Gorbachev promises independence for Baltics

MOSCOW (AP) — President Mikhail Gorbachev on Sunday promised independence to the Baltic republics, but said he would not resign or retreat from the battle to maintain the Soviet Union as a country.

If independence "is the final wish and intention of the people" of the Baltics, "then I think we must agree to it," Gorbachev said in an interview aired on Soviet television and the Cable News Network.

Gorbachev stressed the need to keep the rest of the country intact, and said, "I will not resign now. That would be immoral."

Gorbachev's statement on the Baltics met with joy in Lithuania.

"I am glad that he has said this. This is the beginning of a new period in history," Lithuanian President Vytautas Landsbergis told an estimated 20,000 people at a victory rally in Vilnius.

"Now there must be concrete talks on the withdrawal of Soviet troops," added Landsbergis.

In Moscow, visiting British Prime Minister John Major said Britain would sponsor the Baltics' entry into the United Nations and other international organizations.

Gorbachev met for 75 minutes in the Kremlin with Major, the first Western leader to visit Moscow since last month's attempted coup by hard-liners opposed to reforms.

Major also met with Russian President Boris Yeltsin, who returned to Moscow on Sunday after discussions with Estonian and Latvian leaders about maintaining economic ties among former Soviet republics.

Major told reporters he had sought assurances from Gorbachev and Yeltsin that "the utmost care would be taken" to keep nuclear weapons under strict central control as more and more republics declare independence. He said they both agreed.

Despite their long rivalry, both Yeltsin and Gorbachev have been trying to prevent the union from evaporating in the power vacuum that has followed the Aug. 18-21 coup and the subsequent suspension of the Communist party.

Gorbachev said in the TV interview that during a meeting earlier Sunday, 11 of the 15 republics agreed to maintain some form of union, although its exact shape is yet to be worked out. Those not represented apparently were the Baltics and Moldavia.

Yugoslavs accept EC peace plan

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — The Yugoslav presidency and the country's feuding republics accepted a European Community (EC) plan on Sunday designed to stop months of fierce fighting among Croats, Serbs, and the army.

It was unclear, however, whether the latest plan would succeed in ending months of bloodshed in this troubled nation. Earlier attempts at truces have failed.

"The presidency accepts the declaration of the EC ministers," a spokeswoman told reporters gathered outside the conference room where the eight-man presidency had met.

The plan envisages an international peace conference on Yugoslavia and the dispatch of foreign cease-fire monitors to the battle-torn republic of Croatia. Before implementation, it had to be accepted by leaders of Yugoslavia's six republics, also gathered in the federal capital.

Blessed with beautiful weather, the Sophomore class celebrates its return to Notre Dame with an outdoor mass at the Grotto.

Attridge takes over as dean of Arts & Letters

By ALICIA REALE
News Writer

Harold Attridge, professor of theology at Notre Dame, became dean of the College of Arts and Letters in August. He succeeds Michael Loux, professor of philosophy, who is returning to teaching and research.

"Like his predecessor, Harold Attridge brings to the deanship of Arts and Letters a record of distinguished scholarship and a potential for leadership that already has been evidenced in his own department of theology," said Timothy O'Meara, the University's provost and the chair of the search committee for the new dean.

Attridge said he has no plans for major changes within the college. "The Freshman Writing Program is under examination in both components, Freshman Seminar and Composition and Literature," he said. "A report is being made by a faculty committee, and on the basis of this, some changes may be made."

Teaching and research are integral to the college, and one will not be stressed over the other, according to Attridge. "They are a balancing act, and we are committed to doing both well."

Attridge said he is aware of the large class size problems within the college. "There is a 5 year plan for faculty development drawn up with Michael Loux." He hopes to continue with that plan explaining, "The plan is updated and renegotiated each year to meet the needs of the college."

The DART registration for the fall semester went much more smoothly for this fall, according to Attridge. He said, "The technical bugs seem to be working themselves out, and the problems remaining are of social organization."

Diane Murray and Kimberly Flint-Hamilton, newly appointed associate deans of the College of Arts and Letters, are monitoring and planning the registration situation. "We'll certainly be working on it," Attridge said.

"I'm still learning the ropes," he said. "I've only been aboard for 4 or 5 days."

Regarding the new position, Attridge said he is anticipating

Hoosier literacy programs in need

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Some 600,000 Hoosiers can't read, write, add or subtract, but officials say inadequate money, resources and concern among those who can read compounds the problem.

More than 400 literacy programs are offered statewide. But 1,300 Hoosiers are on waiting lists, because some literacy classes are filled, said Carlotta Anderson, director of adult education for the Indiana Department of Education.

Most of Indiana's 1 million high school dropouts never drop back into learning, and less than 5 percent of the 600,000 Hoosiers who can't read, write, add or subtract get help, officials say.

There isn't enough concern among those who can read, said Indiana Superintendent of Public Instruction H. Dean Evans.

Evans says illiterate adults are more likely to end up on welfare or in trouble.

"This country cannot sustain itself with a population of 25 million illiterates," he said.

Officials say 98 businesses, jails, hospitals, housing complexes, libraries and community centers that wanted to conduct literacy classes can't because resources aren't available.

"People say, 'There's all that money out there,' but it's not true," said Anderson, whose program is funded by $11.5 million in state funds. "Money isn't the answer to everything, but we must reach more people."

State Sen. Dennis Neary, D-Michigan City, said that with 600,000 functionally illiterate people in the state, $11.5 million allows only $19 per person.

"That's not even the price of a textbook," said Neary.

Neary and Anderson say while more money is needed, so is better coordination among existing programs.

David Stahly, director of adult education for Warren Township, is putting together a Marion County referral network that would match students with programs.

In Marion County alone, at least 37 groups offer literacy programs, and Indianapolis Public Schools offers classes at 47 other sites.

Many illiterate people are ashamed or afraid to admit their problem.

"Often they have gone to great lengths to hide the fact that they can't read," said Alicia Chadwick, vice president of marketing for the Indianapolis Network for Employment and Training.

Chadwick's group, called UPWORDS, is housed in the same building as a Marion County unemployment office, and is pitched to everyone who stops by for unemployment or disability benefits.

Last year, that pitch worked with 296 people, including Ronald Childs, who quit Tech High School in his freshman year.

"When I was young, everyone thought I was retarded," said Childs. "I decided to prove them wrong."

INSIDE COLUMN

A few pros and cons to off-campus living

One thing that can't be beat about living off-campus: air conditioning. And don't forget about cable, no parietais, no alcohol policy, and the private outdoor swimming pool either.

I have it better than some off-campus students, living in the Oak Hill complex. After over a year of off-campus living, I have come to the conclusion that to survive at Notre Dame, it's the way to go.

Oh, there are some things that I miss. First, it was nice not having to worry about cooking for myself. Dining hall food isn't the greatest, but it's convenient—especially if you're as lazy as I am—and can't be any worse than some of the meals that I've cooked in my life.

Second, you become isolated, off on your own little island. Unlike dorm life, there's no section members to gather for a pick-up basketball game, no T-shirt sellers going door-to-door. Inevitably, you miss out on campus news.

Worse, though, you lose track of the friends you made living in the dorms. Instead of hanging around them night after night, shooting the breeze, complaining about the food, your RA, how little money you have, you only see them in passing in the classrooms or on the sidewalks. Or you have to make a conscious effort to go and see them, not always an easy task.

Third, the administration treats you like the black sheep of the ND community. While most on-campus students got ticket applications delivered to your doorstep, off-campus students had to stand in line to pick them up.

As well, all those lovely campus mailings mysteriously bypass my mailbox. Okay, most are pure garbage, heading straight for the round file. Once in a while, however, an important piece of news does get mixed in, but for some reason, 29 cents is too much to ask from this school to spend so I can find out about it.

But, these are trivial matters. Because living off-campus also means having a sense of freedom, of escaping the zoo that is called "Notre Dame."

It means having a social life that doesn't necessarily have to end when and where Du Lac specifies.

It means being my own boss, not having to worry about some RA or rector telling me that that poster is inappropriate, my music is too loud, that an open container is illegal.

But, best of all, living off-campus means jealous looks, phone calls asking what time the game is on ESPN, friends asking when they can use the pool or washing machine (it's in the basement—no charge).

So off-campus students have to depend on South Bend's finest to defend our property and have some of the worst parking spots on campus designated solely for our use.

While on-campus students sit sweltering in cramped dorm rooms, thinking of ways to get around Du Lac, I think I'll kick back on my couch, in air conditioned comfort, and watch some ESPN.

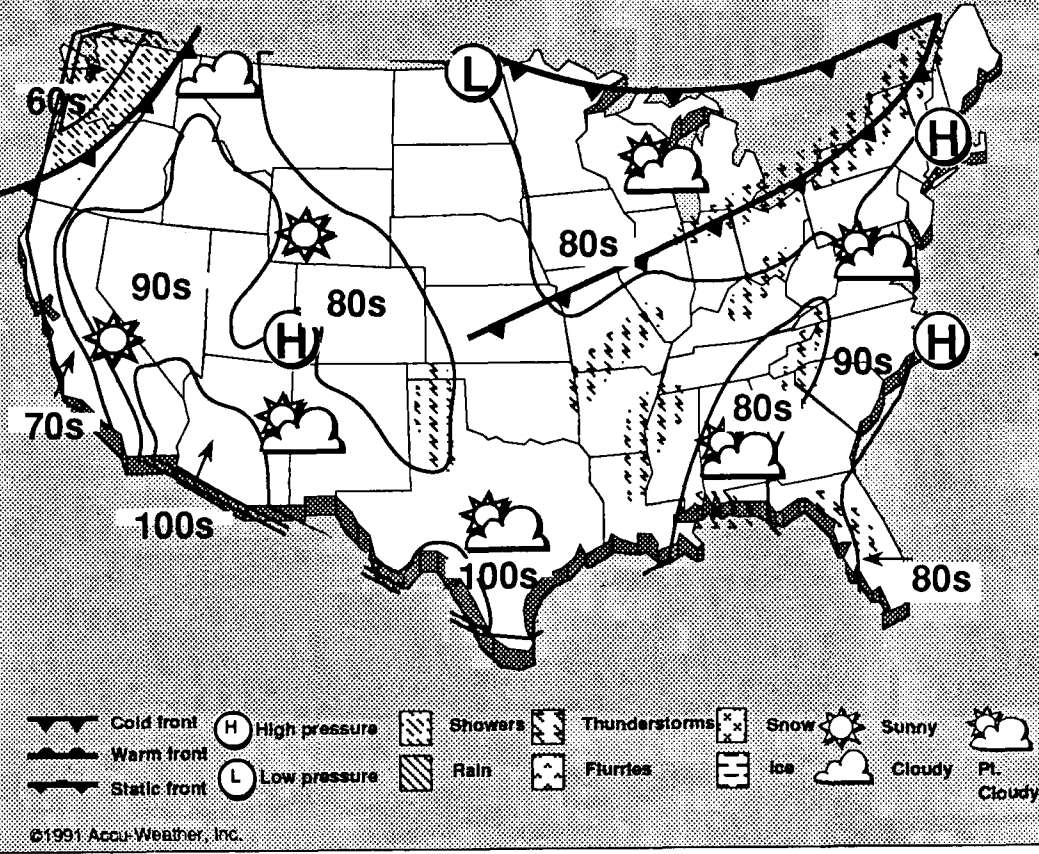

The views expressed in the Inside Column are those of the author and not necessarily those of The Observer.

Historians recognize past of Centralia

■CENTRALIA, Wa. - Historians are officially noting the "Centralia Armistice Day Riot," an event that until a few years ago was rarely even whispered about in Centralia, Washington. On Nov. 11, 1919, members of the radical Industrial Workers of the World shot dead four young World War I veterans who bolted from an Armistice Day parade to help beat up the "Wobblies" and wreck their union hall in the center of this logging and farming community. That night, after arranging a power outage, a mob of townspeople dragged Wobbly member Wesley Everest from jail and hanged him from a bridge outside town.

Dottie West in critical condition

■NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Country music singer Dottie West was in critical condition Sunday facing more surgery to correct a ruptured liver and find out if her neck was broken in a weekend car crash. West, 58, remained on a respirator and drifted in and out of consciousness at Vanderbilt University Medical Center, hospital spokeswoman Barbara Cramer said. Her condition was listed as critical but stable. The singer underwent emergency surgery after the crash Friday that came while driving to a performance at the Grand Ole Opry.

Body discovered in train wreckage

■LEDGER, Mo. - The second body of a crew member in the wreckage of two Burlington Northern freight trains that crashed head-on late last week was found Sunday. Nine locomotives and thirty one freight cars derailed in the collision Friday near this tiny, north-central Montana farming town. Searchers aided by dogs continued the search through huge piles of wreckage for another crewman still missing, said Gus Melonas, a company spokesman. Four crew members were hospitalized in Great Falls and another was flown to a burn center in Salt Lake City.

Honor defense angers feminists

■BRAZIL - Brazilian feminists are outraged by the second acquittal of a man who argued he killed his wife and her lover in a legitimate defense of honor. Though the "honor" defense is not part of Brazil's legal code, it is commonly accepted by courts, especially those in tiny, rural towns in the interior. The issue returned to the spotlight Thursday when a jury in Parana state court acquitted Joao Lopes, a bricklayer who caught his wife with another man in a hotel in Apucarana, a small city in Brazil's southern farming belt.

Former Albanian officials arrested

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Albanian authorities have begun arresting former leaders associated with Enver Hoxha, the late Stalinist dictator, Albania's chief anti-Communist party reported Sunday.

The Democratic Party, in a telex received in Vienna, said Manush Myftiu and Kino Buxheli were detained Saturday and brought to prison in Tirana, Albania's capital.

Their arrests were witnessed by prison workers, whose accounts were reliable, said the telex. Both are former Politburo members and held other high office, it said.

There was no independent confirmation of the arrests, said to have followed a rally of Democratic Party supporters. An estimated 25,000 people gathered at the All Dem stadium cheered as speakers called for the eradication of Communism's vestiges in Albania.

The meeting Saturday represented the biggest anti-Communist rally in Albania since strikes in May forced the ruling Communists in the Party of Labor — now the Socialist Party — to share power despite an election victory in April.

The telex Sunday cited reliable sources as saying more arrests of former Politburo members associated with Stalinist excesses would be made.

News of the reported detentions came amid growing sentiment in Albania to punish key Communist figures considered responsible for instituting and maintaining Europe's most repressive dictatorship for more than four decades.

Hoxha's widow, Nexhmije, was summoned last week to Albania's Headquarters of Investigation and questioned on allegations that her family had abused privileges for 47 years.

President Ramiz Alia, Hoxha's successor in 1985, ushered in reform last December, when he permitted other political parties. But Alia, Hoxha's prime minister, had refused to condemn his mentor, and official moves against Hoxha's family would have been unthinkable several months ago.

Boy dies in fall down water pipe

NEW YORK (AP) — A 12-year-old boy tumbled 600 feet to his death Saturday down a water pipe after he and two friends went exploring at a construction site.

Rescuers spent 15 hours trying to reach the boy, winding four miles through sewage pipes at the construction site in New York City's Bronx section.

"He was just badly crushed by the impact on his body," said Jerry Sanford, a fire department spokesman.

Donre Carroll and two friends entered the pipe Saturday afternoon at a horizontal section and were trapped in a U-shaped portion that bent downward.

The other boys, Anton Dennis and Giovanni Rios, both 12, were rescued before they could slip downward, Sanford said.

"He must have wandered away or continued or got separated," Sanford said. "These kids were completely in the dark."

Using high-powered binoculars, rescuers spotted the boy's bloody body Saturday night in a shallow puddle at the bottom of the 36-inch-wide pipe.

During the search involving more than 150 rescuers, Mayor David Dinkins rushed to the construction site, where questions arose over who was responsible for capping the open shaft.

Genevieve Brooks, deputy borough president in the Bronx, said her office will investigate why the pipe wasn't covered.

Attridge, a specialist in Hellenic Judaism, second century church history, and the New Testament, came to Notre Dame in 1985 after eight years on the faculty of Southern Methodist University's Perkins School of Theology. The most recent of his seven books are "Nag Hammadi Codex I (The Jung Codex)" and "Hebrews: A Commentary on the Epistle to the Hebrews."

Attridge received his Ph.D. from Harvard in 1975. While still a candidate for his doctorate, he studied at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem on a Harvard travelling fellowship.

Leaders of the republics approved the plan shortly after the presidency.

The presidency began the closed-door session only hours after the arrival of Dutch Foreign Minister Hans Van den Broek, current president of the 12-nation European Community, who was carrying the peace plan.

"We have received sufficient positive indications that make us hopeful that we can conclude this agreement" with all parties, he said.

Serbia was the last holdout, accepting the EC plan Saturday. But even as the peace process was going on, so was the bloodshed. Five people were killed Sunday in renewed fighting, Croatian officials said in Zagreb.

Kremlin assures West missiles under control

MOSCOW (AP) — The tiny but deadly chance that Soviet nuclear arms will fall into the wrong hands is worrying the West. The Soviets sought to make fresh assurances Sunday that they will remain under Kremlin control.

"I think that any time you have 27,000 nuclear weapons, and you have political instability and uncertainty, whatever the dangers are, they go up some," said Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee.

"But I think that the odds are still overwhelmingly against an accident," Nunn said after meeting with the new Soviet defense minister, Yevgeny Shaposhnikov.

Nunn, interviewed by The Associated Press, said he expected to raise the issue Monday with President Mikhail Gorbachev.

Visiting British Prime Minister John Major said he sought assurances from Gorbachev and Russian President Boris Yeltsin during meetings Sunday "that the utmost care would be taken that nuclear weapons would be kept under strict central control." He said both agreed.

The view that a nuclear accident was extremely improbable was shared by a half-dozen Soviet and Western experts interviewed on the subject following the failed Moscow coup.

By far, the majority of Soviet missiles and bombers capable of hitting the West are in the Russian republic, according to Soviet and Western sources.

About 15 to 20 percent of the strategic nuclear force consists of blockbuster SS-18 missiles in Kazakhstan, on Russia's southern flank.

Additionally, the Soviets have based an unknown percentage of their long-range SS-24 missiles on trains that move through the second-most populous Soviet republic, the Ukraine, also to Russia's south, according to Soviet and U.S. sources. They spoke on condition of anonymity.

Shorter-range tactical nuclear weapons are stationed in other republics, such as Byelorussia to the West. These, in Nunn's view, could pose a greater danger.

"We have to ask the question, 'Are they more the source of deterrent stability or are they more the source of invitations for terrorist groups or even opposing forces in a civil war?'" said Nunn.

Libertarians hope to grow in '92

CHICAGO (AP) — Society digests new ideas in three phases, says Libertarian Party member Jon Kalb. First they're ridiculed, then debated, and finally accepted. The Libertarians believe they have gotten past the ridicule phase.

"I think we're in the phase where our ideas are starting to be debated and I think people who consider our ideas with an open mind are starting to accept them," Kalb said at the party's presidential nominating convention, which continued through Sunday.

Acceptance is the most Libertarians dare hope for in 1992; they acknowledge that their presidential nominee, Andre Marrou, hardly stands a chance.

With the Democrats in disarray 14 months before the election, President Bush looks like a shoo-in for another term, said delegate Dottie-Lou Brokaw of Woodstock, N.Y. "To say otherwise would be silly," she said.

But like many members of the country's third-largest political party, Brokaw was confident of winning converts next year.

The Libertarians hope to be on the ballot in every state, and say they expect to get a lot of anti-Bush votes from people who see no significant difference between the GOP and the Democrats.

The platform of the 20-year-old Libertarian Party is radically different from those of the major parties. Libertarians advocate personal freedom and voluntary cooperation. They oppose taxes and regulation and see national defense as the federal government's main function.

Several convention speakers said they favored making all drugs legal, under the Libertarian view that the government should let people make their own mistakes.

Many Libertarians find their individualist philosophy defined in the works of author Ayn Rand, whose best-known novels are "The Fountainhead" and "Atlas Shrugged."

The four-day convention was attended by 453 delegates from all 50 states — mostly white men in their 30s and 40s.

Gary D. McGath of Penacook, N.H., said he was splitting his time between the Libertarian convention and the World Science Fiction Convention at another hotel.

"There's a lot of overlap between the Libertarians and the sci-fi people," he said. "They're both interested in the future, new possibilities, the frontier."

The Libertarian Party, founded in 1971 in Colorado, met its greatest success in the 1980 election when a ticket headed by Edward Clark received 921,000 votes.

The party's 1988 ticket, headed by Ron Paul, garnered 430,000 votes compared to 47.9 million for the Bush-Quayle ticket.

Marrou was the vice presidential candidate in 1988. In his acceptance speech Saturday, he pledged, if elected, to repeal the federal income tax and abolish the Internal Revenue Service.

Marrou, a 52-year-old commercial real estate agent from Las Vegas, was opposed by Richard Benjamin Boddie, a charismatic motivational speaker from Huntington Beach, Calif. Marrou got 257 votes to 155 for Boddie.

Dr. Nancy Lord, a physician and lawyer from Washington, D.C., defeated Boddie on the third ballot Sunday for the vice-presidential nomination. There were three other aspirants, including New Hampshire state Representative Calvin Warburton.

Don Ernsberger, a national committee member from Warminster, Pa., conceded there was little difference between the candidates: "Ask them about 50 issues and they'll agree on 48."

But Marrou had ruffled some feathers when he announced he would apply for federal matching campaign funds if his campaign met the Federal Election Commission's requirement of raising $5,000 in each of 20 states.

35 inmates injured in California jail riot

SANTA CLARITA, Calif. (AP) — More than 90 inmates rioted early Sunday at a Los Angeles County jail after a face-off between Hispanic and black prisoners. Thirty-five inmates were injured.

The hour long melee stemmed from an earlier argument over use of a telephone, sheriff's Deputy Rich Erickson said.

Hispanic and black inmates confronted each other in a dormitory in the maximum-security area of Pitchess Honor Rancho, about 30 miles north-east of Los Angeles, Erickson said.

All 92 prisoners in the dorm, some with homemade knives, joined in the riot, he said.

The 35 injured prisoners were taken to three hospitals for treatment of concussions, stab wounds and cuts. All were in good condition.

The fight stemmed from an incident Saturday when a Hispanic inmate and black inmate argued over use of a telephone, Erickson said.

The phones are used by inmates on a first-come, first-served basis.

"That argument evolved into a fight hours later and the inmates paired off with their respective races," Erickson said.

From Madonna to Iacocca, symbolic analysts succeed

Lee Iacocca provides an example of a "symbolic analyst", according to Robert Reich, a Harvard professor. His success demonstrates a trend that rewards problem solvers and manipulators of information, but hurts traditional blue-collar workers in America, says Reich.

BOSTON (AP) — In today's emerging global economy, Lee Iacocca, Madonna and Stephen King all share the same job title.

No, they're not collaborating on a musical thriller about Chrysler; they are what a Harvard University professor calls "symbolic analysts."

Their success demonstrates a trend that rewards problem solvers and manipulators of information, while spelling trouble for traditional blue-collar workers in America, says Robert Reich, an economics guru at Harvard's John F. Kennedy School of Government. To a large extent, this reflects a world marketplace where national borders have lost much of their meaning, Reich says. Big corporations increasingly spread their webs abroad. Engineers and entertainers also profit by selling their services in foreign markets.

In the meantime, workers on assembly lines and in other routine jobs are sucked into international competition, as companies shop around the world to find cheap labor.

"Routine production jobs (in America) are a vanishing species," Reich said.

In his recent book, "The Work of Nations," Reich describes how the nation's upper tier has been essentially seceding from the lower tier, as the wealthy move into the global arena and leave less-skilled workers by the wayside.

Some economists take a different view.

"You just can't support all those (white-collar) jobs in absence of a strong manufacturing sector," said Andrew Sum, director of Northeastern University's Center for Labor Market Studies.

Using Massachusetts as an example, Sum said the sharp decline in the state's manufacturing sector helped drag down other areas such as banking and real estate.

David Wyss, research director for DRI-McGraw Hill in Lexington, said that while the global market is at work in some industries, it does not apply in every case. Many businesses cannot divorce themselves from the local economy, he said.

"If you're building houses (in Massachusetts), you don't even talk about what's happening in Pennsylvania, much less Transylvania," he said.

But Wyss agrees the global trend will continue.

"We're not to one world yet, but we're on the way," he said.

Under Reich's scenario, the larger global market should be viewed according to three basic types of jobs:

- Routine production services, which include not only assembly line workers but also employees who spend the day entering computer data such as credit card payments and hospital records.

- In-person services, in which workers provide services directly to customers. This includes a vast array of jobs, from waitresses to retail sales workers to hospital attendants.

- Symbolic-analyst services, which involve problem solving, brokering and finding creative ways to use data, words and other representations. These include engineers, lawyers, advertisers, entertainers and executives.

The trend not only in the United States but around the world has been to pay better wages to the final category, Reich said.

In his book, he estimates that the average income of the poorest fifth of Americans declined by about 5 percent between 1977 and 1990, while the richest fifth became about 9 percent wealthier.

As this trend persists, income gaps in the United States will continue to grow, as will the need to spend more money to retrain workers and teach children in public schools, Reich said.

"The question is, are we willing as a nation to invest in the productivity of the bottom two-thirds of our work force?" Reich said.

Reich said the first necessary step is to educate the public in how their interests are tied to a world economy.

"The failure to understand the changes, the real picture of the new economy, is one of our biggest impediments," he said.

Phone crisis: five unused area codes left for North America

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Hello! Hello?! "Area code crisis" calling.

But don't hang up. There's a solution.

After California splits the San Francisco Bay area code Monday — the first of three planned divisions in the state's near future — only five unused area codes will be left for the rest of North America.

However, a revised area code system adding 640 authorized three-digit area codes to the existing 152 is due in mid-1995, just in time to save the day.

"We do have a short-term area code crisis because we're running out, but we're prepared for change," said Cynthia Lucenius, media relations manager for Bellcore, which assists the nation's seven regional telephone companies.

"The thing is, in 1960 or even 1970 no one really envisioned this problem. Now, a lot of homes have two phone lines and new businesses open and, of course, all the new technology is taking up the access lines."

Blame it on population growth and 30 million Californians' love affairs with the telephone, facsimile machines, pagers and computers that have voracious appetites for telephone access lines.

"People have phones at home, at the office, in their car and they carry them around now," said Pacific Bell's Paul Hirsch, who oversees California's area code changes. "They can't get away from them."

California, which got its first area code for Los Angeles — 213 — in 1947, has a record 10 area codes but soon will break the mark again with a total of

13. More than two dozen states have only one area code.

In the San Francisco Bay area, the 415 area code will split Monday with communities east of the huge inlet — Oakland, Berkeley and all of Contra Costa and Alameda counties — becoming 510, nicknamed the "five-and-dime." The last 415 split came in 1959 when 408 was created for the San Jose area.

Pacific Bell is allowing a five-month grace period through Jan. 26 for people to get used to the change so both 510 and 415 area codes will get through. A recording will warn callers that the old code's time is up.

On Nov. 2 in Southern California, the 213 area code will split for the third time, making Los Angeles the only city with three area codes. Areas to the south and west of downtown Los Angeles and Hollywood will become 310. The area north of Los Angeles was assigned the 818 area code in 1984.

In November 1992, the 714 area code for Orange County and parts of San Diego County will split. A new 909 area code will cover western and central Riverside County, San Bernardino County and eastern Los Angeles County, Pacific Bell says.

Elsewhere in the nation, Maryland will split down the middle with the western half keeping 301 and the Baltimore area becoming 410.

And in New York City, the telephone company expects to create a 917 area code some time in 1993 to overlap some parts of Manhattan, now 212.

Bellcore says the five unused area codes are 210, 810, 910, 706 and 905, the last two just imported from south of the border where they were used for foreign access until a recent Mexico dialing change.

More area codes are needed because telephone number duplications are possible after more than 7 million seven-digit combinations are assigned to each one, and 30 percent are reserved for emergencies.

The current three-digit area code system is limited because they all must have a middle digit of 0 or 1 to tell computer software a call is long distance. Under the new Bellcore-proposed system, middle digits of 2 through 9 could be used.

Telecommunications experts say minimal technological changes are needed if all telephone companies use the 1-plus dialing system already required in most areas; a 1 is dialed before all long distance calls.

Ford leads industry in alternative fuel vehicles

Special to The Observer

Ford currently leads the automotive industry in Alternative Fuel Vehicles. The company has been working on alternative sources of energy for vehicles for more than 30 years.

"We are approaching the limit of what can be accomplished in reducing tailpipe emissions from today's fuels," said Helen Petrauskas, Ford vice president of Environmental and Safety Engineering.

Petrauskas went on to say that the primary alternative fuels will include reformulated gasoline, natural gas, propane or liquefied petroleum gas, methanol and ethanol, and electricity.

Ford announced earlier this year that it will produce a number of Flexible Fuel Vehicles (FFVs) for delivery in 1992. The FFV can burn methanol, gasoline, or any combination of these, from the same tank, and without the driver taking any special action.

Starting in late 1992, Ford will build an international demonstration fleet of 70-100 electric vehicles. Electricity is a promising technology for future vehicle propulsion since the electric vehicle does not emit hydrocarbons, carbon monoxide or nitrogen oxide. In addition, it is noiseless and the power plants generating the electricity can use a wide variety of fuels.

Passenger cars powered by Liquefied Petroleum Gas (LPG) are already on the road. Although the purchase cost of such vehicles is higher, the operating cost of these automobiles is much lower.

Further testing time is still required to assure complete customer satisfaction, but Alternative Fuel Vehicles are nonetheless expected to be in production by the mid-1990s.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Student appalled by ticket buyers' garbage

Dear Editor:

Last Friday I went to J.A.C.C. to purchase my football tickets at 11:30 in the morning. By that time, the long line of students that had formed outside was already gone. However, the space where that line had been was not at all empty. It was completely littered with cushions, bottles, cups, playing cards, newspapers, blankets, paper bags, and wrappers.

I was very surprised and altogether appalled at this sight. I couldn't believe that some students had just left all of their trash right there on the sidewalk.

I'm not writing this letter to condemn students for sleeping out overnight and having a good time while they wait in line. I only want to suggest that those students who left the mess learn to have some respect for their own campus and for the earth as a whole.

HAY!

Artist at SMC uses grass medium for sculpting

By ANNA MARIE TABOR
Saint Mary's Accent Editor

Some sculptors use metals, clay, and marble. Whatever is used, "meaning can be gained by how something makes you feel," said University of Southern Maine's professor of sculpture, Michael Shaughnessy.

For seven years, Shaughnessy has found many meanings in his material of choice: hay. This week he will be combining his talents with Saint Mary's art students in a collaborative hay sculpture.

Shaughnessy's fascination with hay began in graduate school when his interest turned from painting to sculpture. Shaughnessy explained that "all the materials in the world are possible for sculpture" and he used to search feed stores for possibilities. "One day I picked up a bail of hay. It was cheap. For a dollar fifty, I got eighty pounds of hay."

Shaughnessy associated his progressive use of hay with personal relationships. "I kept discovering new things about it. It's almost like knowing someone. There is an initial attraction that continues to grow. Mine (initial attraction) was because it was cheap."

Since then Shaughnessy discovered the "rich associations with hay" that everyone can relate to because it "has been used in every society."

'Pieces change dramatically with the help of students.'

"Hay is different (from traditional sculpting materials) because its associations aren't with art, they're with something else, and that makes it a powerful material because it brings all those associations with it," Shaughnessy explained. Those include themes of food, bedding and shelter, which recur in the artist's works.

The Maine resident also uses hay as a symbol of the peasant and rural working classes and their inherent traditions and values.

Beginning a few days before the show,

"Prairie Cross," a 10' by 18' by 24' structure made out of hay and wood, was completed in 1990 by Michael Shaughnessy. He will have an exhibition in Moreau Gallery at Saint Mary's this week.

the artist, assisted by Saint Mary's students will construct a framework of wooden 1-by-2s, to be covered with hay, bound together with twine.

The special kind of relationship that develops in a collaboration project such as this one is satisfying to Shaughnessy. "I take conceptual control over it. The students help (run warp and weave) and everything comes together. (The students) have insights into other aspects of it. Pieces change dramatically with the help of students," Shaughnessy said.

'All the materials in the world are possible for sculpture.'

A vital aspect of the development of a project is the interaction between the people involved. "Doing a repetitious activity, it's very physical, a group can come together around it," Shaughnessy explained. There is plenty of time for talking while weaving and the students learn from each other.

Shaughnessy has had about twenty-five solo exhibitions and fourteen group exhibitions in the past seven years with "the focus on universities, no commercial galleries."

This week Shaughnessy is delighted to be at Saint Mary's Hammes Gallery because of a long family association with the community and his fondness for the faculty and students. "The people here are wonderful. There are hidden gems with quality works."

The construction of Michael

"Village Pale," shown during installation in 1990 at the Anderson Gallery in Virginia Commonwealth University, is representative of the work Shaughnessy has created over the past six years.

Shaughnessy's hay sculpture is scheduled to begin on Sunday, September 1, and will take several days to complete. Media are welcome to chronicle or photograph the progression of the construction.

Shaughnessy is also giving lectures on Tuesday at 9:30 in Moreau Hall and Thursday at 7:30 in Carrol Auditorium.

Also opening this year's exhibition season at the Moreau Galleries are photographic works by Sylvia Taccani. Both shows are the first to be mounted in the newly reconfigured galleries. Gone is the old basement gallery which was difficult for patrons to locate. All exhibit space is now located on the second, or main floor of Moreau Hall.

Shaughnessy is pleased with the new location since it "seems like it's in a respected place rather than in the basement."

The exhibits will run from Friday, September 6 through October 4. A public reception for the artists will be held on Friday, September 6 from 7 to 9 p.m. in the gallery space. Admission to both the reception and the exhibitions is free.

Saint Mary's professor proves crocodiles are for the birds

By JOHN O'BRIEN
Accent Editor

Research by a biology professor at Saint Mary's has provided further proof that, in evolutionary terms, crocodiles are the nearest living relatives to birds.

That's not bad for a guy who has never even seen the crocodiles in question.

Thomas Platt is an assistant professor of biology at Saint Mary's whose specialty is in parasitology (the study of parasitic organisms). He made the discovery by examining parasites that were found in Australian freshwater crocodiles in the 1970s and 1980s by two Australian veterinarians.

After a researcher in New Zealand examined the parasites and couldn't figure out what they were, he sent them to Platt. For a long time, Platt had little luck with identifying the tiny creatures.

"I spent three or four months just staring at these things," he said. "It was very frustrating."

The parasites are unlike any Platt had seen before. Until then, most of his work centered on flatworm parasites, found in the circulatory system of turtles.

"They were very bizarre," Platt said.

One day, Platt noticed a feature he had overlooked. Upon examination of the parasite, he discovered that what everyone thought to be one hermaphroditic parasite was actually a female parasite totally imbedded in the body of a male parasite.

Thus, the specimens were actually two parasites in one, he said.

Similar parasites found in turtles are hermaphroditic—they possess both male and female reproductive organs. These new parasites were actually a strange variation of a group of parasites, known as schistosomes, that are common in birds and mammals.

Schistosomes always have both males and females, Platt said. These new schistosomes are the first known members of the species to have the female totally inside the male, Platt said.

Schistosomes are best known for causing schistosomiasis, a parasitic disease common in tropical regions of the world.

The disease, which is usually contracted by bathing or swimming in infested water, is strangely popular in Hollywood, Platt said.

"They kill off a lot of soap opera characters with it," he said, laughing. "If they want someone to die of an exotic illness, they'll have them go to Africa and catch it and then have a long, protracted illness before dying," he said.

While known to attack humans, schistosomes are also common in birds, Platt said. By discovering schistosomes in crocodiles (rather than types of parasites common in other reptiles), Platt and his colleagues added more proof that crocodiles actually evolved from the same ancestors as birds—not other reptiles.

"This was the first time that one of these schistosomes was found in something other than a bird or mammal," Platt said.

While this discovery links crocodiles and birds, the only links to mammals it suggests are ancient ones, Platt said. It's possible that hundreds of millions of years ago, mammals, birds and reptiles all may have descended from some mammal-like reptiles, Platt said.

"Those mammal-like reptiles would have been radically different than anything that would be around today," he said. "It's a very distant relative."

The reason this discovery is important to Platt is that it fills a gap in the evolutionary puzzle, he said.

"This is one more small piece of evidence that supports the theory of evolution," he said.

Witnesses

everyone out. He had to be loud, and people got out pretty quickly. Demetrius was in and out. I don't know if he was inside when the cops came, but he never came out by me. A lot of people left by the back door."

Another student who spoke on condition of anonymity indicated that DuBose and Mirer did not arrive at the party until very near the time of the police raid.

Yet another student—Terry Coyne—introduced himself by name and related scenes of alleged police brutality.

"There were a lot of people in the parking lot," said Coyne, "and the police told us to move it inside. So people started filtering out into the back yard, but it wasn't loud or out of control. In fact, it was pretty boring and we were going to leave when the place was flooded with police officers. They were physically and verbally abusive and threatening. I saw one officer throw a kid against the wall of Apartment #11—the cop was screaming that the kid wasn't moving fast enough.

"I was scared that the cop would start hitting me, and I wouldn't be surprised if they did start beating people with nightsticks. I saw another guy walking along the fence, on his way out, when a policeman came after him, yelling. The kid said 'I'm leaving,' but the cop cornered him against the fence and yelled at him. The kid had nowhere to go because the officer was in his way.

"The cop hit the kid in the back of the head, and the kid's head dropped," continued Coyne. "After he hit the kid, the cop said 'Fine, you're coming with me' and handcuffed him. The kid did absolutely nothing wrong. I saw this whole thing and yelled at the cop, but my friend said that we'd better get out of there, because we didn't want to get arrested. I called the ACLU office in Indianapolis, and I went to the South Bend Tribune as well as WNDU-TV. I'm willing to testify to this in a court of law."

In light of recent beatings, robberies and incidents of harassment in the neighborhoods surrounding Notre Dame, Coyne expressed great surprise at the activities of the South Bend Police Department.

"There seems to be a pattern of abuse," said Coyne. "A friend of mine, who is also a former baseball player, was arrested for yelling at a police officer while his friends were being beaten up in front of the police officers. This happened around the Notre Dame Apartments, which I think are used for government housing now. My friend spent the night in jail for swearing at the police."

A group of about 30 residents from Cavanaugh Hall was directed away from the apartment complex by police officers.

"They just told us all to leave," said one student, who spoke on condition of anonymity. "They just kind of pointed, and we followed the crowd. We walked all the way to Bridget McGuire's before our ride found us. They [the police] didn't seem too concerned with our safety. They just told us to leave."

Volleyball

did a great job. That goes to show just what kind of competitor she is. She wanted the ball."

"Everyone just has good days," Turner said. "The pass was there, the set was perfect, and there was nothing I could do besides put it down."

Game five was contested using a new format called rally scoring. Points were won on every serve rather than the conventional rule that only the serving team can score points.

This turned out to be good for both teams, as neither could hold serve early in the decisive game. Purdue ran off three straight points to grab the momentum and an 8-5 lead, but behind Choquette and Turner, the Irish rallied back.

"That's what we need from Chris and Alicia," Brown said. "They're our co-captains and we need them to play well."

Sophomore Molly Stark and junior Marilyn Cragin also played key roles in the fifth game. Stark's kill stopped the Boilermaker run, and Cragin and Turner each had two big kills down the stretch to seal the victory.

"I really believed that we could beat Purdue, and I thought it would be five games," Brown said. "It's got to do a lot for the team confidence-wise, and in just believing in themselves."

"I thought that might be one of the biggest hurdles coming into this job, getting the team to believe that we're good and believe in ourselves, and that we can compete with anyone. To start off on a winning note, beating a Big 10 school, that's got to be a plus for us and has to help towards our quest for an NCAA bid."

can be had if a police officer testifies that a person was, in his opinion, intoxicated. The uncorroborated word of a civilian that a person was intoxicated is also acceptable.

"Still, any testimony must be believed by a jury or judge—they must be convinced beyond any reasonable doubt. Normally, misdemeanors will only go before a judge, unless the defendant specifically asks for a jury trial."

Yet where Notre Dame coach Lou Holtz is concerned, the matter is closed.

"Overall the team handled it well," stated Holtz. "Life is full of distractions. All we can do is accept the situation and run the program as best as we possibly can. What's happened over the last 48 hours doesn't have anything to do with our being prepared for the opening ballgame. This is a closed matter as far as I'm concerned unless some information comes out that I'm not aware of now."

"I truly believe that this situation was just the wrong people in the wrong place at the wrong time. Going to parties is just one of those things. Everybody is gone for the summer, they come back and they've been in school two or three days, so everybody gets together on the weekend. You look forward to seeing the friends you haven't seen in a long time. I know when I was in college I looked forward to seeing my friends."

Rick Mirer

Demetrius DuBose

Holtz went on to rule out the possibility that his players had been singled out by the police.

"I don't think that they were singled out," said Holtz. "It's hard to be a policeman. I have too much respect to believe that the police would single them out. There were circumstances to Demetrius being where he was and Rick being where he was, and the policemen don't always know that. I talked to the man who called the police and he said there was no disturbance, no rowdiness—no reason to call the police. But he had received a mandate from the owner of the complex to disburse the crowd if it got too large."

The incident is still open, however, where the Notre Dame Office of Student Affairs and South Bend Police Department are concerned. Disciplinary action on the part of the University, in light of the fact that DuBose is a minor, though his consumption of alcohol has not been proven, remains viable. Legal action on civil charges of public intoxication and disorderly conduct may also be forthcoming.

Rene Ferran contributed to this report.

Cunningham out for Eagles, McMahon brilliant in relief

(AP)—Randall Cunningham and Dave Krieg are gone, and Bobby Hebert and Jim McMahon are back.

Cunningham, the Eagles' happy-footed passer, was carried off early in the second quarter Sunday with torn ligaments in his left knee. McMahon, who enjoyed his greatest days as the leader of the Bears, stepped in to throw for two TDs as the Eagles beat the Packers 20-3.

Krieg broke the thumb on his passing hand, forcing Jeff Kemp to step in. While Kemp performed well, he couldn't overcome Hebert, who threw a TD pass with 1:11 to play that gave the Saints a 27-24 victory over the Seahawks. It was Hebert's first outing following a one-year contract holdout.

Cunningham was carted off the field after the first play of the second quarter. A preliminary diagnosis said he tore two ligaments in his left knee and could miss the season. More tests were scheduled Monday.

A preliminary diagnosis by team physician Vincent DiStefano revealed that Cunningham had torn the medial collateral and posterior cruciate ligaments of his left knee.

OFFICIAL

"It has been a good policy to allow all legal civil matters to be handled through their proper channels and this does not include the football coach. Nevertheless I am forced to make a decision—now due to time restraints. I am of the opinion that Rick and Demetrius were the victims of the situation and not the cause of it. It is important to note that the police were not called because of a disturbance, rowdiness, intoxication, or the crowd being out of control. They were summoned because the security man was instructed by the owner of the complex, who was out of town, to call the police and disburse the crowd if it became too large. I have every reason to believe that Rick and Demetrius due to extenuating and mitigating circumstances happened to be at the wrong place at the wrong time and I'm of the opinion this will be confirmed in the future. Most of the time our team rules are more demanding than civil laws and with good justification. It is a fact that Rick and Demetrius violated a team rule and disciplinary action has been taken. In accordance with past team policy this will not be public information. The violations of our team rules were a serious error and have been treated as such. The penalty does not include dismissal or suspension. Our willingness to discipline an athlete with suspension, even though it jeopardizes our chances of winning, in the past has been well documented. To keep an athlete from participating is not the only way nor always the fair way to get a message across to the players that they must make good decisions. Perhaps the most important mandate we have is to teach people how to make intelligent decisions even though the environment is not conducive to this thought process.

I have learned much from the University of Notre Dame concerning standards of acceptable behavior and the proper way to handle individuals who fail to meet them. They look at the situation as well as the previous record of the people involved and we have tried to do the same. To my knowledge both Demetrius and Rick have been positive members of the student body and this entered into our decision.

This action may or may not be popular but that is irrelevant. However I believe it is fair. Unless some other information comes to my attention that I am presently not aware of, this matter is closed."

—Lou Holtz

Indiana Code - Title 7.1 Alcoholic Beverages

7.1-5-1-3 Public intoxication prohibited
Sec. 3. Public Intoxication Prohibited. It is a Class B misdemeanor for a person to be in a public place or a place of public resort in a state of intoxication.
Notes of Decisions
1. Public place
If a person is found in a state of intoxication at a social party held at the residence of another, he is not thereby rendered liable to prosecution for being found intoxicated in a public place. State v. Sowers, 52 Ind. 311. Enclosed hallway and stairway areas of apartment house were not "public place or place of public resort" within context of this section. State v. Culp, App. 1982, 433 N.E.2d 823, transfer denied 446 N.E.2d969.
Private residence, including private grounds directly outside of it, is not "public place or place of public resort" within ambit of this section. Id.
2. Inference of intoxication
Deputy marshal's perception of odor of alcohol and defendant's admission, during routine traffic check, that he had recently consumed some beer were insufficient to cause deputy to reasonably infer that defendant was "intoxicated" and in violation of public intoxication statute [this section]. Irwin v. State, App. 1978, 383 N.E.2d 1086.
7. Evidence—In general
In prosecution for public drunkenness, proof of the place in question may be made by either direct or circumstantial evidence. Wilhite v. State, 1947, 71 N.E.2d 925, 225 Ind. 45.
In prosecution for public drunkenness, the credibility of the witnesses and the weight of the evidence were solely for trial court to determine. Id.
8. —Weight and sufficiency of evidence

With the credibility of the police under attack for the public intoxication charge, it would seem that the disorderly conduct charge will also fall by the wayside. If they can't even prove that the pair was drunk, how can the police even hope to make the disorderly conduct charge stick?

Perhaps the two were in the wrong place at the wrong time—namely a party. But remember also that these are two college students, hanging out with some friends at a party on a Friday night, with no practice scheduled for the following day. No fighting, no charges of sexual abuse. Just chillin' out with some friends.

In a situation involving prominent persons, the police must realize that their actions will be scrutinized, and so must have insurmountable evidence that the people involved are guilty. In this case, it appears that the police don't have that proof that Rick Mirer and Demetrius DuBose were intoxicated and disorderly. And since they were two of only three arrested, perhaps the police should be somewhat more lenient.

These are not problem players. DuBose does community service—not because anyone makes him, but because he wants to. Rick Mirer doesn't chafe at being a role model. Athletic director Dick Rosenthal supported the players, saying they have no history of disciplinary problems.

Maybe a compromise could be reached. If the police drop the charges, it wouldn't be too much of a strain for the players to do a couple of community service spots.

Community-service spots, in the form of stay-in-school talks to high schoolers, would carry credence for only one reason—at heart, Rick Mirer and Demetrius DuBose are good people. Not even flimsy charges leveled by the South Bend police can change that.

RecSports/NVA holds sixth annual biathlon at lakes

By DAN MCKENNA
Sports Writer

On Saturday, Notre Dame students and faculty tested their endurance as they competed in the Sixth Annual Biathlon, sponsored by Rec Sports/NVA.

The competition consisted of a half-mile swim across Saint Joseph's Lake followed by a two-mile run around both Saint Joseph's and Saint Mary's lake. The race was won by the men's doubles team of Mike Keeley and Jim Doran in a time of 22:28.

"I was swimming as hard as I could because I knew I didn't have to run," Keeley said, who was the first person out of the water with a time of 9:02. "Going into the race I thought we had a real good chance (to win), but nothing was for sure since we were going up against good swimmers."

Varsity swimmers competed in the event for both physical and social reasons, as the upcoming swim season is steadily approaching.

"I want to see how good a shape I'm in to prepare me for the season," said senior Roger Rand. "It's also the first chance for us to get out with all of the freshmen and have some fun."

Non-varsity athletes were welcome to join the field, and some of them had very interesting motives.

"My girlfriend decided she wanted to try this," senior Brent Procida said. "I told her that I could beat her so she conned me into it." Procida's girlfriend beat him by fifteen minutes.

Competition was split into varsity and non-varsity athletes with categories for singles and doubles. Doubles were teams which consisted of one swimmer and one runner, who tagged once the swimmer left the water.

First place winners in each category were as follows, men's singles: varsity—Kevin Scott (22:43) and non-varsity—Todd Rambasek (24:17); women's singles: varsity—Angie Roby (24:26) and non-varsity—Cindy Chan (28:51); men's doubles: varsity—Keeley/Doran; women's doubles: varsity—Katie Andrews/Becky Wood (23:18); and mixed doubles—non-varsity, Rick Nettles/Lisa Murdock (26:26).

"This is one of the play events we do every year," swimming coach Tim Welsh said. "It's just for fun, and I'm sure we'll be out here again next year."

Capriati into US Open quarters vs. Sabatini

NEW YORK (AP) — Jennifer Capriati's most excellent adventure, a race against time and history by the youngest dudette in tennis, is taking her into the U.S. Open quarterfinals for a supreme showdown with defending champ Gabriela Sabatini.

Capriati is like, y'know, no bogus fighter on the court, and she proved it most definitely in a 52-minute, 6-1, 6-2 romp Sunday over Jo Durie, a durable Brit more than twice her age.

Holtz: 'This is a closed matter' Coach says two violated team rules

By DAVE DIETEMAN
Sports Editor

Two Notre Dame football standouts—quarterback Rick Mirer and linebacker Demetrius DuBose—were apprehended by officers of the South Bend Police Department in a Friday night raid at the Lafayette Square apartment complex.

Approximately 500 people were frequenting several parties in the apartment complex, which is monitored by an off-duty South Bend police officer. Reportedly, the apartment managers had requested all people who were not residents of the complex to leave the premises.

Mirer, DuBose, and another Notre Dame student—John P. Neal of Morrissey Hall—were apprehended while South Bend police officers were disbursing the party-goers.

According to reports published in the South Bend Tribune, DuBose claims to have been talking to a woman when he was apprehended by the police. Mirer stated that he was arrested after inquiring why DuBose had been placed in a squad car. Both players believed that they had been badgered because of the fact that they are football players.

Eyewitnesses, who spoke on condition of anonymity, have stated that DuBose and Mirer "positively did not drink anything while they were there."

Lieutenant Norval Williams, public information officer for the South Bend Police Department, told the Tribune that he did not believe Mirer or DuBose were either drunken or disorderly. Williams noted that Mirer requested a Breathalyzer test, but that the arresting officer—who was not named in the official Police Department press release—refused to administer the test.

Williams has since been forbidden by Chief Ronald Marciniak from speaking to the press in regards to the Mirer and DuBose incident.

Despite the players' apparent sobriety—and the arresting officer's refusal to administer a Breathalyzer test—they were charged with public intoxication and disorderly conduct. This apparent lack of procedure, however, is legal under Indiana state law.

"Public intoxication is a Class B misdemeanor, not an infraction," related attorney Charles Lahey, a private practitioner in South Bend. "But you don't need a Breathalyzer. Conviction

Witnesses report action of South Bend police

By DAVE DIETEMAN
Sports Editor

While rumors have circulated regarding the behavior of Rick Mirer and Demetrius DuBose at Lafayette Square Friday night, several students present at apartment complex have come forward to tell what they purport to be the true story of the events of that night.

These witnesses paint a picture of a quiet but crowded apartment complex, where students—some under the legal drinking age—were congregated. Yet the story changes to one of chaos, horror and confusion upon the arrival of perhaps 30 officers of the South Bend Police Department.

"Mirer was outside the whole time; I never saw him come in," stated one student who was in attendance at the Friday night party and spoke on condition of anonymity. "DuBose was in the apartment—he's friends with the guys who live there—and he may have been drinking before. But it's tough to say if he was drinking previously because he's always talking. I know positively that he didn't have any drinks here, because we ran out of beer long before he arrived. Mirer was just hanging out.

"I was standing in the doorway later—I imagine Mirer was outside—when a police captain and five or six other cops came in and asked me if there were more than 20 people inside. The door was open and the answer was obvious, so he told me to get the people out, and I really didn't know how to go about it. There were about 150 people inside. He came in and started yelling, trying to get Mirer and DuBose: Faces in the crowd?

At schools like Miami, Arkansas or Colorado the events of this past weekend would not have garnered so much attention. Sadly, at many other schools the arrest of prominent athletes is nothing shocking.

Up until this time, however, the University of Notre Dame has more or less escaped this ignominy, perhaps through the luck of the Irish, or, more likely, through a conscientious effort by the administration and athletic department to keep its image clean.

It would have been more understandable if Rick Mirer and Demetrius DuBose had been involved in a criminal act. Feelings of regret and pity would have been prevalent, but people would understand why the police had to arrest them.

Instead, based on the testimony of those who were at the party, including police officers, the South Bend police have an incredibly weak case on their hands.

The charge leveled by the players themselves, who argued that they were singled out by the police, bears investigation. Five-hundred people were at this party, virtually all of whom were drinking. With Rick Mirer's picture in virtually every sports magazine and on countless television shows, and DuBose's face nearly as recognizable, it is inconceivable that the police didn't know with whom they were dealing.

RICH KURZ
Associate Sports Editor

With so many other people at the party, why would the police arrest two prominent football players? Only one other person was taken down to the station by the police. It sounds like they were hunting big game and got more than they bargained for.

As for the charges of public intoxication, well, we'll never know if the pair had actually been drinking. The officials neglected to administer Breathalyzer exams, and even when the athletes requested them, the police failed to test the two. Sounds pretty suspicious. A little too convenient an escape for the police department.

Add to that the fact that an officer on the scene told the South Bend Tribune that the two weren't drunk, and it would seem that the police's case is falling apart.

ND volleyball superb in Brown's debut

By RENE FERRAN
Associate Sports Editor

It wasn't easy, but the Notre Dame volleyball team made coach Debbie Brown's debut a successful one.

The Irish came back from a two-games-to-one deficit to defeat Purdue Saturday night, 15-10, 10-15, 9-15, 15-13, 16-14. It was only the second time in 12 meetings that Notre Dame came out victorious over the Boilermakers.

"It couldn't have been any closer," Brown said in her first collegiate match since 1988. "I'm really proud of the team, how they hung in there and fought back."

Early on, it didn't appear as if the Irish would have any trouble with Purdue. Notre Dame stormed out of the gate, scoring the first seven points and taking a 10-1 lead in the first game.

"I thought we were very nervous," said Purdue coach Carol Dewey. "Nothing went right for us in the beginning."

The Boilermakers, however, shook off their early troubles to close within 13-10 before the Irish could close out the game.

Game two was more closely contested. The lead saw-sawed back and forth until Purdue put on a spurt, scoring six straight points to break a 6-6 tie and take command.

Game three was much the same. Notre Dame took an early 5-3 lead, but the Boilermakers rattled off eight straight to grab an 11-5 advantage.

The Irish fought back, climbing to within two, 11-9. After a Purdue timeout, however, it got the serve back and junior Gail Halink served out the game, nailing an ace for the game-winner.

In game four, Notre Dame refound the magic it had in the first game. With senior co-captain Chris Choquette leading the way with six kills and three aces, the Irish opened up an 11-3 lead.

"I think that our players took it too lightly after we got up 2-1," Dewey said.

But the Boilermakers would not die. Behind their outstanding defensive play and some sloppy play by Notre Dame, they retook the lead, 12-11.

"We got a little tentative," said Brown. "We stopped being aggressive and stopped calling for balls. That's something we'll need to work on, that if we get a team down by that much, that we keep them down."

"They played much better defense than I would have anticipated. We didn't have any kills that weren't touched by someone."

However, the savior for the Irish in the fourth game was outside hitter Alicia Turner. The junior co-captain turned her ankle early in the game and was pulled by Brown, but she returned to give them a much-needed lift. Turner killed the last four points for Notre Dame to give it the 15-13 win.

"She really turned it on near the end," Brown said. "I took her out to make sure she was okay, but she came back in and
