Senate to inspect University policy on non-Catholic religious groups

By MIKE MILLEN
Senior Staff Reporter

In a move destined to increase both religious freedom and freedom of assembly on campus, the Student Senate unanimously voted last night to examine the current University policy regarding non-Catholic religious groups.

According to Executive Coordinator Doug Wurth, the official school policy, as set forth by Director of University Ministry Father Daniel Jenky, prohibits non-Catholic religious groups from organizing or meeting on campus. As examples of this, he said both the Campus Bible Fellowship and the Campus Crusade for Christ have been forbidden from holding organized meetings on the campus.

Wurth, who is heading the senate's committee dealing with this issue, said "There are people who came into campus as christians and they want a place to meet." Interested onlooker Bill Healy thought the current policy unjust. "If they are going to let a person in, either let them practice (their religion) or don't let them in," he said.

Wurth will have more information, along with a copy of the official policy, in a future senate meeting.

Joanie Cahill, president of Lyons Hall, reported "the number one issue at February's Board of Trustees meeting will be equal access" in admissions for women. Cahill, who last fall gave the board a comprehensive report on the women's role at Notre Dame, said she recently spoke with a board member and was told this information.

In the second week of February, Notre Dame will play host to about 20 students from various universities, including Marquette, DePaul, and Villa Nova. Exchange Coordinator Steve Taeyerts said the cost would be approximately $300, with activities including a leadership conference, several meals, and seats at the upcoming Syracuse basketball game.

According to Student Body President Rob Bertino, the event is necessary because "we get questions from

Delivery service 'has never been more popular than now'

By HARDY LEWIS
News Staff

With a service being offered in some Notre Dame dorms, male students can have their laundry not only steam-cleaned and tumble-dried, but also delivered to their door.

Student-initiated laundry delivery services in Grace, Dillon, Morrissey and other halls are picking up students' clean clothes at St. Michael's Laundry on the north side of campus and delivering it to their doors.

The program was originally started by enterprising students in Grace and Flanner Halls three years ago. But the service has never been more popular than now, according to Norm Muller, director of the laundry and dry cleaning service. Presently, there are 550 subscriptions to the "special delivery" service across the campus.

While Flanner has since dropped the service, representatives from other dorms are initiating it in their own halls.

The prices for the service range between six and ten dollars per semester, depending on the dorm. Grace's program is dorm sponsored, according to dorm coordinator Wallace Harris, and all revenue goes to the hall.

Dorm coordinators submit lists of subscribers' names to the laundry staff. On pick-up day, the laundry staff delivers the subscribers' bundles to their dorms, rather than placing them in the bins at the laundry. The dorm coordinators then deliver the bundles either to individual rooms or to a designated pick-up spot in the dorm.

"The dorm representative serves as a liaison between the laundry and the student," said Dillon project coordinator Andre Hutchinson. "We provide a useful convenience at a fair price. The weather's really been rotten, and the guys have better things to do than walk all the way to the laundry."

Muller said that the service does increase the workload at the laundry. "It is more work for us," he said, "but they (the dorm coordinators) have been good about doing their part, so we don't mind helping them out."

In Dillon, where the program is student-run, a percentage of the profits is donated to the dorm. The laundry receives no compensation for its delivery services.

Muller is cautious, however, of a laundry-sponsored delivery program. "If I could get your bundle back to you without fear of it being stolen it would be successful," he said. "Some of the dorms aren't equipped for a program like that because they don't have laundry rooms, and the guys just throw their laundry out in the (first floor) hall to be picked up."

Muller said that St. Michael's Laundry would be liable for theft if it were to sponsor such a delivery program. "That's where the dorm reps come in," he said. "When they take the bundles from us they assume responsibility for them, and that's better because they can make sure the bundles get to the students themselves."

The amount of subscribers to the service varies from dorm to dorm. In Carroll Hall, nearly every resident receives the service. Dillon's relatively new program, however, is used by about one-third of the hall's residents.

Winter cold requires extra caution

By DIANNE MCBRIEN
Staff Reporter

Despite temperatures which plunged below zero last weekend, it was business as usual on the Notre Dame and Saint Mary's campuses.

With wind-chill temperatures of thirty or more degrees below zero, however, it takes common sense and planning to keep one's self and one's car warm and winterproof.

Students need to protect their bodies against the weather, said Registered Nurse Harriet Joyce of the Notre Dame Student Health Center. She warned of frostbite, "We've been seeing a lot of it in the last few days—mostly the uncovered spots, like fingertips and earlobes."

Symptoms of frostbite include glossy white appearance and itching or stinging sensations in the affected skin. Blackened skin indicates advanced frostbite. Joyce recommends gently thawing the affected area with warm water or chafing.

The layered look is more than just fashionable this winter. "A lot of layers help insulate body heat," said Joyce, who suggested that students should not go out unless it is absolutely necessary and they are warmly dressed. Joggers should cover their mouths with scarves to block freezing air from rushing into their lungs.

Students also should be careful not to mix drinking and exposure on chilly nights, Joyce said. She explained that alcohol dilates the blood vessels, which causes loss of body heat, making the drinker especially vulnerable to low temperatures.

Notre Dame Security Director Glenn Terry suggested several ways that students can protect their cars from the cold. He recommended the use of light oil and antifreeze, as well as "keeping the battery well charged."

Terry emphasized that students must use caution when planning to travel, and that they should listen to radio and television bulletins or dial numbers listed in the front of the telephone directory for road conditions.

Weather can affect Notre Dame

By JOHN-JOHN AMORES
Staff Reporter

The blizzard-like conditions and record-breaking cold that swept through South Bend this past weekend not only caused concern about overexposure and frostbite, but also fueled hopes of possible class cancellations.

With regard to extreme weather conditions, the decision whether to cancel classes at Notre Dame is officially made by Provost Timothy O'Meara, since it is considered an academic decision. However, the decision is also made with the cooperation of the associate provosts, and the information gained from the local weather, police, and highway detachments.

Associate Provost Father Edward Malloy said that in his ten-year experience on the faculty of Notre Dame, there has only been one instance of classes being cancelled, and that was for a five-day weekend during the winter of 1977-78, when the city was at a complete standstill.

Malloy said that the first consideration during inclement weather is the safety of faculty and students, and that if the situation warrants, classes will be cancelled. However, Malloy also said that the people of South Bend are used to the "rigorous" climate, and have a tendency to make it through difficult weather.

If classes were cancelled, though, Malloy said that the decision would be made promptly and relayed to the individual dorms, as well as announced through the local television and radio stations.

The recent winter weather, although cold, has not affected the operation of food services. William Hickey, the director of food services at Notre Dame, said that all workers have been able to reach the dining halls, and although there has been some difficulty in getting the trucks started, nothing has been held up. In fact, the only effect that the cold weather has had is to increase the number of students using the dining halls and the Leprechaun Pizza service.

The extreme winter weather of the past few days has brought to mind some of the other memorable winters in South Bend,

More than $165,000 was raised by Notre Dame for United Way in its recent campaign. This is $3,000 more than the goal the University set as part of the St. Joseph County 1984 United Way Drive. It also sets a University record. William McLean, assistant dean of the law school and chairman of the University United Way Campaign said he attributed the success of the drive "to the hard work of a lot of volunteering people and the compassion and generosity of all elements of the Notre Dame family." In addition to the $7,500 contributed by students, 1,600 administrators, faculty, staff and retirees of the University donated money to the cause. Employees of the Notre Dame Credit Union, Ave Maria Press and WNDU and members of the Holy Cross Order also were "willing participants" in the campaign, McLean said. — The Observer

Job at Court teaches compassion from a new point of view

Fortunately, for most Notre Dame and Saint Mary's students, the only glimpse they get of the U.S. court system is due to an occasional speeding ticket or being around the Five Points area at the wrong time.

Traffic court, however, is only one small part of any city's court system. But contrary to what many television shows would have you believe, the rest is not devoted to life-and-death child custody cases and alimony battles.

Working at the Circuit Court of Cook County, Ill., during the summer and Christmas break, exposed me to the most frequent users of the courts - the poor and the disabled. While on television Blake Carrington fights to save his oil company, this is the time of year that many are trying to save their homes and their paychecks.

The Cook County Court system is among the largest in the world. Over six million cases a year are handled, and civil trial court, garnishment court and eviction court carry most of that volume. The garnishment courts pick up where trial courts leave off. Once a defendant has been proven guilty, he must pay up. But it's usually not that simple. Often the person is unemployed, or simply can't afford to pay the amount named in the suit or set by the judge. If that is the case, the courts go to his employer or bank account to collect.

Garnishment court obviously affects the poor, and the cases seem endless. Six hundred cases a day is not unusual. Comparable in caseload is Eviction Court, very popular this time of year. Although it is against the law in Illinois to throw anyone out on the streets during the winter, the court was overflowing with landlords and tenants each day. Mothers, hoping for sympathy, carried babies into court and pleaded with the judge. Lawyers threaten tenants with the sheriff, and the possibility of forced eviction. And out in the hall, the landlords and tenants fought, threatened, and argued, until the bailiff kicked them out.

Watching this process go on, and being involved in it, was a fantastic experience. The most interesting part of the job, however, grew to be observing the attitudes of my co-workers.

During break, I worked with a sophomore from another prominent Catholic university in the Midwest. The contempt he showed towards defendants was amazing. His attitude was consistently, "If they're too lazy to go out and work, they deserve what they get."

I wonder how prevalent this belief really is. Especially among students at other prominent Catholic schools, namely Notre Dame and Saint Mary's.

Theresa Guarino

Assistant News Editor

Most schools like to think they are turning out graduates who are bright, talented, and concerned with improving the world around them. But it seems to be these same privileged people, who give themselves the luxury of looking down the nose at those they don't see as "measuring up" to their view of hard work.

My other co-worker was a woman in her 50s, who had been working in a courtroom since the age of 18. Never married, but with three children, she went out of her way to advise, and commiserate with many frightened people.

One person had years of a Catholic education. Another had never gone further than a Chicago public high school, but had 10 times the compassion of the religiously educated person.

Students here will always be told they are the cream of the academic crop, and how others would love to be in their shoes. Four years at Notre Dame and Saint Mary's does not necessarily mean a better moral character or sense of values, however. And feeling superior is an easy trap to fall into.

A Catholic education costs money, and students purchasing one are usually not near the bottom of the economic scale. Trying to identify with those who are can be difficult. It is one thing to contribute a few dollars to the local food pantry, but it's another thing to feel for the people you are helping.

Protests mark abortion anniversary

Associated Press

Church bells will toll today in Fargo, N.D., to protest the 12th anniversary of the U.S. Supreme Court decision legalizing abortion, while in 18 states, pro-choice supporters pledged to continue their protests against violence and vandalism at abortion centers.

As anti-abortionist clergy stage a symbolic funeral of a fetus in Portland, Ore., a coalition of religious and women's rights groups plans a prayer breakfast in a downtown Topeka, Kan., church.

But on the anniversary, activists on both sides said they wanted above all to avoid the violence that has plagued the issue with increasing regularity in recent months.

Yesterday, abortion rights supporters ended a vigil that had lasted more than 60 hours at the Fargo Women's Health Organization, but clinic staff said a security guard would remain on duty to ward off any vandalism. Three men were arrested Saturday in connection with eight anti-abortion bombings in Washington, D.C., Virginia and Maryland in the past year.

At least 24 such bombing attacks have occurred since last January, and the National Organization for Women sponsored round-the-clock vigils at 25 family planning centers and abortion clinics in 18 states to protest the violence.

Women holding a vigil outside the Hollywood Feminist Women's Health Center in Los Angeles said they planned to keep watch at least through today.

Security was increased at the Pilgrim Medical Group in Montclair, N.J. "We're going to have guards three days a week now, and we've advised the staff that they can't be lax," said Joe DeBlasi, a security and personnel consultant at the clinic.

"I think the bombs are obviously to create fear for a whole lot of people - women who seek services, personnel who provide services - and that is deeply saddening," said Sarah Weddington, the attorney who argued the landmark case of Jane Roe before the Supreme Court in October 1972.

Reagan restates first-term beliefs

Associated Press

WASHINGTON - President Reagan, forced indoors by a record inaugural freeze, re-enacted his oath-taking yesterday and rededicated his second term to staunch conservative principles. "We are creating a new America, a rising nation," he declared with unabashed optimism.

In the beauty and comfort of the Capitol rotunda, Reagan emphasized the limits of government, but stressed the need for a mighty defense. "There must be no waver-ing by us, nor any doubts by others," he said. In the face of Soviet opposition, he emphasized his intention to press forward with a "security shield" anti-missile system.

As Washington shivered in below-zero wind chills, Reagan, 73, scrapped the traditional Pennsylvania Avenue parade out of concern for the thousands of high-school band members. They found their instruments wouldn't make music on the coldest inaugural day in American history.

Chief Justice Warren E. Burger administered the oath to Reagan under the Capitol dome, repeating a brief ceremony that took place in the White House on Sunday following the swearing-in of Vice President George Bush. In the background, spectators raised snapshot cameras to capture the moment.

With a risk of frostbite facing hundreds of thousands of parade marchers, spectators and guests at an outdoor swearing-in ceremony, Reagan accepted the advice of inaugural planners and doctors and canceled the most spectacular events in a four-day, $12-million extravaganza.

and the effect that they had upon the Notre Dame community.

Sister Jean Lenz, assistant vice-president for student affairs, recalled that during the winter of 1977-78, when she was the rector of Farley Hall, the entire staff from Channel 16, including popular local weatherman Dick Addis, was forced to spend three days in the basement of Farley. The station operated out of the building that is now the Center for Social Concerns, and the snowstorm had crippled the local roads.

Malloy also has memories of the big snow of 1977-78. He remembered that after five days of crippling snow, the basketball team had a game against Maryland at the ACC. And because of the weather, it was declared that no tickets would be needed for the game. Anyone who could make it to the arena could watch the contest.

Malloy recalled that people came from "all over town" to watch the game, which the Irish eventually won.

Because of an editing error in the story on Bill Healy, Healy's class was incorrectly identified. He is a junior.

Because of an editing error, Father William Beauchamp was incorrectly identified in yesterday's article on inquiries by other colleges concerning Notre Dame's alcohol policy. Beauchamp is the executive assistant to the president and executive vice president of the University.

Also in yesterday's edition, a story about Indiana's winter storm contained a reporting error. The story reported no power outages in the South Bend area. In fact, about 1000 homes were without power when a line broke Sunday morning east of the river between Angela and Jefferson boulevards.

Many applicants fabricate resumes

Special to The Observer

Looking for a new job and feeling self-indulgent? If you fabricate your resume to find that job, you're among one-third of all job seekers who attempt to boost themselves in the eyes of a prospective employer.

If you "give" yourself an M.B.A. to boot, you've awarded yourself the most common of manufactured degrees.

Some signs of the "ringer" are evident, according to Robert Vecchio, chairman of management at Notre Dame, who addressed the problem of phony resumes in an edition of the journal Personnel published last year.

One of the most obvious signs is an ambiguous resume, said Vecchio. Oddly phrased sections, a lot of abbreviations and gaps in employment dates should signal a warning.

In hopes that the ambiguities will be interpreted favorably, Vecchio said, some candidates will list a number of schools they have "attended." The term may not be an out-and-out lie, but constitutes misrepresentation when the candidate believes it will be interpreted as "graduated."

Abbreviations are another cause for caution, Vecchio said. He recalled the story of a job candidate who listed graduation from "USC."

In the employer's mind, USC translated into the University of Southern California. Late in the interview, the candidate owned up to having a degree from the University of Southern Colorado. Not quite the same.

Employment dates listed with years but not months should also be questioned. Such omissions might imply the candidate has more past experience than he or she actually possesses.

Vecchio said the technique might also mask the time it took to obtain a degree, past firings or worse. "Who knows, the person might have spent that time in jail," said Vecchio.

But even though some misrepresentations, such as inflating past salaries and responsibilities, might seem fairly harmless, Vecchio said the overall problem is hardly a trivial matter.

The statistics he cites, collected by the National Credential Verification Service of Minneapolis, indicate that employers run roughly a one in three risk of hiring a candidate who is misrepresented in some way.

"Candidates who lose out on a job opportunity when a less qualified candidate lies are, to a large extent, victimized. Someone loses out and the career of a qualified candidate is affected by a fraudulent candidate."

Coworkers and customers are also placed at risk." More extreme cases might cause serious harm, Vecchio said, using the example of an imposter surgeon.

But the good news is that employers can weed out most of the phonies by exerting some caution and, in some cases, some common sense. Vecchio suggests that employers read resumes carefully, making notes on any items to be questioned. It's also a good idea, he added, to have employees who are experts in the field scrutinize the resume and question the candidate during interviews.

In some cases, he said, candidate's skills should be tested in an on-the-job simulation. In others, transcripts should be obtained directly from an institution, not the candidate, and references should be checked by telephone or mail. However, Vecchio added, a uniform policy for checking credentials should be developed to avoid discrimination charges.

When fraudulence is suspected, Vecchio also suggests trapping the candidate in his or her own lie.

The best protective measure for employers, Vecchio said, is a signed application form. Resumes normally are not signed and are not legal documents.

Windy City announces closing of restaurant

By MARY HEILMANN
Senior Staff Reporter

Windy City Pastaria and Sports Emporium has announced the closing of the restaurant portion of the establishment. The bar portion will remain open for business.

According to general manager Dean Mighion, the decision to close the restaurant was made by First American Restaurants Inc., which owns the business and is located in Phoenix, Ariz.

"I don't think it was a question of the restaurant losing money," Mighion said. "It wasn't like it was taking big losses. What caused the move was the opening of two new pastarias in Phoenix. Our kitchen equipment will be shipped there, which will save the company money since they won't have to provide new equipment. The bar remains open in the same form as it always has been."

Mighion added that he does not know whether the bar will expand its operations to include that part of the building which formerly housed the restaurant, or of any plans to alter the present establishment to feature live bands or dancing.

"That decision rests with the First American Restaurants owners. At this time, I'm unaware of their plans."

As a result of the restaurant's closing, 32 employees lost their jobs. Mighion is presently involved in relocating those employees by helping their applications process and providing recommendations. The business has retained about ten employees.

The name of the restaurant was changed in mid-1984 from Nancy's Windy City, which it had been called since its opening in September 1983, to Windy City Pastaria and Sports Emporium.

Asked about the reasons for the change and its perceived effect on business, Mighion said, "We felt the change was necessary to give people a better perception of our menu, since we were not just a pizza place. It was also done to distinguish us from Nancy's of Chicago, which is not incorporated in our company."

Mighion added that it is impossible to estimate the effect of the name change on the volume of the restaurant's business.

Are you still not sure what you'd like to do in life? Are you still wondering whether or not graduate school in genetic engineering is right for you? Have you found out all the career possibilities for your major?

If you answered "no" to any of these questions you may want to stop by the Career and Placement Services Office and visit their new career guidance program appropriately called DISCOVER.

DISCOVER is a computer software package that allows users to learn more about their interests and skills, as well as occupations and educational opportunities.

The guidance program has four parts: learning about yourself, searching for occupations, learning about occupations and searching for educational institutions. The user can select any category to work on and can take as much time as he or she wants to finish the session.

In the "Learning About Yourself" part of the program, a 90 question "value inventory test" allows students to rate different types of activities. After the test the computer responds with a graphic representation of all the occupations in the United States called the World of Work Map. The area or areas of the map that are closest to the person's interests are noted on the map. The user can then list all the careers which fall in his or her area of the map.

Before the actual "guidance session" begins the computer asks the user his or her social security number, name and educational status. The computer uses the social security number as a means of identification for that session. If the user wants to save his responses to the different tests he may do so. The data is stored on a 10 megabyte fixed disk which is part of the system.

DISCOVER also has a section useful for searching for colleges, graduate as well as undergraduate. The program can be asked to search for colleges according to characteristics desired by the user as well as provide information about a college already in mind.

The DISCOVER program, which is also run out of the Student Health Center, is open to all students. Interested students can go the Career and Placement Service Office in the Memorial Library basement and ask to use the program anytime during office hours.

colleges all the time on things like the constitution," and the conference would also facilitate an exchange of ideas. Subjects such as freshman orientation and student activities will be discussed.

Student Senator Javier Oliva said an "Off-Campus Week" will be held soon. "It's primarily an information event," he said, adding "we're not trying to promote people to leave." Information will include sample housing contracts, talks from representatives of Campus View, lists of available housing, and other helpful information. The date has not yet been set, but should be before housing contracts are due (February 4th).

Rules for student body elections were clarified by Maher Mouasher, Ombudsman Election Chairman. He said an informational meeting will take place on the 29th of January, with a mandatory meeting following two days later. Mouasher will be holding office hours in the OBUD office from 12 to 2 pm next week to answer any questions.

Bertino said "one of the things we tried to do is avoid the problems of last year," which centered around write-in candidates. He summed up the new rule changes by saying "If you plan on running for anything, you better meet the deadline."

A motion submitted by Student Senate Parliamentarian Brian Holst was unanimously approved for consideration. The motion was a wording change to the constitution which involves adding senators to the list of those who can be impeached by a two-thirds vote of the senate.

Today's concern seems to be making the most Recently, Newsweek magazine ran a cover story about the "yuppie" in American society. This new group (young urban professionals) displays a tremendous concern and interest in personal wealth and gain. Reading the article,

Brian McKeon

one gains the feeling that these people (if you believe those interviewed are representative) have a great love of both money and themselves.

One "yuppie" interviewed for the article best epitomized the feelings of her group politically. This past election, the young woman (age 25) explained, was the first time that "I had to think about my pocketbook." An admirer of President Reagan "for financial reasons," but an opponent of the Republican stances on abortion and other social issues, she eventually voted for Mondale. However, there's more to her story that you ought to know. "I knew Reagan would win easily anyway," she said. "If I thought it was a close election, I might not have voted for Mondale. I had the best of both worlds. I could vote my conscience and still come out ahead financially."

Well, now there's someone with some firm convictions. She didn't really want Mondale to win, but, because of the President's expected landslide, she was able to ease her conscience. Makes you proud to be an American, doesn't it?

The yuppies may not be the only group focusing their lives on their wallets. An annual survey of college freshmen conducted jointly by UCLA and the American Council on Education showed that materialism among freshmen is on the rise. Nearly 68 percent said that a "very important" reason for attending college was "to be able to make more money." Comparatively, only 50 percent felt that way in 1971. In addition, being financially well off has jumped from ninth place in 1970 to second place among personal values expressed by survey participants.

A great number of college students are not satisfied with making more money. They want to do even better than that. Last week, in a class I have since dropped, the professor asked how many in the class wanted "to make as much money as they possibly could." A majority of hands went up. The professor didn't seem very surprised.

Why the preoccupation in our society with making a lot of money? Admittedly, money gives a person a certain independence. But to make as much as you possibly can? That seems to be little more than self-serving.

Some people, when nagged by their consciences about the disproportionate distribution of wealth in this country, shrug it off as a necessity of capitalism and point to Christ, who said that "there will always be poor among us." The Catholic bishops have been ridiculed recently by numerous commentators for attacking the economic system of the United States. The critics were shocked that the bishops would challenge capitalism. Michael Novak, a leading conservative lay Catholic, said of the bishops' criticisms of "our punitive attitude toward the poor" that "like the Democrats in San Francisco, they always blame America first." Who, as Leon Wieseltier of the New Republic correctly puts it, should be blamed for American hunger and American homelessness?

America has always been a country which prides itself on "rugged individualism." Today, a new breed of individuals is emerging, one which aspires to the acquisition of vast amounts of wealth. Is this healthy for our country? Not when this pursuit of money and material gain seems to be the primary purpose for living. This new breed of "yuppies" wants to have their cake and eat it too. Concerned mainly about themselves, they lack any concept of social conscience and responsibility to the community.

Some historians say that the period of the 1960's and 1970's was one which tore at the social fabric of society. However, the period also saw great social change which altered our country permanently. This new generation, characterized by an evident "me-first" mindset, may do more harm to society than the movers of the past two decades. Taking their share from the society without giving anything back, without caring for the "have-nots," is of little benefit to society.

Last semester resolution may be easiest to keep

Like new years, new semesters invariably bring with them a list of resolutions aimed at the self-betterment of the student. They can include anything from a vow to never again fall six weeks behind in one's classes to a commitment to lose those ten pounds you swore you would not gain at the beginning of the previous semester.

outside, looking in

As a senior, I have had seven such opportunities to make (and then break) new semester resolutions. I remember the second semester of freshman year, swearing to get an A in calculus, followed by a sophomore year resolution to never look at another differential equation for as long as I live. Junior year I resolved to wake up early, take morning classes, and have my homework finished before dinner time. In the second semester I vowed never again to take a class before 10:10 a.m. In the fall of this year, I decided to take full advantage of my last year of formal education and signed up for 18 hours of classes. This semester I've promised myself no more than 12.

Yet despite this long history of broken resolutions and otherwise futile attempts at self-betterment, I once again intend to make a resolution as my last semester at Notre Dame begins. Yes, I am aware that I have never successfully followed through with my previous resolutions, and no, I do not take a perverse sense of satisfaction in repeated failure. Instead, I have found the perfect resolution: one I will enjoy fulfilling.

The problem with past resolutions, as I see it, is that the resolution has always been negative in nature. It has always required giving up ere, or something I enjoy or performing some task which I dislike. Finally, it occurred to me to choose a resolution that both warrants my time and energy, and that I will find enjoyable to do. Hence, for the spring semester of 1985 I resolve to spend less time studying and more time socializing with friends.

This simple but worthwhile resolution, however, is not nearly as frivolous as it seems. I have good reason for such a resolution and, at the terrible risk of appearing maudlin in print shall explain.

I and my fellow seniors will be graduating in exactly 117 days. While for some of us graduation day cannot come too soon, for all seniors life as we have known it over the past four years will come to an abrupt end on May 19. For better or for worse, there will be no more Notre Dame football weekends, tailgaters, An Tostal celebrations, or SYR's; no more quarter beer nights at Senior Bar, off-campus parties, or illicit dorm social "gatherings." But most of all, there will be no more Notre Dame fraternity. On May 19, the class of 1985 will be scattered across the nation, distributed amongst countless professional schools and corporations. Never again will the class of '85 be together in the same place at the same time.

No doubt the pressure to do well in school is great and as a result it becomes easy to let the demands of daily class work dominate our attention. A resolution to spend time with friends recognizes and appreciates what is best at Notre Dame. It is also a resolution worth keeping.

We have the rest of our lives to get ahead, but only 117 more days at Notre Dame.

P.O.Box Q

Is the Credit Union a friend or enemy

Dear Editor:

What is the purpose of the Notre Dame Credit Union, to serve the Notre Dame community or to make inordinant interest on its apparently immobile and captive market?

Recently, the Credit Union has adopted increasingly restrictive and arguably confiscatory policies with regard to deposits of checks, namely the "21-day hold". At first this policy only applied to the deposit of out-of-state checks for over $200. This was inconvenient but probably reasonable in light of the amount involved. But upon returning from Christmas break with checks to deposit for less than $200 I learned the infamous "21-day hold" had been extended: it was changed to include any out-of-state personal check over $50 which is not covered by the member's current account balance. This is unreasonable. The majority of out of state personal checks deposited by Notre Dame students are from the students' parents. Does the Credit Union mistrust our parents?

With bills due, in need of cash, and nearly too angry to speak I took my checks to a nearby Notre Dame competitor, Valley American Bank. There I was not greeted with lines and inflexible policies but prompt, courteous service and a management willing to listen. Within a few moments I had opened a new account and had deposited my checks - without the "21-day hold".

How can the Credit Union justify its hold policy when major banks in the area, with less ties to the University community, do not need to tie up these deposits at all? Has the Credit Union found some lucrative 21-day interest-bearing certificates to invest in? Surely it does not take three weeks to clear a check if cash flow is what they are worried about.

My hassles with the Credit Union are over. I have a new bank. Perhaps if more students do the same the Notre Dame Credit Union will get the message, terminate its "21-day hold" policy and return to the business of serving the Notre Dame community.

An apple for teacher, an 'Apple' for student

by Vic Sciulli
features staff writer

From out of the depths of the Silicon Valley they came. With their beige compact bodies and dark faces they spread slowly at first until it seemed like they were everywhere. Since their arrival they have succeeded in changing the working habits of many students. Notre Dame would never be the same again.

For those of you who haven't gotten over the movie yet, I'm not talking about Gremlins. What I am talking about is a computer, the Macintosh personal computer from Apple. And it does seem to be turning up in a lot of different places these days.

A great deal of publicity surrounded the introduction of the Macintosh last year. In 1982 the Apple Corporation had introduced Lisa, which was promoted primarily as an office computer. Despite its state of the art graphic capabilities, power and ease of use, Lisa never had the chance to live up to its expectations. A prohibitively high price (just under $10,000) and the failure to capture a significant portion of the office computer market dominated by IBM contributed to Lisa's very low sales.

Macintosh was designed with many of the same features as the Lisa but with less power and features and with an aim to capture a greater share of the personal computer market. (Apple stills sells more personal computers than any of its competitors.)

Some critics called the "Mac" with its "mouse" more of a toy than a computer. Indeed there were many new features never seen before on a personal computer that made the Mac easy to learn. It's small size (13 1/2 by 10 1/2 by 9 1/2) is less imposing than other personal computers. A "mouse", a small unit attached to the machine allows a user to operate the Macintosh without a keyboard simply by moving the mouse on a tabletop and clicking the button when the desired command is pointed to.

With its Macwrite and Macpaint software the Macintosh is able to combine sophisticated wordprocessing with graphic capabilities. More importantly the Macintosh is capable of running application programs like spreadsheets and databases as well as languages like BASIC and Pascal.

Ken Fryszak, an RA in Stanford who bought his Macintosh last May, said he has not been dissatisfied with the Macintosh. "I like its ease of use, the pull down windows and mouse. You don't have to spend a lot of time upfront learning it. You can get right into it without reading manuals."

Fryszak said he bought the computer for three reasons: his career after college, family business and for work in school. He currently uses the Multiplan spreadsheet program and is hoping to buy a modem and a communication software package soon.

"I had problems with the logic board but it was serviced excellently," he said.

Although he believes the Macintosh has made things much easier for him, he doesn't think it gives him advantages over students who don't own a computer. "For me the Macintosh allows me to write more easily but some people just work better writing their paper out, editing and then typing it. It all depends on the person."

General Micro opened a store in the basement of LaFortune to sell the Macintoshes and other "Apples" to the public. The store was part of a special deal arranged by the University to sell the Macintoshes at special rates to students, faculty and staff of Notre Dame and Saint Mary's.

Paul Kramer/The Observer

Several classes at the University now use the Macintosh. The Introduction to Computer Systems and Introduction to Pascal in the Computer Applications department involve programming on the Macintosh.

Jill Middendorf of General Micro said that since their introduction last February the store has sold approximately 2000 Macintoshes. The $1197 price, discounted 50 percent from its retail price, includes the Macintosh computer itself and the Macwrite/Macpaint software. Peripherals for the Mac include a printer, external disk drive, numeric keypad and modems. Middendorf said all peripherals and software sold for the Macintosh are discounted as part of the arrangement. Students can order software if it is not in the store.

Middendorf said the printer and the external drive are the most popular peripherals while Microsoft's BASIC is the most popular software sold. The other peripherals do not sell as fast, Middendorf said. Printing cartridges, floppy disks and paper are also sold.

All Macintoshes sold have 128K of internal memory but a memory expansion to 512K is available for $912. The larger memory will allow the Macintosh to run software packages like Lotus which require larger memory.

The store also sells other Apple products, including the Lisa and the new Apple IIc.

Students who buy the Macintosh have a 90 day limited warranty. They may also purchase a special service contract that covers cost and labor for 15 months if it is purchased within ninety days of the Macintosh. If it is purchased after 90 days, the contract covers 12 months.

For those of you want to buy a Macintosh but don't have the money - relax. Middendorf said the special agreement will last until February, 1987. But don't wait too long; alumni are not included in the special agreement.

Paul Kramer/The Observer

The computer, while befitting of an office setting, is bound to become a common fixture in homes ... or dorm rooms.

Knee injury sidelines Roundfield

Associated Press

DETROIT - A knee injury requiring surgery will keep Detroit Pistons forward Dan Roundfield off the court for up to four weeks, a spokesman for the National Basketball Association team said yesterday.

Roundfield, a 6-foot-8 starter, tore cartilage in his left knee in the second quarter of Thursday's 105-89 victory over the New York Knicks, spokesman Matt Dobeck said.

The date and location of the operation have yet to be determined, he added.

Roundfield, a former Indiana Pacer who has averaged 11.8 points and 8.5 rebounds per game this season, played Saturday despite the injury. A doctor in Roundfield's home town, Atlanta, determined surgery was necessary, the spokesman said.

Patrick takes over Brooks fired by struggling Rangers

Associated Press

NEW YORK - Herb Brooks was fired yesterday as coach of the New York Rangers and was replaced by Craig Patrick, the National Hockey League team's vice president and general manager.

Patrick, who also coached the team during the 1980-81 season, said that Robbie Ftorek would become a playing assistant coach.

"We feel today's change is in the best interest of the team," Patrick said. "This is no reflection on Herb's abilities. We feel he is an excellent coach and will be successful in the future."

Brooks took over as the Rangers' 19th coach on June 4, 1981, the same day Patrick was elevated to team vice president. Brooks, the mastermind of the 1980 U.S. Olympic team's gold medal performance at Lake Placid, N.Y., compiled a 131-113-41 record with the Rangers.

But so far this season, the team was just 15-22-8 and in fifth place in the Patrick Division. The team has been hit by a rash of injuries to star players but also has performed inconsistently all year.

Hoops

to attempt to score the winning points.

However, an Off-Campus player got a little too physical, at least according to the referee, and an intentional two-shot foul was called. Captain Steve Treacy converted on the two foul shots and Off Campus failed to score on its final possession.

Both these teams stand at 2-0 until a decision is made on the game.

Grace is the first place team in this division to date. They have recorded victories over Keenan (0-3), Howard (0-2), and Holy Cross (1-2). Grace will play Off Campus tonight and then Morrissey in the last game of the season. These three teams seem to be the class of the division and it appears that the league title for the Bigten will go down to the final week.

In the Pecten, St. Ed's and Sorin have both gotten off to fast starts at 3-0. St. Ed's has beaten Grace (2-1); Flanner (1-2); and Fisher (0-3). Flanner, Fisher, and Stanford (2-1) have all fallen at the hands of Sorin. Although both of these teams have unblemished records to this point, Grace and Stanford will make some noise before the season is completed. St. Ed's and Sorin met last night and The Observer will have results of this game and many other important "A" League games in Thursday's paper.

"Our epee team has fenced out of their mind," said DeCicco. "Last year, if we had the team that we have this year, we'd go undefeated."

In the foil, the Irish are also strong with 1984 national champion Higgs-Coulthard. The sophomore who went 43-6 in his first year is currently 13-1 with a gold medal in the USFA Open under his belt.

According to DeCicco, junior co-captain Van der Velden may be the best or at least one of the best in the country. Lifetime, he maintains a 66-28 record (32-8 in 1984). This year, he is 10-4. With his injury two weeks ago, he might be questionable for the upcoming Ohio State Tournament. Nevertheless, he will be a key for the Irish in 1985.

Rounding out the foil lineup are juniors Dave Reuter (5-7 in 1985) and Craig Funai (5-4) and sophomore Phil Moschella (4-1).

In the sabre, the Irish are led by senior co-captain Mike Janis. With 115 lifetime wins, he is at the top among current fencers in that category. After going 40-3 last year and meeting some tough luck in the NCAA tourney, he is back in good form with a 9-1 record.

Junior Don Johnson adds depth at the number two spot with a 9-3 record. After going 35-6 last season, he came on at the end to be the runner-up to National Champion Michael Lofton of New York University in the foil.

Junior John Edwards (27-1 in 1984, 68-11 lifetime) is competing with sophomore Tony Consoli (28-2, 41-7) for the number three spot on the team. Edwards is 6-3 after losing his first three bouts while Consoli is 6-6.

Of the three teams, DeCicco believes that his epee squad is perhaps his best currently based on their 44-10 mark. However, his 37-17 sabre and foil squads are also very talented and have been fencing some tough competition. Teamwork will be the key for success in the 1985 season for the Irish.

"We have some individuals who are very, very competitive, but you can't go undefeated with just a couple of individuals," said DeCicco.

To provide the Irish with a tough test of their ability will be this weekend's tournament at Ohio State. At the Buckeye university, they will face the strong host team along with the surprise team of 1985 - Illinois. Also on the schedule will be a tough Cleveland State and a tough Case Western Reserve.

The first home meet for the Irish will come on Feb. 23, when they will face Northwestern, Illinois, and Wayne State in the ACC Fieldhouse.

San Francisco's running game was factor in 'Super' win over Dolphins

Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO - In the days before Super Bowl XIX, finding predictions was easy. Everybody seemed to know exactly what was going to happen.

Some people even turned out to be right.

There was Joe Montana, for example, examining the astounding passing statistics Dan Marino had assembled this season.

Marino's numbers were produced in a Miami offense that used its ground game for decoration. The Dolphins traveled through the air — much like the San Francisco team that won the Super Bowl three years ago.

"I don't think we threw 70 percent of the time," Montana said, remembering that team. "That's impressive, when you throw that much and you're winning."

Then he added an interesting kicker.

"A lot of teams throw that much, but they're losing," he said.

On Sunday, Marino set Super Bowl passing records with 50 passes and 29 completions. And he lost.

San Francisco guard Randy Cross thought he recognized the Dolphins before this Super Bowl. They reminded him of his own team in 1981.

"Miami's going into this Super Bowl a lot like we did three years ago, with more of an implied running threat than a real running threat," he said.

The implied running threat gained just 25 yards on Sunday.

Miami defensive coordinator Chuck Studley was worried about Montana's mobility. "He's most dangerous when he gets out of the pocket," Studley said. "We've got to contain him, keep him from getting outside."

The Dolphins did not accomplish that and Montana set a Super Bowl quarterback rushing record with 59 yards.

Tackle Keith Fahnhorst had been asked about the 49er ground game in what seemed certain to be a bombs-away air show between Marino and Montana.

"I hope it's being overlooked by the Dolphins," he said. "I'm sure not though. I think it'll be one of the keys of the game as far as controlling the ball and keeping their offense off the field."

"We're looking forward to running the ball," running back Wendell Tyler had said. "A lot of people don't look at us as a running team, but we've been able to run on everybody and I think that will be a key to the game."

San Francisco rushed 40 times. Miami tried just nine runs, fewest ever in a Super Bowl.

USFL's Generals could sign Flutie, Phelan by week's end

Associated Press

NEW YORK - Doug Flutie may sign a contract with the New Jersey Generals of the United States Football League by the end of the week and he said yesterday the failure of the National Football League to make him an offer is making his decision easy.

Flutie, his attorney Bob Woolf and Boston College teammate Gerard Phelan had a get-acquainted lunch with Generals' owner Donald Trump in New York yesterday.

"My aim is to bring the negotiations to a head as quickly as possible," said Woolf, who represents both Flutie and Phelan. "If negotiations go well, it's conceivable we might have something by the end of the week."

Woolf pointed out he was not negotiating a package deal with the Generals for the two players.

"They want Gerard very much," Woolf said. "They have always wanted Gerard and invited him down here. It's a unique situation where Doug and Gerard are very close and the Generals realize how important it is they play together."

The Generals reportedly have offered Flutie, a Heisman Trophy-winning quarterback, a non-deferred deal that would pay him $5 million over four years. Such a contract would make him one of the highest paid rookies ever.

The Buffalo Bills of the NFL have the top selection in the league's April 30 draft, but Woolf said they have not talked contract with Flutie. Last week, the Bills announced they had not made a decision on who they would pick first.

Interhall basketball has close races in all three eight-team A divisions

By JERRY MELIA
Sports Writer

Although it may seem that Digger's team is the only show in town, there are other basketball teams that play in the ACC. The men's interhall league began a few weeks before fall semester finals, and most teams completed three of their eight regular season games.

The 1984-85 schedule of "A" Leagues has three separate divisions or leagues which are named ACC, Bigten, and Pecten. Each division in turn consists of eight teams.

In the ACC League, Bob Brogan's Off-Campus team won its first three contests by outscoring Cavanaugh (with a record of 0-3), Carroll (0-2), and Alumni (1-2). Flanner is only a half game behind while posting a 2-0 record. They have beaten Cavanaugh and Dillon (2-1).

Flanner played Carroll last night to finish the third cycle of games in the league. Flanner does not encounter Off Campus until Feb. 5. There is still much to be decided in this league with only one game separating the first four teams.

The Bigten has three teams which are currently undefeated, although the jury is still out on one game between Morrissey and Off Campus. These two teams played a rather controversial game last month where it appeared that Morrissey had won, but when the game was completed, Off Campus had filed a protest over a call made by a referee. With less than 30 seconds left in the game, Morrissey was trailing by a point and had the ball. Off Campus had three fouls to give before they were in a penalty situation. They decided to use these fouls to give Morrissey as little time as a possible

The Notre Dame men's fencing team, in action here against Wayne State, will be on the road this weekend for the Ohio State Tournament. The Irish are 6-0 so far this season, and are looking to dethrone Wayne State as NCAA champs. Mike Chmiel previews the tourney below.

Men's swim team suffers tough setback to Ferris State

By MARY SIEGER
Sports Writer

It was one of those meets you try to put behind you and then move ahead with the rest of your season.

In its first dual meet of 1985, the Notre Dame men's swim team watched its season record slip to 1-3 as the Irish lost to Ferris State University, 65-48, this weekend.

Ferris State jumped out to an early 7-0 lead and the Irish never seemed to recover from their initial disadvantage. Notre Dame pulled within 10 points of Ferris State going into the final three events of the meet, but came up short in the end.

"It could have gone to the last event, but we weren't able to do it," said Notre Dame head coach Dennis Stark. "Some people had good swims and if we had a few more with some good swims, it could have gone the other way."

Although the Irish did not do as well as they anticipated in Saturday's meet, several swimmers submitted outstanding performances. Senior Tim Bohdan won the 200-yard freestyle race in 1:48.1 and the 200-yard backstroke in 2:05.7.

Senior teammate Brian Casey captured first place in the 200-yard butterfly finishing in 2:01.1 and took second place for the Irish in the 200-yard breast stroke. Diver Mike Kennedy brought Notre Dame within striking distance of Ferris State after winning the three-meter dive.

"There were some bright lights and some dim lights," said Stark. "It wasn't all bleak because there were some good swims."

After losing several swimmers to graduation last May, the Irish are in the process of rebuilding the team. While Ferris State offers scholarships to its swimmers, Ferris State is evenly matched with Notre Dame and the Irish intend to use what they learned in Saturday's meet in the future.

"Ferris State pointed up a few things; things we have to touch on," said Stark. "We want to get ready for swimming our best."

This Friday, the Irish will compete in one of their toughest contests of the season as they travel to Saint Bonaventure University. Saint Bonaventure defeated Notre Dame last season and Stark hopes the Irish will swim to their full potential.

Stark anticipates fierce competition on Friday since Saint Bonaventure had a successful recruiting season last year, adding to its solid corps of returning veterans. "They've got some front line recruits which make them that much stronger," he said.

On Sunday, the team faces Holy Cross College and Providence College to round out this weekend's action. The Irish will return home to the Rockne Memorial Pool on Feb. 5, when they play host to Kalamazoo College.

Sabre man Mike Janis, senior co-captain of the Notre Dame men's fencing team, is the leader among current fencers in career victories with 115. Janis will take a 9-1 record into this weekend's tournament against Ohio State. Mike Chmiel previews the season in his story at right.

Fencers continue drive for NCAA championship at Ohio St. tourney

By MICHAEL J. CHMIEL
Sports Writer

While it is too early to be talking national championship, the 1985 Irish seem to once again have one of the top men's fencing teams in the country as they are already off to a 6-0 start with an extremely talented and well-experienced team.

After stumbling in the 1984 NCAA finals last year due to poor scheduling and tough competition, the Irish took third in the springtime event. With eight of nine starters returning, the Irish are looking to better last year's one-loss season (19-1) and are shooting to dethrone Wayne State - the 1984 National Champions and perennial powerhouse in fencing.

In his 24th year, head coach Mike DeCicco believes that his team has the talent to go undefeated and be successful.

"The key to our success is that we have the overall depth that will hopefully carry us through the entire season," said DeCicco.

After getting off to a rough start shortly into the new year, DeCicco has been pleased with the progress of his team. Beginning against Harvard on Jan. 7, the Irish had not touched their weapons as a team since before the Christmas break.

"We started off rather slowly when we met with Harvard because we hadn't fenced since early December," said DeCicco. "Fortunately, we have enough good people that had some training during the Christmas break like Don Johnson and Charles Higgs-Coulthard. The pressure of that first round with Harvard, nevertheless, got our kids back in the groove."

After downing Harvard, 17-10, the Irish went on to make a clean sweep of their east coast competition as they downed MIT, 18-9; Penn, 17-10; Cornell, 20-7; Princeton, 24-3; and Temple, 22-5.

Over the last weekend during break, the Irish participated in and won the 1985 United States Fencing Association's Collegiate Open. Of the three weapons, the Irish won two team events and finished third in the other.

In the sabre, perhaps the most talented of the three Irish squads, Notre Dame took the second, third, and fourth spots individually. Junior Tony Consoli finished second to Cottingham of Columbia who won the gold medal in a close match. The Irish won the team sabre competition as well.

In the epee, junior Mike Gostigian won the gold for the Irish, who placed four epeeists among the final eight. Senior co-captain Andy Quaroni took third after being eliminated by Gostigian in the semifinals. Overall, the epee team beat Penn and Columbia by scores of 5-1 for the team title.

In the foil, sophomore Charles Higgs-Coulthard won the gold while junior captain Mike Van der Velden took third after injuring his knee. Despite the loss of Van der Velden, the foilists finished third as a team.

"The way our team is fencing we're looking at about four or five teams that are going to give us fits that could beat us - Illinois, Wisconsin, Ohio State, Wayne State, and Northwestern," said DeCicco. "Illinois may be, this year, tougher or as tough as Wayne State. Illinois has some very good fencers from Illinois. The others are perennial winners."

Surprising to DeCicco thus far has been the play of the epeeists. In the first two matches they carried the team to round out this weekend's action. The Irish will return home to the Rockne Memorial Pool on Feb. 5, when they play host to Kalamazoo College.

Junior Brian St. Clair also is returning from last year after going 32-9 in 1984 and finishing tenth in the NCAA Championships. St. Clair is currently 4-2.

Adding depth and solidifying the squad are transfers Christian Scherpe and Alex Gruman and junior Mike Gostigian. Scherpe and Gruman transferred to Notre Dame from Cal-State Northridge after their former school disbanded its fencing program. In 1983 and 1984, Scherpe finished fourth in the NCAA tournament and last year, he was named an all-American. Scherpe is 9-2 while Gruman is 3-1.

Gostigian missed last season as he took the time off to train for the Olympic modern pentathlon event. Liferime he is 16-5. This far into the season, he is fencing well with an 8-1 record.
