Flynn/Wellman and Reinke/Dickey in run-off

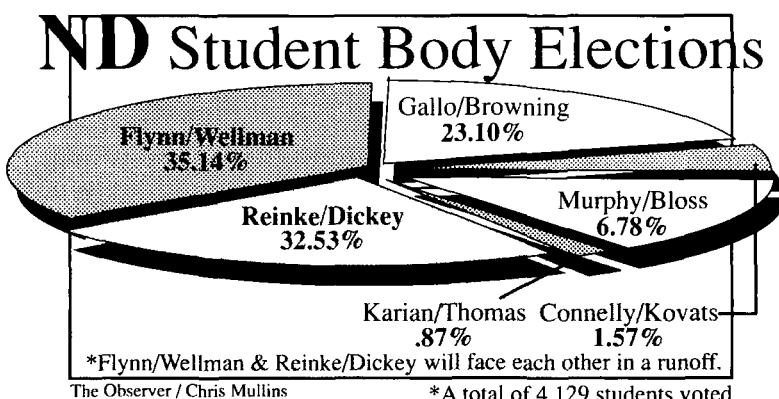

By DAVID KINNEY
News Editor

The tickets of Frank Flynn/Nikki Wellman and David Reinke/Lara Dickey earned spots in a Wednesday run-off for Notre Dame student body president and vice president after no ticket captured a majority in Monday's general election.

Flynn/Wellman received 35.1 percent (1,451 votes) of the electorate, while Reinke/Dickey received 32.5 percent (1,343) — and the endorsement of the third-place ticket of Stephanie Gallo and Chris Browning. Election results showed 4,129 students cast ballots Monday.

Earlier in the evening, the election committee addressed reports of election day campaigning by Gallo/Browning. The committee determined — and the Student Senate later affirmed — that miscommunication about the official end of campaigning was to blame, and that no election violation had been committed.

The Senate later voted to uphold the results of Monday's

Campaigning for the run-off began today at 12:01 a.m., and ends tomorrow morning at 12:01 a.m., Judicial Council President Pete Castelli. Students can vote Wednesday in their dorms from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. and from 5 to 7 p.m.

Of the other four tickets:

- Gallo/Browning took 23.1 percent (954 votes) of the ballots;
- The Chris Murphy/Emily Bloss ticket received 6.8 percent (280 votes);
- The Tom Kovats/Mike Connelly ticket won 1.6 percent (65 votes);

- The Joseph Karian/Sam Thomas ticket received 0.87 percent (36 votes).

"We really worked hard and that's why we're here," said Wellman. The candidates said they plan to focus on the dorms where they did worse than expected.

Flynn pointed to the success of his and Wellman's door-to-door campaign, noting that they didn't get an endorsement from The Observer or Scholastic.

The Reinke/Dickey ticket said they felt good about the results. "We believe in the things we're

Election process questioned by candidates' campaign practices

NEWS ANALYSIS

A casual observer of Monday night's emergency Student Senate meeting at Notre Dame witnessed a series of highly political maneuvering in a quest to determine if the election process had been jeopardized by election-day campaigning by one of six tickets running for student body president and vice president.

But after tiptoeing around the possible campaign violation by the Stephanie Gallo/Chris Browning ticket and pointing fingers at the Election Committee for leaving candidates unclear about the campaigning schedule, the Senate deemed no one guilty of violations, let the Monday's results stand, and cited miscommunication by Student Government as the only culprit in the matter.

When the votes were finally tallied, the Frank Flynn/Nikki Wellman and David Reinke/Lara Dickey tickets advanced to Wednesday's run-off, while the ticket in the hot seat at the Senate meeting, Gallo/Browning, took third place.

And so as not to forget that politics is politics — even at Notre Dame — Gallo/Browning left the race endorsing the ticket who defended their actions throughout the almost two-hour Senate inquiry: Reinke/Dickey.

The issue debated by the Senate was campaigning by Gallo/Browning outside the South Dining Hall Monday afternoon. The question was whether Gallo/Browning violated a campaign rule by distributing flyers on election day.

But the real problem was that none of the candidates nor the

Saint Mary's holds forum to discuss campus issues

Concerned students and administrators gathered at Carroll Auditorium last night to discuss the future of Saint Mary's College in a campus open forum. Issues of Notre Dame/Saint Mary's relations, security and the possible increase in the student activity fee were discussed in detail.

One issue addressed was the relationship between Saint Mary's and Notre Dame students. SMC coverage in the Observer was a major point. According to Renee Young, a SMC senior, there needs to be better and more accurate coverage of SMC events.

"There has been a lack of communication and respect" said MaryBeth Wilkinson, vice president of academic affairs and student body president-elect.

The lack of SMC coverage is due to the small number of SMC writers and the fact that many of them are inexperienced, said some students. Anna Tabor, Saint Mary's editor of the Observer, suggested including a weekly or biweekly four page pull-out in The Observer that would exclusively cover events on the SMC campus.

Reactions to this suggestion were overwhelmingly positive, and Tabor stressed that the Observer staff is working on improving SMC coverage.

The staging of the Keenan Review was also discussed. Saint Mary's students expressed disgust at the large amount of Saint Mary's "bashing" that took place at the Keenan Review, which ironically took place on the SMC campus.

"We should not allow the putting down of SMC on our own campus," said Melissa Whelan.

Many students expressed concern over the proposed increase in the student activity fee. If the proposal is accepted the fee will go from $20 to $75 per student. This would allow student government to increase their operating activities budget from $60,000 to $200,000 per year.

This budget is divided among the four classes, five residence halls and 80 clubs. Specific ideas for its use include BOG conferences, alumnae activities and speakers, and social activities such as improvements for Dalloway's and a satellite dish for Haggar College Center.

"We are not expecting to receive this full amount that we are proposing but this figure will give us something to work with," said Wilkinson.

Security problems and improvements were also addressed by the student body, especially regarding the single phone line for emergencies, escorts and information. According to Richard Chlebek, director of security, separate numbers for emergency and information/escorts will hopefully be established this fall.

The card access system fell under some criticism because of its inconvenience for students using the facilities in LeMans

Hipp, Beeler scholarships endowed

By DANA ANDERSON
News Writer

Through donations to memorial funds, family, friends, and students have continued to keep alive the memory of Notre Dame swimmers Colleen Hipp and Margaret "Meghan" Beeler, whose lives were taken in a bus accident last year.

Two scholarship endowments have been created from the funds. These endowments differ from annual gifts to be spent that are given to Notre Dame. An endowment is a permanent fund of at least $25,000 used for the same purpose year after year, according to Joe Russo, director of financial aid.

The University invests this money in a stock portfolio, enabling the endowment to appreciate as the portfolio appreciates. The department of financial aid uses the interest from these funds to grant scholarships to undergraduates, said Russo.

By closely working with donors, the department of financial aid establishes criteria for selecting recipients of scholarships, according to Russo. Some standard requirements established with each scholarship include that a recipient be in good academic standing.

According to Russo, the department also works with special conditions on scholarship monies that a donor requests.

"We always make sure the donor's best interest is being served along with the University's best interest," he said.

One endowment in memory of the swimmers is entitled the Meghan Beeler Memorial Scholarship. This endowment is being built up by the Beeler family and friends. The Beeler family and the department of financial aid have not yet decided how the money will be administered in scholarship form, according to Russo.

The other endowment, the Hipp-Beeler Memorial Scholarship, has been organized largely by Student Government through fundraisers and donations. According to Russo, the Beeler-Hipp Memorial Scholarship has received donations of $32,000 as of Feb. 5.

Parameters have not yet been finalized for this scholarship either. However, Russo said, "We hope to have selected the first student to receive this scholarship this

McKenna to receive 1993 Horatio Alger Award

By MICHELE TERRY
News Writer

Andrew McKenna, chairman of the Notre Dame Board of Trustees, has been chosen to receive a 1993 Horatio Alger Award.

McKenna expressed feelings of surprise and humility upon receiving the award saying, "I feel humble and undeserving, yet honored" about being placed in the same category as Jack Kemp and Oprah Winfrey, other award recipients.

"I am not only honored to be inducted with the new recipients but to join so many who are already members of the Alger Society, including my predecessor on Notre Dame's board, Don Keough," McKenna said.

McKenna said his experience as a student at Notre Dame and his later involvement with the University helped him to reach his present position. "Notre Dame was the perfect learning ground for things I've done later in life," he said.

The Alger Awards are awarded annually to individuals who are "living proof that the American dream is possible for those who work hard, persevere, and live by the highest ethical standards."

McKenna, president and chief executive officer of Schwarz Paper Co., is one of eleven chosen to receive the award, which will be presented at a dinner in Washington, D.C. on April 16.

No business like snow business

Since my decision to go to school at Saint Mary's, I have experienced more than I had planned. Granted my travels and studies during my participation on Saint Mary's Semester Around the World gave me the most wide and shocking experience of culture anyone can imagine. However, another shock I experienced was the initial move to South Bend, Indiana. The heavy shock did not come from the usual first year of college experience. It was the move to the North and the experiences that gave me.

Anne Heroman

Now many of you might not think much of this. But there are still some that know exactly what I am talking about. Simply, I have lived all my life, until two and a half years ago, in Baton Rouge, Louisiana. The way of life up here is definitely a drastic change from what I have been accustomed to.

For example, the weather was the largest shock of college life. For that matter, it still is a huge shock! I had never seen more than a light dusting of snow. The first snow fall I experienced was in early December, and I had been anxiously awaiting it since late September. It began to flurry late the night before. After much explanation by my roommate, who happens to be from Sheboygan, Wisconsin, I managed to grasp the idea of flurries. She finally was able to calm me down and get me to sleep. Much to her dismay I awoke at 4 a.m. yelling that it had snowed, for her to wake up, and get dressed to go outside to play in it. She told me to go back to bed, for it would be there for days. She was right.

The same day, there was the traumatic lesson of non-packing snow. When I finally convinced someone to share in the snow experience with me, they explained that this snow could not build a snowman because it was not wet enough. How ridiculous. I had known all my life that one builds snowmen from snow, and snow is snow isn't it? WRONG. I guess South end rarely gets "snowmen" snow. To this day I have not been able to build a snowman. The usual cause of this dilemma is the lack of help. I guess many people here do not find it as new and exciting as I do. However, I have build a snow turtle due to the dryness of the snow and made several snow angels.

This reminds me of some advice a fellow Southerner gave me. "Just pretend like you know what you are doing. If you fall because of the snow, make it look like you meant to and start making a snow angel."

From what I understand, he has used it on several occasions. I am lucky to say I have not experienced that yet.

Besides the entire snow bit, I have had the opportunity to experience other ice and water related activities. I have been ice skating once and that is about all I need. As recently as this weekend I have walked out on a frozen lake. It was just long enough to take a picture and get the hell off.

I still am very happy to have this opportunity to be here and experience these things.

TODAY AT A GLANCE

NATIONAL Meese suspected of cover-up

■ WASHINGTON — Ronald Reagan's chief of staff and secretary of state had been prepared to testify that his administration misstated facts about the Iran arms sales to protect the president from impeachment, the Iran-Contra prosecutors said Monday. If Caspar Weinberger had gone to trial, former White House chief of staff Donald Regan was prepared to testify that he knew it was untrue when Meese stated in a Nov. 24, 1986, White House meeting that the president hadn't known about the Hawk missile shipment, Walsh said in an interim report to Congress.

College job search becomes limited

■ NEW YORK — In this year's recruiting season for college graduates, nurses are hot but aerospace engineers are not. Companies hope to hire more college graduates this year than in 1992, but only a few fields are expected to benefit. Health care is one industry that is hiring. A focus on the environment also has created openings for engineers, geologists, biologists, and chemists. But other industries are cutting jobs just as aggressively. Military cutbacks and hardships in the commercial airline industry have virtually shut down the market for new aerospace engineers. Jobs in finance and banking, except for technical and back-office jobs, are still hard to come by. Worsening matters, colleges are turning out more graduates to compete for fewer jobs. A U.S. Labor Department economist said that from now until the year 2005, the number of college graduates will outpace the number of available jobs by 20 percent each year.

Experts unwilling to say drought over

■ LOS ANGELES — Another powerful storm brought torrents of rain, flooding, mud slides and a huge sinkhole Monday to soggy Southern California. Sudden hillsides collapsed on roadways as the storm came ashore Sunday. Debris closed portions of Pacific Coast Highway and Interstate 5. Underground garages were flooded with up to 5 feet of water, and a sinkhole 30-feet wide and 15-feet deep opened up in the middle of an avenue in West Hollywood. But the latest deluge doesn't mean California's six-year drought is over. While the Los Angeles Department of Water and Power this month announced the drought's end in the city, the California Drought Information Center said Monday a water shortage lingers in other areas of the state. Despite the deepest Sierra snowpack in a decade — 175 percent of average — state water authorities were being cautious because major reservoirs were still 3 million to 4 million acre-feet short of capacity.

Bianco will speak today

SMC discusses parietal policy

By COLLEEN HAGEN
News Writer

Millie Bianco's daughter was killed by her ex-husband while he was on leave from prison just over three years ago. Since then, Bianco has become a recognized and accomplished speaker and spokesperson on the many issues of domestic violence, and she will be on the Saint Mary's campus Tuesday evening to present her views with a lecture and video. Bianco has been recognized as an outstanding leader in the fight against domestic violence. Not only was she awarded the pen to sign into law Domestic Violence Bill F.838 by former president George Bush, but Bianco has also appeared on such shows as 20/20, the MacNeil/Lehrer News Hour, 48 Hours, and the Oprah Winfrey Show. In addition, she is the president of the Blue Ribbon Community Against Domestic Violence, a non-profit organization. The lecture will take place at 7 p.m. in Haggar Parlor at Saint Mary's College. There will be a social with refreshments immediately following the conclusion of the lecture and video. The event is sponsored by Saint Mary's College Circle K.

A proposal to change the existing parietal policy at Saint Mary's is on the agenda for discussion at the meeting of the college's Senior Officers today. Proposed by the Residence Hall Association (RHA), the new policy would eliminate the current regulation requiring male guests to leave picture identification at the front desks of residence halls. Residents would still be required to escort their guests at all times and sign them in, but not out, on home football game weekends and nights of a dance. The front desks of the residence halls would remain and exterior doors would still remain locked. The proposal was originally submitted to the Senior Officers before finals week last semester. The Officers asked RHA to conduct a survey in order to measure student support for such a proposal, said Karen Fordham, president of RHA. The results of the survey, to which 700 students responded (RHA ran out of ballots), overwhelmingly supported the change which would not require male guests to leave IDs at the front desk any longer. •94. 34 percent of the respondents agreed that male guests should no longer leave identification at the front desk. •57.12 percent of those surveyed said that male guests should still be escorted in the residence halls. •25.29 percent of students did not want sign-in logs, but RHA said the survey question was worded incorrectly. The survey did not clarify that sign-in logs would only be used during home football weekends and dances. Holy Cross Hall Director and moderator of RHA Patty Warfield said that the benefits of the proposal far outweigh the negative aspects. "This proposal puts responsibility back where it belongs and that is with the students, in terms of honoring their own personal integrity and watching out for each other in ensuring their community is a safe place to live," said Warfield. She also expressed strong feelings about keeping the current escort policy. "It's not a moral issue at all, it's a security issue," Warfield said. Her only concern is that students will not understand that the responsibility is with the students to make this policy work. "I want to make sure they understand that in Holy Cross at least there will be section meetings that I will personally attend to have questions answered and make certain that everyone understands the policy," she said. Security is the main concern in addressing the changes. "Residents need to take responsibility for themselves and their guests," according to Sherri Craher, director of Residence Life. Fordham said that if a decision is made to change the policy, she sees no reason why the change would not be implemented this year. Warfield said that if accepted, the new policy will most likely take force this year at a natural break, such as when students return from spring break. "The proposal is on the agenda for (today's) meeting, but when it will be discussed and when the decision is made depends on the urgency of the other issues on the agenda," said Brassil.

elections officials could remember if the pre-campaign instructions specifically stated that campaigning on election day was prohibited. Traditionally, the campaign period for student body elections at Notre Dame has been exactly one week, with no campaigning on the election Monday.

"We thought that we had communicated to them the beginning and ending dates (of campaigning)," said Andrea Sullivan, election committee co-chairwoman. But neither Sullivan nor co-Chairman Andrew Alfors could prove that the instructions were put in writing or verbalized at the Jan. 18 meeting for interested candidates.

The recollections of the tickets of the meeting further complicated the problem.

Three of the five tickets — Reinke/Dickey, Gallo/Browning and Joseph Karian/Sam Thomas — could not recall being told that the campaign period ended at midnight Sunday.

But Flynn said he remembered hearing it "distinctly," and Emily Bloss said her ticket's campaign manager remembered hearing it.

"We found that there was sufficient evidence of ambiguity in the ending time of the election period," said Judicial Council President Pete Castelli. As a result, the Elections Committee recommended that Gallo/Browning said the Reinke/Dickey ticket is a fresh voice for student government. "We just feel that their type of philosophy is along the same line as ours," said Browning.

"We would have liked to have done better," said Karian. But "we realize that we were in the also-run category."

spring. Every undergraduate will be eligible for this scholarship but there will not be application forms for this. Students need not be an athlete either to receive this. In addition, financial need will Monday's election be nullified.

The recommendation was appealed by the Reinke/Dickey ticket, which sent the matter to the Senate. Although acknowledging that Gallo/Browning benefited by the extra day of campaigning, Reinke asked the Senate to allow the election to proceed as planned.

"The election committee made a mistake, inadvertently," he said. But cancelling Monday's election and asking students to vote again would be a "grave disservice to the student body" and could "ruin whatever credibility Student Government has."

After lengthy debate, the Senate voted in favor of Reinke's appeal.

The incident soon faded into obscurity as Flynn/Wellman and Reinke/Dickey hurriedly planned Tuesday's campaigning while Gallo/Browning quietly exited the race.

Correction

In an article in last Thursday's Observer, student body presidential candidate Michael Connelly was misquoted during the presidential candidates' debate. Connelly said "The University is here for the students, not the other way around." The Observer regrets the error.

and McCandless. It was suggested that students have universal access to all buildings. Also the possibility of expanding the card access system to Holy Cross, Regina and parts of the tunnels is being explored, but no firm decisions have been made.

To supplement the card access system the possibility of replacing traditional parietals with the honor code was discussed. A survey given to the student body recently showed that 95 percent of the students were in favor of the change.

Students also expressed concern about the vagueness of the rape and sexual assault policies. Administrators clarified that although they encourage prosecution, only those cases reported and investigated are included in the statistics.

Other issues also raised in the forum included improvements in the computer lab, a prospective lesbian policy, and a smoking policy. Students suggested updating the Macintosh computer lab and perhaps investing in a second laser printer.

William Hickey, president of SMC, said that there is a written policy regarding lesbians. Although it has been available in the Student Affairs Office for some time now, it can immediately be handed over to the student government.

Student government and resident life are also conducting surveys on whether or not students feel Saint Mary's should be a completely smoke-free campus.

Cotton ginning computerized

■WASHINGTON — The computer age has dawned on the cotton field. The Agriculture Department says one of its research engineers has developed the world's only fully computerized cotton ginning system, and it may someday boost returns to farmers by $7 to $23 a bale. Current ginning methods give all cotton the same amount of cleaning, regardless of how much actual trash, such as seeds, is in it. Many cottons don't need to go through each step, and reducing the steps can cut energy costs and reduce fiber damage.

IRS won't make court ruling retroactive

■WASHINGTON — The Internal Revenue Service said Monday that it will not apply a new Supreme Court ruling to taxpayers who claimed a deduction for business use of their homes before 1992. The court, in a Jan. 12 decision, generally upheld the IRS position for determining whether a person's home is the principal place of business. In making that determination, the court held, a taxpayer must consider the relative importance of activities conducted at each business location and the amount of time spent at each. The law allows a deduction for certain expenses incurred in using a portion of a home exclusively and regularly as a person's principal place of business.

States wary of welfare proposal

■WASHINGTON — Government rules proposed on Monday could protect welfare recipients who use debit cards to draw their benefits, but experts said the regulations might open the way to fraud. They warned that the proposal could derail more widespread use of "paperless welfare," now used by thousands of welfare recipients. People can use the cards to draw benefits and buy groceries; they save money on check-cashing costs and don't have to worry about their checks being lost or delayed by the mail. But they don't have the same protections against loss of their cards as regular bank customers. The Federal Reserve Board wants those protections extended to welfare recipients who receive their benefits electronically.

ABA urges court approval to freeze assets of law firms

BOSTON (AP) — Court approval should be required before federal banking regulators may freeze the assets of law firms accused of misconduct in their work for banks or savings and loans, an American Bar Association group said Monday.

Responding to last year's $41 million settlement paid by a New York law firm over its representation of the defunct Lincoln Savings and Loan Association, the ABA working group recommended several changes in the way lawyers may be sanctioned.

"The question is, will aggressive action by a regulator chill the kind of representation, vigorous representation, that has been a tradition of the bar," said John Curtin of Boston, a former ABA president and leader of the working group. "It's a question of balance."

The group plans to seek comment on its recommendations and work on formal proposals that may be submitted to the ABA at its annual convention in August.

Federal banking and thrift regulators may act administratively, without need for court approval, to impose sanctions and freeze assets of law firms accused of being partly responsible for a financial institution's losses.

The Office of Thrift Supervision demanded $275 million last March from the New York firm of Kaye, Scholer, Fierman, Hays & Handler, and froze the firm's assets pending settlement of the case.

The firm was accused of misleading federal regulators about Lincoln's real estate investments. The following week Kaye, Scholer settled the case by agreeing to pay $41 million.

Coal union claims boss intimidation

WASHINGTON (AP) — Peabody Holding Co. officials say the company has brought in additional security guards at strikebound mines to protect property, not to harass pickets as the United Mine Workers claim.

But UMW spokesman Jim Grossfeld said Sunday that increased security at mines in Indiana, Illinois, Kentucky and West Virginia is merely an attempt to intimidate 7,500 striking union members.

"We have several mines and preparation plants and naturally these are million-dollar investments and we have a judicial responsibility to make sure they're protected," said Terry Whitt, a spokesman for Peabody subsidiary Eastern Associated Coal Corp.

Whitt said the additional guards from Virginia-based Vance Security were instructed only to "observe and document" problems on the picket line.

Reports of guards harassing pickets were "totally untrue," he said.

"They are not there to cause any problems with our people on the picket line," Whitt said.

The UMW has been on a selective strike against St. Louis-based Peabody, the nation's largest coal producer, for nearly a week after a contract involving more than 60,000 UMW miners and 150,000 retirees expired.

Grossfeld said no contract talks were scheduled between the union and the Bituminous Coal Operators Association negotiating team. The association represents 12 of the nation's largest coal producers.

Thomas Hoffman, a spokesman for the association's negotiating team, did not return messages left at his home Sunday.

The strike has been violence-free thus far, but UMW interna-

Students assist with tax returns

By COLLEEN KNIGHT

News Writer

Students from Notre Dame and St. Mary's volunteering for the 22nd annual Tax Assistance Program will get hands-on experience filing tax returns while giving something back to the Michiana community, according to Ken Milani, professor of accountancy and program coordinator.

The program will provide free assistance for local taxpayers with annual incomes of $25,000 or less. Seventy accounting and finance students who have taken at least one tax course will work with accounting faculty members and local CPAs at 10 sites set up in the South Bend-Mishawaka area, Milani said. Assistance will be available until April 15.

According to Milani, the program is beneficial because it reaches many different segments of the community. "It cuts across the whole spectrum," he explained. "We help taxpayers ranging in age from 17 to 92 years old. It's a real eye opener to students."

After spending three weeks in training classes, student volunteers are now ready to work 5 hours a week at the local centers. While CPAs and accounting faculty handle more complicated returns, student volunteers handle many returns individually, according to senior Mike Murphy, Director of Public Relations.

"Students get accounting experience before they enter the work world, applying their knowledge and helping people at the same time," Murphy said.

In addition to helping local residents, the program volunteers are also available to help students and faculty members. Those needing assistance should go to the Center for Social Concerns on Wednesday afternoons between 2:30 and 5 p.m., Milani said.

Last year, volunteers filed more than 2000 tax returns for local residents.

Funds and supplies for the program are provided by Notre Dame's College of Business Administration, the Internal Revenue Service, and the Department of Revenue.

NIH begins review of drug companies

NEW YORK (AP) — The head of the National Institutes of Health is launching a review of all marketing agreements between drug companies and research labs that receive federal funding, officials said Monday.

The move is the latest backlash over the price of drugs. In this case, lawmakers are concerned about how much drug companies charge for medicines that taxpayers helped pay for developing.

NIH Director Dr. Bernadine Healy called for the review but had no further details, said spokeswoman Johanna Schneider from NIH headquarters in Bethesda, Md.

The move comes following publicity surrounding an alliance announced in December between Sandoz Pharmaceuticals Corp. and the Scripps Research Institute of La Jolla, Ca.

Under their collaboration, Sandoz will provide Scripps with $300 million over 10 years in exchange for first rights to Scripps' medical discoveries.

Scripps receives more than 75 percent — or roughly $90 million — of its research money from the government. With 650 Ph.D.s and medical doctors, Scripps claims to be the nation's largest independent, non-profit biomedical research center.

The Scripps-Sandoz agreement prompted Rep. Ron Wyden, D-Ore., to write a five-page letter to Dr. Healy last week complaining that Sandoz would be free to determine the price of any drugs resulting from the collaboration even though they were derived from government-subsidized research.

"What is most troubling about this deal is the apparent fact that the government has raised no objection to the arrangement," he said, noting that Scripps was not required to seek government approval of the Sandoz relationship.

"The government underwrites millions of dollars in drug development, then the manufacturer steps into commercialize the development once the government has proven its profit potential, and the taxpaying consumer gets bumped twice in the form of paying for a highly subsidized drug at a highly inflated cost," Wyden said.

Government money is an inducement for researchers to develop life-saving drugs. By some estimates, up to half the most promising AIDS and cancer drugs are under development in government or university labs.

Wyden spokesman Steve Jennings said the congressman was "gratified that the NIH is doing the right thing. There should be some federal oversight in the pricing of drugs in which the taxpayer has a significant research and development investment."

Sandoz, the U.S. arm of Sandoz Ltd. of Basel, Switzerland, has noted that the money it is investing in Scripps beginning in 1997 will go toward basic research and that there is no guarantee any products would result.

Study urges unions to recruit more females

WASHINGTON (AP) — Labor unions need to organize female workers, who now are under represented, underpaid, and may soon be a majority of the workers in America, according to a study released on Monday.

"Union elections held today with a majority of women or 'minority' workers are won more often than those in traditionally male- or white-dominated workplaces," the study said.

"Thus attention to organizing and mobilizing women members will be critical to the future" of the U.S. labor movement, concluded the report written for the International Labour Organization, a U.N.-sponsored agency headquartered in Geneva, Switzerland.

The report said there were 48.9 million women employees in 1990, representing 47 percent of the U.S. workforce.

The study, "Women Workers, Unions and Industrial Sectors in North America," projects that by the end of the decade, women will represent a majority of the workforce.

Susan Eaton, author of the report, explained in an interview that men are leaving the workforce earlier than they used to, in part because of layoffs and early retirements.

Also, she added, male-dominated employment centers such as the automobile and steel industries are shrinking, while female workers are increasing in the fast-growing service and retail industries.

Still, the study shows only 14 percent of women workers are unionized, roughly the same percentage as 30 years ago. But because male membership has slipped from 35 percent to just above 20 percent, women's percentage of membership has risen by default to 37 percent.

Despite the growing importance of women in the labor movement, the report contends that relatively few unions have undertaken new organization campaigns to recruit women.

"There is a tremendous opportunity for unions to organize women and for women to get the kind of benefits and protections that unions can offer," Ms. Eaton said.

"After more than 20 years of active workplace organizing and protest, North American women, especially nonunion workers, are still highly disadvantaged in terms of low pay, job segregation, workplace harassment (and other issues of special concern to women) and inequitable family responsibilities," the study said.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Despite shortcomings, ND is still a great place

Dear Editor:

Last weekend I had the great pleasure to fly out to Indiana and visit Notre Dame/St. Mary's for the first time (as an alumnus of LaSalle University, I had the misfortune to witness the Explorer's loss to the Irish on Saturday night at the JACC).

While on campus, I had the opportunity to see and converse with many of my former students and to meet and spend time with their friends from Notre Dame and St. Mary's.

Spending time with these young men and women was an uplifting experience. The students and staff at Notre Dame make you feel like you are one of their extended family.

Attending the Vigil Mass at the basilica was a moving event coupled with the devout attitude and participation of the students present. Everyone on campus is willing to help you in any manner they can and this care and concern really left me with a wonderful feeling.

I realize, after reading letters to the editor in The Observer of January 22, 1993, that Notre Dame is not the "utopia" of Thomas More, but it is, without a doubt, the premier Catholic university in America and as a Catholic educator this makes me proud.

Many times my students ask me which college they should consider attending and my first response is N.D. if I know they can make the grade.

I tell them it is a campus full of spirit, community, caring, and love. After my recent visit there, I know that I can say this with confidence and assuredness.

So, keep the tradition of excellence alive and know that even with its few shortcomings, Notre Dame is the place to be!

Can Powlus be a four-year starter?

Dear Editor:

"The next Joe Namath." That's what many are calling Ron Powlus. Back in early September, well before many students had even heard of him, we predicted that he would be the starting quarterback for Notre Dame in 1993. Now that he has arrived, there are many who doubt our bold prophecy. We have written this letter to explain our position and convert any disbelievers.

Although nobody doubts Powlus' talent, we offer a quick reminder of just how great he is. His coach (USA Today's Prep Coach of the Year) says he is ready for the pros right now. Rick Mirer's high school statistics, though very impressive, simply pale in comparison to the most sought after recruit in a decade.

Powlus constitutes the consummate quarterback: a big, strong runner (105 carries for 1700 yds. and 45 TD's), a quick release often compared to Dan Marino's, and a rifle for an arm (445/791 for 7,352 yds. and 62 TD's). He even leads his high school team to the state championship in talent-rich Pennsylvania while being voted the high school player of the year by Super Prep, Gatorade Circle of Champions, Football News, USA Today, and Parade Magazine. Yes, Virginia, there is a Powlus.

And yes, he is coming here.

Despite Powlus' overwhelming credentials, we find that very few people believe he will even be given the chance to start next year, due to his inexperience at the collegiate level. Are we to believe, then, that three years of bench experience from our other quarterbacks outweigh the talent and potential of a phenom like Powlus?

Steve Fisher, Michigan's head basketball coach, certainly didn't think so. And look where starting three freshmen from the beginning got him - The NCAA Finals.

Others were positive the experience and big-game mentality of the Buffalo Bills would deny the more talented but extremely young Cowboys a Super Bowl victory. Wrong again.

Skeptics also believe that Holtz will not start a freshman at quarterback, because he will not have the time to learn the system. Fortunately, the ND offense under Holtz is perspective a rather uncomplicated one. A run-orientated game plan, which requires the quarterback (protected by an always strong offensive line) to hand off and throw to receivers running basic pass patterns.

Anyone who doubts this need only to look back at "The Drive" against Penn State to see a perfect example of a scoring drive dictated by running, screens to the fullback, and simple pass patterns.

We must remember that Powlus is not walking into camp an ignorant man. He was taught (and is probably still being taught) by one of the best high school coaches in the country. To familiarize himself with the collegiate level of football, he can be taught the basics of the offense for Northwestern. Ease him through the game and, starting with Michigan, he will start paying unbelievable dividends.

His competition consists of Kevin McDougal and Paul Failla. They are two talented, but back-up, quarterbacks seeking their own chance at leading the team to a rather elusive national championship. They're good, but Powlus is better.

Notre Dame has the opportunity to start a talent like Powlus for FOUR years. Riding the coattails of his talent, the national championship will come back to Notre Dame, right where it belongs. Regardless of his first year's success, starting Powlus as a freshman will provide him with invaluable experience for the future, and it cannot be denied.

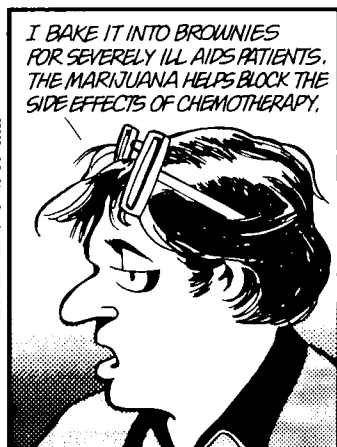

The day Ron Powlus committed to Notre Dame, shouts of joy and anticipation echoed the planet. Anybody who has followed him knows he is the ticket to a national title. The argument over who should start the 1993 season at quarterback is moot; in training camp, he will prove to everyone that he was not recruited to sit on the bench. Not even for a single game. Powlus would start right away at any university in the country and, luckily, he chose this one.

With such amazing size, intelligence, and explosive talent starting at quarterback, we know Powlus is the harbinger of National Championships to come.

'Humanitas' showcases the cream of Arts and Letters essay writing

By MARA DIVIS
Saint Mary's Accent Editor

Imagine a literary journal which includes writings on sociology, philosophy and government, in addition to English.

After a recess of several years, the College of Arts and Letters is resurrecting its own journal of critical academic writing, according to graduate student Donelle Ruwe.

"Humanitas, a Journal of the College of Arts and Letters," is intended to showcase the best undergraduate writing in the different disciplines of the College. The emphasis is not on creative writing, but rather on essays on varying subject matter, Ruwe said.

"It's an unusual thing for undergrads to have," she said. "It's different from the Juggler [Notre Dame's annual literary journal], which is creative writing. We're not publishing poems or short stories. We're doing essays."

Among the goals of "Humanitas" is to serve as a model of good undergraduate writing, Ruwe said. Some students find it difficult to emulate the often obtuse work of experts and professors in their fields; this journal will contain only the best of student writing, according to Ruwe.

"I've been approached by a few professors who want a copy to use for samples in writing classes," she said. "It's important to have student essays as samples. It's more accessible."

The University previously published a scholarly journal, but did not have a journal focused solely on undergraduate work in the College of Arts and Letters, Ruwe added.

"They haven't had an academic publication for undergraduates," she said. When asked why she thinks "Humanitas" is being revived, Ruwe said that "maybe it's partly that the University is concerned with maintaining academic standards for undergraduates."

"Humanitas" will publish once a semester, and will include the best of the previous semester's writing. The editorial board wants to include as many majors as possible in each issue, said junior Chuck Young, an editorial board member.

"We've got a lot of people on the editorial board, but we're still looking for more people...we want a variety of majors represented," he said. "Anyone who wants to get involved can, as long as they're committed to it."

"Humanitas" started several years ago as a student project, but lost support and interest when its staff of mostly upper-classmen graduated, Ruwe said. Few freshmen and sophomores were involved, and therefore the staff soon disappeared. She stressed that the board hopes to interest as many freshmen and sophomores as possible in order to keep "Humanitas" alive.

'It's important to have student essays as samples. It's more accessible.'

—Donelle Ruwe

"It's difficult to maintain an undergraduate journal like this," she said. "It's important to have people from different classes."

The board will award a $200 prize for the best sample of writing submitted this semester and three $50 honorable mention awards, Ruwe said. In addition, the winners of the McPartlin and Snite prizes for the best in undergraduate writing will be recognized.

Students interested in submitting work from classes this year are encouraged to turn in two copies of the essay without the student's name, in addition to a cover letter with the student's name, year in school, and the department from which the essay comes.

Essays will be received until March 1, Young said. Students should submit their essays to the English department.

Hüsker Dü's release sacrifices neither energy nor emotion

By ROLANDO DE AGUIAR
Music Critic

Hüsker Dü came screaming out of Minneapolis sometime in the early eighties, when most of us were listening to After the Fire and Nena, and made an indelible impression on pop music.

Today, the threesome is duly noted as the band largely responsible for the popular success of Nirvana (and all of their ilk). Their punk-pop fusion, which sacrificed neither energy nor emotion, laid much of the groundwork for today's pop/rock sound.

Most argue that the band's trademark sound, Bob Mould's screeching Flying V in front of a driving rhythm section (drummer/vocalist Grant Hart and bassist Greg Norton), came into its own with Zen Arcade, an epic double album released in 1984.

But though the long out-of-print Everything Falls Apart, Hüsker Dü's first studio album, is largely a lesson in hardcore history, the album gives the listener a sneak peek at the band's potential to make majestic sounds.

Rhino's re-release of this album, along with several extremely rare tracks from early Hüsker Dü singles, in a package titled Everything Falls Apart and More, is another victory for the small label.

The band packed about a gigawatt of energy into Everything Falls Apart's 12 songs (on a 45 r.p.m. 12-inch). Tracks like "Punch Drunk" (0:30) and "Bricklayer" (0:33) are composed of pure self-destructive energy. Mould screams his observations over the music, which sounds like the noise made by Hüsker Dü's eventual implosion—fast, loud and messy.

But other songs, like the title track, show a hint of the greatness Hüsker Dü could achieve. Mould experiments with the same guitar techniques that would make Zen Arcade a milestone, and sings about the themes—loneliness and despair—that made the band's songs perfect. Indeed, the song is a prototype of many of the songs which are considered Hüsker Dü's best.

If "Everything Falls Apart" isn't poppy enough, then the cover of Donovan's "Sunshine Superman," rendered with surprising respect toward the writer, should convince even the Hüsker Dü skeptic of the band's talent.

Several more songs on the disc stand out as classics of the era, including "Target," which could very well be a punk anthem. With his succinct chorus, Mould sardonically encourages, then unmercifully exposes those individuals who put away a fad as soon as anyone else begins to enjoy it.

"Don't participate, be lethargic/ You're a hypocrite, you're the target."

After three successful albums without Hart and Norton (two as a solo artist, one as the frontman for Sugar), Mould is now considered the heart of what was Hüsker Dü. But during the band's glory days, Mould and Hart split the writing and singing duties evenly. On Everything Falls Apart, Mould wrote and sings most of the songs. But Hart's three contributions all make an impact.

Hüsker Dü released Everything Falls Apart and More, a compilation of their first album and several extremely rare early tracks.

The version of "Statues" included here is twice as long (8:41) as the original edit, and is by far the longest Hüsker Dü song that includes vocals. Indeed, it bears similarities to "Reoccurring (sic) Dreams," the 14-minute instrumental that closes Zen Arcade. Hart sings about his disdain for relationships ("Are you different, are you new?/ No, you're just a statue) over Mould's layered, distorted guitar and a droning Norton bass line.

Norton, long the forgotten member of Hüsker Dü, even gets his kick in on Everything Falls Apart and More. His single contribution, "Let's Go Die," is strong enough to make one wonder why he never wrote another song for the band.

By and large, Everything Falls Apart and More is a stunning retrospective of Hüsker Dü's early musings. "Do You Remember?" is a translation of the band's Norwegian moniker, and is the track that closes the album. And we must pay attention to the band's demand to listen and understand the music.

Lindros found innocent of charges he spit on woman

OSHAWA, Ottawa (AP) — Eric Lindros was found innocent today of charges he spit beer on a woman.

Lindros, a 19-year-old who plays for the Philadelphia Flyers, shook hands with his lawyer after Justice Rhys Morgan issued the acquittal. The judge said defense evidence raised reasonable doubt.

"Being accused of something you didn't commit and gaining that much media attention I don't think it does anybody much good," Lindros said. "I know I never did it and I had people to back me up. It felt good."

Morgan suggested Lindros drop countercharges against Lynn Nunney, a 24-year-old factory worker, who alleged he spat and poured beer on her last Nov. 29.

"The dispute could have been resolved that night without criminal charges," Morgan said. "Unfortunately, the positions of both parties hardened."

Nunney said the incident occurred after she refused to make room for the NHL player on a packed nightclub dance floor at Koo Koo Bananas in Whitby, about 36 miles east of Toronto.

Lindros said he wasn't going to try to avoid similar situations.

"I'm a kid and I like to do the things that kids do," he said.

Flyers spokesman Mark Piazza said in Philadelphia that the team was relieved.

"We're happy that it's over and done with and he can get back and concentrate on playing hockey," Piazza said.

In trial testimony ending Thursday, witnesses offered sharply conflicting versions of events. Nunney said Lindros repeatedly pushed her toward the edge of the dance floor and emptied a bottle of beer on her head and spat beer in her face when she tried to stop him. Her testimony was corroborated by her sister and a friend.

Beville makes comeback from crippling preseason car crash

By TONY POTTINGER
Sports Writer

The first thing freshman Ryan Beville remembers about his near-fatal car wreck last August is lying in a hospital bed as his team of doctors forecast permanent brain damage and an end to his aspirations to compete for the University of Notre Dame swim team.

But now, six months later, the Richmond, Va. native has demonstrated that the proper motivation and a measure of stubbornness can overcome almost any obstacle medical science has to offer.

Faced with the paralysis of the right side of his body following a serious accident less than a week before he was to report to Notre Dame, the Zahm Hall resident focused his motivations and emotions on his girlfriend, who was in the car with Beville but sustained only minor injuries. Beville says it was in large part "a personal desire to overcome my situation," which enabled him to work his way through an arduous rehabilitation and allowed him to join the Notre Dame community this semester. "I was just stubborn and unwilling to accept it," he says.

The accident forced Beville to take a step back and put things in perspective. Reassured by head swim coach Tim Welsh not to worry about missing his first semester (the University held his room in Zahm), Beville focused on getting out of the hospital and through his rehabilitation program.

"It was then that I realized that I had taken things for granted," he admits. "I remembered being in high school and not really caring much for what I was learning. I then realized that I might no longer have the capacity to learn at all."

Beville, however, is quite pleased with his academic performance thus far. The biggest surprise has been math class, a subject doctors had said would be difficult at best considering the nature of his brain injuries. "When I told my parents about math they were pretty surprised."

An admirer of William Faulkner, Beville plans to major in writing and minor in Japanese. "I'm still catching up somewhat academically, especially in English and Japanese, but I'm pleased."

Beville, red-shirted this year, will be able to compete for four full years.

He also will enjoy the distinct honor of competing in the National Junior Olympics next month in Boca Raton, Florida. Though he has yet to swim in competition for the Irish, he practices daily with the team and joined his fellow freshmen swimmers yesterday in preparing a customary spaghetti dinner for the upperclassmen.

"The swim team is like a family and has been very supportive," he says. "Especially after the bus accident last winter, they really could relate to my situation."

Now, the honors graduate and Virginia state-record holder in the 100-meter butterfly approaches his sport with a new-found motivation and attitude. "My situation has been good for my mental conditioning," he says. "It has shown me how much I can overcome. Now, an obstacle such as making a new time interval becomes quite small."

He displays as little effect from the media attention he has garnered as from his actual injuries. The subject of several major publications, he remains unphased.

"People joke and call me 'newspaper boy,' but I don't mind telling people about it if they're concerned and want to help," he says. "Athletes have to realize that they will face a lot of attention when they face a situation like this, but I feel athletics have played a large part in my recovery."

DuBose reveals possible Washington improprieties

SEATTLE (AP) — Former Notre Dame linebacker Demetrius DuBose says a son-in-law of Washington football coach Don James talked with him about the possible benefits of transferring to Washington, but never pressured him to change schools.

DuBose said he and Jim Heckman had a casual conversation 2 1/2 years ago in which Heckman outlined potential business opportunities and contacts available after graduation if DuBose played for the Huskies.

"He didn't encourage me to leave Notre Dame, but he did say, 'Here's what we have to offer at the University of Washington,'" DuBose told The Seattle Post-Intelligencer in a story Saturday.

"He told me what my options were if I left Notre Dame. I wasn't sure if it was legal or illegal. To me, it didn't really seem that it was illegal," DuBose said by telephone Friday from South Bend, Ind.

"I already had a relationship with him."

Another player, Singor Mobley of Washington State, told the Pacific-10 Conference that Heckman tried to convince him to renege on an oral commitment to sign with the Cougars two years ago, according to Saturday's Los Angeles Times.

DuBose, a Seattle native, recently graduated from Notre Dame and is awaiting the NFL draft. He was employed by Heckman, who owns a small publishing company, during the summer of 1990.

The Pac-10 has been investigating the Washington football program for possible impropriety by Husky boosters and players. DuBose said David Price, associate commissioner of the Pac-10, questioned him about Heckman for an hour in Seattle last December.

Heckman is president of SportsImage, Inc., which publishes Sports Washington, a Seattle-based magazine devoted largely to Husky sports. A former UW student, he is married to, but separated from, James' youngest daughter, Jeni. Heckman said he has known DuBose since the player's high school days and the two worked together at SportsImage Inc. in 1990 assembling programs for the Goodwill Games.

He denied trying to encourage DuBose to transfer to or sign with Washington.

"We had a close friendship. We worked together for an entire summer," Heckman said. "We talked about football, Notre Dame, Washington, girls, softball ...

"This is not about trying to get someone to go to another school, it's about that I'm Don James son-in-law," he said. "People are looking for a target ... It's really getting tiresome."

Price would not comment Friday on his inquiries into Heckman.

Heckman is a member of Washington's Tye Club booster organization. NCAA rules forbid boosters and other representatives of a university's athletic interests from holding conversations with an athlete from another school that could be perceived as recruiting contact.

DuBose said he thought about leaving Notre Dame after his freshman year and discussed it with Heckman, whom he considered a friend as well as his employer.

"I don't feel he did anything wrong," DuBose said. "I felt he was a friend I could talk to. I could bounce ideas off him. I had a pretty good relationship with him. I felt I could tell him anything."

"If he tried to influence me to come to the University of Washington, he did a terrible job."

DuBose said he hasn't spoken to Heckman since last summer.

DuBose was suspended for two games by the NCAA last season for receiving $600 and other benefits from a pair of Notre Dame boosters who live in Seattle.

large, vocal crowd, so if we can get ahead early and take the fans out, that would definitely help us."

A win against the Badgers would push the Irish record to one match below .500. More important, however, is the confidence and momentum a victory would give Notre Dame going into weekend contests against top-twenty teams Kentucky and Texas.

Irish need to win the 'sure things' (like Dayton)

Notre Dame fans ask very little of the men's basketball team. NCAA tournament bids and the Sweet Sixteen are expectations placed in seasons far, far away. The small expectations fans have centers on the occasional win, but more importantly the occasional "sure thing."

Notre Dame fans will occasionally call for an upset of Duke or UCLA but that need is secondary to wins over St. Bonaventure, Valparaiso, and Dayton. Fans need a sure thing to let their pulse rates drop, and regain a sense of the team's standing on a national scale.

This season, fans' pulse rates have skyrocketed as of late thanks to four straight losses, but according to tradition the Irish appear ready to break free from their slump. The annual trip to the University of Dayton Arena has come, and the 2-16 Flyers seem like, well, a sure thing.

Even in the darkest of years, Notre Dame could always be considered among the nation's mediocre, and at the start of this season, that seemed a safe ranking for Coach John MacLeod's team. But an 8-11 record and the recent skid has dropped Notre Dame near the edge of the mediocre line, and caused reason not to write in tonight's game as a lock win for Notre Dame.

Dayton lost to Notre Dame 71-66 January 9 at the Joyce ACC and since then has dropped five of their last six. But of those losses, two were close setbacks to Butler and Detroit Mercy, teams which dominated Notre Dame. The one win came in convincing fashion at Loyola, a victim of Notre Dame's earlier in the season.

But on the flip side, we are still talking about Dayton, a team holding a 1-8 mark at home. Also, two projected starters, senior forward Alex Robertson and sophomore center Chris Daniels, fell to injuries prior to the start of the season, depleting an already thin lineup.

These facts give an indication that Irish fans could say without a hard swallow that tonight will mark the end of Notre Dame's four-game losing streak. But then again, this season's team has been all but consistent.

In the January 9 contest center Chip Hare's victimized the Irish defense for 33 points and 14 rebounds prompted Dayton Coach Jim O'Brien to say "Hare is our Haas." The Flyers are known as an outside-shooting team, making Hare's performance a little odd. But not too unusual for an Irish defense which has been abused this season.

The inconsistency showed itself weeks earlier in a loss to St. Bonaventure, forcing Irish fans to wonder if Dayton is the next supposedly "sure thing" to topple Notre Dame.

But why fantasize about an Irish loss. Dayton is just one of those teams. But it also seems that the number of "sure things" has lessened from the Irish schedule in the past years. Detroit Mercy and Butler were once penciled in as lock wins but are now question marks.

Until forced to say otherwise, Dayton is a "sure thing." But no longer the surest.

Men's tennis prepares for Kentucky

Mark Schmidt will play a key role for Notre Dame against Kentucky.

The 6th-ranked Notre Dame men's tennis team traveled to the Bluegrass State yesterday in preparation for tonight's dual meet with the 11th-ranked Wildcats of the University of Kentucky.

Tonight's meet will be another chance for the Irish to prove they can compete with the top teams in the nation, after falling in their first meet against a top-10 team on January 31. In that meet the 8th-ranked Tarheels beat the Irish 5-3 on the strength of two doubles wins.

However, the Irish seem to be poised for the Wildcats, after preparing for two weeks for the clash in Lexington. The only Irish player to compete in the last two weeks has been top singles player Will Forsyth.

Forsyth, the 19th-ranked singles player in the nation, was invited to the Rolex Indoor National Championship in Minneapolis, and was impressive in advancing to the second round. Forsyth first defeated Pepperdine's Howard Joffe, fending off match point in a third-set tiebreaker, and then fell to 6th-ranked Mike Sell of Georgia, 4-6, 7-5, 6-4.

Forsyth's showing has renewed his confidence for the upcoming dual meet season, which bodes well for the rest of the Irish as they take on the talented Wildcats.

"I'm playing with some confidence," said Forsyth. "And they have a pretty solid lineup."

That Wildcat lineup is led by Major Gudars, a talented player from Australia.

"He's a very flashy player," said Forsyth, "I am sure he'll feed off the big home crowd."

Besides Forsyth's matchup with Gudars, the Irish will be challenged in the doubles matches, where Forsyth and Chuck Coleman, Mark Schmidt and Chris Wojtalik, and Ron Rosas and freshman Jason Pun have run into problems as of late.

The winner of two out of the three doubles matches wins a point in the overall scoring, and that point will be important against such an evenly matched opponent as Kentucky.

Irish face Dayton; Cozen lost for season

Observer Staff Report

The problems continue to mount for the Notre Dame men's basketball team.

Junior Carl Cozen will miss the rest of the season with a stress fracture in his foot, diminishing Notre Dame's already shallow bench. A similar injury sidelined freshman Keith Kurowski during the preseason.

But lack of depth is only one of the problems that has hurt the Irish this season. Turnovers and poor shooting have cost Notre Dame six of their last nine games and their last four in a row.

So tonight's game against 2-16 Dayton could be just the remedy the Irish need, right?

Not if their previous meeting is any indication. On January 9, Dayton visited the Joyce Center and nearly escaped with a victory.

A sloppy offensive performance nearly cost the Notre Dame the game. But the emergence of sophomore Jason Williams and freshman Ryan Hoover lifted the Irish to a tenuous 71-66 win.

Carl Cozen

6-10 sophomore, hit six three-pointers on the way to a 33-point performance. He also equalled his career-best in rebounds with 13.

Junior guard Derrick Dukes is Dayton's other offensive weapon, averaging 10.7 points per game.

Some good news for the Irish is that the Flyers have struggled at home this season, winning only one of nine games in Dayton. But Notre Dame has had similar problems on the road, dropping six of their last seven games away from the Joyce Center.

With games against Kentucky, North Carolina, Louisville and Marquette still ahead, the Irish have to win against the sub-par teams to hold on to even the most remote hope of post-season play.

Irish women take on Badgers

One and three. 1-3.

Any way you look at it, a record of 1-3 just doesn't manage to impress. However, the Irish women's tennis squad carrying that mark into today's match at Wisconsin just may be the best 1-3 team in the country.

In their first four matches, the Notre Dame women have faced three teams — Duke, UCLA, and Georgia — ranked in the top seven of Division I. And for a team starting freshmen in three of its six spots, the Irish have performed well against the challenging schedule.

In fact, if the Irish continue their solid play, Coach Jay Louderback believes the women will soon be pulling upsets over their ranked competition.

"Against all our opponents we have had a lot of three-set matches. All the women on the team are scrappy and aggressive—they come right at you—and it's only a matter of time before we break through and upset some teams."

Although Wisconsin is not currently ranked, the match against the Badgers is an important step toward an Irish breakthrough.

Momentum may be on the side of the Irish as they travel to Madison today. Notre Dame's only win came in their most recent match against Minnesota. According to Louderback, this victory was important for squad morale.

"Minnesota wasn't a ranked team, but it still was a big win for us as far as confidence is concerned. I think some of the players may have been getting a little frustrated."

If momentum does not key an Irish win at Wisconsin, perhaps revenge will be a factor. The Irish were beaten at Eck Pavilion by the Badgers last season.

"In the last two years," said Louderback, "we've traded victories [with Wisconsin]. There seems to be a growing rivalry and I think that's because we're very similar teams. Along with Indiana and Northwestern, both squads are in the top four in the Midwest Region, so this match is important to our qualifying status for the NCAA Tournament."

"A key to winning the match for us will be getting ahead in the singles portion. We did not do that in the three matches we lost, but if we can against Wisconsin, we'll be in good shape. They always seem to have a
