

Clinton to Haiti's leaders: 'Your time is up'

By TERENCE HUNT
Associated Press

WASHINGTON
In a terse ultimatum from the Oval Office, President Clinton told Haiti's military leaders Thursday night, "Your time is up. Leave now or we will force you from power."

Against a chorus of opposition, Clinton used a prime time address to build his case for an American invasion of Haiti to expel a military regime that stole power and stands accused of 3,000 political murders.

"We must act," Clinton said from the Oval Office.

But he said that the United States' mission in Haiti would be "limited and specific" to "remove the dictators from power and restore Haiti's legitimate democratically elected government." He said U. S. forces would help train a civilian police force, but he would not get involved in rebuilding Haiti.

Clinton said the "vast majority of our troops will come home in months, not years." Upwards of 20,000 U.S. forces were mobilized for the invasion.

The president sought to explain why American lives should be risked to restore deposed President Jean-Bertrand Aristide after three years in exile. He noted that than 20 nations have pledged to contribute to a police force.

Americans overwhelmingly oppose and invasion, according to polls, and there is widespread opposition in Congress among Republicans and Democrats alike. The White House acknowledged Clinton couldn't turn around public opinion with one speech.

"I assure you that no president makes decisions like this one without deep thought and prayer," the president said. "But it is my job as president and commander in chief to take

The bulk of an invasion force will be in and around Haiti as early as this weekend, U.S. defense officials say. An ever-growing fleet assigned to Haiti could be bolstered by other warships already in the Caribbean.

9,076 Navy personnel
1,800 Marines
Army personnel includes elements of 10th Mountain Div. (Ft. Drum), 18th Airborne Corp. and 1st Combat Support Command (Ft. Bragg). The Pentagon has activated 1,600 reservists.

Lt. Gen. Raoul Cedras, leader of the military Junta, cautioned the United States not to invade.

In a CBS interview, Cedras said, "I will fight with my people and I am prepared to die."

Administration sources said one final option is to dispatch an emissary to try to persuade Cedras to leave. "It's strictly a tactical decision, whether they think it has any chance," a source said, insisting on anonymity.

Aristide awaits invasion

By PIERRE-YVES GLASS

A virulent anti-American during his days as a leftist parish priest, exiled Haitian President Jean-Bertrand Aristide now must rely on the United States to get him back home.

For most of his three years in exile, he strenuously objected to the idea of being restored to power by an American invasion force.

No doubt he will return with mixed feelings about being borne home by Washington's troops.

Some Americans also have mixed feelings about Aristide, based on the darker moments in his remarkable, turbulent rise to power.

Aristide, 41, was born into a farming family in Port Salut, on the southwestern coast.

He moved with his mother to Port-au-Prince as a child when his father died.

He became a prize pupil in a Catholic school run by Salesian monks, where he developed a deep feeling for Haiti's poor and repressed.

As a Salesian brother in the late 1980s, he lived among Port-au-Prince slum dwellers, who became his army of ardent followers. They viewed him as a prophet; he survived several assassination attempts, contributing to his aura.

He was among the bold few in Haiti who denounced the Duvalier family dictatorship and the generals who replaced it in 1986.

ND grad takes reigns in Panama

Inherits slew of domestic problems

By KATIE MURPHY

For years, as a member of the self-proclaimed "Notre Dame Gang," Double Domer Ernesto Perez Balladares, ND '67 and '69, has participated in annual reunions with his closest friends from Notre Dame. Two weeks ago, the college friends gathered once again, this time in Perez Balladares' home country of Panama.

But the 1994 reunion was different from any of the others.

In addition to reminiscing and catching up with each other, the members of the Notre Dame Gang witnessed the inauguration of Perez Balladares, one of their own, as the new President of Panama.

Perez Balladares, a Democratic Revolutionary Party

(PRD) candidate, took office September 1 after defeating three other presidential candidates in the May election.

These elections marked the first free, democratic voting in Panama since the American invasion in 1989. That military operation resulted in the arrest of then-dictator General Manuel Antonio Noriega and the designation of Guillermo Endara as the new president of Panama. Endara's term expired this year.

One of Perez Balladares' most formidable obstacles during his campaign was his party affiliation. Noriega was also a PRD president, and his corrupt and oppressive leadership methods have not fallen far from the minds of the Panamanian people. But during the election Perez Balladares consistently downplayed his relationship with Noriega and drew himself closer in the eyes of the public to the founder of the PRD, General Omar Torrijos Herrera. Noriega took over Panama after Torrijos was killed in a plane crash.

"The PRD image became very bad because of the association with Noriega," said Father Ernest Bartell, executive director of the Kellogg Institute for International Studies and one of Balladares' former economics professors.

Noriega was convicted in the United States of eight counts of drug trafficking, money laundering, and racketeering. He is currently serving a 40-year sentence. What some people forget, however, is that Perez Balladares did not follow Noriega blindly, said Bartell.

"Perez Balladares had a falling-out with Noriega at one time and packed up his family and went to Spain for a year," Bartell said.

Despite widespread suspicion of his association with the PRD party, Perez Balladares received the most votes with over 30 percent of the electorate. In his inaugural speech, the new president reaffirmed the major points of his campaign.

"He gave a wonderful speech," said Bartell. "It was more of a state of the union address than a victory speech."

United States Secretary of the Interior Bruce Babbitt, a 1960 Notre Dame alumnus, and Housing and Urban Development Secretary Henry Cisneros attended the inauguration. Cisneros is a former University trustee.

The issues of poverty, economic development, educational reform, and the necessity of eliminating corrupt and illegal practices from the government highlighted President

Empty wallet, greedy soul... C'est la vie

"The absence of money is the root of all evil," a very wise person once said.

Perhaps that person was familiar with the lifestyle of a typical college student. For most of us, the dollar becomes more precious as early as mid-September.

PATTI CARSON
Saint Mary's Accent
Editor

Indeed, some of our desperate peers have already arrived at the point of digging deep into their pockets only to find useless balls of lint. As the year progresses, I have finally come to realize what dad meant when he said, "Patti, when will you ever learn the value of a dollar?" Well, this is for you dad. Here's what a few bucks will get you these days:

- The infamous SYR souvenir at the dollar store (i.e. an obnoxious troll doll with fluorescent hair or a 6 pack of jelly bracelets).
- One beverage of your choice during dollar import nights.
- A 99 cent Whopper from Burger King for a limited time only.
- Roughly 1/80,000th of your college education.
- A tip for Papa John.
- A trial size bottle of shampoo at Venture
- Your Sunday tithe—sacrifices, sacrifices)
- A beef jerky stick.
- A pencil with the school logo.

As you can see, there are countless items that a dollar can buy. And there is nothing better than finding a crumpled dollar that you forgot about in the pocket of your jeans. Every quarter counts—especially in the laundry room.

The lack of money causes even the most honest of students to perform the most random, senseless acts of dishonesty. Recently, my roommates and I rented the movie "Reality Bites." Such a happening event as this had a tremendous draw. Soon enough, one of my roommates came up with the notion that we should charge our free-loading friends to see this movie.

She even pulled out the construction paper, paste, and scissors with which she made admission tickets. She only charged 50 cents per person, but that was only valid with proper student identification, she joked.

The worst part of the whole situation is that the movie is now four days overdue. So I can only imagine how much we'll have to charge for the next movie.

Another one of my friends called Papa John's Pizza last night. Before placing her order, she asked if the Lenten $5 cheese pizza special was still valid—hoping beyond all hopes that the pizza lady was a loving, benevolent Catholic, too. Unfortunately, her scheme failed, it turns out Papa John is Protestant.

It's sad but true, poverty will cause even the best of us to lie, cheat, and steal. Fortunately, fall break is right around the corner—just in time for mom and dad to replenish our shallow pockets.

Discovery captures satellite, radar works after all

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla.

Space shuttle Discovery's astronauts sidled up to a satellite loaded with valuable data and plucked it from orbit Thursday, two days after it was set free to study the sun. Commander Richard Richards steered Discovery to within 35 feet of the sun-gazing satellite, Spartan. Then astronaut Susan Helms snatched the gleaming, 2,800-pound spacecraft with the shuttle's mechanical arm. "We've got a Spartan," Richards told Mission Control. About 1 1/2 hours later, Helms tucked the boxy satellite into Discovery's cargo bay for the trip home. It took a little longer than expected to lock Spartan in place. The shuttle's radar—used to chase the satellite down—had failed when Spartan was put into orbit on Tuesday and initially gave less-than-accurate measurements Thursday. But it ended up working "marvelously," Richards said. The radar is most important in the last few miles of the chase. Without it, Richards, a four-time space flier and naval aviator, would have had to rely on less precise methods for calculating Spartan's location, namely ground navigation data and shuttle star trackers. No astronaut has attempted

An astronaut's "life preserver"

An astronaut who accidentally drifts out of reach of handholds or tethers has quite a problem. In empty space there's nothing to push against; a stranded or injured astronaut would not be able to return to safety alone.

such a rendezvous without radar in the 13-year history of the shuttle program. Discovery had trailed Spartan by as much as 65 miles in orbit. During its flight, Spartan aimed its two telescopes at the sun's corona, or outer atmosphere, to gather information about solar wind. The measurements coincided with observations by Ulysses, the first spacecraft to be put into orbit around the sun's poles. It was launched from Discovery four years ago and reached the south pole this week. Researchers want to better understand solar wind, in part because of its earthly consequences: The charged particles streaming from the sun at 1.5 million mph can disrupt radio communications and electrical power. The $14 million Spartan is due to return to Earth with Discovery on Monday. NASA plans to fly the satellite again in a year when Ulysses crosses the sun's north pole. Still ahead for the six astronauts was the highlight of their 10-day voyage—Friday's spacewalk. Mark Lee and Carl Meade will test a new jet pack during their 6 1/2-hour outing. It will be the first time in 10 years that astronauts have ventured into the vacuum of space without their safety tethers.

Clinton withdraws from church case

WASHINGTON

President Clinton, under pressure from religious groups, ordered the Justice Department to withdraw from a case in which the government was to argue against a church's claim. The department had filed legal papers in the bankruptcy case this spring, contending that financially troubled parishioners had no right to make donations to their church a year before a bankruptcy filing. But the White House said Clinton told Attorney General Janet Reno on Wednesday to pull out of the case. The department withdrew shortly before the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals started oral arguments on the matter Thursday morning in St. Louis. "This is consistent with his personal interest and his record in support of religious freedom," said Phil Lader, Clinton's deputy chief of staff.

Suspected bomb blast kills three

BERLIN

An explosion at a construction site, likely caused by a bomb from World War II, killed three workers and badly damaged nearby buildings and cars in east Berlin on Thursday. Eight people, including a child, were hurt in the blast, which occurred near a subway station, said Klaus Ziegler, a fire department spokesman. The blast hurled large chunks of concrete more than 1,000 feet and blew large holes in an adjacent apartment building. A 110-pound block of concrete landed on the street half a block away and a half-dozen cars had windshields smashed and were covered with dents from the flying debris.

Program vulnerable to massive fraud

WASHINGTON

In the latest scheme to defraud the government's largest welfare program, bogus grocery stores are springing up around the country to launder food stamps for restaurants, wholesalers and street traffickers. The lucrative scams are spreading at a time when federal oversight of the food stamp program has been weakened by deep budget cuts, and while record numbers of Americans are collecting benefits. The Agriculture Department spends $24 billion a year providing food stamps to more than 26 million Americans—one in 10. Yet USDA's Food and Nutrition Service has only a handful of regulators and investigators to police the program. According to agency officials and lawmakers, the Food and Nutrition Service has 46 food stamp investigators, compared with nearly 80 in 1979. Its field office staff, which oversees food stamps as well as other nutrition programs, has shrunk from a thousand workers to about 150.

United Express starts new flights

TERRE HAUTE

United Express could begin flights from Chicago to Terre Haute as early as November, officials said. United Express will fly from Hulman Regional Airport to O'Hare International with one stop at Lafayette four times a day during the week and twice a day on weekends, said Charles Goodwin, director of Hulman Regional. Midway Connection currently has three non-stop flights a day from Hulman Regional to Midway Airport in Chicago, as well as one flight on Sundays. Congress recently passed legislation that restored slots to communities such as Terre Haute, Bloomington and Muncie, that had lost landing positions.

WVFI AM gets ready to rock the campus

By JASON WILLIAMS
Associate News Editor

Get ready to rock—because WVFI is giving campus a wake-up call at 7:30 a.m. Monday.

And this year, the station has aims of attracting a larger audience as it roles through the fall semester, according to Station Manager Steven Sostak. Concerts have been planned, new shows are already slated and a wide variety of music waits poised on the turntables.

"One of the big things we want to do is to increase the overall musical awareness on campus," Sostak said.

"Now people know we exist thanks to a big time ad campaign."

WVFI—640 on your AM dial—hopes to boost listenership by keeping with cutting edge trends in the music industry by creating new specialty shows. Reggae, hip-hop, spoken word and poetry are just a few of the new shows, Sostak said.

"We're going to do this show called 'Barf,'" Sostak said. "A couple of guys went down to Goodwill and got some of the worst stuff they could find on vinyl."

The station has also put together a concert series with the help of the Student Union Board (S.U.B.).

This newly christened Loft Concert Series will bring some of the hottest independent label bands to the LaFortune Ballroom this semester. Tickets for each show will be sold for $1.

"I like to use the analogy that these bands are like amateur baseball teams," said Ted Liebler, WVFI's advertising and promotions director.

"It's not all artificial turf and gold chains. The stuff we're bringing in is the real thing."

For example, the major-label band Toad the Wet Sprocket will be playing Stepan Center this fall. WVFI brought Toad to campus three years ago in a series similar to the Loft.

"That just goes to show the type of bands we're trying to bring in," Sostak said. "So in that way you could say we're going after bands that are up and coming."

Cub, an all-female quartet from Chicago, kicks off the series Sept. 23.

The Roadapples, winner of Notre Dame's battle of the bands last spring, will be the opener.

The Smoking Popes play Oct. 7; Chisel, Nov. 5; and Trenchmouth, Dec. 2. Various campus bands will open for each show.

WVFI has also worked out a weekly program where Student Body President David Hungeling will be the host. Students, faculty and staff are welcome to call in and talk to Hungeling about whatever is on their minds, Sostak said.

WVFI will also be hosting a weekly sports call-in show on Sunday nights from 7:30 to 8:30. The show will be broadcast from the basement of LaFortune.

"Our first show which is scheduled for the 25th of this month will feature the two new assistant football coaches, David Roberts and Bob Davies," said Ken Maverick, WVFI sports director.

"Then we'll have Ron Powlus the following week."

The station has also set goals for converting to an FM frequency. This fall they are making a pledge to themselves, the students and the administration to make WVFI a fully operational FM station by the fall of 1995.

"We're challenging the University, the students and ourselves to make it happen," Sostak said.

"The best we'll get it done is by students listening and showing interest in our broadcasts."

WVFI broadcasts daily from 7:30 a.m. to 1:45 a.m. They take requests anytime off their music-line (1-6400).

Seigfried: Education is not passive

By BETH VAN TIEM
News Writer

Direction, control and guidance should stand as the three most defined roles in education, according to philosopher Charlene Haddock Seigfried in a lecture last night at Carroll Auditorium.

The root of Seigfried's work stems from theories originated by the philosopher John Dewey.

Seigfried, a professor of philosophy at Purdue University, began her lecture stressing the importance of women referring to themselves as "we" and working together as a team.

Entitled, "The Constant reweaving of the Social Fabric: A Pragmatist Feminist Account," her lecture focused on knowledge and learning in a social medium.

Currently writing her third book, "Pragmatist Feminism," she shared a few excerpts on related issues of education.

"Education is not passive, but allows persons to transform their environment," she said.

She believes insights from the past enable society to solve today's problems.

Last night's Sesquicentennial lecture was not Seigfried's sole contribution to the learning process at Saint Mary's College. While sitting in on a few classes Thursday, she shared some insight on Dewey's philosophies and evolutionary theories.

Seigfried earned her bachelor of arts degree from Marymount College in California and her doctorate from Loyola University in Chicago.

She specializes in such areas as American philosophy, feminist theory, women's studies and American studies.

She is currently preparing entries for the Cambridge Dictionary of Philosophy on Great Chain of Being, George Herbert Mead, Thomas Paine, Pragmatism, Josiah Royce, Henry David Thoreau, and Transcendentalism.

Perez Balladares' address.

"It is essential that we now close the unfortunate chapter of the Noriega era," said Perez Balladares in his inaugural speech. He endorsed non-partisan and honest cooperation between politicians, and a return to a "noble, wholesome" method of civic leadership.

"Modernity means honesty," said President Perez Balladares.

Since Perez Balladares has taken office, Latin American analysts and scholars have been encouraged by his initial cabinet appointments and policy decisions.

"Perez Balladares has taken fine first steps," said Father Robert Pelton, faculty fellow at the Kellogg Institute and representative for Latin American/North America Church Concerns (LANACC). Pelton was one of 12 international observers sponsored by the Panamanian Catholic Church at the May elections.

Perez Balladares has attracted both the "best and the brightest in Panama" to his cabinet and committees, according to Bartell. By looking beyond the PRD, the new president has been able to assemble a solid administration.

"He has formed a cabinet which is a national cabinet," former Panamanian Archbishop Marcos McGrath said. "In the campaign he consistently proposed creating this national government which would interact with the major sectors of the nation."

McGrath, who is also an alumnus of the University, recently retired after serving 25 years as Archbishop. Throughout his time as the primary Catholic leader in Panama and especially in his dealings with the government, McGrath was a constant voice of the poor and oppressed. McGrath is hopeful that Perez Balladares will be able to control the militaristic elements in the PRD and focus on the needs of the people of Panama.

"The problem is that there are some members of his party who are anxious to reap the profits of his electoral victory and who might not be as open to a national approach," said McGrath. "Time will tell how much he is able to control his own party and other contributors."

"He has set out to really reconstitute democracy in Panama, but we still need to wait and see," said Bartell. "Everyone is excited but no one is quite sure if it can be pulled off."

A number of Notre Dame graduates are serving in the new administration in some capacity. Stanley Muschett, president of the Catholic University of Panama and a 1984 Notre Dame graduate, will be chairman of a high-profile committee on education. Federico Humbert, who graduated from the University in 1955, will serve on a committee on foreign investment. Humbert is considered one of the most successful bankers in Panama.

Approximately 90 Notre Dame graduates reside in Panama.

Perez Balladares graduated from the University of Notre Dame with a B.A. in Economics in 1967. He completed his M.A. in Finance at Notre Dame in 1969, and then proceeded to receive another Masters in Finance at the Wharton School of Finance and Commerce at the University of Pennsylvania. Perez Balladares worked in the private sector for many years as a businessman and also held several governmental positions.

Caribbean, every sign is pointed to an invasion within a matter of days. One high ranking official said an invasion was not likely before Monday.

William Gray, U.S. special envoy to Haiti, said "There will be a firm deadline" for Cedras to surrender power but that it would not be publicly announced "because we're not going to jeopardize American lives and our military in case the multinational force does have to go in."

In forceful, measured words, Clinton said, "The message of the United States to the Haitian dictators is clear: Your time is up. Leave now or we will force you from power."

Twenty American warships ominously shadowed Haiti's coast, and two troop-laden aircraft carriers were on the way, expected to be on station by the weekend."

Following the speech, Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole said "Obviously we'll support the American forces and hope and pray that nobody is injured."

FBI disputes sabotage claims

Associated Press

PITTSBURGH

The FBI disputed any suggestion Thursday that USAir Flight 427 was sabotaged to silence a drug informant aboard.

Earlier Thursday, it was disclosed that one of the passengers killed in the Sept. 1 crash, 34-year-old Paul Olson, had spent the last day of his life with federal prosecutors in Chicago, discussing testimony in an upcoming drug trial.

"There is nothing to indicate that he was anything other than a tragic victim along with 131 other victims," FBI spokesman Charles Mandigo said.

Investigators said they have found no evidence a bomb or other means of sabotage caused the crash, in which the jet dropped out of the sky and slammed into a ravine, killing everyone on board. The cause is still unknown.

Olson was released from prison earlier this year after serving nearly five years for cocaine trafficking, Assistant U.S. Attorney Mark Prosperi said.

Prosperi would not disclose any details of the case he had discussed with Olson, saying only that Olson had agreed to cooperate in exchange for a reduced sentence. Prosperi and Mandigo said Olson was not under federal protection.

Investigators on Thursday continued examining the wreckage for clues to the cause of the crash. They have taken nearly all of the twisted pieces to a hangar near the Pittsburgh airport.

Kabat brings plight of battered women to film

By ROSANNA D'ALESSANDRO
News Writer

After a life of devotion to the rights of battered women, human rights activist Stacey Kabat has channeled her efforts into film. She showed her award-winning film in Washington Hall last night.

The 1993 Academy Award winner for best documentary on a short subject, Kabat introduced her documentary, "Defending Our Lives," by outlining her life story and describing why she was driven to document severe cases of abuse as a means of educating people.

Having grown up in a family where both her mother and grandmother were victims of domestic abuse, Stacey Kabat became determined at a young age not to be controlled by violence herself. Although she was aware of the injustice of her personal situation during that early period, she was not yet able to speak out against it.

"At 18 or 19 years old I left home," she said. "At the time, it really was unacceptable to talk of domestic violence. It was considered a family secret, a shame. So I kept it to myself."

At age nineteen, Kabat met two men who influenced her to devote her life to being an outspoken human rights defender.

"One was an old South African and the other an old Indian who had attended Ghandi's prayer meetings," she recounted. "I wanted to learn from these people and throw my energy into upholding a human rights standard."

Her extensive experience in human rights activism has allowed her to channel her desires to combat domestic violence in America in a similar fashion.

After years of working with Amnesty International and the anti-Apartheid organization, I.D.A.F., Kabat began interning in battered women shelters in Boston. These women's horror stories of abuse led her to connect her personal experience with her universal convictions on human rights and provided her with the film's inspiration.

"I was shocked and appalled at these women, fleeing to these shelters as if they were domestic refugees," she said. "They often fled homes for fear for their lives. The shelters were like refugee camps in the Middle East, only they didn't have an international community supporting them."

Kabat's documentary begins with a series of graphic photos of severely abused women and leads into a series of powerful personal testimonies by women convicted for killing their batterers. Her point is clear: battered women in the United States are having their human rights severely violated, but the United States is not caring enough to stand up for them.

"There is a war against women and children in this country," she said.

To support her claim that battered women in America are the unfortunate victims of a misogynist legal system, she listed several startling facts concerning the lack of abuse prevention laws. She noted that there are only 1,200 battered women shelters in the U.S. today, compared to 3,800 animal protection shelters.

Kabat also presented evidence that battered women convicted of killing their batterers are treated more harshly by the legal system than any other defendants, including accused serial killers. These women have higher initial bails and higher sentences than others who are accused of murder under different circumstances.

Kabat concluded by urging students to make a commitment to abide by the Universal Declaration of Human Rights adapted by the United Nations in 1948.

"All people have a right to human rights," she said. "It's up to us to reject violence and recognize that human rights are for home and abroad."

Cuban refugees released

By WILL LESTER
Associated Press

MIAMI
Thirty-seven Cuban refugees were released from a detention center Thursday under a new federal policy that benefits children, their parents and some others.

Officials at a Texas center said Cuban and Haitian refugees held there would also be considered for release in the days ahead.

The group released from the Krome detention center west of Miami consisted of 19 children and 18 adults, said Lemar Wooley, a Miami spokesman for the Immigration and Naturalization Service. Most of the adults were mothers of the children, Wooley said.

It was the largest release of Cubans from INS detention since an Aug. 19 order cracking down on the recent flood of Cuban refugees arriving in this country on rafts.

Statue returns to first site

By CHRISTINA CANNON
News Writer

The Statue "Christ the Teacher," was officially rededicated and unveiled yesterday on Saint Mary's campus. The statue is now at its original site, between the Haggar College Center and Madeleva Hall, in celebration of the College's Sesquicentennial.

At yesterday's celebration were the original artist Sister Monica Gabrielle and Joan Hemingway, the 1955 senior class president. Both were both present at the original dedication.

The statue was first dedicated on January 20, 1955 in celebration of the college's Centennial. At that time the statue was placed at its present site, but was moved to the island of Lake Marian in 1984.

The harsh winters wore away at the concrete statue, so Hank Mascotte, a South Bend resident, remodeled it this year with the artist's assistance.

Gabrielle, a student of Father Anthony Lauk, was asked to create the statue with the theme "I have come to cast fire on earth." in mind. "The statue is about enthusiasm and love," Gabrielle said.

The theme is carried out in the sculpture through the symbol of the flame that appears on Christ's heart and at his feet and symbolizes the Holy Spirit and the power of purification.

The decision to place the statue back to its original location is especially symbolic, because it honors the Holy Cross sisters' dedication to the hearts, minds, and spirits of the students.

Greeley details "erotic, romantic" side of God

By TRACY ALLEGA
News Writer

Father Andrew Greeley showcased his storytelling skills last night to convince a lecture audience that God is like a spouse who is "mysterious, romantic, exciting, and a sharp dresser."

In his lecture, Father Greeley expounded on his view that "charm and erotic vulnerability are the things we see in a spouse that are most likely to lead us to say that the spouse is like God." His claim is that there is a significant percentage of men and women who acknowledge their spouse as having God-like qualities. However, the qualities that these men and women associate with their spouse are not ones typically associated with God.

Through research, Greeley concluded that 25% of all Americans believe that their spouse is like God. To reach this conclusion, he used several principal variables that tend to explain the sacramentality of the spouse. These variables include charm, nakedness, sexual values, and equality.

Through his sociological theory, Greeley seeks to further examine the Christian belief that God is love. "What kind of love?...passionate,...erotic, committed love," Greeley said.

Father Greeley's hypothesis is that "Religion, before anything else, is story." Through an understanding of people's stories and experiences, Greeley is able to deduce a sociological model. In short, the "image of God is a story of people's lives." Greeley does not have any qualms about associating the everyday, ordinary experiences of humans with a view of God.

"God is a person of infinite charm," he said.

Greeley gave an example of a personal religious experience that occurred one December in Chicago-O'Hare Airport. He described himself as miserable and melancholy amongst the confusion of the airport. Then he encountered a woman holding an infant. Because of the glowing expression on her face, Greeley associated her with the Madonna.

From this everyday experience at the airport, Greeley was able to see that "religion begins in hope renewal experiences." Through our life situations and relationships, "God is vulnerable with us," Greeley said.

Greeley said that his research has many social implications. People who describe their spouse as having God-like qualities tend to be more conscious of social issues. For instance, in his research, Greeley concluded that men and women who associate their spouse with God typically are less racist than those who do not.

In the lecture, Greeley repeatedly referred to God as a woman, using exclusively the pronouns "her," and "herself" to refer to God. He commented that "the Christian imagination is not yet at ease with the notion of God as a woman." Greeley said this notion must be expanded and developed, and typically strives toward this goal in his stories and other publications.

Breakup of drug ring sends message to mob

By LARRY NEUMEISTER
Associated Press

NEW YORK

The notion that the United States is only a destination for cocaine and heroin was crushed Thursday with the breakup of a mob-run group that authorities say sent huge quantities of drugs from a New York pizzeria to Italy.

More than 100 people were named as participants in the scheme that allegedly brought cocaine and heroin from Colombia and other points to New York, where some was distributed locally and the rest sent to Italy.

At a news conference, authorities said the distribution headquarters for at least the last year was a single pizzeria, Famous Original Ray's at 43rd Street and Third Avenue in mid-Manhattan.

Although the restaurant did indeed sell pizza, authorities said its main function was as the headquarters for a distribution network that moved tens of millions of dollars a year in drugs.

By early Thursday, 30 defendants had been arrested in the United States, where three were fugitives.

At least 60 were under arrest and a dozen more were fugitives in Italy, where three organized crime groups were targeted.

More than 100 kilograms or 220 pounds of cocaine was seized by Italian police while authorities in the United States got 3 kilos and Colombian authorities seized 167 kilos.

"Not only have we eliminated three major narcotics networks but the investigation has gone a long way to reduce the power of Italian organized crime groups operating in Italy and in the United States," said FBI Deputy Assistant Director William A. Gavin.

Authorities said none of the suspects were from the five U.S.-based organized crime families.

Testimony at past mob trials has shown the U.S. families have rules against distributing drugs but the Italian organizations do not.

Antonio Manganelli, a police official who heads the criminal division for the Servizio Centrale Operativo in Italy, said through an interpreter that the arrests proved Italy was not backing off from its assault on organized crime despite killings of two Mafia prosecutors and a judge.

"We're here. We're alive and we're still working against organized crime," Manganelli said.

Gavin said the raids represented the first time the United States was proven to be a distribution point for massive amounts of drugs.

"This case reveals the worldwide web of the illegal drug trafficking that plagues this country and countries abroad," said U.S. Attorney Mary Jo White.

Gavin refused to be more specific about the amount of drugs and money involved in the drug distribution scheme beyond saying "Tens of millions of dollars each year in cocaine and heroin have gone back and forth across the ocean between the United States and Italy."

The three narcotics networks targeted in Italy were loosely connected and included members of three major Italian organized crime groups, the Sicilian Mafia, the Camorra and the 'ndrangheta organized crime group in southern Italy, Gavin said.

Gavin said authorities relied heavily on court-approved wiretaps and surveillance after Italian investigators three years ago learned that Italian organized crime groups were getting drugs from the United States.

Student's family wins suit

By LESLIE ZGANJAR

BATON ROUGE

A homeowner was ordered to pay $653,000 Thursday to the parents of a Japanese exchange student who was shot to death in 1992 when he went to the wrong door while looking for a Halloween party.

State District Judge Bill Brown rejected Rodney Peairs' explanation that he thought 16-year-old Yoshihiro Hattori was a lunatic bent on hurting him and his family.

"There is no justification that the killing was necessary to save himself or his family," Brown ruled in a lawsuit filed by the boy's parents.

Peairs, 32, was acquitted of manslaughter last year in the slaying, which reinforced the United States' image in Japan as a land of gunslingers.

Masaichi and Mieko Hattori, who had asked for as much as $850,000, plan to give the money to a foundation they set up in their son's name to foster understanding between the United States and Japan.

"Although the verdict was in our favor, the hole in my heart will always be there forever," Mrs. Hattori said. And in a plea to the American people, she said: "Please decrease the number of handguns as much as possible."

Hattori was shot after he and the son of his host parents got lost while looking for a Halloween party. Hattori was dressed in a John Travolta-style disco costume — a white tuxedo and an open-collar shirt.

The teen-ager, who spoke little English, didn't stop when Peairs shouted, "Freeze!" Peairs opened fire with a .44-caliber Magnum handgun.

Peairs didn't use the "extraordinary care" required by law for using a gun, and neither Hattori nor his host family bears any blame, the judge said.

Peairs was ordered to pay $85,000 — the maximum allowed under state law — for the youth's pain and suffering;

$275,000 each to his parents, for the wrongful death; and about $18,000 to cover funeral expenses.

Mrs. Hattori and her husband held a photograph of their son while they talked to reporters through an interpreter.

"I hope a trial like this won't ever be necessary in the future," the teen-ager's father said.

John Hainkel, who represented Peairs' homeowner's insurance company, said he will appeal. The policy covers $100,000; the Peairs are responsible for the rest.

Peairs and his wife, Bonnie, said that when Hattori and the other teen-ager went to their front door, Mrs. Peairs looked out through the carport door, saw two strangers, slammed the door and shouted to her husband to get his gun. Peairs got his gun and shot the teen-ager in the carport.

"A reasonable person would have said, 'Why do I need a gun? What did you see?'" the judge said.

Peairs testified that Hattori ignored his gun and his order to stop and kept coming, laughing. He said he thought the teen-ager was a crazed attacker.

Howell Andrews, the Peairs' lawyer, said in his closing argument that their fear was understandable.

"Bonnie Peairs was in her nightclothes," he said. "She looked out the door, saw strangers, slammed the door and said, 'Rodney, get a gun.' There's nothing wrong with that. We still have a right to do that in America. It's what a reasonable man would have done."

The Hattoris collected 1.7 million signatures in Japan on a gun control petition.

Fraud plagues food stamps

By JENNIFER DIXON
Associated Press

WASHINGTON

In the latest scheme to defraud the government's largest welfare program, bogus grocery stores are springing up around the country to launder food stamps for restaurants, wholesalers and street traffickers.

The lucrative scams are spreading at a time when federal oversight of the food stamp program has been weakened by deep budget cuts, and while record numbers of Americans are collecting benefits.

The Agriculture Department spends $24 billion a year providing food stamps to more than 26 million Americans — one in 10. Yet USDA's Food and Nutrition Service has only a handful of regulators and investigators to police the program.

According to agency officials and lawmakers, the Food and Nutrition Service has 46 food stamp investigators, compared with nearly 80 in 1979. Its field office staff, which oversees food stamps as well as other nutrition programs, has shrunk from a thousand workers to about 150.

The Secret Service, which recently investigated food stamp laundering around the country, found evidence of massive fraud and estimates the cost of trafficking at $2 billion a year.

Rep. Ron Wyden, chairman of a House subcommittee on regulation, said the Clinton administration must be more aggressive about cracking down on fraud.

"They ought to be coming down on the crooks with hobnail boots, but instead, we've been arguing (for more investigators) against a brick wall for months," said Wyden, D-Ore.

Some recipients use their coupons to buy drugs, alcohol, other contraband and restaurant meals, investigators say, while restaurants trade them for produce and meat with their suppliers and route drivers.

Crooked grocery stores get into the act when they buy the black market coupons for less than face value, generally 50 to 70 cents on the dollar, and redeem them for cash from the federal government.

All stores that accept food stamps must meet USDA requirements on the types of food sold.

Investigators, however, say some grocery stores now involved in trafficking are storefront operations with virtually no food inventory.

They are sneaking into the program because the USDA authorizes grocers to participate by mail, without inspecting the store or meeting the grocer face to face, investigators said.

Craig Beauchamp, assistant inspector general in charge of investigations at USDA, said people are "setting up businesses for the sole purpose of getting rid of trafficked food stamps."

"Food stamps are so lucrative for some people that they forget about the grocery business and get into the food stamp business," he said.

Beauchamp said the coupons come from restaurants, wholesalers, route drivers and street traffickers.

In New York City this week, federal prosecutors accused more than 60 people of being involved in storefront operations that allegedly laundered $40 million in food stamps.

According to complaints filed in federal court, the "stores" conducted little or no business. Many were closed during business hours, and when open, had hardly any food inventory or customers. Yet the owners deposited large amounts of coupons into their bank accounts, often exceeding $100,000 a month.

In Los Angeles, the owner of a milk delivery company quit selling dairy products to give his full attention to redeeming food stamps obtained from other drivers. He charged other drivers a 5 percent handling fee and by the time he was caught, was illegally redeeming $2,000 to $6,000 in food stamps a day.

"What we're seeing, more and more, are these schemes where the stores don't exist, or exist only in the barest sense," Beauchamp said.

Neal Flieger, a spokesman for the Food and Nutrition Service, said his agency is suffering from "12 years of erosion and decay" because of cuts under Presidents Reagan and Bush. And now, because budgets are extremely tight, the agency must "do more with less," he said. "And I would argue we are doing more with less. We are redoubling our efforts to crack down on fraud and abuse in the program."

GM factory union authorizes strike

By MITCH WEISS
Associated Press

TOLEDO, Ohio

Workers at a General Motors plant that builds transmissions voted to authorize a strike that could hurt production at plants in nine states, including Indiana, and four foreign countries.

Voting began Wednesday and ended today. The 2,596-to-106 vote authorizes union leaders at the Toledo Powertrain Plant to order a strike at a later date.

It is still too early to talk about a walkout, Oscar Bunch, president of United Auto Workers Local 14, said today. UAW international leaders in Detroit must sanction a strike if negotiations fail to resolve the dispute.

Bunch said the union was concerned about safety issues, including production speedups and heavy overtime. He would not elaborate.

The union represents 4,139 hourly workers at the Toledo plant, which makes transmissions for 11 U.S. and five foreign assembly plants.

"We've always had a good working relationship with GM and we hope to get this settled soon. We don't want to go on strike but will if we have to," Bunch said.

Two plants in Pontiac, Mich.; and one each in Fort Wayne, Ind.; Moraine, Ohio; Arlington, Texas; Baltimore; Bowling Green, Ky.; Flint, Mich.; Janesville, Wis.; Shreveport, La.; and Linden, N.J., would be affected by a strike. Two plants in Canada and one each in Mexico, Australia and Venezuela also could be affected.

GM spokeswoman Charlotte Grim did not return a phone message seeking comment today. On Wednesday, she said negotiations were continuing. She would not discuss the dispute.

There was a steady flow of workers into the union office Wednesday. Some said they were solidly behind the union.

"We have to support the union and we have to make working conditions good for everyone," said Debbie Kimble, who has worked in the tool room for 10 years. She said she voted to authorize a strike.

Joe Avery, who works on the assembly line, said GM has reduced the number of people building transmissions but speeded up production. He said that has created some safety and health concerns.

"There has been problems," said Randy O'Hara, who also works on the assembly line. "It's unfortunate that it had to come to this point. But I think this is what has to happen in order to make management realize they need to make some changes."

Hoosier Park faces financing problem

Associated Press

ANDERSON, Ind.

Hoosier Park is up and running standardbred horse races, but investors in a second Indiana horse track always seem to face one more problem.

On Thursday, it was a question about financing for the $40 million track in Shelby County.

Carmel-based Sagamore Park Group filed a financing proposal with the Indiana Horse Racing Commission on Sept. 1, but so far has failed to provide the final loan documents that to seal the agreement.

The commission has already granted Sagamore Park a license to develop a track outside Shelbyville for standardbreds, quarterhorses and thoroughbreds.

Gorajec said the financing question will be discussed when the commission meets Sept. 23. Gorajec, who is not a commission member and has no vote, declined to say what actions the commission might consider.

"There are things that are clearly within the commission's domain," he said. "It's not a question of whether they (Sagamore) complied; obviously they are not in compliance. It's a question of what the commission is going to do about it," Gorajec said.

He gave no indication that the commission would call into question Sagamore's license, or the project itself. Sagamore Park president Paul Estridge, a real estate developer, said earlier construction could begin later this year, with completion slated for October 1995.

Telephone calls to Estridge and the group's attorney, Jay Boyd, concerning Gorajec's comments were not returned.

Estridge has struggled for more than five years to develop the track, finally winning a license, and in mid-August posting a $1 million performance bond, then finally announcing that he had secured financing.

Indiana's first race track, Hoosier Park, opened Sept. 1 in Anderson and is in the midst of its inaugural, 55-day harness-racing meet.

A decision due at the commission's next meeting will influence whether Hoosier Park will also conduct Indiana's first thoroughbred racing meet next year. The commission will likely decide whether Churchill Downs, the Louisville, Ky.-based developer of Hoosier Park, will be awarded a license for an off-track betting facility in Merrillville.

Churchill has pledged to conduct a 42-day thoroughbred racing meet next year if it receives approval for the Merrillville OTB in northwest Indiana.

Ford proposes settlement

By LISA ZAGAROLI
Associated Press

WASHINGTON

Handling advice and free inspections are part of a proposed settlement announced Thursday involving about 700,000 Ford Bronco II models, the subject of lawsuits contending they are prone to rollovers.

The class-action settlement agreed to by Ford Motor Co. and attorneys representing owners must be approved by a federal court in Louisiana and a state court in Alabama before it can be implemented. Hearings are scheduled in both courts in November.

The case involves the 1983-90 Bronco II, a sport-utility vehicle that is no longer being manufactured by Ford. It is smaller and designed differently than the Ford Bronco, which isn't part of the litigation.

Ford began notifying Bronco

II owners of the proposed settlement on Thursday.

Owners who agree to the settlement would receive a sticker cautioning drivers to avoid unnecessary sharp turns or other abrupt maneuvers; a videotape detailing how the Bronco II's handling characteristics are different from ordinary cars, and an owner's guide supplement.

They also would be entitled to a free dealership inspection to make sure that no changes were made since purchase that would compromise the vehicle's stability, such as different tire size or lifts.

"By definition, sport-utility vehicles have some different handling characteristics," said Ford counsel John Beisner. "They are designed differently so they may be driven particularly in off-road situations. That doesn't mean they're defective in any way."

Owners have 30 days, until

Oct. 17, to opt out of the settlement. They wouldn't get the kit or free inspection, but they would retain their right to sue Ford for economic damages based solely on their ownership of the vehicle.

However, even owners who agree to the settlement would be able to sue Ford for personal injury or wrongful death if they are involved in an accident in a Bronco II.

"Our agreement will give them the information they need to operate the vehicle more safely, while fully retaining the right to have their day in court should their Bronco II roll over," said T. Roe Frazer II, lawyer for vehicle owners.

Although the vehicle has been the subject of numerous lawsuits claiming it is prone to rollover, a jury has never found the vehicle to be defective, Beisner said. Several cases have been settled out of court.

Some things are worth fighting for "Your time is up. Leave now or we will force you from power," threatened President Clinton in a national address last evening. Did that get your attention? If it didn't, the following plea in last Friday's New York Times from a 12-year old Haitian boy certainly should: "They do not know that if they kill us, they help us," said Lionel Brene. "I do not care if they kill me because it only brings an end to my suffering."

The looming invasion of Haiti brings with it more than just a test of military strength and political resolve—it highlights how we, as Americans, show our value of principle and regard for humanity. Approximately two-thirds of our nation opposes this effort to restore democracy. Most of America appears more riveted by the results of a blood test in the O.J. Simpson case. Suddenly, it becomes painfully obvious just how far our own humanity has fallen.

How can the pleas of Lionel Brene not compel us to cease the willful terrorism of these tyrants?

Beyond reasons of preserving human dignity, Haiti represents an enormous American interest. If the epitome of freedom and democracy allows such behavior less than one hundred-fifty miles off its coast, what more will we tolerate as the finest military in the world stands idly by?

Moreover, hordes of Haitian refugees—21,000 in the past two months—have paralyzed immigration and Coast Guard efforts for the past four years. They have also cost the U.S. over $200 million. If this situation were to continue, it would be economically disastrous for both private and public sectors.

Yes, Clinton's silver tongue brushed over these aspects, but we must hold him to his sterling words. We must insist that our military and political efforts remain unclouded and direct. We will accept no less.

The American people have a right to be concerned. No one wants to see dead servicemen. We have always believed some things to be worth fighting for.

Don't we now?

Haiti: An American lapse of morality

Dear Editor:

No one in their right mind can doubt that the military totalitarians running Haiti today—descendants of the infamous Tonton Macoutes in the Duvalier times—have turned what was already one of the most destitute nations in the world into a hell of tyranny and fear for virtually all of the population except the young men they have so tragically co-opted into their roving death squads.

The rule of Raoul Cedras rivals that of any of the most savage oppressors in history, from Hitler and Idi Amin to the Dominican Republic's own General Trujillo; it is a reign of terror in which the most minimal human rights owed by every human being to every other are meaningless, an outrage to the most basic sense of decency that should be indispensable for every one of us. Even the most isolationist and self-serving political commentators can hardly deny the situation in Haiti.

And yet polls show that as many as 60% of Americans are either doubtful about or outright opposed to invading Haiti. Has something gone radically wrong with our minds or is the American public plain coward? Perhaps a conversation with my barber, a dead-set noninvader, reveals something of the popular sentiment. Joe (my barber) declared that "saving that piddly island isn't worth one American life"—a statement that on its surface looks like a shockingly selfish piece of nationalism, if not something much worse. Why does he hold such a view? Joe's comments shed light on the real undercurrent that makes people oppose actions such as the one planned in Haiti: a majority of the American public simply doesn't believe that we can be effective in changing long-run trends in nations like Haiti through invasions—the U.S. simply ends up getting screwed instead. This is a subtle form of despair which undermines even the clearest cases of moral duty. It shows that despite all our successes this century, from the reconstruction of Japan to Desert Storm, the American viewpoint is still too overshadowed by our experience in Vietnam.

Aristide may not be the ablest statesman in Haiti, but as things are, he must be returned at all costs, or the military junta will have profited immensely by their months of defiance and the time they have had to destroy every vestige of opposition at the grass roots level. Only the return of Aristide will make the Haitian people at large believe in the effectiveness of their democratic power and give them the inspiration to rebuild what Raoul Cedras and his butchers have hacked to pieces.

There will be no sea-change, however successful the invasion, unless Cedras's death squads are absolutely cleansed from Haiti: that means bringing them to justice, not compromising with them. Handing over the reigns to some neutral moderate in Haiti while Cedras retires to his resort, with the opposition in Port-au-Prince and the countryside in shatters and his armed men reaping the profits, would only confirm the totalitarian conviction no crime against humanity is so heinous that the perpetrator cannot profit despite or even with the help of U.S. opposition.

It is precisely this conviction which it is our highest national interest to destroy. The conviction that the world authorities in whatever region of the globe will do nothing that does not serve their short-term individual self-interest—whether the European Union in the case of Serbia or the United States in the case of Haiti—is precisely what gives would-be totalitarians the overconfidence to begin their assault on human dignity in yet more nations, until the repercussions harm the common long-term interests of the nations that refused to intervene. It is an iron law of psychology that when evil reaches the proportions of massive systematic violations of fundamental human rights, refusing to make the sacrifices to stop it only makes it spread, putting off the day of reckoning while more innocents suffer.

The American public reaction to the Haiti crisis is truly a low point for the conscience and moral reasoning of most of our population. Yet monsters like Raoul Cedras can bamboozle the American public because of our utterly irrational fears of Vietnam scenarios and, more deeply, our craving for any rationalization that tells us we don't have to make the slightest sacrifice for our fellow man even when his ancestors were brought into their oppression by our own slavetrading forefathers and his tyrannical victimizer carries out the slaughter in our own back yard.

The dysfunctional ND family

Dear Editor:

As a senior, I was looking forward to good seats at the football games this year. My ticket says section 29, row 37, but I did not quite make it there last weekend. Unless, that is, I bought a ticket for the aisle steps along with hundreds of other people. Normally, I would just move up a few rows and enjoy the game. That did not happen this time. We became sandwiched in the aisle, not that you could tell where it began because there were so many people packed into it. I do not think that the fire department would approve of a completely blocked aisle, with 4 or 5 people on each step.

The fact that we missed the whole first quarter was bad enough, but not as ridiculous as the ushers' responses to the frustrated students. I actually heard one say, "What do you want me to do? I can't control these kids!" God forbid he should actually do the job he was being paid for. Another one told me, "Well maybe you should get here earlier next time." Since when is arriving at 1:00 for a 1:35 kick-off not early enough?

After finally making it to a less crowded area at the top of the stadium, I found a step to share with only one other person. I never got an actual seat, but at least I could see the field. I understand that it may be difficult to "control all these kids", but perhaps if the ushers were actually checking tickets, there would not have been hundreds of extras to "control".

I realize that people like to bring friends and siblings up to the student section. I have done it myself. But is it too much to ask for an actual seat when I paid $84 to sit (or stand) there? And it must be silly of me to assume that competent and polite ushers are included with that. I never had a bad experience before this, and hopefully never will again.

Mr. President, What is a liberal ever to do?

Dear Editor:

As a liberal, I waited a long time for a Democrat in the White House and had confidence in Clinton's ability when he was elected to the White House. After approximately two years of a Democratic White House, I have been left disillusioned by Clinton's decisions and performance.

I wished to see a Democratic, preferably liberal, president command the same respect from the nation with his policies to reverse 12 years of conservative neglect and domestic blight. Instead, we get an inexperienced moderate governor from a minor state who is a master campaigner, communicating effectively as governor but a weak and fickle Commander-in-Chief.

I question his intentions when the Supreme Court actually emerges more conservative when the nominations of a Democratic president pass a vote on the Senate floor.

Is there no long-term vision, a liberal paradigm to the Republican revolution of the federal judiciary of the 1980s? What worries me, in addition to a weakened impression of the United States overseas, is the weakened impression the President is leaving with the American public. Can a Democrat effectively conduct the foreign policy of this country?

With his party dominates the Congress and most independent polls show that the ideals of the President's legislation have wide support among Americans, the President has a majority of Americans doubting his ability and the majority of his bills being met with harsh criticism in Congress.

The Republicans are showing their true colors of intolerance, an emblem of their absurd convention in Houston where liberal Republicans, ethnic minorities, homosexuals, non-Christians, and supporters of a women's right to choice were pushed outside of Lee Atwater's "big tent" by ultra-right wing fundamentalist Christians and their leaders. Yet, the President, the ineffective messenger, stands to lose the presidency, if the election were held today.

Clinton is currently on a track leading to defeat not only of himself in 1996, but a defeat for liberals everywhere who are frightened not only by the possible gains of conservative Republicans but by the inability of one Democrat to be placed on all.

■ CAPITOL COMMENTS

Accept others and live without judgement

Woodstock and Hairman made the difference

Twenty-five years ago Woodstock was a happening that just happened. Having grown up in suburban Pittsburgh, I was not as close to the New York location as my Notre Dame freshman year roommate who lived in Connecticut. So while I watched the television as the first man walked on the moon during the early summer, my roommate-to-be was making plans to attend this great outdoor rock festival.

Much has been said and written by those who attended the first Woodstock, but none of them would describe it quite as uniquely as the roommate we called "Hairman." You see, "Hairman" better known to his parents as "Jim," was a rock aficionado. He followed bands across the country. He would partake in smoking substances which were illegal to enhance his senses. Most importantly, he embodied the generation of the day by living and letting live.

I remember one early morning during my first fall at ND when he and I stayed up late while only in our underwear talking about "things." Today it would be called "stuff" but the topics would be identical. Do you say "pop" or "soda?" What social group were you considered to be a part of during high school, etc. On that particular night we talked music, and Woodstock came up.

Jim was about six feet three inches tall with long hair that curled into an Afro style that must have gone out a foot and a half on each side of his head by the end of our freshman year. He wore glasses that put Coke bottles to shame. In fact, his sight was so bad that one day, he mistook the dorm maid who had a Brooklyn accent for one of our male classmates who was from New York. He never had to worry about being drafted for service in Vietnam.

During a conversation with Jim, he would constantly stroke his hair, thus earning the name "Hairman." While we sat around that one late night in our undies, he stroked true to form. However, his friends soon learned the distraction and paid close attention to the content of his statements. That night I came away with an insight of our section that "Hairman" helped me develop socially.

Woodstock did not mean a thing to me, yet it was the height of Jim's teenage years. He smiled incessantly while he spoke of his experience at a festival containing his heart's first love. It was not so much the stories of drugs, sex, mud and music that impressed me. It was his outlook on living with others and accepting them without judgment. And while he opposed the Vietnam War, he never said a personal derogatory comment about any one individual who happened to support the war.

I find that my friend, the "Hairman" ended up working with computers, sans music content of any kind or connection. Life dictated that he not be allowed to follow his heart's desire during it's most idyllic period—the teenage years. But he taught me without ever knowing it, about accepting others by his example.

The first few weeks of school are the most socially important to a student. The upperclassmen can attest to how friendly everyone is, and then how quickly everyone falls into a rut that they follow the rest the semester, if not the entire year. I often wondered what the year might be like if everyone acted like they did those first few days of the school year.

Might I suggest that everyone take a few moments each week to sit at a different place in the dining hall, or approach someone new in each class, or just play some sport with different students every once in a while. You may be surprised at the end of the year at all the friends you've made. It is an easy thing to remember especially when you are having a bad hair day. Think of my former roommate, "Hairman," and how you may be encountering someone with such experiences that someday will make headlines like Woodstock did my freshman year as well as this summer, twenty-five years later.

Irish not fair weather fans

Packed cars whisk away students with bulk quantities of cheap food and beverage to unfamiliar territories. Someone usually has a map or lives near the destination. The plans for what to do once they arrive are usually sketchy at best. Everyone must ante up to pay for tolls, gas and refreshments before the vehicle is in motion. Someone always has the forethought to bring some selections of rallying music for the ride. Some people even have tickets before they get there. Every real Notre Dame football fan, at least once, must road trip to an away game.

Theresa Aleman
Asst. Accent Editor

I took a road trip to Purdue with my friends about a year ago. Well, it's not that far, I know. I have this friend I went to high school with whose older brother goes there. He's in a fraternity. I guess Purdue's down that same road you take to get to Jay's, isn't it?

Well someone must have known the way. It poured the entire drive there and home and all during the game as well. I don't remember seeing any service stations on the way, there must not have been any. I'm sure we stopped by a wooded area so someone could relieve herself.

We must have started out with plans to spend the night because I packed clean underwear and socks just in case. When we got there, of course, it was still raining.

The game on the whole seemed, well, . . . wet. When we all stood up to cheer for our school, not understanding what it meant to be seated for a football game, some Boilermakers shouted in no uncertain terms that we should either be seated or go home. "Go Irish" we said as we humbly took our seats, allowing the rainwater to penetrate our jeans and drench our bodies.

It wasn't long before the Irish started to dominate the field. "We are ND" we chanted as we shed our humility and peeked out from under our wet hoods, standing respectfully for the entire fight song.

I don't remember the score but I'm sure the Boilermakers cooled off. The traffic situation afterwards was deplorable. We waited around for at least a couple of hours for the muddy fields to clear out, changing our clothes in the car.

After driving around randomly for about three hours after the game, we decided to just head home. It was fun, but I didn't think I would be road tripping again for some time, too much of a good thing can kill you. But this year I knew it would be even better.

Nothing but sunshine was predicted and it was the first game of the season, besides, it was in Chicago (just up the road past U.P. Mall and to the left.)

Again, someone else did the navigating and we made it there, no problem. All we had to eat on the way were some cheese-flavored Pringles, some grape bubble gum, and a couple of warm Icehouse beers. Good thing it was a short trip.

We spent the day frolicking in the sun, joining tailgaters and meeting up with friends. As we shuffled into the game, we knew we just could not lose. "We are ND." We were younger then, untainted by disappointment and giddy with high hopes for the season.

As the Michigan fans poured onto our field the following weekend, the student section watched silently in disbelief. Someone started clapping and everyone else joined in. It was not a reluctant applause either, they played well, but they lost. We stayed as the other team celebrated on our field. We stayed for the band's post-game performance and I know at least I stood proud as part of Notre Dame. "We are still ND."

This weekend is the Michigan State game, another opportunity for a road trip. (You follow the same road you take to get to Martin's right into Michigan and you can't miss it.) I'll find someone who lives in Michigan this weekend.

Friday night Rick's will have a happy hour from 2 p.m. until 5 p.m. On Saturday they will open at noon with a tailgate party. The Notre Dame vs. Michigan State game will be showing on Rick's big screen television that is located above the stage and also on ten other televisions located in various places around the bar, according to Flynn.

There will be no cover charge at Rick's until 8 p.m. when admission will be $3. At 10:30 p.m. Trinidad Tripoli Steel Band, a popular Reggae steel band, will be playing. Rick's will also be offering a number of drink specials throughout the weekend, Flynn added.

On Friday evening, The Landshark will host a happy hour from 4 p.m. until 8 p.m. The happy hour will feature an all-you-can-eat buffet that will include meatballs, nachos, buffalo wings and subs. At 8 p.m. the band, Global Village (yes, the same band that played at Saint Mary's last weekend).

On Saturday, The Landshark opens at noon, and the Notre Dame vs. Michigan State game will be showing on a big screen television as well as on nine other televisions around the bar. Saturday night soloist, Gary Umlauf will be performing live.

"The Landshark has consistently been the most popular bar in town," manager, Dick Shafter said.

According to Shafter, The Landshark is famous for their drink called the Shark Bowl. Just grab a straw and four or five friends and enjoy, he said.

The Landshark is located directly across the street from the Michigan State Student Union and below "Spartan Spirit."

The Harrison Roadhouse is a restaurant with an outdoor patio for dining. Directly behind the restaurant is a bar called the Roadhouse Pub. The restaurant serves a variety of sandwiches, munchies, burgers and Mexican foods in addition to nice, fancy dinners. The pub has a smaller menu that includes munchies, burgers and pizzas.

The Harrison Roadhouse just got a satellite disc. The restaurant has four televisions and the pub has five as well as dart boards.

The Harrison Roadhouse is located right across the street from Spartan Stadium.

"We are a major bar right in the middle of a party area," manager Vickie Hamilton said.

El Azteco is a New Mexican restaurant that has adobe walls, wooden booths and tables and a large windowed front out of which you can see the four main corners of town, according to manager Matt Smith.

El Azteco also has a Roof Bar that patrons enjoy when weather permits. It is a relaxed and quiet, open air bar that seats approximately 100.

El Azteco's New Mexican offers a legend that students know as the Topopo Salad. This specialty has a layer of nachos on the bottom, topped with beans, cheese, guacamole and a salad of lettuce, tomatoes, chicken, scallions and jalapenos.

The Peanut Barrel is a relaxed bar with reasonable prices. The highlights of this popular student hangout are peanuts whose shells can just be thrown on the floor and a "super-cool juke box," said night bartender, Lisa Silsby.

The Peanut Barrel has an outdoor patio right on Grand River, the main strip around the Michigan State campus. They also have two big screen televisions and two others. When you sit on Saturday, you should be able to see the game.

"The Peanut Barrel is a homey place to sit down, have a beer, burger some fries," Silsby said.

It was summer, 1992, and Derrick Mayes, soon-to-be-freshman wide receiver at Notre Dame, had come to summer school to get ahead. Maybe it was for school, possibly football—depends on who is spinning the yarn.

There was Mayes, wide-eyed but never bashful, amid the veteran players, taking part in those involuntary but mandatory drills that fill summer days' void of beaches and fun.

PLAYER TO WATCH. . . REGGIE GARNETT

He's the kind of player that builds defenses.

He's also the kind of player that deconstructs offenses.

Michigan State's sophomore linebacker Reggie Garnett—the 1993 Big Ten Freshman of the Year—returns to torment opposing offenses.

Just 19 years old, Garnett stands 6-foot-2 and weighs 225 pounds.

A sleek structure of speed and strength.

Garnett had 89 tackles in his rookie season to finish second on the Spartan squad and 18th overall in the Big Ten.

He was the first freshman to start at linebacker in a dozen years under coach George Perles.

He intercepted two passes against Purdue, returning one 43 yards to set up a touchdown.

With new defensive coordinator Hank Bullough, who spent nearly 25 years tutoring NFL defenders, Garnett figures to prosper even more.

Garnett

That's a thought that frightens Notre Dame coach Lou Holtz.

"Reggie Garnett has the chance to be one of the best linebackers in the country," Holtz said. "He has unbelievable speed and great instincts for the ball."

He got to the ball and brought down the ball carrier six times in the Spartans' season-opener against Kansas, including a pair of tackles for losses.

If adjusting to the college game wasn't a problem for Garnett, adjusting to a new, more complicated defensive scheme this season has.

Bullough installed a tricky defensive attack.

A 3-4 formation has been the most prevalent, moving Garnett to the right inside linebacker position from his natural middle linebacker slot.

But the switch hasn't diminished Garnett's skills.

It has only enhanced them. That's why the Irish will be running in the other direction.

'Dr. Defense' just what MSU ordered

By JASON KELLY
Associate Sports Editor

To heal his ailing defense, Michigan State coach George Perles called a doctor.

A paramedic of the gridiron.

Hank Bullough. Dr. Defense.

After 23 years as an NFL assistant coach, Bullough returned to Michigan State—the birthplace of his career—to resuscitate the Spartans' defense.

And to complicate it.

He unveiled the revived and varied defense in last week's season opener against Kansas.

The Spartans showed a multitude of schemes and various coverages.

"And that was just one game," Irish coach Lou Holtz said. "If there was an encyclopedia of defensive football, it would be authored by Hank Bullough. Every defense known to man has shown up on (Michigan State's) film."

That could further trouble an Irish offense that has struggled to move the ball on the ground, normally the team's most reliable strength.

Tailback Lee Becton, once a Heisman Trophy candidate, rushed for just 92 yards in the first two games of the season.

And his two fumbles against Michigan led to six Wolverine points.

"Lee was really down," Holtz said. "But Lee's a competitor, he'll bounce back. Eventually, we think we'll be able to run the ball as well as we ever have and pass it better than we ever have."

That's thanks to for-real phenom Ron Powlus, who has proven to be all that a year of rumors said he would be.

In just two games, he has thrown six touchdown passes without an interception. It took Kevin McDougal 11 games to throw six scoring strikes in 1993.

Powlus is 21-28 for 369 yards and three touchdowns on first down.

"Normally, you'd be concerned about a quarterback going into his third college game against a pro-type defensive coach," Holtz said. "I would be concerned if it wasn't Ron Powlus."

That's the type of confidence the kid has inspired in his coach.

But he hasn't created quite the same confidence running the option, a Holtz favorite.

Kansas optioned Michigan State to death a week ago, and Holtz hinted that he might try to do the same—under extraordinary circumstances.

"We will run the same option Kansas ran. They had some success neutralizing (Michigan State's) stunts and blitzes," he said. "We'll do the same thing. . . if (Powlus) gets his speed down to 4.35 or whatever, like the kid at Kansas."

Okay, so maybe the option isn't an option.

But Holtz will have to vary his offense to keep a swarming and confusing Michigan State defense off balance.

Powlus will continue to throw the ball, finding Derrick Mayes and Mike Miller somewhere in the Spartans' secondary.

But the heartbeat of the Irish offense is on the ground. And the offensive line has struggled to clear a path on the sod.

Michigan State's defense won't make that any easier. Seniors Juan Hammonds and Aaron Jackson anchor the defensive line.

Spartans' outside linebacker Ike Reese had 14 tackles against Kansas, and 1993's Big Ten freshman of the year Reggie Garnett is an intimidating factor at inside linebacker.

But the Irish have the skill players to compete against any team in the nation, and the Spartans are not among the best.

Turnovers make any defensive team look good, and three plagued the Irish against Michigan.

A similar performance this week and Michigan State will induce similar results.

"Bullough is just an outstanding coach," Holtz said. "They call him 'Dr. Defense.'"

Holtz just hopes that Bullough's defense doesn't have the Irish dialing 911.

RATING THE IRISH

Quarterback 4

Ron Powlus proved his humanity against Michigan, but still displayed flashes of brilliance with the game on the line.

Running Back 3

Surprisingly sub-par against the Wolverines, Lee Becton's two fumbles were as uncharacteristic as unfortunate.

Wide Receiver 5

Derrick Mayes is the best pressure receiver in the game and Mike Miller is always a deep threat.

Offensive Line 2

Still searching for its identity. Without the dominant athletes of years past, it may be a long look.

Defensive Line 3

Showed improvement against Michigan, but a limited pass rush allowed Todd Collins time to throw. Paul Grasmanis starting to make a name for himself.

Linebackers 4

Justin Goheen and Jeremy Sample are solid if not spectacular. Jeremy Nau played the game of his career against Michigan.

Secondary 4

Bobby Taylor had a couple of mental lapses—along with the rest of the defensive backfield—last week, but they should prey on Michigan State's brand new quarterback.

Special Teams 3

Still struggling on kickoff coverage, but Mike Miller's big kickoff return and steady placekicking improve the rating slightly.

Coaching 5

Never fear. Lou Holtz has been through losses before and he knows how to tinker with the psyches of his athletes.

Notre Dame may be hurting from its loss to the Michigan, but it's Michigan State that will feel the biggest sting this weekend.

Sputtering Spartan offense needs help

By TIM SHERMAN
Assistant Sports Editor

There were two ways to look at last week's defensive performance by Notre Dame.

You could point to the fact that the Irish surrendered just 340 total yards to a powerful, well-balanced Michigan offense and thrice held the Wolverines to field goals after starting in their own end of the field.

On the other hand, the scoreboard indicated that they allowed 26 points, including a game-winning march down the stretch.

Michigan State is hoping to be able to see the latter tomorrow.

If that is to be the case, some major improvement on the Spartan side will be needed.

"We made too many mistakes on offense, but they are correctable mistakes," said Michigan St. coach George Perles. "We'll work hard this week to eliminate those things, especially in our offensive line."

If the Spartans could pick an area to work on, it would be their line.

Tailback Duane Goulbourne rushed for 109 yards last week against Kansas.

Many observers think it is tops in the Big Ten, and any knowledgeable college football fans knows that is saying something.

"It's a big, strong offensive line," said Notre Dame coach Lou Holtz. "They do a very nice job."

Anchored by center Mark Birchmeier, the front five are large and talented. Averaging a hefty 296 pounds, they will be looking to pave the way for Duane Goulbourne.

Goulbourne, a junior who led the team in rushing last season, scampered for 109 yards in the Spartans' opening 17-10 loss at Kansas.

"Goulbourne ran well every time we gave him any room at all," appraised Perles.

He'll have to if the Irish continue to stuff the run like they did against Michigan.

At least on the ground, Notre Dame has been stingy, especially against Michigan having allowed a total of just 282 yards.

"I thought we played the run really well," said Holtz. "Our defensive line played exceptionally well."

It is in the air that the Irish have been hurt, and Michigan St knows it.

However, if the opening game was any indication, they may not be able to do much about it, as they passed for a mere 71 yards.

There is no doubt they own the receivers to catch the ball.

Senior Mill Coleman caught 48 passes last season and opened with five more for 69 yards.

He is truly capable of taking the ball a long way whenever he touches it, but if Bobby Taylor has anything to say about it, that won't be often.

Opposing offenses having seemingly forgotten about Taylor's side of the field when they go to the air, but Michigan State may not have that luxury. They need Coleman to make big plays, even at the risk of throwing at Taylor.

One area of concern is the flair to the back.

"Michigan State has always had a history of throwing to the fullback in the flat," noted Holtz. "We are a little bit vulnerable to that."

Another issue which worries Notre Dame is quarterback Tony Banks' scrambling ability, most notably, the straight roll-out pass.

"The biggest thing that concerns me about us on defense is that bootleg pass that Michigan hurt us with is one of the stronger plays of Michigan St.," noted Holtz. "Banks has tremendous speed and scrambling ability. That presents some problems."

Linebackers such as Jeremy Nau, who emerged in a big way last week, will be primarily responsible for containing Banks.

The job of making him use this scrambling ability will fall on people like Paul Grasmanis and Oliver Gibson.

"Grasmanis and Gibson have been giving a tremendous effort up front," said Holtz.

If that effort generates more pressure, the Irish may be smiling when they see both the final stats, and more importantly, the scoreboard.

PLAYER TO WATCH... MILL COLEMAN

He is a dangerous wide receiver who excites the crowd whenever he touches the ball and his name is Mill.

Naturally, he is, simply, "the Thrill".

Michigan State wide-out Mill Coleman is the big play man of East Lansing. Be it a punt or kickoff return, the long fly pattern or a simple slant, when he touches the ball, as Chris Berman would say, "He...could...go...all...the...way."

In fact, he has gone all the way to the endzone seven times in his career, including one against Notre Dame last season. For his efforts against the Irish, he was named as Michigan State's player of the game.

And although it doesn't say much, he worries Irish coach Lou Holtz.

"Coleman is an excellent receiver," said Holtz. "If you look at the film of the Kansas game, he got open deep."

Coleman is quite adept at getting open. In fact, the Spartan all time reception record, held by the Atlanta Falcon's superstar Andre Rison, is well within reach.

The academic All-American needs just 40 catches to eclipse Rison.

He is far from one-dimensional though.

He entered the season among Michigan State's top ten all-time punt returners, including a 63 yard runback last week.

Looking at the way the Irish kick-coverage has been, Coleman could give the Irish a bit of their own medicine.

Holtz probably won't give him much of a chance, but with a 3.45 GPA, Coleman is smart enough to hurt you.

He is both dynamic and consistent.

His leaping ability and quickness account for the dynamic part, while the fact that he has hauled in at least one pass in 23 of his past 24 games make for a good deal of consistency.

The Spartans are hoping for a good deal of both tomorrow.

—TIM SHERMAN

27

The Spartans haven't beaten Notre Dame since 1986, so they'll be hungry. But Notre Dame will offer Michigan State only table scraps.

Quarterback 2

Junior college transfer Tony Banks threw for just 71 yards against Kansas. The big-time may be too big.

Running Back 3

Solid but not spectacular. Duane Goulbourne is dangerous running behind an experienced offensive line, but he's not enough.

Wide Receiver 4

Mill Coleman is one of the most dangerous players in the Big Ten. Game-breaking capabilities.

Offensive Line 4

Big and experienced, but simply not talented enough to compete with the Irish defensive line.

Defensive Line 4

Experienced and talented like most of the Spartan defense. Could exploit a Notre Dame offensive line still searching for itself.

Linebackers 4

Reggie Garrett, the Big Ten freshman of the year, is simply a dominating player and Yakini Allen has the experience not to be intimidated by the Irish.

Secondary 3

An experienced bunch, but they don't have the athletic ability to blanket the Irish speedsters.

Special Teams 3

Coleman is a dangerous return man and Notre Dame's kick and punt coverage has been weak. Punter and place-kickers are solid.

Coaching 3

George Perles has been in trouble for years. A win on Saturday could save his job—for another year at least. The Spartans' strength is defense, but Perles isn't even the brains behind that operation.

Mayes

Lake Dawson. Starting wideout at Notre Dame. Best receiver under the Dome. Maybe the best at everything.

Dawson was leading the receivers' drills. In fact, he designed them himself. Quarterbacks inch closer and closer, throwing the ball harder and harder. Smack. Throw it harder. Smack. Get closer. Smack.

Here's where the water begins to pour.

Mayes was in the background, watching Dawson slap leather each time. His two Neumann gloves wrapped around every ball, and from the first day, encased Mayes' conscious.

I can do that. I will do that.

So Mayes jumped out in front of the quarterbacks. He asked them to throw the same speed, from the same distance. Just as they did to Lake.

Smack.

It has been two years since Mayes first met Dawson, the latter currently a rookie with the NFL's Kansas City Chiefs. When they played together everyone saw Dawson as the man. It was like the sorcerer and his apprentice. One knows the magic, the other tries desperately to learn.

But now, two games removed from his mentor, Mayes is spelling magic of his own. He has become the best kept secret among the nation's top-flight receivers; J.J. Stokes, Bobby Engram, Joey Galloway, Michael Westbrook, and now

Derrick Mayes. Last Saturday's performance against Michigan was the final piece of evidence needed—seven catches, 106 yards, one touchdown. He is averaging over 15 yards per reception and in two games has amassed 201 yards and three scores on only 13 receptions.

But numbers don't say enough.

Mayes was diving all over the stadium grass against Michigan. He caught them on his knees, on his stomach, on his back, and on the final touchdown grab, leaping high towards the South Bend sky and somewhat sideways to make an unthinkable snare of a Ron Powlus pass.

It gave Notre Dame a brief lead and reminded Irish fans of a catch ten months before.

"It was just like last year against Boston College," Mayes said. "But instead of Lake making the catch it was me."

It was like Boston College, another heartbreak loss for Notre Dame. A late field goal beat the Irish who had briefly taken the lead on a touchdown catch. Dawson made that catch on fourth-and-four with a little over a minute remaining. It was the finest example of Lake being Lake.

"Lake was a great receiver and he taught me a lot," Mayes said. "He taught me about what it takes to be a good receiver here and how you need to work to be successful."

Saturday, Mayes will be returning to the sight of his first catch and first touchdown, and until last Saturday's miraculous grab, probably his finest.

With the Rick Mirer/Lake Dawson-led Irish crushing the Spartans early, Holtz looked to younger players. A scared Kevin McDougal was at quarterback and split wide left was a freshman receiver wearing white and gold, but feeling and looking green.

Yet, Holtz tested him. He called a deep fly pattern and McDougal heaved one high down the sidelines. The Spartan defensive back was clearly beat, so he did what any corner would do. He grabbed Mayes right arm and began pulling him down.

As yellow flags began to fly, Mayes reached out with his left hand and hauled in the pass. Penalty declined. Thirty-eight-yard touchdown. Introducing Mr. Derrick Mayes.

If that Michigan State game was Mayes' beginning, last year's Boston College game was his arrival.

Dawson made the catch everyone will remember, but it was Mayes who allowed the Irish to roar back from 22 points in the final 11 minutes. He finished the game with 147 yards on seven catches. Dawson's catch would have never been if Mayes hadn't made a 46-yard diving catch to set up the score.

"Last year he made a lot of big plays for us, but he particularly came of age against Boston College," Holtz said.

And now he is a fixture, as dependable as Jerome Bettis was on third-and-two or Joe Montana running the two-minute offense. The feel around Notre Dame Stadium last Saturday against the Wolverines was that if Powlus kept the pass in the stadium, Mayes would find a way to catch it.

"You know every time you throw it that he's got a chance to get it," Powlus said. "It's hard not to favor him."

And it's hard not to marvel at him. The first three catches of his collegiate career went for touchdowns. When the ball's in the air, Woody Hayes' famous line "Three things can happen when you pass and two are bad" sounds like petty babble.

Mayes is that way, every day.

"I mentioned to Dave Roberts our offensive coordinator that is important that we keep Derrick from diving for balls in practice on Mondays and Thursdays without any pads," Holtz said. "I mean, we were out there last Thursday and he is diving all over for balls; landing on his shoulders, his nose, his chest. He just loves the game; he's got unbelievable hands, he has tremendous hand and eye coordination and has great strength for a wide receiver."

These are qualities that were noticed long ago when Holtz recruited Mayes from North Central High School in Indianapolis. Notre Dame's coach has a long-running joke with Mayes, "Son, are you happy now—you are responsible for me never wanting to recruit in Indianapolis again."

It is a reference to Mayes' playful attitude, and testimony of Holtz's fetish for one-liners. But look at in a different light. Why go back to Indianapolis when you know you'll never find such a player again?

"Several years ago I made the comment that I thought Derrick Mayes would be as fine a receiver as we have had here at the University of Notre Dame," Holtz said. "I think he has grown and matured this year and some of things we're doing in the passing game this year have certainly helped him."

And Mayes is quick to admit that Dawson helped him, too. The pair were mirror images last season. If Dawson scored he would strip his helmet off for the cameras, Mayes would be right next to him, his helmet also removed. Brash—but every word backed up on the field by two friends.

"We keep in touch, I talked to him the other day. We try not to talk about football, but we talk a lot," Mayes said.

Mayes, in fact, may be a little more arrogant than his predecessor—like a younger brother eager to point out his achievements. A gold #1 hangs from his neck, a reference to his number and... his goal.

"I think about pro ball but right now I want to get a ring," Mayes said. "I want to be the best, to win a national championship. That is all I am concentrating on right now—being No. 1."

Smack

So there was Mayes catching every pass, doing it like Lake but at a younger age, and, some say, doing it better.

No one is sure if it's true and Mayes isn't telling. When he was a freshman, when Dawson was in the prime of being Dawson, was Mayes as good but simply beginning?

Maybe not. Mayes is good now, great now. That's fact, not fiction. But he has learned, spent time with Lake. Developed. He was never inherently better. That's just Irish legend, right?

Just puddles?

More like a Lake.

In the Shadows

After a tumultuous off-season, fleet flanker Mike Miller has quietly become one of Notre Dame's most reliable receivers

By Mike Norbut

Opportunity is Mike Miller's favorite word. He lives it, breathes it, and seizes it when it comes his way.

Take three weeks ago, for example. Opportunity came sailing towards the flanker in the form of a Ron Powlus bomb. It tried to elude him, but his outstretched arms and fingertips would not let it slip away.

A centimeter more and the pass would have fallen helplessly incomplete.

But it didn't, and Miller's 46-yard touchdown reception gave the Irish a 14-3 lead over Northwestern. Notre Dame went on to win the game 42-15, while Miller went on to catch seven passes for 142 yards.

But it was the one touchdown catch that broke the back of the Wildcats and got people talking.

"I felt that our wide receivers played very well," Irish head coach Lou Holtz said following the victory. "I think this was the best that Michael Miller has played since he's been here."

"Powlus is everything he's cracked up to be," Wildcat head coach Gary Barnett said. "His passes were terrific, especially that second touchdown pass. And that catch on that long touchdown pass was amazing, too."

"We're all wondering where he got the new set of hands," captain Justin Goheen said jokingly.

Miller, however, could only thank his lucky stars.

"It was a great pass, and I was just able to get my fingertips on it," he said. "I'm glad he (Powlus) had the faith in me to throw it and to give me the opportunity to make the catch."

There's that word again. Opportunity.

Doors have started to open more and more for the senior this season. But one very important door almost slammed in his face before his final year in an Irish uniform even began.

All was well during the 1994 spring practices until Holtz made a startling announcement following a team scrimmage.

"I do not anticipate Michael Miller or Tracy Graham being with us," Holtz said on April 11, 1994. "I don't anticipate them representing Notre Dame. They weren't at practice and I don't anticipate them being at practice."

Holtz refused to offer further comment at the time, but the public was soon well informed as to the reason for their dismissal from the squad. Both Miller and Graham were accused of theft after police found merchandise stolen from the University of Notre Dame at an off-campus apartment, thought to be the residence of the two players.

"It's really hard when you know that your integrity has been questioned," Miller said. "It really weighed heavily upon your mind. It really hurt to think I might not ever be a Notre Dame player again."

The smoke cleared, though, and the teammates returned to the playing field with the start of fall practice.

"One of the greatest thrills I've ever had is to wear a Notre Dame uniform," he continued. "For some people, the thrill is playing in the games, but for me, it's just being part of the team and having the opportunity to play."

What did he say? Was that... Opportunity?

He has made the most of his chances thus far. Graham has had to fight to secure a reserve spot in the Irish secondary. But Miller immediately stepped in to take over a starting receiver position opposite Derrick Mayes, a job for which he has waited patiently for three years.

"It's a big bonus for me to start," he said. "Last year, I was behind Lake Dawson, and I accepted my role as punt returner. This year, I've had to step up my role on the team."

The role of return man is a job that Miller has become quite proficient at playing. In his three years at Notre Dame, he has averaged 7.5 yards per punt return and 21.6 yards per kickoff return. He has scored one touchdown, a 56-yard punt return against Michigan last year.

The short term effect was that it put the Irish up 17-3 over the highly ranked Wolverines. Notre Dame went on to win the game 27-23. The long term effects were that Miller became one of the most feared returners in the nation, and he gained the confidence to carry him into this year.

You never know when he will go all the way, because he can every time. He makes every kick exciting.

"I think I can go all the way anytime I catch it," Miller said. "It's always so close every time. I'm maybe just one block or move away."

"In the past, I was kind of hesitant or something, I don't know. Now, I want it more. I use every opportunity I can and attack the kicks."

Opportunity. What an intimidating word.

Even with his return prowess, Miller's major contributions have come and will continue to come on the Notre Dame offense. Though he stands only 5'7", he clearly makes up for his stature with his devastating speed. He can blaze past any defensive back, and he provides a consistent deep threat for the Irish. He is the perfect complement to Mayes and a perfect fit in the Notre Dame offensive scheme.

But he is definitely not a secondary target for quarterbacks.

It took until the 7th game of the season last year before Miller reached the ten-reception mark. He has achieved that mark in his first two games of 1994.

In 1993, his defining game as a receiver came against Brigham Young, a game in which he surpassed the 100-yard receiving mark and scored two touchdowns. He completely rewrote the receiver dictionary with his performance against Northwestern three weeks ago.

And he caught five passes against Michigan State last year. Who knows what can happen now.

"All we want is a win," Miller said. "I'm not concerned about anything else."

But a few beautiful passes from Powlus might not be bad, right Mike?

"He's a great quarterback," he said. "He makes great passes and he gives us an opportunity to catch the football, which is all any receiver asks for. We just want a chance to catch the ball."

Opportunity. Mike Miller's defining word.

JOCK STRIP

Clear the trophy case, the Irish are bringing home the hardware

Okay, Irish fans, before you start canceling your road trips and crying in your beer (pick your own—personally, I would choose Old Style), just take a second to think about these rankings.

Who's Number 1? Who cares. It doesn't matter until after the bowl bids are out and the games are played anyway. Florida State proved that last year. We should have proven it in 1989.

But just for our reference, keep in mind that there are seven teams above us in the rankings right now. But not for long.

In this day and age, it's nearly impossible to go through a season undefeated. That is, unless you play the Sisters of the Poor every week like Nebraska.

The Cornhuskers are going to rip through the Big Eight like a chainsaw through toilet paper. Even No. 7 Colorado will not stand much of a chance against them, especially after losing this week to Michigan and later in the season to some two-bit sleeper school like Kansas.

Well looky here, we've already climbed up. Thanks Buffaloes for keeping the No. 7 spot warm for us.

One tricky spot for Notre Dame may be the fact that Michigan, who (sorry) has already beaten us, is ranked ahead of us. But they are also ahead of Penn State, a conference rival.

These two teams will prepare so well for this matchup that absolutely nothing will work and they will completely stifle each other, save a touchdown or so either way. Kiss your sister, guys, it's a tie.

A tie is a blemish enough on Penn State's record to send them below us, and a loss to Wisconsin will send them far below us. Michigan, however, will not drop below us initially, but they will after losing to Ohio State, Illinois, or even Northwestern. Don't put this by

Mike Norbut

Gary Moeller. He can't coach his way out of a paper bag. He always manages to shoot himself in the foot, the head, or some other place.

Three teams down, four places to go.

Getting to Number 2 is easy. First, we pound on BYU, Air Force, and Navy. Then, we watch Florida, Florida State, and Miami pound on each other. Florida State will defeat Miami because they can talk better trash. Plus they have a coach that will cry if they lose.

With a loss, Miami's out of the picture. Have fun in the Fiesta Bowl, Hurricanes. There's always next year, guys.

I'm having trouble predicting the Florida-Florida State game. I figure the score will probably be something like 72-58, but I'm not sure which way the ball will bounce. A flea flicker here or a triple option reverse there could mean the game.

In the big picture, though, it doesn't really matter who wins that game, because Florida State will lose to us, and Florida will lose to a Southeast Conference team like Georgia or Ole Miss. But thanks for playing anyway, gentlemen.

That leaves No. 1 Nebraska and No. 2 Notre Dame in the Orange Bowl. Of course, this is under the assumption that we will win the rest of our games.

Okay, that's easy to assume. (Because, as you know, assuming only makes a you-know-what out of the pollsters.)

I hate to tell you this, my prairie flatland friends, but by the time the Irish play the Cornhuskers in Miami, Ron Powilus will have already thrown for 87 touchdowns on the season, so what's an extra 15 or so more in the bowl game?

Congratulations to those who did, and will, stick the season out. You will win the National Championship.

So plan that road trip to Boston College. Stop that crying. And for heaven's sake, finish that beer.

Wanted for questioning: The world, the flesh and the Devil

A funny thing happened in the summer edition of the Notre Dame Magazine. In two fine articles on hell and on the nature of evil, neither author bothered to consider whether evil has a father, or hell has an anti-Christ. C.S. Lewis must have pointed out in the Screwtape Letters that the cleverest deception of the Prince of Darkness has been to convince contemporary

Father Robert Griffin Letters to a Lonely God

Devil as a bad dude, may have said it best: "It ain't necessarily so—The things that you're liable to read in the Bible—/It ain't necessarily so."

Yet when theologians speak of the structures, networks, or patterns of evil, warring with "everything that Jesus stands for or that the will of God finally intends," they seem to be discerning an intelligence at work. It seems that the world's evil is not random. The New Testament attributed it to "the Principalities and Powers."

In a world where the Tempter is more than a metaphor, you don't have to attend a witches' Sabbath to become the Devil's disciple. You only have to be Eichmann doing the paper work for a genocide as well as arranging the logistics. You need only have the mentality of a Ku Kluxer willing to go along with the Klan's decision to lynch a Negro for being uppity. You only have to be politically motivated like a congressman, mindlessly supporting abortion rights, because he thinks a woman's right to control what happens to her body, even if she's six months pregnant, is an idea whose time has come.

Adolph Eichmann is often cited as an example of the banality of evil. As a paper-pusher working at a desk, he devised the "Final Solution." As a bureaucrat, he left it to his subordinates to push the Jews, gypsies, and gays into the gas ovens to be executed. If he had been less of a lightweight, he might have been able to resist being drawn into the web of monstrous evil. As a mediocrity lacking an imagination or a conscience, he went to the gallows protesting that he was a Christian. You don't have to be a superman to do the Devil's work for him. Cowards are perfectly competent to crucify the innocent.

Is it important for me to know if the anti-Christ or his puppets are using our world as their badlands? Why wouldn't it be, since I'm a fellow who writes. Hemingway said that every writer needs a built-in, shock-proof s---- detector. Since the Catholic Church has had a lot of s---- hitting the fan lately, I'm curious to know if Ol'Scratch has been keeping the hand on his pitching arm clean. Bell, book, and candle are not my cup of tea, and I wouldn't want to tick Ol'Scratch off with an exorcism. Still, the Church has been getting bad press because the Catholics have been lining up with Muslim fundamentalists at the population conference in Cairo.

This week, the wire services from the Vatican are playing up the interview John Paul had with the children in a Roman parish. The idea must have been to show that he does not have the disposition of an ayatollah.

Q. Did your friends tease you for going to church?

A. Not too much. I was free. I could go or not go, but I wanted to go.

Q. Why did you choose to become a priest?

A. It wasn't because I chose it, but because I was chosen.

Q. Are you happy being pope?

A. You can see I am. You don't need a sad pope. The pope must be joyful and happy.

Q. How did you learn so many languages?

A. You learn with your memory and intelligence.

Q. If you had your life to live over again, what would you do?

A. I would do the same, because it wasn't my choice. It was Jesus who chose me, and perhaps He has already chosen one of you.

The baby-boomers may say this is the king of pabulum that made them want to throw up when they read "Christopher Robin is saying his prayers." A Jewish baby-boomer wrote the following sadly: I don't think it was the Devil who made him do it: "I very briefly considered a bedtime prayer. Then I said to hell with it. Let the good Christians around the world pray for my eternal soul. Let the little old man with a beanie traverse the slums of South America and tell hopeless, starving, uneducated families of twelve not to use rubbers. It cost forty million dollars for him to make the trip. Why couldn't the Catholic Church spend it on feeding all the cats left behind by all the witches of the world that it had burned?" Believe me, I've read much worse in the Catholic press. Not many Catholics support the pope on birth control. They say his credibility has been lost

'You don't have to be a superman to do the Devil's work for him. Cowards are perfectly competent to crucify the innocent.'

because he has remained adamant on this issue.

But when I read in The New Yorker of single women impregnating themselves with turkey basters, I'm glad the little old man with a beanie stays visible, urging couples to reproduce in the natural way. Does anyone listen when he warns of dangerous shortcuts for controlling population? Do the Screwtape Letters mention that the second cleverest deception of the Prince of Darkness may be to convince contemporary Christendom to treat the Pope as a fool that the Church can ignore?

Christendom that he doesn't exist; in this way, as a secret agent, he can work unrecognized for the ruin of souls.

Does Satan roam our world as the fiend and tempter? Do the fallen angels romp through our lives as roaring lions, seeking whom they may devour? I have no idea; on that subject, I am an agnostic. Beelzebub, for all I know, is a creature of fiction. The character Sportin' Life in Porgy and Bess, alluding to the Scriptural images of the

COLLEGE FOOTBALL

Ohio Stadium sentimental for Buckeyes

By CHRISTOPHER SULLIVAN
Associated Press

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Eighty-nine thousand seats in the great stadium echoed a haunting sound: a trumpeter practicing, all alone, 20 rows above the football field on a cool fall evening. His fragments of melody drew in curious students heading home from class. They listened, applauded, then walked out.

A few days later, as people passed the same spot en route to study or teach, a clinking-metal sound, mixed with military commands, broke the quiet. High up the sheer walls, camouflaged ROTC cadets descended on ropes anchored to stadium seats.

Throughout any day, in classrooms on one side of the stadium, quiet discussions of literature or experiments in psychology go on.

Every night, about 370 specially chosen students sleep in the building's dormitory, set up during the Depression for those who had the grades but not the money to be on campus.

Oh, and one more thing — on Saturday afternoons here, Ohio State plays football.

The point is simple: Besides the cheering, stomping hulla-balloo of a few autumn Saturdays, a great college stadium, like the 72-year-old Ohio Stadium, can have another life that the students see best, one that makes this concrete cavern a sentimental spot for them.

"You're up there looking over the whole campus," said Seth Jones, a sophomore and one of the students who live and work in the cooperative, coed Scholarship Dorm inside the stadium.

He was recalling an annual spring dance they hold up in the pressbox. "We work together all year, and so we go up and have a good time. You're sitting up there, looking down. ... It's pretty neat."

The dorm was set up in the 1930s when an administrator discovered that 80 Ohio high school valedictorians could not afford tuition, room and board and so had no plans to attend college. Students are still selected on the basis of grades and finances. Today they have a library, a music room and their own dining hall, where many work to repay their scholarships.

Even though football games are literally next door, residents have to buy tickets like everyone else. And the decibel level during games? Not bad usually, Jones said. "Now sometimes, when they're playing Michigan ..."

Arch-rival Michigan played Ohio State in the horseshoe-shaped stadium's dedication game back in 1922. The structure cost $1.3 million to build, most of that paid by donations.

The tallest stadium wall rises 98 feet, but Army ROTC cadets climb and descend only part of that height, often starting as the sun is just rising.

"Psychologically, 50 feet's enough," said Lt. Col. Tom Ward, a professor of military science, describing what looks like an assault scene in an Arnold Schwarzenegger movie. "It has a good vertical surface."

Rappelling, a sheer drop using pulley-like ropes secured to the stadium's seats, lets cadets confront a natural fear, he said. "We use it as a confidence-building exercise."

Another confidence builder goes on in the stadium parking lot, as small groups of hopeful musicians, horns tipped skyward or tucked under their arms, practice the "snap-and-go" moves they hope will win them a spot on the 224-member marching band.

Band director Jon Woods is moved by that scene. "Inspiration," he calls it. "You see four or five kids marching through the cars ..., as director you say, 'I've got to find a place for them.'"

One reason why Mindy Wright, who coordinates the English Department's Writing Workshop for first-year students, likes being in the stadium is that she hears the solitary horn player sometimes. "It's kind of magic. It really echoes underneath the stadium."

Another reason: it's easy to direct new students to her office — "Right next to Gate 16."

On game days psychology professor Neal Johnson can almost always be found in the Behavioral Sciences Lab in the stadium, doing experiments in perception and cognition. He turns his television to the game but leaves the sound off until the roar of the real-life crowd signals he should turn it up.

Anything else different on game day? "The parking's lousy," he joked.

BYU's Edwards seeks 200th

By BOB MIMS
Associated Press

PROVO — LaVell Edwards labored 22 seasons to reach the threshold of his 200th victory. Now he is one win away from joining an elite club that has only 13 other college football coaches.

But it is not the prospect of rubbing statistical elbows with the likes of Bear Bryant, Pop Warner and Joe Paterno that has the Brigham Young coach excited about Saturday's game with Colorado State in Cougar Stadium.

"The big thing is, I never really thought about it before," Edwards mused. "It's something that will happen sometime. If it happens this weekend, that will make us 3-0 in the conference, and that's the big thing right now."

What Edwards (199-73-3) does not want is to wait for his 64th birthday — Oct. 11 — to celebrate his 200th triumph.

"It would be nice to win one here soon to get it out of the way so we can focus on everything else," he said.

For Edwards, that would be winning his 17th WAC crown overall and sixth consecutive piece of the championship. But CSU coach Sonny Lubick, also undefeated approaching Saturday's noon kickoff, has his own title aspirations.

He also would like to even his personal ledger in Provo. The last time Lubick coached on Cougar ground was in 1990, when as defensive coordinator for then No. 1-ranked Miami, he witnessed a 28-21 BYU upset.

"LaVell is a heck of a coach. But he'll have hundreds of opportunities to get that 200th win. I don't think he'd mind that much delaying it another week. I know I wouldn't," Lubick quipped.

What is not a joke is CSU's unusual status as a WAC contender. After beating Air Force 34-21 and Utah State 41-16, the Rams' secondary — led by Ray Jackson, with two interceptions in as many games — is ranked fourth nationally in pass defense.

The Rams also have unveiled an effective pass rush, recording eight sacks against USU — three of them by defensive end Brady Smith.

On Saturday, Jackson and Smith will test BYU quarterback John Walsh, who struggled in a 13-12 opening victory at Hawaii only to uncork for 315 yards and three touchdowns in last week's 45-21 victory at Air Force.

"Our defensive backs will be a huge factor in the game. They are playing well ... with maturity and poise," Lubick said. "They can make plays that keep us in the game."

But if CSU poses the most serious threat so far to BYU's vaunted passing attack, the Cougars finally appear to have fielded a respectable defense of their own.

Ranked 104th out of 106 Division I-A schools as it yielded 476 yards per game in 1993, BYU's defense has slashed that to 327 yards — including just 122 yards rushing.

Rams quarterback Anthony Hill is not afraid to pass, having thrown for 384 yards and three TDs, but CSU relies on a running attack that has averaged 248 yards per game.

E.J. Watson, who ran for 177 yards in the Rams' opener, missed last week's game against USU with a foot infection and was doubtful for Saturday. However, CSU can turn to Leonice Brown, who is averaging 100 yards per outing.

"We have some depth (at running back). However, E.J. is a little special. He has that knack and ability to get an extra yard, and that could be very important in a game like this," Lubick said.

Little chance for new Major League

By JIMMY GOLEN
Associated Press

BUFFALO

Buffalo wants baseball, but not that way. Pittsburgh needs money, but not if it means sinking the Pirates. In St. Petersburg, Fla., and Phoenix, they'd rather wait for the real thing.

Anyone trying to organize a rival baseball league in the wake of this season's major league meltdown won't find stadium doors swinging open to welcome them. Whatever problems the big leagues have, they still have friends and would-be friends in many, many places.

"At this point in time, our interest is pretty low," Rick Dodge, the city administrator in St. Petersburg, where they are trying to find a tenant for the Thunder Dome, said Thursday. "Our interest right now continues to be pursuit of major league baseball as we currently know it."

Since the baseball strike began, there have been water-cooler discussions about whether the players would form their own league. After the owners canceled the rest of the season Wednesday, those discussions became more serious.

Player agent Dick Moss is trying to set up an eight- to 12-team league for next season. He did not return calls seeking comment, but potential sites mentioned include Buffalo, St. Petersburg and cities where the stadium isn't owned by the team.

"Every time somebody wants to start a new league, they call Buffalo," said Robert Rich Jr., who owns the Triple-A Bisons and their home, Pilot Field. "It's natural. We're not in it, and we have a beautiful stadium."

"But would we be burning our bridges and potentially eliminating ourselves from consideration for a major league baseball team? That would be a consideration for me," he said. "I'd have to think about it."

Phoenix is a front-runner for baseball's next expansion, and they've already approved plans to build a stadium — but only for a big league club. What if a new league promised them a team right away?

"I think the board that manages the stadium district would be reluctant to say, 'We're going to kick in this tax that's going to raise a quarter of a billion dollars for a new team in a start-up league,'" said Eric Anderson, executive director of the Maricopa County Stadium District.

Mike Collins, who runs Three Rivers Stadium for the city of Pittsburgh, wasn't sure whether the Pirates' lease prevented him from renting the stadium out to another baseball team.

It doesn't matter; he isn't interested.

The city is doing all it can to keep the Pirates, who are for sale. And competition would probably only hasten their departure.

"You don't want to preclude anything. But I think it would be highly unlikely that we would pursue anything like that in the near future," he said.

"I would think that just about the last thing we should do when we're trying to save the Pirates for the city of Pittsburgh is to have someone buy the team and then tell them we leased the stadium out from under them."

What if the strike lasts well into next season?

"I don't know. I still say it would be unlikely," Collins said. "But if they came to us and said, 'Boys, it doesn't look like we'll have baseball as we know it, see what you can do for yourselves.' Then, maybe."

Rich tried for years to get a major-league team, but he didn't apply this time because of the labor strife. If markets like Pittsburgh and San Diego are struggling, he said, what chance does Buffalo have?

Rich said he will listen — even doing background checks on potential associates "to see if they're for real." But he wouldn't get involved unless a new league has the kind of stability the old one lacks.

"If they are for real, I think we would be ill-advised not to talk to them," he said.

So far, he hasn't heard anything he liked.

'Air McNair' a I-AA wonder

By STEPHEN HAWKINS
Associated Press

LORMAN, Miss.

With the numbers Steve McNair is putting up, the number I-AA may not matter when it's time to vote for this year's Heisman Trophy winner.

No Division I-AA player has ever won college football's most coveted individual prize, but if "Air" McNair keeps producing record-breaking numbers, the Alcorn State quarterback will be hard to ignore.

Through two games this season, McNair has 1,025 yards and 13 touchdowns. The 6-foot-3, 218-pound senior also has 255 yards and a rushing TD.

"He is a once-in-a-lifetime athlete," said Dave Te Thomas of The NFL Draft Report, an independent scouting agency. "No one in the NFL can hold a candle to this kid."

McNair is fifth in NCAA history (all divisions) with 12,304 yards of total offense, 373 yards a game. He has completed 678-of-1,239 passes (55 percent) for 10,658 yards and 88 touchdowns, and rushed for 1,646 yards and another 25 TDs.

Not since two-way player Gordie Lockbaum of Holy Cross has a I-AA player gotten so much attention in the Heisman race. Despite a campaign for him by Sports Illustrated, Lockbaum still finished third in the 1987 balloting to Tim Brown of Notre Dame and Dan McPherson of Syracuse.

Will big numbers be enough for McNair?

The knock: McNair isn't playing against the likes of Florida, Notre Dame, Nebraska and the other Division I powers, and he gets little exposure in the Southwestern Athletic Conference, an eight-team conference of historically black colleges in the South.

"I don't think (I-AA players) get enough recognition or publicity, not enough voters see them play," said ESPN commentator Lee Corso, who has seen McNair only on tape. "If he was anywhere else, he would have a great shot at the Heisman."

"He has got the attention of the country. The problem is people who vote for the Heisman always bring up, 'look at who he is doing it against.'"

Only one SWAC player, Doug Williams of Grambling State, has finished among the top four in the Heisman voting. That was in 1977 before he became a Super Bowl MVP with the Washington Redskins.

While preseason Heisman favorite Tyrone Wheatley of Michigan was sidelined with a shoulder injury the first two weeks of this season, McNair was compiling astronomical numbers. And no other Heisman hopeful took as bold a step forward.

In the season-opener, McNair passed for 534 yards and five touchdowns and rushed for 99 yards in a 62-56 loss at Grambling. If not for a dropped pass in the end zone with 10 seconds left, McNair would have been 4-0 against the Eddie Robinson, college football's all-time winningest coach with 389 victories.

Last Saturday, McNair set I-AA records with 647 yards total offense (491 passing and 156 rushing) and eight TD passes in a 54-28 victory at Tennessee-Chattanooga.

"What he has done (in two games) is a season for the average quarterback," said Alcorn coach Cardell Jones. "Steve is not an average quarterback by any shape, form or fashion."

Jones, who admits still being amazed by his quarterback, was the only college coach who didn't want McNair to play defensive back out of Mount Olive High. That is why McNair is at Alcorn, rather than a I-A school.

"Steve has the total package. You find some quarterbacks have a great arm, but not the great foot speed," Jones said. "He's equally dangerous either way."

McNair not only has an accurate passing arm, he can avoid the rush like few before him. He has made a habit of scrambling out of big losses and turning them into gains. He has a 5.8-yard per carry career average.

Florida State players given reprieve

By BRENT KALLESTAD
Associated Press

TALLAHASSEE

The NCAA restored the eligibility Thursday of five suspended Florida State football players, freeing All-American linebacker Derrick Brooks and reserve offensive lineman Marcus Long to play Saturday.

However, the NCAA extended the two-game suspension of senior tailback Tiger McMillon to three games. Patrick McNeil had been suspended for three games and Forrest Conoly for four games.

All were disciplined for taking gifts from a prospective agent last November.

Florida State appealed the decision on McMillon and said a ruling was expected during a conference call Friday.

"I believe our players have proved they have learned their lesson and have stepped up to these suspensions with real character," said Florida State President Talbot "Sandy" D'Alemberte. "I'm proud of them, and I am especially proud of Tiger McMillon. He came forward early on, and we gave him great credit for that."

"We generally agreed with Florida State on the appropriate sanctions for these young men," said Carrie Doyle, NCAA director of eligibility. "The facts indicate that McMillon's actions more clearly violated NCAA amateurism rules than (Brooks and Long) who received two-game suspensions."

McNeil, a three-year starter at guard, will also miss a fourth game tacked on by coach Bobby Bowden for an unspecified violation of team rules.

"Getting this all behind us is a relief, no doubt about it," said Bowden.

D'Alemberte originally suspended the players while the school and NCAA went to court over Florida's due process law, which stalled a final answer on the players' eligibility.

The NCAA was freed to intervene after federal judge William Stafford signed off on an agreement Tuesday between the NCAA and attorneys for Florida State and the Florida Board of Regents.

Brooks, one of the nation's most dominant defenders, and Long are expected to play Saturday when the third-ranked Seminoles visit Wake Forest.

"It feels good to have it behind us," said Brooks. "Now we know we don't have to play this season with a cloud over us."

And Brooks said he hopes to help the Seminole defense regain the dominance it enjoyed last season.

"There's just no way our defense should be ranked where it is now," he said. "We need to get it together and get that attitude back."

McMillon, who led the Seminoles in rushing two years ago, will appeal his increased penalty and would be able to rejoin the team Saturday if successful.

While Bowden was disappointed about the extra game suspension, McMillon was angry. "I've got nothing to say about it," he said.

Except for McMillon's case, the penalties mirrored those handed down by D'Alemberte. The school declared the players ineligible again Tuesday after the court's temporary injunction let the NCAA rule without violating state law.

Although Bowden had said he felt his players had already been punished enough, school officials were reluctant to risk forfeit or further penalties by playing the athletes without NCAA approval.

CROSS COUNTRY

Irish runners face Hoyas

By RANDY WASINGER
Sports Writer

"This is the best team we've ever had."

Those were strong words from head women's cross country coach Tim Connelly, and one might wonder how he could make such a bold statement this early in the season. After all, the Notre Dame women's squad did finish 2nd in District 4 and 15th in the nation last season, and it would seem hard for this year's team to better such a stellar performance.

For the most part, however, that same team has returned.

"We've got nine of our top ten runners coming back this year, including our All-American (senior) Sarah Riley," said Connelly. "We were ranked in the polls all last season. The first poll for this season came out at the beginning of the week and we were 14th."

The women's squad will get their first chance to live up to their lofty ranking tomorrow morning, as they race Georgetown at the Notre Dame golf course. Georgetown won the dual meet last year, and eventually placed third in the country. However, Connelly is still optimistic about his team's chances.

"They beat us last time, but every year we've been getting a little more competitive," he said.

Leading the Irish in tomorrow's bid will be co-captain Sarah Riley. She finished 33rd at the NCAA championships last season with a personal best time for 5,000 meters of 17:25. Riley also finished 3rd in the last season's Georgetown dual meet.

Like her coach, Riley is also optimistic about the team's chances this season.

"We've got about 12-15 people who are really running well right now. We have lots of depth."

Some of the other top runners on this year's squad include seniors Kristy Kramer, Emily Husted, Mirene Kelly, and Becky Alfieri, junior Amy Siegel, and sophomore Emily Hood. As a freshman, Hood missed All-American status by just one place.

"She's one of the best young runners in the country," said Connelly.

The Irish have been training hard in preparation for tomorrow's meet and the upcoming season.

"The team has been running fifty to sixty miles per week," said Riley. "Our workouts have included lifting weights and morning runs." "We're ready."

■ SAINT MARY'S SOCCER

Belles falter against Calvin

By BECKY MAYERNIK
Sports Writer

Facing a tough Calvin College team, the Saint Mary's soccer team suffered their first defeat of the season yesterday. Hoping to improve their record for the home crowd, they were outscored by Calvin 3-0 making their record now 2-1.

Suffering an injury near the end of the first half was goalkeeper Anne Kuehne, who had to leave the game at halftime. Although she made an early exit, Kuehne is expected to return Saturday. Freshmen Eileen Newell and Debbie Diemer took over the goal for the remainder of the game, playing very strong at this new position.

"We're fortunate that we have such a versatile team and that we were able to pull two great keepers from the bench," said junior Cathlynn Howe. "If we have a loss in a certain position, we know there is always someone who can step right in."

"Our defense picked up further into the game, but it was tough to get the offense going," stated junior Gwynne Davis.

According to freshman Sarah Dakel, the Belles worked extremely well as a team and was strong with their passing, but it wasn't enough against Calvin.

"Calvin had a really good passing game and was very quick, so they were difficult to defend against," stated Davis.

Saint Mary's will try to get their intensity back this weekend when they face Wisconsin-Whitewater Saturday and Illinois Wesleyan on Sunday, both at home.

This has been a tiring week for the Belles, so they are looking forward to finishing on a strong note.

"We're not going to take any teams lightly, and we'll play every game like they are our most difficult opponent," said Howe.

players up when they're down."

This leadership is key if the Irish are going to regain their winning ways.

"If everyone is as focused as he is," Berticelli said. "The job will get done."

Yet, though being captain is an honor, Dean doesn't feel it's necessary.

"It's an honor, but I don't think the captain title means much," Dean explains. "I have always tried to be a leader since freshman year. Today, we have twelve seniors. That means we have twelve captains."

There is, yet, another side to Chris Dean the soccer player. Chris Dean the student.

Many people do not associate academics and athletics, but Dean is an exception.

"Chris is the epitome of what the student athlete should be," said History Professor Jay Dolan. "He has a strong work ethic in class and on the field. He challenges both his teammates and his teachers."

"He is an excellent student," Oates added. "He's involved in outside activities and just likes to help others out."

Even though he doesn't like to talk about it, it is important to acknowledge that he has been recommended to be nominated for the Rhodes Scholarship.

When he looks back on his decision to attend Notre Dame, he is pleased.

"I consider myself a lucky person," Dean said. "I've been fortunate to play on a great team. It's been a long road, but now it looks like we have a winner."

Protester ends month-long stunt

Associated Press

BALTIMORE

The one thing Eric Cotton won't miss about his 35-day rooftop protest of the baseball strike is the 6 a.m. wake-up call from the chipper morning drive-time radio host.

"They want you to be enthusiastic all the time," he said while drinking a draft beer shortly after descending Thursday from the roof of Pickles Pub, which he has called home since the strike began.

The vigil did little to convince the owners and players to make up, but did make him a celebrity.

"Sleep was nil," he said. "I went to bed after last call at 2 a.m. when the bar quieted down. And then the calls would come in the morning. Every day, it didn't stop. I finally started taking the phone off the hook so I could sleep past six."

A friend stationed in Japan with the Marines even heard of the stunt, he said.

Cotton went up on the roof at the coaxing of his boss, who thought of the publicity stunt, but said his real motivation was to bring attention to those not directly involved in baseball who were hurt by the strike.

Cotton worked two days a week at the bar directly across the street from Oriole Park at Camden Yards, making up to $300 on game nights. He was not paid during the vigil but was given free food and beer.

Although he is glad to return to normal life, he would have preferred a different ending to the season.

No Series: Who cares?

By PAUL MULVEY

Associated Press

LONDON

The world doesn't really care about the World Series.

The French ignored it, the Italians gave it a fleeting mention, the English couldn't be bothered and even baseball-mad Japan only referred to the cancellation of this year's World Series in passing.

News of the baseball players' strike and Wednesday's announcement to call off the rest of the season has monopolized conversation in America, but not anywhere else.

The French sports daily L'Equipe did not mention the cancellation at all. Its Italian counterpart, La Gazzetta dello Sport, gave it one paragraph, as did the Times of London newspaper. Only some of Japan's dailies carried brief wire stories.

But in Zurich, Switzerland, headquarters of soccer's ruling body, FIFA, the possibility of a players' strike disrupting any match, let alone the sport's showpiece, was quickly dismissed.

"This sort of thing would be unthinkable in soccer," FIFA spokesman Guido Tognoni said. "It just couldn't happen here. Maybe this shows the difference between a global sport and a one-country sport."

"In soccer there would be so much pressure on players they would always find a way to play. Only something like a major war could stop soccer, not discussions about money," he said. "I guess it proves that business alone doesn't make a sport. It is always unfortunate if you cancel something that is good for the leisure of people."

English soccer came close to a strike in 1992 over the formation of the current Premier League.

The players' union, the Professional Footballers'

Association, received 90 percent support from its members to take strike action over changes to pension rights, disciplinary tribunals and contracts which clubs tried to make when they formed the Premier League.

But a strike was averted when the matter was resolved well before the start of the 1992-93 season.

"It's the ultimate sanction, it wouldn't be done without a lot of soul searching and thought," PFA deputy chief Brendan Batson said. "No one wants to see a strike, it damages the sport. But I can understand the baseball players not being too excited about the prospect of a salary cap."

Events with more than a century of tradition like the Wimbledon tennis championships and the British Open golf championship have so far survived the vast sums of money being demanded by players.

Baldwin, Duke run past Army

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.

Associated Press

DURHAM, N.C.

Rob Baldwin added to his impressive start to the season on Thursday night, scoring three touchdowns in helping Duke pound out a 43-7 victory over Army.

Baldwin's scoring runs of 7, 3 and 2 yards give him seven touchdowns after three games, the best performance by a Blue Devils running back since Randy Cuthbert, Duke's last potent running back, rushed for 10 touchdowns in the entire 1989 season.

Baldwin would have had a fourth score on the second play of the fourth quarter, but he fumbled at the end of an 8-yard gain. Freshman wide receiver Corey Thomas recovered the ball in the end zone for a touchdown and a 29-7 lead with 14:45 left.

In addition to 83 yards on 19 carries, Baldwin caught six passes for 60 yards.

Duke (3-0), which opened the night with a safety off a blocked punt, is off to its best start since 1988, when it won its first five games.

Army (1-1) began the night with second-string quarterback Mike Makovec, who took over when Rick Roper tore the anterior cruciate ligament in his left knee in the sixth play of an opening-game victory over Holy Cross.

Makovec was the starter two years ago before injuring his left knee against North Carolina and being replaced by Roper.

■ MEN'S TENNIS

Irish host Fallon Invitational

By PHIL LANGER
Sports Writer

It's fall. It's humid. It's time for the eighth annual Tom Fallon Invitational to visit the Courtney Tennis Center.

Top talent from eleven schools including Notre Dame, Pennsylvania, Michigan, Michigan State University, Kentucky, DePaul, Purdue, Nebraska, Marquette, Northern Illinois, Wisconsin and Northwestern will battle it out at the Courtney Tennis Center this weekend for much more than bragging rights.

"We are really excited about the strength and diversity of this year's field," remarked Irish head coach Bob Bayliss. "This has become one of the outstanding fall events in the country."

Yet, most importantly, the weekend's tournament gives Coach Bayliss to showcase this year's championship team. This year's edition of the Irish features the return of six monogram winners from last year's team, newcomer Steve Flanigan, a senior transfer from West Virginia, and impact freshman Jakub Pietrowski.

"We'll certainly miss Zurcher and Wilson, as well as doubles standout Allan Lopez," commented Bayliss, "All began their careers as walk-on players and developed into great college players. But the addition of Flanigan, Pietrowski and others to go with a very strong returning squad makes me feel that we will be significantly better in '95. The four returning starters were either freshmen or sophomores, and all had great summer results, so I can't wait to get started."

It was much more than difficult for the Irish coach to place this year's squad into the tournament's four flights with only a few practices for evaluation. But, never one to disappoint, a few notables from Bayliss's list include sophomore Ryan Simme, junior Mike Sprouse and Flannigan into the top 'A' flight; freshman Jakub Pietrowski, sophomore Ron Mencias, juniors John Jay O'Brien and Jason Pun in the ever competitive 'B' flight; and senior Horst Dziura in the 'C' flight.

Those chosen representatives of the Notre Dame men's tennis team, ranked No. 18 at the close of last year, will face several national standouts beginning at 8:45 a.m. Friday morning.

The Observer/T.J. Harris
Jason Pun and the Irish open their 1994-95 season this weekend.

Irish stampede past Buffaloes in four games

Special to The Observer

The 13th-ranked Notre Dame volleyball team improved to 11-0 and picked up its first win over a top-15 opponent as the Irish defeated Colorado 15-4, 3-15, 15-13, 15-12.

"It was important for us to play well against a top-15 program," head coach Debbie Brown said.

"It was good to see us rebound, especially after playing so poorly in the second game. We expected Colorado to mount a strong comeback, but we kept them in the match with our errors. The last two games were great, and I was glad to see us come from behind in game three," she added.

Angie Harris had a match-high 25 kills while Christy Peters added 24 for the Irish. Karrie Downey had 22 to lead the Buffaloes. Jenny Birkner had a match-high 16 digs to lead the Irish defense and added 10 kills.

"Christy and Angie both did a great job," Brown said. "But everyone had to perform to get this win. At the end of the match, Colorado wasn't sure who to block, and that was the difference in the match for us."

The key to the match was the third game where with the match tied at one game each, both teams had four-point leads but couldn't put the match away.

WOMEN'S SOCCER

Spartans no sweat for Irish

By RIAN AKEY
Associate Sports Editor

Going into last night's match at Michigan State, Irish women's soccer coach Chris Petrucelli felt confident that the superior physical condition of his squad would help them outlast a physical Spartan team.

As it turned out, the Irish starters spent much of the game resting on the bench. After scoring two goals in the game's opening ten minutes, the Irish coasted to a 4-0 win over the Spartans, raising their season mark to 5-0.

"It was nice to put a team away early," said Petrucelli. "It allowed us to rest some players."

Junior forward Rosella Guerrero scored the first of her two goals just five minutes into the game, and senior co-captain Tiffany Thompson followed just four minutes later with a point-bland goal. Michelle McCarthy added another score in the first half after converting a give-and-go from Cindy Daws.

While Petrucelli was pleased with the early goals, he was even more satisfied with the play of freshman midfielder Julie Maund.

"Rosella scored two great goals," said Petrucelli, "but Julie Maund had to be the player of the game. She controlled the midfield and came forward very well. This was her best game of the year."

The win was also appeased Petrucelli's fear of a letdown by his squad after two tough weekend road wins.

"We were very focused coming in to not have a letdown after our win at William & Mary. All the ingredients were there for a letdown. The travel, the weather, the field conditions, but the girls didn't let those things bother them."

Dean is a dream

Senior can't keep Irish from dropping MCC opener at Northern Illinois

By THOMAS SCHLIDT
Sports Writer

A Gatorade player of the year in Texas and the Southwest region.

A participant in the 1991 U.S. Olympic Festival.

A member of the U.S. Under-18 national team which traveled to Italy, France and Canada.

A starter every game of his career at Notre Dame.

An honor student with a 3.9 cumulative grade point average.

This man is senior captain Chris Dean.

Four years ago, he arrived with the first recruits of coach Mike Berticelli. Today, he is one of the most successful members of the Notre Dame family. But, most importantly to the soccer program, he is a great player.

Even after a 2-0 loss last night to conference foe Northern Illinois (3-1), the season is not lost. When the Irish (2-2) play Xavier at home Sunday at 1 p.m., the Irish will rebound, and Dean will be a main reason.

"Chris has started every game at the same position [right defensive end] for 4 years," said Berticelli. "He has experience that most players don't get, and we know what to expect from him."

"He provides tremendous stability at the defensive end, and just shuts down the right side of the field."

"He has been one of the most solid defenders for four years," said senior Tim Oates.

Yet, it is not just his athletic ability that makes him such an asset, he is one of the main leaders of this team. This leadership ability has not gone unrecognized by his teammates as they elected him co-captain this season.

"Chris was elected captain because he is a leader on and off the field," said Berticelli. "He leads by example. He's enthusiastic, vocal and demanding. He's demanding of himself and others. He has tremendous intensity."

"He is a great motivator," Oates adds. "He helps pick the
