn hospital. Officials said he was in a state of shock but without serious injuries.

"All the cabin boy could say was they (the other people aboard) all burned, he's convinced there's no hope," said Albanese.

The Moby Prince is a roll-on-roll-off ferry with doors at the bow and stern.

Campus View caters to students' specific needs

By MEREDITH McCULLOUGH
News Writer

Within walking distance of both Notre Dame and Saint Mary's, the Campus View apartment complex offers housing that caters specifically to the needs of college students.

For the past fifteen years, all of the residents leasing Campus View's 96 units during the academic year have attended one of the colleges in South Bend, according to Dorene Muszer, secretary and rental agent at Campus View.

Students are drawn to these apartments for a number of reasons, the most common being the location. "It's the closest," said Jeannie Sabin of Saint Mary's.

While agreeing that the complex's location is convenient,

Tom Bowes, who has lived at Campus View for two years, said he chose the apartments because it "seemed like a really fun place to live."

Claudia Limardo, a senior at Notre Dame, added that the fact that the apartments are furnished and utilities are included in the rent was an incentive for her to lease a Campus View unit.

"It's not that great to look at, but it's run pretty well," said Sabin of the complex. "The management is really nice. They're concerned and know all of us."

The management shares this view. "We (the management) get along well with them (the residents) and they get along well with us," added Muszer.

Although Campus View may be known for its many parties,

Castle Point Apartments not restricted to student patrons

By MEREDITH MCCULLOUGH
News Writer

Since its opening 15 years ago, Castle Point Apartments has served the Notre Dame/Saint Mary's student, faculty and staff with pride, according to Cynthia Scholar of the complex's marketing department.

Located on the north-east side of South Bend at 18011 Cleveland Rd., Castle Point Apartments does not restrict itself solely to University tenants.

Only five percent of the residents are students, Scholar explained. The rest of the occupants include families with children and other South Bend inhabitants.

Although the concentration of students at Castle Point is small, Scholar said that conflicts sometimes occur, like when students have a party and try to "fit 200 people on an 8'10" balcony."

For the most part students and other residents live in "peaceful co-existence," said Scholar, because they realize that it's "all part of apartment living."

Jack Bentz, a Notre Dame senior, discovered Castle Point during his search for off-campus housing last year. He said he was impressed by the inside and outside attractiveness of the apartments, as well as the overall atmosphere of the place.

"It's quiet," he said. "You can have parties if you want, but it is also possible to have quiet." Also, according to Bentz, Castle Point offers more privacy than is available in the dorms.

Residents have access to the complex's clubhouse, comprised of racquetball, tennis, indoor and outdoor basketball courts, a sauna, and a weight-room. "My roommates and I use the basketball courts an awful lot," said Bentz.

On Thursday nights, the clubhouse becomes the center of activity by hosting a "happy hour" of drinks, popcorn, and dancing. Scholar said that she would rather see students "whoop it up where they're not going to bother anyone, and can relax and enjoy themselves."

While security and parking seem to be the main concerns of students living off campus, both Bentz and Scholar expressed satisfaction for the apartment's current policies dealing with these issues.

Though we "can't guarantee that nothing will happen, we have taken precautions," explained Scholar.

Security at Castle Point consists of a single entrance at an attended gate, a 24-hour security guard with a hand-held cellular radio, a patrol car, emergency access to the maintenance department, and a fence on the east, west, and north sides of the building.

To be admitted onto the grounds, a car must have a sticker on a window or know the name and apartment number of a guest. After 11 p.m. a visitor must call up to the apartment to be let in through the gate. These forms of security act as a deterrent system, according to Scholar.

Bentz, who has never had any problems with security, said he was pleased with the system. He said, he "felt the dorms were safe and secure— it's that way here too."

Scholar said there are usually no problems concerning parking either. Every one-bedroom apartment is allowed up to two vehicles and every three-bedroom apartment can have up to three vehicles.

Also, a covered carport is available for $17 extra a month.

"There is plenty of room to park," said Bentz. He said that sometimes at night he has to park around the back, but even that is not a long walk.

Leasing at Castle Point works out very well for student living, according to Scholar. Apartments are leased for six months, and then are continued on a month to month basis.

Residents have a choice of eight different floor plans. The Moritz and the Matterhorn, which have two bedrooms, two and a half bathrooms and a loft are the most popular designs and the most difficult to attain.

Since these spacious apartments are often more difficult to find, Scholar said that some students lease right through the summer just to ensure keeping a larger apartment.

Included with the rent is water sewage and trash removal. Electricity must be obtained by the tenant, although a budget plan is available upon request.

Scholar said that since Castle Point has been around for such a long time, it is familiar with the needs of its residents. She said that the complex is proud of the work it has done and feels it gives "more apartment and more lifestyle for the dollar."

Bentz agreed. "It's like a real home; it's your own place," he said.

reduces electric bills," he added.

Lake also said the appliances in his unit are not always functional. "We have had a lot of repairs—washer and dryer, dishwasher, even our telephone is bad," he said.

Matteo defended Lafayette Square, saying, "several tenants have said that they really enjoyed it and were glad they had the opportunity to live there." He said that tenants were thankful for the large size of the units, the washer and dryer within each unit, as well as the proximity to the campus and nearby convenience and grocery stores.

"I've really enjoyed it here. It's very spacious compared to campus view," said Bolger.

Salmon said she enjoyed the fact "that we are the first tenants. The places inside look nice. Minor cosmetic problems always happen when you're the first tenant." Salmon added that she enjoyed the Lafayette Square community and found it to be the "perfect size" for an apartment complex.

Salmon added, "There are a lot of pluses to Lafayette Square. The big plus is that each tenant can have his/her own room and still pay $10 less than at Turtle Creek."

"We have had a few problems with plumbing," said Salmon. "There is really very little offered in maintenance at Lafayette Square," she said. Salmon attributed this to the fact that the management did not live on the premises.

Because of this, Salmon said, "we've had to deal with (maintenance problems) ourselves."

Gilchrist said she has many complaints about the quality of the townhomes in their first year. "The apartments are super cheap. The stairs leading to the basement are just boards. One of them broke. There is one coat of paint in the basement and the plywood is showing through," she said.

She cited problems with paint, air-conditioning, and appliances in the units. "The walls are painted in the cheapest paint... There is a difference of 15 degrees from the basement to the top floor... The washer and dryer were broken," Gilchrist said.

"The doors are on crooked. Some friends in our complex had to cut the bottom of a door so it would close," she claimed.

Gilchrist said she does not feel she is getting her money's worth at Lafayette Square. "We're paying $950 a month for the bedrooms. It's not worth it at all."

Budde also expressed concern with the general structure of the facilities. "I don't want to knock his (Matteo) apartments, but there are definitely problems with the maintenance," Budde added.

But Budde remains optimistic about living in Lafayette Square. "The little problems don't really bother us. We're just glad to be off-campus."

There's all kinds of room," he said.

"We feel it is still cheaper than living on-campus," he said.

Budde also praised the social aspects of living in Lafayette Square. "We have some of the best parties here," he said.

Matteo said that in spite of the problems voiced by students, he feels that the complex is making strides to make positive changes. "You start out with a program, and if things work, you keep with it. We've taken the time to clarify certain (lease) rules and responsibilities," said Matteo.

"There's a period of time when you discover glitches. At this time ... we're putting railings along porches. At the end of the year we'll go through and rehabilitate the units—repaint, clean, screen," he said.

Matteo graduated from Notre Dame in 1988, at which time he "realized that there was need for more (off-campus) student housing," he said. Matteo drew upon previous construction experience when taking advantage of the opportunity in South Bend. Matteo had been president of the Taripp Corporation, a private construction company, since age 17.

Matteo sold out his interest in the Taripp Corporation in 1989, then bought the land and built Lafayette Square Townhomes. Although he has since sold his ownership, he remains manager of the complex.

Turtle Creek apartment complex lures faculty and students for over 20 years

By SIOBHAN MCCARTHY
News Writer

Turtle Creek apartments have been a popular off-campus housing choice among the Notre Dame/Saint Mary's faculty and student community for more than twenty years.

Manager Claire Meyers hopes this tradition won't change.

Located just northeast of both schools at 1710 Turtle Creek Drive, Turtle Creek is a little more than a ten-minute walk for residents, which Meyers says students and faculty find convenient and safe.

Studio, one and two-bedroom, as well as townhouse apartment sizes are available within a price range of $375 to $515 per month. Costs are reasonable, according to resident and ND graduate student Jay Hosler.

"Rent went up only seven dollars this year," he said.

Water, sewage and trash removal costs are included in the monthly rent payments. Residents pay for their own electric and phone bills.

Turtle Creek also features a 24-hour maintenance service hot-line.

Hosler said he finds the service quick and dependable. When his screen door lock was broken, Turtle Creek maintenance responded immediately, he said, and "fixed it in a day."

Corinne Pavlis, a Saint Mary's senior, said she finds the service equally dependable. When she had plumbing problems, the landlord came on a Sunday night with a repairman.

She added that she has needed fewer repairs living in Turtle Creek than she did when she lived in Campus View last year.

Laundry facilities are located in a clubhouse with a television, lounge and an area to study. The laundry facilities are "very safe," said Pavlis, again comparing Turtle Creek with her former residence.

"At Campus View, laundry was just sitting out in the open," she said. "You can't get attacked in our (Turtle Creek) laundry room. Here it's part of the main office," where intruders can easily be seen.

Hosler said he found the location of the washers and dryers to be "an inconvenience," but said he "could live with it."

Security is often a concern of off-campus students, but Meyers assures residents that Turtle Creek is a safe complex. "We're in a real good part of South Bend," she said.

Resident Benjamin Phillips agreed. "The security hasn't been that bad," said the Notre Dame senior.

However, Pavlis said that she feels that the community, and not a particular complex, is responsible for the security problem off-campus. "I was attacked on my way back from aerobics at 8 p.m. on a Monday night," Pavlis said.

"I don't think it's safe, but it's not the fault of Turtle Creek," she said. "South Bend isn't the safest community. Not all of it is dangerous, but some parts are and I think that students need to face that."

Parking concerns are also on the minds of off-campus students, and Turtle Creek offers students a combination of guaranteed and open parking.

Residents are guaranteed one spot per apartment in a designated carport area, and there are also plenty of other spaces available nearby, according to Meyers. Parking spaces are also roped off during football season, ensuring residents that fans will not take over parking spots, Hosler said.

Hosler, Pavlis and Phillips all found the facilities to be well-built and well-maintained. Pavlis attributed this to the fact that Turtle Creek serves a more adult community, including both faculty and students.

"People around here are a lot more respectful of each other," than at other complexes, she said. "They're just considerate."

Parties at Turtle Creek are allowed, Meyers said, but if the office receives a complaint about noise a warning letter is sent out to the resident the next day.

If a resident is cited for a loud party a second time, he/she will be evicted, she said.

Hosler said he hasn't had any problems with the noise at Turtle Creek. "It doesn't bother me," he said, "It just makes me more jealous than angry when other people are having a good time."

Phillips agreed. "We've had no problems at all," he said. The management has been "pretty cool" about parties, he added.

Pavlis added that she felt the community at Turtle Creek was very "homelike...The landlady even sends out a monthly newsletter with recipes in it and everything. We love her."

Campus

Limardo said, "They're pretty good about it as long as you keep the noise down and make sure no one gets out of control. Because you live with students no one really complains."

Muszer added, "We've been around a long time and have learned how to handle (party) situations."

As a means of security, Campus View has hired a roaming guard to watch over the apartments and residents. This precaution is "for the students' welfare," said Muszer.

Security is always around, according to Sabin. She said that at night the guard rattles the doors to make sure they are locked. Also, the management tries to put all of the women on the second floor.

Sabin said that once she and her three roommates were bothered by a "peeping Tom," but security took care of the problem.

As for parking, Muszer said "there is enough for everybody."

Limardo agreed. "It's a little difficult on football weekends, but even then it's not that bad at all."

A number of facilities are available for the students' recreational enjoyment. The complex provides a heated pool, a jacuzzi, a weight room and tennis, volleyball and basketball courts. The facilities are "really nice to have during the warmer weather," said Bowes.

Campus View also provides a maintenance service which has received high acclaim by residents. "They are out there that day or the next," said Bowes. "They're really good about it."

Sabin, who has experienced unusual problems concerning earthworms finding their way into her apartment and a broken hot water heater, reported that "repairs are done pretty quick... usually that day."

The complex offers either a two-bedroom apartment (for two, three or four people) or a one-bedroom apartment (for one or two people).

Two-bedroom apartments are leased for nine months, from the weekend before classes begin to graduation time, while one-bedroom apartments are leased for twelve months. During the summer, a short-term lease for two-bedrooms is available to all, whether students or not.

With a prime location and other features which are attractive to students, Campus View has been an important source of off-campus housing. "It's the perfect college apartment," said Limardo.

The Observer is the independent newspaper published by the students of the University of Notre Dame du Lac and Saint Mary's College. It does not necessarily reflect the policies of the administration of either institution. The news is reported as accurately and objectively as possible. Unsigned editorials represent the opinion of the majority of the Editor-in-Chief, Managing Editor, Sports Editor, News Editor, Viewpoint Editor, Accent Editor, Photo Editor, and Saint Mary's Editor. Commentaries, letters and Inside Column present the views of the authors. Column space is available to all members of the community and the free expression of varying opinions on campus through letters is encouraged.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Special issue is offensive

Dear Editor:

For the past three years, the ignorance and apathy that permeates this campus has never ceased to amaze me. That is...until now. Recent events here at Notre Dame have proven to me that just because a person has mastered the realm of academia does not necessarily mean that he or she possesses any common sense. For those of you who may not be familiar with what common sense is, allow me to explain—or, better yet, let me give you an example of what it is not: the choices made by The Observer Staff.

In its recent April Fool's Day publication, The Observer staff showed a definite lack of sensitivity and judgment in a picture that it chose to print on page four. This photograph illustrated a white police officer exerting a choke-hold on a black male. I find it appalling that, in light of recent events in Los Angeles involving the brutal beating of a black motorist by several white police officers, The Observer would choose to use a picture of violence in South Africa to fulfill their need to joke about future SUDS raids.

This April Fool's Day edition went on to further insult such groups as SUFR, the Gay/Lesbian group, and the women of Notre Dame/Saint Mary's. I don't think that there was one article that failed to smear the group SUFR and belittle their concerns. Needless to say, the "Year of Women-Schedule of Events" featured in the edition was extremely sexist and male-chauvinistic.

Even though all of this was supposed to be a joke, it didn't take much to discern the underlying bigotry, racism, and prejudice that was present. It is more than obvious that many of the students here at Notre Dame don't appreciate or welcome the presence of some (or all) of these groups on campus. But they are here, and they deserve the same respect and opportunity to share in 'the great Notre Dame experience' as anyone else. Now, don't get me wrong; I have an excellent sense of humor. However, I failed to find any amusement concerning these topics. When The Observer was unable to find true humor, they resorted to race, homosexuality, and gender in order to buy cheap laughter. Through this insult and degradation, The Observer merely sent struggling groups here at Notre Dame two steps back after their one step forward. They also encourage the administration, with its apparent lack of genuine concern, to not take these people seriously.

So, go ahead, make fun of Digger and du Lac, for both of them have been here since the beginning of time and will remain here until Notre Dame fails to exist. And be sure to continue to criticize Ricky Watters, for, just like Rocket, he will soon be rid of this place, making money that you only dreamed of.

Therefore, I suggest that The Observer staff recognize the responsibility that they have as students of this university and use better judgment in its future publications. And this is not censorship, it's merely a matter of using common sense.

Professors support dialogue

Dear Editor:

We are deeply concerned about the issues of racism and cultural diversity on the Notre Dame campus. We believe that the student coalition known as SUFR (Students United For Respect) has provided the University community with an important opportunity for a discussion of these pressing issues.

The existence of any and all forms of racism runs counter to the mission of the University just as cultural diversity serves to fulfill that mission. Therefore, we urge the University to work with SUFR and the rest of the University community and to take clear, strong, visible steps to address the issues they raise.

Commissioning ceremony at graduation

Dear Editor:

Last year a task force of seniors met with Mary Ann Roemer at the Center for Social Concerns to begin a new tradition here at Notre Dame. The group's goal was to organize a "commissioning ceremony" for all graduating seniors who had made the decision to devote a year or more to volunteer work. This goal became a reality and the first ceremony took place last year's graduation weekend.

Many of the seniors who participated in last year's ceremony commented that it added a special dimension to graduation weekend. Some also commented that the ceremony calmed their parents' anxieties about their decision to volunteer. Overall, the event proved to be a great success.

A committee of students has been meeting regularly to plan this year's commissioning ceremony. As previously mentioned, this ceremony is open to all graduating seniors who are volunteering after graduation. Please register at the Center for Social Concerns as soon as possible so that you and your family can participate in the volunteer send-off ceremony.

Brave act praised by onlookers

Dear Editor:

On Monday night, April 8, we witnessed an act of bravery unparalleled in our lifetimes. A 5'10" male, wearing tan shorts and a blue polo shirt, proceeded to retrieve an ailing basketball from the clutches of the Gruesome Grace Hall Goose, which was unrightfully defending its nested young. The nerve of such a foul creature! In an act of rage the goose let out a thundering battle cry (quack) and spread its wings in an act of defiance.

Seeing his sole chance for survival, a slim one at that, our fearless hero sprung to action. Hurling the ball at the savage beast, he delivered a severe blow to the "antagonist." Sweet victory was his! We need more courageous men like this warrior to fight off the advancements of the animal kingdom into humankind's legitimate domain. This man should definitely go down in history among the ranks of the Founding Fathers of this great nation.

P.S. Oh brave conqueror, could you muster up enough fight in you to free this campus of the wild squirrel infestation?

Experience S

Try a taste of Hawaii

By MELISSA COMER

Escape to the land of pineapple, tropical drinks, colorful floral shirts, leis, and women in long grass skirts gracefully swaying their hips without ever leaving South Bend. Discover the beauty and the culture of Hawaii without travelling any further than South Dining Hall. Now, is that an offer or what?

That is exactly the opportunity that the Notre Dame Hawaiian Club is offering the people of South Bend as they sponsor the 1991 annual luau this Saturday night. A chance to experience the culture of Hawaii, the luau features authentic and homemade Hawaiian food, traditional and modern Hawaiian dance, free leis, and live entertainment.

In celebration of the Year of Women, this year's theme for the luau is "He Inoa No Wahine," meaning "In the Name of Woman." The entertainment for the evening celebrates various women in Hawaiian history.

The evening is scheduled to begin with the sharing of a traditional Hawaiian meal, a meal which includes everything from Kalua Pig to chocolate cake. At this all-you-can-eat feast, poi, a Hawaiian staple made from taro root, and Haupia, a coconut dessert, will be served as part of the midwestern introduction to the Hawaiian culture. For the less adventurous palate, there will also be chicken teriyaki, rice, and of course, pineapple.

In addition to all the food, the luau will feature Hula, the portrayal of ancient Hawaiian songs through dance. Two different forms of Hula will be performed, both the traditional Kahiko and the more modern, Auwana. Members of the Hawaiian Club will perform all of the dances, but audience participation is welcome during certain dances for those who care to truly experience for themselves a bit of the Hawaiian culture.

"Basically, the purpose of the luau is to bring a taste of authentic Hawaiian culture to the people of Notre Dame and South Bend," said co-chairperson, Bernard Nunies. The 25 active club members help bring a part of their culture to South Bend by making it a little more like the culturally diverse atmosphere that they are accustomed to in Hawaii.

Preparing all of the food and performing all of the dances themselves, the members make Hawaiian culture come alive through the luau. "The luau is the culmination of all of the activities in the Hawaiian Club. Everything leads to this event," explained Nunies.

The Hawaiian clubs at the University of Wisconsin at Madison, Marquette University, Purdue University, and perhaps Northwestern University are expected to be present to share in the luau with the members of the South Bend community.

The luau begins at 7:00 p.m. in South Dining Hall on Saturday, April 13. Tickets are on sale at the LaFortune Information Desk for $5. Experience a taste of Hawaii.

While people often refer to "the luck of the Irish" when speaking of the Notre Dame football team, it seems that this same good fortune is also shared by other members of the Notre Dame community.

Such is the case with the Snite Museum of Art which will exhibit seventy-eight drawings from the Reilly Collection beginning on April 14. The collection is made possible through the generosity of John Reilly, a member of the Class of 1963.

The museums' chief curator, Stephen Spiro, explains that he first became acquainted with Reilly six years ago while Reilly was on a tour of the museum.

"At the time Mr. Reilly expressed interest in purchasing a painting for the museum in remembrance of his mother who had passed away," said Spiro.

Soon afterwards Reilly inquired about the possibility of forming a collection. The museum received such an opportunity when a collection of fine works of Italian and French origin, belonging to a private collector who had died, were offered to the museum on the condition that it found a benefactor to purchase it. Spiro contacted Reilly and the Reilly Collection began.

"Study of a Ballet Dancer" by Edgar Degas is one of the 78 drawings featured in the collection donated by John Reilly, a 1963 graduate of ND. The works will be on display at the Snite beginning Sunday.

Since that time, the collection has grown to 235 works representing major 19th century artists such as Girodet, Pissarro, and Degas and having French, Italian, German, and English origins.

Spiro believes the 78 drawings that will be shown at the Snite will change the misconception that many people have of drawings as simply black and white sketches. "The drawings range from highly finished works to sketches," stated Spiro. "They are done using a variety of mediums and styles."

The collection continues to grow, filling in gaps or expanding into new areas, under the direction of both Spiro and Mary Frisk, the assistant curator. As an example of this expansion, Spiro points to a piece done by William Blake which was recently acquired from an English art dealer.

Spiro is quick to point out that this continually growing collection would not be possible without the support of Reilly. "The museum itself could not afford to put together such a collection on its own; we simply do not have the budget to do it. We are fortunate to have someone like Mr. Reilly who shows such an interest in these fine works."

Soar with dance of the ages

By MONICA TSETHLIKAI
Accent Writer

"When a gifted people are given no place in the present, they dream of the past, they scheme for the future, and for the moment, dance the dances that have sustained their people for generations. They dance resolutely, persistently, passionately, and for a while the participants rise above the earth and the odds," says Thomas E. Mails.

The dance of this passionate present which rises above the present will be exemplified in a "Pow Wow" sponsored by the Native American Student Organization at Stepan Center on this Sunday from 12:00 to 7:00 p.m.

A Pow Wow is a gathering of people to celebrate Native American dances and social customs. Native Americans dress in the outfits that are traditional for their tribes and participate in tribal dancing.

The dancers are accompanied by one or more "Drums," which are composed of several singers, who rhythmically beat a drum (the actual instrument) as they sing. The dancers dance in a circle with the Drums in the center. The circle is representative of the Sacred Hoop, the symbol of life. While many other civilizations think of life as a straight line, Native Americans view life as a circle.

Another integral part of the Pow Wow is the giveaway. Gift giving is symbolic of Native American culture. Rather than hoarding one's wealth, it is considered more enjoyable to share it. In such a way the Pow Wow gives Native Americans the chance to reflect on and celebrate their heritage.

The songs and chants of the Pow Wow each have a significant meaning. Originally, songs were sung in the language of the singers; however, as more tribes came together, the use of vocables came about. Vocables are words considered only as a combination of certain sounds without regard to meaning.

The vocables allowed singers of various languages to sing together. They also allow those tribes who have lost their native language the chance to sing in the old way. Songs are still sung in the native tongue of many tribes, but Pow Wows usually consist of songs sung in vocables due to the many different tribes who come to the celebration.

One of the most important songs is the Flag song. It is sung at the beginning of each Pow Wow by the host Drum. The Flag song is equivalent to the National Anthem, therefore, it is required that everyone stand for it.

Each Pow Wow dance is lead by the "Head Dancers," one female and one male. The Head Dancers start each song and lead the rest of the dancers throughout the Pow Wow. It is a high honor to be selected as a Head Dancer. They must know all of the songs and the appropriate dances that accompany these songs.

There is also a "Head Veteran Dancer" who has been distinguished in combat and has the honor of carrying the Indian Flag at the front of the procession of dancers during Grand Entry.

The dancing is started with the "Grand Entry," a procession of all the dancers present. The Head Dancers lead followed by Native American Royalty and then the rest of the dancers arranged according to age. This procession is designed to show respect for elders and leaders.

The names of each of the variety of dances will be announced prior to their performances by the M.C. One of the most enjoyable dances is the Rabbit Dance, or Two-Step. The Rabbit Dance is a dance in which everyone can participate. The women choose their partners and it used to be that if the man refused he had to pay a penalty to the rejected asker.

During the dance the couples hold hands as they are lead by the Head Dancers through a number of intricate maneuvers. Although these moves may be a bit intimidating, the main purpose is to have fun.

Notre Dame's Pow Wow will also feature performances by the Black Hawk Dance Troupe, children dancers from age 12 to 18. They will perform some South West dances. They are an added feature to this year's Pow Wow and offer an opportunity to partake in a unique experience.

There will also be Native American arts and crafts traders presenting their goods. Everything from turquoise and silver jewelry to beaded barrettes and necklaces will be offered for sale. Whether buying or browsing, everyone can admire the intricate handiwork of the artists.

From singing and dancing to arts and crafts, the Pow Wow offers an excellent opportunity to experience Native American culture firsthand.

Look for a patch of blue above the snowline

In his autobiography, "God, Country, Notre Dame," Father Hesburgh wrote of Cardinal Carter, the primate of Canada. As an auxiliary bishop, Carter was asked to write the Canadian Bishops Commission's Response to Paul VI's encyclical, "Humanae Vitae," which took a very conservative line on artificial birth control.

"Basically, the Canadian response was that Catholics ought to read and seriously consider what the Holy Father had to say; but if after reading the encyclical they felt they could not, in conscience, follow it, they should not feel that they were less Christian or that they could not receive the sacraments. That was a far-out position for many bishops outside of Canada."

Carter told Father Hesburgh that not long after that, when he went to Rome to see the Pope, he was really expecting to be called down on his outspoken article. "When he and the pontiff were alone, he decided to broach the subject rather than sit there wondering when the Pope would. 'Holy Father, I suppose you were rather upset by that statement on "Humanae Vitae" that I prepared for the Canadian hierarchy?'"

"No, I was not upset at all, Paul VI responded. 'I said what I had to say as Pope and you said what you felt you had to say as pastors to your own people. I take it that you respect me and are not upset by what I had to say as Pope and I respect you and am not upset by what you had to say as pastors to your people.'"

Father Robert Griffin

Letters to a Lonely God

On rainy mornings, I look for a patch of blue in the sky which leads me to hope for a change in the weather. Paul's response to the statement on birth control offers hope, like a patch of blue sky, that in the Church with strict rules love, compassion, sympathy, and understanding exist in abundance in the climes above the snow-line.

Priests who hear confessions understand that mercy is required of them when sinners enter the box to ask for absolution. The confessor who throws the book at a penitent shouldn't expect to see that penitent soon again. Tough love in the home may be just what the doctor ordered; tough love in the confessional may be about as wise as throwing a hand grenade at a cripple, because the priest has no way of knowing how his tough love will be perceived.

I realize that the Pope had no intention of setting pastors at odds with the official teachers, or of opening gaps that would look to highly permissive Catholics like the freedom trail; yet it helps to know that Catholics who sharply dissent with the official morality can be allowed-in the privacy of their own lives-to follow their consciences.

One must take care, I suppose, as a teacher, not to upstage the Church's magisterium in a public way, as though one's dissent with the magisterium could be offered as caviar to the general.

Paul VI told the Cardinal, "I said what I had to say as Pope. You said what you felt you had to say as pastors." May I shyly suggest there is an analogy here which could help Catholics at this University feel a little bit less like non-persons? Imagine Notre Dame telling Cardinal Ratzinger: "As a defender of the Faith, you've said what you had to say to Catholic homosexuals. Now the campus ministers at Our Lady's school would like to say what they need to say to gay students at Notre Dame, trying to save their souls as Catholics."

Notre Dame has just launched a committee to formulate an official opinion on smoking. I expect that when the committee makes its final report, smokers will lose their right to exist. If that happens, they will survive, if necessary, in the underground. If, as an adult consenting to my own demise, I should smoke alone, or with another, in the privacy of my bedroom, should it be anybody's business but my own?

If the University can take time out to lay down guidelines for smokers, couldn't it also take time out to find ways of being more supportive of gays? Twenty years ago, gay students asked, for the first time, for campus ministers to recognize their presence on campus.

After talking with gays for nearly two decades, I finally heard, I think-with the help of Bill Storey- what the gays were saying. It sounded something like this, "The negative stereotypes of gays that Notre Dame reflects back to gays is killing us. A very large percentage of teenage suicides occur among gays who have been taught to hate themselves as freaks and sickies. If the only place we can find acceptance is in the gay bars in the fast lane of the cities, death will take some of us while we're still young."

In honesty, gays sound more upbeat about themselves, and less maudlin than this. Like the rest of us, they are people needing people with whom they can be friends.

Storey talks about high school students who become aware of their orientation at adolescence. They wait for high school to be over so that they can escape the ugly jokes that they have to suffer in silence. Coming to Notre Dame, where wisdom should prevail, they soon discover the scene, for them, is a lot like high school. That's when some of them start to get the look of pain in their eyes from the pain they feel inside every day.

Notre Dame is not in business to sponsor a civil rights movement for gays. Gays didn't come to Notre Dame to hold shootouts with the Administration demanding their rights. Why, when older gays try to help young gays, do pastorally-concerned people attempt to poison the well?

"Don't come out of the closet to anyone who isn't a professional." Isn't that cruel advice, coming from a Christian? Isn't it wicked to tell a student that he shouldn't even trust the members of his own minority group? Gays come to Notre Dame, looking for a chance to grow up beautiful; if all our advice to them is negative, we cut them off at the pass.

All I am saying is, "Give gays a chance." Certainly they deserve as much consideration as the students who are offended by smoking. Maybe Father Malloy should appoint a task force on the Christian education of the gay minority.

In helping students who find themselves taking the less-travelled road, Notre Dame can only go part of the way with them; but Notre Dame doesn't walk any of its graduates through life's big decisions. We shouldn't allow gays to leave here believing themselves to be children of the lesser gods- believing that the Catholic Church considers them to be the bad seed.

Gays, for centuries, have been the Church's throwaway children. Couldn't a University that is sensitive toward its gays talk to the bishops who talk to Rome about the pastoral problems of gays whom it would be a sin to alienate?

Ministry takes place on many levels; maybe there are times the underlings who serve on the grass-roots level should offer their insights to the top bananas in charge of the flock.

Come watch 5 Guys Who Aren't Afraid to Bear Tutus in Their Game!
Basketball play in their 2nd game!
Today, 4:45 pm, Stepan. Oh, by the way, do not taunt Dante. He may get angry.

Here's what Guy "McDago" DiDinato of the TUTUS says to his opponents today:
"We will taunt you with our tantalizing tutus 'til tomorrow.
Moreover, I'll score a lot."

Here's what Kelley "Blackeye"
Cook, star molester of the Tutus, has to say about his performance against the chicks Monday:
"I guess their center couldn't resist the charm of my tutu. She just grabbed me and pulled my head up under her toga. She said she had to foul me, but I know what she really wanted. Who knows where my head will go today."

Here's what Dante "Air" Diamante, star cartwheeler of the TUTUS, has to say about controlling the boards:
"If I had a nickel for every rebound I got, I'd have, oh, approximately $1.25. Then I could go out and buy some tranquilizers. Do not taunt
Dante Diamante."

Here's what Ron "Hot Buns" Bielski, ham of the Tutus, has to say about Monday's game:
"I scored for the first time at Notre Dame. Lick it."

Here's what Little Peter, ultra-stud of the TUTUS, has to say about his team name's omission from The Observer's 10 best Bookstore team names:
"You're jealous, you dorks of the Sports department. You wish you weren't afraid to wear a tutu while playing basketball, but you're chicken. That's all right, no one reads the Sports page anyway. Go News."

Campbell, Mitchell lead Wolves to victory over Hawks

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Tony Campbell scored 27 points and Sam Mitchell added 25 as Minnesota beat Atlanta 112-98 Thursday night for its first back-to-back victories since January.

Spud Webb scored 23 points and Glenn Rivers 19 for Atlanta, while Dominique Wilkins scored 14 points — 12 below his average — on 4-for-17 shooting.

Campbell, Tyrone Corbin and Pooh Richardson ignited a 12-4 run with four points each that put Minnesota up 73-61 with 4:54 remaining in the third.

Trailing 91-75, Atlanta rallied with a 9-2 run, but the Hawks got no closer than 104-97 with 2:43 left on a 3-pointer by Rivers.

Bucks 111, Celtics 92

MILWAUKEE — Fred Roberts scored 26 points and Frank Brickowski added 22 as Milwaukee beat Boston 111-92 to tie Detroit for the Eastern Conference's No. 3 playoff spot.

The Celtics played without Larry Bird, who was out with back spasms. Kevin McHale scored 16 points and Brian Shaw 15.

Milwaukee's Adrian Dantley moved past Elgin Baylor into ninth place on the NBA's career scoring list. Dantley scored five points, giving him 23,152 for his 14-year career.

Boston got within seven points in the third quarter before Milwaukee's Jay Humphries scored nine of his 17 points in the fourth quarter to give the Bucks an 11-point lead. They led by as many as 18 early in the final period.

Lakers 110, Jazz 95

INGLEWOOD, Calif. — Magic Johnson scored 31 points, 12 in the fourth quarter, and reserve guard Terry Teagle added 20 as Los Angeles won its sixth straight game.

Utah used a 15-2 surge late in the third quarter to cut a 15-point deficit to two. But Johnson made five straight free throws at the start of the final period, giving Los Angeles a 78-69 lead with 10:45 remaining. The Jazz got no closer than six points the rest of the way.

Johnson made all 18 of his free throws and added 11 assists as he moved within 23 of Oscar Robertson's NBA record of 9,887 assists. Karl Malone had 21 points to lead the Jazz in scoring for the 13th time in 14 games.

Kings 104, Magic 96

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — Travis Mays scored 20 points and the Sacramento Kings blocked a franchise-record 16 shots to beat Orlando for their fifth straight home win.

Duane Causwell had 18 points and 4 blocked shots as the Kings broke their previous team of 15 blocks set Jan. 19, 1989 against the New York Knicks.

The Kings had 11 blocked shots in the first half.

Lionel Simmons had 19 points and 12 rebounds for the Kings as Sacramento improved to 22-16 at home and 23-53 overall, matching last season's victory total despite a record-tying 34 straight road losses. Scott Skiles had 21 points for the Magic.

Warriors 111, Rockets 99

Irish will see Big Red as lacrosse team hosts Cornell

By DAVE McMAHON

Associate Sports Editor

The Notre Dame lacrosse team hopes for continued improvement Saturday when the Irish (4-4) host 14th-ranked Cornell (5-2) at 2 p.m. in Moose Krause Stadium.

The Irish are coming off their best performance of the year, a 15-11 win over Division III Denison College. The Big Red, on the other hand, have encountered some difficulty in their last two outings. After winning their first five matches, all played on their home turf, Cornell, ranked as high as seventh while undefeated, has lost two straight. But there are no major problems plaguing the Big Red—only a difficult schedule that has presented Ivy League powers Yale and Penn in their last two games.

Notre Dame, which was having problems with consistency until last Saturday's game against Denison, will need to erase that performance and play yet another solid game in order to shut down Cornell.

Pat Finn

"They don't really change that much year-to-year in terms of the things they like to do," said third-year Irish coach Kevin Corrigan. "They execute well and that makes them hard to play. They don't outsmart you with what they do, but they out-execute you."

But Corrigan believes his squad is more prepared than ever to play their best game of the season.

"Out focus this week has been on playing the situations that they put you in with their picks and cutters," said Corrigan. "Fundamentals become paramount to beat a team like Cornell."

The force behind their consistent game plan is Cornell coach Richie Moran, who sports a 228-68 record in his 23rd season with the Big Red. Cornell owns three national championships and under Moran, no Cornell team has produced a non-winning season.

Irish junior attackman Mike Sullivan tied his own Irish record last week with nine points against Denison. Sullivan leads the Irish offensively with 19 goals and 17 assists. Sophomore midfielder Brian Mayglothling, who carries a .348 shooting percentage into tomorrow's game, has 16 goals, followed by junior attackman Brian Schirf with 15. Senior midfielder John Capano has scrapped his way to 58 ground balls on the season, tops for Notre Dame. Senior defenseman Pete Gillin follows with 39.

For the second time in as many games, sophomore Pat Finn will start in goal for the Irish, replacing Chris Parent, who started the first seven games.

"I have confidence that they both can do the job," said Corrigan.

Cornell, which scored eight goals in the fourth quarter last year to beat the Irish 14-8, has a balanced offensive attack, similar to those of past Irish opponents Loyola and Villanova.

Attackman John Snow leads the Big Red offense with 12 goals and 15 assists, followed by Steve Gray and John Busse with 14 goals each. Defensively, the Big Red plays an up-tempo, pressure game.

The Irish are aware that Cornell has many scoring threats and will take advantage of their mistakes.

"Offensively they do a good job of sharing the ball," said Corrigan. "They run a motion offense where they pick and cut an awful lot. All six guys on the offensive end of the field are in constant motion."

Although the Irish are playing a nationally-ranked opponent, don't expect them to be hesitant in implementing their game plan.

Women's track competes in first Dogwood Relays

By JENNIFER MARTEN
Sports Writer

The women's track team is venturing into new territory again this weekend. This time, they make their first trip to the annual Dogwood Relays in Knoxville, Tennessee.

The two-day meet will showcase the talents of some of the top teams from the South.

For the Irish, the runners to watch will be the freshmen. Latrice Waters, a Knoxville native, will represent the Irish in the 100 yard dash. Other freshmen to watch will be Ashea Price running the 200 meter dash and Kristin Stovall running the 400.

In the distance events, senior Jenny Ledwick, junior Diane Bradley, and sophomore Lisa Gorski will all be counted on to turn in strong performances. Ledwick placed third in the 3000 meter event last weekend. Bradley and Gorski finished fifth and sixth respectively in the 1500.

Sophomore Karen Harris will represent the Irish in the shot put, the javelin, and the discus events after a very strong showing at the meet last weekend.

Women's tennis looks to rebound

By RICH SZABO
Sports Writer

The top competition in the country is what the Notre Dame women's tennis team has faced all year, and as the team closes out the 1991 spring season, their final weekend will be no different.

Having already played 10 teams ranked or receiving votes in the current top-25 poll, the Irish (15-8) close out the year traveling east to Knoxville to challenge 13th-ranked Tennessee and Wake Forest.

Last weekend, the Irish dropped two heartbreaking contests, both by 5-4 scores, to BYU and Utah, who are ranked ahead of ND. Earlier this week, the Irish bounced back from the losses to defeat Western Michigan by a 5-1 count, in preparation for their final two contests of the season.

"We really could have won both the BYU and Utah matches," said Irish coach Jay Louderback. "All the matches were very close, and we have to win some of the tight ones. We played well at Western Michigan, but the match was tougher than the score indicated as three of the matches went three sets."

The Irish have compiled an admirable 15-8 record against some of the best teams in the country. All of the losses came against teams in the top-25 or close to cracking it. The newest rankings, out this week, have the Irish at 24th, dropping down one spot. Individually, first-singles player Tracy Barton fell from 35th to 39th, and Melissa Harris dropped from 42nd to 47th. The first doubles tandem of Barton and Christy Faustmann dropped from 15th to 19th.

Even with the recent losses and drops in the rankings, the Irish will have a chance to prove themselves one last time this weekend. Tennessee is a strong contender to make the NCAA tournament, and Wake Forest, like Notre Dame, is a team on the bubble. Strong showings this week could help both the team and Barton and Harris as individuals.

Said Barton, "We were so close in Utah that we have to keep a positive attitude. It would be great if we could win these two matches. This year has been hard. We've had a much tougher schedule, and it is easy to get overwhelmed. Every match turns out to be tough."

"The injuries have hurt," continued Barton. "I've had a sore arm, Katie (Clark) is out with back problems, and Christy (Faustmann) had mono. We have never really had everyone at full strength at the same time. It would have been interesting to see how the season would have been had everyone been healthy."

The Irish play Tennessee on Friday and then take on Wake Forest on Saturday. Both matches are at the University of Tennessee.

Once the season is over, the Irish can look back at their accomplishments and wait until late April to see if they will make the NCAA tournament field.

Louderback said, "We played extremely well against BYU and Utah. If we can play like we did then, we'll have a shot at winning both matches. It would be nice to finish this season on a strong note."

Detroit doubleheader next challenge for softball team

By JIM VOGL
Sports Writer

Women's Notre Dame softball coach Brian Boulac anticipates very competitive action in his team's double header this Saturday in Detroit.

The Lady Titans enter the contest with a 16-10 record and are among the top contenders to win the Midwestern Collegiate Conference.

"To me, Detroit is the team to beat in the conference," said Boulac.

The Irish hope to extend their lead in the series with Detroit, which stands at 3-2 after a pair of pivotal 1-0 victories last season.

Last season, Notre Dame broke the Lady Titans' streak of three MCC crowns, as Detroit placed third behind the Irish. This season, the Irish are 6-0 in MCC action, while Detroit has yet to play a conference game.

The Lady Titans return seven letter-winners from last year's 33-18 squad, led by two of last year's All-MCC players—junior third baseman Stefanie Hayes and senior outfielder Jaqui Pitts. Pitts leads the MCC with 18 stolen bases in 24 games. Junior first baseman Debbie Halukowicz tops the MCC in both batting average (.408) and RBI (18).

The pitching staff is lead by junior Teresa Emery, who boasts a 9-5 record and a 2.03 ERA and impressed Boulac with last year's performance.

"Emery has been the mainstay of their staff for the last two years and is an excellent control pitcher," said Boulac.

The Irish and Lady Titans match up well as a team. Detroit's .244 batting average leads the MCC. They rank second in team defense (.942) and fourth in pitching (2.08 ERA).

By comparison, the Irish are second in batting average (.232), first in fielding (.951) and second in pitching (1.73 ERA).

"Detroit always does a good job of recruiting and will definitely have a solid club," said Boulac.

Irish men's track heads south for Tennessee's Dogwoods

By LYNNE BRAGG
Sports Writer

The Notre Dame men's track and field team travels to Knoxville, Tennessee this weekend to compete in the annual Dogwood Relays. The Irish team did not compete in the meet last year, but Coach Joe Piane is looking forward to his team competing this year.

"I think this is an excellent meet for our kids to compete in," Piane says. "It gives them some opportunities to meet some top athletes before they race in the Central Collegiates (May 4) and the ICAAAAs (May 18-19). The meet has been traditionally strong with SEC teams participating and I expect the field to be no different this year."

Notre Dame has already qualified several members to compete in the ICAAAA competition. Amongst these are junior Raghil Ismail (100 meters), sophomore Mike O'Connor (5,000 meters), and senior Scott Vandenberg (400 meters). Ismail is also a provisional NCAA qualifier, which means he may participate in the NCAA meet at the close of this season.

The men's track team enters the Dogwood Relays after hosting their first outdoor meet this season this past weekend. The Irish topped the men's competition with 71 points over St. John's, Drake, and Western Michigan in the quad meet.

The Irish had a strong showing with great performances from Ismail, Vandenberg, Pat Kearns, and sophomore Nick Radkewich. Kearns placed first in the 5,000 meters (14:49.57) while teammate Radkewich followed to take third (14:55.00).

Piane was pleased with Radkewich's performance.

"Nick did a good job," Piane said. "He ran intelligently throughout the whole race and didn't let up."

Greg Matteo (pole vault), Todd Herman (high jump), and John Smerek (discus) all qualified for the ICAAAA this past weekend.

Piane expects an intense meet this weekend and hopes for several leaders this weekend.

"We're looking to get good performances from O'Connor and Ryan Cahill in the 5,000, Ismail in the 100, and a handful of guys who will be competing in the high jump, discus and hammer events."

Four Notre Dame students stopped on the way to Tempe, Ariz., for the 1989 Fiesta bowl, at which the Fighting Irish won the national championship.

"While they were here," Stedry said in front of the monument, "one of them said, 'Fellas, don't you think we ought to say a prayer?' That really gets to you, four college guys saying a prayer in the middle of the prairie."

Prayers were said again at the monument on March 23, when the first memorial tribute to the crash victims took place. Stedry, the local historical society and the Chase County Leader-News organized it.

They attracted 271 people, including Rockne's daughter (Mrs. Jean Kochendorfer of Tulsa), her son and grandchildren, and the children and grandchildren of John Happer, a sporting goods salesman on the flight.

Easter Heathman and Al Baker, the young man on horseback who went for the ambulance, told their stories, as did other witnesses. Mrs. Kochendorfer remarked on how nice it was that so many people came to pay tribute to the victims.

"She didn't say, '...to her father,'" Heathman said. "She said '...for the people that perished.' I admired her for that. Everybody had been saying, 'Knute Rockne and seven others.'"

Several days later, Heathman turned his truck north off the rutted path and pulled to a stop where the wing had fallen to the ground.

"It's been 60 years since I stood on this spot right here," Heathman said, sitting in his 1977 Ford pickup. Out his window and just behind his left shoulder, the Rockne Memorial held vigil, dwarfed by the Flint Hills, but no less permanent.

Nicklaus masterful in first round of prestigious tourney

AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP) — Jack Nicklaus sent a message to Nick Faldo.

It was a 4-under-par 68 that said, clear as could be, "Not yet Nick. I'm not yet quite ready to relinquish the mastery of the Masters."

Nicklaus, 51, a six-time winner and four-time runner-up in golf's annual rite of spring, led a list of old folks who rose up to challenge Faldo's march to Masters history on Thursday.

Nicklaus was joined by Tom Watson, Lanny Wadkins, Japan's Jumbo Ozaki and U.S. Open champion Hale Irwin as potential roadblocks on Faldo's path to an unprecedented third consecutive Masters title.

Wadkins, 41, Mark McCumber and Jim Gallagher were tied for the first-round lead with 5-under 67s.

Watson, 41, and Ozaki, 44, were with Nicklaus, Fred Couples and Jose Maria Olazabal at 68 after one trip around an unusually forgiving Augusta National Golf Club course that, according to Nicklaus, presented "awfully good scoring conditions."

Generally considered the outstanding player in golf today, Faldo is attempting to become the first man to win three consecutive Masters.

"I played good and didn't make the most of it," Faldo tossed over his shoulder as he hurried through and out of the clubhouse.

He went to two under with a 12-15 foot eagle putt on the par-5 13th, but flubbed a chip and bogeyed 14, then drifted back to par after he missed the 18th green.

Phil Mickelson, the 20-year-old amateur sensation who won the Tucson Open earlier this season, was in a large group at 69 and became the first left-hander to ever break 70 in the Masters.

Mickelson, a two-time NCAA champion from Arizona State and the current U.S. Amateur champion, played in a twosome with Faldo.

"He's just setting himself up," Mickelson said. "He's not concerned with one round. He's thinking of the whole tournament."

Irwin, 45, shot 70, two ahead of Faldo and far in front of some other foreign favorites.

Seve Ballesteros of Spain, a two-time winner here, shot 75. Former Masters winner Sandy Lyle of Scotland three-putted his way to a 77.

And Greg Norman, the Australian who said he's troubled by burnout, went to an unlikely 78, a number that surprised his good friend Nicklaus.

Nicklaus said he told his wife "I have a feeling that if I don't win this tournament Greg will. I'm really surprised he didn't play better."

Nicklaus also was a little surprised by his own play.

"I didn't hit a lot of good shots early on, but the ball just kept going in the hole," he said.

After pulling his drive into an adjacent fairway off the first tee, he lofted an iron over the pine trees to within 5 feet and made the birdie putt. He scored from shorter range on the next, then chipped in from about 80 feet on the fourth.

"Some of it is a carry-over from last week," he said.

Nicklaus, now more a golden oldie than a Golden Bear, came into his 33rd Masters fresh from a victory on the Senior Tour last week.

And there's no question he's entertaining visions of becoming the only man to win on both tours in the same season.

"You can look at it as it might be your last chance to win a Masters," he said.

Wadkins, the first man off the tee, one-putted 11 times, romped around the course in 3 hours, 25 minutes and compiled the best score he's ever had in this tournament.

It's one stroke better than the closing 68 he had here a year ago, and prompted the jaunty Wadkins to comment:

"If I can keep on improving a shot a day, I won't have any trouble."

While that is something more than unlikely, Wadkins noted he was "putting better than I have been since I've been on the tour."

Watson, who has two Masters championships to go with his five British Open titles, used a zebra putter for only the third or fourth time in his career in an attempt to cure the putting miseries that have plagued his try for a comeback from a four-season non-winning string.

And the comeback, he said, is nearly complete.

Just Chillin' puts Team 179 on ice with 21-4 win; Paradise Jam wins

By RENE FERRA N
Associate Sports Editor

Just Chillin', one of the top seeds in this year's Bookstore Basketball tournament, cruised into the second round yesterday afternoon with a 21-4 victory over Team 179.

Even without 1990 second-team All-Bookstore member Ray Griggs, who was at football practice, Just Chillin' took less than 20 minutes to dispose of its outclassed opponents.

Senior Rich McGillicuddy scored eight points to lead a balanced attack for the victors.

"I think we looked good, but we haven't played that much together yet," said junior Joe Fulton. "We have to develop some chemistry, because there are other teams that have better talent, and we need to compensate."

Their opponent in the next round is Armed and Dangerous, which behind the nine-point effort of Bill Lane, rolled to a 21-5 win over Box and One.

"We beat them, but they were a good scrimmage team, and they had a cool name," said teammate Kevin Bugos.

Lane concurred. "We're ready to take on anybody," he said.

The long run was not too long for Dead in the Long Run, first-round casualties to another of the top 16 seeds, Paradise Jam, 21-9. Tony Livingston's nine points paced Paradise Jam, which advances to face Our Party Balls Flow—21-15 winners over Five Orange Whips—in the second round.

In other first-round action, seniors Matt Sande and Chris Klose combined for 19 points to lead Gerry's Kids past Skanky Fishheads 21-7.

"We took it to them inside," said Sande, who shot 10-13. "We boxed them out well, got all the rebounds, and then took advantage; Chris had at least five layups off the fastbreak."

Gerry's Kids meet ND's Most Wanted in the round of 256. Freshman Pat Goggins scored nine points to lead it past Wow! There's No Fine Along with that Censorship 21-6.

Team 664 scored eight straight points to open up a close game with A Hairy Mexican and His Four Meatless Tacos and advance 21-11.

"The key was we controlled the boards," said Mike Sheehan, who along with Tim Peterson led Team 664 with eight points apiece. "Most of our baskets came off offensive rebounds."

It took The High Rollers overtime before defeating We'll Win with Sanctions 22-20 on Stepan Court #2, and on Stepan Court #4, Jane Doe outlasted Dangling Furies 27-25.

"It was pretty funny because it seemed like this game was going to be over so many times," Jane Doe freshman Darren Cook said.

Bruins defeat Hartford after fluke Bourque score

(AP) — It's the simplest play in hockey. The defenseman crosses the red line, shoots the puck into the opposition's zone and his forwards chase after it. Sometimes they get it, sometimes the defenders clear the zone.

And once in a while, something strange happens — like it did for the Boston Bruins on Thursday night in Game 5 of their Adams Division semifinal series against Hartford.

Boston defenseman Ray Bourque went to shoot the puck into the zone early in the third period. Instead, his shot hit Hartford's Paul Cyr and wound up in the Whalers' net — tying the game at 1-1 and triggering a six-goal outburst as the Bruins rolled to a 6-1 win and a 3-2 lead in the series.

"That's the first time I've ever scored a goal like that. I've taken a lot of shots," Bourque said. "Whenever you score, it's a release of tension, especially when it's a 1-0 hockey game."

Bourque carried the puck out of his own zone and shot an 80-footer from just in front of the red line. It slid toward the right side of the net and goaltender Peter Sidorkiewicz began moving that way. But the puck deflected off Cyr's right leg about five feet in front of the Whalers' blue line. Before Sidorkiewicz could scramble back, the puck crossed the left side of the goal line at 1:20.

The Whalers had controlled the first two periods but managed only one goal — Brad Shaw's slap shot past Andy Moog at 7:16 of the second period. Bourque's fluke goal let all the air out of their hopes.

"Something like that usually does change the momentum," Hartford coach Rick Ley said. "It seemed to deflate us and give them a big lift."

The Bruins capitalized on the momentum swing as Dave Christian scored the go-ahead goal just 16 seconds later. Jeff Lazro made it 3-1 at 8:05 and the rout was on.

"It happened pretty quick," Sidorkiewicz said. "We were ahead 1-0 and we had the game in control, and, all of a sudden ... we're not even in the game anymore."

Cam Neely had two power-play goals and Jim Wiemer added another to complete the six-goal burst.

"We played very well for two periods, then fell apart in the third," Ley said.

The four Campbell Conference opening-round series resume tonight.

In the Norris Division semifinals, Minnesota and Chicago are tied 2-2 going into Game 5 at Chicago Stadium and St. Louis plays host to Detroit, which leads the series 3-1.

In the Smythe Division, Los Angeles plays host to Vancouver after the teams split the first four games and Edmonton takes a 3-1 series lead into Game 5 at Calgary.

ADAMS DIVISION Habs 4, Sabres 3, OT

Courtnall, a speedy right wing, played most of the game as if he had a sore leg. But he turned on the speed in the overtime when he took Guy Carbonneau's pass and beat Clint Malarchuk on a breakaway at 5:56.

"That was probably my biggest goal ever," said Courtnall, who scored his second career Stanley Cup overtime goal and his fifth in the five games against Buffalo. "It was exciting. I felt bad because I didn't get the puck out of our zone and we took a penalty and they tied it up. I felt that was my fault."

Courtnall missed practice on Wednesday and labored for most of the game, but he and the team denied he was injured.

Buffalo overcame 2-0 and 3-2 deficits, forcing the overtime on Dave Andreychuk's power-play goal with 3:05 left in regulation.

"I don't feel like we're out of it," said defenseman Grant Ledyard, whose second-period goal tied the game at 2-2. "We played a good game tonight and we'll play even better in Buffalo."

PATRICK DIVISION Devils 4, Penguins 2

A player named Lemieux again got the big goal — but it was New Jersey's Claude, not Pittsburgh's Mario, whose power-play goal with 7:01 left in regulation broke a 2-2 tie.

Claude Lemieux scored his third goal in two games by batting Kirk Muller's pass behind Tom Barrasso for New Jersey's third power-play goal of the game. Doug Brown put the game away with an empty-netter.

John MacLean and Bruce Driver gave New Jersey a 2-0 lead in the first period, but Ron Francis and Larry Murphy scored early in the third period to tie the score. Pittsburgh outshot New Jersey 41-24, including 20-10 in the third period, but Chris Terreri made 39 saves.

Capitals 5, Rangers 4, OT

Dino Ciccarelli, coming off the worst season of his career, scored at 6:44 of overtime on Washington's 55th shot as the Capitals moved within one victory of eliminating the Rangers for the second straight year.

Ciccarelli, who had just 21 goals in 54 games and none after Feb. 24, picked up a loose puck, circled out from behind the net and banked the puck off goaltender Mike Richter's stick.

"I just tried to get it on net," Ciccarelli said after scoring his 41st career playoff goal and third in overtime. "You never know what can happen. Richter just moved his stick in the wrong place and I was fortunate."

Wall Street traders big losers in NCAA pool

■NEW YORK — What probably began as a friendly office pool on the NCAA basketball tournament ended up costing three Wall Street traders their jobs and left another worker $330,000 in debt.

Elaborate, high-stakes betting pools were set up at many Wall Street firms, where individual teams are assigned a share price based on their expected performance, then traded like stocks.

The gambling apparently got out of hand at Smith Barney, where three low-level bond trading employees were fired last week "for conduct inconsistent with the standards of the firm," spokesman Bob Connor said.

A clerical assistant at PaineWebber resigned about the time the firm began an investigation into the NCAA pool, spokeswoman Beverly Spano said.

That employee reportedly sold Duke stock short, that is, sold stock that he did not yet own with the hope that the price would go down and he could make money.

The employee is not expected to be able to repay his $330,000 debt.

"I'm supposed to say, 'Turn on the lights,' but there's a phrase that goes with Georgia football, basketball, baseball and tennis that I want to say first — 'Go Dawgs.' Now, turn on the lights."

ND softball outlasts DePaul with two consecutive wins

By COQUESE WASHINGTON
Sports Writer

The afternoon air was a bit chilly, but that didn't prevent the Irish softball team from burning DePaul for two more victories at the Notre Dame Softball Field.

Backed by outstanding pitching and tenacious defense, the Irish finished the day with 1-0 and 2-0 wins, their first ever against a Blue Demon squad, while raising their season record to 18-16.

Coach Brian Boulac was quite pleased with the afternoon's results.

"This is definitely a big win for us," he said. "It shows that we can compete with the good teams on our schedule, and hopefully this win will set the tone for the rest of our season."

Missy Linn, the all-time Notre Dame leader in wins and holder of a host of Irish pitching records, won the opener for the Irish, throwing nine strikeouts, with only four hits and two walks.

In the first inning of the opener, big plays came from two Irish freshman. A Blue Demon error allowed Carrie Miller to get on first. A sacrifice took her to second, and a single by Christy Connoyer placed runners on both first and third. A double steal by the duo brought Miller home, scoring the only run of the game, while Connoyer was thrown out a second.

Irish upperclassmen took over the nightcap.

In the second inning, senior Megan Fay lead off with a single, and got to second on a sacrifice by Debbie Boulac. Amy Fulsom, a junior from South Dakota, then singled, and one out later, Kathy Verneetti, another senior, hit a double to right field, bringing both runners in for the only points of the game.

Staci Alford grabbed the second win of the day for the Irish. Alford, who is 7-3 on the year, pitched a four-hitter, walking only one DePaul player while striking out four.

"Our pitching was outstanding today," praised Coach Boulac. "Missy and Staci both pitched fine games, and our defense made big plays when necessary."

The Irish's next challenge comes in the form of the Detroit Titans, billed by Boulac as the "team to beat in the conference [Midwestern Collegiate Conference]." The squad travels to Detroit on Saturday, where doubleheader action begins at 3:30 p.m.

Men's tennis team optimistic about MCC tournament

By RICH KURZ
Associate Sports Editor

The 19th-ranked Notre Dame men's tennis team gets a respite from its grueling schedule of top-25 opponents this weekend when it travels to St. Louis to compete in the Midwestern Collegiate Conference Championships. Considering the dominance of the Irish in the past two years, it would be easy for the Irish to look past this event to their next round of ranked opponents. However, Coach Bob Bayliss is trying to avoid this outlook, but at the same time he is optimistic about his team's chances.

"We're in the MCC. We should go out there and win the conference because we're the best team," he said.

In the past two years, the Irish have owned the MCC championships. Both of those years the Irish have won all six singles titles and all three doubles crowns, while Bayliss has garnered coach of the year honors in those two years.

All the same, Notre Dame is taking the meet too seriously, since the upcoming dual meets with Ball State, Michigan and Wisconsin will be more crucial for Irish hopes of an NCAA tournament berth.

"It's (the meet) important, we want to do well," said Bayliss, but added, "If we win the MCC, we're champs, but it doesn't do anything for us. There's no automatic bid."

So in that spirit, Bayliss has elected to rest some of his top players who could use the time off. Junior David DiLucia, ranked third in the nation in singles, will stay home to rest his back. Andy Zurcher, who injured his hand against Duke, will give that hurt additional time to heal, while senior Ryan Wenger is sitting out the MCC's to take the dental school entrance exams.

"David's (DiLucia) back is 100%, but this is the kind of thing you don't want to risk," said Bayliss.

"Zurcher's hand isn't quite ready," continued Bayliss. "He fell on it at Duke, and it swelled up to the size of a catcher's mitt. The swelling's gone down, and he could probably play if absolutely necessary. (However) we want to err on the side of caution."

"If we won the conference

Image of Rockne's tragic death still a vivid memory

By IVAN MAISEL
Staff Writer, The Dallas Morning News

Editor's Note: This story originally appeared in The Dallas Morning News March 31, 1991—the 60th anniversary of the death of Knute Rockne. It is reprinted here with permission of The Dallas Morning News. This is the second of two parts.

The Heathmans piled into their 1930 Chevy pickup, stopped off for Easter's uncle and cousin and headed through the pasture. Art and Ed Baker, whose father, S.H. Baker, owned the ranch where the plane crashed, had ridden their horses to the wreckage. When Art saw it, he turned and went to call ambulances.

Wichita would have been the first of four stops between Kansas City and Los Angeles. Rockne had taken the train from South Bend to Chicago that Monday afternoon and the overnight train to Kansas City. According to the 1975 book, We Remember Rockne, Irish freshman coach Bill Jones asked Rockne, "Why can't you go by train? They're a lot safer."

"No, they're not," Rockne told him. "You don't read your statistics."

Besides, Rockne said, he wanted to be home for Easter the following Sunday. Low clouds and choppy air dogged the plane from the time it left Kansas City at 9:15 a.m. The pilots, Fry and Mathias, contemplated turning around, but G.A. O'Reilly, the radio operator in Wichita, indicated the weather was clear. At 10:45 a.m., as O'Reilly entered on his log sheet, he asked if the pilots could get through. He received no answer. He asked again.

"Don't know yet," the answer came.

Notre Dame's 1930 National Championship football team, coach Knute Rockne's last before his death in a plane crash March 31, 1931.

"Don't know yet."

He would not hear from the pilots again.

The plane had come down at a sharp angle, nose first, directly into the ground. The force flipped the back of the plane over so that the tail stood upside down, "12 or 13 feet in the air," Heathman said.

A wing ripped from the plane in the air and sailed to the ground about three-eighths of a mile to the northeast. Mail bags were strewn between the wing and the wreckage.

"There were five bodies lying out right to the west of the crash, 40 or 50 feet or so," Heathman said. "There was room to walk between them. Some of them had puncture wounds. Some were flat on their back, some on their side."

There was no fire, "not a speck," he said. The odor of gasoline wafted heavily about, as did the smell of hot oil. None of the victims outside the plane showed any signs of blood, Heathman said.

Within a short time, word of the crash reached Kansas City. The airline, which eventually would become known as TWA, released the passenger list. The local crowd that had gathered at the sight would soon be joined by a half-dozen planes that landed near the crash. Out spilled newspaper men and airline and aircraft executives.

"We had no idea who was on that plane," Heathman said. "My grandfather called us the next day and told us. That still didn't mean anything. I still didn't know who Knute Rockne was."

Rockne had appeared on plenty of newsreels at the local theater. He had starred in movie shorts about football. One reason for his trip to Los Angeles was to discuss another movie deal.

"There was a guy who lived here and had seen every movie show that came to town," Heathman said. "He would spend his last dollar for gas and movie tickets."

The man, Heathman said, stared at Rockne. "He kept saying 'That guy looks familiar to me. I ought to know him,'" Heathman said.

Rockne wore a rubber bandage around his right leg to help combat the phlebitis that had endangered his life. Heathman remembered a body being carried to an ambulance by stretcher. A rubber bandage trailed the stretcher through the mud. Heathman picked up the bandage and laid it beside the body.

The Chase County sheriff posted deputies at the site for several days to stop souvenir hunters. The sheriff removed the guards on April 4. That night, people appeared at the site with shovels. One of the passengers, H.J. Christen, had removed $55,000 from his bank several days before the plane trip, and his wife did not know what he had done with it.

Later that week, Mrs. Christen, searching for some of her husband's papers, discovered the money in a lock box.

In the days following the crash, local residents placed a large flint rock at the site. The following Sunday—Easter—1,000 people parked cars beside the highway and trekked through the pasture. Now, Stedry said, he is asked to show the site every other weekend and sometimes during the week.

Notre Dame Baseball Celebrates A Century

Irish baseball celebrates first 100 years

Grueling road schedule tiring; quest for respect rolls onward

By JENNIFER MARTEN
Sports Writer

They were 46-12 last year, they had the third best record in the nation, but they were not invited to the NCAA's.

The Notre Dame baseball team was not happy.

Now, they are back with a vengeance. Their motto for the season says it all: No retreat. No surrender. No excuses.

Although the Irish are ready to prove that they are one of the best teams in the country, doing it could be difficult.

The team opened their 100th season with probably the most grueling schedule in college baseball—27 straight road games against college baseball powerhouses such as Texas, Louisiana State, and Stanford—just to prove that they could play with the big names.

The Irish began their season in February at the Oakland A's tournament in Phoenix, Arizona. Starting out the season on the right track, the team defeated Dartmouth and Nebraska.

The Nebraska win was a big victory for the Irish. It marked the first time in Notre Dame baseball history that they had beaten a Big Eight team. The Irish lost a heartbreaker, 12-11, against eleventh-ranked Ohio State in the championship game.

The next weekend, the road trek continued at Texas who was ranked third in the nation at the time. Notre Dame dealt Texas their worst loss in 25 years, a 13-4 bashing. It was in Notre Dame coach Pat Murphy's words, "one of those big upsets we've been noted for."

Stops at Trinity and Saint Mary's also proved successful, with the Irish sweeping double-headers against both teams.

The team opened spring break competition with two close losses in Mobile, Alabama, at the Diamond Club Classic. South Alabama won 9-7 and Michigan, ranked 12th, won 6-5.

"It was South Alabama's tournament and it was very, very difficult surroundings," said Murphy. "Nonetheless, I was proud of the way we played."

Tulane University proved to be another hostile environment for the Irish. Tulane, ranked 17th, defeated the team in another close game, 5-3.

"It was a game in which the luck of the Irish was not with us," said Murphy. "To show you that it was unfortunate, we came out the next day and beat the third ranked team—LSU."

The Irish won that contest 6-3 against Bob Bird, one of the top pitchers in the nation, before the march was on to the King Dome in Seattle and the College Baseball Classic. Air Force fell first, 9-6. Northwestern, losing 7-0, was the next victim of the red hot Irish.

In front of the home crowd, Washington came up short twice against the streaking Notre Dame team, first by a score of 9-7 and then 4-2. Notre Dame's four game sweep won the tournament and ended the extremely successful break on a high note.

The wear and tear of the never-ending road games began to take its toll on the squad. After a fifteen hour bus trip to Virginia, the team lost two out of three to the Cavaliers. The Irish lost the first game 6-12, won the second 12-0 and lost the final game 2-5.

It was not the best way to head into one of the college baseball's best tournaments, the Oscar Mayer Classic in Minneapolis, where Notre Dame faced Minnesota, UCLA and two-time national champion Stanford.

Stanford entered the eighth inning trailing Notre Dame, but came from behind to defeat the Irish 7-3. Minnesota also mounted a comeback effort in the late innings to beat the Notre Dame squad. UCLA perpetuated the Irish losing streak with a 6-3 victory.

"At that point in the season, I'm not feeling all that bad," said Murphy. "We have not been beaten in a game yet. We've beaten ourselves several times, but no one's really took it to us."

The Observer/Andrew McCloskey

Irish pitching ace David Sinnes is one gear in Pat Murphy's finely tuned starting rotation.

Conference play opened a week later at Evansville. The Aces, who won the Midwestern Collegiate Conference tournament last year, managed to steal two of four games from the Irish.

Conference play is a no-win situation for Notre Dame, said Murphy. First, the MCC does not have an automatic bid to the NCAA's. Second, the other teams in the conference get to play one of the fastest rising programs in the country, he explained.

"Because we play such a big schedule beforehand and because we are Notre Dame, everyone is gunning for us," said the Irish coach. "They are pumped to play Notre Dame. Everywhere we go, we are the marked team."

Nonetheless, the baseball team is enjoying continued success in the conference and in the opening weeks of the season. Defense, baserunning and pitching are all improving with every game.

Each individual player has made contributions to the team and its success. In different games, different players have risen up to lead the team to victory whether it be offensively, defensively, or on the mound. The Notre Dame baseball squad is a team first and individual players second.

Their strategy is simple.

"We work hard to get better every day so that we'll be prepared and be able to attain our goals," said junior captain Joe Binkiewicz.

Baseball is a game of wins and losses, executions and errors, good breaks and bad breaks. The Irish baseball team has had its share of both the good and the bad on their season-opening road trip.

133-53-1, and in '89, Notre Dame went to the NCAA tournament for the first time since 1970.

More importantly, the Irish are now playing baseball Murphy-style, a hard-nosed, aggressive, get-your-shirt dirty kind of ball that, when combined with the type of talent on the Notre Dame roster, portends good things for the future of Irish baseball.

What's in Murphy's future? As far as anyone can tell, he will probably be at Notre Dame for a while, although sometime he may look into a job in the majors, in a "situation where I'd be hand-picked to climb the ladder," he said.

Murphy says he has had "numerous college offers," because, he says, "they know I'm young and stupid. I'd run through a brick wall for someone."

As for now, though, he says "I really have no plans. I have too much to accomplish. I've only had three years of recruiting. We're just starting to realize our potential."

Besides, there's still that mission thing. One gets the feeling that if the Notre Dame baseball team can approach their jobs with the same tenacity their coach showed in getting to Notre Dame, the Irish baseball program will have plenty of rewards to reap in the coming years.

Chief among those schools was Claremont-Mudd Scripps, where his teams compiled a 45-44-1 record over two seasons.

At the end of that second season at Claremont, Murphy finally got his chance. One of the brothers of a Claremont student was a baseball player at Notre Dame, and when Irish coach Larry Gallo resigned at the end of the 1987 season, that player gave Murphy a call.

First thing the next morning, Murphy was on the phone with then-athletic director Gene Corrigan. His aggressiveness on the telephone earned him an interview, and after the interview with Murphy, Corrigan ended the search for a new baseball coach at Notre Dame.

Ten years and four rejection letters (from the admissions office) later, Pat Murphy had achieved his goal. He quest to be at Notre Dame was successful. He was the baseball coach of the team that plays in the shadow of the Golden Dome.

Since that time, Murphy hasn't exactly rested on his laurels. In his first three seasons, Murphy's Irish teams have gone

Talent-laden Irish look ahead to Xavier, NCAA's

By RICH SZABO
Sports Writer

While the football and basketball programs seem to steal the spotlight at Notre Dame, another Irish sports team has quietly established itself as a national power.

Since Pat Murphy took over the head-coaching duties in 1988, the Notre Dame baseball team has seen tremendous success.

After going 39-22 in Murphy's first year, the Irish followed with a 48-19-1 season, an NCAA tournament birth and a 46-12 season last year. That was the fourth-highest winning percentage in Division I (.793), yet the Irish were snubbed by the selection committee. Every year, the team has played better competition and maintained their strong record.

This weekend will mark the first home games for the Irish after 27 road contests to start off the season. Notre Dame (15-12) hosts doubleheaders against Xavier on Saturday and Sunday. Both doubleheaders will start at noon and all the games will be played at Jake Kline Field.

"We played a murderous 27-game schedule," said Murphy, "against the nation's best, all on the road. It's been very strenuous on the players. Now it is time for us to come home and get in a rhythm."

MCC conference play begins with the Xavier series this weekend. Notre Dame dominated the East Division last year and ended up with a sparkling 27-5 record in the conference.

Murphy said, "All the conference opponents come in here gunning for us. They have everything to gain and nothing to lose. We're not sneaking up on anybody this year."

This Irish team is loaded with talent, returning eight starters from last year. Sophomore Eric Danapilis (.330BA, 20RBI, 3HR this season) and senior Frank Jacobs (.269BA, 19RBI, 8HR) anchor the Irish offense. Pat Leahy and David Sinnes, All-Americans as freshmen last year, along with freshman sensation Tom Price, lead the pitching staff.

With such a brutal schedule, the Irish have managed a 15-12 record. After being ranked 15th in the preseason, the team has fallen out of the top 25, but Murphy is not concerned.

"It's difficult at times," said Murphy, "because when we lose a few, it plays on the mind. You have to make a mental adjustment and not worry about your record. Rankings don't mean a whole lot in college baseball until the end. I look for this team to get into the regionals and do great things."

Danapilis added, "It's been a little frustrating, but the schedule has bettered us. The travel has been rough, both physically and academically, but we don't make excuses. We want to play the best teams to see how good we are. To be the best, you have to play the best."

The coach had these Murphyisms to offer about Notre Dame baseball:

•On Danapilis - "Eric is a mainstay on our offense and has also come out of the bullpen for a couple of saves. He is a future All-American and about as good a pro prospect as you will find."

•On freshman Greg Layson

Layson: The best is yet to come

Frosh leadoff hitter making impact with improvements

By ANTHONY KING
Assistant Sports Editor

The Irish may have a young second base men in Greg Layson, but they also have a good one.

Layson, a freshman from San Diego, has made quite an impact already. He is third on the team in batting average, at .297. Layson has scored 15 runs and batted in 14.

Greg primarily has been a leadoff hitter, batting first in 12 games. He is valuable in the leadoff spot because of his abilities as a switch-hitter, although he is a natural right-handed batter.

"I've changed styles hitting left-handed," explains Layson. "Coach Murphy has been working with me. I've been trying to make more contact, going with the pitch and not trying to pull it. The change also gives me a smaller strike zone."

Greg feels his left-handed hitting is one of the major points he is trying to improve on. Along with better hitting, he is trying to improve his speed out of the batters box. A combination of better hitting and improved speed should

(2B) - "Greg has decided that he wants to be a great ballplayer. He's a real exciting player to watch and has been unbelievable in the field."

•On Frank Jacobs - "Frank is definitely the best power in college baseball. He'll be the all-time Notre Dame leader in home runs in only three years. He's a fun one to watch and can change the course of a game with just one play."

•On Coveleski Stadium - "It is one of the nicest facilities in the country, but it is not ours. If we had a facility on campus that could satisfy the students, then I think there would be more awareness. People don't realize we have one of the best teams in the country."

The second half of the season begins against the Xavier Musketeers this weekend, who are coming off an 18-30 season last year. In addition to all their Midwestern Collegiate Conference foes, the Irish will be hosting non-conference games against Indiana, Indiana State, Michigan and Western Michigan, all strong teams in the midwest.

"We took on a purposefully murderous schedule," said Murphy, "just so we could prove to the NCAA committee that they made a mistake by not taking us last year. We've developed from an average team in the midwest to one of the top teams in the country. Baseball used to be just an afterthought around here for many years and now these kids have got people turning their heads."

"It's exciting."

high school, playing with the big teams. It was just great to play against LSU. Winning was icing on the cake. And playing at the Kingdome was a kid's dream. It was really exciting to play in a major league park, in a major league atmosphere."

Greg also is happy to be here at Notre Dame. Being from San Diego, he was not sure whether he would like it here or not.

"I was apprehensive at first," explained Layson. "But I love it here now. I love putting on the uniform and playing for coach Murphy."

It was not just baseball that brought Greg Layson to Notre Dame, however.

"It was an academic choice," stated Layson. "I wanted the education. If I wanted to just play baseball, I could have entered the draft and played in the minors. I enjoy the challenge of the academics here."

For Layson, the best is yet to come. He believes that the team is not playing their best ball, but are progressing.

"Everyday we're improving," said Layson. "That's what games and practice should do. At the end of the season we'll be at our best. I'm just trying to do my part."

"I'm just real glad to be a part of the team," said Layson. "This is what you dream of in

Maisano keeps hitting Slump doesn't stop slugger

His physical features don't evoke thoughts of a sleek-footed base stealer.

But base stealing isn't his forte.

For sophomore designated hitter Adam Maisano, the only duty he carries involves crushing baseballs in a way that simply has to be seen to be believed.

"It's unbelievable that a kid that heavy and with such short arms can have that the kind of bat that he has," said Irish baseball coach Pat Murphy.

At 5-8, 240, the sophomore from Atlanta, Ga., has overcome a heavy burden that has been a part of him since his high school days.

"My physical features don't exactly epitomize those of an average baseball player," said Maisano, who cranked out a .333 batting average as a pinch hitter and designated hitter during his freshman campaign.

Working exclusively as a power hitter, Maisano sometimes blames himself when he feels that he could be producing more.

"Adam sometimes gets down on himself," said Murphy. "He's got as much courage as anyone on this campus."

Currently in the midst of a slump that has seen his batting average linger around the .220 mark, Maisano hopes a changed stance will combat his batting problems. Despite his offensive troubles of late, Maisano is tied for second on the squad with 19 RBI.

"Adam's been struggling a little bit lately, but when he's going good, he's as good as anybody around," said Murphy.

Whether he's on a roll or not, Maisano can be sure to get the attention of fans on the road, who can be brutal in their taunting. But true to his positive demeanor, he keeps his mind focused and doesn't let the crowd interfere with his batting.

"A lot of times I'll hit better when I know people are saying stuff," said Maisano, a non-scholarship player who played noseguard and wrestled at heavyweight for Riverwood High School in Atlanta. "But even back to high school, I've heard just about everything. I just have to make sure I don't dwell on it and let it dictate my performance."

After facing unknown pitching staffs throughout his freshman year, word has gotten out that Maisano is a threat to be reckoned with.

"He's going through a transition period right now where he's having to adjust to different pitching," said Murphy. "He's seeing so many breaking pitches, just like (Frank) Jacobs, that he starts getting away from his bread and butter pitch, the fastball. Now he's almost looking breaking ball and the fastball is beating him a little bit."

But with Murphy's troops, when a problem arises a solution is close behind. In the past few days, Maisano has worked on closing his stance to try to keep from stepping up to the ball as much as he had been.

"Hopefully changing my stance will take care of some of the problems," said Maisano. "Just like any change, it'll take a while to get used to, but my ultimate goal is to contribute and hit well for the team. I'm not a vocal person during the game, so I try to get my enthusiasm through my performance."

With an optimistic outlook like Maisano's hovering over the squad, it's hard to imagine the team having anything less than a good time on their road to the NCAA's.

Man with a mission, Murphy manufacturing miracles at ND

By RICH KURZ

Pat Murphy is a man with a mission.

And right now, that mission is to get the Notre Dame baseball team to the top of the heap in college baseball. He doesn't have all that much farther to go.

After assuming his position as head baseball coach almost four years ago, Murphy took a team with a 15-29 record, and turned it around to go 39-22 the very next year.

Since that time, Murphy has assembled a pitching staff composed of several potential All-Americans and a lineup consisting of hitters like Eric Danapilis and Frank Jacobs, and has Notre Dame baseball on the rebound.

"We're not far from the tip of the iceberg," says Murphy. "There's no question it's the best team by far since I've been here. It's just a matter of our record."

People see last year's 46-12 record and then attempt to judge this year's team against that standard, a move which Murphy doesn't think is fair.

"When you play 12 teams in the top 25, and the first 27 games on the road, you're not going to have that type of record."

Coupled with the tough schedule, according to Murphy, the Irish are going through "a little bit of growing pains, and we're facing that 'Notre Dame thing.' Everybody's gunning for us since we're Notre Dame."

The fact is, for many years, Pat Murphy was one of those people gunning for Notre Dame. In a story that has been well-documented in such publications as Baseball America, among others, Murphy was an Irish fanatic since early in his youth.

"It was always my dream to be a student-athlete at Notre Dame," says Murphy.

"I used to hitchhike out to games, and tell my mom I was staying overnight at a friend's house," he said. Once he got out to South Bend, he would sneak into a dorm and sleep on a couch in the basement, or under the bleachers in the ACC. Then, once it was gametime, he would find some way to get into the game. When it was over, he would thumb a ride back to his home in upstate New York.

Interestingly enough, baseball wasn't even Murphy's favorite sport growing up. "My first loves were football, basketball, and boxing," he says. "Baseball was just something I did. Maybe because I was relaxed, I got better."

Eventually, baseball became the one sport left for Murphy. Shoulder surgery ruled out football, and "my boxing career ended because I got smart, and my basketball career ended because I couldn't run or jump." So baseball was the only sport left for him to pursue.

When it was time to apply to college, the first choice was obvious. There was only one problem. The University of Notre Dame didn't want Patrick Murphy as a student at the University.

Instead, Murphy eventually wound up at Florida Atlantic University as a pitcher, and then later bounced around the minors, playing in the farm systems of the Giants and Padres, as well as with two independent teams.

He left minor-league ball to concentrate on coaching, keeping his mission in sight—to get to the University of Notre Dame.

Most of the positions he took in college baseball were designed to keep him in contention for the job as the Irish skipper.

"I worked at good academic schools, because I knew that's what Notre Dame would be looking for," says Murphy.
