Thornburgh may lift evacuation advisory

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP) - Gov. Dick Thornburgh's advisory that pre-school children and pregnant women stay outside a five-mile radius of the damaged Three Mile Island nuclear reactor may be lifted today, the governor's spokesman said.

Thornburgh decided yesterday to continue the advisory for at least another day after meeting for about an hour and a half with Joseph Hendrie, chairman of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, and NRC operations chief Harold Denton.

"He's hopeful he'll be able to announce it sometime today," said Thornburgh's press secretary, Paul Critchlow.

Thornburgh issued his directive on March 30 after several leaks of radiation from the nuclear power plant.

Critchlow said the decision to lift the advisory "will be based on the fact that they (NRC officials) believe they can continue the cleanup without further significant escapes of radioactivity."

Earlier yesterday, sign-carrying demonstrators conducted "last rites for Three Mile Island" on the capitol steps here, saying it is time to bury the damaged plant.

Eleven miles away, engineers continued the tedious task of bringing the damaged reactor to a cold shutdown, a job that authorities say could take at least five more days.

"The eyes of the world are on Harrisburg. We have come here to conduct the last rites for Three Mile Island," said William Vastine, coordinator of Three Mile Alert.

The anti-nuclear group fought Metropolitan Edison's building of the atomic plant eight years ago and at one time its membership had fallen to 15. But the protesters stood 1,000 strong yesterday.

"We will not pay for Met Ed's fission folly," said Vastine as men, women and children - their ranks swelled by some who traveled from as far away as Germany - cheered lustily.

The company is paying $1.1 million per day to buy electricity needed to replace power lost in the accident, but the bill has not yet been passed on to consumers. Utility officials say a 35 percent rate increase also may be needed to pay for the cleanup.

The crowd braved chilly temperatures to listen to protest songs and 15 speakers express outrage and fear in the aftermath of the worst accident in the nation's 22-year-old commercial nuclear program.

Handmade signs read "Drop Dead, Met Ed," "No Nukes Is Good Nukes," "The Monster Is Crippled . . . Shoot It" and "TMI, Rotten To The Core." One young man wore a gas mask and carried a banner saying "In Case Of Accident, Kiss Your Children Goodbye."

At the plant, chemicals were added to waste water contaminated with radioactive iodine, the last source of low-level radiation coming from an auxiliary building.

"It sort of traps the iodine in the water," said Jim Hanchett, spokesman for the Nuclear Regulatory Commission.

The iodine can then be filtered and disposed of through normal operating procedures, Hanchett said.

He reported a slight increase

David Frost entertains local crowd

by Mike Shields
News Editor

Interviewer, lecturer, author and producer David Frost entertained a receptive crowd of 200 at IUSB's Northside Hall Auditorium last night with anecdotes about the luminaries he has known, snappy one-line jokes, constant name-dropping, and sharp criticisms of subjects ranging from television to politics.

Frost related recollections of his most memorable interviews, including those with Ian Smith, Robert Kennedy, Moshe Dayan, Noel Coward, Muhammad Ali and Richard Nixon.

Calling politics the art of "the bland leading the bland," Frost launched into a vigorous attack on the lack of candor in the language of politicians. He lambasted Ian Smith for being "incredibly elusive in factual areas, able to make up facts on the spur of the moment."

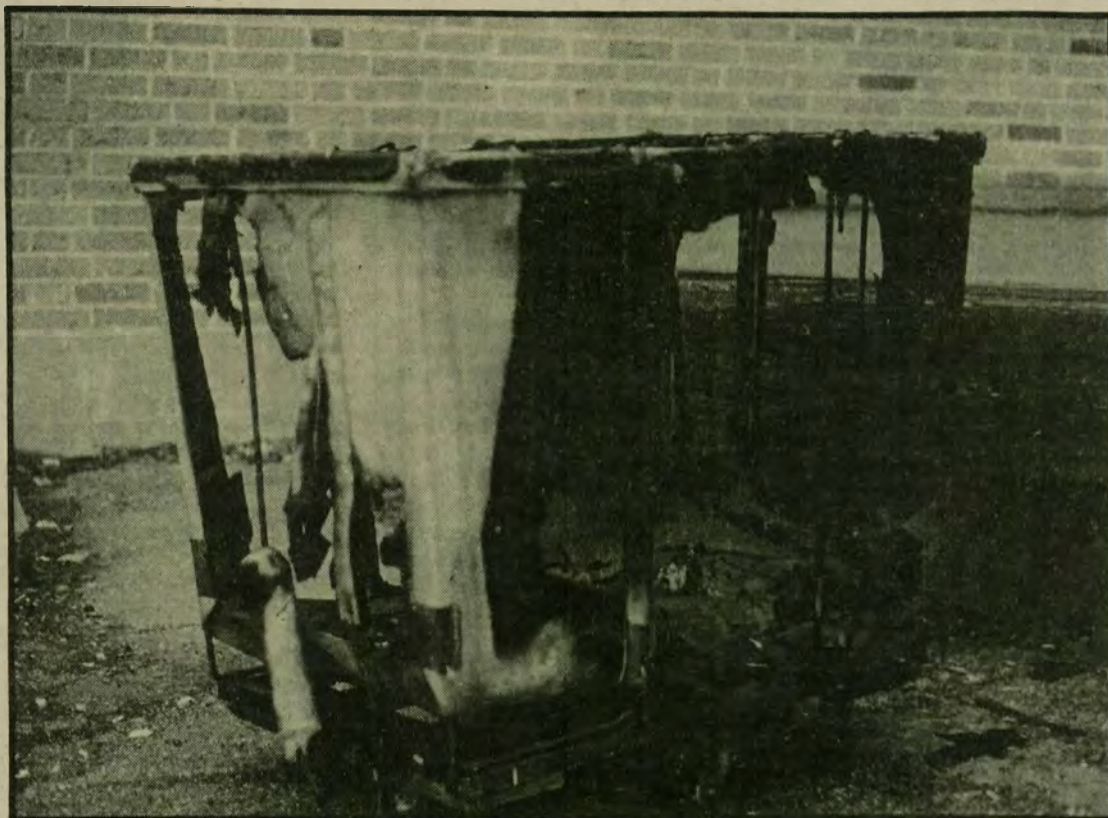

Frost commented that he has had major difficulties in past interviews to get politicians to say anything worthwhile. Most politicians, he said, will only go on record to "oppose road accidents and litter."

Frost, a two-time winner of Emmy Awards for hosting "The David Frost Show," also criticized the inanity of some television programs and commercials, and defined television as "the instrument by which you are entertained in your living room by people you wouldn't have in your house."

Frost related some of his "all too rare inspiring interviews" with such notables as Robert Kennedy and Moshe Dayan. Frost said he admired Kennedy's simplicity and directness, and praised Dayan's caustic wit.

Frost said his most memorable interview was with Christie Brown, an Irishman born completely paralyzed and considered a "vegetable" until the age of five. Frost interviewed Brown after the man learned to

Teamsters trucking lockout threatens to choke auto industry

DETROIT (AP) - A shortage of vital parts normally supplied by truck threatens to choke the auto industry as a Teamsters trucking lockout and strike enters its second week.

As the Labor Department kept watch over the strike's effects, it was estimated yesterday that 200,000 auto workers - or a quarter of the hourly work force - would be laid off this week. Elsewhere, the impact has been slight.

The industry - the five major U.S. manufacturers - already had laid off 56,275 workers last Friday and had 74,200 on short-hour shifts.

Today, Chrysler Corporation, the No. 3 national automaker, will be virtually shut down. The company said last week that 85,000 workers would be laid off at about 40 plants until a settlement between the trucking industry and the Teamsters industry and the Teamsters union was reached.

It "couldn't have come at a worse time" Chrysler president Lee A. Iacocca said at a luncheon last week launching the automaker's new advertising campaign and extended warranty plan.

Iacocca said the shutdown caused by the strike would cost the automaker "plenty."

Chrysler is trying to recover from a $205 million loss last year.

Bargaining is scheduled to resume today in Washington between officials representing 500 major trucking firms and 235,000 Teamsters. Two days of apparently fruitless negotiations broke off Friday. Both sides, divided largely over President Carter's anti-inflation wage guidelines, said they would not budge from bargaining positions that prompted the work stoppage.

Automakers depend on day-to-day shipments of supplies and parts for vehicle assembly plants do not have room to hold large steel inventories.

Companywide layoffs at General Motors Corp., the No. 1 automaker, totaled 30,100 last Friday.

Ford Motor Co., after announcing the layoff of 650 workers at the end of last week, said another 3,000 employees at an Indianapolis steering gear plant would be furloughed today.

The only American plant of Volkswagen Manufacturing Corporation at Westmoreland, PA, idled 4,000 workers when it shut down last week.

Workers at American Motors Corporation plants worked regular hours last week.

Automobiles and related products account for one-sixth of the nation's gross national product.

At the end of last week, there were no reported shortages of food or other key consumer goods and most industries reported that operation were near normal.

The union struck 73 major trucking firms March 31, when the old contract expired, and the industry responded by locking out workers. Industry bargainers say their last offer would boost wages and benefits 30 percent over three years, just over Carter's guidelines.

The wage guideline technically puts a 7 percent ceiling on annual wage and fringe benefit increases, but it has been loosened to accommodate a higher Teamsters settlement.

Small blaze destroys utility cart

by John McGrath
Senior Staff Reporter

A fire swept through the contents of a maid's utility cart yesterday morning in a service room on the fourth floor of Fisher Hall. The blaze destroyed the cart causing heavy smoke to fill the hallways forcing residents to flee the affected area.

The blaze was contained within the room which serves as a utility area for the floor, and which houses an elevator entrance and electrical fuseboxes. "Thank God it wasn't in an enclosed area," Bro. Joe McTaggart, assistant rector of Fisher, said. "It could have been much worse because the electrical supply was right there near the fire."

Tentative agreement ends brief walkout at Pan Am

WASHINGTON (AP) - Negotiations for Pan American World Airways and its flight attendants' union reached a tentative labor agreement yesterday, ending a brief walkout that disrupted some flights in Europe, airline officials said. Pickets were reported at a handful of airports in the United States after the two sides failed to reach an agreement by a midnight Saturday deadline set by the Independent Union of Flight Attendants. The new pact was reached after a series of marathon bargaining sessions that began last week under the auspices of the National Mediation Board. "We're very pleased with it (the agreement)," said Richard Drake, the union's national strike director. "It's a good contract." The terms of the proposed contract were not disclosed.

Garwood comes home after 13 years away in Vietnam

ADAMS, Ind. (AP) - Marine Pfc. Robert R. Garwood came home at last after more than 13 years in Vietnam and joyously declared yesterday, "You can take the country from the boy, but you can't take the country out of the boy." Garwood, 33, relaxed with family and friends away from the public glare aimed at him since he left Vietnam last month. He said he wants to go fishing, drink a few beers, and rediscover the down-home lifestyle of his native, rural southeastern Indiana. "The roads are still there. People are still the same," Garwood said. "I was glad my hometown hasn't changed. There's no place like home."

Tanzanian forces fire on approaches to Kampala

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) - Tanzanian forces pounded the southern approaches to Kampala with heavy artillery fire after apparently being stopped by unexpected resistance from fresh Ugandan troops, according to exile sources and residents of the Ugandan capital. Travelers arriving from northeastern Uganda reported, meanwhile, that President Idi Amin's soldiers were rounding up members of two Christian tribes that have been persecuted repeatedly in the past for alleged disloyalty to the Moslem Ugandan strongman. Their fate was unknown. Amin's harsh eight-year rule seemed in its final hours Saturday when the last of an estimated 2,600 Libyan troops defending him were reported to have fled toward an air base in the north, evidently to fly back to Libya.

Train derails; tank cars filled with acetone explode

CRESTVIEW, Fla. (AP) - Tank cars carrying acetone exploded and burned when a train loaded with hazardous chemicals derailed here yesterday, and thousands were evacuated as the wind spread thick yellow sulfur fumes over rural northwest Florida. Only one injury was reported. A fisherman trekking through the woods near the wreck inhaled some of the fumes and was hospitalized for observation. Okaloosa County Civil Defense director Tom Nichols estimated that 5,000 people had fled homes or campsites in the 30-square-mile evacuation area. Civil defense officials put the approximately 9,000 residents of nearby Crestview on alert for possible evacuation as approaching thunderstorms threatened a wind-shift that would push the fumes in that direction.

Illinois police seek murderer

PAXTON, Ill. (AP) - Authorities kept up a minimal search yesterday for an armed and wounded man who escaped a gun battle in which two of his brothers and two police officers were among five persons killed.

Some 20 police trekked and drove through farmland while daylight remained in east-central Illinois looking for Monroe Lampkin, sought on a murder warrant.

The gunfight occurred Saturday night after a state trooper stopped four vehicles on southbound Interstate 57 for alleged speeding violations.

Police, who discovered a two-mile trail of blood leading generally east-southeast through farmland from the scene of the gun battle, said Lampkin allegedly killed State Trooper Michael McCarter, 32, with a high-powered rifle.

Also killed were Paxton patrolman William Caisse, 32; McCarter's brother-in-law, Donald Vice, 43, who was riding with McCarter; and Lampkin's brothers, Cleveland, 46, of Harvey, Ill., and Davis, 32.

Cleveland and Davis Lampkin reportedly were free on appeal of a federal conviction of possessing firearms after conviction of a felony. Illinois State Police Investigator Clay Boyer, who is heading the investigation, said Cleveland Lampkin had a record of felony convictions but that there were no outstanding warrants against any of the brothers.

He also said three .357 magnum pistols had been discovered at the scene, two in a pickup truck and one in a Ford Thunderbird that were among four autos McCarter hailed to the roadside.

Illinois state police said they found both spent and unused .38-caliber cartridges just off the freeway, but found no .38-caliber weapon at the scene, leading them to believe Monroe Lampkin is armed.

Ginter said more than 30 shots were fired Saturday night after McCarter and Caisse stopped four speeding vehicles on Interstate 57 about two miles south of Paxton. There reportedly were numerous bullet holes in the trooper's squad car.

Paxton police officer Larry Hale, 27, of Paxton, was wounded and listed in stable condition after undergoing surgery yesterday to remove a bullet from his right leg at Burnham City Hospital in Champaign. Ginter said Hale apparently mortally wounded Cleveland and Davis Lampkin.

Struble said both Caisse and McCarter were shot and killed at close range. McCarter had been wounded in the leg and was in Caisse's squad car when a door on the passenger side was opened and he was shot, Struble said. McCarter and Hale fired their service revolvers, Ginter said, but Caisse's gun never was used.

Vice, 43, who for some unexplained reason had been riding with McCarter, was found on the ground near his brother-in-law's car.

Danehy case against Notre Dame comes to trial in Starke County

by Michael Lewis
Executive News Editor

The case of Professor James P. Danehy versus Notre Dame came to trial at 10 a.m. today in the Starke County Circuit Court in Knox, IN.

Danehy originally filed suit Feb. 28, 1977, in St. Joseph County Superior Court. According to University regulations, he would automatically become Professor Emeritus at age 65. He reached 65 in June of that year.

Danehy has alleged that the University has "...no rational retirement standards fairly applied to all faculty members." He further maintains that a significant number of faculty members are allowed to continue in full-time positions after reaching age 65.

Notre Dame contends that their policy, at that time, was that all professors automatically reached Emeritus status at age 65. University policy further stipulates that, after reaching Emeritus status, the professor's position as a tenured faculty member would be re-evaluated on a yearly basis.

Danehy was allowed to teach a summer school course in 1977, but was dropped from the University payroll in August 1977. He still occupies office and laboratory space in the chemistry building. He was a professor of chemistry here for 26 years.

In March 1977, Danehy was granted a change of venue to the Starke County Circuit Court.

Despositions from the Chemistry Department's Committee on Appointments and Promotions state that the decision to terminate Danehy's employment was based solely on his age.

In pre-trial hearings, the University has agreed that Danehy's age was the sole factor in the decision to terminate his employment.

Danehy decided to file suit after his personal attempts to gain continuation of his position at the University were unsuccessful.

Strike delays SU albums

by Brian McFeeters

The remaining 900 albums from the Student Union record sale await delivery because of the nationwide trucking industry strike, according to SU Services Commissioner Curt Hench. The backorder was scheduled to be shipped from Indianapolis on the day the strike began.

"If the strike is continuing after Easter break, we'll tell the wholesaler to pack an identical order and then bring it up here ourselves," Hench said. If this is necessary, the albums will be distributed during the week of April 23-27.

An Tostal committee readies final schedule

by Beth Willard

An Tostal is drawing near, final schedules of events are being readied and prayers for good weather are rising, according to An Tostal chairman Paul Callahan.

Booklets with a complete schedule and description of events occurring during An Tostal week, April 24-29, will be distributed on Sunday, April 22.

Many of the events, such as the picnic on Gentle Thursday and Frisbee Toss on Frivolous Friday, call for good weather to be successful. Callahan stated that although the weather does not look promising at this point, events would either be moved indoors or conducted despite cold or rain.

An Tostal was initiated in 1968 with a budget of $25. This year, its twelfth year, it has a total budget of $15,000. Callahan said that $7,000 has been allotted by Notre Dame Student Government, $1,500 by Saint Mary's Student Government, and that all remaining funds are generated by An Tostal events such as the carnival, In Loco Parentis, and the Irish Wake.

Work started last May on the festivities planned for this year, when Callahan was appointed chairman of the An Tostal committee.

As in past years, An Tostal events will be held on both the Notre Dame and Saint Mary's campuses, as well as off campus. There will be a Beer Garden at Lee's Ribs on Tuesday, a Happy Hour at Nickie's on Wednesday, and on-campus events will start on Gentle Thursday.

Events held on Thursday will be at Saint Mary's, those on Friday on Notre Dame's South Quad and at Stepan Center, and Saturday events will be located primarily at Cartier Field.

Events running throughout the week include In Loco Parentis (Monday through Thursday), Looking for Mr. Goodbar, Bookstore Basketball, the carnival, and the Ugly Man on Campus contest.

Bookstore Basketball finals always draw a crowd on Sunday, says Callahan, but bookstore basketball is not, in fact, run by the An Tostal committee itself. It is organized by a committee headed by Leo Latz, under the same auspices as An Tostal, but separate from other events.

Callahan encourages competition for the James E. Brogan Award. One hundred dollars will be presented to the person/organization/dormitory that does the craziest thing in An Tostal spirit, outside of an official event. Participants must inform Callahan of their event ahead of time so that observers will be present.

Iranian revolutionaries kill six more men before firing squads

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) - Revolutionary authorities, rejecting U.S. and other criticism of their execution of a former Iranian prime minister, sent six more men to their deaths before firing squads yesterday, Tehran newspapers reported.

New violence flared in the streets of Tehran in the aftermath of Saturday's execution of Amir Abbas Hoveida, who served as prime minister under the now-exiled shah for 13 years.

In the capital's eastern section, women fired from a passing car at a group of militia guards of the Islamic revolutionary government, wounding several of them, news reports said. The women were reported to have escaped.

In northern Tehran, five militiamen were killed and four others injured in an explosion late Saturday. The cause was not officially announced, but news reports speculated the militiamen were trying to defuse a bomb or hand grenade when it exploded.

Yesterday's six executions took place before dawn in four cities, the newspapers said. Those executed included two pro-shah army men, three of the shah's policemen and a landlord who was charged with illegally seizing land and raping several women.

State radio reports confirmed only that three of the executions had taken place.

The official execution toll stands at 76 since revolutionary tribunals began their work after the Feb. 12 fall of Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi's last government. They included 15 military and police generals who served the deposed monarch.

Meanwhile, revolutionary officials said 26 prisoners were put on trial in Tehran, reportedly including Gen Amir Hossein Rabii, former chief of the air force, and Manuchehr Azmun, who served as Hoveida's labor minister.

Class of '80 sponsors baseball trip

Activities for next year's Senior Class will be getting under way this April. A trip to Chicago is scheduled to see the Cubs face the Montreal Expos on Saturday, April 21.

Due to scheduling problems, only 50 seats will be available. Sign-up will be on a first-come, first-serve basis. The trip includes round-trip bus transportation (to leave at 11 a.m.) with beer and a ticket to the game for $10.

All those interested should sign up at the Junior Class office in the basement of LaFortune today and tomorrow from 3-5 p.m.

The class officers are also putting together the Advisory Council for next year. All those interested in being members should contact (1691), Mary (8037), or Tom (1768).

WOW series stresses artists' struggle

by Margie Brassil
Assistant Saint Mary's Editor

Women's struggle for expression in the arts became the theme of last week's series of presentations on Women and the Arts as part of Saint Mary's Women's Opportunity Week (WOW).

WOW is presented annually to give students a chance to see what opportunities are open to them outside of college. The week's activities focused upon literature, music, art and theatre.

The idea that it is more difficult for women to break into fields related to the arts was stressed in most of the presentations. Many of the speakers warned that a woman must work harder than a man to be considered good. "A girl must be five times better than a male," Antonia Brico, one of the world's first woman conductors, warned.

Brico, who was the key-note speaker, was instrumental in opening the orchestra field to women. She began the New York Women's Symphony in 1934.

Many myths have been built up about the woman that it takes women themselves, with their own particular style of humor, to separate the truths from the fairy tales, according to Gloria Kaufman, professor at IUSB. Feminist humor became necessary to break down the taboo and extricate the truths, Kaufman said.

"Comedy is the prevailer of truth," Kaufman emphasized. She read several selections from contemporary writers who have used this style effectively to stress their ideas.

The arts were represented in both contemporary and ancient times in the works of Margo Hoff. Hoff, who showed slides of her work as a contemporary artist, spoke of the living artist as forever expanding and developing.

Michele Fricke, SMC professor of art, showed slides of women portrayed by ancient artists, emphasizing the honor and respect that was shown to women in the sculptures and paintings. Primitive cultures, involved in a constant struggle for existence, could not afford to place barriers on the roles women played in society. They were involved in law, government, religion and most other aspects.

The South Bend chapter of the Women's Caucus for Art also gave a representation of women in the field of artists, art historians, museum and gallery women.

Women in today's society were portrayed in a presentation by SMC professors Penny Jameson, Deanna Sokolowski, and Carol Ann Carter. The presentation looked at the woman as wife, mother, and worker, and at her identity throughout the socialization process.

Along a similar vein, two dramatizations by Julie Jensen and Diana Hawfield from the Speech and Drama department emphasized women's loss of self-identity and the loneliness that is a part of many women's lives. They also spoke on women in the theatre, and the difficulty of being accepted that still faces modern women playwrights.

According to Julie Jones, co-chairman of WOW, "WOW was successful this year. Many of the students showed interest, and all the speakers were very enthusiastic about the presentations."

While attendance was not high at many of the performances, this could have been due to the afternoon scheduling, Jones said.

Jones was disappointed with the lack of faculty encouragement to attend the afternoon performances, but thought that the smaller groups allowed for more informality in the discussions.

Co-chairing the week with Jones was Dee Devlin. Cindy Cericola helped coordinate the talent, while Karen Mitchell and Maureen Carden helped with organization.

Helen Gallagher, publicity chairman, commented that while scheduling was difficult, "We didn't run into any big problems. People gained a lot of valuable experience from this week, and it was very successful."

SMC Board appoints commissioners

by Pam Degnan
Staff Reporter

The Commissioner Selection Committee of the Saint Mary's Board of Governance released last night the names of the recently appointed commissioners.

According to Chip Dornbach, vice president of Academic Affairs, the commissioner appointments were extremely difficult due to an overwhelming turnout. "I feel these highly qualified leaders will work well together to make 1979-80 a year of growth for the college," Dornbach said.

The newly appointed athletic commissioner Kari Meyer, a junior from Edwardsville, IL, will be responsible for coordinating and strengthening the sports program.

Co-Ex Commissioner Mary Ellen Maccio is a sophomore from Birmingham, MI. Her responsibilities will include meal ticket distribution and

Retirement policy discriminatory

The two-year-old case of Prof. James Danehy vs. the University of Notre Dame came to trial this morning in the Circuit Court of Starke County, Indiana. Danehy, a former professor of chemistry at Notre Dame, has charged that "compulsory retirement based on age alone is arbitrary, discriminatory and unjust," and that Notre Dame lacks "...rational retirement standards fairly applied to all faculty members." The Observer concurs with Danehy that the University's present retirement policy is arbitrary and discriminatory.

According to University policy, a professor automatically becomes a professor emeritus at the age of 65. The employment status of professors emeritus is reevaluated on a yearly basis. Thus, some professors are allowed to continue teaching, while others are forced into retirement.

Danehy cites as evidence of discrimination the fact that of 81 faculty members who turned 65 between July, 1967 and July, 1976, 54 had their employment terminated, while 27 were allowed to continue in full-time employment for one to six years. Yet, in Danehy's case, the University has given age as the sole reason for termination of employment.

The Administration cannot be allowed to continue arbitrarily applying its policy of "mandatory" retirement. We question whether this practice is merely a convenient method of phasing out unwanted professors. If this were the case, the University would be acting illegally as well as unethically.

The University needs a clear, rational retirement policy, applied equally and fairly to all faculty members. In our opinion, such a policy would be based not on age, but on evaluations by students and faculty peers.

Notre Dame graduate students considered second class citizens

Just before Christmas break the CLC voted unanimously to request all rectors to give preference to undergraduate juniors applying for the position of R.A. for the coming academic year over the graduate students who also were applying for the R.A. positions.

This action by the CLC is merely the latest link in the chain which has bound all N.D. graduate students to a "second class" status on this campus. Having been both an undergraduate and graduate student here at N.D., I know from whence I speak. Only as an undergrad, I was really rather oblivious to the situation. Do you want other examples? A graduate student applying for the $1,000 per semester federal loan entitled: "National Direct Student Loan" in the financial aid office, was told that undergraduates are given preference for this loan, and therefore there are no monies available for graduate students.

Or take the funding of some of the graduate programs, including the law school. When the American Bar Association Accreditation Committee was here last year, they made certain suggestions as to how the law school could become a better law school. They suggested that there be more books in the law library, and that more personnel be hired so that faculty members could have more time available to continue their research and publications. These are good recommendations, only the law school needs money to do these things. But the funds generated by the various graduate programs and the law school are taken out of these programs by the university and put into a general fund, and then are used in other areas. How is it possible for these students to receive the excellent education that they are paying for? So, not only is it more difficult for graduate students to get loans to attend school, if they do manage somehow to scrape together the tuition, it can then easily be funnelled out of their program! Next, let's look at housing.

There are beds on campus for 83% of the undergrad women, and 30% of graduate women.

For 5,129 undergrad men, they have 4,292 beds on campus, for a high 82%.

Compare this with 89 beds for 1,308 graduate men or a low 7%.

The only dorm for graduate men is about as far from campus as you can get--St. Joseph's Hall, next to the coal yard. In fact, it's listed as an off-campus building. And, after seeing the above figures, would you believe that there have been, and continue to be, letters in The Observer from undergrads suggesting that the university even take St. Joseph's away from the graduate men, leaving them then, with absolutely no housing at all! I've heard about wanting your piece of the pie, but must they have it all? The above figures are ludicrous. Graduate students do more for this school than most people will ever know. Literally hundreds of thousands of dollars are given to this school as a direct and indirect result of work and on-going research by graduate students. Many courses on this campus just would not be taught without the time and dedication of the graduate student...and they are paid a fraction of what a professor would receive for teaching the same course. In fact, without the graduate programs at this university, it would no longer be a University, but rather a community college.

At the beginning of this year, 15 foreign graduate students who had never been to this country before, were denied housing on campus as there was none available to them. What an incredible state of affairs. The waiting list of graduate men wanting to move into St. Joseph's is very long. The solution is obvious: build another grad dorm. But in the meantime, one of the undergrad dorms situated closer to the main portion of campus should be converted to a dorm for both grads and undergrads, if not for graduate students totally. Arizona State, Columbia, U.S.C., and U.C.L.A. to name but a few, have combination grad/undergrad dorms. Even if these suggestions were implemented, the ration of on-campus beds to students would be vastly in favor of undergrads, but at least it would be a start. But in the meantime, why should we, the graduate men, be the ones to have to suffer the most because of the housing shortage? Don't misunderstand, I realize that there are more undergrads than grads, about 4 to 1, i.e., 4 undergraduate men to every graduate man. I also agree completely that freshman undergrads should live on campus. So even though the undergrads outnumber the grads by 4 to 1, they should have more beds on campus than a 4 to 1 ratio. But would you believe the current ratio is 50 to 1?

What is most distressing is that in the light of these figures the provost, Dr. O'Meara, said this past week in The Observer that it is a "probability" that the next dorm will be for women. Editorial comment to the provost: What!!! Are you kidding?!? You just can't be serious. Please reconsider.

And why should we be further discriminated against in the selection of R.A.'s? In fact, I believe graduate students have a strong case as to why they should be favored in the selection process. For one, if an undergrad doesn't get a position as an R.A., chances are good that he can remain on campus anyway. But the graduate student who has a sincere desire to be a part of the campus, to integrate himself into residence hall life and to contribute to on-campus life, can't stay on campus if he's not chosen. In fact, he has never even been on.

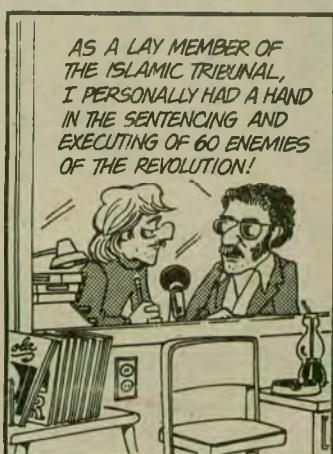

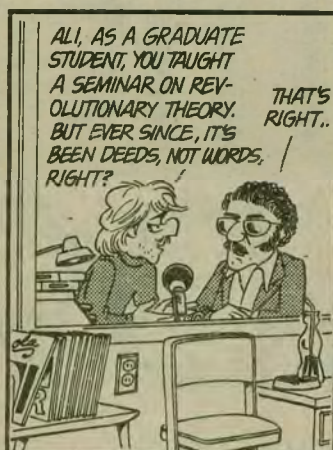

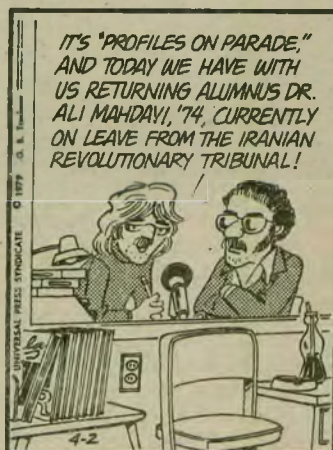

Also, I believe there is something to be said for the maturity of a graduate student in handling various situations which might arise in a dorm. I don't mean to insinuate that a 20-year-old undergrad junior is immature, but that there seems to be generally a direct relation between the number of years one has spent on this earth, and the maturity one has. Also, graduate students, just by being graduate students, should be given credit for being a fairly intelligent species.

At Notre Dame, no segment of the student body should be given preference over any other in any aspect of campus life.

The Notre Dame Family

Notre Dame students are told many times that we are here being prepared for life. What exactly is this life that we are being prepared for? Is there indeed life after Notre Dame?

In order to answer these questions, I set out to find the typical Notre Dame graduate. After poring over pages and pages of alumni profiles, a name caught my eye. I called him to arrange an interview, and drove to his suburban Chicago home, hoping to find a family that exemplifies everything Notre Dame stands for. As I heard the doorbell ring out the N.D. fight song, I knew this must be the place.

TH: Hi, I'm here for the Observer interview. You must be Mr. and Mrs. Dulac.

Mr.: Yes, come on in. Leave your driver's license at the door. You can stay about 15 minutes.

TH: You've got a beautiful house. It's very well kept.

Mrs.: Thank you. We've got a housekeeper who comes in during the week to pick up after us.

TH: Does she do the laundry too?

Mrs.: Only for my husband and the boys.

Mrs.: How many youngsters do you have?

Mr.: How many youngsters do you have?

Mr.: Three boys and one girl.

TH: That's a nice ratio. But wouldn't a more balanced distribution be healthier?

Mr.: A few years ago, we had no girls at all. As soon as we build another girl's bedroom though, we plan to have another daughter, and when you consider the girls across the street who are over here all the time, the ratio's almost 50-50.

TH: Those must be your children's pictures on the wall.

Mrs.: Yes, there's Lewis, Howard, B. Phillip, Carroll, and Grace.

TH: But I thought you only had four children. What happened to the fifth?

Mrs.: We'd threatened to kick the oldest one out of the house because there wasn't enough room. We were only kidding, but he took us seriously and moved out on his own.

TH: Your children are very attractive. What are their interests?

Mr.: During the week I make them stay in and study. On weekends, I let them go outside and play football.

TH: Do they get along well together?

Mr.: The boys are always making fun of my daughter, but actually I think they're a little jealous because she does so well in school. They'd rather play with the rich girls from across the street. Except Howard. That boy worries me sometimes- doesn't like girls at all.

TH: Do they all do fairly well in school?

Mr.: Yes. They're all presidents of their classes, each one plays at least one varsity sport, and the youngest one keeps getting brighter every year. Excuse me. Lewis! Get back in the kitchen with that glass of milk.

TH: What was the matter?

Mr.: Nothing. We just don't want our children drinking in the hallways.

TH: It seems the chance your marriage will end up in divorce is well below the national average. Would you agree that your marriage is stable?

Mr.: We don't horse around, if that's what you mean. My wife and I have gotten along fine, ever since she adjusted to my sleeping habits.

TH: What do you mean?

Mr.: Well, at first she didn't like the way I get out of bed at midnight (2 on weekends) and sleep in another room. She accepted it though, after I made it clear that my position on the matter wouldn't change.

TH: You seem to be doing pretty well financially.

Mr.: Some of my investments in South Africa have paid off handsomely.

TH: Exactly how much are those investments worth?

Mr.: I'd rather not say.

Mrs.: Can I get you something to drink? We have Budweiser, Budweiser, and Budweiser.

TH: Don't you have any non-alcoholic alternatives?

Mrs.: We used to have Nestles Quik, but the kids won't let me buy it anymore.

TH: Just one last question. Would you say that Notre Dame prepared you for life?

Mr.: It taught me everything I know.

TH: I figured as much. Well, thank you for your time. My 15 minutes are almost up, so I'd better get going.

The Dulacs invited me to stay for dinner, but unfortunately I could not accept their offer...I didn't have my i.d. with me.

Four graduates in pursuit of Christian ideals

Far removed from their old campus, four members of the University of Notre Dame's class of 1978 are looking forward to the end of another school year. While advancing from the role of students to teachers and administrators, they also descended from the university to the elementary level.

The four--Tom Basile, Jay Brandenberger, Ricky Flores and Joe Forman--had lived together off-campus at Notre Dame. All were involved in different ministries, either in volunteer work or student committees. This taste of community living and service to others led them to decide to devote at least a year to some project that reflected Christian ideals.

With the assistance of the University's Center for Pastoral and Social Ministry, they explored possibilities in four cities. Their contact in Houston, Father Ed Salazar, S.J., stressed the educational needs of undocumented Mexican children. A recent Texas Supreme Court decision makes it difficult for these children to attend public school. The students agreed that education is a universal human right and that the Church, an institution without boundaries, should be the first to stand up for human rights and administer to the needs of children, even those without proof of citizenship or documents showing that they are in the country legally.

"Houston was the biggest challenge with the greatest needs," recalls Joe Forman. "We talked to Father Ed Salazar, a Jesuit priest in St. Joseph's parish. He knew the educational needs of undocumented Mexican children not allowed in public schools. Technically, they can go to school but there is a steep tuition of about $150 a month. So we decided to come here to open a school."

In Houston they were joined by another volunteer, Rita Cheresnowsky. On October 9 last year, Guadalupe Aztlan elementary school opened its doors to about 100 students aged six and older.

"The school is an old building donated by one of the parishes," explains Ricky Flores. "It needed a lot of work and cleaning. We had no supplies, nothing. Over a period of a month we got desks, tables, metal cabinets, anything that could be salvaged."

They worked with many handicaps, lacking finances, curriculum materials and bilingual help. Only Ricky speaks fluent Spanish. They focus on functional skills, languages (Spanish and English), math and other required subjects.

The addition of Rita to the small group was invaluable. She supplied the role model of a woman that was very important, especially for the younger children.

"I find my place in administration, mothering the children and teaching," says Rita. "Some children in school don't have mothers. In an unsettled situation they need a mother's touch, the woman's touch. Fortunately, I know children and I understand education."

Before starting to teach, the group decided that the first thing was to make the children feel welcome and loved. The next step would be to build up their self-esteem as individuals.

"These children have had a really rough life," Tom Basile explains. "They are from Mexico, don't know our language and aren't documented. They can't communicate with the society so they are lost wherever they go. We knew from the beginning that the main thing was to teach them to develop dignity on their own, to realize that they are no different from other people, to have a sense of self-worth."

Raymond M. Boyle

It is our goal to make them realize that they are humans, that they are deserving and that they are children of God."

Ricky Flores wrote a piece about the school and undocumented children, "The broken people." All share his feeling.

"Sometimes when I am teaching and looking around, I see the broken, jagged windows," says Jay Brandenberger. "I am standing there, wearing my coat because of the cold, but I feel everything is alright because a child is reading his or her first full sentence. That is why the school is here--for broken, undocumented people. We can't meet the needs of the several thousands of children who aren't allowed to go to public schools. We can only meet the needs of a hundred. Of those, five learned to read today."

Volunteer for a real world experience

Guadalupe Aztlan Elementary is the first Catholic school for undocumented Mexican children in the Houston, Texas area. It is currently staffed by five VESS volunteers. VESS is a volunteer service agency working out of the Texas Catholic Conference in Austin, Texas. VESS means Volunteers in Educational and Social Services, and it staffs schools, parishes, and social service agencies throughout the state of Texas.

VESS members work for a small salary, $80 a month plus $60 a month for food. They also are members of Blue Cross/Blue Shield of Texas.

Without VESS and without other volunteers, Guadalupe Aztlan Elementary would not be a reality. They have given us much support, and we have shared the community that is VESS.

We need more people for next year to help teach and administrate at the school. There are only five of us at the school full time, and there are many facets to the operation of the school that requires more people than we have now. Most of all, we need teachers, bi-lingual and experienced (or someone who wants experience in teaching Mexican children English, Spanish and other skills.)

Four of the five of us are May, 1978 graduates of Notre Dame who sought to work in some kind of ministry in a school or parish environment. We contacted Msgr. Jack Egan on how to go about finding a place to do that, and he recommended a number of cities and projects. Houston seemed to us to be the place that offered both the greatest needs and the biggest challenges. So we came here, and the school started in October 9th of last year. We are currently involved in recruiting volunteers and procuring funds for next year. We raise all of our funds through the Diocese (or Galveston-Houston), religious orders, some local parishes, and some concerned individuals, even the Notre Dame Alumni Club of Houston has been helping us!

It is our hope that some people at Notre Dame could see fit to join in this project with us.

SMC students to attend mock UN conference in New York

by Pam Degnan
Staff Reporter

Seven Saint Mary's students plan to participate in a collegiate United Nations conference this week in New York City. The conference allows students to assimilate the complex operations of the United Nations and to explore various world problems.

Craig Hartzler, a government professor will accompany the students as their faculty advisor. Hartzler views the UN project as a valuable opportunity for students to appreciate the difficulties that arise in solving international crises.

Hartzler explained that each delegate was responsible for collecting research that later would be utilized in formulating committee strategies.

"Saint Mary's has been assigned to represent the government of Tanzania. The girls, using their individual background studies, must try to solve Tanzania's overwhelming crises," Hartzler said.

Assigned to a specific committee, each delegate holds the responsibility of accurately representing the views of each country. A daily agenda is presented to each committee listing the day's activities.

According to Hartzler, the representatives were chosen on a voluntary basis and must pay for their traveling expenses. He added, "This is the first time Saint Mary's has participated in this program. Yet hopefully in the future, a campus organization can allocate funds for student participation in a worthwhile project like this."

scene, the blaze, which was reported to the Notre Dame Fire Department at 11:10 a.m., was of suspicious origin.

"There are reports of a commotion being made in the hallway this morning, and of some hooligans knocking on doors before the fire started," McTaggart commented shortly after the fire was extinguished.

Some hall residents reported that they heard what sounded like a firecracker go off immediately before the fire started.

"I was awakened by the sound of several individuals trying to awaken another member of my section," said Ryan Ver Berkmoes, a resident of the "B" section of the Fisher fourth floor. "This seemed to culminate when I heard a firecracker go off. I then heard screams, and the voice of Bro. Joe (McTaggart) yelling, 'Try to put it out.'"

Another hall resident, Tim Tripp, reported that when he entered the room, flames were waist-high and smoke was pouring out of the area.

"I have an idea who did it," said McTaggart, "and I'm convinced it was not someone from the hall who is responsible. I'm also sure that there was no malicious intent involved--it was just a silly, stupid trick that led to a very serious incident."

Hench said that he is requesting that students wait until this backorder is distributed to apply for refunds on albums that were not available.

Defective albums will be reordered during the week following the distribution of the final albums. Any faulty records that were not turned in previously can be replaced at that time, and students receiving albums from this last order will have a chance to assure their quality.

There are no definite plans for a sale of this type next semester, but Student Union is examining several possibilities, Hench said.

talk at age 18. Brown ended the interview by singing an Irish folk song in perfect pitch. The interviewer called it "a moment of absolute, distilled magic."

The most "chilling" interview of Frost's career was with the head of the Hitler Youth in Germany in the 1930s, and who later was sentenced to 20 years in prison. Frost decried the man's lack of conception of "the magnitude of the crimes Hitler committed," and said that the man, when asked what he would like Hitler to be remembered for in the future, replied, "the wonderful way in which he dealt with unemployment in the 30s."

In response to a question from the audience, Frost discussed his interviews with ex-President Richard Nixon. He called the program "a forlorn battle on Nixon's part to redress the balance of history--forlorn because Watergate will not soon be forgotten. He wanted to re-write history, to be remembered for China, Russia and SALT, not Watergate."

Frost reiterated the fact that he had complete control over all aspects of the interviews, including control of question selection and tape editing. Nixon, Frost said, "stonewalled" the first day of the interviews, but would later volunteer information. "It then became a problem of pushing him further than he wanted to go," Frost remarked.

The key to the interviews, according to Frost, was "to get Nixon absorbed in the conversation, and then he would reveal the real Richard Nixon."

Frost switched the subject of his talk to his association with the Guinness Book of World Records, and described his fascination with the people who try to set new standards of human capabilities.

He spoke of some of his favorite records in the book, including one that he owns for logging over one million miles between New York and London between 1969 and 1972.

He mentioned the case of Roy Johnston, who has been struck by lightning five times, a Brazilian woman who has given birth to 33 children, none by multiple births, and Mr. and Mrs. Jay Barnardi, who have been married 82 years.

"The fascination with these people is that, however ludicrous their goal, they are still trying to be the best in the world at it," Frost said.

Neville becomes first OC commisioner

by Janet Rigaux

On April 1, junior Shannon Neville became the first off-campus commissioner, replacing John Fitzpatrick, who held the unofficial office of off-campus coordinator this year.

According to Neville, her main function will be head of the off-campus council. "I see my most important job as representing the interests of the off-campus students." Her other duties include being a voting member of both the Board of Commissioners and the Campus Life Council.

Neville stated that her most immediate goals were the organization of the off-campus council and the formulation of the by-laws for that council. Also, she plans to continue publishing the off-campus newspaper, Off the Record, and continue the shuttle bus service for off-campus students.

Neville is also concerned with the renovation of the newly-designated off-campus room in LaFortune. "The room will be great when it is completely finished," Neville said. "It will serve as the communication center for off-campus students. Right now we're having trouble getting students to use the room, however."

Neville expects that more students will use the room after its grand opening in May. "The ceremony is still in the planning stages right now," Neville explained. "But it will be an official way to let off-campus students know that they have a meeting place on campus."

Another of Neville's present objectives is a meal plan revision. "If off-campus students want a different meal plan, such as a ten-meal plan, we will try to get that plan implemented if possible," Neville explained.

There are two types of off-campus students, according to Neville, and each has different needs. "There are those who moved off-campus after being

The Harrisburg protest was one of several across the nation during the weekend.

Ten thousand people jammed San Francisco's Civic Center Plaza on Saturday to hear anti-nuclear pep talks from Ralph Nader and others opposed to the opening this month of the Diablo Canyon nuclear plant.

Another 3,000 protesters focused on nuclear weaponry at Groton, CT, during the christening of the USS Ohio, the nation's first submarine armed with the Trident nuclear warhead.

There were protests in Seattle; Los Angeles; Phoenix; Bloomington, IN; Ithaca, NY; Brooksville, FL; and Lancaster,

In Harrisburg, Renny Cushman, a longshoreman from Seabrook, NH, who represents the anti-nuclear Clamshell Alliance, joined the protest.

"Last week's accident really touched the hearts and nerves of a lot of people," he said. "It's going to show that a number of people are upset, angry and totally insulted that TMI can ever go on line again. It will be the beginning of the shutdown for all nukes in Pennsylvania and the nation."

Among those in the crowd was Dr. Geoffrey Corson, chief surgeon at Harrisburg's Polyclinic Hospital.

"They say only two or three people will die of cancer because of what happened," said Corson, who said he was attending his first protest ever. "If it were someone I loved, I wouldn't feel it was a fair exchange."

The Election Commissioner Mary Mullaney and Judicial Commissioner Martha Boyle will define rules and regulations concerning Student Government operations. Both commissioners, juniors from Grosse Point, MI, will be responsible for enforcing the campus judicial system.

Off-Campus Commissioner Margaret Dimond is a junior from Detroit. Dimond will represent the views and ideas of off-campus and day students. Mary Angela Shannon, Public Relations commissioner, will deal closely with The Observer. A junior from Louisville, KY, Shannon is responsible for releasing all public announcements.

Social Commissioner Mary Ellen Connelly, a junior from West Springs, IL, will coordin-

Spiritual Commissioner Mary Ryan, will develop the operations of Campus Ministry. Ryan, a junior from Chicago, is planning to introduce late night masses on campus.

also receive improvements, along with help in getting involved in University activities. Neville hopes to have an off-campus booth at Mardi Gras next year, as well as to get transfer students involved with An Tostal. She also is planning to have an off-campus formal.

"Appointment of an off-campus commissioner is a big step by the University," Neville remarked. "I realize much needs to be done. However, I'm looking forward to next year and hope it will be productive."

128 teams that registered play in 64 qualifying games on Tuesday and Wednesday, April 17-18. "What we will do is place four preliminary brackets in each of the tournament's 16 sectionals," Marquard pointed out. "That will allow us to include 64 more teams with little scheduling conflicts."

Marquard added that, what the increase really means is that there will be more games each night of first round competition and, when the first round actually gets under way on April 19, 64 teams will already have played one game.

"The problems in scheduling a tournament like this are incredibly many," Latz admitted. "Since we have the 320 teams, my staff and I will work through Easter figuring out who plays who, where and when."

Latz announced that the schedules will be ready for distribution on Monday night April 16 from 6 p.m. until midnight. He stressed that any team that does not pick up a schedule by that deadline will forfeit their bracket in the tournament.

"I can't emphasize enough how important it is for the team captains to pick up their schedules by midnight, April 16," said Latz. "The first games start Tuesday and that means that 64 teams will play the day after they get their schedules."

Schedules can be picked up in 104 Pangborn Hall, headquarters for this year's tournament.

Latz cited the Easter Vacation as a primary source of the scheduling committee's problems.

"I hate having to pass out schedules the night before the games are scheduled to get underway, but Easter vacation leaves me no choice," he said. "I just hope everyone gets their schedule and shows up for their first game on time."

with "eligibility of student athletes," reads as follows:

0.1. 10. Outside basketball competition shall be considered "organized" if any of the following conditions exist: Teams are regularly formed or team rosters are predetermined, competition is scheduled and publicized in advance, official score is kept, individual or team standings are maintained, official timer or game officials are used, squad members are dressed in team uniforms, admission is charged or a team is privately or commercially sponsored. Further, competition which is directly or indirectly sponsored, promoted or administered by an individual, an organization or any other agency shall be considered organized.

Obviously, the NCAA leaves themselves well-covered in defining "organized" competition, which is considered illegal. All of which forced Latz, at the request of Associate Athletic Director, Col. John Stevens, to submit an affidavit to Berst. Latz' response, dated March 29, gave the tournament's historical background and the concept by which Bookstore Basketball has grown into one of the most popular extra-curricular activities.

In his response, Latz concluded that:

Bookstore Basketball in no way has the intention to circumvent any NCAA rulings. It is not intended to provide any extra basketball practice for the varsity athletes. It is solely intended for the fun and entertainment of the Notre Dame student body and the entire Notre Dame community. Furthermore, Bookstore Basketball is something that satisfies the desire for pure athletic competition at the University between Notre Dame students, among which basketball players are certainly a part. If they truly are "student-athletes," they should have the privilege of participating in this student tournament. To forbid the varsity basketball players to participate in this student event during "An Tostal" week would seem to be a discrimination against their status as a member of the student body.

Berst, who informed Latz and Col. Stevens on Thursday that the odds are strongly against the athletes' participation, has submitted the necessary information to three individuals who will decide on a conference call this week whether or not basketball players may take part.

Walter J. Byers, Executive Director of the NCAA, along with associates Bill Flynn of Boston College and Jim Frank of Lincoln University, will hand down the final ruling.

"It's clear that the Bookstore Tournament technically violates several of the provisions set forth by the NCAA," notes Latz. "But I believe the tournament, in its true purpose and meaning, realistically does not erode what the NCAA rule intends to prevent, such as extra practices or illegal tournament competition for varsity athletes."

In essence, the NCAA rule allows varsity athletes to only participate in intercollegiate events and NCAA-sanctioned tournaments, such as summer leagues.

"The NCAA fears that although Notre Dame's intentions regarding Bookstore Basketball may be honest," said Latz, "other universities may use our tournament as a future loophole to circumvent NCAA rules."

"There is virtually no chance of the varsity basketball players playing this year. Our only hope for future years is that the rule might be changed to allow such pure athletic competition among students."

Whether or not the tournament will remain as popular without the varsity basketball players is questionable. Football players are not affected by this ruling, so the "big name" will still be present.

After yesterday's registration, however, there seems to be no doubt of the interest of the campus tournament. After the allotted 256 openings had been filled within two hours, Latz expanded the field to 320 teams.

Weather permitting, Kelley sends his troops out today for a doubleheader vs. St. Mary's (Minn.) at Jake Kline Field. Admission is free as the Irish hope to improve on their 3-6 log.

After resigning
Pryor ordered to work

PHILADELPHIA (AP) - National League umpire Paul Pryor was ordered to return to work Sunday by the Major League Umpires Association. Pryor had been one of two major league umpires who had signed contracts to work in the 1979 season, along with American League rookie umpire Ted Hendry. Pryor, who had signed a two-year pact, worked opening day in Cincinnati Wednesday and was behind the plate Friday when the Philadelphia Phillies met the St. Louis Cardinals on the road. But Saturday, claiming the pressure of working while his colleagues picketed outside the stadium was too much for him, Pryor notified the National League that he was resigning.

Wildcats freeze Irish nine as weather numbs players

by Mike Henry
Sports Writer

The Notre Dame baseball team dropped an 8-5 decision to Northwestern Saturday in the opener of a scheduled double-header at Jake Kline Field. The game was contested in bitterly frigid conditions, with a wind-chill factor of 18 degrees buffeting the players and those fans hardy enough to withstand the wintry weather.

To the relief of all, the nightcap was scrapped to allow the respective nines to defrost in their ACC dressing quarters, while the spectators scampered to their hot toddys.

The numbing cold, while hampering both squads, was probably the reason for Notre Dame's demise, as sloppy play afield led to three first inning tallies for the Wildcats, without benefit of a safety. After starter Bob Bartlett walked two batters on 3-2 pitches, an errant pickoff peg by catcher Dan Voellinger resulted in the first Northwestern run.

Then, after a long run, Irish centerfielder Dan Szajko dropped Mike Ouska's fly ball to allow the second Wildcat runner to dent the plate. Ouska later scored on a throwing error by third baseman Mark Simendinger. Thus, by the time everyone was at least inured to the cold, Notre Dame had dug themselves into a deep hole.

Unfortunately, Notre Dame found themselves up against 6'3", 215-pound Scott Stranski, who entered the fray with an ERA of 1.38. Drafted by the Chicago Cubs last summer, the strong-armed righthander was overpowering at times, and able to rear back for something extra the few times the Irish threatened. He was able to keep Notre Dame batsmen off balance with his forkball, a recent addition to his repertoire.

By the time Irish bats got untracked, the Wildcats had upped the margin to 6-0 on a towering three-run homer by rightfielder Ken Brainin off freshman Brian Smith. That was the only lapse by the Syracuse, Ind., native, who whiffed three batters in his three-inning stint, and coach Tom Kelly speaks glowingly of the youngster's future.

"Brian displays a great deal of confidence on the mound—he doesn't really act like a freshman out there," Kelly commented. Smith gave Northwestern batters fits as he alternated between over hand, three-quarters and sidearm deliveries.

The Irish finally exploded off Stranski in the fifth. Second baseman Tommy Caruso led off with a single, and Ricky Pullano laced a hit into right field. Walks to Mike Jamieson and Simendinger (who drew three free passes) put Notre Dame on the scoreboard, and Dan Voellinger got around on a Stranski fastball and sent it to the vicinity of the scoreboard beyond leftfield. A capricious gust kept the blow in the park and Voellinger ended up with a three-run double that made it 6-4.

That was as close as Notre Dame would get, although they

Latz expands bookstore field

by Frank LaGrotta
Sports Writer

Because of the overwhelming turnout at registration for this year's Bookstore Basketball tournament, commissioner Leo Latz has announced that the schedule has been expanded to allow 320 teams to participate. That total is 64 more than the 256 teams that were permitted to enter last year and was labeled by Latz as "an effort to allow more students to participate."

"Bookstore Basketball is a campus event and students that want to play should be able to,"

Latz commented yesterday. He said that the increase was prompted by the fact that the tournament's 256 spaces were filled only 90 minutes after yesterday's registration began.

"We put the teams that were too late on a waiting list," he said, "but that reached 50 teams in no time. I talked to Bill Marquard, the tournament's technical director, and we devised a method of allowing 64 more teams to play this year."

And that method, explained Marquard, is to have the last

Tracksters crunch Sycamores

by Mark Perry
Sports Editor

When the Notre Dame track team faced Indiana State in February, the Irish were slightly undermanned because of various injuries and illnesses, and the Sycamores came away with a narrow victory. At that time Irish Head Coach Joe Piane said he thought Notre Dame should be able to beat ISU once they got healthy.

It would appear that the Irish were very healthy on Saturday, as they cruised to a 116-44 win over ISU at a dual meet held at Cartier Field. Notre Dame won 14 out of 19 events on their way to victory.

"It's hard to believe that this is the same team we lost to in February," said Piane. "Although none of our times were that great because of the cold weather, we had a lot of good competitive efforts."

"I thought Jacques Eady ran well for us, and our hurdlers ran extremely well."

Eady, a freshman from Deer Park, N.Y., won two events for the Irish on the day, taking the 400-meter run in 49.8 seconds and running the third leg on the victorious 1600-meter relay team. Jim Christian, Chuck Aragon, and Rick Rogers joined Eady on that team.

Christian, Aragon, and hurdler Arnie Gough were also double winners for the meet. Christian ran on the winning 400-meter relay team, along with Kris Haines, Ken Lynch, and Gough, taking the event in 43.14 seconds. Gough notched his second win in the high hurdles, pacing an Irish sweep with a time of 14.3 seconds. Aragon led the way in the 1500-meter run, winning in 4:02.9.

Tim Twardzik took first in the other hurdling event, the 400-meter intermediates, leading the Irish to a sweep of the event in 54.9 seconds.

In the other running events, Jay Miranda ran a 1:54.3 to win the 800-meter run, Tony Matherly took the 5000-meters in 15:08.3, and Chris Lattig won the 3000-meter steeplechase in 9:15.1.

A new addition to the Notre Dame track team highlighted the field event competition. Basketball star Kelly Tripucka, who set a school record in the javelin at Bloomfield (N.J.) High School, made his first appearance for the Irish tracksters. Although far from his personal best of 211 feet in the javelin, Tripucka's throw of 160 feet was good enough to win that event on Saturday.

Also winning in the field events were Perry Stow, who won the pole vault at 15 feet, Keith Medinger, whose leap of 21 feet, five-and-a-half inches, took the long jump, Ahmad Kazimi, victorious in the triple jump with a leap of 46 feet, four inches, and George Lang, who tossed the hammer 145 feet, eight inches, to lead the field in the hammer throw.

The next meet for the Irish will be this Saturday, as they will be competing in the Arkansas State Invitational in Jonesboro.

Varsity cagers to miss tourney

At just about this time every year depression runs rampant at Notre Dame. Spring break is over, finals grow nearer and nearer, and studies leave little time for anything else -- except Bookstore Basketball, that is.

But whether or not the hazardous tournament, the campus' last gasp before do-or-die throating, will be the same as in the past, remains a mystery.

The National Collegiate Athletic Association, after being notified by sources at Providence College that members of Notre Dame's varsity basketball squad participate in this event, questioned the eligibility of the Irish cagers who are involved—which is just about all of them.

And Bookstore Commissioner Leo Latz, after talking to NCAA officials at Shawnee Mission, Kansas, on Thursday of last week, didn't seem too optimistic about the athletes' eligibility. Although an official decision won't be made until tomorrow or Wednesday, Latz has reason to believe that this will mark the first time that the varsity members won't be able to participate in the Bookstore Tournament.

Let's go back a couple of months and recap how the NCAA's involvement in this matter came about.

Earlier this semester, Steve Lichtenfels, a junior at Providence, aspired to begin a similar tourney at the Rhode Island school. A native of West Hartford, Conn., Lichtenfels was hometown friends with former Bookstore Commissioner Tim "Bone" Bourett, and had been exposed to the An Tostal tournament upon visits to South Bend.

Lichtenfels, hoping to emulate the Notre Dame tourney, checked with former Friar cage coach and current Athletic Director Dave Gavitt to see if Providence varsity members would be permitted to play. Gavitt, who will coach the U.S. Olympic squad in 1980, was more than happy with the idea. In fact, he saw the tournament as a means of creating interest in the basketball program on campus. All well and good, except...

Then, just to make matters clear, Gavitt phoned the NCAA to make sure that his athletes wouldn't be doing anything illegal by participating in this all-for-fun tourney. And the Providence coach was quite surprised when his varsity players were given a strong "no" to go ahead and play.

Naturally, the caller from out East responded to the tune of, "Well, how come Notre Dame does it?"

This triggered a plea of innocence from the NCAA Board of Enforcement and its director, David Berst. Berst, in a March 22 letter to Athletic Director Edward "Moose" Krause, claimed that the NCAA knew nothing of the eight-year-old tournament, let alone the publicity which Sports Illustrated accorded to it last May.

Berst, in his letter, wrote that "such participation by members of the university's intercollegiate basketball team would be contrary to the provisions of NCAA Constitution 3-9(c)."

That part of the NCAA manual, which deals
