Off-campus crime: The residents' view

Editor's Note: Although violent crimes have decreased as the weather gets colder, off-campus crime on the whole is still painfully evident to Notre Dame students living in South Bend. In the following three-part series, The Observer examines the problems of the Northeast Neighborhood from different viewpoints — from the angle of the South Bend administration, the South Bend Police Department, and the local residents, both permanent and transient. Today: part one, the residents.

His apartment abounded in comfort. Plush couches sat tastefully on plush carpeting. Paintings hung from the walls; plants, from the ceiling. Draperies gracefully covered a wall of glass doors, which led to a balcony. There was a bar of fine wood with a neat row of matching bar stools. And of course, a stereo with speakers four-feet high occupied center stage of the living room.

"I carry a knife when I walk home at night," the apartment's occupant commented. "And since the semester started, I've pulled it twice just walking home from the library," he added.

Off-campus assaults robberies and beatings no longer automatically appear on The Observer's front pages. Like a major city's seemingly callous attitude towards crime, Notre Dame's off-campus squirmishes are fast becoming an inevitable part of the status quo.

Students and residents living in the city's northeast neighborhood have indeed accepted crime as a consequence for living in the area. One need only walk up and down Notre Dame Avenue to see the precautions which have been taken. Billyclubs and baseball bats sit next to front doors; windows have safety locks on them. Guns are rumored to sit in bureau drawers and knives line quite a few Levi's pockets.

Militants give up hostages

By The Associated Press

Iranian militants met with Iranian leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini yesterday and turned over "responsibility" for their 52 American captives to the government. U.S. officials, who are considering Iranian terms for their release, said the development was encouraging.

"We will from now on delegate responsibility for the (hostages') safeguarding to the government and will engage in the most important current issue of the revolution, defense of the Islamic homeland," Tehran Radio quoted a statement from the militants as saying. The militants were referring to Iran's current border war with Iraq.

Plans for the physical transfer of the hostages will be worked out following a "meeting before midnight" (3:30 p.m. EST) between the government and the militants, officials of the Iranian prime minister's office reported.

The militants' statement said the government during that meeting would "introduce (their) representative for delivery of the American spies."

The aides to the prime minister said Algeria was delegated to handle talks with Washington and the captives' release if the U.S. government meets Iran's demands. They said that in the meantime Iran will continue to have custody of the hostages,

Reagan, Carter await the outcome

By Donald M. Rothberg
AP Political Writer

WASHINGTON — Their long, sometimes bitter campaign over, President Carter and Ronald Reagan are reduced to the role of the average citizen. Today, on the first anniversary of the takeover of the U.S. Embassy in Iran, they could only vote and wait.

Carter was returning to his Plains, Ga., home to cast his ballot, and Reagan was at his oceanfront house in Los Angeles.

After months of Reagan's harping on Carter's handling of the economy and the president's hints that Reagan could start a war, the final days of their campaign were dominated by swiftly moving events in Tehran that encouraged speculation that the ordeal of the 52 American hostages soon may end.

No one could say how those events would affect the outcome of the presidential race, and the candidates reacted cautiously.

"Don't know yet," was the president's response on Monday when asked if he was encouraged by the news that the Iranian militants holding the hostages had agreed to relinquish custody to the Iranian government.

Referring to the hostages in an election eve address for which his campaign purchased time on the three television networks, Reagan said, "Like you, there is nothing I want more than their safe return — that they be returned with their families after this long year of imprisonment."

Another unpredictable factor in the presidential race was independent candidate John B. Anderson, who insisted on Monday, despite polls showing him far behind the others, that there could be "dramatic shifts" to his candidacy on Election Day.

Carter, concerned that Anderson is more likely to draw support from him than from Reagan, appealed Monday to dissident Democrats to reconsider any plans to vote for Anderson. The president said he and the Illinois congressman have goals "very close" on such issues as energy conservation and controlling the spread of nuclear weapons.

Then he added, "I ask you to consider the consequences to your lives if you should wake up Wednesday morning and find a new administration ready to take over the Oval Office, not committed to these goals."

During a long day campaigning in Ohio, Illinois, Michigan, Missouri, Washington and Oregon, Carter coupled his appeals to potential Anderson voters with sharp attacks on Reagan.

"You can rewrite the lines in the movie industry and you can rewrite the lines in the history of some businesses, but there's no way to wipe out 20 years of right-wing Republicanism exemplified by Governor Reagan," he said.

In a last-minute schedule change, Carter dropped plans for a closing-day campaign stop in California and added an appearance in Detroit. Aides denied the change meant the president was writing off Reagan's home state and its 45 electoral votes.

More than 80 million Americans were expected to vote, their ballots deciding contests for thousands of offices from the local level to the White House.

The key to victory for Reagan or for Carter appeared to rest in the verdict of closely contested industrial states in the Midwest, and both men made final bids for support there.

The tables are turned

Bigwig's capture ires Iranians

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — Iraq refused to free Iran's oil minister yesterday and said Iran's complaint that his battlefield capture violated international law sounded odd coming from a country that has held 52 Americans hostage for a year.

The Iraqis said they held Iran's oil minister Mohammed Jawad Baqir Tunguyan and five senior aides here and shunned an Iranian pledge to invoke "all international codes and regulations" for his release.

"They were ambushed and kidnapped ... and taken to Iraqi territory," said a statement by Iran's Prime Minister Mohammad Ali Rajai.

Iraqi officials pointed to the occupied U.S. Embassy in Tehran as an answer to Iranian complaints about the illegality of the capture and noted that Tunguyan and his aides are prisoners of war.

Iraq said one of its patrols captured Tunguyan, 30, outside the besieged city of Abadan on Friday. Abadan has been shelled daily since the war began September 22. The Iraqis claim to surround the city.

Both sides reported sharp fighting yesterday at Abadan, Iran's last stronghold on the Shatt al-Arab waterway and the source of 60 percent of its refined oil before the 43-day-old war began.

Abadan was the target of a fresh weekend drive by the Iraqis who threw a mobile bridge across the Bahmanshir River and stormed up its eastern river bank into the outlying Zolfaqar district.

Iran's news agency Pars admitted that "Iraqi mercenary aggressors ... had infested" the Zolfaqar district but were "totally annihilated and their positions destroyed." A war communique asserted Iranian troops pushed back by several miles Iraqis trying to block southern roads to the city.

Pars said yesterday Iranian warplanes bombed Iraq's "deluded mercenaries" near the Bahmanshir River.

Iran, issuing a flurry of dispatches and communiques claiming smashing war victories, has made such claims several times before.

Contracts totaling $2,088,166 have been let for the reconstruction and expansion of Saint Edward's Hall, Notre Dame's oldest dormitory that was severely damaged by a June 25 fire. The general contractor is Casteel Construction Co.; mechanical, United Heating and Plumbing; electrical, Koontz-Wagner Electrical; temperature controls, Havel Bros., Inc. and windows, Mon-Ray Corporation.

The hall, built in 1882, will be physically upgraded in the historical restoration, and a addition will enable it to house 187 students, compared with 134 before the fire. University officials hope to have the reconstruction finished by the start of classes in the fall of 1981. — The Observer

A 9-year-old boy who was either strangled or smothered has become the 11th black child murdered in Atlanta in the last 16 months — and the first since the city mounted an all-out campaign to find the killer, police said yesterday. Four other black children have disappeared during that time in a series of unsolved crimes that Public Safety Commissioner Lee Brown called "the worst thing that has ever happened in Atlanta." After the body of a ninth child was found in early October, the city began to try to find the person or persons responsible. Officers began going door-to-door in certain neighborhoods questioning residents, and weekend crews of volunteers undertook searches of areas where authorities thought the missing children might be found. The commissioner said a 25-member special task force investigating the deaths would be increased to 35 members and said officers would be specially assigned to patrol neighborhoods when children are about. An 11 p.m. curfew for children under 15 is already in effect.

The Supreme Court said yesterday it will decide whether the nation's public schools and colleges must pay for interpreters to help deaf students in their classwork. In a case that could significantly affect the educational opportunities of handicapped persons, the court will study a University of Texas attempt to avoid such expenses. A federal appeals court said the university was obligated under the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 to pay for Walter Camenisch's classroom interpreter. The law prohibits all programs and activities receiving federal aid from discriminating against any "otherwise qualified handicapped individual." That would include all public schools and most private colleges and universities. The handicapped rights case dates back to 1978, when Camenisch was working toward his master's degree in education at the Austin, Texas, campus. He sued the university, and U.S. District Judge Jack Roberts ordered the university to pay for an interpreter for Camenisch. The 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals upheld Robert's ruling, distinguishing Camenisch's case from a 1979 Supreme Court decision that said handicapped persons have no legal right to attend schools if they cannot meet the physical qualifications.

Actor Robert Redford has sent a telegram to U.S. Representative Dan Quayle protesting the use of his name and photographs in connection with Quayle's campaign to unseat U.S. Senator Birch Bayh. In a telegram sent through Warner Communications Inc. in New York on Friday, the film star noted that Quayle has been referred to throughout the campaign as the GOP's answer to Robert Redford. "I have read articles on the 1980 Indiana Senate race where you are described as my 'look alike,'" the telegram said. "After comparing your record with that of Senator Birch Bayh, it is clear to me that I am much more supportive of Bayh's views than yours," the telegram continued. "I therefore find the connection with your campaign particularly insidious."

'Museum,' worth looking into

With the dedication of Notre Dame's Snite Museum of Art only a few days away, we can't help but note an article authored by University President Rev. Theodore Hesburgh in the November/December issue of Museum Magazine.

Hesburgh tells the story of Frederick Snite, the 1933 Notre Dame grad and polio victim who "drew on deeply held religious convictions for equanimity in adversity." It was Frederick's father, the late Colonel Fred B. Snite, that put forth $2 million for the construction of the new museum and "to keep alive the inspiring memory of Frederick."

But while we note Hesburgh's article, we must call attention to the magazine itself. After only its first five issues, Museum has already drawn rave reviews from critics across the country. You may wonder how a magazine on a subject such as museums may be so successful in such a short period of time? Just look at the people behind the operation.

The publisher, Jules Warshaw, is no rookie to the magazine business. He has created over 60 titles for newsstand sale. He was once owner-publisher of Status and Diplomat magazines, publisher of Holiday, and director of publishing for the Saturday Evening Post Company.

Warshaw, in turn, has attracted many of his cohorts from the Saturday Evening Post to join his venture into the exploration of museums. Atop the list of experienced editorial board members is Frederic A. Birmingham, the editor-in-chief with over 40 years of author/editor experience.

Before reviving the Post as editor, Birmingham was highly respected for his editorial work with Esquire, Time, and Reader's Digest, as well as for authoring many best-selling novels.

"He's the grand old man of American journalism — undisputedly so," insists Managing Editor Thomas J. O'Neil, who worked at the Indianapolis Star and the Post after serving as editor-in-chief of The Observer in 1976-77. "His presence here has a lot to do with our success thus far."

It is clear as to why Museum has gotten off to such a rousing start. The publishing business is far and away a "people business." And this magazine has the people behind it.

But why a magazine on museums?

"Did you ever stop and realize that a half-billion people a year visit museums?" asks O'Neil. "And that nearly every major magazine around the country features museums of some sort on a

Paul Mullaney
Editor-in-chief somewhat regular basis? Well, those people who founded this magazine realized that there was no one magazine that hit smack in the middle of the museum trade."

O'Neil also indicated that magazines originating in the last decade all seemed to be aimed at a specific trade. Three years ago, when the idea was first discussed, it was believed that a world-wide interest in museums would give a museum magazine great promise.

"After the days of the King Tut exhibition, the whole attitude toward museums around the country really ballooned," O'Neil says. "That helped to enforce our opinion of how this type of magazine could really be successful."

Museum Magazine is currently circulating 120,000 copies — a figure that company representatives hope to have tripled by the end of next year.

And that figure is sure to grow, as potential readers around America realize that the magazine is not as drab as its title may imply. Museum features an interesting blend of museum critique, fine photography, colorful science fiction and editorial humor. Just look at the lineup of commissioned writers hired by Museum — Walter Cronkite, Mary Renault, Julia Child, Orson Welles, Red Smith, Art Buchwald. And that is in addition to the magazine's own staff of quality editor/writers.

"We're working hard to attract quality writing through big names," says O'Neil. "And we've gotten a lot of support from these people."

Someday soon the magazine may be receiving national support through newsstand sales. For now, however, Museum Magazine is available in 80 museums in more than 30 states, or by direct mail. Subscriptions are $15 per year (six issues), and can be obtained by writing to the magazine's circulation offices, P.O. Box 1300, Berenfield, N.J. 07621.

campus, the standard conversation starts 'have you been broken into yet?' an off-campus student commented, laughing slightly, then sobering quickly.

"We got broken into once. Now we have a gun, and if we have to use it we won't hesitate," a student said.

His housemate interjected, "There is just so much tension in the neighborhood." Well then, do off-campus students live in a state of fear?

"Let's just say we're always cautious," a student responded.

"I've seen strangers wandering around, so now we all keep the doors locked even when we're home" another student commented.

Several weeks ago, a lone assailant broke into a house, robbed it and assaulted an occupant while eight people slept in the house. The thief fled with an expensive camera. In short, these criminals have guts.

If students are forced to arm themselves with everything from steel locks to baseball bats, one might assume local residents equally fear victimization, but on the whole, the opposite is true.

"I don't fear the blacks (sic) at all," a 25-year Notre Dame Avenue resident commented, "but who I fear are the drunken students going home late at night. They'll knock on my door at four in the morning and want to use the bathroom," she said.

She further explained that students have vandalized her when denied bathroom privileges. Recently, poles supporting her porch, were removed — an act the resident attributes to Notre Dame students. The porch restoration cost $117.

"I can't afford that type of expense," she commented.

A resident down the street shared her sentiments, "I object to having over half a dozen taverns within two and half blocks of my house," the thirty-year neighborhood veteran commented. "All those taverns are not conducive to the well-being of the students. You cannot believe how drunk they get," the resident said.

TUESDAY FOCUS

A faculty member who resides in the neighborhood also agreed with the city residents.

"There is so much stupid behavior among the students. They are an occasion for crime," he said. He also cited the procession home of those "under the influence" at dawn, as a neighborhood nuisance.

The resident also intimated that students do not act responsibly. "They have parties and don't screen the guests. Some party goers case the houses and then come back later for the loot," he said. He contends that crime is directed primarily at the students.

A local resident of 20 years also believes crime is targeted at students. Speculating why, the resident commented, "The lower-class neighborhood kids see Notre Dame as something they can never have even though it's in their backyard. It might be jealousy but the students are definitely prey. You can't put $5000 worth of stereo equipment in a house and not expect the folks around the corner to be slightly envious."

Not all residents, however, believe students are the sole targets of crime. One resident believes crime, like a persistent enemy, is an inevitable part of the Northeast Neighborhood.

"There's a baby Mafia working the streets," he said.

The resident declined to explain how he could support such a statement but confidently added, "That's why the juveniles are always the ones on the streets. If they get caught, they can't be busted. The people at the top know when somebody's too old to work the streets," the resident contended.

Crime apparently is spreading from hearth to office, for now businesses say they are feeling the effects of yesterday's assaults.

"I believe all the businesses are being affected, and it's getting who will "remain where they are," presumably meaning the U.S. Embassy in Tehran.

In Washington, White House press secretary Jody Powell said the transfer "will be a very positive sign," and presidential aide Jack Watson, interviewed on ABC-TV's "Good Morning America," called the transfer plans "a very positive development."

Representatives of the Islamic militants who seized the American Embassy and its staff last Nov. 4, 366 days ago, met for two hours today with Khomeini following the approval Sunday by the Majlis, Iran's parliament, of terms for the release of the Americans.

Macrae credits Japan's economy

Norman Macrae, Deputy Editor of The Economist, a heralded London-based publication, spoke yesterday at the Memorial Library Auditorium. As the third part of the I.T.T. sponsored Key Issues Lecture Series, "Japan and the United States in a Turbulent World: Myths and Reality," this particular topic centered on "Lessons from the Japanese Experience."

Reviewing America's attitudes toward the Japanese economy, Macrae scoffed at the notion of the Japanese economic system as "The Fragile Flower," so proglumated by National Security Advisor Zbig Brzezinski in the sixties. Macrae's comment that drew loud applause from the more than 100 spectators gathered.

Macrae remarked that the West can no longer understate the economic status of Japan as that country now possesses a per capita Gross National Product extremely close to that of the United States (if not indeed greater than the U.S.).

The positive indicators of the economic status of Japan are reflecting a life expectancy rate which surpasses the U.S. and an infant mortality rate which is half of that of America. Another plus acquired through this system is an educational system superior to its American counterpart and a crime rate much lower than that of the United States.

Macrae pointed to the

"relentless daily productivity hunt." The Japanese take pride in producing fault-free products and in competing with their rival companies in obtaining "the lowest defect rate" possible.

In relating government's role in the economy, Macrae quoted a high-ranking Japanese official.

"The prime minister says 'This is our consensus.' He is not very precise either. But action can then be taken in line with that unprecise consensus with everybody feeling he has had some say in what is being done. The consequence is that in Japan every decision is mediocre. Execution is then excellent."

Macrae continued by relating a 1979 report given by the U.S. Comptroller General.

"Japan encourages its strong industries; the United States protects its weak ones."

In dealing with the foreign technological growth, Macrae stated that the Ministry of Industry sees to it that non-Japanese technology "is bought at the lowest possible price."

"The Japanese have been early to recognize that the ideal size for a profit center--by which I mean group of friends working together towards the same objective--is very small, probably not more than 7 to 11."

Similarly down on the assembly lines... teams of skilled engineers swarm all over the largely automated assembly lines, intent on increasing the flow of fault-free cars or appliances.

"I think that it is a great thing that a mighty commercial power has been built up in the world without a military establishment" were Macrae's words in expressing Japan's growth with that of the United States.

Festival experiences renaissance

by Ann Hesburgh
Staff Reporter

CONTEMPORARY Arts Commissioner Bill Lawler, saying at a meeting in Morrissey Hall yesterday that "the Senior Arts Festival is much too important an activity to be cancelled," announced that the Festival will be held this year after all.

In an Observer article that appeared three weeks ago, Lawler was quoted as "considering cancelling the Senior Arts Festival due to the Class of '81's apparent lack of interest in the event." But as of yesterday Lawler assured the group that the Festival will be held the week of February 15th thru February 20th. The Festival will include drawings, paintings, and photo displays as well as live concert and drama performances.

Lawler continued by saying, "The Festival enables seniors to display various works and talents, and in turn, have their works enjoyed by others."

A Saint Mary's Festival Representative will be added to the '81 Festival Committee. Committee members from both Saint Mary's and Notre Dame can then work to make this year's Festival as successful as the 1979 and 1980 Festivals.

At the meeting, Lawler stressed the need for senior participation. "It's the enthusiasm and cooperative effort of the Senior Class that will determine the success of this year's Festival."

As yet, neither the Festival Chairperson or committee chairpersons have been chosen. Applications are still being accepted and can be submitted to Bill Lawler in the Student Union. Further information regarding the Festival can be obtained by calling Lawler at 7757.

worse," a local bar owner — who has watched the neighborhood for 20 years from the vantage point of a bartender — commented.

"I don't see anybody walking anymore. Homeowners are afraid to go out," he said. "It's all out of hand. The whole Northeast Neighborhood is going down. It seems like the whole place is just open territory for people to come in and rob, mug and assault. What's going to happen is somebody's going to get killed soon," the bar owner concluded.

Not everyone feels that way.

"If you read the crime reports, you'll see we have a real good record as far as this section of the city goes," Arthur Quigley, a spokesman for the Northeast Neighborhood Center commented.

Quigley further said that crime is not escalating in the area; it is simply "getting more publicity." Nevertheless, the Center, which has been in existence for over a decade, is taking an active role in the crime problem. Periodic meetings with students are just a segment of the organization's line of activities.

Stressing cooperation, Quigley said the organization encourages students to get acquainted with their neighbors and assume responsible attitudes as members of a community.

"I'm not speaking against students but they're not used to living as neighbors in a neighborhood. They're not always as careful as they should be," Quigley said.

And what about weapons?

"Foolish," says Quigley. "They (students) are not well trained to use them. Almost all weapons in the criminal element are stolen from honest people," he affirmed.

"Crime is not a very productive thing to be working on. There are serious social and economic problems in the neighborhood," Quigley contended.

Crime is paramount, however, to Paul Riehle, student body president.

"It's just a matter of time. I'm sure there will be a death within the year," Riehle recently stated.

In an effort to combat crime, Riehle has expressed an interest in establishing a student neighborhood with University-owned houses and apartments, leased to students.

Meanwhile, crime continues. One resident summarized the helplessness attitude of the Northeast Neighborhood's inhabitants. Asked if he lived in a state of fear, the elderly resident slowly nodded his head and pointed to his solid mahogany, beautifully finished door. On the door, two thick steel locks and a mounted silver chain contrasted sharply against the fine wood.

The resident just smiled sadly and said, "What else can you do?"

Single issues and multiple mistakes

by E.A. Goerner

In an article ironically entitled "The Christian Menace" in the latest issue of Scholastic, Prof. Ralph McNerny of the Philosophy Department writes on the abortion issue in a way that, although superficially directed at the inconsistencies of secular humanists and Catholic liberals like Msgr. George Higgins, is an attempt to vindicate, in the week before the election, a single-issue electoral judgment in favor of Ronald Reagan because of his stand against abortion. What is especially unsettling about his article is one's perception that the abortion issue has become so emotionally charged that it can becloud the usually lucid mind of Prof. McNerny so deeply as to lead him to publish such a patently fallacious piece.

To avoid misunderstandings let me say that 1) I am opposed to abortion and think it should be outlawed, as it was until recently, and 2) I think Prof. McNerny is fair in criticizing secular humanists (or, rather some of them) for an important inconsistency.

But it is simply false to think that either of those points gives any particular support whatever to the political conclusion Prof. McNerny tries to rest on them. Let me quote his concluding paragraph in full: 1 No doubt Christians who are liberal politically have a problem when the only candidate who opposes public funding is a political conservative. It is difficult to see how their judgment that another candidate is more congenial on most other issues can be traded off against his being wrong on this massively important one. Single-issue politics? Perhaps. This recently coined scare phrase would aptly capture what would have been right and Christian in Nazi Germany and in the case of civil rights in the United States. Once more, we see that it is not single-issue politics that bothers secular humanists but the single issue that many believers now feel takes precedence over all the others.

The candidate referred to in the opening sentence is elsewhere in the article identified as Ronald Reagan.

Is that really a respectable way for a philosopher to make an argument in ethics? and a Thomist at that?

Is it enough to "feel" that a "single issue...takes precedence over all others?" Isn't a philosopher required to review the other issues so as to show (if it can be shown) that the abortion issue, as it is actually presented to the voter, is entitled to such precedence?

How is the voter confronted by the abortion issue today? If he votes for Ronald Reagan, he votes for one who will probably try to cut off welfare payments for abortions performed on poor women. True. If he votes for Carter or Anderson, he votes for someone who will probably not try to prevent such payments. True. But those facts alone do not make it even the least bit clear that the voter need think no further, as the single-issue emotionalists claim. What if the candidate committed to trying to stop public funding for abortions is also committed to doing other things that are likewise fundamentally evil?

Professor McNerny claims that no other issues in the campaign are on the same level as this "massively important one." But how does he arrive at that judgment? Apparently by suggesting that all the other issues can be collected under the vague difference between "conservative" and "liberal" which is scarcely very profound or sharp in American politics. The unstated rhetorical question is this: Surely you don't think that such a vague and unsubstantial difference as that is "massively important?"

Well, the fact of the matter (and Thomists are supposed to be attentive to such facts) is that no voter will find such a choice on his ballot. He will actually find particular names and Prof. McNerny wants you to choose Ronald Reagan's name.

Is Ronald Reagan very little different from the other candidates on the ballot? Isn't there in fact a number of matters other than abortion on which Carter is importantly from Reagan? (I leave out Anderson as a certain loser.) It is clear to anyone who has attended to this sad campaign (rather than excluding as unimportant everything but the single issue of abortion) that it is not beyond reasonable judgment that voting for one who, by his stands on welfare, government spending, and the Windfall Profits Tax, may very well starve or freeze to death a substantial number of your fellow citizens, the poorest and the oldest.

Oh that sounds overdramatic, especially to comfortable middle class professors. But the fact is that there is a substantial number of the poor in our society now subsisting on dogfood who may well die directly or indirectly of malnutrition if domestic welfare spending is cut deeply enough. Does Ronald Reagan intend their death? I think not, but that doesn't mean he may not cause it anyway. He has scarcely advertized himself as the shield of the weak and the champion of the hungry. He has advertized himself as the champion of massive cuts in domestic spending, including welfare. Moreover, he is pledged to repealing the Windfall Profits Tax some of which is used to help the poor pay for their skyrocketing fuel bills. Perhaps that seems like a matter of minor injustice to the well-heated and well-healed. But the real death from hypothermia is not unheard of among the aged poor who cannot afford to keep warm. Does the threat to their lives and those of the hungry poor become massively unimportant because single-issue opponents of abortion haven't thought about them in the comfort of their well-heated dining rooms?

Let me take one more issue dealing with life (since that's that level of the abortion issue): that of war and peace. It is not beyond the limits of reasonable judgment to think that Ronald Reagan is more rash, and so more dangerous, than Jimmy Carter to have at the head of our foreign policy and our armed forces. He has a long record of advocating armed intervention (oh, let us eschew euphemisms, war) in a long list of places where Carter chose diplomacy instead, e.g. Zimbabwe-Rhodesia. Is it beyond reasonable judgment that a candidate who talks about foreign policy in the jingoistic, assertive, self-righteous accents of the third-rate cowboy movies is likely to get us into new Viet Nams? Are the lives of those who would be killed in such wars massively unimportant merely because single-issue political philosophers haven't thought about them? And what if a rash and trigger-happy man with his hand on the infamous button, after he has stoked up American-Soviet relations with a blazing arms race, pushes it and blows up the world? What if he only helps some mad dictator blow it up when he has gotten nuclear proliferation? Well, that would put an end to abortion along with everything else. Does Reagan want those things? No. But responsible voters are required to ask whether Reagan is more likely than Carter to bring them about. Or is that massively unimportant because single-issue political fanatics don't think they have to think about it?

Oh, I know, those are "judgment calls" and about personal qualities and therefore hard to make. But it is also a "judgment call" to think that Reagan will actually succeed in cutting off any money for abortions. Voting consists in making just such judgment calls.

Has my tone been too harsh in contrast to Prof. McNerny's accustomed bland irony? Well, he published his call to thoughtlessness just a week before the election so I have only a day or so to shock out of sleep those whom he and others have encouraged to stop thinking about other issues. And Prof. McNerny himself, who is a lover of justice, will welcome hard words if they call him back from a thoughtless and irresponsible act. Moreover, injustice is involved in another way and deserves all the more sharp reply as it is clothed in sheep's clothing. If Reagan too poses the threat of deep injustices, including mortal ones, then it is unjust to suggest, as the article by Prof. McNerny does, that only those who vote for Reagan can escape being thought of like collaborators with American or Nazi racist murderers. Yes, that is the thrust of his illustrations in spite of the mansuetude of the rhetoric.

You may well make a different "judgment call" on the Carter-Reagan race. Both candidates have deep faults. But no one ought to call you a fascist or a Nazi for it. The choice is far too darkly mixed.

But you will vote as a culpably ignorant fool if you make that judgment call on the basis of a single issue where the horror of abortion makes you "feel" that it "takes precedence over all others." Responsible voters ought to do more than "feel" their votes. They ought to think them through and weigh all the relevant issues. Responsible philosophers ought to encourage citizens to do as much.

We live in dark days when our only choices are sometimes among evils and the good man tries to pick the lesser of them. A defense of single-issue irrationality can only add to the darkness. Let there be light.

THE MCNALLY POLL

Poll Results: Of Lucifer and Lust

Ed McNally & Leslie Griffith

Let's face it: Political polls are boring. As most every analyst has remarked with rare originality, the only poll that counts is the one taken on Election Day. And under our system, the Electoral College (not to be confused with Valparaiso) can by rights ignore that poll as well.

What about the real mysteries of the day? Have you ever wondered what happens to the wild men caught with keggers, puppy dogs, or ladies in their rooms? To Regina freshman not yet signed in as the sun also rises? To throats studying on the other side of Touchdown Jesus during home football games?

They may be going to hell.

This conclusion is actually based on sound scientific evidence. The information comes from the McNally Poll, which regularly asks samplings of the 10,000 members of the ND/SMC community who they want to be elected to one post or another and what they think about this or that. The this or that tends to run to the mundane—inflation and the windfall profits tax—but sometimes the poll wanders off into the nether regions.

Last spring, for example, it concluded its interviews thus: "The last two questions concern your views on the afterlife. First, do you know of anyone here at ND/SMC who you would expect to end up in hell?" "Second, where do you yourself think you'll end up—in heaven or in hell?"

Well, a confident 76 per cent of the students here count on being justly rewarded in heaven. An undecided group isn't so sure. And 4 per cent—about 400 Domers, if the percentage is projected to the student body—figure they'll be fanning the flames with Faust. However, fully 21 per cent said they know someone else who's going to hell. So either that 4 per cent have a lot of acquaintances or else a lot of students are seriously overestimating their own chances for a pleasant hereafter.

The McNally Poll, like any other professional market research group, has a computer which whirs and hums and coughs out sheafs of cross-referenced data on each question. On the matter of hell, for instance, a far greater percentage of Democrats see themselves as doomed to the abyss than do Republicans. Yet the fast track at N.D. clearly belongs to the independents and those not bothering to register—about one in four in those decadent groups knows someone bound for Dante's Inferno (for those outside the General Program, the Inferno is a book. Dante's the guy who wrote it.)

Eight per cent of those unregistered frankly admit their ill-fated status ("Hell yes!" declared one.) Large numbers of Carter supporters are also fatalistic about their destiny ("Jimmy's sinful lust was in his heart," explained one Alumni junior, "I'm afraid mine lies a bit south of there.")

As for men and woman, about equal numbers of each sex are convinced they're proceeding in the direction "We're #1" Moses is pointing. More intriguing, perhaps, is the indication that twice as many girls (6 per cent) as guys (3 per cent) think they'll wind up in Hades, which could mean that a very small number of guys around here are having a helluva lot of fun.

(Actually, polls of this sort have a margin of error of five percentage points, either way. So it may be that a minus two per cent of N.D. men think they're fated for hell, meaning none believe they'll go there, and that 80-some male students are walking around bad-mouthing the devil.)

The biggest disparity concerned the question of where respondents thought others would end up. While nearly 20 per cent of the men just weren't sure where their lady friends were headed, only 2 per cent of the women had any such doubts. It seems if you're a girl, there's just no question about whether a certain guy whelming 83 per cent of St. Mary's students believe themselves securely set for heaven. Though it's often said that Saint Mary's girls are "good", the usual interpretation of that remark seems to be, quite literally, a misconception.

Don't be dismayed by all this news. Hell will be a better place for the influx of Domers. They will gather for friendly tailgaters and introduce words like "awesome" and "intense". The women...will decorate the walls with photo collages featuring themselves.

is an angel or the incarnation of Mephistopheles. And judging by some of the epithets hurled down the LeMans steps late night, some women are not only sure of their ex-date's destination, but don't mind advising on travel arrangements, either.

Of all the groups surveyed here, only two did not have a single member who believed he or she was hell-bound: N.D. Republicans and S.M.C. women. In fact, an over-

The new success of Satan's football team could win a wide following for the whole institution. And though everyone knows that in 1977 God Made ND #1, 'Bama could be tough this year, and it probably wouldn't hurt to occasionally hedge our bets.

Voila! French Film Festival Opens

Chris Cervenak

Whether you can sing all verses of the "Marseillaise" or only chime in on that catchy refrain "Voulez-vous coucher avec moi, ce soir?" this week's French Film Festival is worth catching. Forget the stereotypical foreign flick imbued with political statements and oppressive smoke-filled rooms.

Instead, prepare yourself for some romping good laughs and humorous, painless continental entertainment.

From November 4 through November 8, the Student Union Movie Commission is presenting four French movies in the Engineering Auditorium. Admission is only $1.00. All movies will be shown at 7, 9, and 11:00 p.m. Here's a preview of the films: Tuesday, Nov. 4 — Truffaut's Small Change

This widely acclaimed film of the famous French director, Francois Truffaut is an intricate mosaic of the lives of several children in a small provincial town. Truffaut masterfully gives us moments of raucous hilarity and genuine trauma demonstrating a vision of childhood that is profound and wise, realistic and entertaining. Wednesday, Nov. 5 — DeBroca's Dear Inspector

Remember the King of Hearts and That Man Franko? The same director who brought you these serves up Dear Inspector. It's one of those witty romantic comedies that only the French can produce, yet also a suspenseful murder mystery. It asks whether a lady cop and a professor of Greek can find happiness together in their middle years. Judith Crist of The New York Post writes, "If Columbo were a lady or Kojak were a dame...Leave it to Philippe DeBroca to beat us to the feminist punch in the wise, witty, and wonderfully light-hearted fashion that is his hallmark. It's the feel-best movie around." Thursday, Nov. 6 — Cousin, Cousine

This is a love story with a twist. It's about Martha and Ludovic, cousins through marriage (his uncle and her mother), whose relationship develops from one of acquaintance to friendship to love. Of course, their patient and loving families look on in dismay. And Notre Dame and Saint Mary's students, take note of one critic's view of "Cousin, Cousine": "Quite possibly the most accurate representation of happy, healthy sensuality I have seen on film (John Simon, New York Magazine)." Friday, Nov. 7 and Saturday, Nov. 8 — La Cage aux Folles

One of the most phenomenal film successes in history, this comedy is on its way to becoming the largest grossing foreign film in history. "La Cage aux Folles" is the name of a transvestite night club run by a pair of aging homosexuals, one of whom has a son. It gets better. The son's fiance's father is the chief of the Department of Morals and is not likely to approve of his new in-laws. Eager to help the young lovers, the boy's "parents" make a valiant attempt to curb their outrageous lifestyle to appear "normal" and "respectable."

The results are unforgettably comic. There are scenes of such hilarity that the Marx Brothers and Charlie Chaplin come to mind as the only basis of comparison. But beneath the comedy is a touching and sensitive story that proves that love doesn't know any boundaries.

So whether you want to impress a date with your cosmopolitan savoir-faire or simply want to enjoy yourself, have some vin rose, grab your popcorn and check out the French Foreign Film Festival. Oh, and you can leave your French-English dictionaries at home. Dubbing and subtitles are provided.

In Bottom Ten

Texas-El Paso takes first

As was the case with our counterparts in the Top Ten, there were some drastic changes at the top of the Bottom Ten.

Last week's number-one team, Colorado, surprised even themselves, suffering a disappointing win over Iowa State. Chuck Fairbanks and his squad stormed to a 17-9 victory against the Cyclones, who were bothered by the atmospheric conditions in Boulder.

As a result of the win, Boulder and Bottom Ten rules, the Buffaloes have been banned from this week's poll. This could spell disaster for their chances at a national championship, as Colorado closes out the season with games against powerhouses Oklahoma State, Kansas, and Kansas State.

Vanderbilt, owners of the number-one ranking earlier in the season, and last week's number-three team, were winners as well. The Commodores grooved to a 14-10 win over Memphis State. This game impressed the voters, as Vandy was dropped from the rankings, and the Tigers made their debut in the number-nine slot.

Usually, the Bottom Ten gives awards only at mid-season and in the post-season. In extremely unusual cases, however, provisions are made for special recognition. Such is the case with "The Lt. William Calley Scapegoat Award". It goes to the Athletic Director at Texas Christian University, Frank Windegger.

During last week's TCU-Baylor game, PA announcer Bob Barry gave the results of SMU's upset of Texas. At the time, Baylor lead the Horned Frogs, 7-6. Baylor went on to win 21-6, and remain undefeated. After the game, Windegger fired Barry, claiming that the announcement lifted Baylor's spirits, causing TCU to lose. Said Windegger, "there's no one to blame for the loss but the PA announcer."

They shoot horses don't they?

Campbell rushes past last two title paces

Earl Campbell is getting ahead of himself.

The sensational running back of the Houston Oilers is ahead of the pace he set two years ago and again last year when he won consecutive National Football League rushing titles.

In 1978, en route to a rookie-record 1,450 yards, Campbell had 799 yards through nine regular-season games. In 1979, when Earl finished with 1,697 yards, he had 812 of them after nine games and, at this point in the '79 campaign, was third in rushing in the league, trailing Walter Payton's 1,000 and Ottis Anderson's 836.

Today, after his 157-yard, two-touchdown performance in Denver that paved the way to 20-16 triumph over the Broncos, Campbell leads the league in rushing with 964 yards. That's 165 ahead of his rookie pace and 152 ahead of last year's.

Billy Sims, the Detroit Lions' rookie (and the NFL's No. 1 draft choice), is No. 2 now with 896 yards. Payton, who finished second to Campbell with 1,610 yards a year ago, and runner-up two years ago as well with 1,395, was third in the league with 762 yards heading into the Chicago Bears' Monday night game against the Browns in Cleveland.

And Anderson, who a year ago shattered Campbell's 1978 rookie rushing record by gaining 1,605 in his first pro year with St. Louis, is fourth so far this year with 740 yards.

Campbell went about picking up his two rushing crowns in different fashions. As a rookie, he faded at the end of the season with 41,67 and 77 yards in his final three games. Last year he finished strong, rushing for at least 100 yards in each of his last seven games, another NFL record.

Campbell had a chance to achieve a feat not even O.J. Simpson could manage--three consecutive 200-yard games. He wound up 43 yards short (they would have shunted him past 1,000 for the season), but he still got some big yards when the Oilers needed them . . . and not just for points.

Coach Bum Phillips, at his analytical best, reserved some special praise for a play which ate up valuable time as well as yards. "When we were first-and-15 and he went for the first down near the end of the game, that was the play of the ball game," he said.

Bum was also . . . well. . . Bum when he started in on the running back who has turned the Oilers into perennial contenders. "There are a lot of imposters, but there ain't but one Earl Campbell," the coach drawled.

Dave Poulin [15] and his fellow Fighting Irish hockey team face Bowling Green tonight at the Ohio school. The 7:30 p.m. contest is a chance for Notre Dame to revenge last week's 4-3 loss to the Falcons. [Photo by Greg Maurer]

For Browns

Riley Odoms : Wizard of Oz

Cleveland (AP)---He doesn't have the "name" like, say Houston's Dave Casper, New England's Russ Francis or Denver's Riley Odoms. But he's got a nickname none of the others could hope to match -- "the Wizard of Oz."

Ozzie Newsome of the Cleveland Browns picked up that moniker when he was a wide receiver for Coach Bear Bryant at the University of Alabama. But in the National Football League, the three-year veteran as one of the more unrecognized tight ends, this despite being among the leading receivers in the American Conference.

"I have no regrets about switching positions," says the 6-2, 232-pounder from Muscle Shoals, Ala. "If we were more run-oriented, I'd be highly disappointed. But the Browns are using all of my skills and, at times, I even have an inkling of being a wide receiver in the back of my mind."

Going into this weekend's NFL action, including the Browns' game yesterday against the visiting Chicago Bears--only two other AFC tight ends--San Diego's Kellen Winslow and Houston's Mike Barber--had more receptions than Newsome's 28 for 336 yards and two touchdowns.

"I want to be the best," says Newsome. "Some say I already am, but other tight ends like Casper and Francis can do some things I can't. I've learned to do things a lot smoother, a lot easier, but I've not a way to go yet."

One area in which he needs hardly any improvement is pass-blocking, which might seem unusual considering his role as a receiver in college. "At Alabama, everybody had to block, even the quarterbacks," Newsome explains.

"Blocking is a 'want-to-do' thing. If you really want to block somebody, you can. I came here knowing how to block. It was just a matter of doing it every day so that it became second nature."

"My blocking will never be as good as my catching or running," Newsome went on, "but at least I can count on it now. I don't go to bed anymore wondering if I can block the defensive end the next game. If I use the basic things I've been taught, I can do well enough."

And as far as receiving, he does far better than just well enough. After catching the ball 102 times for 2,070 yards and 16 touchdowns at Alabama he made another 93 receptions for 1,370 and 11 TDs in his first two seasons with the Browns. Not even Milt Morin, perhaps Cleveland's greatest tight end, achieved that. In his first two full seasons, Morin had 66 catches for 1,125 yards and eight TDs.

A school's press material always tries to paint a pretty picture of its administrators, but everything the guide says is very true. Corrigan guided the Virginia athletic program onward and upward during the '70s, while most other schools were struggling with economic pressures.

Since 1971, there has been growth in all phases of the program. When Corrigan arrived, the school was just beginning to admit women. There are now 10 varsity programs for the Cavalier ladies. During the same span, the men's program has grown from 13 to 23 sports. In contrast, Notre Dame, a school of roughly half the enrollment of Virginia, offers 13 varsity sports for men and five for women.

Also during Corrigan's tenure, the school has added a new baseball stadium, a tartan-surfaced track, expanded tennis facilities and a new Intramural/Recreation complex — much like Notre Dame's Rockne Memorial. The most impressive physical change was the most recent one — a multi-million dollar expansion and renovation of Scott Stadium — which made it perhaps the finest stadium in the conference and increased capacity by 12,000 to 42,073.

Yet Corrigan's list of accomplishments at Virginia includes more than numbers of varsity sports or facility improvements. "When I came here, we were really in debt, among other things," Corrigan recalls. "We took a look at things — a long look, a long honest look — and we decided that Virginia hasn't been very good in athletics... ever. We really had no (athletic) tradition to fall back on."

At that point, Corrigan prepared a very comprehensive report for university president Frank L. Hereford. "In that report, we said, 'Look, we've got to get off of dead center. We've got nothing to fall back on and we're still not creating anything. If you want to excel, as you do academically and culturally (Playboy says U.Va. is "in a class by itself" as a party school) and in every other way, then why not let us do the same thing in athletics?'

Gene Corrigan

...Which in effect we did."

Many people feel that one of Corrigan's major responsibilities at Notre Dame will be athletic fund raising, something the University announced last spring it would venture into for the first time, and something Corrigan as done quite well at Virginia. After all, those facilities didn't pay for themselves.

"When I came here, the Student Aid Foundation (a major fund raising organization crucial to athletic expansion) was about $300,000 in debt to the University, was only raising about $180,000 a year and was spending maybe $280,000 a year. So the first thing I had to do was to go to these people and say, 'Hey, that's not enough money; that's not even close. Not only that, we have to pay all that money back.'"

Which they did in about three-and-a-half years, and it was only then that the athletic program began its climb to respectability and excellence.

Yesterday afternoon, both Krause and Corrigan spoke at the Touchdown Club in Washington, D.C. — a short drive for the man from Virginia, a plane trip for Moose. The changing of the guard is at hand and Gene Corrigan is ready, willing and able to meet the challenge. After all, Notre Dame is truly, the only place he'd ever leave Charlottesville for, and Corrigan was really the only outsider ever really in the running for the Notre Dame job (as we will see tomorrow).

Janet Sketchley, Corrigan's secretary for the last five years, cried when she learned of her bosses move. "I could write a book bout the man," she says. "I could lose him on the way to the parking lot. Four people would stop him and he'd have time for every one of them."

And as the office calls from well-wishers increase in frequency, her standard response to them becomes more and more sincere.

"Our loss is Notre Dame's gain."

Tomorrow: The Hiring.

could. It was anybody's game, really.

"Valpo was very aggressive, and they did have five players make the all-tournament team."

Irish sophomores Jeanne Grasso and Giana Marrone, and freshman Janet Hlavin represented Notre Dame on the all-tournament team as well.

In the championship game of the state tournament, Valpo again went into overtime, this time with Franklin College, and once again emerged with a last-minute victory. Both teams will join Notre Dame in representing Indiana at the Regionals this weekend.

Irish get regional bid in field hockey

by David Wilson
Sports Writer

Despite a heartbreaking loss to eventual champion Valparaiso in last weekend's state tournament at Richmond, the Irish women's field hockey team has received a surprising invitation to this weekend's Region Five tournament.

Region Five, a national division including field hockey teams from Michigan, Illinois, Ohio and Wisconsin, as well as Indiana, will hold the tournament this weekend in Sauk Valley, Mich.

The winner would receive a spot in nationals later on this month. Notre Dame will face Northern Michigan in the first round of the eight-team contest, and coach Jan Galen is trying to be as optimistic as possible.

"We'll just play it one game at a time and see how things go," she said. "We didn't expect an invitation, but we're certainly glad to have it."

Galen added that her players will be emotionally high for the game, which is nothing unusual for the team.

"I don't know much about Northern Michigan," she admitted, "but we're ready for anybody at this stage of the game."

In the state tournament, Notre Dame carried Valparaiso into the final minutes of overtime before surrendering victory and losing 2-1. The only Irish goal came on a shot by sophomore Kathy Ray.

The Irish more-or-less dominated the second half with good passing and many scoring opportunities, but neither team managed to score before the end of regulation. In overtime, Notre Dame hung on until Valpo scored on a disputed shot with less than two minutes remaining, to take the win.

"We wanted to win very badly," said Galen, "and I think we played just about as well as we

Sipe leads Browns to win

CLEVELAND (AP) — Brian Sipe, becoming the greatest passer in the Cleveland Browns' storied National Football League history, threw one touchdown pass and set up three other scores in a 27-21 Monday night victory over the Chicago Bears.

Sipe, who completed 23-of-39 passes for 298 yards to drive the 6-3 Browns back into a first-place tie with Houston in the American Conference Central Division, hit Reggie Rucker with a 4-yard pass 57 seconds before halftime for a 10-0 lead. He also guided Cleveland to Don Cockroft field goals of 23 and 42 yards and Mike Pruitt's 1-yard touchdown dive.

Pruitt, who gained 129 yards on 27 carries, put the game away with a 56-yard touchdown sprint with 3:35 to play after Chicago had narrowed the margin to 20-14.

Sipe finished the nationally televised contest with 13,534 career yards, surpassing Hall of Famer Otto Graham, who threw for 13,499 yards when he quarterbacked the Browns for their first six years in the NFL, starting in 1950. Graham also was their QB for their four years in the All-America Football Conference.

In his seventh full season with Cleveland and his fifth as a regular, Sipe came into the game as the Browns' No. 3 career passer — but it took him less than five minutes to pass Frank Ryan's 13,361 yards.

For the first half, it was all Cleveland as the Browns' defense limited Chicago to 62 total yards while the Browns were rolling up 241 — 201 of them by Sipe.

But Vince Evans, who managed just 26 passing yards for the Bears in the opening half, brought them alive in the second half, bootlegging the ball 7 yards for a third-quarter TD, whipping it 17 yards to Brian Baschnagel with 4:45 to play, then passing to Robin Earl for 6 yards with 37 seconds on the clock.

Evans finished with completions on 18 of 33 attempts for 201 yards.

Walter Payton, the Bears' premier runner, was strangely inactive carrying the ball just 11 times for 30 yards.

Saint Mary's Belles end season in field hockey

By Maureen Heraty
Sports Writer

St. Mary's field hockey team played for the last time this season on Friday when it competed in the Indiana State Tournament. During the tournament, the team achieved a win, suffered a loss and three of its players earned Most Valuable Player status for Division Three.

St. Mary's Belles narrowly defeated DePauw University 2-1 largely due to the efforts of Beth Welsh and the rallying spirit of the team under pressure.

"The girls really came on strong in the last few seconds of the game," explained coach Marcee Weise.

Welsh made the first goal for the Belles and tied the score with only 15 seconds remaining on the clock. Minutes later, assisted by her teammates, Welsh chased the puck in DePauw's goal a second time to win the tie-breaker and the game.

Weise insists, "It's their spirit. They really made up their minds to win."

In their second game, the Belles received a dose of their own medicine. As the score 1-0 reveals, Marion College barely overcame the St. Mary's team. Rarely, did the Marion team manage to move the puck past St. Mary's defensive players Nancy Lorenzini and Celeste Curry.

"Nancy played exceptionally well," said Weise. "It is amazing that she never played field hockey before coming to St. Mary's."

As for Curry, Weise stated frankly that Curry had probably played "the best she has ever played."

Evidently, other coaches at Friday's tournament recognize the talent on St. Mary's team. Tournament officials asked each team's coach to pick a Most Valuable Player team for their division, based on the coaches' observations after the first round of playing. The officials requested that the coaches limit their teams to 11 women and that the coaches not include any of their own players on the roster. The results showed that, in the coaches' eyes, three St. Mary's players deserved a position on the MVP team: Welsh, Lorenzini, and Curry.

Corrigan: A man of vision and progress

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the first article in a three-part series introducing the Notre Dame community to the University's new athletic director, Eugene Corrigan, who will replace retiring Edward "Moose" Krause on January 5, 1981. Corrigan will be finishing his term in the same post at the University of Virginia on December 31. Associate Sports Editor Michael Ortman recently spent a day with Corrigan on the Charlottesville, Va., campus.

Today — A biographical profile.

by Michael Ortman
Associate Sports Editor

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. — One big question floating around Notre Dame's athletic department for the past few years has been, "Who could ever replace Moose Krause." Everyone knew that his retirement was nearing, but the athletic director at the most famous athletic institution in the world was almost irreplaceable. After all, the man has been involved with Fighting Irish athletics since Herbert Hoover was in the White House and Knute Rockne was Notre Dame's football coach.

The question was answered less than a month ago when a rash of news leaks and an ensuing statement told the world that 52-year-old Eugene F. Corrigan would be leaving the beautiful Shenandoah Valley in Virginia and heading for the frozen tundra of South Bend.

Corrigan has lived along the eastern seaboard all his life, and never has had any direct ties to Notre Dame. Yet he's wanted to be at Notre Dame since he was an alter boy in Baltimore, Md. Growing up in a very Irish Catholic family, Corrigan remembers listening to Notre Dame football with his mother. "She was a big Notre Dame fan," Corrigan recalls.

We didn't have television, you know. We listened to the radio. You listened to Bill Stern," he says, remembering that around his house, that was the thing to do on fall Saturday afternoons. "I don't remember if it was Mutual or what it was, but they did Notre Dame football every Saturday."

"I can remember a backfield of Sitko, Saggua, Zontini and Piepul. See, I remember that as a kid. Why would I remember that?"

Perhaps Corrigan was just made for Notre Dame, or vice versa. Nonetheless, his recollections of Notre Dame football are in stark contrast to those echoed by his predecessor, or by the so-called "old timers." Their memories are of the Four Horsemen — Jim Crowley, Elmer Layden, Don Miller and Harry Stuhldreher.

When those four were winning games for Rockne in 1923 and '24, Corrigan was but a twinkle in his father's eye. His Notre Dame backfield memories focus on the late-1930s — Steve Sitko (QB), Bqb Saggua (LH), Lou Zontini (RH) and Milt Piepul (FB) — a generation after the Four Horsemen; a group coached by one of them, Elmer Layden.

Corrigan did not venture westward for college. Instead he went south to Duke University where he earned a liberal arts degree in 1952. From there, Corrigan made his first stop at Virginia serving as the University's soccer, lacrosse and basketball coach at one time or another, as well as the sports information director. After that nine-year stint at Yooveeay (that's U.Va.), Corrigan became the Assistant Commissioner of the Atlantic Coast Conference in Greensboro, N.C., before becoming athletic director at Washington & Lee, a private university in northern Virginia.

Finally he returned to Charlottesville in 1971 to fill the post he still holds today. During his nine years as athletic director, Corrigan took a struggling athletic department and made it one of the finest in the nation.

"Always respected for its academic excellence," reads the Cavaliers' football media guide, "the University of Virginia now boasts athletic excellence as well. Progressive thinking, expansion and financial commitment have been important, but it has been the people that have made the program successful. Gene Corrigan has surrounded himself with the outstanding dedicated people who share his philosophy
