Irish racing team's new car is real, real fine

By JASON WILLIAMS Associate News Editor

"She's real fine, my 385."

In their original song, the Beach Boys sing "she's real fine my 409," glamorizing loud, four-barreled, gas-guzzling hot rod cars that whisked people across the wide open American roads.

But for the most part, that era has passed, and Notre Dame engineering students are helping to usher in a new way of automotive travel by racing a sleek, almost dead silent, Indystyle battery powered car with a maximum voltage of 385.

Notre Dame, along with 11 other universities, purchased rolling chassis and fiberglass shells as specified by the Solar and Electric Racing Association (S.E.R.A.) in Phoenix. A challenge to the schools was then put out to see who could design the best type of propulsion sys-

"There's two objectives involved," said Col. John Miles, Notre Dame's assistant dean of Engineering. "One is to give undergrads hands on research, and the second is to enhance technology of electric vehicles."

Notre Dame Racing, which consisted of 26 undergraduates last year, chose a lead acid battery produced by Delco/Remy for their car. The undergrads, led by their advisor Professor William Barry, then designed what they believed was the most efficient way to install 28 12-volt batteries.

Just how well did Notre Dame's design work? In the two races they competed in this summer, they won both pole positions, won a race in Cleveland, and came in second

The races are usually 15 laps long with all cars taking at least one pit stop to recharge batteries. At the Cleveland race, it took Notre Dame's pit crew only 50 seconds to change out

"At the Cleveland race we managed to go the longest—8 laps-before we had to pit," Miles said. "Our average speed was 83 miles per hour, which is not bad considering that it was a road course with lots of sharp turns. We've never had the car up to maximum speed, but we figure it could go 150 to 160 miles per hour."

Alcohol abuse plagues campus

By KATIE MURPHY

Associate News Editor

For years, alcohol consumption has been deemed a legitimate rite of passage on college and university campuses across the Drinking parties, tailgaters, and college bars are typical aspects of Father Malloy

American college life, even though 3 out of 4 college students cannot legally drink.

In a study released last June by the Commission on Substance Abuse at Colleges and Universities, the extent of alcohol consumption among America's college students has reached staggering heights.

"With the greater risk of AIDS and other potentially tragic consequences, alcohol abuse on campus has now reached crisis proportions," said Father Edward Malloy, president of the University of Notre Dame and chairman of the commission.

"All substance abuse, but most especially alcohol on college campuses, is inhibiting the intellectual, social and spiritual development of our students."

Although the commission originally intended to address a number of types of substance abuse, recent scientific literature and research targeted alcohol abuse as the most serious campus problem. With this in mind, the commission decided to ultimately focus the study on this trend,

"The pattern of drinking on college campuses is unhealthy, excessive, and unnecessary,' Malloy said.

The commission observed that:

- over the past 15 years, the percentage of college women drinking to get drunk has more than tripled, from approximately 10 percent to 35 per-
- each year students spend over $5.5 billion on alcoholic beverages- more than they spend on all other drinks and books combined:
- 8 percent of students drink an average of 16 drinks or more per week;

on campus is alcohol-related;

• 95 percent of violent crime

campuses make the issue of alcohol abuse a top priority, the commission proposed that a national Alcohol Awareness Index be formulated. This index would help institutions assess their own programs and also allow parents and students to compare the alcohol environment at different schools.

■ Inside Column

The common good, not the good of the party

There is a disturbing phenomena that now controls the headlines of this country's newspapers. From page one to the opinion pages, it's staring America in the face,, in big, bold type. The malaise pervades both parties, and threatens to bring our political system to its knees.

Dave Tyler Assistant News Editor

Consider these banners that recently ran in the Chicago Tribune. One read, "November looking sweet to Republicans," and it was closely followed by a letter to the editor entitled, "Don't counts Dems out yet."

These are just two examples of events that have colored our political landscape for some time. This pattern has earned several names from the press. It's been called gridlock, apathy, partisanship—to name a few. These terms are just smoke-screens. Simply put, the elected representatives, politicians, and members of America's two parties have put self-interest, their party and political backers ahead of such a basic idea as voting with your conscience and the common good in mind.

Members of both sides have succumbed to pressures from political action committees, special interest groups, lobbyists, and other fat-cat supporters. The instance is few and far between where a member of Congress asks, "I wonder if this package would benefit the people of my state or district?" Instead, politicians ask themselves if actions will win campaign contributions, or political backing.

It is also the rule, rather than the exception that political parties think in terms of elections instead of ideas. Politicians conduct business with a great deal of name calling, hair-pulling, and personal attacks that border on slander. An activity will not be undertaken unless it; damages the other party and furthers the status of your own, increases a politician's exposure, helps a congressmen get elected, or any combination of the above.

This must not be. This sad state of affairs has become endemic to American politics, and its reign of terror must end. Three hundred years ago a philosopher named John Locke wrote about the concept of the common, or public good. He held that there were certain ideas that were beneficial to a nation and its people, and that the leaders of that nation should take action with these goals in mind. Political questions should be dealt with in this framework: Does the idea promote the public good and welfare?

These ideas profoundly affected the framers of the Constitution, the supreme law of the land, which the present political generation are sworn to uphold and abide by. This government is for the people and their "general welfare."

The nation is in dire need of unity and direction. Millions of people are living in poverty, without health care, and in constant fear of drug dealers and gang violence. A staggering debt, growing dropout rates and an increasing wage disparity plague the country. year olds are becoming murderers. Both houses, both parties and the White House need to remember the lessons of Locke and the Constitution. It is time fix our nation's ills, not fight with partisan bias. At all costs, the common good must be promoted.

Locke also notes that when the government ignores the public good, the people should have the power to rise up and remove it. We in the United States do. Just something to think about.

R.E.M., Salt-N-Pepa-EnVogue dominate MTV Music Awards

NEW YORK

And the award for upstaging its own award program: Once again, it's MTV! Sure, the music channel was handing out its 11th annual MTV Video Music Awards on Thursday night, with lots of big-name nominees. But the pre-party focus was on newlyweirds Michael and Lisa Marie Presley-Jackson, who opened the show with their first live television appearance as husband and wife. "Please welcome Mr. and Mrs.

Michael Jackson," the announcer intoned as the program went on the air. "I'm very happy to be here. And just think, nobody thought this would last," Jackson said, then planted a big kiss on his wife to the squealing delight of the crowd.

R.E.M. — which had six nominations — won the direction, cinematography, editing and so-called "breakthrough" awards for its haunting "Everybody Hurts." The dance award went to "Whatta Man" by Salt-N-Pepa, featuring En Vogue. Aerosmith won the group citation for "Cryin'." And Counting Crows were selected best new artist for "Mr. Jones."

Black leader elected coalition president

NEW ORLEANS

A Florida pastor who says the nation's largest black church must be a leader in the battles against AIDS, poverty and violence was elected president of the National Baptist Convention U.S.A. Inc. Thursday. The Rev. Henry Lyons, president of the Florida General Baptist Convention and a vice president of the national body, won a close election over four other candidates. Lyons, 51, pastor of Bethel Metropolitan Baptist Church in St. Petersburg, received 3,545 votes. The Rev. W. Franklyn Richardson, a Mt. Vernon, N.Y, pastor who served as general secretary of the convention for 12 years, finished second. Lyons succeeds the Rev. T.J. Jemison, the Lousiana pastor who after 12 years is prohibited from seeking re-election. With an estimated 8 million members in 33,000 churches, the convention claims to be the world's largest black organization. The election of the convention's third president in 42 years comes at a criticical juncture for black churches under pressure to tackle AIDS, violence, poverty and the dissolution of family life. In 1961, the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. and other civil rights leaders left the convention to form the Progressive National Baptist Convention after their candidate lost a turbulent bid for the presidency.

In presenting a lifetime achievement award to the Rolling Stones, Rolling Stone magazine publisher Jann Wenner talked about how much the enduring rock band had meant to him throughout his life.

"They've inspired me in word and deeds. I took their name for my magazine. And they mean more to me now than ever. I'm a total stone-cold Stones fan, and proud of it," Wenner said.

That provoked Mick Jagger to joke: "Without us, Jann, the magazine might have been called the Herman's Hermits Monthly."

Performing between the acceptance speeches was a musical smorgasbord: the Stones, Bruce Springsteen, Tom Petty and the Heartbreakers, the Beastie Boys, Snoop Doggy Dogg, Stone Temple Pilots, Boyz II Men, Salt-N-Pepa, Green Day and Smashing Pumpkins

Virtually all the performers were nominees. After winning the Academy Award for "Streets of Philadelphia," Springsteen collected a kitschy statue of an astronaut — which is what the MTV video award looks like — for best video from a film to put alongside that Oscar.

Gary police search for missing man

GARY, Ind

Gary police were seeking information today on a 32-year-old man who was expected to join the department later this month. "We don't know if he met with foul play. We don't know anything," Detective Cpl. Bill Burns said today. "This is a complete mystery to us at this time and we're asking for help. Gregory Iverson hasn't been heard from since talking to his father Sunday night, Burns said. Gregory proudly reported that he had been doing well at the police academy and would be getting his Gary patrolman's uniform soon, said his father, Millard, who retired from the Gary Police Department last year after 29 years on the force. Iverson didn't report back to the academy in Plainfield on Tuesday morning and his father called the absence unusual. "We're all befuddled about this," Millard Iverson said.

John Mellencamp cancels tour

BLOOMINGTON, Ind.

Singer John Mellencamp canceled the remainder of his "Dance Naked" tour today after doctors discovered a clogged artery in his heart. Mellencamp, 42, underwent tests at Bloomington Hospital on Wednesday after he complained of fatigue. Doctors discovered an occluded artery of the heart, said Lauren Murphy, a spokesperson for Mercury Records in New York. "Basically, that means there's a blockage there, a clogged artery. They recommended that he cancel the rest of his tour and rest," Murphy said. "The doctors are coming up with a course of treatment. The prognosis is extremely good for a full recovery." Murphy did not know what sort of treatment Mellencamp would need. Mellencamp had been at home in Bloomington on a scheduled break from his tour when he began feeling ill, Murphy said. He will continue staying there to rest and edit the video for "Dance Naked," the next single from his album. The tour, which began July 29, had 14 dates remaining, including a show Thursday night in Vancouver. The tour was scheduled to end in Indianapolis on Oct. 1. Murphy said the singer will not be making up any of the canceled shows.

SMC considers installing cable

By JENNIFER LEWIS News Writer

Due to logistical problems, Saint Mary's has put the cable policy proposal submitted in the Fall of 1993 on the backburner, according to LeMans Residence Hall Director Colleen

The proposal, made by the Resident Hall Association (RHA) to the Senior Officers came about after several years of investigation.

Saint Mary's is looking into two different options of installing cable. One is laying wire through the buildings, and the other is installing wireless systems through a satellite dish. There are complications with both, according to vice president of fiscal affairs, Dan

Laying cable would create time consuming disruptions on campus. Osburger said, the wireless approach has too many limitations. The cable would only be accessable in the lobbies of the resident halls. Most of the dorms only have one lounge area with a T.V. and due to difficulties with the satellite dishes. LeMans, would be unable to posses cable.

"There are not enough t.v. lounges in the halls," said Osburger. "in order for it to be worth while, we would have to create more lounge areas.

Colleen McKenna, resident hall director of LeMans Hall regards cable in high demand and believes it should be installed as soon as possible.

"I really think in today's society cable is a necessity, cable T.V is much more than Mtv and Fox," she said. "T.V. has proven to be an educational tool just as much as an entertainment source.

Regardless of the positive aspects of cable there will be a two to three year delay due to minimum cost and planning, said Osburger.

Malloy noted that the drinking patterns at Notre Dame "resemble the patterns elsewhere." Approximately 85-90 percent of University disciplinary problems (such as sexual misconduct, destruction of property, impaired driving, unruliness) are related to alcohol consumption.

The official University rules regarding alcohol consumption are described in du Lac. At the beginning of the school year, a Drug-Free Policy Statement was distributed to campus residents reiterating these regulations.

At Notre Dame, Malloy expects to foster an extended dialogue on the issue of alcohol consumption and eventually review campus policies in du Lac.

"The members of this commission were not prohibitionists and we're not trying to create a society where human freedom is more restricted," said Malloy. "We are much more concerned with matters of health than we have ever been before."

Commission members included

Joseph Paterno, Head Football Coach, Penn State; William Gray III., President, United Negro College Fund; Johnetta Cole, President of Spelman College; Senators Nancy Kassebaum (R-KA) and Jeff Bingaman (D-N.M.); Harvey Fineberg, Dean, Harvard School of Public Health; Herbert Pardes, Dean of the Faculty of Medicine, Columbia University; Pamela Ann Rymer, Judge (U.S. Court of Appeals, 9th Cir.), and Frederick Bohen, Executive Vice President and Chief Operating Officer, The Rockefeller University.

Commission on Substance Abuse at Colleges and Universities

- America's colleges and universities must make the issue of alcohol abuse a top priority.
- Students should take the lead themselves in discussing the issues of alcohol abuse and identifying ways to improve the culture on campus.
- An alcohol awareness index shouldbe developed to identify the degree to which a school creates an alcohol-responsible environment.

USAir jet crashes near Pittsburgh, 131 killed

By MICHAEL HADDIGAN
Associated Press

ALIQUIPPA, Pa. A USAir jetliner nose-dived into a field while trying to land near Pittsburgh on Thursday, killing all 131 people on board. It was the deadliest crash in the United States in seven years.

Flight 427 originated at Chicago's O'Hare International Airport and was to stop in Pittsburgh before continuing to West Palm Beach, Fla.

"I looked up and there it was," said Tom Michel, who was at a gas station near the crash site. "It was just coming straight down. I was screaming for everybody to run. It looked like it was under full power and he just went straight in."

Air traffic controllers said they lost contact with the plane when it was about seven miles from the airport, said Pat Boyle, a spokesman for the Allegheny County Department of Aviation. He said a report of an explosion before the crash could not be confirmed.

Michel said there was a "big boom and the sky lit up. There was black smoke everywhere and that was it."

Witnesses reported a gruesome carnage in a clearing on a heavily-wooded ravine.

"All we saw was body parts hanging from the trees," said Denise Godich, a nurse who was one of the first at the scene. "There were people everywhere. You could just see parts of them."

Another eyewitness said pieces of plane and baggage were scattered throughout the area.

The plane's black box, which records cockpit conversations and flight data, was recovered, said Jim Eichenlaub, manager of Hopewell Township and coordinator of emergency services at the scene.

"We have done a fairly extensive search of the area and there are no survivors," he said.

The Boeing 737 was carrying 126 passengers and a crew of five, said Dave Shipley, a spokesman for the airline.

The plane went down shortly after 7 p.m. in a field about seven miles from the airport, which is 20 miles northwest of Pittsburgh.

"The engines just went dead," eyewitness Sandra Zuback told CNN. "It just blew up."

Shipley said the weather was clear. "There's no indication at all as to what caused the accident," he said.

Linda Jones said she was standing on her porch when she saw the plane turn to the right, turn over once or twice, and go down behind some trees.

The plane was at 6,000 feet when it went off the radar, Boyle said. He said the plane went down at 7:19 p.m., 10 minutes after it was due in at the airport.

Several doctors who were first told to go to the scene were later told not to bother, hospitals said.

There were 20 emergency vehicles on top of the hill, and a medical helicopter hovered above. Fire hoses snaked through the trees to try to douse the area.

Because the terrain near the wreckage is so rugged, rescue crews were having to build a road to the crash site. No attempts to remove debris were expected before Friday.

A temporary morgue was being set up at the airport, said Arthur Gilkes of the Allegheny County Coroner's Office. "We were told the prospect of survivors is very slim," he said.

People who had been waiting at Pittsburgh International Airport to meet passengers were taken into a private area and counselors were being brought in.

The crash was the worst in the United States since Aug. 16, 1987, when a Northwest Airlines MD-80 went down while taking off from Detroit Metropolitan Airport, killing 156 people. A 4-year-old girl was the sole survivor.

It was the fourth fatal USAir crash in the past five years.

On July 2, a USAir jetliner crashed in a thunderstorm near the Charlotte-Douglas International Airport in North Carolina, killing 37 of the 57 people on board.

Do We Believe That This Little Girl is a Human Being?

Whether or not this little girl is a human being is not a matter of theology, morality, or belief as some would lead you to think.

Rather it is a matter of science, and the scientific evidence is clear. Human beings don't produce non-human offspring. But you need not take our word for it, just listen to the official journal of the California Medical Association,

"The very considerable semantic gymnastics which are required to rationalize abortion as anything but taking a human life would be ludicrous if they were not often put forth under socially impeccable auspices."

Yet this same editorial endorsed abortion on demand. And abortion advocates such as The New Republic and Kate Michelman, head of the National Abortion Rights Action League (NARAL), while normally ducking the issue, have also admitted the same thing.

It is clear that both pro-life and pro-choice activists agree that this is a human being. Yet there is one issue that they do not agree on: whether or not all human beings should have the same rights regardless of stage of development.

The pro-life side believes that all human beings should have the same rights. The pro "choice" side believes that it is up to them to choose whose life has value. And if your life has no value to them, they pronounce you "non-human" or not a "person."

We believe that all human beings should have the same rights regardless of stage of development. What do you believe?

Bosnians celebrate mass without Pope

By CLARE NULLIS Associated Press

> SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina

Tearful and angry faithful gathered at Sarajevo's cathedral Thursday for a Mass left hollow by the absence of the pope, as John Paul II, grounded in Italy by security fears, called on Serbs, Croats and Muslims to forgive.

The Vatican this week called off a one-day visit to the Bosnian capital planned for Thursday, saying the pope feared for the safety of the crowds that would have turned out to see him and worried that his pilgrimage could aggravate tensions in the besieged city.

The pope addressed the people of Sarajevo on radio and television and delivered the same sermon he had planned to give if he had been present in the Bosnian capital. "The spiral of 'wrongs' and 'punishments' will never stop if forgiveness does not come at a certain point," he said. "To forgive does not mean to forget. If memory is the law of history, forgiveness is the power of God."

Matilda Sagolj said she cried when she heard the pope's words in Serbo-Croatian, broadcast from the courtyard of his summer residence in Castel Gandolfo, near Rome. "I am sorry, I am so sorry," she said, breaking into tears again. "His arrival meant almost everything to me, and now I feel terrible."

A papal envoy, Monsignor Francesco Monterisi, said in Sarajevo that the pope still hoped to visit "in one of the next few days, in the near-future." But with security still a nightmare, it was unclear what would make the pontiff change his mind.

Conference reaches agreement

By EDITH LEDERER Associated Press

CAIRO, Egypt With anger growing over the Vatican's hard-line stance on abortion, negotiators at the U.N. population conference Thursday hammered out what they called a last-chance compromise on the explosive issue.

A special committee assigned to write the provision on unsafe abortions agreed on a compromise text Thursday night. The main negotiating committee was expected to consider the new language on Friday.

But even if the compromise succeeds, the controversy at the conference won't end because negotiators still face other contentious provisions of the meeting's 20-year action plan.

The main committee is expected to consider sections on reproductive and sexual health on Friday that refer to "fertility regulation" — a phrase the Vatican views as a code word for abortion — and adolescent sexuality.

To address the concerns of some nations on Thursday, the World Health Organization's definition of unsafe abortion was added to the section on abortion as a health issue. That definition says abortion is unsafe if carried out by unqualified people in inappropriate settings.

To show how minutely the wording has been worked over, a new draft of the proposed compromise changes "legal" abortion — which the Vatican opposed — to abortion that "is not against the law."

Earlier Thursday, Nicolaas Biegman, vice-chairman of the overall negotiations, said he was confident the special committee on unsafe abortion would "very, very quickly" arrive at a final compromise text.

"As far as I am concerned, (this) will be the end of the discussion in the committee because anything which could possibly be accommodated has been accommodated," he said.

Timothy Wirth, the U.S. undersecretary of state for global affairs, told reporters Thursday night: "We're very close to getting finished. ... I expect we will get through the abortion issue tomorrow morning and it will be downhill from there."

The Vatican delegation said it was pondering how to react to the compromise, but suggested it may have a problem with the phrase "safe abortion" because abortion is "unsafe" for the fetus.

The conference's plan of action does not require the blanket approval of all participants, and the Vatican did not approve documents that came out of the two previous U.N. conferences in 1974 and 1984.

But great effort is being made to reach compromise because the United Nations likes consensus when issuing long-term goals.

The compromise drafted on Thursday is a revision of the version put forward earlier this week by the European Union and backed by the United States, Nordic nations and several Muslim countries including Iran and Pakistan.

Crown heights retrial will be public ity, most of the arguments that one would normally hear for closure strike me as not being very relevant here," U.S. District Judge David G. Trager

Trager postponed decisions on whether to try Lemrick Nelson as an adult, and whether to remove himself from the case over what defense lawyers say is a conflict of interest.

Nelson is charged with violating the civil rights of Yankel Rosenbaum, a Jewish scholar of the ultra-Orthodox Lubavitcher sect who was stabbed to death by members of a black mob during racial disturbances in Brooklyn's Crown Heights section in August 1991.

The violence was set off by the death of a 7-year-old black boy, Gavin Cato, who was struck by a car traveling in a motorcade of Lubavitchers

Nelson, then 16, was charged with the murder but acquitted by a state court jury. Under pressure from members of the Jewish community and Brooklyn District Attorney Charles J. Hynes, U.S. Attorney General Janet Reno decided earlier this year to try him again under federal civil rights laws.

Because federal law defines juveniles as under 18 — it's 16 under state law - the court must decide whether to try Nelson as a juvenile or an adult.

MIA teams find remains

By GEORGE ESPER ssociated Press

HANOI, Vietnam U.S. search teams apparently have made a significant breakthrough in accounting for Americans missing in action from the Vietnam War, a U.S. official said Thursday.

American search teams recovered remains believed to belong to a U.S. Marine who died in captivity in Quang Ngai Province, once part of South Vietnam, 325 miles northeast of Ho Chi Minh City, formerly Saigon.

The discovery was seen as a breakthrough by U.S. officlais in Hanoi, who are investigating 84 cases of Americans missing in action from the war.

"I'm excited by it, I'm hopeful," said Army Lt. Col. Melvin Richmond Jr., head of the U.S. MIA Office in Hanoi. "It's an important

The United States handed over the 84" 'special remains cases' to the Vietnamese a year ago, but not one had been solved up to now.

In each case, the Vietnamese photographed the dead American servicemen or the sites where POWs died in captivity and their remains were buried.

President Clinton has made Vietnam's cooperation in the fullest possible accounting of MIAs a condition for establishing full diplomatic relations.

Richmond said that Vietnamese cooperation was still "strong" in the latest field operation that began Aug. 18 and is to end Sept. 20. He said other remains believed to be those of Americans were either recovered or turned over by villagers, but he declined to say how many.

U.S. investigators were led to the gravesite by a former soldier who survived the POW camp and was released in 1973 when all American forces withdrew from Vietnam.

Thomas Davis, a 20-yearold draftee private from Eufaula, Ala., said a prayer and buried his buddy nearly 25 years ago. He returned to pinpoint the burial site.

Davis said as many as 10 Americans died in the camp. One was killed trying to escape, and others, like his buddy, died from malnutrition and lack of medical care he said.

"His body just gave out, I watched him die."

Richmond cautioned that the identification was not final, and that a thorough forensic examination would be necessary.

"Up until this time, we've been unable to solve a single one of the 84 special remains cases," said Richmond. "This is the first time that we have the possibility of solving one.'

The United States was allied with South Vietnam during the war that ended in victory for the Communist North.

Protestant extremists unwilling to cease-fire

By ROBERT BARR Associated Press

BELFAST, Northern Ireland Protestant extremists said Thursday they won't lay down their arms until they are convinced an IRA cease-fire is real and Britain and Ireland reveal their plan for Northern Ireland's future.

The demand to first see the details of the "framework document" being negotiated by London and Dublin effectively put any cease-fire on the Protestant side a month or more away.

"Change, if any, can only be honorable after dialogue and agreement," said a statement from the Combined Loyalist Military Command, an umbrella group for outlawed Protestant paramilitary groups. "It is important that patience is shown

The British and Irish governments missed their July target for finishing a proposal for restoring a degree of self-government to Northern Ireland. Prime Minister John Major's office said Thursday the two governments hoped to complete the proposal sometime in the autumn.

The framework would then be subject to negotiations among all parties in Northern Ireland.

The Belfast Telegraph, citing unidentified sources, reported Thursday that the proposal would call for an elected, 85member assembly in Northern Ireland, with elected lawmakers replacing British ministers in executive positions. Major's office declined to comment on

Quayle's new target: Fathers

By DARA AKIKO TOM Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO Dan Quayle, testing the waters for a 1996 presidential bid, returned Thursday to the scene of his Murphy Brown comments to hammer away again on family values. This time he took on

Speaking to the Commonwealth Club of California, the former vice president said he still believes the woes of America are largely due to the deterioration of two-parent fami-

"Too often fathers walk away from their children, or worse

yet, they don't even know who their children are," Quayle said to the luncheon crowd of about 1,000. "Raising a child is not just a mother's responsibility.'

President Bush's former sidekick said he will wait until after the November elections before deciding whether to seek the Republican presidential nomination.

In his speech, Quayle said he couldn't understand the controversy he sparked in 1992 when he criticized the fictitious Brown, a successful TV news reporter who decided to have a child out of wedlock. He told the Commonwealth Club at the time that Brown mocked "the importance of fathers by bearing a child alone, and calling it just another lifestyle choice.

'What I was talking about then and what I am reiterating today is the importance of fathers," he said, "Especially for youngsters who don't come into the world with a stock portfolio and a reserved place at an Ivy League University.

Quayle, who attended De-Pauw University and Indiana University Law School, said that times have changed from the "peace and prosperity in the 1950s, through the 'if-itfeels-good, do-it,' 1960s, to the 'me generation' of the 1970s and then to the 'values-free zone' of the '80s and '90s.'

'This cavalier attitude toward values is felt most painfully in fatherless families," he said.

Welfare reform, tax incentives for married couples and better entertainment and sports role models would help rebuild America's families, Quayle said.

"If children grow up never knowing their father, they're bound to assume that fathers are irrelevant, and that males are not accountable," Quayle

Notre Dame took their car to the Indianapolis 500 at the end of May to make a demo run. The throttle in the car stuck and the driver, a professional named Mark Folkert, had to run the car into a side rail to stop.

Folkert was safe, but the car was nearly totaled.

So beginning June 1, 10 undergrads worked day and night for the next month to prepare the car for the July 6 Cleveland race. They left South Bend at Midnight, July 6, and made it on time for pre-race registration.

After the test run, the team discovered transmission problems on the car, Barry said. The crew corrected the problem by race time, and were rewarded with the checkered flag.

"I have a lot of respect for these students," Barry said. "They really came together—it was super."

For winning the Cleveland race, Notre Dame received $5,000 in scholarship money. They also gave the city of Cleveland a glimpse of what auto racing in the future may be like.

"We really surprised a lot of people in Cleveland," said Patrick Wolf, a senior electrical engineering major and member of the Irish Racing Team. "It was the quietest race they've ever heard. With electric race cars you have a low hum, so you can sit and talk to whoever is sitting next to you instead of screaming."

Now that the brief racing season is over, the Irish Racing Team is running into more problems.

"Well up to now the Athletic

WHEN:

Department has let us store the car in the football stadium, but now they need that space," Barry said. "We've had to go looking all over campus, and thankfully Campus Security has given us some space."

Irish Racing has also received countless volunteer hours and services from Surrey Motor Sports of Niles, Michigan, while Gurley-Leep of South Bend was willing to donate a truck to the team for pulling their trailer.

On the other hand, the team is having fun using its creativity in a continuing effort to make design improvements on the car.

"One thing we got to do at the races was to look around and see what everybody else was up to," Wolf said. "I'm working on the car with another guy for our senior design project. Right now we've got a handful of ideas we want to implement before the upcoming races this spring."

Areas of improvement include a system to better monitor the car's power supply, testing different wheel greases and creating a diagnostic package so all the car's systems can be watched, Barry said.

The Irish have four races tentatively set for next spring and summer — Phoenix, Long Beach, Detroit and Cleveland. Funding is the sole reason the races are tentative, Barry said.

But for now, the buzz of the racing team's brain power is hoping to make the car's electric hum sing a little more cleanly.

Kmart announces shutdowns China trade mission

Associated Press

TROY, Mich.

Kmart Corp. announced today it will close 110 discount stores nationwide that are failing to meet financial goals, eliminating 6,000 jobs, and cut its management force by 10 percent.

The stores are in 30 states and will be closed by February Chairman Joseph Antonini said. The closings represent 4.7 percent of its 2,350 discount stores nationwide.

The cuts in the management work force — a total of 2,300 jobs - will be made over two years, including 650 store managers who will lose their jobs immediately as a result of the store closings. Kmart Corp. employs about 260,000 people.

Kmart conducted an assessment of our core discount stores to identify which stores were not meeting our returnon-investment requirements," Antonini said. "Going forward with our renewal, we will insist that our stores fully meet our return-on-investment requirements."

Antonini broadcast the announcement to its discount stores nationwide at 8:30 a.m. Eastern today.

The managers of the stores being shut down were notified of the decision earlier this morning in meetings with Kmart executives, spokeswoman Shawn Kahle said.

Antonini also said Kmart will begin consolidating and hiring outside the company for some administrative functions at Troy headquarters sometime in

meets resistance

By TERRIL JONES Associated Press

PARIS Insulated by a police ban on anti-Beijing protests, Chinese President Jiang Zemin began a five-day visit to France on Thursday in which he is expected to seal billions of dollars worth of trade agreements.

The Committee to Save Tibetan People and Culture vowed to defy the ban on demonstrations. "Commercial concerns are being put above all considerations of justice and solidarity for a forgotten people," it said in a statement.

The group urged people to join a wreath-laying ceremony to protest Jiang's visit. It called him "a Santa Claus who flashes juicy commercial contracts but whose sack overflows with cadavers.'

The committee opposes China's 35-year occupation of Tibet and what it claims is brutal treatment of Tibetans.

Regional police in Marseille, Jiang's arrival point, banned the committee's demonstration, saying it might "disrupt public order and harm Franco-Chinese relations."

Authorities also banned a protest planned by human rights and democracy activists for Jiang's arrival in Paris on Friday, but organizers of that rally have said they also may defy the ban.

Organizers must obtain permits for demonstrations. While the right to demonstrate is protected by the constitution, French authorities sometimes prohibit demonstrations, and even public meetings, on the grounds that they could disturb public order. In the past, rallies by Kurds and the far-right National Front have been Jiang, secretary-general of the Chinese Communist Party, arrived in Marseille after state visits to Russia and Ukraine. His official visit begins Friday when he will be welcomed to Paris by President Francois Mitterrand.

His visit caps a rapid warming of relations between Paris and Beijing that began in January, when France said it would end arms sales to Taiwan, seat of the rival Nationalist Chinese government. China's foreign minister visited Paris in January; Prime Minister Edouard Balladur went to China in April.

French and Chinese officials signed contracts in Paris on Wednesday worth $472 million. and Jiang is to sign another $3 billion in accords Saturday.

While the French government clearly wants to focus on economic issues with Jiang, activist groups are targeting China's human rights record.

The New York-based group Human Rights in China sent a letter to Mitterrand asking him to express concern over China's human rights record.

After its bloody crackdown ended the 1989 pro-democracy movement in Beijing, the Chinese government yielded to pressure from France and other nations and loosened some controls on dissent, the letter said.

Businesses plan investment boost

By JAMES RUBIN Associated Press

WASHINGTON

Despite higher interest rates and signs of a slowing economy, American businesses remain optimistic and expect to modernize and expand this year at the highest rate in five years.

Some 5,000 businesses questioned by the government said they plan to increase investments in new building and equipment by 8.8 percent this year — revised upward from a projection three months ago, the Commerce Department said Thursday.

The businesses, surveyed in July and August, said they would spend $638 billion this year compared to $587 billion last year. The outlays are for constructing and modernizing buildings, installing new computers and upgrading other equipment and machinery.

Meanwhile, the Labor Department said the number of initial claims for state unemployment benefits declined a modest 3,000 last week. Firsttime claims totaled a seasonally adjusted 330,000 in the week ended Sept. 3, down from a revised 333,000 in the previous

If the 1994 business spending plans are realized, it would be the biggest jump in capital investment since an 11.4 percent increase in 1989. In June, the government survey projected an 8.3 percent rise in investment spending this year. Business investment rose 7.3 percent last year.

Blinder defends views on Fed

By MARTIN CRUTSINGER

Associated Press

WASHINGTON Alan Blinder, the No. 2 official at the Federal Reserve, insisted Thursday that he has no serious disagreements with Chairman Alan Greenspan over the central bank's interest-rate policies.

But some private economists said Blinder's comments would do little to dispel the impression that he will not be as tough an inflation-fighter as Greenspan.

Blinder used a scheduled appearance before Mortgage Bankers Association to dispute news reports that he had publicly challenged Greenspan's views on inflation during a Fed-sponsored conference last month in Jackson Hole, Wyo.

"There is no rift between the chairman of the Federal Reserve and myself," said

Blinder, a former Princeton University professor who served as a member of the administration's Council of Economic Advisers before being picked earlier this year by President Clinton to be vice chairman of the Fed.

"I don't want to retract anything I said. I want to state what I actually did say,' Blinder told the Mortgage Bankers Association, asserting that his comments had been taken out of context in some news reports.

In his Wyoming comments, Blinder had said that a central bank "should have a short-run employment objective in addition to its inflation objective.'

Blinder said Thursday that he was stating nothing more than is required by the congressional law under which the Fed operates. That 1978 law directs the central bank to consider both the short-run impact of its policies on unemployment and the long-run effects those policies will have on inflation.

But Greenspan has in fact come out in favor of legislation that would make eliminating inflation the Fed's sole mission. He contends pursuit of this goal will over the long term foster the greatest growth in the economy and the lowest unemployment rates.

Asked later by reporters whether he also supported such a change, Blinder said he did not. He said he felt it was appropriate for the Fed to be worried both about the impact its policies can have on unemployment rates in the short run and inflation in the long run.

But he insisted that he and Greenspan essentially support the same goals.

"I don't believe there are currently any operational differences" among Fed policy-makers, he said.

Poco A Poco

The heartfelt challenge of embracing a new life

There are simply some experiences that no one can prepare you for. Your first kiss. A brush with death. The first week as a college student. There are some feelings so overwhelmingly new that, no matter how thorough the orientation program, you are simply unprepared. The minute our plane touched ground in Mexico City, all of our training flew out the window. It was almost as if our last four weeks of preparation had never happened.

Meredith McCullough

The three of us looked at each other, surprised by this realization. We laughed nervously and gathered up our belongings for departure.

Leaving the comfort of the plane for a world of unknowns, our thoughts darted back and forth between "What in God's name have we gotten ourselves into" to "Hey! Is this going to be a cool adventure or what?!"

We were about to find out...

A year ago I would never have guessed that upon graduation from Notre Dame I would find myself in Cuernavaca, Mexico struggling to learn Spanish. And yet, I have been here a week now doing just that-struggling like crazy with fellow 1994 ND graduates Katie Bergin and Scott Curtis.

But our stay in Cuernavaca is just the beginning.

In three months, a similar plane ride will drop us into yet another world of still more unknowns. In three months, we will journey to Santiago, Chile where we will live and work for the next two years, volunteering as Holy Cross Associates.

Getting to this point was a long, arduous process; but at the same time, it all seems to have happened so quickly.

Somewhere between working for The Observer news department, studying for final exams in government and economics, enjoying my last few months as a college senior and trying to answer the minor question—"What am I going to do with the rest of my life?"—I somehow became a Catholic lay missionary.

Honestly, the title scares me.

I had never before pictured myself in such a capacity. As a writer, sure. As a policy-maker, why not? As a teacher, maybe. But as a Catholic lay missionary? No, it never crossed my mind.

Katie, Scott, and I have quickly discovered that there is no concrete job description for this line of work. Here in Mexico, the objective is clearly identified: learn Spanish from scratch or die trying. But what about Chile? What about this mission thing?

Chilean Associates are teachers. They are community organizers. They work in an orphanage. They play with children and run CCD classes. Associates work in the parish and in the community. They visit the sick and the elderly. They build houses. They listen. They work, live and play side by side with Chileans. Most are friends and companions with those around them.

It is easier for me to understand lay mission in terms of such imagery. I can actually picture myself in a number of these positions. Doing so gives me something concrete to tell people when they innocently ask what "exactly" I am doing in Chile.

Although we are three very different people, it is easy for me to imagine Katie and Scott in these roles too.

We each bring different gifts to Chile. Different interests. Different family backgrounds. Different approaches to life in general. Our experiences over the next few years will naturally be colored by these differences.

But there is a certain continuity too. For all of our differences, the three of us hold onto the same hope that this is not simply a two-year commitment, but an opportunity to integrate the experience into our lives in the US-whether that life is one of a writer or government agent, of a social minister and theology scholar, or of a secondary school mathteacher and basketball coach.

What is the attraction?

Perhaps it is a basic interest in experiencing another culture and language that brings us here. Perhaps it is the preference for a faith-based service program with an emphasis on an active, supportive community. Maybe it is an attempt to live simply or an attraction to a better understanding of the poor in our society. Maybe it is merely a desire to continue our education. It could be an experiment in self-growth or a call for adventure. Or a call from God.

There have been days where I have felt in my bones that for all these reasons and more, volunteering in Chile is what I should be—and must be—doing.

question—"What am I going to do with the rest of my life?"-I somehow became a Catholic lay missionary.'

At this time in my life this is just right for me. On days like this, everything is clear and I know that any pain I feel or any pain I cause my family and friends will pass and that things cannot help but work out as they should for all of us.

Still, a few days later I might wake in a cold sweat. Who am I kidding? What am I trying to prove? Do my family and friends know that because I have chosen this experience in Chile does not mean that I love them any less. Why there?

Why now? Why? Why am I making such a big deal about this?

And in this time of questioning, I find comfort in the people around me. In Katie and Scott are two people who have the same questions and doubts, but who are also strong in their faith and have a tremendous love of life. In the example of and encouragement from Holy Cross Associates who are doing similar work in Arizona, California, Colorado, Massachusetts, and Oregon-perhaps even harder work because it is in areas so familiar to them. And in my family and close friends who may not have chosen to do two years of direct service, but who live quality lives of service every

As part of my commitment to HCA and to The Observer, I have agreed to share our experiences in Mexico and Chile as often as possible. This could mean sharing observations, theses, discussions, controversies or general impressions that come up over the next two years. I am grateful for this opportunity as Notre Dame has played such a huge role in bringing me to Chile in the first place.

A week has passed since our plane first touched down in Mexico City. In that short time a new world has opened up to us. We have moved in with Mexican families. We have begun to learn Spanish "poco a poco." We have become familiar with the streets, delighting in new sights, sounds, colors, aromas and wonderful people around

Women in Mass stir controversy

Only men represent Christ Forget gender in lieu of

A recent letter in the Observer from John Houck referred to the issue of whether women should receive priestly ordination in the Catholic Church. Through "faith seeking understanding", I have discovered that there are genuine reasons why the Catholic Church has taught that only men may be ordained to the priesthood. I will attempt to present some reasons that are sensible to me.

In the face of the past discrimination, the frustration of those who think it is "unjust" that we women may not be ordained is understandable. There is nothing about being a lawyer, for instance, which would keep a woman from fulfilling a lawyer's role, but we were prevented from doing so for many years. Some believe from the priesthood is another similar example.

Our Church teaches that the priesthood is different. Why? Is it that a woman can't be a proper model of holiness? Obviously not. The greatest model of holiness put before all Catholics is a woman: The Virgin Mary

Does a woman lack the status to be socially accepted as a figure of authority? The answer is no. Women are equal in dignity to men. Christ was not afraid to proclaim it to the people of his time. The Popes never tire of repeating that oppression of women is a grave offense.

The essential task of a priest is to offer the holy sacrifice of the Mass. Only a priest can consecrate the host and wine in the Mass, and absolve sins in the sacrament of reconciliation. In is speaking and acting through the priest. The meeting of the human and divine natures in Jesus Christ is essential to our faith as Christians. The priest must represent Christ - who is inseparably God and man - in His divinity and in His humanity. It is therefore fitting that the priest also be a man.

Although it may not be the only or best way to understand the Church's teaching on this matter, it makes sense to me.

I refer the reader who wishes to pursue this question further to the encyclical: "On the Dignity and Vocation of Women".

celebrating Catholicism

Dear Editor:

We are writing to express our surprise over Professor Houck's letter on September 6. We are appalled at the ideas expressed by a faculty member here at Notre Dame. The question Professor Houck deems "profound" is utterly ridiculous. As an integral part of every Catholic's life and spirituality, there is not a more appropriate way to begin the school year than with a

To further refer to the Mass as a "direct attack on the ability, status, commitment, and concern of our women colleagues, staff, and students" is unquestionably ignorant. As women, students, and Catholic, we are both offended by this statement. The Mass is a celebration for a community of believers, and not an opportunity for the Church to persecute women. Sadly, it seems Professor Houck is so preoccupied with this so-called prejedice against women that he overlooks the importance of the Mass and suggests that it is unfit for a co-educational Catholic university.

Pray past feminism

Dear Editor:

Professor Houck admits in his letter of Sept. 6, 1994 that Pope John Paul II's proclaimed open status for women in the Catholic Church (referring to women becoming priests) is "non-debatable. He then asks if Notre Dame's opening day Mass, with 50 or 60 male priests, is an appropriate ceremony.

I, for one, do not think that the fact that priests are male is a hindrance in my ability to worship God. I think it would be highly inappropriate for a Roman Catholic university to subject itself to the personal feelings that its constituents have about feminism. The University is Roman Catholic, and thus subject to the authority of the Roman Catholic Church and the Pope.

I would like to suggest to Professor Houck that the opening Mass is a time to worship our Lord as a community. The purpose of the Mass is to receive and celebrate the sacrament of the Eucharist, not to make an ideological stand. I think it would be quite beneficial for all those who disagree with Pope John Paul II to examine the reasons behind his statements. We must give him the respect he deserves by carefully reading his opinions and understanding the foundations for them. Reading the "Catechism of the Catholic Church" would be a good

Irish cheerleaders: The real pioneer women

A generation ago, Notre Dame was preparing for co-education, taking that first important step towards welcoming women into the academic and social world under the Dome.

It was 25 years ago this fall that the administration took a bold move to provide the one, crucial thing Father Sorin's vision had somehow failed to establish: female cheerleaders.

Notre Dame and Saint Mary's had been slouching reluctantly towards the altar for several years. They allowed students to take courses on each other's campuses, consolidated the theater department and cooperated on overseas and other programs.

But, by the fall of 1969, merger talks had reached the point where women entering Saint Mary's expected the graduate form Notre Dame. Saint Mary's Class of 1973 was double the size of previous classes, a step towards raising the ratio of men to women from 7 to 1 to a planned 3 to 1. That class, it was promised, would register for junior year classes under the Dome, although women still would receive Saint Mary's diplomas unless their entire course load were taken across the street.

It was time for a few gestures, and while Notre Dame may pray over decisions at the Grotto, it goes, it goes to a more important shrine when it is time to make a splash.

Saint Mary's had previously received a limited allotment of tickets in the corner of the end zone, between the Irish freshmen and married students. Now, all Notre Dame and Saint Mary's students would receive general admission, openseating tickets to a unified student section.

And, on the field, would be a cheerleading squad made up of Notre Dame and Saint May's students.

Do not mistake this for a small change. Notre Dame's cheering squad, like those of the military academies, was a throwback to the Thirties: clean-cut young men in sweaters using megaphones to, well, to lead cheers. They did not form pyramids or throw each other into the air and they most certainly did not dance. They were cheerleaders in the classic sense.

"Let's bring them out of the huddle!" the head cheerleader would shout into the microphone he carried, and his distorted voice would come out of a portable speaker aimed at the stands. The other cheerleaders would cheer through their megaphones, and the crowd would cheer with them. "Here we go, Irish, here we go," "Here come the Irish," and "Block that kick!" were interspersed with "Gimme an I" and other traditional football cheers.

But now there were to be girls on the squad. Not women; we never spoke of women. Our mothers were women, and the new cheerleaders were not going to be our mothers. They were going to be college girls.

They were also going to be pioneers. Four women were chosen, all experienced cheerleaders. But Terri Buck Lewallen says the competition would have been tougher, if it hadn't been the Sixties. "Cheerleading was considered kind of disgusting in those days," she recalls. "People said, 'How can you be doing this when people are dying?

The four-Stringer and Buck, together with Missy McCrary and Molly Tiernanhad to be willing to lead cheers, and to take grief, but only as much grief as the administration was willing to see them take. "We were warned by Father MacCarragher the spring before that if the student body didn't want it, we were finished," says Annie Stringer Braly.

Initial response was positive enough to continue the innovation, but there were comments and incidents. In an early game. Buck was hit on the leg by an egg thrown from the student section hard enough to draw blood and leave a bruise.

Leave it to the macho atmosphere to provide something of an answer: The Vikings were the brainchildren of Dillon sophomores Rich Sherman and Mike Murphy, football loyalists appalled by the tea-and-crumpets atmosphere of the new seating arrangements. Arriving early to stake out seats in the front row by the cheerleaders, the Vikings raised constructive hell throughout the game.

'The first game, you could hear a pin drop," Sherman recalls. "It was becoming a social event; guys were more into their dates than the game. We resolved not to let student spirit die: Our motto was, 'Bring Barbarism Back to Notre Dame!"

They brought back barbarism-certainly the administration was unhappy with them-but they also made common cause with the new cheerleaders. The Vikings led crazy, "Boom-shakalakalaka" cheers, the sensual "Go-go, get'em, ooo! ah!" and the drawn-out, ritual invocation "Odin!" from the stands, while the cheerleaders were required to play it straight. But the Vikings had adopted the cheerleaders, and, by the end of the season, the gonzo mystique of the unofficial group was linked to the new look of the on-field troupe.

And, too, by the end of the season, the cheerleaders had rebelled and taken up the raucous Viking cheers. Father MacCarragher need not have worried: The students had accepted female cheerleaders.

There were far more serious bumps ahead, on the road to co-education. But more serious matters would have to wait, as they always must until after football season.

Limpopo: first at "The Loft"

By COLLEEN HAGEN Music Critic

Now that school is back in session, it is time for a little 'true or false" quiz. True or false: Good bands never play campus shows. FALSE. Tonight, Limpopo, a highly acclaimed Russian folk-rock band will be appearing at the Fieldhouse Mall outside LaFortune after the Michigan Pep Rally.

Tonight's concert is the first in a series of concerts sponsored Student Union Board and WVFI. The concert series is called "The Loft," and will be running six times each semester.

S.U.B. and WVFI plan to bring concerts featuring "new, national, independent music and campus talent." names of these bands may not be heard on the radio multiple times each day, but this does not mean they do not have comparably impressive credentials and talent.

The idea for a regularly scheduled concert series was a move to spark some interest among the student body in a collegiate music scene, and the sounds being featured in "The Loft," series are up-and-coming in the music industry. In the past, the two campuses have complained that not enough big name, headline bands have appeared at Notre Dame. Members of S.U.B. report that the problem lies in getting students to come to a concert of band that they have not heard before.

Even though the bands that will play are not yet listed on the Top 40 chart, they have made names for themselves. If the thought of giving some young talent a try is not enough to entice you, think of another

Headliner bands have to start somewhere. They do not just appear at the top of the charts making millions.

Tonight's featured band, Limpopo, call themselves a crazy Russian Folk'n' Roll" band. Not only were they the winof Ed ners McMahon's International Star Search, they also did a national commercial for the Kit Kat Candy Bar and a feature Documentary on Santa Monica City T.V.

Limpopo made an special appearance for a welcoming reception for former Russian leader Mikhail Gorbachev and was an opening act for Stephen Stills.

They appeared at the 1994 National Association of Campus Activities and performed at the Rocky Mountains Folk Festival, the Kerrville Folk Festival, The Just for Laughs Comedy Festival in Montreal, and the International Street Performers Festival.

The guys in "Limpopo" have also been guests on four radio shows in the Los Angeles area.

Igor Yusov, Oleg Bernov, Igor Khramov, and Yuri Fedorko are the four musicians that comprise Limpopo. They are not your typical Rock n' Roll band. Some of the instruments featured in their set are the guitar, balalaika, the upright bass, an enormous bass balalaika, a trombone, accordion, ankle bells, and all band members sing.

Not all of Limpopo's set is music, however. They combine a mix of their jazz influences, pop influences, Russian folk music, and Russian rock and roll with a stage show. Their show was described by the Fort Worth Star Telegram as "a stomping, howling conglomeration of gypsy wails, Volga boat songs and a fair sprinkling of schmaltzy western pop. The results...mesmerize musically and visually".

Members of Limpopo moved to the United States in 1991 and relocated in the Los Angeles area. Their many influences led them to a hodgepodge of comedy, music and on stage antics. In an article that appeared in the Fort Worth Star Telegram in June of 1993 they said, "Don't try to describe our music, even we can't. And it's not only music, it's a whole sort of show.'

You can get a feel for the band's sense of humor if you translate their name. Limpopo is the name of the river in the Russian folk tale Doktor Aybolit, which is a version of the Dr. Doolittle story. As mentioned in the Fort Worth Star Telegram, their name is a pun on a Soviet slang term for gluteus maximus.

To match Limpopo's credentials, at least four of the bands that will be featured in "The Loft" series are nationally recognized. One of the bands, cub, has appeared on the College Music Journal's Top 150. Cub will be appearing on campus September 23 with the campus band, Roadapples opening for

On October 7, the Windy City's own Smoking Popes will be performing with opening band Sweep the Leg Johnny. As cited by a S.U.B. and WVFI press release, their "aggressive pop style" gained them an opening slot at Chicago's Metro for Green Day.

Remember the campus band

Limpopo, a Russian folk-rock band, will be playing tonight following the pep rally at the Fieldhouse Mall.

CHISEL? Recently they released a 7" entitled "Sunburn" and they will appear at "The Loft" on November 5 to perform some of their old material and some new off of "Sunburn".

On November 11, WVFI and S.U.B will present their "let us inform you about our interest in going broadcast" night. The show is still in the process of being booked, so look for further information later in the semester.

The last show of the semester 182 will be a three band spectacular featuring Chicago's Columbus' Trenchmouth, Bumble Flea and opening the show will be the band July.

This semester, support new, up-and-coming bands with the concert series at "The Loft." The band you're seeing today may just be a legend twenty years from now.

Fans to drown Michigan in sea of green

By THERESA ALEMAN Accent Writer

While the Irish will be playing Michigan this Saturday, they will most assuredly be sporting kelly green. That's right, back for its fifth year, "The Shirt" is all Irish, ever popular, student inspired, and it's everywhere.

Since 1990, the student body has traditionally worn "The Shirt" to the first home football game. Every year, "The Shirt" has a new design, and color, and costs $10 for students, $14 for the general public. This year it can be found on the body of just about every student on campus. It is for sale at the bookstore, and in a kelly green color guaranteed to Wake Up The Echoes."

"The Shirt '94" features the Notre Dame football stadium, Knute Rockne, the Gipper, and the Four Horsemen riding again, this time in the clouds.

Sale of "The Shirt" has been a student-run project since 1990 when it began as a fundraiser for the AnTostal festivities raising $25,000. Over 10,000 shirts were sold during the 1990 football season and reportedly, 90 percent of the student body wore the shirt.

Sales in 1991 reached 11,000 and funds were split between Notre Dame's Student Union Board and the Hall President's Council. Again, it was estimated that 90 percent of the student body wore "The Shirt"

Proceeds from 1992 shirt sales exploded to over $200,000 when the project was expanded to include Notre Dame Alumni and fans. Leaders of the project launched a national advertising campaign which resulted in the sale of 41,000 shirts. Reportedly, 95 percent of the student body wore "The Shirt" to the opening game.

In addition to benefiting scholarships, charities, and student organizations, proceeds went in part toward a Meghan Beeler and Colleen Hipp scholarship fund. Beeler and Hipp were two members of the Notre Dame women's swim team killed in a 1992 bus acci-

PLAYER TO WATCH. . . JARRETT IRONS

Irons

He may not be the Man of the Steel, but he is the man known as Irons.

At the start of the season, three Michigan linebackers were named as player to watch in Award, annually given to the nation's top linebacker.

Two of the three—Steve Morrison and Matt Dysonhave been hampered by nagging injuries. Luckily for coach Gary Moeller and his Wolverines, the third, Jarret Irons has been injury-free.

In fact, the only pain he is concerned with is what he tries to inflict upon opposing ballcarriers.

Last week in Michigan's victory over Boston College, he had plenty of opportunities.

The Conroe, Texas native recorded a team-high 13 tackles, including 11 solos. He also recovered a fumble.

Irons was literally all over the field, making tackles behind the line of scrimmage or running sideline to sideline to cut off the outside runs

which the Eagles tried to feature.

Irons arrived in Ann Arbor with an impressive scrapbook full of credentials. Two reputable prep All-America team included the 6'1", 231 pound the running for the Butkus backer on their lists. Also, Irons was named as one of the 25 best prep players in the talent-rich state of Texas.

> In only his second year of action, his play for the Blue has been just as, if not more, impressive than his advance billing.

> Irons may be a bit surprised at the confidence that has been placed in him, in part due to the injuries of seniors Dyson and Morrison, but he hasn't let the added pressure affect his performance.

> Whether Moeller needs someone to come up the middle on a blitz or drop back and cover a speedy tailback or bulky tight end, Irons is always capable. And reliable.

Wolverine defense not too daunting

By TIM SHERMAN

Assistant Sports Editor

The Michigan game has been the springboard for many Irish offensive stars.

Tim Brown. Raghib "Rocket" Ismail. Rick Mirer. Reggie Brooks. Even Kevin McDougal. Which player on this year's offense is ready to take the dive into the pool of stardom? Fortunately for coach Lou Holtz and Irish fans, the list of contenders is fairly lengthy: Ron Powlus, Lee Becton, Derrick Mayes, etc. Michigan coach Gary Moeller and his Wolverines know this. But they also know Notre Dame's arsenal of high-tech weaponery needs the trenches to be secure in order to have the time needed to fire.

"The thing that concerns me most is our inability to run the football," worried Holtz.

Last week against Northwestern, the offensive line gave Powlus all the time and protection he asked for. However, they also gave the running backs, particualrily Becton, more headaches and bruises than they bargained for.

Still, the running game which is so integral to Holtz's attack does have a game's worth of experience under their belt, and maybe more importantly, another week's worth of line coach Joe Moore's tutelage.

"Notre Dame's lines are going to be Notre Dame's lines," said Michigan coach Gary Moeller. "They've got some new faces (Dusty Zeigler, Jeremy Akers) playing well."

This may be enough for the Irish to be succesful, especially considering that one of Michigan's weaknesses is its defensive line.

Of their top six tacklers last week in their 34-26 home victory over Boston College, not one came from the front three.

Eagle running backs got into the secondary often. Present that chance to Becton, Ray Zellars, and Randy Kinder, and big ground gains become a distinct possibilty.

Many of the Wolverines defenders have shown poor tackling habits. The Irish will be more than willing to exploit this apparent deficiency.

"We just did not tackle well," appraised Moeller of last week's effort. "We got tired."

Another factor which concerns Moeller is his team's ability to force turnovers.

"Turnovers will be the number one indicator of who is going to win.' Michigan forced four last week, but the Irish

last year. played error-free a week ago. Coupled with Powlus' debut in Chicago and the fact that McDougal was able to hit for over 200 yards last season in Ann Arbor, Notre Dame looks to hold the air advantage, as well.

By showcasing the deep aerial attack against Northwestern, Holtz has given Michigan one more worry. But it is the short, more ball-control type passing game that the Irish may rely on. If this is the case, look for tight ends Oscar McBride and Pete Chryplewicz to finally put their receiving skills on display. "We got good production from our tight ends (last Saturday)," said Holtz. "I think we have improved at that position." If there is as team whose linebackers do possess the speed and experience to hang with them though it is Michigan, even without the injured Matt Dyson.

Jarret Irons, the team's leading tackler of a year ago, and the tough Steve Morrison are the heart and soul of Moeller's defense.

Ty Law is a top-notch cornerback, but he may have trouble sticking with Mike Miller, never mind Derrick Mayes. After Law, the secondary appears porous.

B.C. threw for well over three hundred yards with a first-year quarterback. Powlus is not a typical rookie pitcher.

One question is: Will he be able to put up huge numbers again? The more appropriate question is: Will he need to?

Nose guard Tony Henderson anchors the middle of the Michigan defense.

RATING THE IRISH

Quarterback 5

Until he sins, Ron Powlus is still the Messiah. His performance will largely dictate Notre Dame's success.

Running Back 4

The unit on the whole had a below par showing against Northwestern, but they won't be kept down for long.

Wide Receiver 5

Some amazing catches from Derrick Mayes and Mike Miller last week made Powlus look like a superstar.

Offensive Line 2

Pass protection was good against Northwestern, but run blocking is a big question. Their inexperience showed.

Defensive Line 3

They didn't pile up great statistics against Northwestern, and running back Dennis Lundy had a big day. But the Wildcats were held to three points in as many quarters.

Linebackers 3

The play of Goheen, Sample, Berry, and Wynn is solid, but the big plays eluded them against Northwestern. They need to provide a spark to the defense.

Secondary 4

Shawn Wooden was picked on by the Wildcats, but he came through with a pick of his own. Bobby Taylor is Bobby Taylor—awesome.

Special Teams 2

Last week's play was surprisingly poor considering Lou Holtz's track record with special teams. Every unit is in need of a serious tune-up.

Coaching 5

Lou Holtz is a big-game coach, and this one's huge. And plus, it's Michigan—expect something special.

—MIKE NORBUT

Notre Dame cannot live on Ron Powlus' arm alone, especially against a team like Michigan, although with Holtz, there's always hope.

MICHIGAN

WOLVERINES ON THE OFFENSIVE. . .

Michigan offense multi-dimensional

By MIKE NORBUT

Associate Sports Editor

For anyone who thought that the Michigan offense rode solely on the broad shoulders of running back Tyrone Wheatley, a second look is in order.

"Losing a Tyrone Wheatley would be very comparable to us losing a great back, but obviously they also have other weapons," Notre Dame head coach Lou Holtz said.

"If they were just a one dimensional football team and that was their main asset, that would be disastrous. They still have two great wide receivers, an outstanding quarterback, and maybe the best offensive line in the country."

Though the Wolverines' offensive production would be definitely enhanced if Wheatley received substantial playing time, reserve running backs have proven their worth.

Eddie Davis and Tim Biakabutuka stepped into the tailback slot last week against Boston College and combined for 169 yards, more than the Irish running backs gained against Northwestern.

"Eddie (Davis) will start back there," Michigan head coach Gary Moeller said of the tailback situation. "I don't think I'll change a lot from what happened on Saturday as far as the starting thing. I think we got Tim (Biakabutuka) a little more comfortable and I think he did a good job."

Running behind the Wolverine offensive line should be a pleasure for whoever is carrying the ball. Tackles Trezelle Jenkins and Mike Sullivan are the leaders of this front, which has only one player shorter than 6-foot-5.

Facing this wall of Wolverine beef for the Irish will be a group of linemen and linebackers that are coming off a rough outing against Northwestern.

"What disappointed me defensively was just maybe how we tackled, and that they controlled the line of scrimmage, which you know should not happen," Holtz said. "We just didn't play real physical."

In order to keep the Michigan running game corked, the Irish will need big plays from their front seven. The only change from last week in terms of personnel will be junior Paul Grasmanis moving to defensive end because of a thigh injury suffered by senior Germaine Holden.

Since the players are basically the same, their play and attitudes must undergo an adjustment.

"You are not going to stop Michigan from moving the football," Holtz said. "I am more interested in how we set the tone, the attitude, and the temperament for what needs to be done."

Michigan's threats do not end with the running game, however. The combination of quarterback Todd Collins and receivers Mercury Hayes and Amani Toomer could prove to be lethal.

Collins, in his second full year as a starter, will be firing at a Notre Dame secondary that recorded three interceptions against Northwestern.

"I was impressed with Notre Dame, as I usually am," Collins said. "I see their defensive team as a whole as very fast and I think we are going to have a problem with that. Of course their defensive backs are very good."

Notre Dame cornerbacks Bobby Taylor and Shawn Wooden will have their hands full covering Toomer and Hayes, but they will be able to look to free safety Brian Magee for help.

"Brian Magee being a free safety has got to be the focal point of your defense," Holtz said. "He has got to be able to play the run, the pass, and he's got to be able to play centerfield."

Above all, the key to this matchup will be the turnover ratio. The Irish need to cause more fumbles in order to create favorable situations for the offense.

"Turnovers will be the number one indicator (of who is going to win) secondly to the rush," Moeller said. "I want to run the football and I don't want to turn it over."

With too many turnovers, all the Wolverine offensive threats could be wasted.

PLAYER TO WATCH. . . AMANI TOOMER

Defenders around the nation are having nightmares.

Not about footballs, or even goal posts.

They wake up sounding like Arnold Schwartzenegger, saying, "It's not a Toomer."

Or better yet, "It's not Amani Toomer."

Amani Toomer.

Amani Toomer is the latest in a line of fine wide receivers to play at Michigan, one that includes Heisman Award winner Desmond Howard, Greg McMurtry, and Anthony Carter.

"I think their wide receivers are outstanding," Irish head coach Lou Holtz said. "Amani Toomer and Mercury Hayes, the guys that are back, are awfully good."

Toomer was billed as the second receiver next to Hayes, but has quickly leaped into the spotlight with his performance last Saturday.

The sophomore caught seven passes for 179 yards, with two touchdowns. And this is a man that was almost wearing an Irish uniform.

"I liked Notre Dame because they had a former player from my high school," Toomer said of All-American tackle and former high school teammate Aaron Taylor. "But I just thought Michigan had more to offer me and I seemed to fit in better here."

Toomer

Therefore, he'll be a threat to the Irish instead of an asset, and he could be a major thorn in the Notre Dame defense's side. That is, if he can escape the coverage of cornerback Bobby Taylor.

"I think it will be a good challenge," Toomer said.
"I've seen Bobby Taylor on film, I've played against him last year and he's a really good corner."

Last year, while Taylor and Greg Davis followed Hayes and Derrick Alexander around the field, Toomer slipped through the cracks to catch five passes for 58 yards.

This year, however, he is much too popular a receiver to slip through any cracks.

A good receiver against a good cornerback. It should be a good matchup. The Irish can only hope that this Toomer isn't malignant.

34

With a lot to prove after a lackluster 1993, and a lot of talent on paper, Michigan looks dangerous against the vulnerable Irish.

Quarterback 4

Todd Collins is quickly becoming one of Michigan's best ever, and he is quite capable of leading this team.

Running Back 4

Sophomore Tshimanga Biakabutuka ran for 128 yards on 12 carries last week. Ed Davis is no slouch. But, oh, do the Wolverines wish they had Wheatley.

Wide Receiver 5

Both Amani Toomer and Mercury Hayes have big play potential. One of the nation's best receiving tandems.

Offensive Line 4

Following in the tradition of fine Michigan offensive lines, this is a good one. A lot of size and strength.

Defensive Line 3

A weak spot, but still tough. Tackle Trent Zenkewicz, had six tackles against Boston College, but the Eagles still managed five yards per carry.

■ RATING THE WOLVERINES

Linebackers 4

Led by Butkus Award candidate Jarrett Irons, this unit is the pride and joy of the Michigan defense. But not having Matt Dyson in the lineup could mean no dice for the Wolverines.

Secondary 3

Gave up 344 yards passing to Boston College last weekend. Ty Law is a mainstay at cornerback, but the remaining three positions are a bit inexperienced.

Special Teams 4

With two capable punters, a decent kicking game, and Toomer returning punts, the special teams are definitely an advantage for Michigan.

Coaching 3

The Wolverines are always one of the best teams on paper, but Gary Moeller often manages to squander his players' talents. He is outclassed in this matchup.

"If you want to talk to a Neanderthal man, talk to Joe Moore," Notre Dame coach Lou Holtz once said, while introducing his offensive line coach at a luncheon. "That's where his ideas originate."

Moore didn't deny that image during his speech, waxing nostalgic like Archie Bunker, longing for the days when women were women and men were men.

When players were players and coaches were coaches.

Though Moore may feel misplaced in this era of earrings and egos, his players respect him for the most basic reason. He cares.

It's just that sometimes he shows it like a nun who cracks your knuckles with a ruler. For your own good, of

"He's definitely old school, about as old school as you can get" Irish center Mark Zataveski said. "It takes some getting used to, but eventually you realize that he does everything for your best interests."

will keep my pads low. I will keep my pads low. I will keep my pads low Zataveski scrawled that sentence 1000 times one night during the preseason. Seems that during a scrimmage that day, Zataveski, well, wasn't keeping his pads low.

Moore ordered the ink-stained antidote.

A tactic that recalls simpler times.

Times like the late 50s, when Moore was a tailback at Penn State, playing for the Dean of the Old School, Joe Paterno.

Times that seem to be recreated on the practice field each day when Moore directs his linemen.

Often he summons his players to practice early or keeps them late, repeating primitive punishments.

"Like doing base blocks for an hour," Zataveski said.

Mess up once and his booming baritone will echo through the autumn air, piercing even the thickest skin.

Mess up again and expect to do some extra-curricular atonement.

But Moore can lighten as easily as he can frighten.

"He's been known to have some funny sayings in practice," Zataveski said, fishing for a favorite. "If you're supposed to stay on one man, he'll say 'If he goes to the concession stand for a hot dog, be there to put the mustard on it.'"

Not all are fit for a family publication.

"I could tell you some," tackle Mike McGlinn said, "but you couldn't print them."

Every tactic is a teaching tool, a method to turn Notre Dame's offensive line into a wall of granite.

A task that can be achieved only with work, not the wave of a wand.

"He always says there's no magic in the world, it's all work," Zataveski said.

oore sometimes appears to be a magician. Every player ever to start for him on the offensive line at Notre Dame has been selected in the NFL Draft.

And year in and year out, the Irish boast one of the nation's most potent running attacks.

The notoriety generally belongs to the men who carry the ball, not the guys who open the holes.

But Moore prefers the shadows.

He spotted a newspaper photographer snapping pictures of him at a preseason practice and sent a messenger to shut up the shutterbug.

"Coach Moore doesn't like photos of himself," one of the lineman said, as straightforward as his mentor.

It seems like a little bit of Moore rubs off on each of his players.
Soldiers often admire their general.

"He's shaped my whole outlook on life," Zataveski said. "I'm more conservative about a lot of things."

But Moore isn't all guts and guff.
He concluded his luncheon address with a sudden burst of emotion that made you wonder if he was about to peel off a mask and reveal that he was,
in fact, Stuart Smalley, caring nurturer.

He shared the story of one of his final encounters with the late Notre Dame legend Moose Krause, a man always with a cigar in his mouth and a smile on his face.

"When I think of Moose, I feel good," Moore concluded, emotion moistening his words. "And I hope you feel good, too."

Filling the Gaps

Notre Dame's offensive line struggles to find its identity after losing a trio to the NFL By Rian Akey aron Taylor, first round, Green Bay Packers. Tim Ruddy, first round, Miami Dolphins. Todd Norman, free agent.

The departure of three members of last year's dominating offensive line to the NFL has left Irish line coach Joe Moore in the precarious position of having to fill holes before his unit can open them.

Mixed results in last weekend's game against Northwestern indicate that Moore has developed a new line that knows it has potential, but must work to realize it

Although the Irish line successfuly protected debut quarterback Ron Powlus from the Wildcat rush, it has been blamed for the worse-than-expected performance by the backfield—Notre Dame held the line, but could not break through it.

Many of the line's shortcomings may have stemmed from a combination of first-game factors.

"Maybe against Northwestern it was just first game jitters," said guard Ryan Leahy. "Last year we came together for the Michigan game and we hope we can do that again this year. Joe Moore has always had good offensive lines and we're just trying to be the best we can every day."

Yet, even Leahy admitted that the purported lack of aggression on the Irish line against the Wildcats may have stemmed from more than minor nervousness. Anticipating an easy win may have cooled the Irish mean streak.

"Every player is more motivated this week since we're playing Michigan," said Leahy.

Even Lou Holtz was not overzealous in his criticism of the offensive line's performance.

"We have a lot of offensive lineman doing some good things," said Holtz. "[But] they didn't all do them together."

That Holtz and Moore were satisfied with the line's general performance is evidenced by a week of practice which saw no major overhauls.

"Our practices were real intense," said tackle Mike McGlinn, "but we worked mostly on basics and technique—staying low, going hard until the whistle, keeping our pads low.

"Coach Moore expects a lot from us. Nothing is ever good enough until it's the best."

focus on the fundamentals indicates promise, a fact that McGlinn recognizes.

"We do have a mean streak," said McGlinn. "We just need to be more aggressive and some time to develop so the offense can gel."

Senior guard Ryan Leahy protects quarterback Ron Powlus on and off the field.

And despite the disappointment of a sixteen-yard performance, tailback Lee Becton agrees that more time will give the Irish running game better numbers.

"I am definitely adjusting a little bit more to this line," said Becton. "You know, they are a little different. They block a little different than last year's team, but I think they will be just as effective."

The development required by the Notre Dame line is due in part to its youth. Although the entire line is made up of juniors and seniors, only two of them are seasoned starters—Leahy and current center Mark Zataveski—who are both adjusting to new positions.

Leahy, who missed four midseason games in 1993 after tearing a knee ligament against Stanford, has switched to right tackle for this season.

Zataveski has moved from guard to center, replacing the injured Will Lyell who was originally slated to start. So far, Holtz has been satisfied with Zataveski's progress.

"[Zataveski] will give everything he has, every day of practice and every bit of the game," said Holtz. "I think mark Zataveski is the best center we have at the present time and Mark will play as well as he possibly can and depicts everything you want in a football player, he's just not particularly quick."

Jeremy Akers returns at tackle with experience limited to starts while Leahy was injured last season.

Dusty Zeigler started only one game last year, but has already made an impact with Holtz this season.

"[Zeigler] played an outstanding football game," said Holtz. "I think that guy is going to be an excellent offensive lineman."

Thile everyone involved seems to feel that the only thing the offensive line needs for improvement is more time to develop, the Irish hardly have a moment to look at their watches before the Wolverines reach South Bend.

Fortunately, Notre Dame may be able to rely more on their new-found aerial attack than they have in the past, an aspect of the game where the offensive line performed more satisfactorily.

Powlus' 291-yard, four touchdown debut against Northwestern may be the aspect of last week's game that people remember, but the offensive line's contributions to his statistics must also be considered.

Powlus, for example, was sacked just once by the Wildcats.

Leahy summed up the commitment the line feels for the newcomer.

"Because he's my quarterback I don't just take care of him when I'm pass blicking," said Leahy, "I take care of him all the time.

"I worry about Ron more than anybody. We both live in the same dorm in the same section, and I check up on him and make sure he's studying and not falling into the traps."

But while Leahy's off-field concerns include keeping Powlus from falling prey to the difficulties of newfound stardom, he and the rest of the offensive line are working on-field to prevent the Irish offense from relying too heavily on a passing attack.

"Everybody [on the offensive line] takes it real personally when we don't run the ball well."

Rich Bender 31-23

35-10 've never been any good at this prognosticating bit, so this week I employed the services of a few local tavern keepers. My original plan had been to travel to an assortment of bars and get the lowdown on this year's Notre Dame/Michigan game from the experts. I only made it to three. You understand.

Keep in mind that this was a scientific study for work and not pleasure. No free grub or grog was promised by the participants. I paid for every. . .water. . . I drank.

Ricky Joe - C.J.'s Pub

Taking time off from the grill, the frontman of South Bend's top burger joint had this to say about the Irish/Michigan clash.

"Lee Becton's going to rush for 190 yards and Germaine Holden is going to have four sacks. It's Notre Dame in a blowout. Oh, and Justin Goheen is going to have an interception.

Ricky Joe did not want to give his last name, and for good reason. Any good forecaster needs a catchy name. Ask Jimmy the Greek. So for our purpose, Ye who wishes to remain lastnameless, can stay that way.

Mo Hussein-Club 23

Through the smoke of Club, Mr. Hussein can be found shooting pool with the Budweiser distributor and handicapping the Irish.

"Holtz has something up his sleeve. You better believe it. That Powlus kid has a great arm. It will be close but Notre Dame will win."

I liked Mo's verve and also his dedication to Powlus. But Mo lacks the slick name like Ricky Joe. I tried thinking of a few: King Hussein, Hussein the Sane, Hussein the Greek. Nothing really working here.

Also I was disappointed not to find Homer or Barney on stools at the bar. This wasn't the Mo's Tavern I was thinking of.

Rich Bender-Bridget's

The man who manages the last five corners bar could not be left off this list.

Notre Dame will establish the running game and Becton will have a big day. It will be a close game but Notre Dame will win. Powlus is all business out there. He is young but mature."

I can't help but get a little sentimental over this prognosticator. Oh, Bridget's, my freshman and sophomore years would have been a wash without your sweet generosity towards my feeble excuse for an ID.

Even sentiment can't sway me from my gut feeling. I'm laying my cash on the burger, 35-10 Irish. Becton comes up as big as a Super Pub with cheese and bacon.

Rally to capture Irish spirit

By MARK ROSENBERG Accent Writer

As the Notre Dame student body eagerly awaits the first home football weekend, one of the most anticipated events is the first pep rally. The rally kicks off at 7 p.m. tonight at the J.A.C.C. and will feature the marching band, cheerleaders and football players that Irish fans have come to expect.

Former Irish quarterback Terry Hanratty will serve as the guest speaker for the first rally, according to rally organizer Cort Peters.

Hanratty played under Ara Parseghian from 1966-68, earning a national championship with the '66 squad.

Tailback Lee Becton and linebacker Jeremy Nau will also address the fans. In addition to Lou Holtz, secondary coach Dean Pees will represent the coaching staff at the rally.

The organization of the rally requires a great deal of work from the Pep Rally Committee, according to Peters who organizes the lighting, the band entrances and the introductions of the cheerleaders and Leprechaun. The rest of the committee takes care of security.

Holtz chooses the players who will appear while administrative assistant George Kelly chooses the guest speakers from among many famous Notre Dame personalities who attend the games.

A new feature this year will be an opening cheerleader segment to begin 15 minutes before every pep rally. This feature is designed to get the fans involved in the action and to create a spirit of excitement when the band and players arrive at 7 p.m.

According to head cheerleader Jennifer Durso, the 12 varsity cheerleaders have decided to "try crowd involvement" through a couple of new cheers that will be introduced at tonight's rally.

As expected, both the band and the cheerleaders have invested a great deal of time in preparing for tonight's event. The cheerleaders have practiced for 3 hours every day this past week while the band has practiced for at least 90 minutes every weekday this school year, in addition to attending band camp the week before classes started

As this will be the first performance for this year's band and cheerleaders in front of the home crowd, some anxiety is no doubt felt in preparing for the event.

"Playing at the first rally is a little scary at first, but a lot of fun. It is a new crowd each time and they are very critical," Durso said.

The rally will also serve as the home debut for new Varsity Leprechaun Jamie Glover.

This year, more people than ever will be able to enjoy the Michigan pep rally as ESPN and WNDU-TV will provide live coverage of the festivities. Both stations will air live cut-ins to the rally throughout their preview broadcasts at 7 p.m.

Peters reports that WNDU will probably cover the other rallies this season while ESPN coverage will only occur for big games.

Every true Irish fan, however, knows that there is no comparable experience to witnessing a pep rally live. The leprechaun, band, golden helmets and fanatic crowd response all create a spirit and tradition which no other school can duplicate.

Twilight tailgate to kick-off football weekend

By PATTI CARSON Saint Mary's Accent Editor

Saint Mary's and Notre Dame students have only been in class for two weeks and already it seems time for a refresher. At 2 p.m. this afternoon, Saint Mary's Student Activities Board, (S.A.B.) will ease their stress and have some fun.

"The Twilight Tailgate is similar to a one day Antostal celebration in the fall," according to Mary Udovich, offer a "Twilight Tailgate" to help students

S.A.B. All Campus Event Chairperson.

"We thought that this would be a great way to start the year," said Udovich. "Nothing quite like this has been done before—especially this early in the year."

The Twilight Tailgate is free to all Saint Mary's and Notre Dame students, according to Udovich.

According to Udovich, afternoon festivities, which run from 2 p.m. to 6 p.m., include:

•The Velcro Wall.

•Human Bowling.
Students take their places in a huge ball and others roll them down a lane in an attempt to strike oversized pins.

•Tye-dying. S.A.B. will be selling "Twilight Tailgate" T-shirts that can be tye-dyed, for $8 or students can bring their own shirts.

•Volleyball/Canoe Races on Lake Marian. Both events are open to all interested. Participants must register for these events from 2:30 p.m. to 3 p.m. Groups of six or less may reserve time for volleyball matches. Six canoes will also be available at various times in the afternoon for races. Two people are allowed in each canoe.

•Temporary Tatoos. A wide variety of self-adhesive tatoos will be available. Designs include prints from the Harley Davidson logo to cartoon characters.

"We planned the events as an afternoon session and an evening session so that students could attend the Pep Rally between festivities," said Udovich.

p.m. to 11p.m., include:

•Global Village. This band, comprised of 11 members, plays around the Michigan State University area, said Augusta Hall Senior and S.A.B. coordinator, Audrey Comrie, "Global Village plays at a variety of places, from fraternity houses to bars," she said.

Evening activities, which run from 9

Members of the band range in age from 21 to 24, according to Comrie.

In addition to having the basic equipment that nearly every band possesses, Global Village features a trombonist, a saxophonist, and a bongo player, according to Comrie.

"This band is one of high energy. Global Village plays a wide variety of music that college students enjoy," she added.

•Bonfire. A bonfire will be set up on the field between Havican Nursing Hall and the Angela Athletic Facility parking lot, said Udovich.

"Members of S.A.B. have been planning these activities since last April, when the current board members were elected," said Marlene Johnson, Assistant Director of S.A.B.. "We encourage students to participate and to enjoy the festivities."

Back home in again Indiana, not yet pushing up daisies

I'm back home again in Indiana after a summer in Manhattan, where I spent a week in the hospital, wondering how soon it would be before I started pushing up daisies. En route home, I stopped in Alexandria, Virginia, to collect Darby O'Gill III, now at the peak of his form at the age of three, and letterperfect in obedience after attending the yuppiest school for dogs in the East. "As an unneutered male," the trainer said, "Darby's attention span, when mixing with other dogs, may be shorter than that of an altered animal, since he has all these macho hormones running amok in his blood stream; but with his obedience training, his intelligence, and his naturally gentle disposition, he should behave for you beautifully at Notre Dame.

It strikes me as ironic that Darby spent two weeks of the summer learning obedience. On the way to the priesthood, I spent a year in the novitiate trying to learn obedience so that I could take vows promising to be poor, chaste, and obedient for a lifetime. The Master must be disappointed in the way I've turned out as a Christian who might have been improved by neutering,

I should have sent an old pair of pants to obedience school with Darby, so that he could be trained not to chew at my trouser cuffs when he wants me to notice him, unless I spray them first with bitter apple. To deter him from doing this, the other evening I stuck my face into his face to explain how inappropriate his behavior was, and how hard it was on my bell-bottomed Sansabelts. Snarling like a pit bull I warned him to lay off the chewing, or I would have him stuffed. In response, he ever so gently washed my face with his tongue.

I was reminded of Jonathan Edwards' sermon, "Sinners in the Hands of an Angry God." What would happen, I wondered, if a reprobate creature—as loathsome in God's sight, says Edwards, as a venomous spider would be to us—offered a sign of devotion to the just Judge? Would theology be changed forever if the angry God, ready to cast a sinner into the everlasting bonfire, should find that the bundle of iniquity was lovingly licking the wrath-filled fingers? Darby O'Gill takes so much pride in himself when he sees how he pleases me with his obedience. If I were that eager to please the Master, I would not fear the judgment. Yet even our sins have a way of turning into something beautiful from God. In Old Town, part of Alexandria, I paused outside a bookstore to light a cigarette as I parked my carcass on a terraced wall. I was soon joined by a portly lady of color, about 40, who parked her carcass beside me. Introducing herself as Peggy, she said: "Pastor, what's your name and what religion are you with?"

I wasn't thrilled at starting a

friendship in the noonday heat; for all I knew, she might have been a Jehovah's Witness wanting a handout; but how can you refuse to introduce yourself to a friendly soul anxious to do you good? Once Peggy was in possession of my name, she said: "Pastor Griffin, some people would condemn you for smoking that cigarette, but I don't judge you." Then she proceeded to tell me how sincere she was in all her encounters, and how she wished that everybody in the world was as honest as she was.

thanked her as best I could for her honesty and sincerity. The next thing I knew, she put her hand on my knee, and started to pray for me. "IF Pastor Griffin is putting that cigarette before You, Lord, he is definitely sinning. If he's not putting that cigarette ahead of You, then there's no harm to his smoking, and You can bring him to glory, when his time comes, to praise Your holy name with the saints."

H a v i n g brightened the corner where she was, she left me as quickly as she had arrived, leaving me comforted as Darby O'Gill did when he licked my face with his tongue. How could she tell that I felt guilty about smoking, after being hospitalized for a week with a tired ticker?

What would I do to get attention, if I didn't smoke? In a bar that serves as an oasis for smokers in the Pittsburgh airport, a young woman—whose face reminded me of the pearls of the Orient—asked me to excuse her for wanting to know if I was a priest. Her question was: "Are priests tsupposed to smoke?" "I don't know if they're supposed to smoke,"

I answered, "But they certainly are allowed to." Why did she think I would so openly light are allowed to." Why did she think I would so openly light up, if smoking was a sin against my religion?

The friendly skies, from

The friendly skies, from Pittsburgh to Michiana, are a spot close to God where it is easier to pray than it is to read, and so as the plane was beginning its descent to the Michiana airport, I was measuring myself against the opinions many readers of the Observer seem to have of me.

I perceive an error that readers, friendly or otherwise, are apt to make. In the flesh, and stocking-footed, I'm not necessarily the character students hear from week after week in Letters to a Lonely God. If I were, I wouldn't be so frequently surprised when I read the columns I have written, when they appear in print.

The persona, or mask, I assume as an essayist is not necessarily that of the fellow I am when I put my pants on in the morning, one leg at a time, so that I can go decently to the dining hall to drink juice and coffee. The voice you hear in the column is from someone who tries most of the time to put his best foot forward. When the real Robert Griffin puts his best foot forward, it's mostly on paper. My real ambition in life is to hide the fact that I have feet of clay. After 24 years of turning out pieces, I might as well admit that the priest, writing letters to the God Whom he alleges is lonely, gets on my nerves.

When the time comes for me to start pushing up daisies, I pray that I will be home in Indiana. Moses didn't live to see the Promised Land; yet, so the rabbis say, he died in God's arm. When my time comes, Notre Dame will be as much of the Promised Land me as I need to see. God's arms for me means to be with my Holy Cross Community in my life, death, and dying. Of course, I don't want to die real soon, for that would be morbid, and Darby O'Gill III will need me for at least ten more years. I hope to live to see his puppies'

SIVIC VOLLEYBALL

Belles open with easy win

By JENNIFER LEWIS Saint Mary's Sports Editor

The Saint Mary's volleyball team opened their season with a 2-1 win over Manchester College last night.

The Belles suffered from opening match jitters in their first game, losing 2-15, but dominated during the second and third games, winning 15-4 and 15-1.

Transfer student Kelley Prosser scored all fifteen points in the final game including six kills.

The Belles were challenged more offensively then defenaccording Schroeder-Biek. They expected more of a defensive team.

Freshman Betsy Connolly started her year off with seven kills and four blocks. Junior Sara Stronczek also had seven kills, but freshman Meg Kelly lead the team with

"I expected a lot out of this team for the first game," said Schroeder-Biek, "because they have shown me a lot of their skills in practice.

"I was really excited about the way we played as a team," said Connolly. "It's a great team and I am really happy to be a part of it.

Team members commented that they felt like they have been playing together for a long time, according to Scroeder-Biek. The team is definitely unified.

On the other side, the offense is going to have to keep the pressure on.

As the fourth leading scorer last year, senior midfielder Keith Carlson is being counted on to play a big role.

"Carlson has a great shot and is a great scorer," junior forward Bill Lanza said. "He is expected to be a big part of our offense this year.'

If the Irish are going to beat the Buckeyes, they will need solid games from both Engesser and Carlson.

FAMOUS

"This is an important game for us," Berticelli said. "It's important that we focus on this game and be one-hundred percent ready to play. We can't be thinking about our win against Northwestern. It's also an important game because in leads into our conference play as we face Northern Illinois next.

This is going to be a physical and rough game," adds Engesser. "We beat them in a close game (1-0) last year, and I expect it to be exciting again this year."

Yet, the feeling has to be good about this game as Berticelli

"I think we're focused and I think we're ready.'

NCAA suspends Ohio State player for violations

By RUSTY MILLER Associated Press

COLUMBUS, Ohio Its big-play capacity diminished if not crippled by the twogame suspension of Joey Gal-variety of weapons to make up for the deep threat it lost.

The NCAA on Wednesday suspended Galloway, a fifth-year senior split end, for taking $200 from a person the university loway, Ohio State will rely on a identified as a financial adviser in January. He repaid the money with interest late last week, but not until after the NCAA had learned of the pay-

No.18 Ohio State plays at 25th-ranked Washington Saturday. Galloway did not fly with the team Thursday to Seattle. He will also miss the Sept. 17 home opener against Pittsburgh.

"We have to become closer. We have to circle the wagons," Ohio State coach John Cooper said Wednesday. "Some other people have to take up the slack. Obviously, we're going to miss Joey Galloway. We're going to miss his big-play potential."

Last year Galloway caught 47 passes for 946 yards and matched Cris Carter's school record of 11 touchdown receptions in a season.

This year, Ohio State's sports information department was promoting him for the Heisman Trophy. He was playing like a Heisman contender, too.

In a 34-10 victory over Fresno State on Aug. 29, Galloway had two catches for 88 yards — one a 67-yard touchdown bomb and also scored on an 8-yard touchdown run when he reversed his field after taking a pitch to the left side, out-racing the Fresno State defense to the right corner of the end zone.

His starting position will be filled by Büster Tillman, a sophomore who caught three passes for 50 yards in the open-

But can Tillman fill Galloway's spikes when it comes to scoring touchdowns? Galloway averaged a touchdown every 4.3 times he touched the ball last season and had two TDs in four touches against Fresno

"Basically we'll stick with the same approach," OSU offensive coordinator Joe Hollis said. "I can't stand here ... and say that the play selection will be identically the same. But the general philosophy and general approach will be the same."

Washington coach Jim Lambright said his team was looking forward to the comparison between Galloway and another Heisman hopeful, Husky tailback Napoleon Kaufman.

But, he added, "The Husky defensive coaches will not be disappointed by the absence of Galloway from the starting line-

Galloway, the university and the NCAA did not disclose the identity of the person who had given the $200 to Galloway.

The Columbus Dispatch, citing unidentified sources, reported in its Thursday editions that the financial adviser was Michael Weisberg of Bannockburn, Ill. Weisberg did not return telephone messages left by The Associated Press.

Navy cornerback deals with adversity

By DAVID GINSBURG Associated Press

ANNAPOLIS

Chris Hart is the co-captain of Navy's football team, a senior who likely will never don a helmet and shoulder pads after this year.

That is motivation enough for the talented cornerback to have the finest season of his life. Hart's biggest source of inspiration stems from an agonizing tragedy.

Hart has dedicated this season to his fiancee, who died of heart failure last May. Annette Baltimore, who learned as a child that she had an abnormal heart, was told by doctors that she no longer had a life-threatening problem.

But she collapsed when walking up the stairs after watching Hart play in Navy's annual Blue-Gold game last spring. Baltimore, 23, died shortly after that.

"How can you ever prepare for something like that?" Hart said. "Believe it or not, I'm a better person for it, a stronger person. Thank God for that.'

Soon after the funeral, Hart trained 70 plebes for their first year at the Naval Academy. He also immersed himself in football, working to improve upon a 1993 season in which he had 63 tackles and a team-high three interceptions.

Hart's steadfast religious beliefs helped him cope with the loss. His resilience is a source of inspiration for his teammates — as well as coach George Chaump.

"Chris is an amazing guy. He has strong faith and strong beliefs, and I'm certain that's what pulled him through,"

Chaump said. "His inner

"Being chosen as captain was a really big honor." he said. "That's one reason why this season is so important to me. I a leader, on and off the field."

Hart has fulfilled his obligations. Sometimes his mind starts to wander back to happier times, and suddenly his unbridled spirit turns somber.

That's when defensive back Joe Speed shouts a few friendly words across the field.

For Irish head coach Chris Petrucelli, the situation in Fairfax is hardly encouraging, and not only because it means a tougher match for his squad. He questions the ethics of the Patriot program.

"Within NCAA rules it is legal," said Petrucelli, "but I don't know about the ethics of bringing those players in. Neither of those players is graduating from George Mason—they're there to play soccer."

Attempts to contact University of Massachusetts and Providence College soccer departments were unsuccessful, which was not a surprise to Petrucelli.

"Many people aren't happy with the situation," he said, "but most aren't going to say anything about it."

While George Mason head coach Jac Cicala was also unavailable for comment, Patriot assistant coach Paul Ellis offered his view of the situation.

"[Eddy] transferred from UMass, where she wasn't starting," said Ellis. "She was under Reanna Scurry, who was also an All-American, and is now a member of the women's national team. Skye decided she did not want to split time."

"In [Mead's] case, she was red-shirted as a freshman, and Providence doesn't offer a fifth year of eligibility."

Ellis also confirmed that Eddy and Mead were not receiving George Mason degrees.

"[Eddy's] degree is coming from UMass," he said. "Jen's degree will come from Providence."

While Ellis's explanations legitimize the actions of Eddy and Mead, questions remain about the role of Cicala and George Mason in the transfers. The All-American migration to Fairfax began in 1993, just one year after Cicala's arrival at George Mason.

The Patriots qualified for the NCAA women's soccer "final four" three times during the mid-1980s, but posted only a 8-6-3 mark in 1992, Cicala's first season. Despite that less-than-overwhelming record, All-American Eddy decided to join

George Mason for 1993, propelling them to a 18-3-2 record and a trip to the national title game.

While hopes of a return to the NCAA final make Mead's transfer more logical, one can only speculate about the continued attractiveness of George Mason to All-American goalies.

Ellis offered an explanation for George Mason's good fortune with transfers:

"We have girls from the local area who go away to school, and then after the first year decide that being away from home isn't what they want."

Yet, Eddy had three seasons at Massachusetts before deciding to transfer, and the George Mason media guide lists Mead's hometown as Raynham, Massachusetts.

Even if these transfers are entirely legitimate by NCAA standards, the back-to-back transfers of non-degree-seeking athletes to George Mason leads to speculation about the school's academic integrity.

"I'm not George Mason," said Petrucelli. "And if their university wants to do this, there's not much I can do." Despite all the controversy regarding the George Mason goaltenders, Notre Dame keeper Jen Renola still has the challenge of living up to her All-American opponents.

"The first thing for Renola," said Petrucelli, "is that everyone's going to be comparing her to the other goalie."

And since Notre Dame's first two opponents have managed just three shots against Renola, this weekend's matches may be her real season openers. But Petrucelli isn't worried about Renola being unprepared.

"Jen wants to be and will be an important part of this team," said Petrucelli. "She doesn't want to stand on the other end of the field for ninety minutes and watch."

"When [Renola] is a senior, she will be as good as those other goalies."

And Petrucelli certainly hopes that in two more seasons his prediction comes true—unless Renola is playing for George Mason.

Belles' soccer plagued by injuries

By BECKY MAYERNIK Sports Writer

The Saint Mary's soccer team will confront Lake Forest tomorrow in their opening game of the season at Lake Forest. Despite the fact that the Belles are a young team this year with many injuries, they are optimistic about the upcoming season.

"Although we're a young team and only consist of two seniors," said sophomore forward Lisa Nichols, "there are a lot of strong freshmen and strong new sophomores."

Injuries are troubling the team right now. Approximately half the team is hurt, according to Nichols.

Senior Captain Jenny Ferry is out with a knee injury, as is sophomore halfback Brigid Keyes. Senior captain Maura Sullivan is also suffering from a ankle injury, but is planning on playing tomorrow afternoon.

Regardless of the injuries, the team is confident about tomorrow's game.

Cyclones prepare for Hawkeyes

By CHUCK SCHOFFNER Associated Press

1 255014104 1 1055

IOWA CITY

One of the longest weeks in the 103-year history of Iowa State football is finally about to end

The Cyclones have been battered on all fronts after their 28-14 season-opening loss to Northern Iowa. Fans are grumbling. Players are constantly being asked to explain what happened. A student senator even wrote a resolution calling for the firing of coach Jim Walden

But Saturday, Iowa State has a chance to make everyone forget last week. With a victory at Iowa, the gloom over Cycloneland would evaporate.

"I'm just looking forward to getting out and redeeming ourselves, especially up front in the line because we feel like we have a lot to prove now," offensive tackle Tim Kohn said.

"We came out a little overconfident (against Northern Iowa) and now we have to prove we have the experience everybody says we have and just come out and dominate the line of scrimmage." And if that happens?

"I think if we come out against lowa fired up and come out with a big win, everybody will forget about this UNI stuff," Kohn said.

It'll take more than bravado to get the Cyclones past Iowa, however.

The Hawkeyes showed a lot of muscle and speed in routing Central Michigan 52-21 last week. Plus, they have the added confidence of 11 straight victories over lowa State.

When a team dominates a series like that, history tells the Iowa players they'll find a way to win regardless of how the game is going. Last year was a perfect example.

Iowa State cut a 31-7 Iowa to lead to 31-28 and had the momentum after recovering an onside kick at midfield with just under two minutes left. But Iowa's Maurea Crain knocked the ball from quarterback Bob Utter, the Hawkeyes recovered and held on.

X-country to open year

By KATE CRISHAM Sports Writer

Most cross-country coaches would view the graduation of one of the most successful runners in Notre Dame history, four-time All-American Mike McWilliams, as grounds for some concern.

But is 19th-year head coach Joe Plane worried about the fate of his 1994 squad? Not a bit

"I think everyone is expecting this to be our 'rebuilding' year," said Piane. "But while it's true we have no big gun like Mike this year, we do have a lot of great runners. It should be a very interesting year."

Last year, the Irish won the Midwestern Collegiate Conference championship and finished fifth at the NCAA championship. Plane expects nothing less from this year's squad.

"We've finished in the top five for the last seven years," said Piane. "So of course our goal is to make it back and place well at nationals."

To achieve this, the Irish will rely on their bevy of talented; veteran runners. The core of this group includes seniors J.R. Meloro, John Cowan, Nate Ruder, junior Joe Dunlop, and sophomore Matt Althoff.

These five guys consistently ran in the top seven last year," said Piane. "They're a solid group of runners."

Ruder placed in the top ten in four of his six races in his junior season. He also finished an impressive 50th at last year's NCAA meet, in addition to garnering the National Catholic individual championship.

Captain Meloro also ended his 1993 season on a successful note, with a personal best 31:25.3 over the 10,000 meter championship course. Three-time letter winner Cowan also posted a personal best 31:28.7 at nationals to finish in 92nd place.

In addition to McWilliams, the Irish will also be plagued with the loss of graduated senior Nathan Knuth and junior Derek Seiling, who will spend the year studying in Rome. But Piane is confident that a strong supporting cast will add depth and talent to the Irish roster.

"Juniors Andy Burns, Mike Smedley, Derek Martisus, and senior Shane DuBois are all strong runners who could really help us out a lot," said Piane. "They all stand to make quite an impact on the team." Piane is also optimistic about Piane is also optimistic about the potential of his five freshman, particularly high school all-American and Ohio native Jason Rexing.

Jason Rexing.

"Jason placed twelfth at the Kinney/Foot Locker championships this summer, and he should be able to help us out a lot," said Piane. "Mike Conway and Scott Grace should also help us out."

should also help us out."
The Irish will kick off their season September 17th in a home meet against traditional rival Georgetown.

Irish head to Big Four Classic

By BRIAN LUCAS Sports Writer

Six victories in six matches. Only two games lost during that span. What more could you ask of a team?

How about having to travel to Louisville to play three matches in two days against some of the toughest competition in the country

That's the task that awaits the Notre Dame volleyball team as they prepare for the Big Four Classic.

The Irish begin the tournament tonight as they face a tough Louisville squad. The Cardinals went 23-13 last year with one of those losses coming at the hands of Notre Dame.

While the Notre Dame football team is playing its biggest game of the season on Saturday, the volleyball team will be facing its toughest test when it meets Kentucky. The Wildcats, ranked 20th in the pre-season, finished last season with a 28-2 record and ranked 12th in the nation.

This game will also have a revenge factor as Kentucky beat the Irish last year in a hard fought match that went the distance. Notre Dame won the first two games but went on to lose the final three. If they hope to climb in the rankings, this is a must win for the Irish.

The Irish close the tournament Sunday against intrastate rival Indiana.

■ Men's Soccer

Big home test for Irish

By THOMAS SCHLIDT Sports Writer

One of the main precepts of war is to never extend yourself too thin. The same holds true for sports.

So when the Notre Dame men's soccer team plays their pressure oriented offense, they must have faith in their defense to stall any counter attack.

One piece of this solid defense is sophomore Brian Engesser, who shall be counted on heavily when the Irish face Ohio State tonight on Alumni Field at 7:30.

Last season, he was one of the few freshmen in Irish history to have started every game, and one only has to look at his consistency and maturity at defender to understand why.

"He (Engesser) is the most solid and consistent defender in our program," coach Mike Berticelli said. "He is extremely dependent. He just makes excellent choices with Yet, even with the success of the team, since his arrival, he is one of the most overlooked players on the team.

"He (Engesser) is probably the most underrated player on the team," Berticelli added. "That's probably because he plays defense, and isn't always involved in the glamorous

Though overlooked, he is a major part of this defense that will be needed to defuse any pressure from the Buckeyes.
