Trustees meet with students

By Paul Mullaney
Editor-in-chief

The Student Affairs Committee of the University's Board of Trustees yesterday met with student leaders for nearly four-and-a-half hours to receive student input on current campus issues.

Among the topics touched upon in the annual fall meeting were the campus social space problem, funding for dormitories, off-campus security and housing, and the restructuring of student government.

The Student Affairs Committee will review the proposals and requests made at yesterday's meeting, and will make recommendations to the entire Board, which convenes today.

Student Body President Paul Riehle, presenting the results of Tuesday's referendum, which approved the new constitution and student senate, proposed that the student senate be established to replace the Campus Life Council (CLC), as the main voice of student government.

Riehle stressed that students involved with the CLC have not received proper cooperation from faculty and staff members on the council. This according to Riehle, has not allowed the council to function properly as a legitimate student voice. Riehle said that the CLC has run its course, and asked the Trustees to ratify the student senate as an official voice which would make proposals directly to the office of Student Affairs.

Jane C. Pfeiffer, one of the committee members, suggested that the best way to solve any CLC inefficiencies might be to fix the system rather than tossing it aside.

Riehle had indicated that faculty and staff attendance was a rarity, and it restricted the CLC from accomplishing anything.

Pfeiffer suggested that enforcing by-laws which require attendance, and making other organizational improvements, will help solve the problem.

John A. Schneider, committee chairman, saluted Riehle's efforts to pass the student senate and the new constitution. He recommended that the student supply energy to help get the CLC running smoothly.

He also encouraged the student senate to approach the faculty senate and demand better representation in the CLC. He also felt that the student senate would be an excellent vehicle to identify the issues at hand.

Schneider said he would ask the Board to change the CLC preamble, the only part of the CLC by-laws that requires Board action for change. He will request the Board to allow substitution of the four current undergraduate CLC representatives (hall vice-presidents) with four representatives to be determined by the student senate.

Riehle accepted the committee's recommendations.

"We went to the well, and didn't come back thirsty," said Riehle. They gave us more than a fair hearing. After all, we kept them an hour-and-a-half overtime."

Riehle, who indicated his staff is prepared to begin immediate organization of the senate, offered to retain his post as chairman of the CLC. He indicated that the new student senate may be helpful in reviving the council.

The CLC has not been called together yet this semester. Riehle offered no target dates for convening a CLC meeting.

Don Murday, executive coordinator for Student Government, proposed that the LaFortune ballroom undergo immediate renovation into a Vegetable Buddies or coffeehouse-type setup in attempt to establish a social location where students can "hang out."

After showing series of slides in an attempt to show the trustees that the campus lacks social space, Murday emphasized that a short-term solution to this long-range problem is necessary.

Schneider, who said there is a need for a social location suggested that Murday go through other channels to seek funding for the project. Without ## Arms trade?

WLS-TV reports hostage deal

CHICAGO (AP) - WLS-TV reported yesterday that the American hostages have been returned to the U.S. Embassy in Tehran in preparation for a trip home as part of an arms deal with Iran. A state Department spokesman cited the report "totally false" but the station stood by its story.

"We may be wrong in some detail - we have said that on the air. But we will stand by the basis of the report. We feel a deal is in the works," said Tom Kuelbs, news director of WLS.

In Washington, State Department spokesman John Trattner also denied other aspects of the telecast, including a report that President Carter's jet, Air Force One, has been placed on standby to carry him to an Air Force base on the East Coast to meet with the hostages on their return to this country.

Last evening the station said one unconfirmed report "making the rounds" at the State Department is that all but four of the hostages would be released and that the four not freed would "remain for trial." That report was not repeated on the station's late night newscast.

On the 10 p.m. telecast the station reported four "highly placed" sources on three continents had confirmed the hostage deal was in the works. The station said the parts must be in there by noon today for the deal to go through, but the trade would not be announced until next week.

President Carter said yesterday he is willing to meet with Iranian Prime Minister Mohammed Ali Rajai to discuss the fate of the 52 American hostages "if he should be amenable." But Carter's spokesman said the president saw "no real possibility" of such a meeting.

Carter was quick to add that there is "no imminent" prospect of the hostages' release. Rajai is travelling to New York to participate in United Nations deliberations on the subject of Iran's war with Iraq. The President was to attend a charity banquet in the city yesterday evening.

When reporters asked Carter about a meeting between he and Rajai, he said, "There's always a potential. We have not made any arrangements to meet with Mr. Rajai, but if he should be amenable to a meeting we would certainly continue to follow our practice of meeting with any Iranian official who had a possibility of speaking authoritatively for their government."

Carter said a meeting with Rajai might include "myself or (Secretary of State) Ed Muskie or (Deputy Secretary of State) Warren Christopher or whoever."

Asked whether Rajai had expressed any interest in such a

Peace Corps recruits students; seeks math, science majors

By David Sarphie

Twenty years ago this month, the late John F. Kennedy first proposed an "international youth service program." Over the years this program, the Peace Corps, has grown into one of the largest volunteer aid programs in the world.

In an attempt to obtain new members, a Peace Corps recruiter annually visits the Notre Dame campus. Clovia Sloan, a volunteer for three years, was in the Memorial Library yesterday. As well as providing information on the program, she was scheduling potential volunteers for the interview sessions to be held October 29 and 30.

Sloan said that the organization is designed to help the poor of Asia, Africa, and Latin America in such areas as education, health care, and social work.

She noted that math and science teachers are in great demand right now. "Many of the math and science majors see high wages in the job market and are pressured to immediately enter a field," she remarked. "I think the Peace Corps is a good way to find a direction in life."

Volunteers normally serve for a two year period during which time they receive a monthly living allowance comparable to the area in which they are working. Health coverage and paid vacations are other benefits.

As Sloan pointed out, however, there are other abstract benefits. "The Peace Corps is for anyone with a sense of adventure, who would like to experience another culture and actually have a positive impact on the lives of other people," she said.

Sloan was especially excited about her visit to the campus. "I've been to Notre Dame several times, and each time I've felt the students have taken a strong interest in the program."

Anyone interested in the program may talk to Sloan in the library concourse today or sign up for an interview at the Placement Office.

The medical use of marijuana should be reconsidered by the federal government which has, in the past, placed stringent controls on its use, a federal appeals court has ruled. A three-judge panel said that the Drug Enforcement Administration should take a second look at its decision to keep marijuana and its derivatives in the same drug category as heroin and LSD, which are not known to have medical uses. The court's action will not immediately make marijuana any more widely available to patients seeking it to avoid nausea during chemotherapy or for glaucoma. It took 27 months for the government to reach a decision on marijuana control the last time. — AP

Operation Yellowjacket was a successful undercover "sting" in Valhalla, New York despite some comic quirks in this year-long operation. Undercover agents had to dispose of a truck of hijacked bananas, evade fellow policemen as they drove stolen cars and turn down an invitation to join the Chamber of Commerce. The undercover ploy netted $1.25 million in stolen goods that the agents bought for a mere $83,000 while posing as fences at a Pelham storefront. Dozens of people were arrested in pre-dawn raids this past week. Among the recovered stolen items were 78 cars, two tractor-trailers, two computer terminals, assorted government checks, credit cards and television sets. "We could have opened up a major department store," one police officer commented. — AP

Adopting a get tough attitude, Sen. Birch Bayh has launched a new wave of television and radio commercials designed to draw a lead on his Republican challenger, Dan Quayle. The campaign plans to spend over $400,000 on radio and television air time between now and election day, according to campaign aide Fred Nation. In a recently conducted interview, Bayh said, "I think there is going to be a rather significant emphasis on some of the negatives Congressman Quayle has shown. One is his relationship with the oil companies and the other is his attendance at committee meetings." — AP

An earthquake measuring 4.8 on the Richter scale shook Unalaska in the Aleutian Islands yesterday but there were no reports of damage, the Alaska Tsunami Warning Center reported. The quake occurred at 6:54 a.m. Alaska Daylight Time and was centered about 40 miles east of Unalaska, or about 800 miles southwest of Anchorage.

Ann Landers, marking a quarter of a century as an advice columnist, would prescribe for herself 50 lashes with a wet noodle if she even gave a thought to retiring. "As long as I have all my marbles and the energy to do this job," the syndicated newspaper column will continue, she said Thursday on its 25th anniversary.

Since Oct. 16, 1955, Miss Landers, now 62, has been listening to and helping the baffled, frustrated, angry and curious. Her opinions have been sought on everything from troubled love affairs to drug abuse, prostitution, alcoholism, lying, snoring, toilet paper, sweating, cheating, bridal etiquette, problem children and problem parents. Despite eight secretaries to help open hundreds of letters a day, she said her 10-to-12-hour workdays include personally writing every word that has ever appeared in the column.

The first major snowstorm of autumn attacked the Rocky Mountain states yesterday, clogging roads with chest-high drifts and ripping down power lines, while tornadoes whipped through the Plains.

Twisters smashed houses and barns and injured several people in Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado and Oklahoma, while 10-inch snows crippled mountain towns and cities such as Billings, Montana.

Along the Rocky range from New Mexico to Montana, the story was much the same. Highways were closed and schools were out. The heavy wet snow snapped tree limbs that brought down power lines, leaving thousands of homes without electricity.

In Wyoming, where 10 inches accumulated in Rawlins and elsewhere, Interstate 80 was closed from Cheyenne to Walcott, more than 100 miles to the west, the Highway Patrol said.

Windy with a chance of rain today. Highs in the low 70s with evening temperatures dipping into the 50s. Partly cloudy and mild tomorrow with highs in the upper 60s. — AP

Inside Friday

Education vs. training

Welcome to the oddest of all possible weekends.

Look at the trees. What do you see? If you see a magnificent splash of autumnal color outlining gothic ivy, if you feel the thrill of falltime academia merging into weekend football bliss, you are a parent or a visitor. If you look at the trees and see trees you are a student, a talent for poetic perception notwithstanding.

Now look at the people. See the one with black eye bags balanced atop unshaven cheeks? He's a student, and he's just been through about a week of mid-terms, very strung-out on Fitzgerald Bataille, Hobbes and Navier-Stokes equations. Forgive him if he doesn't appreciate the trees or the subtleties of fall under the dome. He's burned out on life and is ready to get out.

And he has these two beasts tugging at him. One is telling him to get educated, the other is telling him to learn a function, get a job. The two seem mutually exclusive.

He read in a Time magazine report last week that New York state has enacted a law defining the talent of thinking as a "basic skill" for the job market. This pleased him greatly, for it proved at the same time both New York's awareness of what makes man man and their concern for literacy. He is literate, now he needs a job. Maybe he'll go to New York: they'll appreciate him there.

And he's been reading The Observer. He read that Fr. Hesburgh told the faculty that we need more humanities, more people in this society who can think critically. He wonders why he can only find one copy of T.S. Eliot's The Wasteland in the library. He wonders why when he goes there for research on a paper he always ends up with a professor saying: "Oh yeah, for that you have to go to the South Bend Public Library." And he wonders if anyone can see the connection between those two seemingly unrelated items. He can. He's been taught to think that way.

He was woken up at 9 a.m. the other morning by a phone call from his father, a man who, like normal people, works for a living. He wonders what his father thought about the lifestyle of a student who is still asleep three hours after the sun has risen. He didn't mention that he was going down while the sun was coming up, his head full of academic matter that won't mean anything when he applies for a job. He wonders what it will be like when he gets a job, eats regularly, goes to bed regularly, and gets up with the sun.

Sometimes he has these hallucinations. He thinks he has conquered the two beasts who tug at his consciousness...he thinks he has somehow merged them in a job where his employer is asking:

"Son, just how precisely can we use structuralist criticism in such a way that we can interpret the consciousness behind inner-office memos." And he knows the answer. A plus.

And sometimes he has these fears. He sees himself carrying a briefcase full of term papers into an interview with a man who is prepared to offer him a job working behind the wheel of a taxi. He would be an engaging conversationalist. He could be known as a humanist cabbie, philosopher king. He's not sure that really excites him.

His mind is full, as you can see. It happens about this time of year, and if he had had a midterm in a course called "Cliche 101" he might be reminded of an applicable adage about taking time to smell the roses. Or was it trees? No, you smell roses, look at trees. He did the other day. They just looked like trees.

Don't mind the student if he doesn't see what you see. Sometimes he does, but it happens right at the very first turn of the leaves, when mid-terms seem so far away. In a few days they will be far away, in the other temporal direction. It's breaktime and football weekend, and he sees cars jamming the highway — also going in different directions. He sees a pattern there. But he always sees patterns: he's been taught to do that. And he wonders if that is odd.

Welcome to the oddest of all possible weekends.

Soviet , Afghan leaders meet

Moscow — (AP) — President Babrak Karmal of Afghanistan held face-to-face talks yesterday with his backers at the Kremlin for the first time since the Soviet military helped install him in office ten months ago.

Karmal, also the leader of the ruling People's Democratic Party and premier, was greeted at Vnukovo Airport by a full lineup of Soviet officials led by President Leonid I. Brezhnev and was driven into the city along streets lined with people, flags, streamers and banners, Soviet television reported.

Despite speculation by sources in New Delhi, India that Karmal may be in trouble with his Kremlin supporters because of continued resistance by anti-communist Moslem guerrillas in Afghanistan, the Soviets appeared to be using the visit for a strong demonstration of support for his Kabul regime.

Brezhnev hugged Karmal at the foot of his airplane's ramp. The Soviet media had effusive accounts of the importance of the visit, claims of "successful operations for the liquidation of gangs of mercenaries and terrorists" in Afghanistan and accounts of the "fraternal and selfless aid" given Afghanistan by the Soviet Union.

Karmal was quoted by the official Tass news agency as saying his visit "will become a new step in the cause of further strengthening the unshakable fraternal unity and cohesion of the two states."

Western observers in Moscow think the major purpose of the visit is an attempt to boost Karmal's image as a national leader and to publicize the claimed benefits of Soviet friendship.

Diplomatic sources in India predicted that the Kabul regime would receive wide-range technical, military and political support during the visit. The speculation was fueled by reports that the Afghan delegation included ministers of defense, foreign affairs and economic planning, as well as some military leaders.

The Soviets sent an estimated 85,000 troops into Afghanistan last December to help oust Marxist President Hafizullah Amin and install Karmal. Most of the troops remain. The intervention is expected to come under renewed attack next month at a scheduled U.N. General Assembly debate.

Despite frequent claims of victories against the "bandits and mercenaries," reports filtering out of Afghanistan suggest that the Soviets have failed to secure most of the country's rural districts.

Kuldip Nayar, editor of the Indian Express newspapers who recently visited Afghanistan, wrote that the rebels control 90 of the country's 186 administrative districts around the clock and 48 others by night. He said the Karmal regime and Soviet forces control the major cities and 48 districts.

Nayar also said the Soviets are considering establishing a new party, the Communist Party of Afghanistan, including men from the pro-Soviet hard core in both the Khalq and Parcham wings of the ruling party.

meeting, the President said, "I don't know whether he has or not, nor do I have any information that he has."

Later, after the President boarded Air Force One following a campaign appearance, White House Press Secretary Jody Powell told reporters that Carter wanted to add that "I see no real possibility" of a meeting involving the Iranian leader.

Earlier Thursday, Muskie said "the door is open" to negotiations with Iran over the hostages. But he denied any discussion is under way or deal is in the works.

"There is no such proposal at all," Muskie said about reports the Carter Administration is prepared to trade military spare parts for release of the American captives.

Asked if any negotiation with Iran is under way, Muskie said: "No there isn't."

A few minutes earlier, in a question-and-answer session before the Woman's National Democratic Club, Muskie responded enigmatically about the reports of a possible trade, "I've seen the rumors."

State Department spokesman John Trattner said any meeting with Rajai would not be publicly announced.

"In order to get these issues between our two countries settled, it will be essential to do them privately and confidentially," he said. "We will not be able to discuss any such future meetings with you."

Asked about a report that Iran plans to release the hostages imminently in return for U. S. provision of spare parts to Iran, Trattner said the account was "totally false."

Professor surveys to define Midwest

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Everybody knows about the Midwest. It's where Johnny Carson grew up without developing an accent. It's that expanse of rolling country where our food comes from.

But exactly where is it? That's a tougher question, and a geography professor got some surprising answers from university students across the nation.

James Shortridge of the University of Kansas set out a year ago to find the Midwest. Never mind that by living in Lawrence, Kan., most people would say he's already there.

He wanted a more scientific definition of the region for his study of its culture since white men settled there in large numbers 175 years ago. So for starters, he distributed questionnaires to 3,000 freshmen and sophomores at state universities in 31 states.

Here's what he found:

Students from 20 states defined the heart of the Midwest as Nebraska or Kansas states on the western fringe of the 12-state region formally called the Middle West by academics.

And 1 percent of the Washington state residents who responded said they considered their state midwestern, as did 9 percent of Californians, 2 percent Alabamans and 3 percent of West Virginians.

In Ohio, the easternmost state of the traditional region, only 47 percent of students polled claimed Midwestern residence.

The dictionary definition of the Midwest includes Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, North Dakota, Ohio, South Dakota and Wisconsin. But Shortridge says that definition is misleading.

"It's a perceptual region. You have to go with the perceptions of the people," Shortridge says. "Maybe originally, people had the perceptual view of the Midwest with Illinois in the center, the image of a small-town rural America.

"But time passes. Detroit, Chicago, Cleveland grow up and don't seem to fit into the traditional definition. So what people do is keep the old definition and move the area. The definition now fits the plains more than the old area."

Only people from Indiana and Illinois still believe they represent the Midwest's center, he said. Elsewhere, from New York to Texas to Washington, students put the core farther west.

Tremor shakes volcano

VANCOUVER Wash.(AP) After a sharp earthquake beneath Mount St. Helens and a 1,000-foot plume of steam and ash last night, scientists warned that an eruption "is a possibility in the next 24 hours."

"Due to an increase in the number of seismic events occurring around Mount St. Helens, the University of Washington has issued a warning that an eruption is possible," said Joyce Rouston of the Federal Emergency Management Agency. The 7:02 p.m. earthquake, measuring about 3.0 on the Richter scale, was centered just beneath the volcano's crater, Rouston said.

Small "seismic bursts," or class B quakes that are too weak to be rated on the Richter scale of ground motion, have rattled the volcano throughout the week. But the 3.0 quake couples with continuous steam yesterday changed geologists' minds about the seriousness of the recent seismic activity, Rouston said.

Steam mixed with ash accompanied the 7:02 p.m. earthquake, and the plume extended 1,000 feet above the volcano, she said.

"Steam mixed with ash accompanied

"If it's going to go, it's going to go in hours... or within a day," said Steve Malone, a seismologist at the University of Washington geophysics center. "Seismic activity has been building fairly rapidly."

"We're watching the stuff (earthquake activity) build. If it follows the way it has in the past, true to course, we're going to have an eruption," he said.

In death row

Guards subdue violence

STARKE, Fla. (AP) — A beefed-up guard force conducted a cell-by-cell search yesterday of Florida State Prison, home of the nation's most populous Death Row, in an effort to quell intermittent violence that has left one guard dead and two injured.

"It's calm in there," said Corrections Department spokesman Vernon Bradford. "The institution is under total lockdown." In a lockdown, "everybody stays in their cells. There is no movement," Bradford explained.

The prisoners inside the 19-year-old institution will remain locked in their cells indefinitely, Bradford said.

Officials brought in reinforcements Wednesday night and used tear gas to subdue 300 inmates when one guard was stabbed with a homemade spear and another was scalded by Death Row inmates. A guard was fatally stabbed by a Death Row inmate Sunday.

Of the 1,200 inmates at Starke, 149 are on Death Row. Among them are Theodore Bundy, killer of three young women and suspect in dozens of disappearances;

Stephen Beattie, a Canadian politician's brother who killed his partner and two cleaning woman at their fashionable Dade County health spa, and Charles W. Proffitt, who stabbed a Tampa wrestling coach to learn what it felt like to kill someone.

The trouble took place less than two weeks after a judge ordered one-third of the inmates transferred to other prisons because of what he called the

"The institution is under total lockdown."

"intolerable" level of violence at the facility where four inmates have been stabbed to death since July.

The violence Wednesday began minutes after a memorial service for the slain guard and quickly spread to three, 100-inmate wings of the maximum security prison. Inmates burned trash and paper, yelled, banged on their cells and broke out windows.

Tear gas had been used for the first time in years Tuesday after prison inmates flooded one wing with backed-up toilets and pitched foodtrays into the halls to protest a new rule put into effect after the guard was slain.

On Oct. 3, Circuit Judge R.A. Green ordered the state to move 372 inmates — a third of the prison's population — to other prisons within ten days. A state appeals court extended that to 45 days.

Gren's ruling came in a suit filed by nine inmates who contended they had been subjected to cruel and unusual punishment and that the prison's staff is unable to protect inmates.

Prison officials said guard Howard Howland was stabbed Wednesday as he counted prisoners.

As dinner trays were being passed out later, inmate Stephen Booker threw a pail of scalding water on guard M.S. Thomas, officials said. Booker, 28, is awaiting execution for the rape/murder of a 94-year-old Alachua County woman.

Corrections officer Richard Burke, 48, was killed Sunday while escorting another Death Row inmate to the showers.

Unemployment spurs emigration

by Associated Press

Illegal aliens who slip across the Mexican border into the United States will continue to do so until America decides to help Mexico create more jobs for its citizens, a population expert says.

Paul Ehrlich, who spent more than two years researching illegal immigration for his 1979 book, "The Golden Door," spoke at the University of Evansville on Thursday.

"It looks like most of the immigrants coming in were ones who were just coming in the classic manner, to work, send money home and then go home — not to be permanent residents," Ehrlich said.

"We have, of course, helped to create that situation with Mexico... We took by force more than half of their country, have done many other things that created joblessness in Mexico, and we have used Mexicans as a labor pool of last resort for most of this century."

Ehrlich said illegal immigration from Mexico in 1975 probably was not much higher than it was during the 1950s. But he said the next few decades will see more and more Mexicans wanting to come to the United States to work, resulting in an enormous problem unless the U.S. government changes its policy.

"We're going to have to re-shape our entire relationship with Mexico," he said.

"This is not a problem with Mexico. It's a Mexican-American problem that we're going to have to work out. The big solution is to help the Mexicans change their economy so that their now something like 40-50 percent unemployment rate drops.

Ehrlich, a population biologist at Stanford University, is best known for his book "The Population Bomb."

In that book, he warned that the planet would be hit by massive starvation if the population continued to increase unchecked.

Even with birth rates in some underdeveloped countries beginning to decline, he said, the world population could double in the next 40 years from its present 4.4 billion.

A decade after he wrote it, Ehrlich said the prognosis is even worse.

But the population probably will never reach 8 billion, he said, because an increasing death rate will counteract the population explosion.

any figures of cost, the Board would not be able to act one way or the other on the proposal.

Fr. John VanWolfeart, vice-president for the Student Affairs, offers to organize a meeting after semester break. The meeting, Van Wolfeart said, would bring together the necessary students and business personnel to organize the efforts to obtain the necessary funding.

It was the consensus feeling that the LaFortune renovation is a suitable initial step in solving the social space problem on campus. It was emphasized, however, that it be handled through the University administration rather than the Board of Trustees.

"The meeting gave us a solid first stepping stone to get things done," Murday said.

"If we're ever going to get a student center we've got to show them the need. I think we did that today."

Executive coordinator Frank Guilfyle proposed to the committee that a matching funds program be put into the annual University budget to help finance improvements in the dormitories.

The program would enable individual residence halls to receive financial aid from the University, as long as the dorm would match the figure from its own treasury. Similar programs have been successful in recent years.

Schneider said he will recommend to the Board that $25,000 be annually placed into the University's budget for this purpose.

Off-Campus Commissioner Mark Kelley explained the current security and housing problems being experienced by off-campus students. He distributed handouts which detailed the crimes in the North-east neighborhood in recent months.

Kelley suggested the the Off-Campus Office be expanded, and that it become more efficient. This, he said, would aid the students in legal and practical areas.

Dean of Students James Roemer noted that the City of South Bend on Wednesday offered to inspect houses that the University might refer to them. This might help landlords take better care of their property.

It was suggested, however, that a crew of students inspectors might be more effective because the students may have a better idea of what the student tenant wants from an off-campus home.

No other proposals or recommendations on the off-campus situation were made.

The Student Affairs Committee serves as a link between the students and the full Board of Trustees.

The members of the Student Affairs Committee are: Schneider, Fr. Thomas e. Blantz, Anthony F. Earley, Philip J. Faccenda, Fr. John C. Gerber, Paul F. Hellmuth, Donald Keosh, Donald J. Matthews, Anthony J. F. O'Reilly, Preiffer, the Honorable John D. Rockefeller IV, and William D. Reynolds. All were present at yesterday's meeting except Hellmuth, O'Reilly, and Rockefeller.

Muskie questions hostage trade

WASHINGTON (AP) - Was this the "October surprise"?

Or was it just a day of rumor feeding on rumor, a snake of speculation swallowing its own tail, hope coinciding with hap-penstance? In Chicago, a television station reports, over and over, that the 52 American hostages are about to be returned to the United States.

"A deal is in the works," insists news director Tom Kuelbs.

In Windsor Locks, Conn., a campaigning President Carter extends a hand to embattled Iran. He is willing to meet with Iran's prime minister, who is making an unexpected appearance at the United Nations. Iran, after months of isolation, is

Notre Dame Grand Prix Michael Onufrak

University President Fr. Theodore Hesburgh announced yesterday that Notre Dame will sponsor Formula I auto racing this spring in conjunction with An Tostal.

Hesburgh's announcement came at the Board of Trustees meeting held at the University club. The plan was the suggestion of several Board members from Chicago who have been impressed with that city's plan to hold a similar race there next year.

The race, to be run throughout the ND campus, is yet another controversial fund-raising project designed to improve the ND endowment without another tuition increase. Earlier this semester Hesburgh announced that ND would legalize gambling on campus and convert the remains of St. Ed's Hall into a gambling casino/hotel complex.

McStewart, author of the respected tome on bar etiquette Why Goose's Should be Rebuilt so the Springsteen Crowd has a Place to Drink, presented a three-point construction plan to the board to "ready the campus for race day."

"To begin with, McStewart said, "the new Stepan chemistry hall can be easily converted into a five-story garage. This will produce not only an excellent facility for car maintenance on race day, it will also house the college of science's newest major, front end alignment."

He noted that the new major is expected to be popular and consistent with the University's policy of a liberal education.

"Secondly, I will issue a directive to security tomorrow to begin to let any car which is consistent with NASCAR regulations to be admitted onto campus at the security officer's Hesburgh also announced yesterday that the University will not be picking up an option from a prominent west coast movie house to film Urban SMC Chick on ND's campus. Notre Dame was rumored to have been guaranteed a fifteen percent take from the film's net profits. The deal was in conjunction with nearby Saint Mary's College, which would have supplied over 500 female extras festooned in Western regalia.

"We chose the race option over the film because of the actor's strike in Hollywood and uncertainty over our legal right to infringe on the ND-SMC Theatre's exclusive rights in this area," Hesburgh said.

"Not only would the movie have been a risky adventure for a Catholic university, but auto racing is already very popular in this state as evidenced by the success of the Indy 500 over the years," Hesburgh added. Urban SMC Chick is rumored to be rated PG.

Hesburgh also said yesterday that Jaco McStewart, noted author and famed Irish adventurer/race car driver, will be retained by the university as assistant vice-president for auto discretion. This directive is issued solely for the purpose of letting the drivers practice on the track." He added that joggers would be banned from campus during race week.

"Third, I would like to announce that the University this morning signed a contract with the National Broadcasting Company to televise same-day coverage of the race itself. This will entail the construction of a camera platform atop the Administration building, but this can be dismantled a week after the Grand Prix.

When asked by a reporter whether or not ND's commitment to auto racing would compromise the tradition of An Tostal McStewart replied in the negative.

"I think the race will give the festival some exposure it badly needs. I also think the decision to allow Mardi Gras to be held in St. Ed's casino will save the students a lot of time which they would otherwise spend building booths. We're also going to show the Bookstore finals and the chariot race before the Grand Prix."

He added that tickets will be available in the coming weeks.

Rust editorial inconsistent

Dear Editor,

I was not surprised to note that Mark Rust's editorial in last Friday's issue of the Observer was of a confused nature. Contained therein were some opinions which, when analyzed are not consistent with the facts, let alone with the Spirit of Truth who guides the Church.

Rust claims that there are many alienated young Catholics who fail to realize that they can dissent and remain Catholic. Are these "very Catholic young Catholics" just plain too dense not to identify "with so many others of the same faith" including "so many clergy?" If there is such a majority of American Catholics with whom they agreed and this would certainly seem to be the case, then from whom are they really alienated? My own personal belief is that such aloneness in a crowd stems in actuality, from a personal alienation from oneself, or from one's true self however inaccurately perceived.

Rightly, Rust considers the problem to be cultural, though he offers no reason for it other than being a theological problem as well. He claims that "changing sexual mores" are best understood sociologically. This is absurd. Are Christians to believe that their Lord is not the Lord of culture, but somehow subject to diverse and changing customs?

Contrary to his view, Pope Paul VI based the encyclical Humanae Vitae not on "partial perspectives-whether of the biological or psychological demography or sociological orders," but instead "in light of an integral vision of man and of his vocation, not only his natural and earthly, but also his supernatural and eternal vocation." Such is the difference between sociology and authoritative interpretation of the nature of man.

But as I have alluded to earlier, the problem is a cultural one. There would certainly seem to be in our culture many elements which are directly opposed to the Christian understanding of man.

At the cultural level — the level on which Rust desires to analyze the phenomenon of "changing sexual mores" — one can easily reject his claim that contraception and abortion cannot at all be linked.

At issue is a basic change in attitude towards the sexual union of man and woman. Increasingly in this culture, this union is seen to be temporary, self-serving, and not ordained towards the creation of new life. Contraception is as related to abortion as separation is to divorce. They need not both occur together in the same act, but one never occurs without the other.

Abortion is a further expression of this cultural contraceptive mentality. Contraception is one of the first active disruptions of the Christian unified view of human sexuality as a whole greater than its artificially separated elements of unification and procreation.

Perhaps Rust considers it inconsequential that the Supreme Court decision in favor of legalized abortion was based upon a right to privacy developed for the legalization of the distribution of contraceptives. Or perhaps it is merely coincidence that the many organizations such as Planned Parenthood as well as religious bodies which see unwanted pregnancies as a "disease" also consider contraception and backstop abortions as the "cure."

Once a child is considered in the category of either being wanted or unwanted as a thing ordained for the fulfillment of the couple, such a "thing" is easily disposed of. Contraception accepted in this broad cultural context, necessarily places human life in this category.

But contraception is not immoral merely because it is associated with greater societal evils such as abortion. It is an unacceptable and intolerable artificial intrusion into the divine love that unites a man and woman. This is the alienation that our culture breeds. Robert Gilbert

English professor right on time

Dear Editor,

A complaint has been directed against me for interrupting a Math exam in Computer Sciences 227, an interruption that occurred thirteen minutes after the scheduled 9:55 ending of a 9MWF class. May I draw your attention to the following paragraph from the 1980-1981 Faculty Manual, which governs professional conduct at this university:

Classes should not extend past the established ending time unless specific arrangements for a special class meeting period have been made with the Office of the Registrar. (This is necessary so that the next class assigned to the room may begin on time.)

No such arrangements were, in fact, made with the Registrar's Office. No such arrangements, furthermore, were arranged privately with me beforehand.

I am frankly surprised that a classroom of mathematicians doesn't know how to tell time.

Story shows discrimination continues

Dear Editor,

Times have surely changed. Ten years ago Mary Fran Callahan's Rely Tampon article would never have merited front page attention. It still doesn't today.

Maybe that's one reason the McNally poll revealed that 60 percent of ND-SMC women feel they are discriminated against. I don't disagree with the printing of the article — just its placement on the front page. How about a little respect?

Differences exist in candidates

Dear Editor,

Anthony Walton seems to suffer from several traditional liberal phobias, the primary one being a fear of anyone to the right of George McGovern. His editorial of October 1 is a mish-mash of falsehoods, truth and depression. I would like to respond to several of his arguments.

Walton's claim that there is no real difference between Reagan and Carter exhibits naivete. Walton claims that the only differences are on social issues such as abortion and ERA. Unless he is using radically different definitions, I find this hard to understand. There is a huge difference between Carter and Reagan on defense spending, which Carter has only partially alleviated because he doesn't want to look too soft on our dear Russian friends. It was only after Reagan took a hard line and Carter realized the issue's importance that he suddenly became a demi-hawk. Speaking of defense, how about their position's on the draft?

There are many other differences which I could deal with, but the clearest and most important one is on economic matters. It is clear where Carter stands, just look at unemployment, bankruptcy and inflation figures for the last three years. Carter has continued, or tried to continue, America's second child-hood of the 60's, when everybody could look to sugar-daddy government to take care of them. The Chrysler bailout and this week's actions on propping up the steel industry are only two examples (the latter one taking place mainly because Carter needs Pennsylvania to win in November). Has anybody in the Federal Government looked across the Atlantic to Great Britain? They are in an economic mess at the moment precisely because they have government ownership and/or sponsorship of every major industry in the country. And where has this gotten them? They are even farther behind in the modernization of factories than we are. In short, they have subsidized all of the Albatrosses that they could get their hands on, and true to the maxim, they have been dragged into deep water. No nation can afford to subsidize industries that are mismanaged or behind the times. Give tax incentives for modernization as Reagan proposes, yes, but don't give everybody's money to keep Chrysler going for two more years, that is foolish. Reagan's emphasis on the production side of economics via the Kemp-Roth strategic zone tax plan is what is needed. Give industry a break from all of the government red tape and just plain idiotic rules and then we will have economic advancement. No, I am not advocating the destruction of the environment or the raping of the common laborer, but we can cut a lot of foolish fules long befor we get that far. The problem results because government is not a producer, it is at best only an inefficient reallocator, while at worst it is a stifling burden that consumes more than it reallocates.

I agree with Walton's assessment of Carter, he is like a peanut M&M, candy coated on the outside but hard and mean on the inside. He is going to rank as one of the premier political manipulators of all time.

Fan questions stadium ethics

Dear Editor,

I am writing to you in regard to a recent incident that occurred on September 20, 1980 on the campus of the University of Notre Dame. Being an avid Notre Dame fan as far back as I can remember, I feel it is imperative that what happened be brought to your attention. The incident that I am about to describe was totally humiliating and embarrassing not only to myself, but to my family, and all of our friends who enthusiastically follow Notre Dame. I only hope that this letter will fully describe the horror that I was put through.

On Saturday morning my brother, a friend, and myself travelled 250 miles from Saint Clair Shores, Michigan down to South Bend to see the Notre Dame vs. Michigan football game. We did not arrive on time, for the second quarter had just begun. Our seat numbers separated us within the stadium. We all entered the stadium through gate 11. I handed the ticket taker my ticket first, and the other two followed.

We had previously decided that after the game we would meet outside Gate 11. As this was my first time inside the Notre Dame stadium, I suddenly found myself surrounded with excitement and enthusiasm for the cheering fans.

Upon approaching Section 23, Row 44, Seat 21, there happened to be an usher at the end of my row to whom I promptly showed my ticket. He instructed me that my seat was somewhere in the row. As I proceeded in the row I had my ticket in my right hand. After I crawled over several people, a man — who I thought was trying to be helpful asked me — my seat number.

As I showed him my ticket, he grabbed it from my hand, and informed me that it was now his ticket. I politely asked him what the problem was, but all he would say was that my ticket was now his ticket. Trying not to cause a scene, I exited the row and told my story to the usher who I had just previously shown my ticket to. I asked him what I should do about the matter, and he instructed me to speak to the head usher, "the man in the white hat."

Before doing this I reminded him that I had shown him my ticket. At this time the usher stated, and I quote, "If there is any problem or question about my having possession of a ticket that I will back your story."

After speaking with the head usher, he asked me to wait while he went to get the Indiana State Police.

Officer Wolfarth of the Indiana State Police escorted me to the small jail cell next to Gate 11. He very rudely told me to have a seat inside of the cell. Upon questioning him he repeated that I should take a seat, and forcefully sat me down. Never throughout the confrontation with Officer Wolfarth did he try to ask me what had happened. He left me in the jail cell and returned after a brief absence.

Upon his return he told me to follow him. It was at this time that I assumed the matter had been cleared up; my assumption was incorrect. He proceeded to escort me outside the stadium, not allowing me to find out why I was being escorted out. In trying to question Officer Wolfarth, I was informed that I persisted in questioning him I would wind up in jail. He then started to physically shove me outside the stadium grounds. Being in a strange state, I don't mind saying that I was scared.

With three years of college in the field of accounting at Wayne State University and aspirations of pursuing that field of law, I feel I was treated with a grave injustice. Not knowing a great deal about Indiana law I do know that what Officer Wolfarth did to me was in violation of my human rights — no matter what state of the union I am visiting. Not only do I have freedom of speech afforded to me under the First Amendment, but also the right to question why I was wrongly escorted from the most exciting football game of my lifetime. I feel I was prevented from having both of these rights by Officer Wolfarth.

This incident deeply hurts my pride, my family's pride, and the pride of all of our avid Notre Dame friends. I believe not only has Officer Wolfarth totally disregarded the law, but so did all of the Indiana State Police who were in my presence. I am sure by now it should be clear to you that this incident has left a huge sore spot in my heart for the feelings I have towards the greatest University in the country. I regret this ever took place as I am sure you do after reading this letter. I am writing so as to deter this from ever happening again.

I will try not to let this dampen my admiration towards the University of Notre Dame, but this day will remain in my thoughts for a long, long time.

Women's Art

Dear Editor,

I am writing in regard to my article published on October 10, dealing with the art of Louise Pierucci Holeman. Not only was the headline The Observer afforded it a definite literary faux pas, but it served only to tinge one's interpretation of the article, if not alienate a segment of the reading audience all together.

My article explained that Holeman's art is women's art because "it is born in emotions that work their way outward, thus presenting an insight that is intrinsically female". Instead, and in contradistinction to this statement, the headline introduced the story as "The Feminist Art of Louise Pierucci Holeman".

Feminist art and women's art are quite different forms of expression. The feminist label implies certain political as well as ideological overtones that Holeman's work does not attempt to convey. These two terms cannot be randomly interchanged without a drastic alteration in the meaning of the critique.

It is the responsibility of a newspaper to heighten its readers awareness. In the interest of education, and in doing justice to Ms. Holeman, this distinction must be clarified.

Quality & Quantity At Doc Pierce's

Scoop Sullivan

Doc Pierce's, located some distance from campus, is well worth the twenty minute drive into downtown Mishawaka. The only way you can go wrong with Doc Pierce's is by not going there.

The quality of the entrees overshadows any limitations of the rather small menu, featuring American favorites like steak, shrimp, and sandwiches. Not only is the food superbly prepared, but the relaxed atmosphere ("casual but neat" are the bywords) enables one to fully enjoy a hearty meal without the constricting tightness of a necktie or one's best dress.

But the most prominent plus for Doc's is the reasonable cost. No restaurant is cheap these days, but this one comes very, very close, and given the extraordinary quality of food, it is without question the best dinner buy in the area.

The secret to Doc Pierce's success lies in its management. Unlike most other dining establishments in South Bend, Doc's is privately owned, and not part of a nationwide restaurant chain or company. As a result, profit is not a major consideration; rather, pride in service and food quality comes first. South Bend native Bruce Tassell, owner of Doc Pierce's, told The Observer that above all, he wants a place to be proud of, not embarrassed with. He has hired several managers throughout the four-year history of the restaurant on a profit-sharing basis and has found some superior staff to run the various phases of the business. Incidentally, most of these managers are young Notre Dame/Saint Mary's grads.

Doc Pierce's small, wood-grained atmosphere is always full, but never crowded. However, reservations are required.

Highly recommended is the New York Strip, a full inch-and-a-half of aged, tender sirloin grilled to juicy perfection. One knows that the chef knows how to prepare a steak, because when you ask for medium-rare, you get the full marbled succulence of medium-rare. Included with the meal is a salad (the only disappointment of the meal — the dressings are a bit bland), potato (recommended — the steak fries, a heap so big no one will eat them all), and a full loaf of freshly baked pumpernickel or white bread, with whipped butter.

A bit more expensive but well worth the price is the shrimp. Mr. Tassell personally selects the genuine Texas Gulf shrimp each year on annual excursions to that great state. Not only are the shrimp huge (a full four inches long and at least an inch thick), but their tender white meat seethes with the gentle flavor of that marvelous treat.

Other plusses for Doc's include their onion rings, which are also an inch thick and come in huge volumes, reasonable drink prices, and light French cream cheese cake, with strawberries if desired.

Doc Pierce's has plenty of free parking and is located at 120 N. Main Street, Mishawaka. Call for reservations at 255-7737. You'll be very glad you did. In this culinary connoisseur's opinion, Doc Pierce's is the finest restaurant around.

THE ICE HOUSE RESTAURANT IN THE 100 CENTER, MISHAWAKA

Try Us For Sunday Brunch
11:00-2:00

COME SEE FOR YOURSELF!
YOU DON'T HAVE TO LOOK FAR TO FIND... FUN, FOOD, FROLIC, AND FESTIVITY. MAY WE SUGGEST TAKING ON THE FUN AND FESTIVITY AT NOTRE DAME THEN TAKE IN THE HISTORICAL ICE HOUSE WHERE FROLIC AND FOOD ARE THEIR SPECIALTY.

It sure doesn't look like a restaurant. It comes across more as a brick warehouse, tucked away in a far corner of the rustic 100 Center. Originally part of John Wagner's 1853 brewery, "The Ice House" stored ice, malt and yeast for some 70 years until a fire forced its closing.

Not until just a few years ago was the entire brewery included in a massive conversion which left area people with the 100 Center, and specifically, The Ice House restaurant. The many levels of the Ice House have been restored and redesigned, and now boast two lounges and a beautiful two-level dining facility complete with original beamed ceilings and brick and masonry walls. Coupled with the light of the dim cast iron chandeliers placed strategically throughout the complex, we truly felt the nostalgia, the historic importance of the Ice House.

We stopped in for cocktails on the third level, in the "Eminent Victorian" lounge, just in time to catch "Silent Partner," a two-man guitarist band in their first set. The "Eminent Victorian" features such live music on every Friday and Saturday night. It was just what we needed to stir our appetites. After a few Crosby, Stills, & Nash, Harry Chapin and Beatles tunes, we departed, and following a series of wooden planks and stair casings, found ourselves in a cozy little booth on the second level of the charming dining room. Service was prompt. In no time we had returned from what was easily the most exotic salad bar either of us had seen. Not only did it feature a complete variety of salad garnishes, cheese, breads and vegetables, this one also boasted dried fruits and fresh walnuts, sunflower seeds, etc. We returned to our seats to find our second drinks waiting. My date asked me to refrain from trying to get her tipsy, that it wouldn't work anyway. I agreed.

The food arrived almost at the same time we had finished our salads etc., but there was so much and it looked so good, we didn't know where to begin. I went with the house specialty — Prime Rib and Greek Saganaki — while my date helped herself to stuffed flounder and deep fried mushrooms. All of the entrees included salad bar, (as many trips as you care to make) and choice of potatoes. We ordered two rounds of au gratin potatoes.

Needless to say, the meal was exquisite. The portions were more than generous and cooked to perfection. We could hear the guitar music vaguely in the background. We did our best to finish everything. Mr. Jeff McKuen, Sharon and the rest of the staff bent over backwards to make our visit to The Ice House as pleasant as ever. The bill, however, may have been the most pleasant part of the evening. It was surprisingly moderate, even for a poor college kid.

Sunday Dinner
from 5 to 9 P.M.

Dining out at Captain Alexander's Moonraker is like stepping out to sea. Not only is the restaurant's decor patterned after a ship, but the seafood served tastes as if it had been freshly pulled on deck and cooked directly from a fisherman's net.

The Moonraker, which sits on a bank of the St. Joseph's river, is divided into three sections. On the main floor rests the elegant Singapore Room, the restaurant's most formal. The Fisherman's Wharf, also located on the first floor, has a less formal atmosphere complete with bar and booths. It's decor, however, is just as appealing as the Singapore Room's, for the authentic shiplike atmosphere pervades the entire building.

Upstairs, Davy's Locker promises entertainment to an after-dinner crowd. It has a dance floor, and its dark atmosphere coupled with sunken seating is quite conducive to between-dance conversations. Drinks are also available.

My companion and I dined in the Singapore Room where service was unsurpassable. Drinks were served promptly. Our waitress, Janet, spoiled us with personalized, courteous service and even provided additional background on several of the menu's dishes — those with which we were unfamiliar. Sans requests, water glasses were refilled continually throughout the meal.

A word no less than "charming" can accurately reflect the Singapore Room's atmosphere. One wall of the room is glassed and looks upon the river. Since a deck (which diners can stroll on) encircles the restaurant, one gets the feeling of dining on an elegant vessel. Tables are spaced well, so a diner need not compete with the next table's conversation. Menus in the form of miniature masts enhance the decor. Lighting is also handled beautifully, for candles sit atop every table while lanterns cast soft lights on the main floor.

Appetizers are available, and I would recommend the shrimp — which are incredibly fresh and served with a tasty sauce. The salad bar is another wonder, for it features three kinds of baked bread (kept warm), plus five dressings and an extensive assortment of toppings. A liter of wine is included with the Caesar Salad.

Served in warm butter, a side dish of sauteed mushrooms complements any entree. Entrees, by the way, are reasonable, for portions are extremely generous and quality is not lost in quantity. Price varies, however, from the Boston Scrod at $7.95 to the $12.95 Lobster Tail & Steak.

One asset of the restaurant's menu is the Land/Sea combination. A customer can sample both steak and seafood, for half the entree is meat; the other half, seafood.

Scallops were very tender and coated with just the right amount of batter. Steak was thick, juicy and simply delicious. My companion rated the lobster par excellence, and our waitress even removed the lobster from its shell when she served it.

If you can muster thoughts of dessert after dinner, consider the cheesecake. Baked with a nut crust, it is especially tasty. Apple pie a la mode is greatly enhanced when accompanied by the house's hot rum sauce.

Captain Alexander's Moonraker merits an excellent recommendation, for its atmosphere lives up to its food, and its food, so fresh, greatly complements the shiplike atmosphere.

Steak & Ale & A Whole Lot More

Mike McSally

Steak and Ale is a contemporary restaurant with an Old English atmosphere, like an old country inn. The dark woodwork, handsome decor, and dim lighting make for a peaceful and relaxing setting.

I cannot count the times I have stopped into the cocktail lounge for "just one drink" and found myself staying for an entire "Happy Hour" and then dinner. Steak and Ale's cocktail lounge is habit-forming. There is ample seating, an infinite variety of drinks, and excellent bartenders. If the drink you desire doesn't exist, the bartenders will create it. There is also a wide variety of specialty drinks.

Live entertainment is offered Tuesday through Saturday evenings. For the last few months, Gerra has supplied the lounge with the soft contemporary songs of Carole King, Joni Mitchell, Bread, and others.

My reservation was during peak business hours, but when I arrived I was promptly seated by a smiling hostess. Steak and Ale is one of the few restaurants in town that will accept reservations on a football weekend.

On this particular evening, I began with an appetizer to accompany my drink. I ordered stuffed mushrooms, and received a generous portion of fresh mushroom caps filled with a delicious crabmeat stuffing, baked in butter. My date had Baked French Onion Soup, topped with Provolone cheese.

Steak and Ale's menu is diverse; they emphasize prime rib and steak but also offer a variety of seafood plates. All entrees include hot bread and a bountiful salad from their well-stocked salad bar. Also at the salad bar is a crock of homemade soup which varies from night to night but is always piping hot.

On this evening, I ordered the King Crab and Prime Rib Combination. My date ordered the "Poacher's Pleasure," a marinated boneless breast of chicken served with rice pilaf and corn on the cob.

I ordered the prime rib, rare, and it was served precisely so. The crab leg was a healthy-sized portion served in the shell, with a butter dish kept hot by a sterno flame — a nice touch. The prime rib was superbly tender, the portion of beef large enough to suffice as a meal in itself. My date was equally pleased with her chicken and rice and the sweet corn on the cob.

Steak and Ale's prices are very reasonable. Entrees range in price from $6.95 to $13.95.

The service at Steak and Ale is excellent, for our waitress was polite and friendly. Service with a smile is always a refreshing change. And though our waitress was attentive, she was never in the way.

The majority of the help have been with the restaurant since it opened four years ago. They are a tight-knit group that work well together, and this accounts for the large number of regular patrons.

Steak and Ale also offers the longest happy hours in town — running from 11:30 a.m. to 7 p.m. Monday through Friday — offering two drinks for the price of one. Call brand drinks are similarly priced. If you are there during the lunch hour you may enjoy a variety of sandwiches from a separate luncheon menu.

The restaurant is located on U.S. 31 North, directly across from Town and Country Shopping Center. They are open from 11:30 a.m. to 10 p.m. on weekdays, 5 p.m. to midnight Saturdays and noon to 8:30 p.m. on Sundays.

Faring Well on a Student Budget

Mike Onufrak

Michael Onufrak's favorite South Bend eating spots for off-campus students with only five dollars after the rent is due:

1) The Commons--Without doubt your best buy and convenient to campus (located across the street from Corby's in five points district). Three bucks gets you a large bowl of chili, a hot ham and cheese sandwich, and a Drewry's (classic midwestern brew) on tap. Atmosphere unpretentious and service quick.

2) B and L Barbecue--Located on Rte. 31 in Niles, Michigan. Perhaps a bit out of the way, but worth the drive. Recommended to off-campus students not only for exquisite cuisine, but also for large portions. Onion rings and large ham and beef sandwiches your best deal. Serves schooners of beer on Sundays.

3) Lee's Ribs--If you don't know about Lee's by now you're cheating yourself out of an education. Try the tips with medium sauce (true aficionados know super hot hides subtle flavor), with extra hot on the fries. Disco music often overplayed, but occasional reggae break is refreshing.

4) Shirley's--Open all night. Stay away from chili and any other dish you can't see all of. Omelettes and other breakfast fare cheap and usually just right for late night or early morning scene. Located at Twyckenham and Mishawaka Aves.

5) Sub Machine--Located on Lincolnway near the 100 Center and included because fast food is a tragic fact of life. There is no outstanding sub shop west of Harrisburg from what I have seen. Nostalgic Easterners can get by here with a little imagination. Double meat turkey a good choice. Easily filled up for five bucks.

6) Shakey's Pizza--Three dollars and twenty five cents gets you all you can eat from 5 p.m. to 7:30p.m. Choice of pizza, chicken, spaghetti, and several extras. All o-c students who have missed lunch know that bulk is important, so this deal is particularly attractive. Get there early since lines can be long. Located at 3213 E. Edison.

7) The Huddle--Another sad reality for the o-c student. Everyone has their own approach to this establishment which has a monopoly on the noon meal. I have learned to avoid the special and concentrate on the deli. My favorite is turkey and swiss which is more expensive than the special, but contains far less grease.

This dish can be supplemented with yogurt and milk rendering it somewhat nutritious and less bland. Also superior to the usual Huddle fare is the soup. Best bet: pack lunch yourself.

Taste & Civility at Tippecanoe Place

Mark Rust

Taste and civility in equal balance greet you at Tippecanoe Place, perhaps South Bend's finest restaurant. But the stately ambience does not overshadow the fare, which is exceptional.

A lover of old gothic mansions will be enchanted by Tippecanoe Place even before the congenial table captain has bid him welcome. The restaurant is located in the old Studebaker mansion on Washington Street (take a right off Michigan for two blocks) and the building has been beautifully restored as part of an historic building project undertaken by the Southold restoration group and the restaurant's owners (a subsidiary of Ralston/Purina). The architecture may be described by some as early Jacobian, though others may simply label it late 19th Century Victorian.

Upon entering through massive oak front doors into the towering foyer one is immediately struck by the meticulous attention paid to detail in the restoration. It is evident in the ornate bronze and wood sculpting around the hearth, moulding and walls. The high-back Victorian chairs and solid wood tables add to the turn-of-the-century theme. Particularly impressive is the manner in which the house is left intact: With only one exception, no walls have been knocked out — a common occurrence in buildings restored for commercial use, where space and cost are factors.

For the guest interested in libations the second floor holds a very civil lounge, frequently filled with the soft strains of a pianist whose baby grand piano is one of the room's focal points. Constant communication between the dining room, table captain and cocktail hostess ensures a relaxing drink before the diner is informed his table is ready.

But the food is the thing, and here is where Tippecanoe excels. My dining companion and I were escorted down the stairs to an elegant room on the lower level — the "billiards room." Each dining room at Tippecanoe is a room named for its original purpose. Thus, one may find oneself dining in the library (a lovely book-lined den just off the foyer), Ann's bedroom (one of many small dining rooms), or the sun room (a slightly less formal, more wicker-oriented room perfect for a late afternoon lunch in diffuse sunlight).

Our waiter was proper in the relaxed manner of one who enjoys his work. After presenting the menus and explaining the chef's specials of the day, he disappeared to let us sip our drinks and mull over the tasty possibilities.

We chose to share delicately breaded, fried cauliflower. Indicative of the care Tippecanoe places in the preparation of their food is the texture of their vegetables. The cauliflower, like the Brussels sprouts that followed with our entrees, were fresh and crisp, obviously steamed so that the flavor and essence remained while the mushy mess that some vegetables turn into was avoided.

Our salads were impeccable as well. The lettuce was, again, crisp and fresh, and the dressing did not run away with itself. Instead its subtle spice gave the palate a hint of things to come, readying the salivary glands for the keenly awaited entree.

My friend chose one of the specials of the day, Chicken Maryland, baked in a sauce of white wine and cream forming a perfect marriage with the flavor of the fowl. I also enjoyed a special, Baked Halibut, which basked in a sauce of cheese and lemon. No one taste took precedence over others in the dish. Rather, the sensations blended into a satisfying whole accenting the fresh fish, accompanied by a light rice pilaf.

To accent our meal we shared a pleasant bottle of California Pinot Chardonnay, a light, airy wine reasonably priced ($10.95). The wine selection, like the menu, is quite adequate and still in the process of growing as the new restaurant, opened seven months ago, continues to expand its offerings. At present, plans include a gourmet room that will open as soon as "we find a chef who meets our standards," according to Mike Davies, assistant manager.

Prices at Tippecanoe place are very reasonable, given its atmosphere and service. Most entrees are in the $6.95-$10.95 range, and are well worth the cost. Reservations are accepted on weekdays. Tippecanoe Place is a national gastronomic landmark, and, based on what we saw and tasted, it could become a gastronomic landmark as well.

Jeremiah Sweeney's; Exotically Mellow

Ryan Ver Berkmoes

If you are tired of these restaurants, those polyester places of pleasure that sprang up in the mid seventies offering loads of contrived atmosphere (often serving as a false front for mediocre food), then you will like Jeremiah Sweeney's.

The plain, box-like exterior of the building belies the lush innovative interior. The atmosphere is derived from a multi-level design. The dining area is separated into a number of smaller, intimate areas. The overall effect is sumptuous, and definitely conducive to romance.

Upon first entering, you see the lounge. It, like the dining area, is divided into many individual environs nestled amongst greenery. One area has a fireplace. On many nights, mellow string music is performed in keeping with the setting. Drinks are served with a flare that makes even a mundane scotch and soda interesting. A number of exotic house specials are offered including an item called: "the Moose River Hummer".

After being seated, guests are presented with a combination wine list and appetizer menu. The appetizers are the same as those available in the lounge, and include a number of items rare to Hoosierland, like a personal favorite, guacamole. The wine list has a wide selection of reasonably priced house wines, and an extensive array of the more expensive vintage bottles. We tried the house rose and found it a tasteful, mellow blend.

The dinner menu is the best in the Michiana area. It has a wide variety of meats and fish, plus a few items like a special Mexican entree that add true diversity. Other items of particular interest are scallops, Alaskan king crab legs, and Chicken Alfredo. The range of steaks includes prime rib and porterhouse.

Included with the entree is a trip to what Sweeney's somewhat pompously calls its United Nations Salad Bar. I wouldn't call it international, but I would call it good. In addition to the standard iceberg lettuce, choice of dressings and raw vegetables, there are several other salads — cucumbers in cream, and marinated legumes.

Despite the images the name conjures, the liver patee was delicate and moist. Other offerings included, fresh bread, herring in cream, a multitude of fresh fruits, and for the elitist, caviar. Special mention should be made of the croutons, which are the best I have ever had; they're crispy, yet they melt in your mouth, a delightful, rare combination. Also available is a hearty vegetable soup.

One must fight the temptation to gorge oneself at the salad bar, because the entrees are worth savoring every bite. I had the prime rib, which Sweeney's prepares using a method few restaurants bother with. The care was evident in the results I received. The large slab of meat was cooked to perfection, and it's tenderness almost made a knife unnecessary. My companion had the "Steak Neptune" which consisted of a filet smothered in a bernaise sauce and topped with King Crab legs, and an artichoke heart. It was, in her words, "excellent."

For those still able, a tempting diversity of desserts is offered. Featured is the renowned Haagen-daz brand of ice cream, heralded for its creaminess.

Prices at Jeremiah Sweeney's are what you would expect from a restaurant of it's caliber: Dinners range from $7 to $12. When compared to other establishments that charge the same yet offer less, Sweeney's is quite reasonable. Guests at the restaurant can expect an evening that will leave all their senses pleased. The unique atmosphere, superb food, lavish service and delightful imbibements all add up to a winning combination for Sweeney's and the patrons.

The Saga of SAGA

John Macor & Molly Woulfe

The immediately striking feature of the Saga Food Service dining halls is their atmosphere. Having been accustomed to a sedate and serene candle-lit dinner of veal cordon bleu with a bottle of Chateau de Rochelle, my culinary experience at Notre Dame could at best be described as an experience with a "nouvelle cuisine." Quite nouvelle.

The lack of a "maitre de" could be described as appalling; however, I prefer to refer to it as barbaric. The seating arrangements showed an absolute lack of taste, as I was seated next to a Neanderthal who insisted upon consuming his pork with the delicacy of a starved wolf. However, he insisted that this rancorous deed was a necessity owing its origin to the consistency of this meat. To further demonstrate his point, this savage attempted to tenderize his pork by beating it mercilessly on his plate. Hasn't anyone here heard of the "Burgundy marmalade?"

To equally complement the lack of a "maitre de" is the non-existence of "les garcons." After silently fuming for two hours for a waiter to approach with the wine list, a replica of my previous Neanderthal neighbor informed me (with the graciousness of a jackass) that I was expected to fend for my own food. Thus, I approached the service line. The details of this experience will have to be saved for a later review of the horror: "Phantom of the Opera" as my life was shortened by twenty years.

Equally terrifying, but more humiliating was the ordeal of the salad bar. After getting bruised, battered, and buffeted innumerable times in my valiant efforts to reach the salad bar, I was reduced to assuming the tactics of this crowd to reach my destination. I lowered my head and propelled myself toward this salad bar. Despite completing the arduous journey, my efforts were for naught. What was referred to as the salad bar was nothing more than some simple lettuce with some supposed dressings. The lettuce was of a variety that I have never seen; it was brown in color. And, curiously; the croutons were green. Needless to say, this review can not cover the salad bar, as I was thoroughly repulsed.

Returning to my seat amidst this confusing, loud hubbub, I regretfully viewed the main course. I was fortunate enough to avoid the pork, but cursed to have chosen the casserole. Assuming that its contents were rightfully dead, I assaulted my palate with this matter. Normally I would have referred to it as food simply out of kindness, but this was an extreme case of inhumane treatment which will be reported to the United Nations. I can say no further on the main course since my doctors have advised me to avoid situations which raise my blood pressure.

In the same vein, I wish to avoid the dessert list, as it causes me to recoil in gastronomical horror. The frozen custard was tolerable, but the rum cake reeked of something other than rum. I think that it had a similar odor to .....
Ed.'s note; reporter collapsed from food poisoning before completing this review, but is expected to recover.

How Sweet It Is

Molly Woulfe

Ah, yes, life on a Christian campus.

Lynn, a friend, lives in a single directly across from an alcove containing several vending machines. Although Lynn is occasionally awakened at 4 a.m. by cans thumping from the Pepsi machine, she likes her room's location, as she is a junk food junkie herself.

Well, Lynn liked her room's location.

One afternoon, not long ago, she was studying history notes at her desk when someone rapped at her door. A short, elderly man in workclothes peered inside. He was holding a heavy-looking box. "Scuse me, miss, but I carried this in and left my keys in my truck," he said apologetically. "Can I set this down here for a minute?"

"Sure." The man eased the box to the floor and left. Lynn tilted back in her chair and craned her neck. The box was lined with Hershey bars, Clark Bars, M & M's, and other goodies. Lynn, a chocolate fiend, studied the assortment longingly, then returned to Peter the Hermit and Walter the Penniless.

Carol, a girl from down the hall, strolled in, snapping her gum. "Hey, got any typing pa-hey, you get a package from home? Wow, look at all this stuff!"

"No, a workman set it down for a minute," explained Lynn.

"Yeah? No kidding? Pig out!" Carol reached down and grabbed a handful of candy bars. Curious faces appeared in the doorway.

"Hey..." Lynn began. "Wow, Doublemint, too!" the other girl chortled, pawing past M & M's.

"What's going on?" someone asked.

"Free candy! The workman left it!" Carol proclaimed, stuffing candy into the designer pockets of her Calvin Kleins.

In an instant, the room was a zoo, with girls knocking over plants, stepping on albums, elbowing, and jostling, to get at the candy. A slight scuffle began when two girls grabbed for the same package of Chuckles at the same time. One girl shoved the other. Another potted plant bit the dust. The second girl shoved back. Someone pushed them both aside.

By now Lynn, normally a pacifist, had Had It. She grabbed a half-eaten Hershey bar from Carol, who sent her sprawling against the desk. Someone took a swing at Carol. Shouts, fists, and Chuckles filled the air.

Let it be noted here that every girl in the room, at this moment, was from a "good" home, had at least one checkbook and/or credit card, and was not in danger of starving before dinner.

The workman stood in the doorway. Punches froze in mid-swing, and then everyone stampeded from the room, except for Lynn. Doors slammed up and down the hall, and then it was quiet.

The workman looked at the tipped plants, at the chocolate crushed into the carpet, at Lynn's face. He picked up the half-empty box, reached into it, and silently handed Lynn a Mars Bar. Then he left, shaking his head.

A more-cynical-than-before Lynn keeps the Mars Bar on her desk. "The next time Carol walks into this room," she vows grimly, "I'm going to break this over her head."

OVER THE HILL? HARDLY.

Charlie Brown & Gang Hit 30, but Going Strong

success. The strip is translated into 22 foreign languages for newspapers in 64 foreign countries. None of the humor or warmth is lost in the translation. Somehow, the "Peanuts" gang--Charlie Brown, Linus, Lucy, Schroeder, Woodstock, Peppermint Patty, and of course Snoopy--touch all of us. That is the unique genius of their creator, Charles "Sparky" Schulz.

"I have frequently referred to the comic strip as a sidewalk medium," says Schulz. "By this, I mean that the comic strip appeals to just plain people. However, if handled in the proper manner, the comic strip can burst these traditional bounds and appeal also to people who are better educated and are fortunate enough to have a more cultured background. To do this, the cartoonist himself need not be this educated or cultured, but he must possess that rarest of all commodities, which is plain common sense."

As the popularity of the "Peanuts" strip has grown, so has its success in other media. The record now seems nothing short of remarkable. The 20th animated network TV special, "Life is a Circus, Charlie Brown," will be aired in October. There have been four feature-length movies, a long-run-ing stage musical, "you're a Good Man Charlie Brown," and literally hundreds of books. Additionally, the "Peanuts" characters have appeared on merchandise ranging from greeting cards to sportswear to loaves of bread. Schulz personally approves every item before the licensee begins marketing the product.

And, just like when he started out 30 years ago, Schulz writes and draws every strip himself.

"My main objective has always been to try to draw a good strip every day," he says. "Every emotion that you have, plus every experience and bit of knowledge which you have acquired, go into the creation of a comic strip."

Schulz, who is 57, lives in Santa Rosa California, with his wife, Jean. His five children range in age from 19 to 27. He was born and raised in Minneapolis, and an early incarnation of "Peanuts," called "Li'l Folks," appeared weekly in the St. Paul Pioneer Press in 1947. "I grew up with only one real career desire in life," he says, "and that was to some day draw my own comic strip."

Does he have any advice for the legion of young cartoonists who would follow in his footsteps? "There is no definite series of steps which you have to take," he believes. "You certainly do not have to have an 'in' someplace. All you have to do is be able to draw a comic strip which is better than any other now running."

Thirty years ago United Features Syndicate began distributing a new comic strip about a pint-sized sad sack with a round head and a slightly precocious dog. The original client list was just seven newspapers--the Washington Post, Chicago Tribune, Allentown Call-Chronicle, Bethletown Globe-Times, Denver Post, Minneapolis Star-Tribune, and Seattle Times. The strip caught on. Its popularity grew and grew and it still hasn't stopped. Today it is read by more than 60 million people every day in 1,800 newspapers, including The Observer. Good grief, Charlie Brown! "Peanuts" is 30 this month.

The universal appeal of "Peanuts" accounts for its spectacular

LETTERS TO A LONELY GOD

The Shape of a Continent

Rev. Robert Griffin

It would be difficult this week not to write about Bill Toohey's death. For over two weeks now, he has constantly been on my mind. Like everyone else, I have been praying for him, with the tears very close to the surface.

He was a graceful and gifted priest; and if I say I loved him, I am not implying we were close friends, or even that I saw him often. At times, during the past ten years, I'm sure that I said things or did things that hurt him, but there were days also when I didn't think he was being kind to me.

Colleagues, in trying to define themselves, are capable of wounding each other with the minor cruelties; after bleeding a little, they forgive each other, and greet each other good-naturedly when the cup is passed. In recent years especially, Bill made me feel that we were foot soldiers in the same general skirmish. It would astonish me, once in a while, to learn how he had defended me when I had gotten myself caught in a situation where I couldn't easily defend myself.

Life gets scary when you begin to lose the friends you've learned to depend on for survival. It's surprising for an older priest to realize how heavily he has been leaning on borrowed strength.

The truth, for me, about Bill was that ten years ago, he got the job I wanted at Notre Dame. I don't know if he ever knew I wanted the job, but I was desperate to have it. I hungered and thirsted to be the spiritual coach to the greatest student body on earth, in the same way, I suppose, that some towel-carrier in Hoboken dreams of being the head football coach under the Golden Dome. I knew, from being told, that my name was mentioned as a possible choice, so I waited from May until August, hoping against hope, like a child praying he might find a pony in his Christmas stocking.

If I had been an administrator considering candidates, I certainly would have chosen Toohey over Griffin. But I was not an administrator, and I was not Bill Toohey. I was merely Griffin: fat, clumsy, and a certified sentimentalist. What was hard to take at the time was that nobody Administrative, or nobody in the University, seemed aware of how much I coveted the job, as though I couldn't possibly be that foolishly ambitious. By not even suspecting, they made me feel embarrassed by my dream, like the goblin who falls in love with a princess.

I honestly understood their decision to put Bill Toohey in charge of Campus Ministry, but I felt sorry for myself anyway. I probably watched him more closely than anyone else on campus. Administrators didn't have time to watch him as closely as I watched him, and students simply lacked the credentials of experience for Toohey-watching.

Critical, jealous of his style, easily hurt by his criticisms of those of us who had been chaplains here before he arrived, I examined him with the hard-eyed kind of care you might give at a party, to the husband of the girl who has refused your offer of marriage, to find out how worthy he was of the prize he had been gifted with.

I watched him; finally, I praised him; in the end, I loved him. Now, ten years later, when I consider the work he has done, I realize I would not have known how to even begin the job. I am humbled by my remembrance of being grieved with the Lord for not letting me build him a house of faith, like a Rockne who recruits teams for religion.

Late this summer, in New York, Bill attended a wedding Mass I was saying at St. Patrick's, and we sat next to each other at the reception. He was in New York, he said, to see his publisher.

There are moments in my life when I feel closer to the members of my community than to anyone else on earth. I have a feeling about the community that we are, all of us, equally fragile and equally strong, equally threatened and equally safe; that there is a brotherhood among us in which we protect each other, and all who need us, from the lonely terror of feeling unloved; that there is a common commitment of our lives that makes us the family of Christ; and that no one of us is ever so good or so beautiful as when we are together, being brothers to one another.

On that bright August afternoon, while a groom danced with his bride on a floor close to the rooftop in a New York hotel, I was quietly happy being at home and being at peace with Bill Toohey. Being at home means the company you keep; being at peace means the quiet time you share, pleased to accept the other, pleased that the other accepts you.

It was nearly the last time we were together, two seasoned vets, gentlemen of differing centuries, representing the old age and the youth of the Church: the Sacred Heart or social justice, Gothic or Godspell; Dan Berrigan, or the Nine Promises made to Sister Margaret Mary. All we had in common was an entire Catholic faith; it was not much, but it would do, if we differed enough in styles. I didn't need to be Toohey; he didn't want to be Griffin, but we were both affirmed by a feeling of warm cordiality out of which we mutually ministered respect and caring.

For over two weeks now, I have lived — like everyone else on campus — with the thought of Bill's dying. On Monday, when the church bells signalled the sadness of his passing, I felt diminished by his death. Knowing for whom it was that the bell tolled, I felt diminished by his death beyond any mere truth that no man is an island, entire of itself.

"Every man is a piece of the Continent, a part of the maine," wrote John Donne. "If a Clod be washed away by the Sea, Europe is the less, as well as if a Promontory were." Speaking for myself, I feel as though the Clod had lost the Continent. I never lost a Continent before. I'm surprised how long it took me to find out what a Continent is shaped like.

OCTOBER 12-19

AI; 'Prisoner of Conscience' Week

P. Byrnes.

This week Amnesty International organized and focused all its efforts on behalf of victims of different methods of political repression — including abduction, house arrest, prosecution on false criminal charges and short-term arrest.

The international human rights movement has organized its annual Prisoners of Conscience Week, running from October 12-19 this year, around the theme of 'The Different Faces of Imprisonment.'

It aims to turn the spotlight on techniques which avoid or bypass the too-familiar pattern of political trials, as well as on prisoners convicted on overly political charges.

Amnesty International, a voluntary organization with more than a quarter of a million members and supporters in 134 countries, is organizing publicity and public events to call attention to such abuses as: — "Disappearances."

Many thousands of real or suspected critics of their governments have been snatched from homes and streets. Many are later found murdered. In Argentina, where an estimated 15,000 people have "disappeared" since 1975, escapees have described a network of secret detention camps where torture and death are commonplace. Some 25,000 people are estimated to have "disappeared" in Guatemala since 1966, and thousands in Chile. Other "disappearances" are reported from widely separate parts of the world. "Banning," house arrest, internal exile. In South Africa, more than 1,400 people are believed to have been "banned" by simple ministerial order since 1950.

They may live year after year under strict limits as to the hours in which they can leave their houses, how many people and whom they can speak or write to, isolated and rigidly controlled. The Soviet Union and Chile are among countries where internal exile to remote areas is used; South Korea and the Central African Republic are among many where forms of house arrest are used to stifle dissent.

— Short-term detention. In Colombia, activists for Indian and trade union rights are repeatedly arrested for short periods, and sometimes tortured before being released.

Among many other countries where repeated short-term imprisonment, often without trial, has been reported are Pakistan and Poland.

— False criminal charges. A Romanian economist applied to emigrate to join his wife and child abroad. He was imprisoned on charges of "homosexual acts." Prisoners of conscience in Romania and the Soviet Union are serving terms for convictions on charges of "hooliganism," "parasitism," and other offenses.

In Mexico, people involved in land disputes, student and trade union activities have been arrested on criminal charges that appear to be false. There are signs that this kind of repression is increasing in several countries.

Amnesty International has been organizing annual Prisoner of Conscience Weeks since 1968. For more information, call Larry Cox at 212-582-4440 or Jim Gates at 272-7051.

about to re-enter dialogue with the community of nations.

Secretary of State Edmund Muskie sticks a Carter-Mondale button in his lapel and goes off to address the National Woman's Democratic Club in Washington.

From the floor comes a question about the rumor heard all over Washington on this warm Thursday afternoon - that the United States was about to trade arms and ammunition to Iran in exchange for 52 Americans.

"I've heard the rumors," says Muskie enigmatically. Then he steps back and says no more, for the moment.

At a crowded Pentagon briefing, spokesman Thomas Ross issues a categorical denial of everything: "the facts of the matter are that we have not loaded planes, we have not issued orders for planes to be loaded, we have not alerted people to that possibility. There is nothing going on in that area whatsoever."

At the State Department, spokesman John Trattner is uncommunicative. He pleads with reporters not to jump to conclusions.

"Your role could be important and even crucial," he says.

What was going on here?

There are no facts. No one in a position to know will say if there is a deal, or if there are negotiations, or if there has been a signal, or if the hostages have been moved or if the president is planning some dramatic move. There are no facts.

Irish close out fall season

by Dave Irwin
Sports Writer

Notre Dame's baseball team concludes its fall season with a pair of single games against St. Francis beginning at 3 p.m. today and 9 a.m. Saturday. Both games are scheduled to be played on Jake Kline Field.

The Irish's record improved to 8-4-1 last weekend as Notre Dame slipped past Valparaiso 2-1 while the second game, called because of darkness, tied 3-3. St. Francis will be looking to tarnish that record.

"It's a big game for St. Francis," Irish head coach Larry Gallo said. "They've been wanting to play Notre Dame for awhile."

Gordy Gillespie is head coach for St. Francis. While at Lewis University, Gillespie won three consecutive NAIA championships. Besides being head baseball coach, Gillespie is also St. Francis' athletic director and director for Joliet Catholic football.

"St. Francis plays good ball and they're a tough club," Gallo said. "In the spring, they schedule 106 contests and usually finish the season with 95 plus games under their belt. Their Southern trip consists of 30 games with the best competition in the South and Southwest." Notre Dame had just nine hits in the doubleheader against Valparaiso

"We didn't play well at all against Valparaiso," Gallo said. "We didn't do well at all in hitting with men on base and in scoring position. We didn't negotiate a sacrifice bunt and missed some signs that cost us. We simply prolonged the second game," he commented.

The Irish did not throw their top two pitchers — senior Mike Deasey and Bob Bartlett — against Valparaiso, but Gallo was impressed with those that did pitch.

"We didn't throw our so-called top pitchers, but the pitchers that did throw did as good a job as anyone this fall," Gallo said. Steve Whitmyer pitched the first four innings, surrendering just one run (the first he has given up this fall in 10 innings), while Greg Jaun pitched three innings of shutout relief.

In the second game, Bill Matre, freshman Bob Hickey and Steve Gallinaro combined to limit the Crusaders to three runs.

"It's a big game for St. Francis" with sophomore Rick Chryst getting two hits. Chryst was pacing the Irish regulars with a .400 batting average before the doubleheader. Senior captain Mike Jamieson also had two hits while Geore Iams stole two bases bringing his total to seven.

double Wednesday night. "The confidence comes from the fact that we are doing it, have done it and now expect to do it. The important thing is that now we all expect us to come through when we have to."

And the Phillies keep doing exactly that. The team has won five postseason games now and come from behind to take every one of them. Sometimes it's early, the way they strafed Leonard in Game 1. Sometimes it's late, the way they took Quisenberry in Game 2. But eventually, they seem to come back one way or another.

Bowa, observing the situation from the Phillies' side of the field, had some advice for the Royals.

"They're down two to nothing," he said. "They'd better get on the stick."

And if they don't? "We have the best road record in the National League," Bowa concluded.

Water polo drops four in tourney

The Notre Dame water polo club recently returned from a tournament held at Loyola of Chicago. Although the team lost all four games, it played well against the other established varsity squads.

In the opening match-up, Iowa State edged past the Irish 19-17. Three other near victories eluded them as they fell to Southern Illinois, Kentucky, and national powerhouse Brown.

The Irish team's efforts did not go unnoticed by the opposing coaches and players. "After the Brown game, their coach told us how really impressed he was with our program," relates club president Mike Corbisiero. "The coach of Loyola and all the Kentucky players were also very impressed."

Why was everybody so impressed with the Irish performance? First of all, this is a first-year team. Water polo at Notre Dame was just an idea in the heads of Corbisiero and a few others, until last spring. Secondly, it is a club sport competing on an even level with varsity programs. And lastly, the team has no coach.

"We had one lined up last year, but he moved," Corbisiero says.

So these responsibilities were taken over by Corbisiero, and so far he has put in a good performance as player-coach. The team's record stands at 3-7, more than respectable for a first year club venture.

But Corbisiero does not accept full credit for the way the team has played this year.

"There is a tremendous amount of dedication on this team," boasts Corbisiero, "from the seniors on down. They have all worked very hard."

This dedication can be seen just about every day in the Rockne Memorial pool, where the club members undergo a rigorous practice of drills, scrimmages and intense sprints at the end. This dedication also continues out of the pool, where the team has to scrape to meet travel expenses.

"Being a club sport, we receive some money from the Office of Non-Varsity Sports. We also have $10 membership dues and have raised money through movies, concession stands, and selling programs before the home football games," says Corbisiero.

Even with these efforts, only fifteen of the twenty-five member team can travel to away games. But the team has succeeded in laying a solid foundation for the future, and an auspicious one at that, according to the club president.

"There is a very good future for water polo at Notre Dame. Of the seven starters, four are underclassmen. The only thing this team needs to make it truly successful is a coach. After that, the possibilities are endless."

So it appears that water polo is here to stay, thanks to the pioneering efforts of Corbisiero. His team has epitomized the idea behind club sports. There is no glory, no cheering fans, no athletic scholarships. Just a sense of individual competition and the desire to excel under a team concept.

...Haines

Still, there has been a great deal of transition for the Akron, OH, native. "They're basically the same pass routes," he said, "But I've had to learn different techniques and philosophies. Reading defenses is much more complicated. Where you might have five in college, you can have up to 20 different variations to read in the pros." Haines also mentioned that a lot more film is studied to determine the strengths and weaknesses of the opposing defensive backs.

In fulfilling his primary role as a member of the "suicide squad," Haines usually looks like an orange and blue streak heading toward the opposing kick returner. In recent Monday night action against Tampa Bay, Kris downed a third quarter punt on the Bucs' two-yard line. The Bucs were eventually forced to punt from their own end zone and the Bears used that field position to advantage as they scored the game's first touchdown.

Kris Haines is quite realistic in discussing his future plans. "Sure I'd like to play football as long as I can. But in the off-season, I'm going to pursue my MBA and/or continue my job in sales at Bell Products."

Kris, who lives in a lakefront Chicago apartment, cautions Bear fans against letdowns over the team's early season misfortunes. "The Bears have a history of slow starts," he stated. "Hey, we've got a good team. We just need to beat a quality team to gain some momentum."

The fleet-footed receiver also spoke fondly of his football days at Notre Dame.

"Notre Dame is the most prestigious place in the world for a college player to play. Nothing will ever match the feeling of being on the 1977 team when we wore those green jerseys and came running out of the tunnel for the USC game!" he said. "I miss the college spirit, the excitement of the whole student body pulling for you on every play."

Notre Dame misses Kris Haines, too.

Pistol Pete calls it a day by Tim Prister

He was certainly not an imposing figure on the basketball court. All his life he was extremely frail looking compared to the other ballplayers. Adding to his slender physique, his hair was long and shaggy and he insisted on wearing a pair of decrepit, floppy woolen socks for every game. In fact he wore the same pair all through college.

Early in his career, he even had to begin his jump shot from his right hip because the ball was simply too heavy.

"Someone said it looked like I was handling a pistol, shooting from the hip," he said, thus prompting the nickname, "Pistol."

Pete Maravich stood out from all the rest, yet it was not his appearance that separated him from the other ballplayers on the court. Rather it was his magical ability to place an inflated spherical object into a metal ring 18 inches in diameter, virtually any time he felt like it.

Of course, Maravich's ball handling ability was not inborn or learned overnight. Countless hours were spent perfecting his technique always under the watchful eye of his eventual college coach who was none other than his own father. "Nobody in the game ever had so stunning a training program," said Bill Gutman biographer of Maravich's life.

The Pistol's rare ability was evidenced by his shattering of nearly every college scoring record. Maravich averaged an incredible 44.2 points per varsity game at Louisiana State University, a record that has remained unscathed for over a decade.

Even more remarkably, Maravich managed to average over five assists a game while still continuing to score in droves. Meanwhile, Pete displayed his bag of tricks for an LSU team that consistently finished near the .500 mark in won-lost percentage.

Thus critics of Maravich's razzle dazzle, behind-the-back pass, now you see it, now you don't style of play, labeled him a loser, certainly unable to help lead an NBA team to a title.

As it turned out, the critics were absolutely correct. Pete Maravich never played on a World Championship team. Of course, what they always failed to mention was the Maravich never played on a team of World Championship caliber.

Sure, the Atlanta Hawks were playoff contenders for a few years but Maravich's flashy style of play disturbed and angered many of his teammates which prompted a group of grown men to behave like infants because their names weren't appearing in the headlines as often as the Pistol's.

Then there was the trade to the New Orleans Jazz in 1974. Maravich was surrounded by a crew who many pro scouts said could play defense only if assigned to guard a statue. Maravich managed to lead the league in scoring in the 1976-77 season with 31.1 p.p.g.

But probably Maravich's best season was the following year when he almost single-handedly led the Jazz into the playoffs.

Amidst a heated dispute with general manager Lewis Schaffel, the Pistol sparked a 10-game winning streak — shortly before suffering a knee injury that later required surgery and forced him to miss 32 of the last 35 games. At the time of his injury, Maravich was leading the league in scoring.

In 1979, the Jazz replanted its roots in Salt Lake City, Utah. By this time, Maravich's struggle with his arthritic knees two months.

On January 22, 1980, Maravich signed with the Boston Celtics as a free agent. Finally, after waiting 10 years to get into a meaningful playoff, "the Ol' Pistol," as one writer quipped, "had nothing left but blanks."

Pete Maravich decided to call it quits this year after averaging nearly 25 points a game over a 10 year span. Pete Maravich was not a loser in fact, the Pistol was a breath of fresh air into a generally lifeless game — pro basketball.

Faced with constant adversity, including a bout with mononucleosis at training camp before his second season in the NBA, Maravich continued to play his game. He had the uncanny ability to delight the throngs of people who oftentimes attended NBA games for only one reason — to see the Pistol.

Fortunately for the pro basketball diehards, standouts like "Magic" Johnson and Larry Bird are playing pro basketball, but there will never be another Pete Maravich.

Thanks for the memories Pistol, and on behalf of the NBA, much obliged.

Irish to clash with Cadets

by Beth Huffman
Sports Editor

Army, the first of the three military service academies on the 1980 Irish schedule rolls into Notre Dame for a 1:30 grid match-up tomorrow. The Cadets, who have compiled a 2-2-1 slate thus far in 1980, will be followed by the remaining Commander-in-Chief's Trophy candidates, Navy and Air Force, later in the season.

The West Point men, who began the season relatively well by defeating Holy Cross and California, finished deadlocked at 24 points against Lehigh last Saturday under the direction of head coach Ed Cavanaugh. Cavanaugh, the third Army mentor in as many years, directs a squad with 32 lettermen returning from last year's 2-8-1 team. "This Army team is a far cry, for instance, from the 1970 team that was 1-9 or the 1973 team that was 0-10," says Dan Devine, who boasts a 48-14-0 record as the Irish head coach. "Notre Dame fans are going to be in for a real surprise when they see how much improved the caliber of their skilled people and the whole team is."

Army, who last met Irish in 1977 and fell 24-0 in Giants Stadium, is lead offensively by split end Mike Fahnestock and half back Gerald Walker.

Walker, a 5-11, 180-pounder from Greenville, S.C., was the Cadet's second leading rusher last year and has already amassed 500-plus yards in his team's first five contests.

Back to K. C.

KANSAS CITY (AP) — Now it is Rich Gale's turn to try and halt what is beginning to look like a Philadelphia juggernaut.

Gale gets the assignment of starting the third game of the 1980 World Series Friday night against Philadelphia's Dick Ruthven as the Kansas City Royals desperately seek a way to solve the late-inning lightning of the Phillies.

And the Royals may have to do it without superstar George Brett.

Brett, suffering from hemorrhoids which forced him out of Thursday night's game after five innings, went directly to St. Luke's Hospital to see a proctologist when the team returned home.

The Royals have been swamped with homemade recipes for remedies to Brett's problem. They might be better off, though, with a remedy for the Phillies.

"When you're two down, it's not very good," said Kansas City Manager Jim Frey. "We plan to do better at home."

They had better if they hope to keep this best-of-seven Series going. They've been burned twice by Philadelphia thunder, surrendering an early 4-0 lead to lose the opener 7-6, watching the Phillies soar from behind again with a four-run eighth inning to take Game 2 6-4.

The Phillies beat Dennis Leonard, Kansas City's 20-game winner, in the opener, and exploded against bullpen ace Dan Quisenberry to take the second game.

It is not an encouraging prospect for Gale, 13-9 during the regular season. The Phillies are looking forward to the confrontation.

The bounces have been going Philadelphia's way. There's no question about that. But this team, appearing in its first World Series in 30 years, is starting to feel like it's been tapped on the shoulder by destiny.

"I haven't seen this type of confidence before in my major league career," said Del Unser, who contributed a vital pinch

With Chicago Bears

Kris Haines finds new home

Two seconds left... Montana rolls to his right, fires into the end zone... TOUCHDOWN!... Kris Haines with a diving catch and Notre Dame has tied it... WHAT A FINISH!

1979 Cotton Bowl
Irish 35, Houston 34

Almost two football seasons have passed since Notre Dame's great triumph at the Cotton (Freeze) Bowl of '79. Some of its principal participants have since graduated and moved on to bigger and better things. Joe Montana is now a QB for the 49'ers. Vagas Ferguson is a star rookie for the Patriots.

But what of the man who made the catch to preserve the miracle?

Kris Haines has found a home in Chicago. As a backup split end and special teams player extraordinaire, he has adapted to a role he is expected to play among the 45 cogs that make up the Chicago Bears. An after-practice chat with the affable '79 alumnus revealed much of the enthusiasm that Haines has carried with him into the pros.

"I've really enjoyed being with the Bears," Haines noted. "This is just like a rookie year for me and I realize its going to take awhile so I try to be valuable to the team wherever I can."

A 9th round Redskin draft pick in 1979, Kris was waived two days prior to the season opener. He caught on with the Bears in December for the final two regular season contests and helped the Monsters of the Midway achieve an NFC wild card playoff spot.

Mike

During the 1980 exhibition season, Haines received his greatest thrill to date as a pro against the Cleveland Browns. QB Mike Phipps let go a "Hail Mary" pass toward the Chicago end zone as the half ended. Kris snared the ball in mid-air after it was tipped by another player. "I was surprised to see the ball floating toward me, but was so elated when I knew it was a touchdown."

Haines relates the fact that his coach, Neill Armstrong, has been instrumental in helping Kris establish himself as an NFL player. "Neill is firm, but extremely well-liked by his players," said Haines. "He's a player's coach." Kris also mentioned that Armstrong's offensive system is not as difficult to grasp as Washington coach Jack Pardee's playbook.

Restic rumors continue

An article published in the Quincy, Mass. Patriot Ledger by Tony Ferullo announced yesterday that Harvard's head football coach, Joe Restic, had been selected to replace the retiring Dan Devine at Notre Dame.

"My two sources, the main one, more Notre Dame-related than Harvard's said that Restic came to terms two weeks ago," said Ferullo.

However, both Restic and Notre Dame officials refuse to comment on the the appointment.

"I have no comment on anything about Notre Dame," said Restic, who further stated the only thing on his mind was this week's game.
