Iranian Parliament prepares for hostage debate

(AP) Iran's parliament prepared to open debate today on the American hostages amid renewed calls for a U.S. apology and spy trials. A major Canadian newspaper said secret negotiations for release of the 52 Americans have been under way for three months in an effort to solve the crisis before the U.S. presidential elections.

President Carter, speaking in Corpus Christi, Texas, said recent statements by Iranian officials "might very well lead to resolution" of the 10-month-old crisis soon. It was not clear whether Carter had been informed by then of Iran's reiteration Monday that the United States must apologize for past actions.

In Washington, a more subdued Secretary of State Edmund S. Muskie said "it would be a mistake to raise expectations" of a solution and that attempts to negotiate directly or through third parties have failed.

Omission of an often-stated apology demand from a list of conditions Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini announced last Friday had raised hopes in some quarters that the chances of solution to the crisis had improved.

But parliament speaker Hashemi Rafsanjani and two influential religious leaders said the regime has not dropped its demand that the United States apologize—a demand Carter has rejected in the past.

Iran's parliament, which as authority to decide what becomes of the hostages, is to begin its debate Tuesday, according to Iranian news media.

Islamic militants who seized the United States' Tehran embassy and its American staff last November 4 have called the embassy a "spy nest" and demanded the Americans be tried as spies.

President Abolhassan Bani Sadr has said he opposes such trials, but the Parliament, or Majlis, is dominated by fundamentalist Moslems opposed to his moderate views. Khomeini's demand list also had failed to mention spy trials.

LaFollette speaks out on genetics

By Michael Mader
Staff Reporter

Douglas LaFollette, speaking to a group of 200 students and South Bend residents last night in the Library Auditorium, denounced research into genetic engineering and warned that the world must alter its technological/expansionist views.

Given the breakthrough of genetic engineering in recent years, coupled with society's view of "progress always,"

Registration for all

Riehle to announce vote drive

By Sue Kelleher

Student Body President Paul Riehle will announce tonight a plan to register as many students as possible for the November 4 local and national elections, doing so through deputy registrars and shuttle buses to downtown South Bend.

As in past election years, Student Government is faced with the task of obtaining easy access to voter registration for its students. Customary procedures, as dictated by St. Joseph County, have been to allow in-person registration through October 6.

Registration through an on-campus deputy registrar is also allowed, but the deadline for this process is this Friday. Riehle claims these procedures are inadequate for two reasons: First, although the time element allowed for in-person registration is fair, it is difficult for many students to get to city hall during the week. Second, registering through a deputy registrar is "wholly inadequate," according to Riehle, in that each registrar is allotted only 50 registration forms, far too few for the number of students who wish to register. Riehle says there is much reluctance on the part of the county to amend these policies.

In anticipation of these inconveniences, Riehle will propose a service designed to alleviate these problems at tonight's Hall Presidents' Council meeting. Riehle plans to rent buses to shuttle students between campus and City Hall so that students may register in person and take advantage of the later deadline. An additional motive in implementing such a service is that, if successful, the county will recognize the need to amend its policies and will act affirmatively.

In the meantime, registration sponsored by the Notre Dame Student Lobby will take place in both the North and South dining halls from 5 to 6 p.m.

Riehle encourages all students to register. He believes that student input is crucial and could make or break the future of off-campus life, which he perceives to be the growing trend. All off-campus residents are reminded that there will be a meeting tomorrow night. Details will follow on the Riehle proposal and Wednesday's meeting in The Observer later this week.

A complex problem

The causes of recession

by A. J. Dregalla

Recession is a major issue of our times. It is an economic state of being which seems to be a pervasive part of our society. It is also, however, something that very few people seem to really understand.

The term "recession" has various definitions, but the two major areas of concern are the economic and political standpoints. To learn about these standpoints, we talked to several resident experts in these fields.

Economically, says Prof. Bob Borengasser, of the Business/Economics Department at Saint Mary's, recession has a very definite technical definition: "two successive quarters of negative growth of the real (adjusted for price changes) Gross National Product, or in other words, six months of downturn in our real output designates recession". Borengasser's definition is interesting since, according to economic indicators, we have had only three definite months of downturn. The country is still in the quarter that will determine the recessionary status, and indicators are that this quarter, when completed, may show a slight upturn. If this occurs, then according to Borengasser, "there will be no real recession in 1980". However, lay people looking at statistics indicative of economic growth will still feel we are in a recession, and they have good reason to think so.

Focus

The real GNP rose as a rate of 1.2 percent in the first quarter of 1980, but fell at a rate of 9.1 percent in the second quarter of this year. The term "recession" will not be used officially by gov't officials until there is downturn in the third quarter, but if, as Borengasser indicates, there is upturn, then we may have experienced the shortest recession on record.

While all of the strictly economic aspects of recession are necessary to understand, it is obvious that the side which evokes the most controversy is the political side. Two major issues which our government has to deal with economically are inflation and recession/unemployment. Historically, policy decisions intended to help one area almost inevitably harm the other area. This has been evident particularly during the past four years with the Carter Administration. "What Carter has been forced to do", reports Charles Wilber, chairman of the Economics Department at Notre Dame, "is walk a tight-rope, swaying back and forth from one problem to the other." This problem is due to the fact that what are considered true solutions for both these problems of inflation and recession are so radical that they are politically unsound. Solutions for these problems run the gamut from "the conservatives wanting to run a long, hard recession to try to squeeze out inflation, to the liberals wanting wage and price controls", Wilber emphasizes, "so the President is forced into making minor adjustments. They just trim government spending a very little to curve

President Carter told Texans yesterday that the man in the White House has to answer the most difficult questions on earth without embarrassing the nation and suggested that Ronald Reagan couldn't do it. "... When he has spoken on his own the last few days, he's gotten himself in trouble," Carter said. He also chided the Republican Presidential nominee for declaring that the United States should accept newly stated — and since revised — Iranian terms for release of the 52 American hostages remaining in Iran. "The last thing that any political candidate" should do is set into negotiations with Tehran with public statements, Carter said.

Dentures may be replaced by implantation in the future, a subject on which Harvard Dental School will begin a five-year, $800,000 study this month to compare implanted teeth with dentures conventionally used to replace missing teeth. Dentists have been implanting teeth for about 10 years, but there are questions about how efficient the implants are and how long they will last. Some patients are inappropriately given implants, said Dr. Paul Schnitman, who will conduct the study with Dr. Leonard Shulman. "A dentist takes a two-day course and offers it to his patients without enough information on the risks and benefits." A similar study has been going on for three years at five Veterans Administration centers.

Fashion designer Halston brought his colorful, flattering designs and a covey of elegant models to China on Monday to give this country its first American fashion show. His mission is to show China's textile manufacturers — long accustomed to the practical requirements of sturdy work clothes — how they can use their fine silks to make garments for sale in the West and here. After spurning such luxuries for decades, China has given it's official blessing to dresses, diversity and color. The press regularly reports that the number of styles available here is increasing for women who want to look attractive and distinct.

More important, China wants to sell its textiles and garments abroad and is looking for advice. That's where Roy Halston Frowick can help. Especially with silk. — AP would win if the election were held today in Indiana, an election study showed yesterday. Dr. Brian S. Vargus, a sociologist at Indiana University, Purdue University at Indianapolis, directed the election poll, which he says confirms earlier findings of dismay and disillusionment among Hoosier voters. The poll shows 38 percent of the state's voters don't know who they'd vote for in the presidential race, with 37 percent casting straw votes for Republican nominee Ronald Reagan, 22 percent for Pres. Carter and 3 percent for Independent candidate John Anderson.

The latest poll, taken state wide Sept. 11-14 among 810 registered voters, reveals little feeling in favor of any presidential candidate, and a surprising number of voters who don't know who is running for Indiana's seat in the U. S. Senate. — AP

A bomb squad from nearby Greeneville, Tenn., detonated a hand grenade that a group of children found Sunday night in Cherokee Lake. Hamblen County sheriff's deputies said Phyllis Grooms called officials when her children brought the grenade home after finding it on the muddy lake bottom in Evergreen Cove. Deputies noticed the pin was missing and called the Greeneville Police Department's bomb squad for help. Bomb specialist John Jones tested the grenade and found it was live. Jones said that when the pin was originally pulled, the pincher apparently did not make contact. He said the grenade could have gone off at any time with a sudden jolt.

The sixth escape from the "escape-proof" Metropolitan Correctional Center in San Diego was the most daring — a 140-foot drop down the outside wall of the federal prison. Frank Perez-Martinez, a convicted cocaine distributor, used sheets braided into a rope for his escape before dawn on Saturday. He was sentenced in Los Angeles to 15 years in prison. Perez-Martinez, 37, a Peruvian, stuffed a prison uniform jump suit with sheets and left it in his bed to look like a man sleeping. Then he broke his ninth-floor cell window and slipped out. The downtown skyscraper prison was described as escape-proof when it opened six years ago. All five prisoners who escaped before Perez-Martinez, have been recaptured.

Wanted: mind-full journalists

It need be brought to no thinking person's attention that the present emphasis in our society on a "vo-tech" concept of education is restrictive, short-sighted and potentially dangerous. This fact is clear and demonstrable. And, to be fair, it should be noted that this university has tried to stay away from a vocational training idea of education — at least in theory.

So who is responsible for the present scholastic setup in which the business major laments and the engineer feels trapped? If it is not the schools themselves it is in equal parts the times and the students who, in the near-sighted folly of youth, actually think that an employer will demand that they "do it right" the first day on their precious job. This kind of thinking is so pervasive today that even those who should know better subscribe to it, and within the last few days a reflection of this thinking has come to us in the form of debate on the pages of The Observer.

Since the debate is centered on journalism and communications, I can't help but step into the fray. John McGrath, in this column last Tuesday, proposed that the University utilize a more structured approach to journalism and communications. Two days later, on the editorial page, a woman rebutted McGrath's argument by pointing out that the University has a wonderful communications department which — with the proper cross listings — will teach you everything you need to access a career in the broadcast journalism fields.

It is a rather short-sighted argument on both sides, for it assumes that a concentration of technical knowledge is necessary and constructive on the college level. It is particularly clear that in journalism a concern with technical knowledge should be secondary — and a long second at that.

Let's think about it for a second. From your television correspondent would you rather he know how to play the camera or give you some insight into the "Palestinian problem?" From your print correspondent, would you rather he knew the history of the printing press or be able to explain for you the mumblings of economists? A journalist's job is to package, each day, a coherent set of insights into the troubles and subtleties of the world. Would you rather he know well those problems, or the package they come in?

Mark Rust

But he must eventually know "the package," the technical elements that are important in his presentation, and that is the purpose of practical experience. Indeed, real learning doesn't occur with, say, a camera until a few weeks' experience allows the user to employ it properly in a difficult, non-textbook situation.

But in our present simplistic society, those of us headed for a career in journalism and communications have a hard time distinguishing the professional's profession from his intellectual approach to it. And it must be noted that most educators have done little to teach us that distinction. Instead they have, for the most part, sold out to the market demands of a decreasing amount of students with increasingly narrow educational demands.

Using an institution like Indiana University as an example, it is clear that when a student pursues a journalism major his education is immediately in jeopardy. Rather than offer to the would-be journalist what he needs to do his job — a coherent view of world pattern and relationships — the journalism school seeks to justify its own existence with courses like "Libel," a ridiculous subject for undergraduates to pursue formally, or "Styles in Paste-Up," which can be learned through experience and is about as ephemeral as most libel precedents. Why not, instead, teach these people grammar, which some of them sorely need.

They don't need to know the difference between modular and wrap-around layout, and neither do we need them to know it. We need them to know sociology, psychology, philosophy, geology, biology, economics ... even theology and literature. If the communications students of today don't get it now, don't be surprised in the future when they have nothing to communicate.

Homecoming activities begin

Homecoming began its activities this Monday with its "Find the Blue" clue contest in The Observer. Clues will appear through Thursday, with the answer due into the Student Union offices (7757) by Friday. The first person with the correct answer will receive a Homecoming packet.

There will be a button distribution at the dining halls Wednesday during dinner. The "Blue is Thru!" buttons are to be worn all Homecoming Week to show spirit. Also, Homecoming dance tickets will begin to be sold at this time. The cost is $6 a couple.

The Homecoming Banner Contest will begin judging around 4 p.m. on Thursday. Cleverness, color, and imagination (minus vulgarity) are the judging criteria. Banner registration is in the SU offices during business hours all this week. First prize is a set of Michigan tickets; second prize is a pair of Poco concert tickets; and third prize is a Homecoming Dance ticket.

Also Thursday, at both dining halls, is Alumni Dress-Up Night. Students should dress as they will appear as a visiting alum in about 30 years. Imaginative dress will be commended. Additionally, the Amazing Kreskin will appear at Angela Athletic Facility at 8 p.m. later that evening.

Friday is a full and exciting day. There will be a Car Decorating Contest at Stepan Center beginning at 4 p.m. Registration for this event, prizes for which include Michigan, Poco, and homecoming tickets, will be all week at the Student Union offices in Lafortune. Registration will be limited to 20 vehicles. Vehicles must also have had no major changes done prior to the contest. These decorated vehicles will then proceed at 6:25 p.m. to form Homecoming's Car Parade, which will wind around campus, meet the Notre Dame Marching Band, and kick off the "Blue is Thru!" Pep Rally.

Fireworks will follow the end of the rally. Poco will then entertain the campus community in the ACC. Tickets are available in the SU Ticket Office.

Saturday's highlight, the clash between the Fighting Irish and the Wolverines, promises to be an interesting matchup. Later on that evening, Homecoming '80 presents "An Evening of Dance" at Century Center, from 9 p.m. to 2 a.m. Packet holders should get their tickets today at the SU Ticket Office. General sales begin Wednesday, in the dining halls.

... Recession

inflation. A faster trimming would cause more unemployment". Wilber also commented, "Reagan would probably reduce inflation faster, but the cost would be higher unemployment...Carter will not cause that unemployment, it doesn't fit into party policy--it's not for the little guy."

Borengasser differs from Wilber's philosophy in that he believes, "the late 70's were misguided times, which we paid for over one bad period earlier this year. During the late 70's the monetary authorities supported large federal deficit spending by rapid increase in the supply of money. This caused rising inflation and produced an unstable economic environment which led to our present recession." Borengasser sees things changing though. He sees the Federal Reserve Board finally changing to one which is less inflationary. He believes a fundamental problem to be the government policy of deficit spending. Borengasser also sees the ordinary people as contributing to the problem. "Most people think that the cost of government is covered by the amount we pay in taxes, but this is not true. Our government has been for some time, operating with a deficit which is paid for by inflation, meaning that we pay anyway. It would be better if we just paid the tax directly, which means working with a balanced budget. "For this reason, Borengasser sees tax cuts as "a crazy idea". "If the government gives tax breaks and continues working with a large deficit, it will kill our economic recovery."

Craig Hartzler, of the Saint Mary's Government Department, oscillates from this view in that he believes, "we need tax relief". He agrees that "while the economy is not doing well, and inflation is high, tax cuts would just increase the problems later". "Once the election is over, we have a better perspective of our country's needs, and the economy is healthy, yes, in the long run, we need tax relief," concluded Hartzler.

On the issue of election politics influencing policy in the area of recession, Wilber adds, "the incumbent usually pursues an expansionary plan to solve the recession about six months prior to the election so the economy is booming by election time. Carter hasn't done this to any great extent. In the administrations judgement, inflation is a more politically damaging issue than the recession".

COSMIC COALESCENCE

Where does science fiction end and reality begin? It's all in the mind's eye. Be it the creative imagination used to produce Star Wars, The Black Hole, and The Empire Strikes Back, or the more scientific approach of hypothesis testing and experimentation, the distant galaxies of science fiction coalesce into reality with the advanced technology now being developed at a company called TRW.

It was the Defense and Space Systems Group of TRW who made possible the Viking Lander biological experiment which looked for life on Mars and the High Energy Astronomical Observatory which looks for quasars, pulsars and black holes in deep space. Professionals at TRW-DSSG are now involved in such impressive technologies as high energy lasers, communications systems, plus other future projects still considered science fiction.

November 4th nears

Campus politicos campaign

By David Rickabaugh

As the November 4 election draws near, campus political organizations have started registration drives and gathering workers to prepare for the fall campaign.

The Republican organization is working with a large force of volunteers for candidate John Hiler in his bid to unseat the incumbent Third District representative, House Majority Whip John Brademas. Republicans have also been campaigning for Rep. Dan Quayle in his attempt to defeat Sen. Birch Bayh for a U.S. Senate seat.

College Republicans spokesman Marc Halsema feels that students sent out on precinct work will have an influence on the Hiler and Quayle contests. In the presidential race the Republicans expect "no problems" in carrying Indiana for Ronald Reagan.

Halsema commented, "During the campaign, the Republicans will try to gain exposure by conducting a very visible and vocal campaign on campus, and will also give aid to the county effort." Halsema said they are also in the process of organizing a large contingent of volunteers to contact voters on the telephone and by door-to-door campaigning.

GOP regional headquarters are providing the campus Republicans with assistance in the Hiler race, while the national, as well as the regional, headquarters are aiding the campus effort in the Quayle/Bayh contest, since Sen. Bayh has been targeted by the Senatorial Republican Committee as one of the six members of Congress who must be evicted from office by the Republicans.

The Democratic camp has 110 volunteers working mainly on the Brademas campaign. On the national level, Jim Murphy of the Young Democrats campus organization feels, "the Carter people have been invisible in Indiana and especially at Notre Dame."

A voter registration drive will kick off the Democratic campaign. The local organization is trying to arrange Rep. Brademas, Democratic Party Chairman Robert Strauss, or a member of the Carter family to speak on campus. The campus Democrats are also going to provide the regional headquarters with volunteers.

Supporters of independent candidate John Anderson feel they have already influenced the election greatly by virtue of the work they did to have Anderson's name placed on the primary ballot in the Third District. The Anderson supporters admit that Indiana is a strong Reagan state.

Campaigning for Anderson will concentrate in the fund-raising area. They will circulate literature at Notre Dame football games, conduct a door-to-door campaign, and have J.J. Friedman, a representative from the Anderson state campaign headquarters in Indianapolis, speak on campus. Frank Tighe, who ran as an Anderson delegate in Illinois in March, of the Anderson staff predicts, "out of every two votes on campus, one will be for Anderson."

.. LaFollette

he asked about left-handedness, skin color, height and eye color. The audience response diminished rapidly.

LaFollette questioned the audience further. "Who will you trust to decide what is a good gene and what is a bad gene? The United States government? The presidents and boards of corporations such as Dupont and Dow Chemical?" LaFollette asked amid chuckles from the group. "How about the tenured faculty at Notre Dame? How about twelve good friends?" As the uneasy silence spread through the group, LaFollette elicited a few self-conscious laughs as he qualified his last question — "In a church basement?"

To illustrate genetic engineering's possible effects on the world, LaFollette described what has been accomplished since 1970, and what could be accomplished. So far, scientists have learned the functions of chromosomes, how to fuse two species together, and even to extend through four generations a mixture between a mouse and a human, LaFollette said.

Predictions for the future include the ability to change genetic structures in order to enhance certain traits in humans, such as blond hair, the ability to clone and test-tube fertilization, according to LaFollette. One scientist even suggests that we fuse human genes with those of plants, giving humans the ability to photosynthesize, "so we can walk around in the sun and make energy," LaFollette stated pseudo-incredulously.

LaFollette went on to defend the need for a new world view. "Genetic engineering is the final step, perhaps, in the current mechanistic world view. The only alternative is an entropic world view," LaFollette said. The new world view must be that nature is essentially valuable and good until humans exploit it for progress, LaFollette explained.

Our present world view, put forth by five men LaFollette terms "the Fearsome Five,"

'Days of Heaven'

Concerns Film Series Continues

The Social Concerns Film Series continues this week with tonight's showing of "Days of Heaven." The film is the story of young persons on a journey from oppressive factory work in Chicago to the Texas panhandle on the brink of WW I. The tensions experienced on the Texas farm and the contrast between rich and poor are brilliantly portrayed by writer-director Terence Malick. As a whole, the film is a provocative mix of sight, sound, emotion and illusion, and is an extremely accessible work of art. "Days of Heaven" will be shown in the Engineering Auditorium tonight at 6:00, 8:00, and 11:00. The cost is $1.00.

"Rebellion in Patagonia," one of Argentina's most popular films in recent years is a true portrayal of the early strikes by Argentine workers as a result of brutal military suppression. This colorful action movie is set in the southernmost province of Argentina and is beautifully filmed against the rugged panorama of the gorgeous pampas and snow-capped Andes Mountains. The film forcefully depicts moving and enlightening characterizations of the main protagonists in this historical drama, including the anarcho-syndicated leaders of the workers' movement, inspired by utopian dreams of a truly just and humane social order in Argentina. In Spanish dialogue with English subtitles, this 1974 eye-opener was directed by Hector Olivera. "Rebellion in Patagonia" will be shown on Wednesday, September 17, in the Engineering Auditorium and on Thursday, September 18, in Washington Hall. The film will be shown in both locations at 6:00, 8:00, and 11:00 p.m.; admission is free.

"Salt of the Earth" is a semi-documentary film which recreates an actual year-long strike of Mexican American zinc miners in New Mexico. The film consists of three inter-woven plots: men against their bosses, wives against husbands, and Mexican workers against affluent "anglos." The drama centers on the intricate, evolving relationship between one of the strikers (Juan Chacon) and his wife (Rosaura Revuelto). Initially, he objects to her participating in the strike, but when a court injunction bars the men from picketing, the women take over and eventually force the company to capitulate. Directed by Herbert Dibermann, the film will be shown Friday at 8:00 p.m. in Washington Hall. Admission is free.

"Controlling Interest: The World of the Multi-National Corporation" will be shown at 12:15 p.m. today and tomorrow in the LaFortune Student Center Auditorium on the first floor. This 45-minute documentary shows the inexorable concentration of the world's wealth resources in the hands of a few self-serving multi-national corporations which have no loyalty to any country and whose corporate decisions are based solely on making profits. This is a committed film, arguing against the multi-national company, rather than presenting both sides of the question. The exclusive interviews with major corporate executives is especially enlightening. Admission to this 1978 documentary is free.

Women students air concerns

The Advisory Council of Women Students is a campus organization designed to provide a "direct access" to the administration to air the concerns of women living both on and off campus.

The Council which has been in existence since the beginning of co-education at Notre Dame, selected its present hall representatives last spring. The Council meets once a month at which time women students are asked to air their concerns. The following is a list of the hall council members: Badin: Tami Tavis, 6968; Breen-Phillips: Kelly Leahy, 1331; Farley: Maureen Shagena, 6865; Lewis: Jeanine Blatt, 4630; Lyons: Mary Ellen Caiati, 7916; Walsh: Nancy Judge, 8085; Villa Angela: Carmela Esposito; Off-Campus: Anne Fultz.

Medieval music specialists perform for Artist's series

The University Artists Series continues its early season schedule tomorrow night with a performance by The Jongleurs, highly-acclaimed specialists of Medieval and Renaissance music. The concert will be at 8 p.m. in Sacred Heart Church.

The Jongleurs, comprised of four men and two women, have been performing throughout the United States in the past six years. They made their New York debut in 1978 and have been heard nationally on syndicated radio broadcasts. The group's talent, scholarship, and virtuosic ability makes it one of the most exciting and sought-after ensembles in the field today.

For the Notre Dame community, The Jongleurs will perform music from "London British Museum Additional 29987 Manuscript," written in the late fourteenth century.

This marks the third concert sponsored by the University Artists Series in the young season. The Michiana Pops Symphonette, led by conductor Zigmont G. Gaska, presented a pair of concerts on the lawn in front of the Dome the past two Wednesdays.

Let's Take Care of Our Own

Anthony Walton

TV NEWS BULLETIN, October 15, 1980

The latest wave of the so-called "East River Boat People" arrived in Manhattan today, bringing to 15,000 the total number of refugees from the urban ghettos of New York.

There are also reports from Detroit, Chicago, Los Angeles, and Houston concerning the same phenomena. These refugees are reportedly asking for economic asylum, positive displacement to other areas of the country, and sponsors in their quests for new opportunities in life. To get the full and complete story, WHY-TV has dispatched ace correspondent Gerald Rivers to the scene. Gerald?

"Thanks, Frank. This is Gerald Rivers at the landing point for the refugees, a converted wharf in South Ferry, near the World Trade Center. I have with me one of the latest arrivals, one Mr. Freeman Jones, and he's going to give us some details. So Freeman, would you please explain what is going on here, I mean what's the purpose of all this?"

"Man, you from 60 minutes? Where's that Rather dude? I don't be talking to no jive cats."

"He's coming, he's coming. Please just answer a few questions for us. Like what exactly is going on?"

"Well man, it's like this. Back up in the Bronx we been watching the tube the last few years and we was noticing all these boat peoples coming from all over talking about getting a new start and how the United States be the land of opportunity, so we decided to come and get ours."

"But how can you come to the U.S. when you were here already?"

"Man, that's why we be using the boats. We figures that if we comes downtown on the subway nobody would notice us, or else they be calling out the army.

They just say what these folks be coming around here for? Why don't they stay up there in Harlem? Dig? Like in the blackout, they just say all them niggers is crazy! So we figures the way to get noticed is to come in like them Cubans and Viet Congs, you know, boat peoples."

"But I still don't understand why you came here as refugees, why didn't you talk to your congressman?"

"Man you crazy? That dude been promising stuff for years, and don't nothing be changing. But we seen them boat peoples on '60 Minutes' getting sponsors and moving out to the country and we just want our piece of the rock, you know? So we here. Where you from man?

Why don't you be my sponsor? I want to go to Connecticut."

"Sorry Freeman, I don't think so. By the way, where did you get the boats?"

"We built 'em man. There's so many old raggedy buildings up there that we just took books and tires and stuff and tied it together. We didn't have to come all that far, you know."

"Where did you leave from?"

"Myself, I got on up at Yankee Stadium, but I heard there's more folks leaving from up at 125th in Harlem. Now where's my sponsor? Hell, I'll even go to Jersey, man. I ain't picky. Son of a gun, there goes that Rather cat, I'm gonna be on '60 Minutes.' Hey Dan my man, wait up!"

"And with that this is Gerald Rivers signing off..."

Forgive my facetiousness and consider this: the United States has a long tradition of welcoming in the "tired, huddled masses" of other countries, while virtually ignoring the problems of groups indigenous to its soil. All of this is once again apparent during the ongoing saga of the latest group of refugees, the Cubans. We have been treated to the initial drama of the influx, the stories of escapes and releases, the searches and reunions, the happiness and pain. We have seen a difficult summer of adjustment on the part of many of the Cubans, and are now watching a fall of discontent on the part of some of the others. The riots and hijackings are occurring with an alarming frequency, enough of which to make me wonder why this always happens, why we seem so anxious to welcome the world, and in the process further bury certain native segments of our society.

William Wells Brown, in 1863, wrote this concerning a runaway slave who died trying to reach freedom: "Had Clotel escaped from oppression in any other land, in the disguise in which she fled from the Mississippi to Richmond, and reached the United States, no honor within the gift of the American people would have been too good to have been heaped upon the heroic woman. But she was a slave, and therefore out of the pale of sympathy. They have tears to shed over Greece and Poland; they have an abundance of sympathy for 'poor Ireland'; they can furnish a ship of war to convey the Hungarian refugees from a Turkish prison to the 'land of the free and the home of the brave.' They boast that America is the 'cradle of liberty'; if it is, I fear they have rocked the child to death."

It is as if this were written yesterday, yet it was written almost 125 years ago. The more things change, the more they stay the same. Another cliché, but as clichés usually go, sadly true.

I will leave you with another very old quote, said by Carl Sandburg before the race riots in 1919. Again, it is ominously topical: "The slums will take their revenge." Watts, Chicago, Newark, Detroit...Miami...

Unselfish Selfishness

Fr. Bill Toohey

Many of ourself-obsessed self-help books, like Looking Out for Number One, Creative Aggression, With Deception and Bluff and Winning Through Intimidation, located in the trash section of your local bookstore, seem at first glance easy pickings for a Christian critique. Their self-centered message appears directly opposed to that of the Gospel, with its injunctions against selfishness. I've been wondering, however, if there is not a kind of selfishness totally consistent with our faith.

For a long time, we Christians have been accused of advocating a kind of unholy docility, accepting reality all too passively. Albert Camus wrote frequently of his dislike for Christians who climbed onto crosses precisely so that they might be seen from a long distance. We have witnessed in this century that unbelievable loss of power to resist evil forces that led to the rise of Hitler and the death of six million of our Jewish brothers and sisters. If only thousands had witnessed against the paralysis and powerlessness of society at that time.

This is oftentimes where the problem comes in. It is the lack of power, not its superabundance. It is the powerlessness of apathy that is the root of all evil. Sin itself is the flight from action. The opposite of love, Rollo May rightly insists, is not hatred; it is apathy. And we know the old adage: "All it takes for great evil to be done is for a lot of good people to do nothing."

It may look like acting for number one is a betrayal of acting for others, but I would like to suggest just the opposite. In a way, selfishness is a way to unselfishness. Most of our sinfulness is the result of passivity, the result of our not having enough self-power to overcome our do-nothing stance.

We may feel we are humble and good Christians, as we stand in the middle of the world's evil, doing nothing. It may seem pious not to want power, to be docile, passive. It may appear realistic to adopt the myth of impotence: "I can't do anything." In so doing, however, we deny responsibility and, frequently, our freedom of choice--that which makes us unique among creatures.

If the power of evil can get us to stop exercising our freedom to choose and act, then we are captive, and already experiencing a kind of hell.

This is precisely the insight contained in that marvelous passage about the Grand Inquisitor in Sostoevsky's classic novel, The Brothers Karamozov. Jesus, the prisoner, is being grilled by the Cardinal, who is the Grand Inquisitor of the Inquisition. He accuses Jesus of making a tremendous mistake when He refused to turn stones into bread in the desert, which would have caused the crowds to run after him:

Choosing bread, you would have satisfied the universal and everlasting craving of humanity--to find someone to worship. But what happened? Instead of taking man's freedom away from him, you made it greater than ever. You wondered what that freedom was worth if obedience is bought with bread. You desired man's free love, that he should follow you freely. In place of the rigid ancient law, man must hereafter with free heart decide for himself what is good and what is evil, having only your image before him as his guide.

And so the great temptation for Jesus was that He should take away our freedom and become our Superstar, dazzling us with miracles that would effectively eliminate the burden of having to gamble and trust that He is the one we should proclaim as Lord. Jesus was tempted to remove the necessity for faith.

I'm wondering if we are entirely happy with His decision. At times, I suspect we resent the fact that He refused to free us from the burden of freedom. We don't always like the challenge of having to choose, taking responsibility for a stand, deciding in our own conscience the course of action. We may join with those thousands of Catholics who prefer to abdicate their freedom, the shared responsibility decreed to them by Vatican II. Like the followers of Archbishop Lefebvre (and not totally unlike those of James Jones of Jonestown), they wish to be controlled and totally subservient to a powerful priestly cult.

How well the Grand Inquisitor knows us. In the final, chilling speech to Jesus, he says:

We have corrected your work, and have founded it upon miracle, mystery and authority. And men rejoiced that they were again led like sheep, and that the terrible gift that had brought them such suffering was, at last, lifted from their hearts. Who can rule men if not he who holds their conscience and their bread in his hands. We shall persuade them they will only become free when they renounce their freedom to us and submit to us.

We are all susceptible to that temptation. Consequently, we do well to "look out for number one." For, to do that can mean the realization that we need the power of Another. Looking out for number one can mean looking out and seeing our weakness, insufficiency, inadequacy and immaturity. It can prompt us to turn to the power of God, residing in the man Jesus.

In the end, that type of looking out for number one (looking to the power of God in the face of evil and our own death-dealing apathy) is also to look out for all others. Thus what seems to be selfish is actually powerfully unselfish; for, once His power is within us and His Spirit leading us, we find ourselves looking out beyond ourselves to those in this wounded world who call to us.

LIVE AT CENTURY CENTER

Second City Delivers, but Audience Unresponsive

Kevin Korowicki

True to form, Second City displayed their comical genius that has been their trademark for twenty years last Friday night at Century Center. Beginning the show with a scene in a hospital emergency room, the troupe swiftly needled away at social classes, the start of an evening of lampooning the American Way. Second City's unique method of examining social mores is to expose humor in situations where humor is generally thought not to exist.

The setting for this performance was the Conventional Hall of Century Center, which had been arranged into a banquet hall. Round tables capable of seating five couples, and a cash bar, provided Second City with a club atmosphere. This mood is important to the troupe as they play to the audience, and encourage audience participation.

In this case, audience response was divided. A crowd of Indiana Cemetery Association members, and elderly Michiana area residents, often looked puzzled during skits, or laughed politely. Other audience members were enthusiastic.

Digs at Elkhart and Goshen were included in some skits to personalize the show. In one sketch in particular, the famous scene with Sister Mary Innocence and the VD clinic, a Second City-er claimed to have caught the disease from St. Joe's River. Gurley-Leep and Notre Dame were also incorporated into the show, but the audience was largely unresponsive. The University-related sketches, concerning a final exam, a philosophical Monopoly game in a dorm, and a Notre Dame quarterback's secret attraction for Harlequin Romances were a generation away from the interests of this audience.

Some of the best skits are traditional favorites; the Doctor Shirley Kinsey classroom sex lecture is a great parody of the sexual hang-ups of the fast-paced American society. A bar-room scene gives unexpected insight into a homosexual encounter.

"The Symphony of Social Criticism" was an example of the group's talent at improvisational comedy. Other well-executed skits of this type included a spoof of a Las Vegas act, and the selling of philosophy as a commercial product.

Second City concluded the performance with acknowledging "the unsung heroes" of the show, the seven wooden chairs used as the only props. As for personal recognition, Friday night's cast included Sandra Bogan, Mike Hagerty, Bob Clemens, John Kapelos, Jim Fay, Maureen McCarthy, pianist Ruby Streak, and stage manager Craig Taylor. Making his "homecoming" appearance was the newest member of the cast, Rick Thomas, a 1977 graduate of Notre Dame, and one of the founders of "The Keenan Revue."

Harriers boast experience

by Matt Huffman
Sports Writer

The Fighting Irish cross country squad will begin a new season this fall with a number of experienced runners from the past, and some encouraging potential for the future. Sixth year Coach Joe Piane feels confident that the team can have a good year.

"We've got a good mix on the squad," says Piane. "I'm really looking for our upperclassmen to provide some leadership for the incoming freshmen."

Among those returning from last year's squad are seniors John Filosa and Chuck Aragon, juniors Pat Sullivan and Tony Hatherly and sophomore Carl Bicchichi. Filosa and Aragon will serve as captains for the 1980 season.

Veterans Charlie Fox, Kevin Kinney, and Mike Maney also return, but are reported on the injured list. Their recovery should further bolster Irish depth.

If the abilities of this year's freshmen are any sign of things to come, the Notre Dame cross country program is on the upswing. "We had one of our best years in terms of recruiting. We've been able to pick up a number of good runners who impressed us with their high school performances," notes Piane.

Among those listed as possible standouts in the class of '84 is Ralph Zaron. Zaron ran a 9:02.2-mile as a senior in high school. Also named as freshmen elite were Andy Dillon, who placed second in Michigan cross country with a time of 9:11, and Dave Diebold who finished fourth in Indiana.

Two other freshmen, Tim Novak of Chesterton, Ind. and Dan Walsh of Chicago, are expected to brighten the Irish outlook even further.

After a long summer of hard workouts the Irish runners are looking forward to the beginning of the season.

"We had our upperclassmen running 85 miles a week, and we plan to continue that through the season," says Piane. "Though I haven't made it mandatory for the freshmen, most have been running about 85 miles a week anyway."

Once again the Irish long distance runners face a demanding and prestigious schedule. The first four events are scheduled to be run at Notre Dame, and the last two before the NCAA Championships are in Illinois and Ohio.

"I think the fact that we won't have to travel a great deal will work to our advantage in a big way, especially with our first four meets right here at home. This should give our runners, and most importantly our freshmen, a chance to establish themselves on a course they are used to," notes Piane.

The first event, the National Catholic Cross Country Meet, is scheduled for Friday, September 26. This is the first year for the meet which was planned and organized by Piane.

"We're hoping that this will be a good jumping off point for our team. This is the meet we are pointing towards."

"I'm looking for a good year for a number of reasons," says Piane. "First and most obvious, we have good talent. Second, we have good team unity, which is important. Cross country is a team sport, and in any athletic event a team has to be unified."

"Finally our team captains will need to provide leadership. I'm confident that Filosa and Aragon will provide it for us."

Mariners pound Sox

SEATTLE (AP)--Mario Mendoza drove in four runs, two of them in Seattle's nine-run third inning, to lead the Mariners to a 12-1 victory over the Chicago White Sox Monday night.

Seattle right-hander Rob Dressler, 4-8, scattered eight hits while pitching up his second complete game of the season.

The Mariners sent 14 batters to the plate while collecting six hits in their big third-inning outburst.

Jerry Narron and Dave Edler opened the inning with singles and Mendoza reached first on a bunt single to load the bases. A sacrifice fly by Julio Cruz scored Narron before Chicago starter Lamarr Hoyt walked Joe Simpson and Larry Milbourne to force in a run.

Bruce Bochte's sacrifice fly scored Mendoza with the third run before Dan Meyer doubled home Simpson and Milbourne and scored ahead of Rod Craig's third home run of the season.

Banner Contest

All entrants for the campus banner contest must sign up by tomorrow in the Student Union office to be eligible to win GA tickets to the Michigan game Saturday. Entrants can also register with their Hall social Commissioner.

The Toledo Rockets' women's field hockey team travelled to South Bend yesterday for matches at the Saint Mary's field. They came away with a pair of victories, shutting out the Belles, 2-0, and stifling Notre Dame, 1-0. (photos by John Macor) acon, DesCartes, Newton, Loch and Adam Smith, is that nature is essentially waste until we use technology to make it valuable, LaFollette added.

Earlier, when LaFollette was detailing the exponential rate which the extinction of species is following, going from a rate of one species per thousand years in the dinosaur age to a projected rate of one per hour by 1990, LaFollette commented that, "Five hundred thousand species will bite the genetic dust by the year 2000."

In response to a question about what can best be done to bring about the new world view, LaFollette answered, "by talking to students at Notre Dame." He went on to qualify his statement, saying that this student body's generation is the one that must decide which future the world will have.

"You can hit yourself with a rubber mallet and knock yourself out (you'd probably be better off in the long run) but the problems are not going to go away," LaFollette reminded the audience.

Rangers win;
Royals in ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Al Oliver's 2,000th career hit knocked in the first run of the game in the sixth inning and the Texas Rangers went on to beat the Oakland A's 2-0 Monday night and allow the Kansas City Royals to clinch at least a tie for the American League West title.

The Royals have a 17-game lead over the A's.

The 33-year-old Oliver, in his 13th major league season, joined Pete Rose and Rod Carew as the only active players with 2,000 hits and a lifetime .300 average.

Jon Matlack, 10-7, picked up the victory over Matt Keough, 15-13, who had allowed only one hit until the sixth inning, when he gave up an infield single to Mickey Rivers and walked John Grubb ahead of Oliver's single.

Officers said Tyrer and his wife each had a single gunshot wound to the head. A .38-caliber revolver was found near Tyrer, police said. Both bodies were on the floor near the bed.

Family members told police that Tyrer, who played offensive tackle for the Chiefs from 1961-1973, had been out of work recently, but gave no indication that he was depressed.

Emotional junior captain leads way for young Irish

by Beth Huffman
Sports Editor

Bob Crable leads by example; it's as simple as that.

"I just try to be myself," says Crable, the first junior to serve in a Notre Dame leadership role since Willie Fry in 1976, "and play to the best of my ability on the field."

And when the 6-3, 222-pound linebacker speaks, no matter how softly, his teammates listen.

"We're an emotional team on the field," said fellow Irish linebacker Mark Zavagnin after Notre Dame's 31-10 win over Purdue. "Bob Crable shows a lot of emotion on every play — he's got a way about himself, he's a heck of a leader."

Crable's captaincy talents have not gone unrecognized by the Notre Dame coaching corps either.

"His leadership is invaluable," says linebacker coach George

Bob Crable

Kelly. "He is very enthusiastic and demonstrates rather than yelling."

If Crable, who earned three varsity letters in football and one each in basketball and baseball at the famed Moeller High School in Cincinnati, Ohio, continues to set such outstanding examples on the field, the Irish have a bright future ahead.

The third child of seven in the family of John and Joan Crable, Bob tallied a Notre Dame season record of 187 stops last year as a sophomore, along with one interception, a blocked punt and a blocked field goal attempt against the Michigan Wolverines.

The blocked field goal in the closing seconds of last season's Notre Dame-Michigan clash preserved the 12-10 win for the Irish and, along with his team-leading 19 tackles, helped Crable to earn the UPI Midwest Defensive Player of the Week award.

"I thought about it earlier, what would happen if it came down to a last second field goal," reflects Crable, who led Notre Dame in nine of 11 games as top tackler including 26 stops against Clemson, tying all-America player Bob Golic's single game record. "I thought it was illegal to step on your own player, so when I went up I just thought about stopping the kick."

"I was just hoping he (Crable's Michigan footstool) would stay down after I went up."

Crable, a third team all-America selection in 1979 by AP and Football News feels the key to Saturday's Notre Dame-Michigan game lies in the trenches.

"We have to play at least as well against Michigan as we did against Purdue," says the business major that has received the Hering Award for the past two years as the most outstanding linebacker in spring practice. "The key to the game is in the line of scrimmage, both offensively and defensively. If we can control the line consistently, we'll be in good shape."

The Irish, idle last week due to ABC-TV shuffling, are heading into the match with Michigan with few worries, according to Crable, despite the two-week wait.

"I think it helps," says Crable of the free Saturday. "Looking back to last year when we went down to Purdue pretty flat, I was worried. But we've just tried to make it through last week, and this week we're working more intensely."

"Overall, though, our attitude is very good."

That attitude is, without a doubt, highly attributable to Bob Crable, and the example he sets for the young Irish squad on and off the field.

Former Chief kills wife, then himself

Kansas City, Mo. (AP) — Jim Tyrer, a former all-pro tackle for the Kansas City Chiefs football team, shot and killed his wife early Monday and then committed suicide, police reported.

Police said Tyrer, 41, and his wife, Martha, 40 were found in the upstairs bedroom of their two-story ranch home on the city's south side. A 17-year-old son told police that he heard three shots and found the bodies. Two other children, ages 11 and 13, were asleep at the time.

Police said the boy, fearful that someone had entered the home and was shooting members of the family, hid beneath his bed for an hour before going to his parents' bedroom about 5:50 a.m. He then called police.

'Breaking away'

Irish plan WCHA finale

by Brian Beglane
Sports Writer

The opening faceoff Oct. 24 in Colorado Springs starting Notre Dame's 1980-81 Western Collegiate Hockey Association season will signify the beginning of the end, and the end of what is hoped to be a new beginning.

Beginning of the end because it will mark the start of Notre Dame's last season as a member of the WCHA. End of a new beginning because that is when the Irish hope to start reaping the benefits of an upgraded promotional campaign, Breakaway.

And it's not too early to start thinking ahead to the season — the ice is going to be put down this week, and coach Lefty Smith's club starts on-ice drills next Monday.

The biggest push of the Breakaway campaign, which ran TV, radio and newspaper advertising throughout Michiana the entire month of August, has been the sale of season tickets. Ticket revenue is virtually the only source of income for the program, and so far the results have been satisfactory.

"We've been surprised and quite pleased with the results of the campaign," said Mike Busick, ticket manager for Notre Dame and one of the unofficial promotional directors for Breakaway. "We have educated a lot of people about hockey at Notre Dame and we hope for that to pay off in attendance this season."

The campaign has set goals of 2,000 season tickets to the general public and 800 to 1,000 for students. As of last Friday, totals showed between 500 and 600 sold to students and 1,200 to the public. Capacity for the Athletic and Convocation Center ice arena is 4,287.

"What we are really pushing for is the mark of 800 season ticket holders among the student body," emphasized Busick. "It's their team and why do we even have it unless it can get support from them? Our goal is 10 percent of the student body at Notre Dame and St. Mary's — we don't feel that is an impossible goal to attain. We have to have their support."

The season ticket deadline officially ended yesterday, but Busick added they will probably be available until the end of September. At that time he is going to evaluate the number of tickets left, and then target them for specific series and promotional nights. And an increase in promotional nights this season could spell trouble in obtaining game-by-game tickets during the year.

"We are shooting to sell out every game," Busick said, "and if season tickets sales go well, there may not be too many individual tickets to buy in the middle of the season. That's another reason we want students to buy tickets on a season basis — we don't want to see them shut out."

Promotional ideas such as a team mascot, increased use of the band at home games and group nights, such as selling blocks of tickets to individual dormitories, are all in the works. The Irish play their first home game Tuesday, Oct. 28, against Bowling Green and do not play a league series at home until Nov. 21-22.

Bowling Green will become a league opponent next year when the Irish jump over to the Central Collegiate Hockey Association.

Cut Branning

WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind. (AP) — Former Notre Dame basketball standout Rich Branning and Bob Roma of Princetown were released Monday by the Indiana Pacers, as coach Jack McKinney cut his roster to 14 players.

Branning, a 6-foot-3 guard, was a fourth-round draft pick.

Getting ready for what will be their last season in the WCHA, members of the Notre Dame hockey team are hoping for some real reasons to celebrate this season (photo by Greg Maurer).
