Airliner crashes in Corsica

AJACCIO, Corsica (AP) — A chartered DC-9 airliner carrying 168 Yugoslav tourists and six crew members slammed into fog-shrouded mountains 30 miles from the airport here today and Ajaccio police said all aboard were killed.

They said the wreckage of the Yugoslavian Inex-Adria Airways craft was found by search parties on the slopes above Casa Casalabriva, about 30 miles south of Ajaccio airport, nearly four hours after radio and radar contact with the plane was lost.

High winds and fog had hampered efforts to locate the downed plane, police said.

Ajaccio police said the DC-9 crashed on the west face of Mount San Pietro. Bodies were scattered on the sides of the mountain among the debris of the aircraft, they said.

Civil defense workers were taken to the scene by police helicopter.

Earlier police reported spotting metallic debris near Serra di Ferro, about 12 miles south of Ajaccio near the west coast of this Mediterranean island. A helicopter was sent to the scene. The pilot said he saw "something suspicious in the region, but high winds prevented him from landing. It was not immediately clear if this was part of the wreckage.

Villagers reported seeing an aircraft apparently in trouble and others said they heard one or more explosions, possibly as the aircraft crashed into Mount San Pietro.

The aircraft sent a distress message shortly before it was due to land at Ajaccio airport, control tower officials said. The plane was on final approach when the tower lost radio and radar contact with the craft, they said.

The number of people aboard the airliner was confirmed officially in Yugoslavia, where the one-day excursion to Corsica was organized by the KOMPAS tourist company in Ljubljana. Most of the people aboard the plane were believed to be Yugoslavian.

The worst single airplane crash in history occurred in France on March 3, 1974, when a Turkish Airlines DC-10 crashed 26 miles northeast of Paris, killing 346 people.

In July, 1973, a Boeing 707 belonging to the Brazilian airline Varig crashed in flames near Orly Airport outside Paris, killing 122 people.

A month earlier, during the 1973 Paris Air Show, a Soviet supersonic Tupolev 144 crashed while attempting an emergency landing during a demonstration flight. Eight crew members and nine people on the ground were killed.

The worst aviation disaster in history occurred on March 27, 1977 when Pan American and KLM Boeing 747s collided on a runway on Santa Cruz de Tenerife, Canary Islands, killing 582 people.

Teamsters make offer to trucking industry

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Teamsters union handed new wage demands to the trucking industry yesterday after assuring President Reagan it will be "as reasonable as conditions will permit" in forging a contract that could sway his quest to hold inflation beneath 10 percent.

The International Brotherhood of Teamsters, the nation's largest union, exchanged proposals with Trucking Management Inc., on a pact which would directly affect 300,000 members and set a pattern for many others. Overall, the union has 2 million members.

Union leaders refused to disclose immediately what wage and benefit demands would be made, but Teamster President Roy Lee Williams has voiced concern about poor financial conditions in the industry that have forced the layoffs of 120,000 members.

The White House had no immediate comment on Reagan's meeting with Williams and the 21 members of the Teamster executive board.

But Williams said union leaders told Reagan they hope he succeeds in turning the economy around.

"We assured the president that in our upcoming negotiations which begin today for the National Master Freight Agreement affecting some 300,000 Teamsters, that we will be as reasonable as conditions will permit us to be," he said.

"But we will continue to protect the interests of our members and their families," Williams added. "We are going to do what is best for our members and their families in the best way we know how."

Williams said: "one very serious concern that confronts us as we negotiate this new contract is the effect of deregulation on the trucking industry."

Williams has been indicted on a charge of conspiring to bribe a senator on that issue, an accusation he denies.

He said union leaders pointed out to Reagan that besides 120,000 layoffs in trucking, about 6,000 Teamster union members in the airline industry are out of work.

Union leaders met with industry representatives at a suburban Washington hotel not long after the White House meeting.

The current three-year contract between the Teamsters and the

Desegregation plan

Kentucky State U. may close

By HERBERT SPARROW
Associated Press

FRANKFORT, Ky. (AP) — When the federal government ordered Kentucky to develop a plan to desegregate its public colleges, did it want to turn Kentucky State University, the state's only traditionally black school, into a two-year community college?

A decision this week on the school's status by Kentucky's Council on Higher Education could lead to a legal battle between the state on one side and civil rights groups and the federal government on the other.

The central issue is what to do with Kentucky State, a small (2,300 enrollment) four-year school where a majority of its full-time, day students are black.

Several proposals have been made since January when the U.S. Department of Education's Office of Civil Rights ordered the state to develop a plan to fully desegregate its public university system.

All phases of the plan have been submitted to the OCR except the portion dealing with Kentucky State.

The Council on Higher Education, which oversees Kentucky's university and college system, meets Thursday to consider a recommendation from a special committee formed to study the problem of Kentucky State.

That committee, by a 3-2 vote, has recommended that Kentucky State be turned into a two-year community college within the University of Kentucky system. Proponents believe a community college would attract more white students by offering evening classes and part-time curriculum.

Such a move would be a radical departure from what other Southern states have done in response to similar desegregation orders. Most have spent millions of dollars on improving the traditionally black schools in order to attract white students.

"Kentucky is the only state even considering closing a black school," said Galen Martin, executive director of the Kentucky Commission on Human Rights.

And supporters of Kentucky State say a community college was not what the federal government had in mind when it directed Kentucky to "enhance" the university.

"If anybody considers the downgrading of a university to a community college as an enhancement, then their dictionary definition of enhancement is different from mine," said Louisville attorney Raymond Burse, the only black member of the higher education council.

Some members of the black community have even stronger words for the proposal. The Rev. K.L. Moore of Frankfort called it "unfair, ungodly and not right" to close KSU.

"This is a racial issue, no matter how some council members perceive it," said Martin.

"We will not sit in silence and let it be closed," said Moore.

Supporters of Kentucky State, including students, plan a rally tomorrow outside the building where the council will meet and have started a letter-writing campaign to members of the council.

"We hope to have thousands on hand," said the Rev. Richard Wilson of Louisville, executive director of the Kentucky Southern Christian Leadership Conference.

If the council approves the community college concept, it would still have to be approved by Gov. John Y. Brown Jr., OCR and the state Legislature.

The Human Rights Commission, the state chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and others have vowed to fight any efforts to close Kentucky State in the courts.

"We're going to fight this. We'll fight it to the very end," said Zachary Royal, the student member of the KSU board of Regents.

Robert Bell, an Ashland Oil Inc. executive and former state natural resources secretary who formulated the community college proposal, said he didn't believe the specific criteria used for other states were valid for Kentucky.

He said only 10 percent of Kentucky's black high

Conway explains on-call termination to HPC

Brian Conway, Student Security Commissioner, explained to the Hall President's Council last night why the on-call number for the Student Escort System was discontinued. According to Conway, the service was stopped simply because of lack of use. He added that the library escort service will continue.

Another subject discussed at the HPC meeting was the use of Christmas decorations on campus.

Christmas decorations may only be put up if they are flame retardant. The HPC obtained a formula for making decorations flame retardant but the formula hasn't been approved by the Campus Fire Department yet.

The HPC's "Container" proposal goes to the Student Senate for approval tonight. If approved by the Senate, the proposal will go to the Campus Life Council next Wednesday. The HPC is hoping that the CLC will support the keg policy and that it will possibly run on a trial basis next semester.

Elie Wiesel, the widely-known holocaust survivor and author, will deliver a lecture tonight at 7:30 p.m. in the Washington Hall auditorium at the University of Notre Dame. Wiesel's lecture, which is sponsored by the University of Notre Dame Press and scheduled in conjunction with the Press's publication of his new book, "Five Biblical Portraits," is entitled, "On the Literature of the Bible." The lecture is open to the public. Rev. Theodore Hesburgh, C.S.C., University president, will introduce Wiesel, who in 1979 was awarded an honorary degree from Notre Dame and who heads the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Council on which Father Hesburgh also serves. Wiesel is the Andrew W. Mellon Professor of Humanities at Boston University and has written more than twenty books, including "Night," "Souls on Fire," "Messengers of God," and "Four Hasidic Masters and Their Struggle Against Melancholy," which was published in 1978 by the University of Notre Dame Press. — The Observer

Legal Services Program of Northern Indiana, Inc., headquartered in South Bend, Indiana, has announced that it is being forced to close three of its branch offices due to anticipated severe reductions in its budget. The Program receives its operating monies from the Legal Services Corporation in Washington, D.C., which, in turn, is funded by Congress. The Program provides free legal assistance in civil problems for low-income individuals who meet certain income guidelines. Legal Services Program of Northern Indiana, Inc. began an expansive program from the South Bend office in 1977, which ultimately resulted in the creation of four branch offices, representing the civil legal needs of low-income individuals in twenty-four northern Indiana counties. While it is anticipated that the Legal Services Corporation will survive this year, it will be under a substantially reduced budget. As a result of the anticipated budget cuts, it will be necessary to close branch offices in Michigan City, Kokomo, and Elkhart. The Michigan City and Elkhart offices will be consolidated with the branch office in Lafayette. Clients formerly served out of the Michigan City and Elkhart offices will now be handled through the South Bend office, and clients residing in the Kokomo service area will now be handled by the Lafayette office. The Observer

Founded in 1950 as the General Program of Liberal Education, the "great books" program of Notre Dame will undergo its second name change. Known for most of its campus history as the General Program of Liberal Studies (or "GP" for short), the interdisciplinary course of study will now be called, "The Program of Liberal Studies." The word "General" was dropped because it confused Notre Dame's major with general education sequences found in the first two years of colleges and universities as well as in junior and community colleges. Program Chairman Walter Nicgorski has invited the 134 students now enrolled to suggest a new logo and subtitle for the program, which has almost 1,000 alumni. The Observer

When the magnolias bloom in front of Notre Dame's Galvin Life Science Center, one of the trees will blossom in memory of a special man who dedicated 40 years to the University's Life Sciences Departments. The tree and an engraved stone were recently dedicated as a living memorial to Vince Stock, the departments' machinist and building engineer who died in 1979. Father James McGrath, C.S.C., assistant chairman and professor in the Biology Department, said purchase of the tree through donations and its dedication to Stock constituted a "first" in memorializing Life Sciences' personnel. Dr. Morris Pollard, director of the University's Lobund Laboratory, remembered Stock as "an unforgettable, homespun philosopher responsible for technical advances in germfree research." While in charge of the Lobund machine shop, Pollard said Stock constructed specialized equipment that could not be commercially purchased and as building engineer supervised the operations of the Lobund facility. As a staff professional, Pollard called Stock, "one of the most valuable of our staff," and as a friend termed him, "The type of personality one would never forget — very strong, very intelligent, and very humane." The Observer

Dr. Roger A. Schmitz, dean of the college of Engineering at the University of Notre Dame, is the recipient of the 1981 R.H. Wilhelm Award of the American Institute of Chemical Engineers (AIChE). Presentation of the award, sponsored by the Mobil Oil Corp., was Nov. 9 during the AIChE four-day annual meeting in New Orleans. Cited for his contributions to the study of chemical reaction engineering, Schmitz received the award for his theoretical and experimental work in the areas of chemical reactor stability and dynamics, and kinetic oscillations. The award includes a certificate and $1500 honorarium. After receiving an undergraduate degree in chemical engineering from the University of Illinois, Schmitz completed his doctorate at the University of Minnesota in 1962. He returned to the University of Illinois the same year as an assistant professor of chemical engineering, advancing to full professor nine years later. He came to the University of Notre Dame in 1979 as the Keating-Crawford professor of Chemical Engineering and chairman of that department. Earlier this year he assumed the deanship of the College of Engineering. He currently serves on the editorial boards of the AIChE Journal and Chemical Engineering Communications, in addition to having authored more than 40 technical papers.

A Step Toward Peace

As John Maclean states in a recent Chicago Tribune article, the United States and the Soviet Union, like two fighters in a ring, are vying for the same "Peace" crown.

Both the U.S. and the Soviets seem to be doing everything possible to claim peace at the Geneva talks.

Said Reagan of the current disarmament talks, "Our approach with verification will be to emphasize openness and creativity rather than the secrecy and suspicion which have undermined confidence in arms control in the past."

The Reagan administration has embarked on a campaign to reduce nuclear arms by announcing that the U.S. would eliminate plans to place 572 missiles in Europe if the Soviets would also eliminate comparable nuclear missiles deployed in Eastern Europe over the past decade. In a letter responding to Reagan's proposal, Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev replied that the Soviets did not seek confrontation with the U.S. and would be willing to discuss such matters. With this task completed, the number of medium ranged missiles aimed by each side would be zero. Thus, Reagan's zero-option proposal would be fulfilled.

Maclean writes that it is obvious that both sides want arms reduction but this does not mean that both sides will get arms reduction. It does mean however, that both sides must come to grips with public opinion.

All over the U.S. and Europe people are fighting for a nuclear arms freeze. This expression of public will is merely a wish for peace when peace is threatened with nuclear arms. People fear the growing dangers of a nuclear war between the United States and Russia. And why shouldn't they? Such a war could result in the deaths of millions.

If a nuclear bomb were dropped in South Bend, 98 percent of the people would be killed in an area two miles from the blast. It's a frightening thought—almost unrealistic. But if the Geneva talks between the U.S. and Soviets are not successful, both sides may continue with their present standing and a nuclear war could be possible.

Anti-nuclear forces say that aside from having the potential to kill 50-250 million people in one day, nuclear arms now cost the U.S. $150 billion a year. This figure is destroying our economy by forcing cutbacks in health care, education, housing, and mass transit while military spending is increased. Is this where our priorities lie?

It seems senseless that two world powers continue in the nuclear arms race. The same anti-nuclear proponent states that our government fears that if it stops its build-up, the U.S.S.R will get further ahead. The Soviet Union says that if they stop, the U.S. will build up its lead. Why can't both countries end this absurd race and solve their differences without nuclear weapons? There would be much less fear in the world and perhaps for once the U.S. and the Soviet Union could work together instead of against each other to form more unified relations.

A reduction in tension between two giants in military power would definitely increase our security. It would also mean a step towards peace. The government alone cannot provide such miracles. People must join together and demand that their security be insured.

A nuclear arms freeze would only be the beginning of the peace movement. It doesn't matter which side begins the movement as long as it starts — soon. A nuclear arms freeze can only become a reality if the government has the support of the people. United, the government and its citizens can minimize the threat of a nuclear war.

Missile reduction Americans, Soviets discuss arms

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — American and Soviet negotiating teams talked for more than two hours yesterday in the first full bargaining session on limiting nuclear missiles in Europe, and promptly reasserted a news blackout on the conduct of the negotiations.

"Everything is OK," Soviet delegation chief Yuli A. Kvitsinsky said as he left the two-hour, 40-minute meeting. "We meet again Friday" at the Soviet mission, Kvitsinsky said.

There were no other public indications here about the conduct of the talks, which have seized the attention of Western Europeans increasingly wary about the medium-range nuclear forces of the superpowers.

The two sides, in a move they said would encourage progress, agreed to embargo virtually all information about the talks, which are to be conducted Tuesdays and Fridays. "We have concurred that the details of the negotiations must be kept in the negotiating room," the chief U.S. negotiator, Paul H. Nitze, said after conferring with Kvitsinsky on Monday on procedural issues. Nitze described that session as "cordial and businesslike."

Deputy head of the U.S. delegation Maynard W. Glitman, reached by The Associated Press, would not discuss the atmosphere of yesterday's round, the first full-scale meeting of the two delegations.

"We've finished for this day," said Glitman. "I'm not going to tell you anything more."

East Germany's official news agency ADN said foreign ministers of the seven Warsaw Pact countries would be discussing "the status of arms control and disarmament" at a meeting that opened yesterday in Bucharest, Romania.

Early sessions of the Geneva talks on intermediate-range nuclear forces were likely to center on resolving differences about the terminology, numbers, range and destructive characteristics of those armaments.

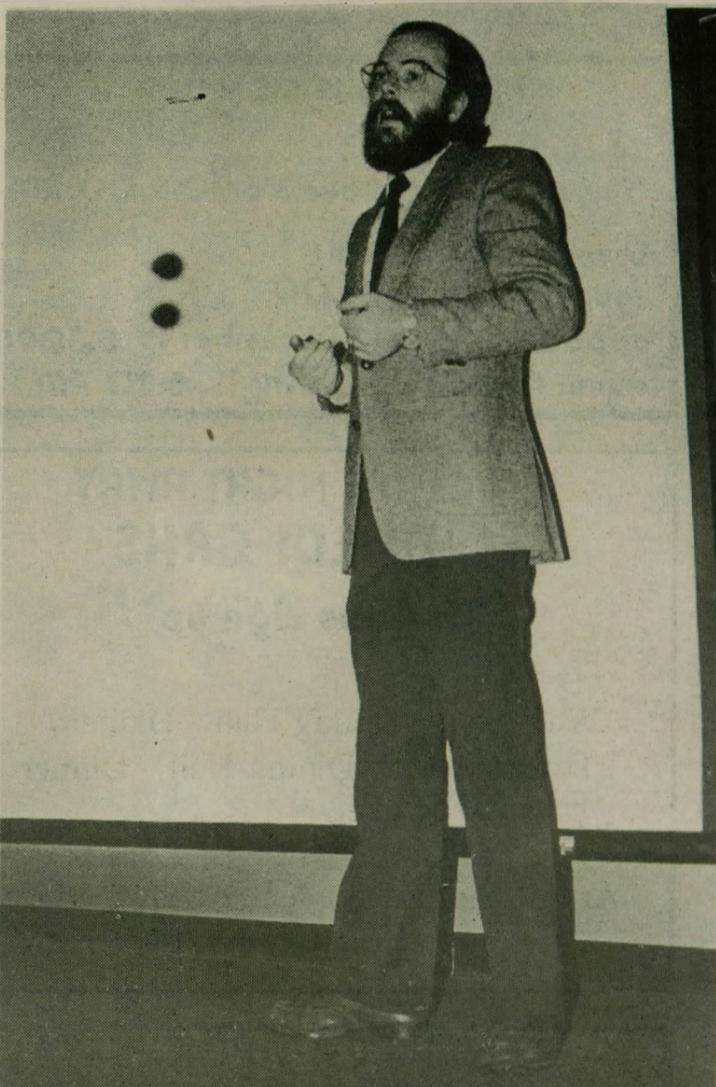

Resolution of similar complex matters took considerable time during SALT II bargaining. Extensive portions of the U.S.-Soviet SALT II arms limitation treaty, which the Senate has never ratified, are devoted to description and terminology concerning the intercontinental weapons under negotiation.

Examples of the difficulties confronting the negotiators at Geneva are conflicting assessments about the number of nuclear weapon systems in Europe. The Soviets say that an approximate parity exists. The United States contends the Kremlin has built an advantage that approaches 6-to-1.

Most formidable weapon in the Soviet's European arsenal is a mobile, triple-warhead missile which the Americans and their allies call the SS-20 — and the Soviets call "Pioneer" missiles.

Eugene V. Rostow, director of the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, said in London on Monday that the Soviets would maintain an edge even with deployment of new U.S. nuclear arms. NATO plans to install 572 cruise and Pershing II missiles in five Western European countries beginning in 1983.

Professor Brent Smith of Earlham College spoke at the Galvin Auditorium yesterday on "The Population Dynamics of False Mermaids."

At SMC Committee works on curriculum

By KATHY SHANNON
News Staff

The Saint Mary's College Curriculum Development Committee, founded through the Lilly Endowment Foundation, is working to revise the present core curriculum. The committee, under the leadership of Sr. Eva Hooker, Associate Dean of the Faculty, focused on two main issues in directing the path of the curriculum: women and social justice.

The committee is comprised of eleven faculty members and Sr. Eva, and is an extension of the previous DRIT committee, which also focused on curriculum revision. The number on the committee is not limited to twelve; any interested faculty member was invited to join the committee when it was formed.

Saint Mary's competed with other colleges for the $126,000 two-year grant from the Lilly Endowment, and was one of the ten to receive grants for curriculum revision projects.

The funds are used for various activities: for the salaries of those teachers substituting for the ten professors on release time, currently working on the building of new courses, for summer course development grants, for speakers, and for visiting professors in residence. For example, the Biology Department received funds to pay salaries for four replacement teachers as well as materials. The released professors are trying to relate the Biology 103 and 104 courses to ethics, with the help of Notre Dame ethicist, Stanley Howost.

The objective of the new or revised courses is to prepare students to write well, make complex value judgements, and to incorporate the ideas of women and of social justice into the program.

The woman issue will encourage disciplinary shifts, new interdisciplinary arrangements, and an overall change in curriculum thought.

Justice, the other main objective, will employ the teaching and practicing of right relationships. Experience is mandatory in social justice awareness; some sort of personal exposure to problems.

The Curriculum Development Committee strives to achieve complete revision of the core curriculum. Last year, Sr. Eva, with a member of the Teaching and Learning Committee, visited each department to examine the core course required. The courses were investigated on the basis of why they were chosen to fulfill the graduation requirement, what they involved, and the rationale behind them.

Through this investigation, and in light of the new objectives, and the women and social justice issues, three new model core curriculums were developed by the Curriculum Development Committee. These models were similar to the basic core curriculum of any college, with some course changes and different course requirements. These three trial models were distributed to the faculty in August, and evaluated by each department.

Sr. Eva reported the summary of these critiques on the three trial model curriculums to the faculty last Tuesday. Each department evaluated the models, as well as the Writing and Proficiency Committee and the Justice Education Committee, who also submitted a report. The critiques of the models were to be evaluated under six main principles, including the suitability as a structure, and the ease of introduction of new knowledge, but most departments failed to do so. Instead, they offered new model curriculums or have a critique from a departmental perspective, rather than a collegial perspective.

Committee discussed each departmental report as it was received. They also explored the possibilities of the new or altered models received.

Although nothing is wrong with the present Saint Mary's curriculum, a change is needed for the growth of future generations of students. As Sr. Eva pointed out, "Most major Ivy-league schools have been up-dating their curriculums, including Harvard. Lower division requirements are changing all over the country." Indeed SMC is no exception.

To update the curriculum was the main purpose of the Curriculum Development Committee's three new model curriculums. Faculty reaction was an important part of this process. Many departments felt that the new curriculum should contain more courses. For example, the History department felt that two semesters of History should be required in the new curriculum, because the present required semester was not enough to intellectually acquaint students with the field.

Most departments varied in support or rejection of certain core courses. All agreed, however, that advanced writing and proficiency courses should be required, as well as computer literacy courses.

No new core curriculum will appear by September 1982 though. Changing the curriculum is a difficult task, and the new core will be phased in gradually. Although the Lilly Endowment grant ceased in September 1982, the Curriculum Development Committee hopes to find funds elsewhere for the continued exploration of change in the SMC curriculum.

The Curriculum Development Committee is responsible to the Lilly Endowment in that it must submit annual reports to the Endowment. The Lilly Endowment is basically interested in education, values, women's issues, and city issues.

Sr. Eva, chairman of the Curriculum Development Committee, is responsible for the coordination of undertaking a curriculum revision project. She finds, "It is a lot of work, but the committee members are wonderful. They have worked very hard." Indeed, the committee needs approximately two hours each week, in order to facilitate the change in Saint Mary's core curriculum.

school graduates attend KSU. He also cited the high per-pupil cost at KSU, which is $2,700 per pupil more than the next most costly state university.

Bell's proposal also calls for establishing a center at the Kentucky State campus to train state and local government employees. It also would use $5 million of the funds now allocated Kentucky State to upgrade services and programs for blacks at the other state universities.

But Burse, council chairman William McCann and Donna Moloney, another council member, announced an alternative proposal Monday that would keep the school as a four-year institution but require it to make major improvements in academic programs and in reducing costs over the next five years.

The plan calls for immediate evaluation of existing academic programs, with faculty and staff reductions, and a strengthening of its master's program in public affairs.

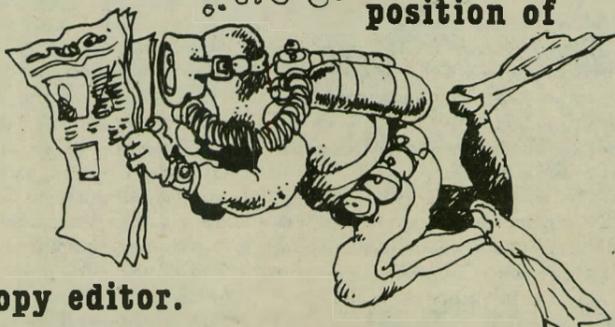

Among the cost reduction measures recommended are elimination of the school's intercollegiate football program and sale of its East Campus — a motel used as a dormitory.

The plan also recommends turning a closed dormitory into a federally funded research facility and demolition of a second closed dormitory.

"My plan doesn't say Kentucky State would be continued forever," Burse said. "But to close it down closes an opportunity for some students to get a quality education that they may never get at any other institution."

Stockman has worn out his welcome

I am astonished that people keep saying the complete David Stockman article in the Atlantic is less vulnerable than the better-known quotes taken from it. The original piece is far, far worse — not only in terms of content, but in its political effect on Stockman as a member of Reagan's administration.

Another mistaken notion is that Stockman showed naivete in talking to journalist William Greider. As Greider himself notes, Stockman has been an expert in manipulating the press to this point. What finally showed through, as it was bound to in time, was Stockman's arrogance, that is, his contempt for all those he deals with as his intellectual inferiors.

Now, as far as I know, Stockman may be justified in his contempt for these people. I find some of them rather contemptible, too. But I don't work for them. Nor do I have to work with them. I don't have to cultivate them in order to pass the president's bills. Stockman's problem is not what he thinks of them, but that he allows them to find out what he thinks of them. The list is long:

1.) His ally and mentor can now read: "Laffer sold us a bill of goods."

2.) Cabinet officers can read that Stockman deliberately ran cuts by them before they had time to prepare responses.

3.) The U.S. trade representative and the commerce secretary can read that Stockman managed them with what he himself called a "demagogic tirade."

4.) The Secretary of Energy can read that Stockman considered him a mouthpiece for "the same old bureaucrats I've been kicking around for the last five years."

5.) Farmers can learn that this farm boy beat their lobbyists by proposing "a farm bill that's unacceptable to the farm guys so that the whole thing begins to splinter."

6.) Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger can read that "He'll back off on a lot of this stuff" (i.e., rises in defense expenditures, which Weinberger espouses).

7.) The president himself can read that, far from being the great decision maker, "If there's a consensus on it, he's not going to buck it, probably."

8.) Howard Baker and his Tennessee constituents can discover that "Cinch River is just life and death to Baker — a very poor reason, I know" (for backing the Clinch River reactor).

9.) Presidential aide Edwin Meese can learn how Stockman tells others that he wanted to prevent people from going in to see Meese, who doesn't understand the policy background."

10.) The Democrats in the House now know that one of their own, Phil Gramm of Texas, was acting as Stockman's spy in their midst.

11.) Rep. Del Latta of Ohio will know how Stockman refers to him as pouting and in need of having his hands held.

12.) The president's advisers in the White House — who Stockman calls "the West Wing guys" — will find they did not know much about their own economic plan, and that they "overreacted" to resistance against Social Security reform.

13.) The president has read that he renounced Social Security reform although "he believed it was the right thing."

14.) The White House will learn that it accepted "a rotten idea" like sugar supports because "they don't care over in the White House — they want to win."

The idea that a man can lay about him with such derisive accuracy (if that is what it is) and still be effective with ego-guarding politicians is absurd.

The opposite argument — that Stockman has to stay on because only he understands the president's budget numbers — is even more damaging than Stockman's own words. Stockman says he doesn't understand the numbers, because they make no sense. Is he to be the best salesman for a product which even calls a salesman, the worse harm he does. He should go.

Social justice should be redefined

I return to the theme of Thomas Sowell, but then so would you if you had experienced him, and read his book, "Markets and Minorities," or the companion, "Ethnic America." There are very few racial cliches that survive this exposure. Professor Sowell's immersion in the subject has made it very nearly impossible to contend with him. Moreover, he has the advantage of having ironed out in his orderly mind what disciplines he proposes to speak about.

"Are you against labor unions?" An indignant lady recently asked him on television. "You asked what were some of the factors that stood in the way of black economic progress and I said that one of them was the labor union. That is a fact, and I'm simply reporting facts, not prejudices." How do you handle such a man. I mean, if you have a lifetime staked out on the repugnant cliches?

Not long ago Carl Rowan called his black brother Tom Sowell a "quisling." The charge makes one smile. In the first place, the idea of Sowell being servile to any regime let alone one that sought accommodation with tyrants, is laughable. But mostly one smiles because if you took from Carl Rowan the planks which one by one the scholar Sowell turns into sawdust, Rowan is left without anything whatever on which to rest his massive frame. It is as if you took from St. Paul the Resurrection and original sin all in one afternoon. What then would happen to him?

It isn't as if Sowell ignores the factor of racism. "People often say that I'm denying that there's racism. On the contrary, racism exists everywhere around the world, down through history. That's one of the reasons it is hard to use it as an empirical explanation for anything. In the United States, for example, Puerto Ricans have lower incomes than Blacks. I don't know of anyone who believes that Puerto Ricans encounter more discrimination than blacks. Obviously there must be something else involved besides this discrimination."

And so the uncluttered mind of Sowell begins looking around. There is, for instance, the commonly accepted thesis that ever since the days of slavery, black families were dominated by mothers, the fathers having been shipped away to distant plantations. The trouble with this is that it is not so. "The current large and rising numbers of female-headed families among blacks is a modern phenomenon stemming from the era of the welfare state—when the government began to subsidize desertion and teen-age pregnancy."

Wait a minute, professor are you saying that the state is intentionally or unintentionally subsidizing discrimination? The answer to this will alarm not only statisticians, but the intellectual elite who consider themselves the primary opponents of discrimination. It is, once again, yes.

And so it goes. How account for the success of the (non-white) Chinese? They are discriminated against through Southeast Asia, but their income is five times as high as that of their neighbors. "Those who argue that the Chinese have gotten this by exploiting the natives could test this out by looking at places where there are only Chinese residents, such as, for example, Singapore or Hong Kong. In Hong Kong, 98 percent of the population is Chinese. They have the highest standard of living in Southeast Asia. If they are getting it by exploitation, they must be exploiting those other two percent something awful—the other two percent being the British, who run the colony."

At least Professor Sowell will leave undisturbed the plain dumb fact that Anglo-Saxons are the privileged economic ethnic group in America— please, professor? No. Jews, Japanese, Poles, Chinese and Italians make more money.

William F. Buckley

Fourteen percent of Americans are professionals, which is to say, lawyers, doctors and teachers. Can anybody beat the Anglos on that scale? Well, yes. West Indians, 15 percent; Japanese, 18 percent; Filipinos, 23 percent; Chinese, 25 percent.

"How far have we come in removing discriminatory pay differences among individuals with the same qualifications at different racial or ethnic backgrounds?" asks Professor Sowell of himself: "We have just about all the way."

There are those who say that Professor Sowell has become an abject servant of the market, to which his icy answer is: "I do not have faith in the market, I have evidence about the market."

They talk about "social justice." Social justice these days is best defined as the failure to read the books of George Gilder and Thomas Sowell. Because that failure orients the governing majority toward the preservation of rules and regulations, habits and predilections, which are the greatest enemy of full black freedom since the slaveowners.

Student questions new Theology Dept. policy

Dear Editor

I would like to describe a scene in the drama of liberal education, as it is played at Notre Dame. As all at N.D. know, there is a university requirement for every student to take six hours of theology. Knowing the superb quality of this department, I had no objections to this policy as I went to O'Shaughnessy to pick up a card for the check-marked course, "Non-Western Religions." I was told upon arriving that I would have to first talk to Father Malloy. He graciously informed me that due to complaints by the alumni and by the faculty, the department now follows the policy that unless a student is Buddhist or Jewish or some other "special case," he may not take a non-Christian course for the theology requirement, but only as an elective.

I suppose it is therefore obvious that Non-Western Religion is not religion, in the Notre Dame sense of the word. It would, after all, be quite a shame if any good Catholics should stray away because of evil outside influences, like Judaism or Hinduism. We are the chosen people, and heaven knows our Catholic background would be lacking without two courses at ND.

This is liberal education? It seems while the rest of the world progresses toward humanism and international understanding, our university is taking a step backward. I personally refuse to be discouraged by such incentives as Notre Dame offers in this case. It only feels strange having to declare myself Atheist for a semester simply to take a Theology course.

Sincerely,
Karen Miranda

At Primary Day School

Sisters fight odds to educate

I had never had the opportunity to teach in the inner city," Sr. Marita Stoffel says. "I wanted to find out why the children in the inner city were so far behind children in other areas. I knew they were just as intelligent."

On the second floor on the old St. Stephen's school in Downtown South Bend stands the Primary Day School. The school is not privately owned, nor is it supported by the South Bend School Corporation. It is, according to Bro. Joe McTaggart of Campus Ministry, "an apostolate of two women, addressing the needs of the inner city." These women are Sr. Marita and Sr. Evodine.

In 1968, Sr. Marita, then an assistant professor of education at Marquette University in Milwaukee, was doing research on inner city schools tried to get into the schools to find out why these children were so far behind. The schools in Milwaukee would not let her in. So, she packed up and went to Chicago, only to be turned down there as well. She then came to South Bend.

She arrived in South Bend in September of 1968, hoping to be placed in the South Bend School Corporation. Again, she was turned down. "So," Sr. Marita replied, "I had to start my own school."

She chose the old St. Stephen's school building because that was the only place she could find. Originally, she was given one room on the second floor of the building. Today, she has the entire seven-room floor which includes classrooms, a library, and a kitchen.

Sr. Marita wanted to teach the inner city children who had failed in school. In order to find them, though she had to go out and look for them. This past summer, Sr. Marita spent three weeks trying to recruit thirty students for the fall. This is not an easy task because many of the parents do not want their children in her school. Many fear that it is a religious school, but to this she added, "We teach basic Christian principles."

Most of the children enrolled in Primary Day School come from broken families. In fact, only one of the 26 children presently enrolled comes from a two-parent family. Sr. Marita said that "a child from this type of environment has a very low self-esteem. He has failed in school and doesn't have any opportunities. He has never been anybody."

The main task is to make these children "somebody." She reminds us, though, that these children are by no means mentally deficient. They are not even slow learners. They are victims of an environment in which many times a parent does not care about his child. "These children are bright," she said, "and we just have to go out there and find them. We are really looking for the child who is out there almost alone."

"Sr. Marita's purpose is not only to teach, but to make the children learn how to learn," Bro. McTaggart added. Her purpose is to remove these children from the "special education" classes in which they do not belong. Sr. Marita wants to take these children, most eleven and twelve year olds, and prepare them to go back to school and succeed where they failed previously.

"The first thing we do when they come here is try to build up their self-esteem. They come here with a very defeatist attitude. We try to make them feel like they are real people and worthwhile. We convince them that they can do it; they can be somebody."

Sister Marita is assisted by Sister Evodine McGrath, a former administrator at Marquette University before joining the Day school in 1971. Her main job is to seek funding for the school. This brings us to the main problem of the Primary Day School.

The South Bend School Corporation (School City) will not fund the school. In fact, they tried to close her down ten years ago, sending in the fire marshal and the health inspector to cite various violations. Sister did what she had to do, though, and since then the School Corporation has not come around.

The sisters must seek other means to keep the school going. United Way will no longer fund them. They feel she is duplicating a service already provided by School City. In reality, though, these ladies are doing something which goes beyond public education.

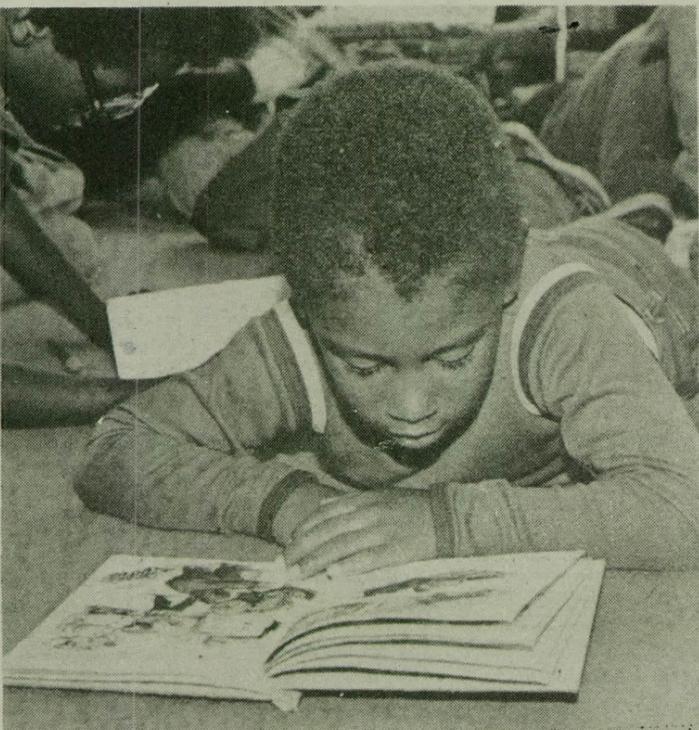

"Why, we've gotten money from United Way before," Sister Marita says, "but we had School City on our doorstep the next day." United Way then told them that they didn't want the hassle.

The school has never opened its doors in August with enough money to run the school for the entire year. "Somehow," Sister says, "somebody always comes through." Many times, Notre Dame provides money. In fact, the school is funded mainly by Notre Dame, not the University itself, but many different student organizations and the Campus Ministry. The school does receive breakfast and lunch for each student from the government.

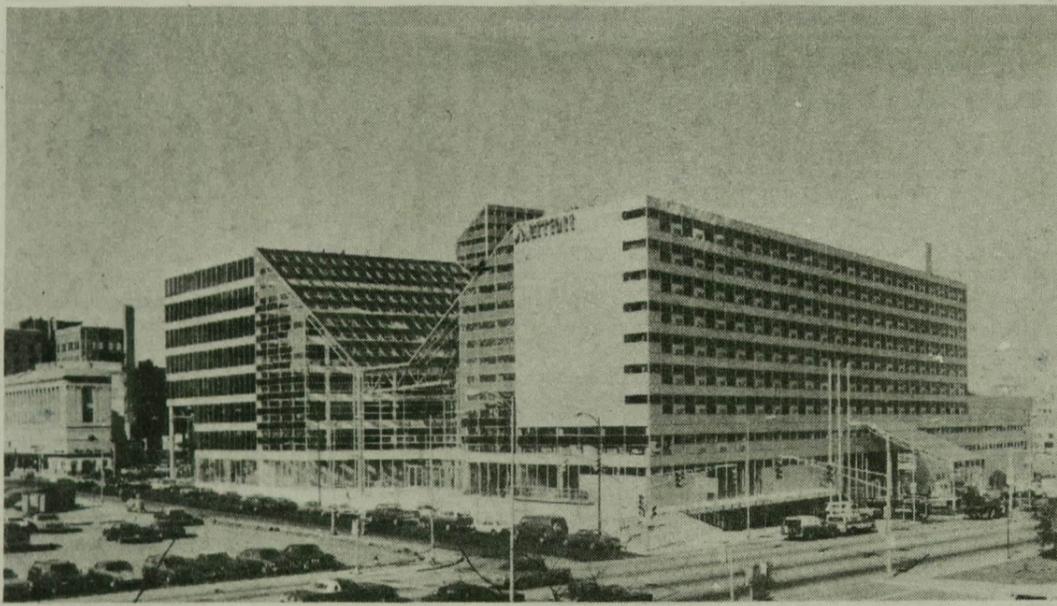

Their task is not always easy. They must not only struggle to get students, they must struggle to keep them. For thirteen years, these ladies have tried to serve the needs of the 'South Bend inner city.' "Their success rate is phenomenal," McTaggart adds. "We've tried many times to get these ladies an honorary degree, but we've never been able to get it. These are people in our own neighborhood."

Even though they have not been honored, they continue to provide their services. In fact, Sister Marita says that it is more an education for her than these children. "It is an education in itself. You have no idea how some of these children live."

The Primary Day School may have a shaky future, but Sister Marita doesn't let the financial problems stand in the way of her rewarding experience. "You just live and hope and continue to pray that one day our ship will come in."

Marriott Hotel opens doors

After several years of planning and building, the South Bend Marriott Hotel has finally opened its doors to the public. Opening

By Vic Sciulli

Ceremonies were held last week in the atrium of the new steel and glass structure located in downtown South Bend.

The new hotel, the 93rd to be built by Marriott Hotels is a radical departure from the more traditional architecture of most Marriott Hotels. The dramatic nine-story structure is supported by over two hundred tons of steel with 140,000 square feet of specially treated glass surrounding the outside of the building. Seventy five miles of electrical tubing are laid throughout the hotel. The atrium floor alone has over 30,000 sq. feet of space. Designed by Helmut Jahn, architect of several other Marriott Hotels around the world, the 300 room hotel features a number of guest services and shops, a restaurant, lounge, and several thousand square feet of banquet and meeting space.

Many people have wondered why the Marriott Corporation would build such a large hotel in a small city like South Bend. James E. Durbin, President of Marriott Hotels explained that Marriott doesn't usually build a hotel unless the city has sufficient generators in the three main segments of their business: tourism, corporate, commercial, convention and seminars. They also look for a location in which they can have 80% occupancy.

South Bend, however, has been experiencing a decline in the diversity of the industry in the area with a corresponding decline in the population base.

There were three main reasons why South Bend was chosen for the corporation's new hotel. The new Century Center, located across the street from the hotel will provide, Durbin feels, cultural, meeting, convention, and conference possibilities the city did not have before.

Downtown areas of many cities have experienced a revitalization after World War II because of the increase in the cost of housing and energy. Durbin feels that if there can be an integration of commercial facilities in a new and fresh way, there can be new life for a downtown area. Durbin explained that this is not the first time that Marriott has come to a city that has been in a decline. He believes that the city's administrators are determined to make South Bend a better place and that the new hotel can be a catalyst for a revitalization of South Bend.

It currently costs five times as much to build a Marriott Hotel today than it did 25 years ago when the first Marriott was built, Durbin explained. The price for building the South Bend hotel went over the costs of the original estimates, something Durbin attributes to the acceleration of interest rates, the extensive lifesaving and security systems throughout the hotel, as well as the increase in the price of labor and energy.

Big business shows big interest in arts

Consider these facts:

Kraft, Inc. contributed $404,600 to the arts in 1979, United States Steel: $450,500 and Mobil Oil Corporation (Mobil Foundation, Inc.) a whopping $1,042,000.

21 million Americans in all age groups and at all economic levels attended dance performances in 1979, while 13.2 million went to NFL football games.

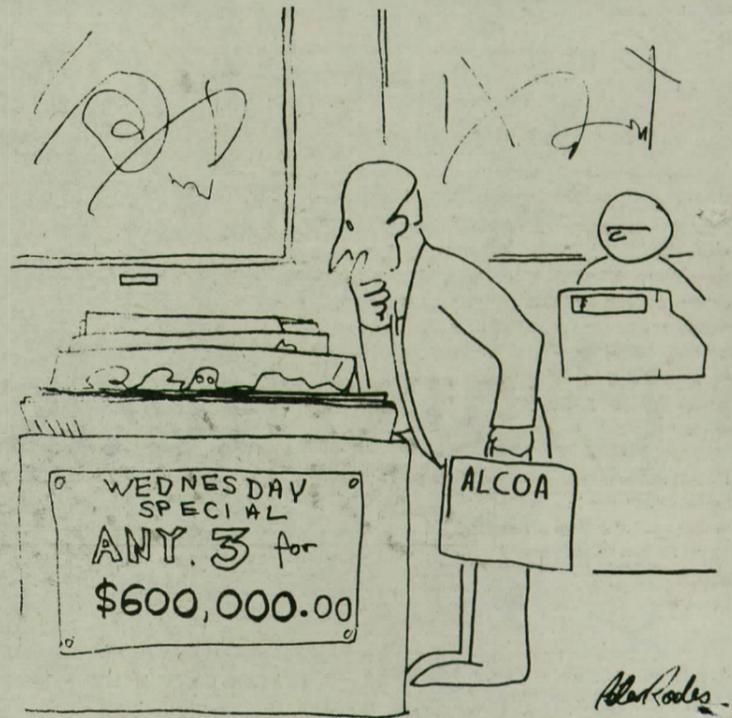

"Nicholas Nickleby," the latest Broadway extravaganza cost $1.2 million and has an estimated operating cost of $400,000 a week. A "straight" Broadway show (a drama with a small cast) costs about $450,000.

11 million people attended Broadway shows during the 1980 season. Receipts totaled $196.9 million.

Mort Neumann, a Chicago businessman who runs a little known but successful mail order cosmetics business under the name Valmour, has amassed a collection of modern art estimated to be worth over $50 million. It took him 30 years.

Alcoa, the largest aluminum company in the world, recently ran a full page ad in the Wall Street Journal listing the cultural advantages of Pittsburgh, in an effort to attract executives to the city in which Alcoa is headquartered.

What do all these tidbits mean? That the arts are big business and big business is becoming interested in the arts. This interest has been a long time in coming, partially because of the American mindset. As Agnes De Mille said, Americans are "imbued with the idea that what was no useful was no good. If it had no practical utilitarian purpose — if you couldn't mend the roof with it... what use was it. It was effeminate; it was trivial; it was unamerican." The government, traditionally the foundation of support for the arts has never taken too much interest. Of all democracies, of all western and more or less free societies — and of socialistic and communistic societies, too. America has no Secretary of Fine Arts, no office of Culture, no Cultural Advisory. Ms. De Mille says that this is a blatant form of neglect and a dangerous one.

If the government will take no interest in the arts then it must be the responsibility of free enterprise. John T. Connor, chairman of the Board of Directors of Allied Chemical Corporation and Secretary of Commerce during the Johnson administration, says that only do the arts need business but business needs the arts: "An alliance between the arts and business is as ancient as civilization itself; business has never been able to remain indifferent to the arts without damage to itself."

So what does this mean to the average Domer? It is no secret that one of the things Notre Dame is well known for is turning out successful executives. If art is important to business, then the executive will have to know at least something about, shall we say, culture. The executive will at least have to have some esthetic taste. In other words, you will no longer have to justify that art course you took. Investing in art can be profitable in financial and intangible ways. A corporation's public relations can be greatly enhanced by support of the arts in an intelligent manner. And an interviewer may often remember the candidate who, along with good grades and extracurriculars, knew the difference between a Monet and Manet.

Another thing to think about, if you are looking for an exciting career in a new field and would consider something that does not carry a huge salary: the art world needs business people, from accountants who are experienced in non-profit corporations to lawyers well versed in copyright and royalty laws, as well as laws governing estates. If a wealthy patron comes to an arts organization and wants to donate for tax purposes, somebody has to know the laws.

So the next time you brush off the latest show at the Snite as a waste of time, remember Mort Neumann. And the next time you find yourself arguing with your roommate over why the heck and engineer should take Art Trads, tell him or her that Mobil Oil spent over a million dollars in 1979 supporting the arts. You are spending three credit hours.

the entire season, which ties the single-season team record set in 1941.

On the individual side, Greg Bell's 98-yard kickoff return tied him for third on the list of longest returns. George Melinkovich returned a kickoff the same distance against Northwestern in 1932. The last time an Irish player had returned a kickoff for a touchdown was back in 1973, when Al Hunter toted the ball 93 yards against Alabama in the 1973 Sugar Bowl.

Dave Ducerson's 88-yard interception return was the fifth longest in Irish history and the longest since a 92-yard theft return by Nick Rassas against Northwestern in 1965. The last time an Irish defender returned an interception for a touchdown was last season, when Tom Gibbons ran 53 yards with another Miami aerial.

On the other side of the field, Hurricane punter Dan Miller tied the Notre Dame record for most field goals by an opponent with three three-pointers, all in the second quarter.

WHEN IT RAINS IT POURS — As if this year's football season was not disappointing enough for Gerry Faust, his Cincinnati Moeller High School team was blanked 13-0 by Canton McKinley over the weekend in the Ohio state championships.

PUT ON YOUR HIP BOOTS — In the fine (?) tradition of "The Little Blue Nun" and other timeless musical classics from the state of Alabama, another artistic creation has sprung from the pen of some Confederate composer.

This time the song commemorates the 315th coaching victory of Coach Paul "Bear" Bryant, which vaulted him over Amos Alonzo Stagg as the winningest coach in college football history. The composer obviously took advantage of much artistic license, since one line of the song recounts that "The Gipper would tell old Rockne he's the best he's ever seen...When the Bear wins number 315..."

For the record, "The Bear" has a commanding 0-4 record against Notre Dame.

THE NUMBERS GAME — Friday's "game" in Miami assured the Irish of their first losing season since 1963 and snapped their string of consecutive winning seasons at 17, a fact that makes the people at Clarion State in Pennsylvania very happy.

According to NCAA rankings, Alabama's 24 consecutive winning seasons is the top current string in the country, followed by Nebraska and USC at 20 and Tennessee State at 19. Going into the season, Clarion State and Notre Dame were tied for the next spot at 17. Unlike the Irish, Clarion State posted a successful 6-4 record with wins over fellow Division II foes West Liberty, Central State, California State of Pennsylvania, Slippery Rock, Indiana Univ. of Pennsylvania and Kutztown.

In fact, the Clarion State faithful are so happy about their current standing that one school representative phoned The Observer office four times until he found someone to tell about it.

TAKE A BOW — Observer staffers Mike Ortman and Skip Desjardin presented a check representing roughly $9000 to Bobby Knight and former Indiana Governor Otis Bowen prior to last night's game in Bloomington. The check represented Notre Dame student and staff contributions to The Observer-Landon Turner Fund, as well as benefit donations from local residents. The appreciative Indiana fans responded with a one-minute standing ovation in thanks to the Notre Dame and South Bend community.

wanted to show everyone we could do it."

Miami's senior class had a lot to prove. They were touted as one of the best bunch of recruits in the school's history. When coach Lou Saban signed them, he felt their potential could take Miami to the top.

"I made the statement that they had a chance to be the national champion," said Saban from New York last week. "I wasn't too far off."

"Most classes can't come in and say they're going for the national championship in four years, and come as close as we did," noted defensive end Tim Flanagan. "I can't think about the probation now. I want to remember this positively."

"This win wraps up four years of hard work toward respectability and national prominence for us," said Marion. "When I first came here we couldn't even stay on the field with Notre Dame."

"We dominated Notre Dame like we were playing North Carolina State," added linebacker Scott Nicolas. "They may have thought they could come in here and shove the ball down our throats like they did last year, but we've improved in every respect since then."

Miami's 37 points marks the most scored against the Irish since 1979 when Tennessee beat them 40-18. "We just ran our basic attack," explained UM's coach, "but Jim did a good job of audibilizing. We were hitting them away from the strength of their defense."

Kelly, who threw scoring strikes of 18 and 63 yards, set both single season and career passing yardage and passing touchdown records with his efforts.

"We accomplished what we wanted to do," said Kelly. "The first half was probably the best our offense played all year. Their secondary was daring us to go deep so we tested them. They never adjusted to what we were doing."

"I felt good going into this game because we had the right combination of offense and defense to handle Notre Dame," said Schnellenberger. "The offense played the first half as well as anyone's capable of playing. And the defense took over in the second half and totally dominated. We accomplished what no one in football thought we could do."

"This has to be the biggest thing that's ever happened to me."

"Maybe instead of people looking to knock Notre Dame," offered wide receiver Mike Rodrigue, on the end of one of Kelly's touchdown passes, "they should just praise us."

GREAT WRITING STARTS WITH A LITTLE LISTENING, A LITTLE BEER, AND A LOT OF LEGWORK.

When the guys at Miller asked me to write an ad on writing, I said, "Forget it. Not even if you held a gun to my head." So they held a bottle of Lite Beer to my mouth. They're a pretty persuasive group.

THUGS TO MUGS

If you're going to write anything, know what you're talking about. And that means three things: Research, research, and more research. The more you know, the more you can tell your reader.

Take my characters. A lot of them I base on actual people. There's this buddy of mine who pops up in every book I write. In one story he's a cop. In another, a private eye. Once, I made him a millionaire. Using him not only helped make character development a heck of a lot easier, he was so carried away by the rich image, he bought me a lot of free dinners (and a lot of Lite Beer from Miller). So use the people you know as models.

Even locations should be based on real things. If you're writing about a bar, know that bar. Hang out there. Watch the bartender. The customers. Whatever they drink, you drink. When they drink Lite Beer, you drink Lite Beer. Remember—research is most fun when you soak up as much subject matter as you can. It can only help you paint a better picture.

HI, DOLL

No caper is complete without dames (or ladies in proper English). Experience has shown me that in mystery writing, the sexier the dames, the better. Experience has also shown me that sexy scenes make great punctuation marks. This is where research has the greatest potential. Use your own discretion in this matter. But when you write about it, don't be too explicit. That way, your reader gets to paint a more vivid picture.

CAPER TO PAPER

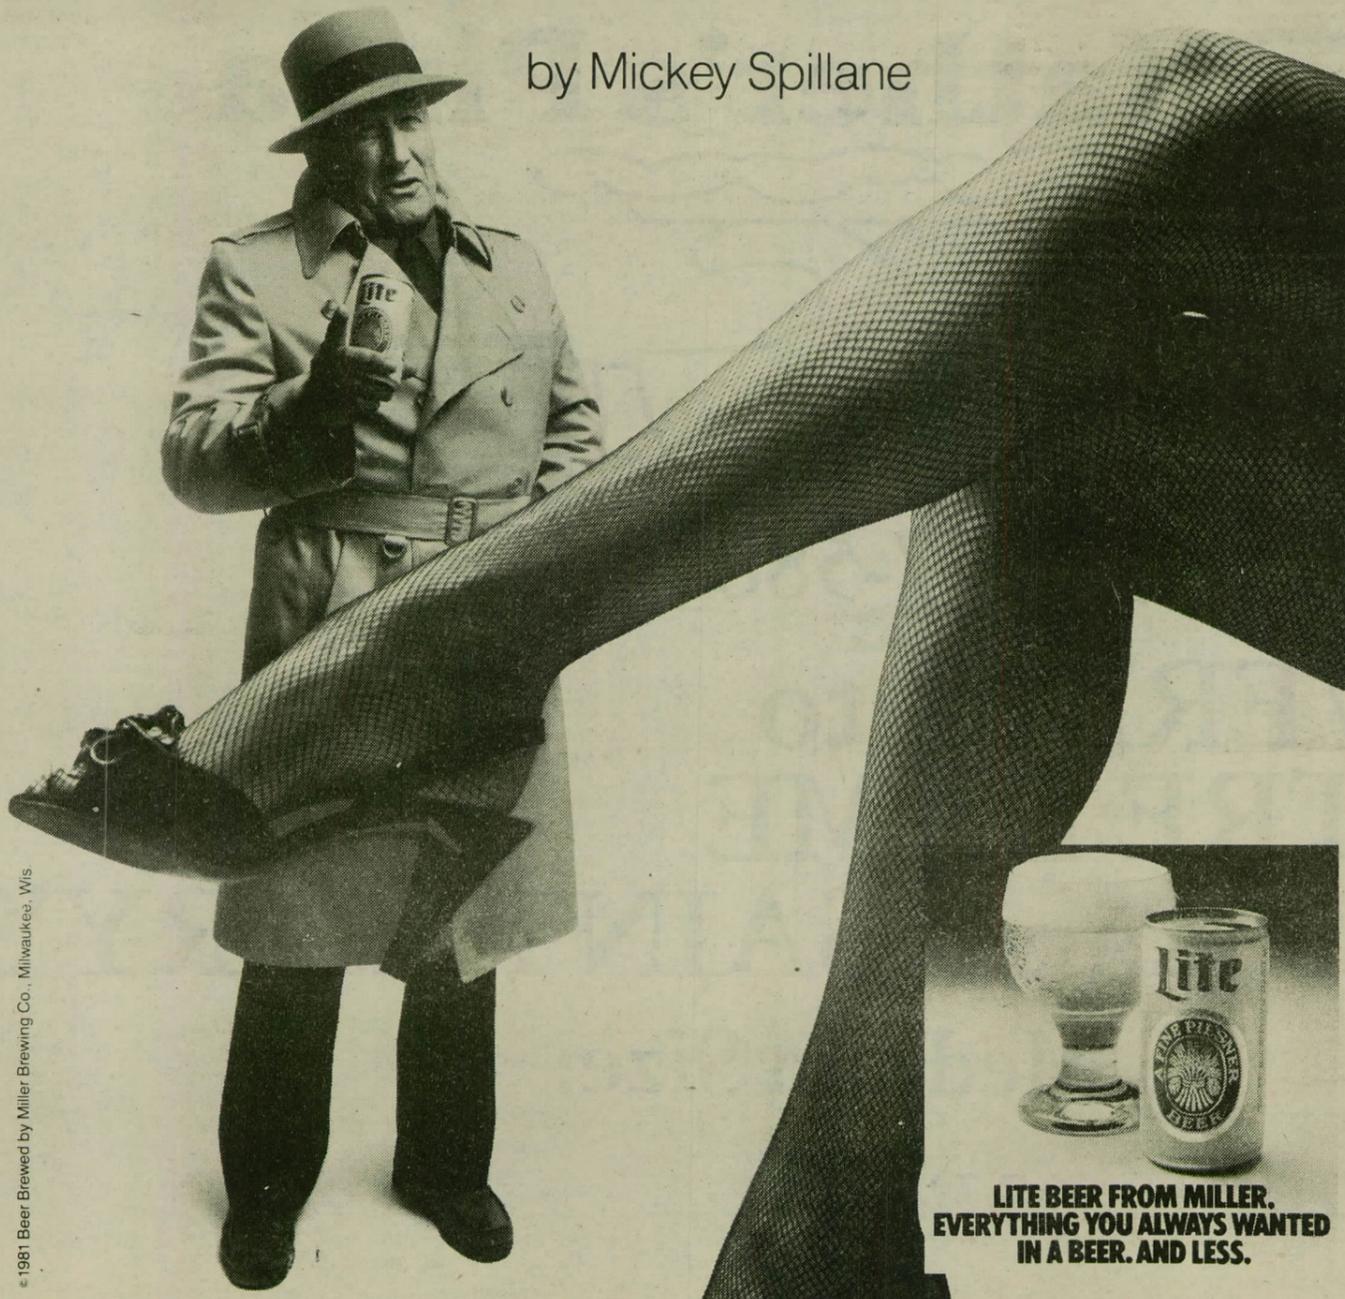

O.K., you've got your characters, locations, and dames lined up. Now comes the good part: Putting your caper to paper. There's no mystery to it. As long as you write the ending first, the rest will follow. Write short, terse, to-the-point sentences. Be as clear as possible. And make sure you've got the right stuff around for when you get thirsty. After all, writing is pretty thirsty work.

I suggest a couple of mugs of Lite Beer—who ever heard of a caper that didn't involve a couple of mugs?

Why Lite Beer? It's a lot like me and my books—great taste, less filling (some people can't get their fill of my books), and always good to spend time with.

At any rate, follow my advice and, who knows—you might turn out a heck of a story. Or you might turn out to be a heck of a Lite Beer drinker.

LITE BEER FROM MILLER. EVERYTHING YOU ALWAYS WANTED IN A BEER. AND LESS.

said. "We played well for the first 12, then we lost our intensity — offensively and defensively."

The loss left Notre Dame 1-1 and looking to Saturday's matchup with UCLA.

"We're going to go home, get some rest and go back to work tomorrow," Phelps said. "UCLA is coming off a tough loss to Brigham Young. They'll be gunning for us."

"I don't worry about losing early," he said. "We've got a whole season to grow up. Indiana was 7-5 in December last year, and they won it all. UCLA was 8-6 by New Year's Day two years ago, but they went to the NCAA final game."

"A lot of things can happen between now and March."

IRISH ITEMS — Paxson fouled out of a game for only the second time in his career, but at least two of his five fouls were intentional fouls late in the game... The Hoosiers out-rebounded the Irish 29-28, but Notre Dame was credited with eight team grabs as opposed to Indiana's two... Turnovers were a problem as well, as Notre Dame had given the ball up 11 times to only four times for the Hoosiers at one point in the game.

After slow start

IU Hoosiers outplay Irish

By SKIP DESJARDIN
Associate Sports Editor

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. — When all was said and done, Ted Kitchell and Randy Wittman made the difference.

Indiana's top returnees scored 22 and 15 points respectively, as the Hoosiers handed Notre Dame its first loss of the season, 69-55.

Indiana Coach Bobby Knight surprised many observers by starting four freshmen. The move worked, as Hoosier regulars came in and were fresh late in the first half.

"Kitchell came off the bench and turned things around," Digger Phelps said after the game. "He did things inside that really hurt us."

The 6-8 forward picked up 14 points in the first half and led the Hoosiers in scoring.

In the second half, it was Wittman's turn. After 0 for 4 shooting in the first half, the 6-5 guard got hot. He hit all 6 of his shots after halftime, pounding the final nail into Notre Dame's coffin.

"We played very well for the first 12 minutes," Phelps said. But Indiana wiped out a 22-16 Irish lead by reeling off eight unanswered points before the half.

"I thought our starters played great," said Knight of his freshmen. "They played so well, I almost put them back in when things were going bad."

Injuries played a key role in the Irish loss, as Tim Andree and Bill Varner played hurt.

"After about five minutes, my calf felt like jello," said Andree. "I was very physically tired. Eventually I had to use positioning to get rebounds. I just couldn't get off the floor."

It was Andree's first action since tearing ligaments in his ankle in a preseason practice session. Varner was on the mend as well, recovering from a dislocated toe.

"It's sore," Varner said. "It really started bothering me in the second half."

Knight conceded that the injuries to the Irish front-liners played a big part in the final outcome.

"If those two guys had been in top shape, this would have gone down to the wire," he said.

Phelps told reporters after the game that the contest was lost on the offensive boards.

"You can't win against a bigger team without getting offensive rebounds," he said, shaking his head. "You just can't afford to have one of your guys up front pull down just one offensive board."

"They beat us. I have no excuses. We were outplayed inside and on the boards."

John Paxson led all scorers with 24 points, but many of them came late in the game when the outcome was no longer a question.

"We've got to learn to concentrate for a full 40 minutes," he

Hurricanes celebrate team's greatest day

MIAMI, Fla. — "It shouldn't end here," Miami fans were complaining after their big win Friday over Notre Dame. "We should be going to a bowl."

The Hurricanes, on NCAA probation, are banned from post-season play, but they made the most of their opportunity to show people they're for real.

"This is the greatest day in University of Miami football history," said UM Coach Howard Schnellenberger. "The stage was set for something classical to happen and it did. I think it demonstrates that we have arrived."

And maybe it's just as well that his team doesn't have to come up with a better performance than the one they orchestrated in the Orange Bowl Friday. "What could we do for an encore?" asked all-American safety Fred Marion. "A bowl should be the climax of your season, but winning some minor bowl would have been a letdown compared to this."

Schnellenberger knew emotions would be high among the seniors in their finale, but was he surprised by the early and seemingly easy domination his club assumed?

"I don't like the word surprised," he responded. "I like the word delighted better."

"We came into this game really confident, but not overconfident," offered quarterback Jim Kelly. "We

NBC shows UCLA in ACC

BRUISED BRUINS — The Irish entertain UCLA Saturday in what has become one of the classic rivalries in all of college basketball. NBC-TV will beam the game to a nationwide television audience beginning at 2 p.m. in the first of four Irish games to be shown by the peacock network (UCLA in Los Angeles, DePaul and Michigan in the Pontiac Silverdome are the other three).

The Bruins own a 16-11 edge in the all-time series and won both games played last year, 94-81 on the coast in December and 51-50 at the ACC in early February. Besides being the only blemish on Notre Dame's 16-1 home record last season, UCLA won two games over Notre Dame in the same season for the first time since 1972-73.

The Irish and Bruins have met twice annually every year since 1971-72 when Digger Phelps assumed the Irish cage helm. Phelps owns a 9-11 record against the Westwood wonders and the Irish have won seven of the last 11 games.

Notre Dame and UCLA have split the 12 series games played in the ACC, with the Bruins providing the only home court setback of the season in 1976-77 and 1978-79, along with last year.

The Bruins, ranked second in The Associated Press's preseason listings, succumbed to Brigham Young 79-75 on Friday and edged Pepperdine 76-69 Saturday. The Bruins travel to the Meadowlands in New Jersey for a Thursday night date with Rutgers before journeying to South Bend.

MIDWEST HOSPITALITY? — The Bruins will be led into the ACC on Saturday by first-year head coach Larry Farmer, who probably doesn't have fond memories of the Irish home court. A 1973 graduate of UCLA, Farmer's only loss as a player was an 89-82 setback to Notre Dame in 1971.

The odds may be against Farmer on Saturday, since on the last three occasions that a new UCLA coach has entered the ACC for the first time, Notre Dame has emerged victorious. A pair of John Paxson free throws in the waning seconds welcomed Larry Brown with a 77-74 loss in 1979, while the Irish have spoiled the beginner's luck of Gene Bartow (95-85 in 1975) and Gary Cunningham (75-73 in 1977).

WORDS OF WISDOM — As you read Skip (Clement) Desjardin's story about the Indiana game on these same pages, keep in mind what Hoosier coach Bobby Knight says about sportswriters:

"All of us learn to write in the second or third grade. Some of us move on to other things."

ACADEMIC ACCOLADES — Irish seniors John Krimm and Kevin Griffith have both been named to the NCAA District Four Academic All-America football team. Krimm, a fellow philosophy major, has maintained a 3.70 academic average while starting at cornerback for three years. Griffith, a defensive end from Kettering, Ohio, has earned a 3.30 grade average in government.

Both Krimm and Griffith, who plan to attend law school, will be listed on the ballot for the national Academic All-America team, to be announced Dec. 9.

STAGE FRIGHT — Last Friday's disaster in Miami marked the fourth straight nationally or regionally televised game that the Irish have lost. Along with the 37-15 setback to Miami, the Irish lost 25-7 to Michigan (the worst loss of the season before Miami) earlier this year. Last year, both of Notre Dame's losses, 20-3 to Southern Cal and 17-10 to Georgia were nationally televised as well.

The last game the Irish won on live television was a 7-0 win over Alabama in Birmingham last season in a nationally beamed battle, while the Irish also whipped Purdue 31-10 on regional TV that year.

RECORD SETBACKS — The last team before Miami to beat the Irish by 22 points was Tennessee, who thrashed the Irish 40-18 at the end of the 7-4 1979 season.

RECORD-SETTERS — The Miami game was not a complete loss, since the Irish did tie one team standard, and two individuals wrote their names into the Irish record books. Notre Dame lost only six fumbles during

'Always next year' only solace for Irish

Isn't it amazing how one loss can turn a "disappointing" season into a "disastrous" season. But what made last Friday's loss in sunny Miami so disastrous was that it made Gerry Faust's initial Notre Dame campaign a losing season.

There's something about the word "loser" that just doesn't set so well on the Notre Dame campus. No doubt the more boisterous members of the "Notre Dame Family," the ones who boast of Irish exploits without thinking twice, were catching a considerable amount of much deserved abuse at weekend social functions.

The losing numbers hold up. The Irish managed to beat losers and lose to winners. The five teams Notre Dame beat own a combined 19-32-1 record (Georgia Tech and Liberty Bowl-bound Navy still have their season finales remaining against Georgia and Army respectively). On the other hand, the six teams to beat the Irish have finished their seasons with a combined 45-20-1 mark.

To further the argument, consider that of the five Irish victims only Navy will finish with a winning record (7-3 at present), and the Middies defeated only two teams with winning records (Citadel 7-3-1 and Eastern Kentucky 10-1). At the same time, Purdue (5-6) was the only "loser" to beat Notre Dame.

It all adds up to mediocrity. In general, the Irish could beat the poor teams but couldn't defeat the good ones.

Perhaps the Blue and Gold had it coming to them. After the rash of miracle finishes of the past, this may have been God's way of evening the score.

If you read between the lines, you'll see that part of Faust's rookie year was a big winner. It seems an eternity ago when he and his staff posted a resounding victory in the recruiting war. You'd have to go a long way back to find a year when so many freshmen made significant contributions — Joe Howard, Joe Johnson, Mike Gann, Mike Larkin, Mark Brooks, Chris Smith, Joe Bars and Mike Golic.

Another solid recruiting year, coupled with the fact that only Crable, Krimm, Oliver and Pozderac will have graduated from the starting lineup that closed out the season, could be cause for springtime optimism. Yet people (Faust included) will be reluctant, no doubt, to spout off too much this time, fearing they again will be burned.
