PACE report targets student needs

By CAROL CAMP
Senior Staff Reporter

Notre Dame Provost Timothy O'Meara said that students will be pleased with the attention their needs receive in the final version of the Priorities and Commitments for Excellence (PACE) report, to be released later this week.

Of the 16 committees involved in drafting the report, six included one or two student representatives. In the chapter dealing with student life, O'Meara specifically cited one of the subtopics entitled "Student Life: A Special Priority," by commenting, "How can you possibly look at that and say that we haven't made an effort to address student needs in this report?" The report, which analyzes various aspects of campus life, will be formally released prior to the Board of Trustees meeting on Nov. 11-12.

O'Meara explained that report's release has been delayed because of the problem in "getting 24 people together to meet at one time." In this statement, O'Meara referred to the difficulty in convening regular meetings of the 24 administrators, faculty members, and students who were involved in compiling the PACE report.

Sixteen committees explored various aspects of campus life and accumulated the background research required for the report. These committees examined areas ranging from academics to athletics, alumni relations, and student affairs.

Committee members received input for their reports by making visitations and by meeting with professors in specific academic areas. After gathering this information, the entire PACE committee met and edited the individual reports.

After more than a year of these meetings, the final draft of the PACE report is, according to O'Meara, "in the polishing stages."

The final version of the PACE report is 50 pages in length and is divided into six topical areas: the mission of the University, teaching, faculty, the student body, support systems (i.e., alumni relations), and a concluding summary.

These specific topics were included in the report because, in O'Meara's view, they "represented every aspect of the University." He added, "There has never been an operation on this campus that has received as much input as the PACE report."

Following a final committee meeting to complete its "polishing up," the long-awaited PACE report will be presented to the Board of Trustees at their meeting later this week for consideration.

General contradicts massacre testimony

JERUSALEM, (AP) — The Israeli military commander in Beirut indicated in testimony yesterday that Lebanese Christian militias were allowed to continue their sweep through Palestinian refugee camps long after suspicions of a slaughter had surfaced.

Brig. Gen. Amos Yaron's testifying before a special Israeli commission investigating the Sept. 16-18 massacre at the Sabra and Chatilla camps contradicted Defense Minister Ariel Sharon's account.

Yaron said he began receiving vague, fragmentary indications that something was amiss within hours of the Christians' entry into the camps in the afternoon of Sept. 16.

But he implied under questioning that permission to continue the slaughter was given by Chief of Staff Lt. Gen. Raphael Eytan at a meeting at 4 p.m. on Sept. 17 in Beirut.

Asked whether anyone spoke to the militiamen about how the operation was going, Yaron replied, "I believe the chief of staff even said some nice words to them about it."

Sharon told the commission Oct. 25 that the sweep of the refugee camps was ordered stopped immediately at midday on Sept. 17 — four hours before the meeting.

He said the militias, sent in to ferret out fugitive Palestine Liberation Organization guerrillas, were allowed to stay until 5 a.m. on Sept. 18 only to give them time to regroup and withdraw.

Yaron, however, said Eytan told the meeting that "the men of the Lebanese Forces will continue mopping-up operations in the empty camps south of the Fakhahani Quarter until Sept. 18 at 0500."

He said it was assumed the camps were empty because the civilians would most likely have fled when the militia operation began.

"At 11 o'clock we ordered a halt, and after this meeting (at 4 p.m.) with the chief of staff we continued," said Yaron.

"Does that mean you left the meeting with the feeling that the operation was resuming?" Supreme Court Justice Aharon Barak asked Yaron.

"Until Saturday morning," Yaron replied.

Yaron insisted he had no idea a massacre of hundreds of men, women and children had taken place until he heard about it from reporters.

But he indicated that from the outset there were fears there could be atrocities, because he warned the militiamen in blunt terms "not to harm the population or people who surrender." He said the militiamen promised to behave themselves.

Maj. Gen. Amir Drory, Israeli commander in Lebanon, has testified he also gained the impression at the 4 p.m. meeting that the operation might continue, but Yaron's came much closer to saying it was specifically ordered.

Prime Minister Menachem Begin is to testify in an open session today that will be broadcast by Israel Radio.

The prime minister, who has denied Israel had any responsibility for the massacre, is expected to be questioned on when he learned of the slaughter, and how the decision was made to permit the Lebanese Christian militias into the Palestinian camps.

For Plunge

Workshop prepares students

By PAT SAIN
News Staff

Urban plunge volunteers met yesterday in the library auditorium for a workshop designed to orient students to the plunge.

Angelo Capozzi, in charge of the workshop, began by noting that "We are faced with challenging urban problems in the cities," and that there is a lack of first-hand knowledge of these problems.

The purpose of the plunge, Capozzi said, is to give students an individual awareness of the problems that exist in the inner city.

The next speaker, Father Don McNeil, explained how the idea of the Urban Plunge began in 1967 when Monsignor John J. Egan invited a group of Notre Dame and Saint Mary's students to do a "plunge" in his parish in Chicago. Since then, there have been 12 Urban Plunges involving Notre Dame and Saint Mary's students.

McNeil, who is the director of the Center for Social Concerns, went on to say that "plunging" is basically jumping out of one's normal path, going to an "inner city," and then returning and reflecting on one's experiences. The reflection can be with a small group of other plungers, follow-up courses, or even a summer service project.

Egan, director of the Center for Pastoral and Social Ministry, gave a talk entitled "The Church in the City." He spoke about the many outstanding, loving people who work with the poor.

"You are privileged to be able to go on an Urban Plunge," Egan said. "You are going to come in contact with people who are giving it their all... giving of the widow's mite."

Speaking of his experiences with the poor, Egan stated that "I thought I was going (to the poor) to bring something — love, help...but Jesus was there long before me. Love was all over the place!"

The Urban Plunge will not allow students to shelter or feed people, Egan said. Instead, it will make one more responsive and open to the needs of the poor. "Hopefully the Urban Plunge will make you care a little more," Egan said, "to help you change your profession around to bring justice and to bring peace."

In his closing remarks, Egan said "I hope the ripple effect of these two days will not only extend down through your life, but will also extend to others."

Two Saint Mary's women assaulted

By TONI RUTHERFORD
Staff Reporter

Two Saint Mary's women were assaulted at knife point outside of McCandless Hall early Friday morning, according to Karen Croake Heisler, Saint Mary's Public Relations Officer. Neither student was injured.

Heisler reported that the assailant, described as a young black male, stepped from a bush at the side of the building, grabbed one of the victims and forced her to his car in McCandless lot. The other woman fled into the dorm, from where Saint Mary's Security and the Saint Joseph County Police Department were notified.

The car, identified as a green Dodge Charger with a stickshift, was driven from McCandless lot through the Lemans lot. Heisler stated that the victim was able to escape when the car was slowed to negotiate the curve by the west wing of Lemans Hall, between Lemans and O'Laughlin Auditorium, as reported by Public Relations.

Kathleen Rice, Dean of Students at Saint Mary's, was notified of the incident later Friday morning. "I would have been notified immediately if either of the women had been injured," said Rice. "I'm just glad they weren't, and I hope nothing like this occurs again."

Saint Mary's Security was unable to comment on the incident due to administrative policy.

Dr. Drago Kolar, distinguished visiting professor of metallurgical engineering and materials science at Notre Dame, will hold the Keating-Crawford Chair during his one-year stay. Kolar received his bachelor's and Ph.D. degrees from the University of Yugoslavia in Ljubljana. Upon leaving Notre Dame he will return to his professorship at Institute J. Stefan, Jamova, Yugoslavia. Kolar's teaching experiences include courses in technical ceramics and silicates, and courses in electronic components for electrical engineering faculty. His research work concerns the properties and high temperature synthesis of ceramic materials, with special interest in the synthesis and characterization of polycrystalline materials having special electrical properties. Notre Dame will be among the 375 universities and colleges across the nation participating in the second annual Convocation on Solutions to the Nuclear Arms Race on Tues., Nov. 11. The convocation is nationally sponsored by several organizations, including the Union of Concerned Scientists, the Lawyers Alliance for Nuclear Arms Control, Physicians for Social Responsibility, and the United Campuses to Prevent Nuclear War. Notre Dame also was a participant in last year's Convocation, in which less than half this year's institutions took part. Convocation events at Notre Dame will begin with a Mass for peace at 11:30 a.m. in Sacred Heart Church, Father Theodore M. Hesburgh, C.S.C., will be the chief celebrant. At 4:15 p.m., William O. McLean, concurrent associate professor and assistant dean of the University's Law School, will lecture in Room 101 of the Law School on his participation in the original Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty (SALT) talks as a naval member of the American delegation. Everett I. Mendelsohn, professor of the history of science at Harvard University, will deliver the main lecture of the day at 7:30 p.m. in the Memorial Library Auditorium. Mendelsohn, in addition to his international credentials as a historian of science, has been active in several peace-making enterprises, most notably those of the American Friends Service Committee. In 1979, he led a delegation of persons interested in disarmament and arms control to the Soviet Union for intensive discussions with government leaders. He has advised members of the United States Senate and the State Department on the prospects for SALT II ratification, Eurostrategic weaponry, and other arms control controversies. — The Observer

The Statue of Liberty will be closed to tourists for up to a year beginning in 1984 while workers repair its rusting framework and perhaps remove its raised arm and give it an overhaul. "We'll try to keep it closed for as short a time as possible," said David Moffitt, National Park Service superintendent of the statue at the gateway to New York harbor. He said the statue, which will be 100 years old in 1986, is "literally falling apart," but there is no danger to tourists. The statue's $25 million renovation will begin next fall and take two years. Tourists will be unable to visit until sometime in 1984. — AP

Reserve Officers Training Corps enrollment at Harvard is at its highest level since the program was forced off campus in 1969, and money is partly the reason. The ROTC students get no college credit for the classes. But the 72 Harvard undergraduates — up from 49 two years ago — do get government aid toward tuition. "Part of it is that tuition funding is getting more difficult, but it's also become more socially acceptable to be in the ROTC, more than it was in the early '70s," said Maj. Stephen Wallace, an Air Force instructor, in explaining the upswing in interest in ROTC. — AP

About 110 Cambodians were killed last week in a Vietnamese artillery attack on a village near the border with Cambodia, the English-language Bangkok Post reported yesterday. The newspaper said some survivors of the alleged attack reported suffering nausea, skin rashes and other symptoms similar to those of exposure to toxic bio-chemical weapons known here as "yellow rain." A United Nations team is in Thailand investigating reports that Vietnamese forces are using such weapons in Cambodia. Thai authorities and officials of international organizations were not available yesterday for comment on the alleged attack, which the newspaper said occurred in the village of Sok San, a center of Cambodian resistance against the Vietnamese-installed government of Heng Samrin. — AP

About 8,000 chili lovers from 32 states gathered at the ghost town of Terlingua, Texas to sample some of Texas' best red. Top honors at Saturday's 16th Annual Wick Fowler Memorial World Championship Chili Cookoff went to Tom Skipper of Pasadena, Texas, for his "Ol' Blue Chili." Katherine Schmidt of Kemah, Texas, won second place and Bob Ritchey of Garland, Texas, was third. Fowler and other chili lovers traveled to this abandoned mercury mining town in southwest Texas 16 years ago for the first chili cookoff. Now the event includes country music, tortilla throwing and wet T-shirt contests. Frank X. Tolbert, a Dallas restaurant owner, said some revelers apparently had too much fun. "Justice of the Peace Sadie Jo McKinney, the law south of Calamity Creek, reported that we had three arrests," he said. "Two for fighting and one for mooning." — AP

The Human Cost

"Sixteen hours ago an American airplane dropped one bomb on Hiroshima...The force from which the sun draws its power has been loosed against those who brought war to the Far East." — President Harry S. Truman, Aug. 6, 1945

With those words President Truman ushered in the atomic age, an age of fear and uncertainty. It was a while before the massive human suffering that took place at Hiroshima and Nagasaki could be totaled up; but when it was, people found it profoundly disturbing.

The natural reaction to the horror stories was to push them to the back of the mind, forget and go on with the details of life. While it is a natural reaction, it is a dangerous one. The human destruction that remained after the bombs were dropped 37 years ago is an important reminder of what the arms race is truly all about. To forget brings man closer to acceptance of nuclear arms, and closer to another conflagration.

The potential for human suffering is forgotten as the arms race is discussed in more antiseptic terms...counterforce, countervalue, throw weight, tactical weapons, strategic weapons, etc.

This talk is peppered with numbers, such as the amount of weapons, the amount of warheads on those weapons and the window of vulnerability.

Perhaps the most useless figures are that the United States and Russia today have the equivalent of one million Hiroshima bombs, or four tons of TNT for every man, woman and child on Earth. Those numbers are too abstract...no one can imagine the power contained there, let alone the human suffering that would take place if some of those arms were used.

Through all of this the human cost is the bottom line. Beneath all of the strategies and numbers lies the undeniable fact that man will suffer immensely if nuclear weapons are ever used. Yet even that statement is inadequate to describe what lies ahead if nuclear arms become an accepted fact of life.

The citizens of Hiroshima can say all of this a lot better than I can.

A report issued recently by Common Cause, a lobbying group, included interviews with survivors of the blast. Shigeko Sasori, who was 13 at the time the bomb was dropped on her hometown, said "I feel the reason why I lived — I feel that all the people who died from the atomic bomb — and not just from the atomic bomb, who died from the war — their spirits are telling me to tell the people who have never experienced war...that I have a mission to tell and show what happened. That's why I lived."

That sense of mission was seen last spring during Congressional hearings on the Kennedy-Hatfield nuclear freeze proposal when survivors described the effects of the bombing at Hiroshima.

Mitsuo Tomosawa recalled that just after the bomb was dropped, "All through the day, morning to evening, people came walking, and all these people, most of them were naked, some of them you couldn't even recognize whether they were a man or a woman or — practically all of them were walking with their hands extended — their arms extended, their hands hanging down — and their knees slightly bent, almost on tiptoes. Large blisters on their bodies, with some fluid moving in their blisters. Staring ahead."

Kimuko Laskey told the committee that after she had crawled to a hospital "three of four doctors got together and cleaned me up, took the pieces of glass out, and they decided to sew up my face. Then they warned me, 'We don't have anesthetic and no special equipment.' I told them just to leave me alone. But they said if I didn't let them do it, I would be sorry afterward — if I survived. So they started sewing my face with a very heavy needle. I was screaming all the time, asking them to kill me or to please leave me alone..."

As disturbing as this testimony is, these are recollections that should not be forgotten. George Santayana's adage that "Those who cannot remember the past are condemned to repeat it" holds true. If the horrors of nuclear war are forgotten, nuclear war becomes more probable. The talk of the possibility of a limited nuclear war in Europe and the drawing up of civil defense evacuation plans should be frightening, not reassuring developments.

In addition to the testimony of survivors, other reminders are possible. Perhaps the leaders of the world should gather at a summit meeting once a year at Hiroshima or Nagasaki to recall the hell that ripped through those cities in August, 1945. It also has been suggested that world leaders assemble to observe the detonation of a nuclear bomb, to see for themselves the fury that underlies their global chess game.

If nothing else, leaders, as well as responsible citizens must keep in mind the human factor in that chess game. The human suffering in the event of a nuclear war is all but unimaginable save for the testimony of the Japanese survivors. That testimony is extremely important, for it gives some hint of the incredible human cost of nuclear war.

Watergate reunion

Nixon promotes latest book

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former President Richard Nixon hobnobbed at a soiree with old staffers and plugged his latest book on the talk show circuit this weekend, in a rare break from his post-Watergate seclusion.

The Saturday get-together was held in honor of the 10th anniversary this week of Nixon's reelection, which garnered the biggest presidential electoral vote landslide in American history.

In attendance: Nixon's former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, former Attorney General John Mitchell, former press secretary Ron Ziegler and counselor Charles Colson, among others.

The 37th president of the United States, the only chief executive to resign from office, refused to talk to reporters at the reunion dinner with his former aides. But Nixon was more chatty in his talk show appearances, where he discussed his latest book, "Leaders," and offered President Reagan advice on a variety of domestic and foreign topics.

On the Middle East, Nixon sharply criticized Israel's decision to increase its settlements on the West Bank.

"Those settlements are inconsistent with (U.N.) Resolution 242," he said in an interview broadcast Saturday on the Cable News Network. "They're inconsistent with the whole spirit of the Camp David business... They cannot be tolerated...."

"In the interest of Israel and their future, we've got to do something very positive and very direct with regard to Begin on this particular issue," said Nixon, although he did not say what steps he would take if he were still president.

Turning to the election, Nixon discounted the Democratic gains scored last Tuesday.

"It was a defeat. We would have preferred that it had been better. But with 10 percent unemployment, the Democrats expected, and perhaps rightfully so, that they would be having a great victory. But instead of getting a knockout, all they got was a split decision."

Following the interview, Nixon reportedly carried the theme of his book on international figures, "Leaders," to the reunion dinner at a Washington hotel ballroom later that night. The guest list read like a

Who's Who from the Watergate era.

Reporters were barred from the gala. But asked afterward what Nixon said at the dinner, his brother Edward replied: "He was looking at the future, as he has been doing lately a great deal. He expressed a hope for the people who were here that there are a lot of us who can still have a role of leadership."

Those closest to Nixon, presidential chief of staff H.R. Haldeman, and chief domestic adviser John Ehrlichman, did not attend. But Kissinger arrived after the meal to mingle with Ziegler, Colson, Nixon's longtime secretary Rose Mary Woods and others.

600 at SMC fast for World Hunger

By Gail Kraft
News Staff

This week over 600 Saint Mary's students have agreed to forfeit their meals on Nov. 18 to support the "Fast for a World Harvest" which marks a key event in Hunger Awareness Week.

The fast will begin Wednesday evening with a prayer service at 9 in the Saint Mary's Club House. During meals on Thursday group meetings focusing on world hunger will be held as well as additional prayer services. The fast will conclude Thursday evening with mass and a light dinner of soup and bread.

Observance of the fast will be not only by residential students but by the staff, administration, faculty as well as nonresidential students.

Students may sign up to participate in the fast until Nov. 9 in the campus ministry office, at hall meetings, during meals and at liturgies. SAGA's part in the Fast will be a monetary donation to the Saint Mary's Hunger Coalition who will in turn distribute the money to Oxfam America, local food banks and the Sisters of the Holy Cross.

Banker focuses on effects of Reaganomics

By CANDACE GRIFFIN

A leading financial analyst focused on Reaganomics in a lecture Friday asking the rhetorical question: "Will the Gipper have another chance?"

Leland S. Prussia, Chairman of the Board of Bank of America Corporation, spoke on global banking at the Library Auditorium, recreating post World War II events and the regrowth period to the present.

One of the main points discussed was that of unemployment. Prussia stated in jest that Reagan admits being responsible for only two who are unemployed: "Richard Allen and Alexander Haig."

Another topic discussed was the effects of world trade, particularly Opec Oil, to the economy. The oil crises of 1973 and 1979 sent bursts of inflation which demanded government response, Prussia said. Thus, many countries have kept foreign goods out of their economies — a tactic which has proved self-destructive.

Prussia also made key points about the positive and negative aspects of Reaganomics. He reviewed the promised programs that put Reagan in office and noted that twenty months later our economy is in the midst of recession.

Prussia admitted there is "no quick fix" for the problems. He believes that a way to start would be by restructuring our current tax program, focusing on industries on incline. He would then move to restructure the social security and other health programs. Also, he would cut back on defense spending and stimulate public and private spending.

He remained after his lecture to answer questions and was presented a plaque of appreciation from Ellery Lindquist of the Finance Club. An informal reception followed at the Morris Inn.

Fall day

High school seniors visit SMC

By SANDY VALENZUELA
Staff Reporter

High school seniors gained an inside view of Saint Mary's College during yesterday's Fall Day on Campus.

One-hundred and fifty prospective Saint Mary's students from across the midwest visited the campus for the second annual Fall Day. The purpose of Fall Day is to familiarize high school seniors and their parents with Saint Mary's through programs that focus on different facets of the college experience.

The seniors were welcomed in the early morning and given a chance to see the school as its students see it. Personalized tours of the campus were available, and students and their parents had the opportunity to discuss their concerns about college with members of the faculty and administration.

"A chance to see what you can't read about at Saint Mary's," said Joan Imler, Chairman of Fall Day on Campus, is the reason Fall Day has become an annual event.

Angie VanOverbergh, a prospective student from South Bend, described her Fall Day experience as "an opportunity to look around and know the people a little bit."

The day began with registration and an informal get-together in LeMans Hall. A mass in the Church of Loretto came next. Then the seniors were formally welcomed in Carroll Hall by Dr. William Hickey, Vice President and Dean of Faculty; Mary Ann Rowan, Director of Admission; and Mary Beth Dvorak, 1980 graduate. An Admissions and Career Development Workshop also was held.

After lunch, students had the opportunity to meet with the academic departments, abroad program representatives, campus ministry, residence life and student activities, financial aid, and the admissions staff.

Later in the day, sports exhibitions were presented in Angela Athletic Facility. Art demonstrations were held in Moreau Hall.

New activities for Fall Day included "Involvement at Saint Mary's" which helped students who had attended the Spring Day last semester in their particular major. The day concluded with an informal question and answer period for parents with representatives from admissions and current students.

Their daughters, meanwhile, attended a Student Life presentation with Mary Anne O'Donnell, Director of Student Activities, and a panel of current students.

The event helped students in their decisions to attend Saint Mary's. A senior from Mother McCauley High School in Illinois said, "I had never been here before, so I got to see the school. I liked walking around and looking at the school...If I get accepted, I'll probably go here because I liked it."

Students received notification of Fall Day from Office of Admission mailings and through recruitment at area high schools. Students expressing an interest in Saint Mary's were encouraged to come.

According to Imler, more students attended Fall Day this year than last. "A lot of times this was their initial contact with the school," she said. Fall Day is designed for seniors. A Spring Day is held for juniors during the second semester.

"A lot of times the reason for deciding on a college is the campus visit," reports Imler. After all, she explains, "seeing is believing."

Soviets celebrate Revolution Day

MOSCOW, (AP) — The Soviet Union rolled a brawny display of military hardware through Red Square yesterday in Revolution Day festivities. President Leonid I. Brezhnev said should "cool the hot heads of some imperialist politicians."

Soviet generals displayed two weapons never before seen at the parade — an improved surface-to-air missile and an updated armored personnel carrier reportedly in use against Moslem insurgents in Afghanistan. Hundreds of thousands of Muscovites jammed the cobblestone square to watch the show in 21-degree cold and brilliant sunshine.

Defense Minister Marshal Dmitri F. Ustinov, 74, presided over the military ceremonies marking the 65th anniversary of the Bolshevik Revolution, which led to the founding of the Soviet state. He stood beside the 75-year-old Brezhnev atop the red marble mausoleum of revolutionary leader Vladimir I. Lenin.

Ustinov and Brezhnev both denounced the United States in tough speeches that showed no sign of easing the Kremlin's anti-American rhetoric.

Addressing troops massed on Red Square, Ustinov said the Soviet Union is aware that "The aggressive forces of imperialism, primarily the U.S.A., have led the intensity of their military preparations to an unusual level, are fanning the flames of armed conflicts in different regions of the world, and irresponsibly are threatening to use nuclear weapons."

Afterwards, at a Kremlin reception attended by U.S. Ambassador Arthur A. Hartman, Brezhnev warned:

"We shall do the utmost to see to it that those who like military ventures should never take the land of the Soviets unaware, that the potential aggressor should know: a crushing retaliatory strike will inevitably be in for him. Our might and vigilance will cool, I think, the hot heads of some imperialist politicians."

Neither Brezhnev or Ustinov explicitly mentioned President Reagan in their remarks, however. They also reiterated Soviet intentions to seek negotiated arms reductions.

Brezhnev said, "The Soviet Union will continue persistently fighting for detente, for disarmament. We shall be building up efforts to avert the threat of a nuclear war."

The government newspaper Investia also printed a message Reagan sent to Brezhnev, which read: "On the occasion of the national holiday of the Soviet Union, I would like to convey congratulations on behalf of the American people to the people of the Soviet Union. The United States will continue to work in the name of peace and relations with the Soviet Union, which are based on

On student attitudes

More Society sponsors survey

By JOE INCARDONA
News Staff

One of the common complaints Notre Dame students make is that they are rarely asked for their opinions about issues that affect their academic and social lives. This is one of the reasons that the Notre Dame chapter of the Thomas More Society is sponsoring a student attitude survey as part of a larger worldwide survey conducted by the Institute for University Cooperation.

This survey, known as UNIV '83, is part of an annual series of surveys the Institute distributes to 450 universities in 40 countries through volunteer organizations like the Thomas More Society. According to More Society President Gerald Wegemer, the survey is designed "to find general patterns in student decisions about career choices" by examining students' academic programs.

"We got involved in this sort of by chance," Wegemer said. "We've been interested in this type of thing, especially since one of the major functions of the More Society is to study how education contributes to career decisions."

The student group will be interviewing as many Notre Dame students as possible in the next few weeks. Those students contacted will be asked to complete a short survey consisting of questions that focus on "the efforts students are making to prepare for a future career." The survey includes broad questions about the student's educational values and how they are affected by career choice, and also more specific questions about Notre Dame as an academic institution.

"It's a great way to get a very good idea of student opinions around the world," said Wegemer of the survey. "It's especially important to us here at Notre Dame because we're becoming more and more like the European universities."

The study has arrived at some interesting results in its twelve years of operation. Each year the Institute of University Cooperation studies a different aspect of student life. Last year's survey examined "the role of moral, cultural and social values in studies," and resulted in some significant findings. About half of the students polled last year, for example, believed in limiting their college academic program to an emphasis on technical competence and career training. This seems to indicate the view expressed by last year's students was that of "people whose studies are motivated by self-development rather than social causes," according to the survey report.

On campus, Wegemer said that the More society will contribute their results to the U.S. National Committee of the I.U.C. The committee will then choose student representatives from all over the U.S. to present the national findings this spring at the Institute's annual convention in Rome. Students interested in attending the conference will probably have to write an essay explaining their interest in the Institute's work, according to Wegemer, and will then be chosen through a general selection process.

Pope John Paul II was one of the principal speakers at last year's UNIV conference in Rome. In his address to the more than 5000 student representatives participating in the Congress, the Pope spoke of a "lucid cynicism" which prevents some students from becoming aware of the broad scope of a liberal education. He also warned that the desire of men to lead a "fuller and truer" life often "becomes spoiled even in young people, degenerating into revolt and desperate violence, or wearing itself out in foolish ambitions."

Space shuttle begins commercial flights

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — With a predawn "call to stations," test conductor Andy Brown yesterday started the countdown for space shuttle Columbia's first satellite-carrying commercial flight, set for a fiery liftoff Thursday.

The count began on schedule at 3 a.m. when Brown summoned more than 50 technicians and engineers to their consoles in the launch control center three miles from the steel and concrete pad where Columbia is perched.

The four astronauts who will man the shuttle on its first operational mission were at the Johnson Space Center in Houston, concluding months of training. They are Vance Brand, the commander; pilot Robert Overmyer and mission specialists William Lenoir and Joseph Allen.

Brand will captain the largest crew ever to be launched into space in a single ship. They are to fly here tomorrow to make final preparations for launch, scheduled for 7:19 a.m. Thursday.

The early part of the count proceeded smoothly as Columbia's electrical power was switched on and the 60-foot-long cargo bay doors were closed, sealing inside the two 7,200 pound communications satellites that are the shuttle's first commercial payloads.

Satellite Business Systems of McLean, Va., and Telesat of Canada are the first in a long line of customers who will pay to have their payloads carried into orbit by the shuttle. They each have paid the National Aeronautics and Space Administration $10 million for hauling up the two $30 million satellites.

It will be the responsibility of Lenoir and Allen to monitor the health of the satellites in the bay, conduct a 90-minute countdown for each and activate the spring devices that fling them out of the bay and into their own orbits.

The SBS satellite is to be ejected Thursday, just eight hours into the flight. The Canadian payload is to be released Friday.

On Sunday, Lenoir and Allen are to take the first space walks in the shuttle program and the first by American astronauts in nearly nine years. They are to spend 3 hours in the open cargo bay, testing the space suits, airlock chamber and other systems that support such activity. They'll also evaluate tools and techniques for future crews who will perform construction or repair assignments outside the ship.

Columbia is to return to Earth on Tuesday, landing at dawn on a desert runway at Edwards Air Force Base in California.

mutual restraint and respect of principles of international rights."

Fifteen types of weapons, including six kinds of missiles, thundered across the cobblestone square. At the end of the 45-minute military show, floats carrying huge portraits of Lenin and Brezhnev rolled through, followed by crowds of banner-waving and placard-carrying citizens. Below the Brezhnev portrait were the words: "We are setting two tasks: the welfare of the people and firm peace."

Besides Brezhnev and Ustinov, other members of the ruling Politburo standing on the review stand included Yuri V. Andropov and Konstantin U. Chernenko. They are widely regarded as contenders for the presidency if Brezhnev, whose health is declining, should die or become incapacitated. Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko, Viktor V. Grishin and Mikhail S. Gorbachev were also present.

Physicist describes neuron learning

By AMY STEPHAN
News Staff

Individual cells may be capable of learning, according to a Nobel Prize physicist. By understanding how these individual cells learn and interact, one might be better able to understand human learning and memory.

Leon N. Cooper discussed these ideas in a public lecture Friday entitled "How Neurons Might Learn." In his talk Cooper discussed his work in trying to understand the central nervous system and the brain.

Cooper used the example of a card game to demonstrate how the human brain differs from a computer. He said that computers must have each step of a "thought process" programmed in order to reach a logical conclusion, while the human brain can sometimes skip intermediate steps and quickly assess a given situation, such as a game of cards.

Cooper proposed that a cellular learning mechanism might be partially responsible for this difference.

Using data from research on the visual cortical cells, Cooper explained how individual cells might learn. Cooper noted that each cell sees different things and acts accordingly.

He said that this is a simple form of learning. Using this and similar research, Cooper stated that it might be possible to construct a theory that explains how cells learn.

Cooper later spoke about the process of language acquisition. He contended that the theory that humans have a built-in capacity for natural language is not sufficiently backed by evidence.

Instead, he proposed that the process of learning a language is a trial and error procedure in which the child seeks to be understood by others. If others cannot understand the child's speech, the child will alter his speech pattern until the idea is understood. The child uses rules of grammar and syntax in order to be understood, even though he or she is unaware that such rules exist.

Although his current research centers on biological mechanisms that underly learning and memory, Cooper received the Nobel prize in 1972 for his theory of superconductivity. He has received numerous honorary degrees and other awards.

'City in the sky'

Soviet Union builds rocket for space station

MOSCOW, (AP) — The Soviet Union is building the world's most powerful space rocket and plans to test it next year, according to authoritative sources here. The rocket would be used in 1985 to hurl into orbit the 110-ton core of a massive manned space station.

The sources — all of them involved in the Soviet space program — provided a rough outline, and a few details, of a project that dwarfs anything that has been approved for the U.S. National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

It's not all secret. Soviet officials won't officially acknowledge that they are developing the monster rocket, code named "G." But they speak openly of their concept for Cosmograd — or "city in the sky."

It would be occupied year in, year out, by rotating crews of medical researchers, astronomers, workers making pure drugs and materials, satellite repairmen and military astronauts reconnoitering the globe and manning space weapons.

Some would inhabit this weightless world for perhaps years in long-term research projects. Others would man high-technology construction crews, assembling manned and unmanned rockets destined for the planets and other parts of the solar system.

The sources, who asked to remain unidentified, provided these statistics: it will stand more than 300 feet tall, generated about 11 million pounds of liftoff thrust and will be able to hoist more than 300,000 pounds into orbit.

The largest rocket ever launched successfully was America's Saturn 5, which was retired after propelling American astronauts to the moon. It generated 7.5 million pounds of thrust and could carry more than 200,000 pounds into space.

"The plan calls for a series of test flights leading to an operational launch of the new rocket after two years," said an official who asked not to be identified.

He said the goal is to launch a 220,000-pound cylindrical station in 1985 and to initially have 10 to 12 people on board, conducting scientific and defense assignments. American military analysts are concerned the station could serve as a launching platform for satellite-destroying laser weapons.

The U.S. Air Force and National Aeronautics and Space Administration would dearly love to build a large space station but so far have received only a vague commitment from the Reagan administration and a few million dollars to continue studies.

Six miles

Iranian forces push into Iraq

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) — Iranian forces punched six miles across the border yesterday in their second invasion of Iraq in four months, Iran's Parliament speaker said.

The speaker, Hashemi Rafsanjani, told a news conference the invasion force reached Tib, an Iraqi town of 3,000, and an adjacent town, which he did not name. A producing oil-field also lies in that area of Iraq, 170 miles southeast of Baghdad.

Asked whether the Iranian military might drive toward the Iraqi capital, Rafsanjani replied: "we will not limit ourselves... we won't finish until they meet our conditions."

The white-turbaned Moslem clergyman reiterated those peace conditions: withdrawal of Iraqi forces from Iranian soil, payment of reparations to Iran, and "punishment" of Iraqi President Saddam Hussein.

Rafsanjani, one of Iran's most powerful leaders, represents revolutionary patriarch Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini on the Supreme Defense Council.

There was no immediate comment from Iraq on Rafsanjani's report. If true, it is Iran's second invasion of Iraq in their 25-month-old border war. In July, the Iranians attacked across the southern end of the frontier and stormed toward Basra, Iraq's second-largest city, but they were driven back in heavy fighting.

The new operation extends the Muharram offensive begun last Monday — named for the current month of mourning in Iran's Moslem calendar. The Iranians said they recaptured 210 square miles of Iraqi-held Iranian territory in the first days of the offensive that took them to the Hamrain mountain heights at the border, overlooking Tib and other towns and roads on the broad Iraqi plain.

On Saturday, Iranian authorities permitted foreign reporters to visit the highest point on the Hamrain mountain ridge line, a 4,600-foot hill called Hill 400. Reporters found Iran's Revolutionary Guard militiamen in firm control, with a commanding line of fire over Tib.

Iraq had claimed it repulsed the Muharram offensive, but the reporters saw no evidence of Iraqi resistance to the Iranian drive. The journalists did not view areas of the front north and south of Hill 400, however.

Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency said the latest operation was launched at 11:15 p.m. (EDT), but the agency's first reports did not say the Iranians had entered Iraq. It said Iranian forces inflicted "heavy casualties" on the Iraqis, captured 1,000, shot down an Iraqi jetfighter, seized 62 Iraqi tanks and destroyed 75.

The Iranians do not report their own casualties. They claim to have killed or wounded 4,000 Iraqis in the first five days of the offensive.

The Muharram operation is believed to have left the Iraqis with less than 100 square miles of Iranian territory — in small pockets along the 300-mile border warfront.

On economy, defense

New Senate to challenge Reagan

WASHINGTON, (AP) — Most of the faces will be the same, but the Senate convening next year will be feistier and more likely to challenge President Reagan on both economic and defense issues.

The new Senate will have 54 Republicans and 46 Democrats, same as the current lineup.

But the numerical outcome of last week's election masks underlying factors which will partially close the Senate as the safe harbor for Reagan's program of continued cuts in the federal budget and steady increases in Pentagon spending.

Sen. Bill Bradley of New Jersey, vice chairman of the Senate Democratic Campaign Committee, said the election "augurs well for a quite different Senate. The moderate Republicans just elected and more moderate Republicans up in 1984 will not go in lockstep" with Reagan's conservative economic policies.

Already, Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker has indicated he will support public jobs legislation and reductions in the American military buildup which Reagan is certain to oppose vigorously.

Baker aide Tom Griscom said the senator spoke after the election with Republicans who were re-elected, including conservatives, who said Congress must produce jobs legislation to ease the 10.4 percent unemployment rate.

There also will be Republican proposals to reduce defense spending, Griscom said.

"They (Republicans) are not deserting the president," he said.

"But there will be some modifications to his program."

The Democratic campaign committee chairman, Sen. Wendell Ford of Kentucky, said of the 33 Senate elections that some races won by Republicans were so close the Democrats "came within a whisper" of retaking Senate control, which they lost in 1980.

Eighteen Democrats were re-elected to the Senate and almost all of them won big, although many opposed Reagan's legislative proposals.

Moreover, six of the Republican incumbents, mainly in the Midwest, were returned by extremely slim margins of one or two percentage points. In all six races, Democratic opponents made Reaganomics an issue in the campaign.

A good example is incumbent GOP Sen. John Chafee of Rhode Island. He put as much distance between himself and Reagan as he could, but nonetheless is still awaiting the final count of absentee ballots to assure his re-election.

Those re-elected Republicans, plus another eight moderate GOP senators whose terms expire in 1984, are likely to weave an independent course over the next two years, which may or may not parallel Reagan's agenda.

There also are at least eight senators who are certain or possible presidential candidates in 1984, among them Democrats Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts, just re-elected; John Glenn of Ohio; Gary Hart of Colorado; Alan Cranston of California; and Republicans Baker of Tennessee and Bob Dole of Kansas.

periences. After the slide presentation, Lisa Madlinger and Roger Keating, two students who have already gone on Urban Plunges, gave a short talk on their experiences.

Comparing the plunge into the inner city as a plunge into a pool, Keating said, "A couple of you on the plunge will really get wet, and find a place for urban ministry in your life. Most of you will dry off, but have a sympathy for those who are wet."

Keating also urged the plungers to "keep a journal...before you go, write down all of your biases, and your expectations — and leave them there." One needs an open mind, he said, to accept the new ideas that are to be found on an Urban Plunge.

Madlinger gave a detailed account of her Plunge experiences, including trips to a home for juvenile delinquents and the Cook County Hospital.

Evident in all of the places she visited, Madlinger said, "were people who were dedicated to their work with the poor, and happy doing it. It is hard to keep a distance from such an experience."

Kelly Johnson, a freshman, said that she is going on the Plunge because she feels that something is missing in her education, and she wants to broaden her mind — to see what was going on in the "inner city."

Although 300 students were expected, only 250 students have signed up this year for the Plunge. McNeil attributed this to the short Christmas break this year (the Urban Plunge takes place over Christmas break), and to the possibility that Notre Dame might have a bowl game this year.

10-day tour

Pope concludes Spain tour

BARCELONA, Spain, (AP) — A baggy-eyed Pope John Paul II, speaking near the end of a grueling 10-day Spain tour, called yesterday for urgent action to end the world recession and for a new economic order based on business-labor cooperation.

"The state cannot resign itself to support unemployment forever," the pontiff declared under rainy skies in Barcelona, Spain's second-largest city. "Creation of new jobs must constitute an economic and political priority."

After a morning visit to the mountaintop monastery of Montserrat, the pontiff was driven to this industrial center of Spain's northeast Catalonia region and said noon prayers at the spectacular but unfinished Church of the Holy Family.

In the afternoon, he spoke to an audience on the grounds of the city's 1929 international exhibition and celebrated mass in Barcelona's new soccer arena.

John Paul, who in eight days has trekked to 14 Spanish cities and towns, looked tired and drawn. Large bags hung under his eyes, his expression was glazed and a bump had appeared on his forehead.

Church officials declined to say what the swelling was. But they told reporters that when the tour ends tomorrow, the pontiff will retire to Castel Gondolfo, his retreat south of Rome, for a few days' rest.

In his speech to an audience in Barcelona's hillside Montjuic district, John Paul urged workers and business leaders to work together to reduce unemployment. The jobless rate in Spain is 14.6 percent of the work force.

"The means for solution to this serious problem demand a revision of the economic order as a whole," the pope said. "In difficult and painful times ... you cannot abandon workers to their lot, especially those who like the poor and the immigrants, only have their arms to support themselves."

In an apparent criticism of the radical left, John Paul spoke of what he called the "important need to overcome the unnatural and illogical antagonism between capital and work, a conflict which has been artificially fanned by the programmed class struggle"

The pope's speech on labor — employer relations reiterated many of the ideas he promulgated in his 1981 encyclical on work.

But he made no mention of Solidarity, the outlawed independent labor union in his homeland, Poland. Underground Solidarity leaders opposed to Poland's martial-law regime have called for strikes on Wednesday, the second anniversary of the union's certification by Poland's Supreme Court.

Driving back to Barcelona, well-wishers showered John Paul with confetti and cheered as he arrived at the Church of the Holy Family.

The structure was begun in 1883 by the eccentric Catalan architect Antonio Gaudi, who did not believe in keeping blueprints. Gaudi was killed in a traffic accident in 1926 and the church was never finished.

Falwell cited

Homosexuals fight religious bias

INDIANAPOLIS, (AP) — Homosexuality doesn't conflict with Christian principles, but it may still take decades to bring gay rights out of the closet and into the church, says the head of the largest gay and lesbian civil rights organization in the country.

Virginia M. Apuzzo, executive director of the National Gay Task Force, accused fundamentalist religious groups like the Moral Majority of exploiting public misconceptions and contributing to the hatred and violence against homosexuals.

"(Moral Majority leader) Jerry Falwell takes fear and ignorance and uses it to target a group — create pain for a group — while he fills his coffers," Ms. Apuzzo told a news conference here Saturday.

But she said such groups haven't been able to retard the progress of gay rights legislation.

"Gays will eventually be accepted because we're not just in San Francisco or Greenwich Village (in New York City). We're also in the heartland of America — each town and village. We're janitors and Ph.Ds. We're your daughters and brothers and neighbors with enormous contributions to make," she said.

A bill which would make it illegal to discriminate on the basis of sexual preference is gaining congressional support, she said.

Falwell could not be reached for comment yesterday.

Ms. Apuzzo said there are 20 million homosexual Americans making up 10 percent of the country's population and facing grave challenges.

"The most serious lack of freedom is the alienation from friends and family and seclusion in fear," she said.

She said the media and law enforcement agencies tend to encourage the notion of gays as a criminal subculture or an undesirable segment of society.

Ms. Apuzzo was in Indianapolis to attend the first anniversary celebration of Dignity Central Indiana, which has encouraged homosexuals to attend church.

"Our concept is that of a living, inclusive church that's responsive to growth," she told reporters at Saint Aquinas Catholic Church center. The church began encouraging homosexual Catholics to attend its services about two years ago.

"In the Old Testament, there are severe injunctions against such things as inhospitality and men cutting their hair. The New Testament is a message of love and that's where Dignity seeks to participate," she said.

With riddles Chrysler scholarships

By DAN MCCULLOUGH
News Staff

A new calendar is available in the bookstore that can do more than just tell the date. It could pay a student's tuition and provide him the use of a Chrysler automobile for a year, providing he is clever enough to determine the riddle hidden somewhere in its pages.

The Chrysler Corporation's most recent promotion is looking for the student with initiative to figure out the riddle. Questions covering many areas including music, mathematics, literature, and even computer science provide the clues to be used to solve the puzzle.

The first five college students to solve the riddle will be awarded a $5000 scholarship along with the use of a Chrysler car for one year by the Chrysler Corporation.

The calendar presently is available in only a few university bookstores around the country.

The promotion is being called an innovative move by Chrysler. It is the first of its kind in that it is geared toward college-aged consumers as opposed to previously favored 35-and-older car buyers, according to Lon Hurwiz of the promotions department at Chrysler.

Calendars are being sold at the bookstore and will continue to be sold until five winners have been found.

It all comes down to . . .

"It all comes down to money." This statement quoted in the Wednesday, 10/13 Observer article on the Ellerbe architecture seems simplistic.

William J. Witt

Guest Columnist

Good money can be put into a great design and produce not a "spectacular building" but a masterpiece of good architecture. The same amount of money can be put into an inferior design and produce mediocrity at best and an architectural abortion at worst. (As for not building "monuments" the fact is that just about every one is a monument of some donor's generosity. Would they not prefer to have good or superior designed buildings?)

Fortunately, Ellerbe hasn't produced any abortions on campus. But then they haven't come up with any masterpieces during the thirty years' monopoly of construction dollars, dollars which run to well over two hundred million.

Mediocrity seems to be their speciality.

Basically only four factors make the difference between mediocrity and masterpiece — and not one of them is money. They are:

1. A profound understanding of the human function for which the building is being built. Since "form follows function," a comprehensive open to input and criticism is essential. Architects have been known to have blind spots.

2. Good basic design — nothing can substitute for it nor remedy a bad design.

3. Honest materials, honestly used, with recognition that proper orientation to the sun and the site are essential to good architecture — since they are part of what you build with.

4. Attention to detail at all stages, in design, in location, in construction and decoration. Rooms without windows or with low ceilings that create conditions conducive to claustrophobia and depression are cruel and violate the basic principles of good human architecture.

The essential element in these four factors is not a maximum of money but a maximum of intelligence and creative imagination. A bit of humility to free us to consider various options is also helpful.

The engineering competence of Ellerbe may be a fact (although a $100,000 repair bill on a new building does raise questions), but it is obvious to all that their design department is short of aesthetic intelligence, if not destitute of creative imagination. With the exception of the first and second floors of the Memorial Library, and of the Snite Museum which Professor Richardson designed, the Ellerbe buildings on campus reveal an innocence of artistic sophistication that is unbelievable at this time and place in history.

To call the student rooms of Fisher Hall, for instance, or the corridors and classrooms of O'Shaughnessy "Spartan" is to do the Greeks an injustice. They would have demanded some grace and comfort for the human psyche and spaces in proper proportion for the human body. Eight-foot ceilings may be acceptable in a kindergarten or grade school. In a university where each generation of students is taller than the last it is without justification. It is short-sighted to say the least. How different from the generous designs of Father Sorin and the ante- Ellerbe builders!

To aim at "not producing sore thumbs" is a totally negative goal for a construction programme. It's an old axiom: "You usually get something below what you aim at." The fact of the matter is: not only have "sore thumbs" been produced but a generation of "sore persons." Persons hurting because they must live and work in buildings that take little account of the psychological and aesthetic need of the people they are supposed to serve. Persons who are sore, angry, because of the cavalier treatment they perceive when they try to have some input into the design of places that profoundly affect their lives, such as the new Faculty Office Building.

The 19th Century factory comes to mind — where the owner determined the conditions under which the employee labored.

The greatest asset of the university is the competent, gifted and devoted faculty. To alienate even a part of this asset is to pay dearly for the architectural sore thumbs. This may not reflect an autocratic policy, latent or manifest, but where is the collegial spirit recommended by Vatican II?

"It all comes down to money." C'est trop facile! What of priorities? The plea that the needs of the faculty and students must be fitted to the donors' needs to designate the particular buildings they will sponsor seems a classic case of the tail wagging the dog. Where is the donors' dedication? Is it to a science building, an athletic facility, or to the University of Notre Dame? What is the function of leadership? Is it not to interpret the needs and priorities of the University to alumni and other benefactors? Would not a donor be as happy to have their name on a first class Center for the Performing Arts as on a Museum for the works of artists long dead?

The Church has ever recognized that the arts are a created participation in the creative power of God, special gifts given to the few for the benefit of the whole community. As such they are instruments of great and subtle power for communicating the divine and humane values Christ gave us for the building of a better world.

What priority do music and drama, rhetoric and debate, receive here?

Is debate even welcome?

The remodeling of Washington Hall is short-changed while millions are poured into a mammoth uninspired science hall. Neither money nor time is the bottom line. Oberlin College, for instance, while nine years older than Notre Dame has but half the endowment of this great university, yet its Music School makes Notre Dame's admirable and even flawless musical efforts look like "a service department for ceremonial events," to quote a faculty member.

Over the years millions of dollars have gone to Ellerbe in fees. If "it all comes down to money," could not this money be put into creating an Architecture Department at the University that would be equal to designing and supervising all University construction? The mechanics, viz., electric, plumbing, air-conditioning, etc., could be entrusted to the University's excellent engineering departments. Such a cooperative program between departments could produce a process of learning-by-doing that would be most effective. Such a process is not uncommon in major industries and has the advantage of proximately preparing the students with real experience for the available jobs.

In such a program the students, supervised and continually monitored by their professional architecture and engineering instructors, could produce some extraordinarily fine design. Certainly they could match some of Ellerbe's efforts, e.g., Pasquerilla Hall where some students have said they feel like "they are living in a hospital," or "like they are living in a prison."

If a building does not function to make people happy when they live or work in it, it is not "cheap" regardless of how much money was saved on it. The bottom line is not the dollar sign, but the human cost.

"It all comes down to money." Is that why Mestrovic's Moses has been displaced and the modern symbol of the golden calf, the Wall Street trading post erected in his place in the heart of the Library?

Clutter, visual shouting in a place where there was serenity, space, and peace!

A statue of Christ, the Divine Teacher to replace Moses? Yes! A sculpture of Mary, Seat of Wisdom, Yes, Yes! But a trading post?

Can not this great university which built so nobly in the past and which is graced by the foremost sculpture of our era, Ivan Mestrovic, do better than put up mediocre buildings and stampede Bears and Bulls through the heart of the Memorial Library?

It all comes down to . . . Luke 12:34.

Ahhhhh, the holidays!

So, here it is, 50 days till Christmas. No, wait, you say . . . (rapidly adding on your fingers), it's only 48! Don't try and bilk me into languishing longer than I must in this wasteland! Well, I'm not. But somebody probably will.

Joe Musumeci

Looking In

It is only 48 days till the air comes alive with the scent of holly, fir trees and slightly volatile eggnog. But — and this is a big "but" — Christmas this year falls on a Saturday. Now, one would think that Christmas is so hallowed and tradition-laden a holiday that none would dare mess with the sacred moniker, "December 25th," but one might also consider what has happened to most of our major holidays; 50 days from now is a Monday, and this has emerged as the overall favorite for holiday revelling.

No, I don't think anybody is going to move Christmas to Monday, but it is something to think about. Thursday is Veteran's Day; last year we would have therefore been celebrating it today. I don't know why we are not this year, but I welcome the return to sanity.

Holidays don't seem to mean quite as much as they used to; much of this is probably due to the fact that one is never too sure when they will roll around. The placement of holidays depends more on the convenience of bureaucrats and vacationers than the date of the commemorated event. It is fortunate that Messrs. Lincoln and Washington are resting in prolonged peace, for, were they still alive, the confusion as to the celebration of their birth dates would leave them in a quite a quandary. I can just see old George, furtively digging through his old chest of papers and proofs from portrait sittings, desperate to discover whether his birth certificate really read "Monday, 1732."

Another factor that has influenced the effect holidays have on our lives is the now-old complaint concerning the commercialism attached to the major ones. The "holiday season" now extends virtually all year long, so that there is no waiting between special days — only transitions from one shopping season to another.

But for the student, especially at Notre Dame, the most pertinent fact in the decline of the holiday motif is that we don't have them.

All right. Lots of us put up tinsel and little trees right before Christmas break. And Halloween is a wonderful excuse to get dressed up in outlandish attire and parade the campus in search of phantoms and fun. But what about all the rest of the holidays that the outside world celebrates? The birthdays of Washington, Lincoln and various sundry others; Veteran's Day, Election Day — whither have these fled?

I suppose I expected to lose all the holidays of my youth when I came to college, as I expected to lose so many other things. But there is one thing I never thought to leave behind.

I went through eight years of Catholic elementary education, and four years of Catholic Jesuit high school. Never mind that both the Holy Cross nuns and the Jesuits seem to have gleaned their educational training from Palestinian guerrillas. One tradition of Catholicism remained consistent. Holy Days of Obligation remained holy.

Now that I have fled to the last bastion of outdated moral militarism in an otherwise progressive country, it is plain that holy days aren't nearly as important as my black-clad Hitlers made them out to be — for Notre Dame doesn't bother with them.

It seems odd that a university which insists on enforcing separation of the sexes on the basis that it is in keeping with Catholic standards should neglect to observe the days devoted to some of the greatest personages and events in the history of our faith. It makes one wonder.

Notre Dame stubbornly ignores the Immaculate Conception, the Assumption of Our Lady, All Saints Day; there's nobody here on December 25th — I wonder . . .

Rush's SIGNALS

As more and more bands compromise their musical tastes for the financial rewards of the commercial sound, it is refreshing to see a band go commercial without losing the quality of their music.

On Signals, the latest album from the Canadian trio Rush, the group changes their style without ruining their sound. The 20-minute-long songs reminiscent of "2112" and "By-Tor and the Snow Dog" are gone, but the mystical music of Geddy Lee and Alex Lifeson and the inspiring lyrics of Neal Peart make this another in a long line of powerful albums put together by Rush in the last few years.

The biggest change on the album is the lyrics. The songs deal with man: his problems, his dreams, his triumphs. It is a big change from the albums that produced songs like "Cygnus X-1" and other fantasies about outer space and unearthly conquests, but one that brings the lyrics closer to a larger number of listeners.

"Subdivisions," the first cut on side one, criticizes society for its social groups and the way it makes outcasts out of people who are different. An ominous voice in the background makes the subdivisions of society seem even more inhibiting than the lyrics do. "The Analog Kid" shows the inspirational dreams of mankind through the eyes of a little boy. Lee's dreamy voice gives a dramatic quality to the most moving parts of the song. Two other tracks, "Digital Man" and "The Weapon," deal with the hopes and fears of man, and how he attempts to deal with these feelings.

Two very different songs highlight the album. "New World Man," the album's biggest hit and one of the biggest hits for the group, is Peart's view of modern man. He is man doing the best he can, but making mistakes along the way. The song features a catchy beat and is enhanced by Lee's mesmerizing bass play.

The other feature of the album, "Losing It," is different than probably any other Rush song ever produced. It is a slow moving ballad, similar to "The Trees" or "Red Barchetta," but it is one of a very small number of sad songs Peart has ever written. It relates the fall of once-talented people and encourages people to use their talents to the fullest. Special work with an electric violin adds to its melancholy spirit, as does Lee's sad, almost pleading voice.

For the hard core Rush fan, the old influences are evident on Signals as well. Lifeson is once again awesome on guitar, especially in his two part solo on "The Analog Kid." Peart's style on drums, much different than his style on any other album, ranges from the driving force behind "Digital Man" to the off-beat, immobilizing thrust of "Chemistry." His performance again shows why he is considered one of the finest drummers in the rock world today.

Lee's performance on the album is also top-rate. His work on synthesizers and bass guitar is precision perfect, especially on "Subdivisions" and "Digital Man." His play on the bass pedals give the group the extra diversity that makes it the hit that it is today and his vocals mesmerize the listener and bring out every feature of Peart's writing.

One other influence from the group's earlier days is the trio's fascination with technology and space travel. "Countdown" is dedicated to the crew of the space shuttle and features taped conversations of the flight in the background. The tape, plus the descriptive words and music bring visions of the launching to listeners and recall memories of the classic "2112" from earlier days. The words of "Chemistry" gives the science a human color and shows off Peart's knowledge about the science and technical world.

Signals is another fine example of just how good Rush is. It is hard to find more precise music or better lyrics than those produced by Lee, Lifeson, and Peart. Their combined talents make Signals one of the best new albums out today and mark another period of musical style for the highly talented band.

It was a freezing evening Friday, but the inside of the ACC may have been the hottest spot in town as Rush played one of the best concerts seen here in a long time. The Canadian trio has been a top concert draw since its beginning and new fans learned why the band's hard-rocking style of music has earned them both album and concert successes.

"Spirit of Radio," the band's most popular single off their Permanent Waves album got the concert off to a fast start. There were surprisingly few musical changes in the song (though lead singer Geddy Lee jokingly changed the lyrics "...freedom of music" to "...freedom of baseball" once during the song, a change that is understandable after reading the sleeve of their new album). "Tom Sawyer" and "Free Will" and the first of many visuals followed. Lee frequently alternated between bass and synthesizers while drummer Neil Peart's consistent drumming complemented Alex Lifeson's guitars. Lee's voice, long known as being one of the most unusual in rock, pierced through the loud music without sounding strained.

The band is currently touring behind their new Signals LP and played seven of the album's eight tracks. (Only "Losing It," with its eerie electric violin opening and haunting lyrics was excluded.) Signals continues the band's move to less layered, more straightforward style of music which started on Permanent Waves and continued on the immensely successful Moving Pictures. During this transition, Lee's voice has become less erratic while Peart's compositions have become much less remote and more accessible to fans trying to understand their lyrics.

"Subdivisions," arguably one of the best songs of the new lot best exemplified the band's more "humanized" approach to music. Lee's voice retained its control while communicating the emotional

Dazzling E

This past weekend, thanks to the efforts of the Broadway Theater League, the smash hit Evita crossed the stage of the Morris Civic Auditorium. It might not be an exaggeration to say that this presentation marked the apex to date of the arts in South Bend. Actually, this broad statement is impossible to defend, but the feeling was unavoidable upon leaving the theatre Saturday night.

Evita brought to the Morris Civic stage a production retaining in every aspect the polish and life it amassed on Broadway. The show won seven Tony Awards when it premiered in New York, and it was apparent this weekend that every one of them was well deserved. I have seen before, on the same stage, a show or two which hardly merited the label "professional," but any trepidation I might have had about the state of the theatre in South Bend was forever forgotten.

The show was conceived as the story of Eva Peron, the wife of Argentinian President Juan Peron, and her rise from the ragged life of a small town gutter-snipe to the position of the most powerful woman ever in the Latin Americas. A product of a collaboration between Tim Rice and Andrew Lloyd Webber, the co-writers of Jesus Christ Superstar and Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat, Evita is similar to these two in that it is almost entirely sung, really more of a contemporary opera than a musical.

Florence Lacey as Eva shone throughout the performance; her voice carried the challenging score well, and she very ably managed the transition from a young girl on the make at the opening of the show to the studied dignity and showmanship which had become Evita's trademark at the time of her death from cancer at the age of 33. Her rendition of "Don't Cry for Me, Argen-frustration of man's conflict in conforming to society's pressures. (A video produced for the song appeared behind the group adding to the song's intensity.) "The Analog Kid" was a rocker in a different mold for Rush while "The Weapon" sounded as it might have been done by The Police. "Countdown," which was written while the band watched the launching of the space shuttle Columbia was one of the few musical disappointments from the new album though an outstanding video of the launch, complete with flashpots for rocket smoke and sound effects was a great touch.

The band played very little material from its pre-Permanent Waves days. "Fly By Night" and "Working Man" among others were noticeably absent. The two hour set was tight, maybe too tight; far too few musical changes were risked. Many of the songs were performed in the same order on last year's Exit Stage Left, the band's second live album. Even Peart's excellent three-minute drum solo during "YYZ" in the encore, though longer than the one on Exit, was a bit too predictable.

There was no spectacular laser light show as was common in the band's earlier days. The lights present, however, were more than adequate and along with the computer graphics and other visuals, served as a complement to the music rather than a distraction. (The racing car sequence during "Red Barchetta" and the "Subdivisions" visual were extremely well done.)

The sound system at the ACC, never spectacular to begin with, was adequate though there were problems at first hearing Lifeson's guitar and Lee above everything else. The predominantly teenage crowd, many who were chemically numb to what was going on, didn't seem to mind, however, and went home happy with what they did hear.

Rory Gallagher and his band opened the show with an energetic, set that poured through songs like "Double Vision," "Moonchild," and "Big Guns." The music was loud a la Van Halen and only "What the World You Gonna Do" hinted to the blues origin for which Gallagher is better known. The crowd reaction was more than just perfunctory and sufficient to warrant an encore.

Under the auspices of the Shakespeare Club, Roman Polanski's controversial interpretation of Macbeth will be shown tonight at 7 p.m. and 9:40 p.m. in the Engineering Auditorium. Professor James Robinson, the self-proclaimed "King" of the Club, describes Polanski's version as "... a film which plays up the external horrors of Shakespeare's study of evil." Polanski's film has achieved a certain notoriety over the years for its explicit treatment of the play's violent aspects. Yet the blood and gore in this film are neither gratuitous nor exploitative; rather Polanski's Macbeth evokes the appalling consequences of Evil triumphant. It is a sight which Robinson cautions "is not for the faint of heart."

Stylistically, Polanski's talent as a versatile expressionist has always proven vital to the formal and thematic constructs of his work. Polanski's greatest technical strength resides in his knack for creating the right tone, whether it be the spare visuals of Knife in the Water or the richly-textured atmospheres of Chinatown. In addition to the two screenings of Macbeth the Shakespeare Club is sponsoring a "Shakespeare Costume Contest." All are encouraged to enter the competition by dressing up as their favorite Shakespearean character. The contest will take place between the first and second showings (approximately 9:15 p.m.). "King" Robinson makes "assurance double sure" that the winner will receive a $25 first place prize and the runner-up a $10 second place prize. The evening promises to be an entertaining one, but those of you who intend on seeing the film beware: you may soon find yourselves "cabined, cribbed, confined, bound in/ To saucy doubts and fears."

Just a thought

Because of my commitment to cover the Notre Dame hockey team for our illustrious sports section, I came back early from spring break to catch the Notre Dame-Northern Michigan series.

Friday night, after our disappointing loss to the Wildcats, 5-2, Chucker the Mexican madman and I went to Barnaby's for some liquid consolation and then back I went to the dorm.

Along came the midnight hour, and I was getting restless. So I grabbed my coat and boogied on down to Albert's to recommence comiserating with glassware.

It was a lucky thing I did, too, because sitting at the bar were two of my favorite drinking buddies, Ted and Ned.

We had a great time. I told Fr. Hesburgh how much nicer he looked without his beard, and Fr. Joyce agreed. After three or four rounds of some fearsome chocolate milk, the talk turned to football.

Suddenly Ned's voice dropped to a conspiratorial whisper.

"Ed, you're my favorite writer. Read your column every week. So, I'm gonna do you a favor — give ya a little scoop, as it were, a real important story."

An important story! My ears perked right up. This could be the first important story The Observer has run this year.

"Listen, you probably know that my two heroes, outside of Him, are George Steinbrenner and Al Davis. Great, great minds. And they almost have as much money as we do. So I've decided to follow them, and make a decision that will truly shake up the Notre Dame community."

"You're going to fire Gerry Faust and replace him with Ara Par-segian," I said, hopefully.

"No, no," the jovial Ted laughed as he shook his head, "it's even better than that. Tell 'em Ned."

"Tee hee, it's the best idea we've ever come up with," giggled Ned. "Better than kegs, better than split-season basketball tickets, even better than parietals."

"Better than parietals?" I scoffed. "Parietals have done more to twist the Notre Dame mentality away from acceptable social maturity than anything else you've ever done. What could you do to abuse Notre Dame students more?"

Ted just started giggling, blowing into his straw and making little bubbles in his milk. Ned had a huge grin on his face and rolled his eyes around and around. They were obviously enjoying putting the screws on me like this.

"Okay guys, I give up. What are you pulling?"

Ned's face turned bright red. "Remember how Al Davis moved the Raiders to Los Angeles, and how mad the Oakland fans were?"

"Sure, the fans would kill for a football team, but ... no, you couldn't ..."

"Yes! Yes! We're moving the football team to Oakland!"

Ted started singing "California, Here We Come".

I didn't know what to do.

Without a football team, what would happen to Notre Dame?

We wouldn't really lose any revenue. More people could fit into Oakland Alameda Stadium, and Hammes Bookstore II would undoubtedly be near. More money would pour into the University sports fund. More alumni could see the team and feel a part of the University — and give much more money for running the University.

But The social life of having a football game — the rallies, parties, passing up girls — would be lost. How could we relate to women without parties. Why, freshmen could go an entire semester without getting insanely drunk and making passes.

What excuse would girls give for putting up with overcrowded parties at the towers?

The quality of Notre Dame wouldn't be measured as much by the success of the football team as it would have to be by its academic standards.

Oh my gosh.

If we lose our football team, what would happen to life at Notre Dame?

"Well, what do you say, Ed?" asked Ned. "Is that an idea or what?"

Yep, Ned, that's definitely something to think about.

A "sub" standard

There are two things I miss about my pre-college schooldays. One is waking up on a frigid January morning, seeing a heavy white blanket of snow covering the roads and learning that school has been cancelled. (It is little wonder that snowy mornings in much of the country are the cause of the world's most attentive radio audience.)

Chris Fraser

The other is arriving at school and discovering an unfamiliar face at the head of the class instead of the regular slave driver who had (much to the chagrin of the class) taken ill. The face belonged to a much-abused — and thereby very welcome — substitute teacher.

The presence of a substitute was an unmistakable signal for a day of mischievous, delinquent, and generally obnoxious activity. These people were most assuredly naive and easily fooled (they had taken this job hadn't they?) so we greeted them with spitballs, answered to the wrong names during roll call, and did our all-around best to create a general uproar. We were forever confident that neither the stern-faced principal nor our irascible teacher would learn of our unruly behavior. A substitute never told.

Why, I always wondered, did these substitutes always allow things to get so out of hand? Did they enjoy being the objects of ridicule and disrespect or were they too dim-witted to realize that we little rascals were pulling the wool over their eyes? And what kind of imbeciles took these jobs anyway?

All these questions were answered for me over break when this imbecile worked as a substitute teacher. Yes, with my 60 college credits I'm technically qualified to substitute teach although I'm not quite sure that two peaceful years of college is the best prerequisite for handling a room full of little brats for a day.

I was registered to sub (that's education lingo for substitute) in your basic middle class school system and I figured I was lucky when I was called to take over for a tenth-grade English teacher on my first day. I thought — hoped might be a better word — that these sophomores would be old enough to be beyond the "let's tie up the sub" stage but still young enough to fend off if they tried it. I'm happy to report that, no, they didn't tie me up (I can run pretty fast). On the other hand, it seems as if they got away with just about everything else.

The way they had explained it to me, the job should have been rather simple. I would have six separate classes and my "teaching" would consist of giving out an assignment the real teacher had left and preventing the varmints from setting the school on fire. Easy enough I thought. I told myself to be strict and uncompromising — anyone with a little determination and a loud voice could keep a class under control.

In my best second-grade printing, I wrote "Mr. Fraser" (it would be strange being called that) on the blackboard and cautiously eyed the first class as they shuffled in. They didn't look too bad, a curious mix of black t-shirts, designer jeans, and Adidas sneakers. The bell rang and I called on the class to come to order in my well-practiced, resounding, authoritative voice. No one moved. I repeated my command several times with increasing volume until finally a big burly kid wearing a football jersey stood up and barked "shut-up", thus bringing silence to the room. I straightened my tie and looked down at the attendance sheet.

"If I mispronounce anyone's name," I announced, "... well, that's too bad." I still claim that there's some humor in that little witticism but nonetheless no one laughed. Maybe this wouldn't be so easy after all.

By the time I had explained the assignment, the students had already divided themselves into several unauthorized discussion groups which provided a steadily increasing clamor of gossip, giggles, and guffaws. I suspected that these seminars were unrelated to the Hemmingway short story they were supposed to be reading but before I could gather the appropriate harsh words to demand some silent study, I was besieged by an array of dubious requests.

"Can we go to the bathroom?" asked two girls in identical denim jackets.

"Can I get a drink of water?" inquired a squeaky-voiced lad.

An older looking guy who was trying (vainly) to grow a mustache thought he had a more urgent request: "I forgot my book. Can I go to my locker?"

I handed this last guy the teacher's edition of the book and told the others to sit down. No sir, this sub wasn't that gullible. I didn't have time though, to relish in my new found power. I realized that rather than design some scheme to get out of the room, the rest of the class was more than content to remain and engage in an early morning social hour.

"Let's quiet down." I exhorted repeatedly. At first my entreaties caused a definite noise decrease (though never a disappearance) but after a while I felt like I was talking to the blackboard. I was worried that the principal might walk by and hear the roaring class so I changed tactics.

"Come on keep it down," I implored to what looked like the main offenders. Perhaps a more friendly approach was needed. This was initially somewhat effective but I was soon hit with another problem (literally) — flying balls of paper. I paraded the rows of desks with my most menacing glare but I was unable to locate the culprit. Things only got worse after that. My demands for silence had been reduced to a "pleeease" for a quieter bedlam. I was praying for the bell to ring.

But the final insult was yet to come for this all too typical sub. As I was contemplating how I was going to crack down on the second period class (and checking when lunch was) the whole class stood up and began walking toward the door.

"What do you think you're doing?" I screamed. "Sit down or the entire class will be reported to the principal!" I threatened. As the first person reached the door the bell sounded and they quickly filed out. Perfect timing — as good as I'd ever done to a sub myself just a few years ago. Of course I wouldn't report them. Actually, I was rather amused. Heck, there were only five more classes and I knew I could keep them in line. Well, there were only five more classes anyway.

The Snite Museum's O'Shaughnessy Galleries now house the exhibit entitled, "Hedrich-Blessing: Architectural Photography, 1930-1981." This showing, organized by the George Eastman House, documents the work of Louis Sullivan, Frank Lloyd Wright, Mies van der Rohe, Buckminster Fuller, Eliel Saarinen, and the firm of Skidmore, Owings and Merrill, displaying examples of their work found in and around Chicago.

The Hedrich-Blessing firm has captured bits of the history of modern architecture in its photographs of buildings from the Prairie School and Beaux Arts to late and Post Modernism. The exhibit holds particular historical value because many of the buildings depicted have long since been razed. Future generations will look to the archives of Hedrich-Blessing to see the great work of past masters.

In addition to the firm's historical and artistic contributions to the field, Hedrich-Blessing has pioneered some technical advances, chief among them is the process called "emulsion stripping," several examples of which can be found in the show. Architects and city planners are often interested in seeing what a proposed building will look like on the site. A photograph of the proposed site and a photo of the architect's scale model are taken from a given perspective. The emulsions of both negatives are then combined, blended and adjusted and finally rephotographed. The final photomontage print is amazingly convincing.

The show will continue until December 19 during regular gallery hours.

Robert Hughes, art critic for Time magazine since 1970 and one of the most widely read writers on art in the English language, narrates the documentary film, The Shock of the New, which will be shown at 7:30 p.m. in Annenberg Auditorium tomorrow and Thursday evenings. Hughes has produced more than 30 documentary films for television on the subject of visual arts, ranging from Australian art to Rubens, Caravaggio and Bernini.

The Shock of the New picks up where Jacob Bronowski's Ascent of Man and Kenneth Clark's Civilization left off. The series delves through the social history of the twentieth century as seen through the lens of art. It demonstrates how major works and artists of the modern era have broadened people's lives and changed their perceptions (and prejudices) of art.

Tomorrow at 7:30 p.m. "The Threshold of Liberty" will deal with the surrealist movement of the twentieth century. Following that, at 8:30 p.m., "The View from the Edge" looks at the ruin of Figurative Expressionism during the days of World War II.

Thursday evening at the same times, the two final segments in the series will be shown. "Culture As Nature" describes how culture replaced nature as the subject matter of art. "The Future That Was" takes an in-depth look at the result of our modernist culture, the neutralization of art, the incestuous interlocking structures of museum and dealer, the attempts of conceptual art, earthworks and body art to flee the system, and the fragmentation of the avant-garde.

Tuesday, November 16 at 7:30 p.m. in Annenberg Auditorium, Robert Hughes will address the topic of "The Faces of Power: Art Politics and Propaganda."

'Echoes' misses Devine inspiration

Craig Chval

Sports Writer

Thoughts that enter and exit while battling to stay awake in constitutional law.

Although "Wake Up the Echoes," telecast nationally by CBS on Sunday, was entertaining, enlightening and moving, it boggles the mind to think that anyone putting together a documentary on Notre Dame football could fail to mention Dan Devine. If the writers and producers of the program had checked Notre Dame's coaching totals, they would have found Devine fourth on the all-time list, right behind some guy named Leahy. Three Irish victories during the Devine era — the 1977 "green jersey" win over USC, the incredible 1979 Cotton Bowl comeback against Houston and Harry Oliver's 1980 miracle at the expense of Michigan — will certainly stand among Notre Dame's most memorable triumphs of all time. And, although many of you may be too young to remember what it was like, Devine's 1977 team won the National Championship.

Maybe Gerry Faust won with too much regularity at Moeller High School. His apparent inability to deal with losing in a gracious manner has become an embarrassment to Notre Dame and its alumni. Faust's attempts to explain away disappointing performances with feeble excuses do more to tarnish the University's image than could anything his players might do on the field.

Barring performances in its remaining three games similar to its "Gong Show" act against Notre Dame, it appears that Michigan is going to the Rose Bowl. Snore. Instead of sending Bo's Bores to Pasadena to contract a severe case of air sickness from whichever Pac Ten team passes them silly, let's make the Rose Bowl an exclusively Pac Ten affair. It would be simple enough to do — just pit the best team on NCAA probation (USC, Arizona State or Oregon) against the best of the rest.

I hope every college coach who has lobbied for the institution of a shot clock was watching Wednesday night's NBA game between Detroit and Chicago. The Pistons won — in regulation — 152-144. Add a javelin and a couple of hurdles, and somebody who happened to stumble into the Pontiac Silverdome would have thought he walked in on the Drake Relays.

P.S.: In case you haven't caught the Pistons' Kelly Tripucka lately, don't worry, he hasn't changed a bit. He's still got his perm, he still hustles and he still thinks he hasn't committed a foul in his life.

While we're on the subject of the NBA, the most obnoxious sight in an obnoxious league has to be the prima donna players, who after a disagreeable call, simply put the ball down on the floor rather than tossing it to an official. Some of the classier players will walk to midcourt before placing the ball on the floor. Perhaps the officials, instead of tossing the ball to players waiting to shoot free throws, should just drop the ball on the baseline under the basket.

Does the NFL really think fans in Baltimore, Chicago and Foxboro, Mass. will pay to watch those teams in the middle of January?

Why did it take baseball's owners 13 years to get rid of Bowie Kuhn?

What is the NHL saying about itself when — in a supposed crackdown on violence — it suspends a player for eight games for an attack that would constitute attempted murder anywhere on the continent outside of an NHL arena?

Three grid unbeatens remain

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON

Associated Press

Southern Methodist, Georgia and Arizona State form college football's ruling troika after a weekend of upsets.

Saturday's action also saw LSU storm back into the ranks of the elite while getting Bear Bryant to mumble about retiring.

The list of unbeaten-untied major teams shrank to three when fifth-ranked Arkansas fell to Baylor 24-17 while Notre Dame was toppling No. 1 Pittsburgh.

That left the race for No. 1 in this week's Associated Press poll looming as a three-way battle among second-ranked SMU, a 41-14 winner over Rice; No. 3 Georgia, which thrashed No. 20 Florida 44-0; and fourth-rated Arizona State, which came from behind to turn back winless Oregon State 30-16.

However, nipping at the heels of the big three are sixth-ranked Nebraska, which walloped Oklahoma State 48-10, and No. 7 Penn State, which buried North Carolina State 54-0. And don't overlook unbeaten-but-tied No. 11 LSU, the nation's top-rated defensive team, which throttled No. 8 Alabama 20-10, a licking which Bryant termed "the best beating we've had since the '60s."

Bryant, college football's winningest coach with 322 triumphs in 38 years, said he would inform Alabama's president "in a heck of a hurry that we need to make some changes, need to start at the top."

Elsewhere, 10th-ranked Washington edged No. 9 UCLA 10-7, No. 12 Florida State swamped South Carolina 56-26, No. 13 Clemson shaded No. 18 North Carolina 16-13, No. 14 Oklahoma beat Kansas State 24-10, No. 15 Michigan defeated Illinois 16-10, No. 16 Southern California clobbered California 42-0, No. 17 West Virginia squeaked past Temple 20-17 and No. 19 Maryland nipped Miami 18-17.

Georgia got "one of my best ones" from Herschel Walker, who rushed for 219 yards on 35 carries.

Farley shuts out PE, wins women's title

By SUSAN SOLOMINIK
Sports Writer

"Farley's Finest," the women's interhall football squad from Farley Hall, lived up to their nickname last night, by defeating Pasquerilla East, 8-0, in the title game of the flag football season at Cartier Field.

The teams exchanged possession for most of the first half, neither side succeeding in moving the ball.

With about 10 minutes remaining in the half, Farley took over on offense and marched up the field with assurance. Farley scored on a flea-flicker play, and added a two-point conversion to assume an 8-0 lead they would not relinquish.

PE came back, but the Farley defense hung tough, foiling the PE surge by breaking up several consecutive passes. When Pasquerilla went for the yards on a fourth down, the Farley rush got through to sack the PE quarterback.

An East interception killed the initial Farley drive of the second half, and the defenses proceeded to take over for the remainder of the game. The game was physical — rough play caused the referees to issue warnings to both sides.

Breaks for each side took away, on one hand, a potential scoring drive and, on the other, a touchdown.

A penalty called back a Packer pass for long yardage, while another flag called back a Farley score. East proceeded to hold Farley scoreless from the four-yard line. For PE, though, the break came too late as they took over on its own one-yard line with less than two minutes left in the game.

The Farley coaches agreed that defense won the game.

"This was a very difficult season. All of the teams that played had excellent defenses," said the head coach. "It was defense that decided most of the games this season."

Mark Zavagnin (46) and Bob Clasby (center) stack up Pittsburgh tailback Bryan Thomas (44) near the goal line in the second quarter of Saturday's 31-16 Notre Dame win. The Irish defense stopped this Panther drive at the four-yard line, forcing them to settle for a field goal.

Wolverines edge Illini; OSU wins

By JOE MOOSHIL
Associated Press

Michigan's Wolverine t s escaped from Champaign with their scalps in place and now are only one victory away from the Big Ten football championship and a trip to Pasadena for the Rose Bowl.

After allowing a school record 515 yards on offense, the Wolverines stopped Dwight Beverly cold on the 2-yard-line with 23 seconds to play Saturday to clinch a 16-10 victory over Illinois.

The triumph gave first-place Michigan a 7-0 record in the conference and 7-2 overall. Michigan can clinch everything with a victory over Purdue next Saturday — and that would make the season-ending showdown against Ohio State virtually meaningless.

Ohio State moved into sole possession of second place, boosting its record to 5-1 record by thumping Minnesota 35-10. But there were surprises in the other three Big Ten games Saturday.

Doug Smith's 42-yard field goal into a stiff wind lifted Indiana to a 20-17 victory over Wisconsin; Northwestern came back from a 17-point deficit to defeat Michigan State 28-24 on a halfback-to-quarterback touchdown pass, and Tim Clark booted three field goals to give Purdue a 16-7 victory over Iowa.

The biggest loss was suffered by Illinois. Not only did the Illini drop out of the title and Rose Bowl race, but a victory over Michigan would have assured the Illini of a spot in the prestigious Gator Bowl.

Illinois still has a chance for a bowl bid with a windup victory over Indiana next Saturday, but as Tony Eason put it: "I just hope the young kids realize how close we were. A field goal to Ohio State, one point to Iowa and two yards to Michigan."

The question was to pass or run on Illinois' final play from scrimmage in the fourth-and-two situation. Eason, who had missed on two of three previous attempts although he finished with 28 completions for 272 yards, favored the run. So did Coach Mike White, who figured Michigan would be expecting the pass.

NFL talks curtailed; 7th week wiped out

NEW YORK (AP) — With the collapse again of the strike negotiations and the existence of the National Football League's 1982 season in serious doubt, the focus shifts today from the bargaining table to the courtroom.

Mediator Sam Kagel returned home to San Francisco Sunday after recessing the talks Saturday night, the second time in two weeks he had called a halt to the proceedings. Each time, economic issues locked the two sides far apart.

With Sunday's games called off and Monday night's San Diego at Miami game also off, seven weeks of the season have been wiped out by the 48-day-old strike. Jack Donlan, the owners' chief negotiator, said the could see the rest of the season slipping away weekly. So could some of the player representatives still at the midtown Manhattan hotel where the talks were conducted for eight days before breaking off.

Previously, it had been the union's stance that, regardless of the state of the season at this point, all 16 games would be played and all the players would be paid. Now, there appears to be slippage.

"Their actions in effect cancelled the season," said Mark Murphy, the Washington Redskins' player rep and a member of the union's executive committee. Elvin Bethea, the Houston Oilers' player rep, said, "They are sacrificing the season and seeing it go up in smoke."

An announcement by the Management Council, the owners' negotiating team, to make available to the 1,500 striking players a 4.5 page summary of its latest 75-page compilation of proposals drew a strong reaction from the union.

Bowie and Thebeau were able to play, but they weren't as effective as usual."

The difference between Saturday's game and the past four would have to be the team's discipline on the ice. Defensively play was more cohesive and aware, and the forechecking was solid and consistent.

"I was very pleased with Saturday's play," admitted Smith. "We made a couple of adjustments and began moving the puck extremely well. Our passing was the best it's been all year, as we were able to move the puck around very well, opening up the lanes on our power play, which was much improved. If we had hit a couple of open shots, we could have had 3 or 4 more goals. When we were down a man, we played very well."

"The difference between Friday and Saturday nights was like night and day."

"Friday we moved around too much," said Smith. "We weren't playing our position in a disciplined manner. We have to play in a very disciplined fashion of hockey — staying in the lanes, covering checks — and we weren't doing that Friday night."

"We weren't staying in our lanes offensively — we'd shoot from the point or off the side, and all three forwards would be on one side. We have to be spread out so we can cover the entire net. We did this Saturday, which helped us to pick up a couple of goals. Both of Metzler's goals, Parsons' goal, and Doman's goal, were a direct result of being more disciplined in offense positioning."

"All in all, it was a tough series. Western Michigan has a very good goaltender and he had himself a very good series," said Smith. "They're big, very physical, and skate well, but I think that other than Bowling Green and Michigan State, you can throw everyone into a big hat and whoever happens to play well that particular night will win. It is a very competitive race, and at the same time I'm rather surprised that Bowling Green and Michigan State are really not blowing people out. They're only winning by a couple of goals, so we may end up with a 12-team league with everybody knocking everybody else off."

The Irish face the University of Illinois-Chicago next weekend at the UIC Pavilion. The injury situation is improving as Tadd Tuomie and Tony Bonadio are expected back today, while X-rays on Sean Regan to be taken tomorrow are expected to shed some light onto his situation.

"We may have so many players next week, that we may not know what to do with them," quipped Smith. One doubts if that will ever be one of Lefty's less pleasant problem's.

E-Systems continues the tradition of the world's great problem solvers.

Unquestionably, Leonardo da Vinci possessed one of the world's great minds. Not only renowned as a painter and sculptor, da Vinci also applied his exceptional talents to the mechanics of flight, to cartography for planning military campaigns, and even astronomy.

Today, scientists and engineers at E-Systems continue the tradition by expanding the practical application of advanced technology. E-Systems uses the principles of flight mechanics as the basis for major modifications to aircraft, expands basic cartography to encompass highly sophisticated guidance and command and control systems, and has designed and built a system that greatly expands man's ability to study the universe.

That's only a small segment of the tough problems E-Systems engineers solve in the area of antennas, communications, data acquisition, processing, storage and retrieval systems and other systems applications for intelligence and reconnaissance — systems which are often the first of a kind in the world.

Faust learns

Variety is the spice of life

PITTSBURGH — Trying to analyze this Notre Dame football team could drive even Sigmund Freud to a padded cell.

Two weeks ago, the Irish couldn't even beat the Northwestern of the Northwest (a.k.a. Oregon); here on Saturday, they were world-beaters.

The stunning 31-16 upset of No. 1 Pitt was the kind of effort that Irish fans had been praying for, but had not received, the past eight weeks — perfect execution, no mistakes, a little imagination and, of course, a lot of luck.

Where this particular team has been the last few weeks is not certain, but we've come to realize that this 1982 Irish team has more personalities than Sybil.

Fortunately for the Irish, their best side emerged on Saturday, and just in the nick of time. A loss may have sent this season, and perhaps a coach or two, down the tubes.

There are two reasons for this sudden resurrection. First, for one of the few times this season, Coach Gerry Faust had all his best players on the field at once, playing their normal positions, and in good health. Center Mark Fischer, injured in the Michigan State game, returned with a flourish and was a force in the trenches. His presence allowed Tom Thayer to go home to his quick guard position, at which he was a pre-season All-America selection, from his four-week assignment at center.

Saturday's performance showed that both Larry Moriarty and Kevin Griffith are back to full strength. Moriarty made a key reception to set up ND's first touchdown and later burst through a Grand Canyon-sized hole to put the Irish in position to put the game away in the fourth quarter. Meanwhile, Griffith contributed 14 tackles and was a menace all day long.

And when we talk about having the best players in the lineup, that, unfortunately, does not include Phil Carter, but should include Allen Pinkett. It took Faust until the middle of the second quarter to get Pinkett into the game, and all the freshman did was gain 112 yards on just 10 carries, including a breathtaking 76-yard TD scamper to give the Irish breathing room at 24-16.

The sudden downfall of Carter is one of those tragic ironies that always pop up when a new phenom emerges and the veteran is eased out as a result. Just two years ago, after gaining 255 yards in a game at Michigan State, Carter was ticketed for superstardom; in the last four games he has managed just 92 yards, and now seems a step too slow. Speed is king in college football these days, and Carter has gotten lost in the shuffle.

But you'll never hear a complaint from him; he'll always be ready to do his share when called upon. His role of deception on the flea-flicker pass to Joe Howard — faking a sweep, then pitching the ball back to Blair Kiel — was executed flawlessly.

For his contributions over the last four years alone, Carter deserves the starting assignment next week against Penn State in his last home game. But look for Pinkett to do most of the ballcarrying.

The second reason for ND's turnaround on Saturday was, yes, some good, fearless, nothing-to-lose, go-for-broke playcalling. The Kiel-to-Carter-to-Kiel-to-Howard 54-yard TD play was the most obvious product of the new liberalism — perhaps Faust and his staff also got the message not to "stay the course" — but some other plays also were indicative of newfound offensive imagination.

•Kiel threw a second-quarter pass to Moriarty down the middle, good for 30 yards. Like the flea-flicker, it was designed specifically for the Pitt game by Offensive Coordinator Tom Lichtenberg and, also like the flea-flicker, it came on first down, one of seven times in the game that the Irish attempted to throw on first down. Will wonders never cease?

Chris Needles
Sports Editor

•In the fourth quarter, with the Irish clinging to a 17-16 lead, ND recovered Julius Dawkins' crucial fumble and, on first down, Kiel threw incomplete to Howard 30 yards downfield. Never mind that the play didn't work — it was the thought that counted. On the next play, with Pitt looking for another pass, Pinkett turned a simple draw play into a 76-yard touchdown.

•With 7:10 on the clock and the Irish leading 24-16, Howard, again on first down, ran an end around for an 18-yard gain that seemed to kill the Panthers. Five plays later, Pinkett was dancing in the end zone for the second time in the quarter, and the upset was secure at 31-16.

The fact that Faust and his staff finally decided to show some variety on offense is encouraging. The last time the Irish tried anything like a flea-flicker was against Miami, when a Van Percy reverse lost 11 yards. That may explain why Faust waited this long to try another one.

But the outcome still may have been in doubt had a few breaks not gone Notre Dame's way. Dawkins' fumble — he just flat out dropped the ball — was a back-breaker. Also, Pittsburgh's Tim Lewis, the nation's No. 1 kickoff returner, was injured in practice last week and did not play.

The key break — actually it was only a sprain — was to Pitt safety and top punt returner Tom Flynn's foot, suffered in the second quarter. His replacement in the secondary, Rick Dukovich, was burned badly on the trick pass to Howard, and missed a key tackle on Pinkett's 76-yarder. Jeff Casper, who filled in for Flynn returning punts, fumbled one in the second quarter that helped set up ND's first touchdown, and was ineffective otherwise.

In all, Notre Dame was good when it had to be on Saturday — good execution, good coaching and good fortune. That combination, as it has so often in the past, sent still another No. 1 team to defeat and sent the campus into a toilet-paper frenzy for the first time since the Irish basketball victory over Virginia in February, 1981. It's been two years — the 7-0 victory at Alabama in November, 1980 — since the football team set off that kind of celebration.

Unfortunately, or perhaps fortunately, there is no time to gloat over this one. Pittsburgh is a great football team, but an even better team — Penn State — visits Notre Dame next week. A perfect effort is needed, and whether or not the Irish come up with one remains to be seen.

But at least now we know it is possible.

Pitt quarterback Dan Marino compiled impressive stats on Saturday — 26-of-42 for 314 yards — but had his consecutive game TD pass streak ended at 19 games and was rendered ineffective by a swarming Notre Dame defense, which sacked him three times. (Photo by Rachel Blount) back. But his sure-fire touchdown pass to Dawkins was batted down beautifully by Chris Brown, and Pitt had to settle for Eric Schubert's third field goal of the game to close the gap to 17-16.

Once more, Marino drove Pitt downfield, to the ND 33, but his second-down pass was caught, then fumbled, by Dawkins. By the time Pinkett was finished showing off, it was 31-16 and the scene at Pitt Stadium was reminiscent of Two Minute Warning — mass evacuation to the exits.

"Our kids played their hearts out today," said Irish Coach Gerry Faust in a jubilant and cramped Notre Dame locker room. "We've had to overcome some adversity the last few weeks but I think we gained back some respectability today."

Thanks to a more-than-respectable tailback, Allen Pinkett,

... Mystique

"I had gotten a little discouraged about that draw play," explained the Sterling Park, Va. native, "because we had run it many times without success."

"What I was looking for was the cutback. When I cut back, there were two guys standing there. I stopped, hesitated, and concentrated on going north and south ... getting through the funnel."

"Then I smelled the goal line," added Pinkett. "I had to get it."

And when the offense wasn't on the field getting points, the Irish defense was busy getting to Pitt quarterback Dan Marino. The senior slinger did complete 26-of-42 tosses for 314 yards, but saw his string of 19 straight games with a TD pass halted.

"We prepared for him like any other quarterback," said safety Joe Johnson. "We didn't let his statistics get to us. We confused him a lot with all our stunts and movement, and when he's confused, he's just not effective."

"We'd start to go out on the wide receivers," added linebacker Mike Larkin, "then come back in, and he'd call time out. He's good, but not as good as he thinks he is. I think we've faced better."

But there have been no better victories for Faust and his staff then Saturday's 31-16 triumph. "This has to go down as one of the best, especially since we had our backs to the wall a little bit," admitted Faust.

"It's been a tough week for us. It was cold practicing all week, and on Tuesday, the lights went out on our practice field and we couldn't throw the ball. The kids had to really sacrifice — it wasn't much fun."

Until Saturday, that is.

Pinkett stars

Irish pull together, topple Pitt

By CHRIS NEEDLES
Sports Editor

PITTSBURGH — From 1973 to 1976, a small, quick tailback named Tony Dorsett set this town on fire, setting ten NCAA rushing records and leading the University of Pittsburgh to a national championship in his senior year.

On Saturday, his clone came to town — same build, same amount of speed, and the same results. Heck, he even had the "ett" at the end of his name.

But this time he was playing for the other team.

Freshman Allen Pinkett came off the bench and darted to 112 yards in just 10 carries, including a Dorsett-like 76-yard touchdown run with 8:09 remaining, to lead Notre Dame to a 31-16 upset of top-ranked, undefeated Pitt before an overflow crowd of 60,162 at Pitt Stadium.

Pinkett, who replaced an ineffective Phil Carter in the second quarter, also tallied the clinching score on a seven-yard run with 4:06 left. His performance no doubt stirred a lot of memories in Panther fans, while at the same time creating several bad ones.

"We ran that play the last two weeks with no success," Pinkett said of the spectacular run. "I was looking for the cutback, just concentrating on getting the first down. I had the option of cutting across the grain or going outside.

"I knew Pitt was quick and aggressive, so I hesitated a little bit and then made the cut. There were two guys waiting for me to go outside. And then I saw the two collapse...."

Pinkett paused for a moment to inspect the sea of reporters that were packed around him. You'd have thought he knew who won the Illinois gubernatorial election.

It doesn't take much to analyze that play — Pinkett simply outran everybody, while making the Panther defense look like the opposing team on the old New York Life insurance commercials. Pinkett went through the gaping hole, cut at just the right time, watched as Pitt's Yogi Jones and Rick Dukovich collided and took each other out of the play, and then galloped home-free to the end zone.

The TD, coming just two plays after cornerback John Mosley recovered a killer fumble by Pitt's Julius Dawkins at the ND 24, put the Irish ahead comfortably 24-16, and it was a breeze from there.

Pinkett's marvelous run was just one of several key offensive plays that the Irish executed just as the playbook says. Notre Dame was out-gained by Pitt in almost every offensive category, but did manage 323 total yards and always seemed to come up with the key play when the situation called for it.

With Pitt leading 6-3 in the second quarter, the Panthers' Jeff Casper fumbled a Blair Kiel punt, and Rick Naylor recovered at the Pitt 45. On the next play, Kiel found fullback Larry Moriarty down the middle for a 30-yard gain. Tight end Tony Hunter, who was double-covered all day and caught just two passes, cut across the middle on the play, drawing defenders to him and opening up the middle for Moriarty.

Two plays later, Moriarty weaved his way through his blockers to a four-yard touchdown to give the Irish a 10-6 halftime advantage.

But Pitt was dominating the stat sheet, and in the third quarter quarterback Dan Marino put together an incredible 18-play, 98-yard drive that culminated in a one-yard TD sweep by Bryan Thomas, putting the Panthers ahead 13-10 while chewing up 8:42 of the clock.

"After that drive we started to wonder," said defensive end Kevin Griffith, who along with Stacey Toran was in on 14 tackles, just behind Mark Zavagnin's team-leading 16. "But our offense really came through."

The Irish offense, much maligned in recent weeks, piled up 207 yards and 21 points in the fourth quarter to put the game away. A couple of weeks ago, those figures would have sufficed for the whole game.

ND went ahead 17-13 on a 54-yard trick pass from Kiel to Joe Howard. Kiel had pitched to Carter, thereby drawing in the cornerback Dukovich. When Carter tossed it back to Kiel, Dukovich was caught dead, for Howard was already 30 yards downfield. Howard took in Kiel's pass — "It was a little wobbly," understated Kiel — and waltzed in.

The play was the brainchild of Offensive Coordinator Tom Lichtenberg, and the play actually had been called two previous times in the game, but were changed by Kiel because of Pitt's defensive alignment.

"I had to check it off twice at the line of scrimmage," said Kiel, "because they were in a blitz situation. It was set up perfectly because of the coverage they were in. I saw him (Howard) just after the pitch running down the sideline."

"We call it the 'Pass 29 Special,'" said Howard of his only catch of the day. "I was smiling because I knew we were going to get it. The cornerback and safety came up anticipating the run and ran with the sweep. There was nothing they could do."

Marino, who was a deceiving 26-of-42 for 314 yards on mostly short dump passes, then led the Panthers

Notre Dame 'mystique' resurfaces in upset

By KELLY SULLIVAN
Sports Writer

PITTSBURGH — The top-rated, previously unbeaten Pitt Panthers made a lot of mistakes Saturday — penalties, mishandled snaps, fumbles — but perhaps Pitt's biggest mistake was ignoring the Notre Dame mystique.

As a Pittsburgh sportscaster lamented on his radio talk show after the game, "When you play Notre Dame, you'd better be ready to play their spirit, their desire and their tradition, not just their team."

But Pitt wasn't ready, according to some of the Irish. "We watched them working out before the game," said one player, "and they just didn't look intense or worried. I think they took us a little lightly."

The Panthers won't make that mistake twice. "You know, you hear about the luck of the Irish and all that tradition," said Pitt coach Foge Fazio. "Then you see the fumbles at the crucial times and the turnovers, and you wonder."

"Whether it's mystique and all that lost it for us, I don't know. If it is, I don't know if I would want to play them again."

Notre Dame hadn't knocked off an unbeaten and No. 1 football team since the 1978 Cotton Bowl. That upset, along with the two bowl wins over Alabama, were among seven victories listed on a sheet of paper which read "Big Games" at the top.

Fazio used the sheet in his pre-game pep talk to inspire the team.

"It gave us a lot to think about," offered freshman tailback Allen Pinkett. "You realize, this is what Notre Dame is all about."

"We were beating ourselves the past few weeks — mistakes were just killing us. I hope this hushes the critics. This win gives us back our respectability and puts us back in the national picture. We knew we were one of the top teams in the country — no one else did, but we knew."

An overworked Irish defense, on the field a full quarter more than its teammates on offense, didn't know how far it could bend without breaking, however. The Panthers ran 88 plays to Notre Dame's 48 — amassing 115 more yards in the process.

"We were getting tired, but it's easy to keep going in a game like this," said defensive end Kevin Griffith. "And their offensive line, they were the best pass blockers I've faced in my five years here."

"We've been sitting on leads the past few weeks," said quarterback Blair Kiel, "but we had to open up today — we wanted to give the defense a breather."

The Irish breathed a little easier after that 54-yard score gave them a 17-13 lead, but not until Pinkett's 76-yard scoring burst did victory seem a reality.

Notre Dame goaltender Bob McNamara was impressive in this weekend's series against Western Michigan, but the Irish could only manage a split of the home-and-home set, winning 5-3 in Kalamazoo Saturday after losing at the ACC Friday, 2-0. See Ed Konrady's story at right. (Photo by Ed Carroll)

McNamara shines, ND gains split

After suffering their fourth straight loss Friday, 2-0, the Notre Dame hockey team stormed back Saturday to defeat Western Michigan University, 5-3, to gain a split of their home-and-home series.

The first game, played at the ACC, saw the Irish fall behind 2-0 in the second period on goals by Bronco freshmen David Cromer and Ron Pesetti. That was all Western would need to take the game.

Irish senior Bob McNamara and Bronco sophomore Glenn Healy both had 25 saves Friday, turning away point-blank breakaway shots and doing their best to hold up shaky defenses. Healy got his first shutout of the year, while McNamara was victimized only by a second rebound shot and a very nice feed from Bob Bailey to Pesetti.

Friday's game was rather quiet for the penalty box guard as there were only three penalties, two for WMU and one for the Irish. Saturday's game was quite a different story, however.

The second game became very physical, with 16 penalties being whistled, eight for each team, including a penalty shot for the Bronco's Jeff Crossman because of Rob Ricci's trip at 0:50 of the second period. Crossman beat McNamara but shot wide of the net, and the score stayed at 2-1 for the Broncos.

In the second and third periods the Irish offense got on track, with four goals in less than twenty minutes, two by junior Mike Metzler, one by Adam Parsons and the fourth by co-captain Mark Doman.

Once again McNamara put on a stellar performance stopping 25 shots to Healy's 22.

McNamara's efforts Saturday came at the right time, stopping a four-game Irish losing streak that threatened to drop the Irish directly to the graveyard of the CCHA, and propping up a injury-riddled defense that was a cause of concern for Coach Lefty Smith.

"For a while there, it looked like we wouldn't have any defensemen left for Saturday. (Mark) Benning had a slight fracture of the hand, and when he got hit in the beginning of the game and he was unable to play, we lost (Bob) Thebeau with a thigh injury, (Joe) Bowie hurt his shoulder, and (Steve) Ely injured his ribs.

We were down to three defensemen.

"Fortunately, Joe Bowie was able to 'suck it up' and play — it was a sprain, not a joint injury — and Thebeau was able to play. We didn't know until warmup on Saturday night who we were going to have available. It turned out that John Keating was able to play for us.
