HPC to ask administration 'Why?' about rectors

By SCOTT BEARBY
Assistant News Editor

The recent alleged firing of Carroll Hall Rector Father Steve Gibson and the lack of published criteria by which the University chooses and evaluates rectors prompted the Hall Presidents' Council to address the issue at their meeting last night. An official statement will be given to Vice President for Student Affairs Father David Tyson later this week.

Carroll President Steve Kearns brought up the fact that Gibson is stepping down from his position because he "does not fit the mold" of a rector in the University's eyes.

In addition to being upset over the mutual decision made by Tyson and Gibson to have Gibson give up his Carroll post, Kearns is angry over lack of administration response to questions as to how Gibson was ineffective as a rector and how the University determines what rectors should be hired.

According to Kearns, no public statement about how a rector fits the University mold has been released.

Almost one-third of campus rectors will be leaving at the end of this year. Because of the substantial number of new rectors coming into their positions, the HPC feels the University criteria should be made known to the students.

Mimi Soule, Lewis Hall president, stated hall officers run under the assumption they will be working with the same rector. When a new rector is hired without any input from the students, there may be a conflict of ideas between the students and rector.

Farley President Colleen Nolan added that this situation can lead to a stress which the hall does not need.

Soule suggested that rector changes be made known before hall elections so hall government will not encounter any surprises, and so they might possibly have a say in what type of rector they wish to have.

Before Thursday, the hall presidents will sponsor discussions on what role a rector should have in their respective dorms. A combined statement will be given to Tyson on Friday.

Morrissey Hall President Mark Peabody suggested some type of student evaluation of rectors be initiated so the administration can compare their standards with those of the students. Soule and other members of the council agreed.

The HPC will be looking to single out qualities which make a rector effective; they feel Gibson is a good model. He received honorable mention for the rector of the year award this year and is a past recipient of the honor.

"Father Steve cares about his residents," said Lyons Hall President Joan Cahill, adding that she did not see how this did not fit the University mold.

Kearns felt a specific type of rector may be difficult to find since each hall has its individual character. He stated that he doesn't want his rector to fit such a mold if it means sacrificing individuality.

Nicaraguan insurgents denied aid by Congress

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Democratic-controlled House last night rejected 248-180 President Reagan's proposal for $14 million in direct military aid to Contra insurgents seeking to overthrow the leftist government of Nicaragua. The same resolution was approved 53-46 by the Republican-led Senate only a few hours earlier.

Combined, the two votes set up a continuing congressional debate over whether to allow Reagan to provide non-lethal assistance to the rebels.

In both houses, Reagan won some additional support with a last-minute pledge to reopen direct negotiations between the United States and the Sandinista government, a key issue in Democratic opposition to Reagan's policy toward Central America.

Reagan also promised not to use the money for military aid until the end of the current fiscal year on Sept. 30.

The House vote was the first of three on aid to the Contras, and the two remaining alternatives were expected to be much closer when votes are taken today.

One choice sponsored by House Democrats would require that the $14 million be spent through the United Nations or the International Red Cross for Nicaraguan refugees and to enforce any peace negotiated by countries in the Central American region.

The second alternative, proposed by House Republican leader Robert Michel of Illinois and supported by the president, would give recognition to the Contras by distributing non-lethal aid to them through the United States Agency for International Development.

In the Senate, 43 Republicans and 10 Democrats voted for the Contra aid proposal; 37 Democrats and nine Republicans voted against. Sen. John East, R-N.C., did not vote because he is in the hospital.

Specifically, the Senate approved an appropriation for "military or

Faculty opinions mixed about ND policies

Editor's Note: This is part two of a four part series dealing with the problems in South Africa and the relation of this conflict to the Notre Dame community. Today's story gives faculty views on the subject.

By DOUG HASLER
Staff Reporter

Faculty members at Notre Dame and Saint Mary's have mixed opinions about the University's policy of investing in corporations which do business in South Africa.

Notre Dame follows a 1978 policy of investing in corporations which have signed the Sullivan Principles, a list of guidelines mostly concerned with the treatment of black workers in South African business operations.

Peter Walshe, professor of government and international studies and director of African studies, said he believes the guidelines are inadequate to qualify investment in a multinational corporation that operates in South Africa.

"They (the Sullivan Principles) desegregate the workplace, but they also leave blacks vulnerable to the larger structures of apartheid," Walshe said.

"The guidelines enable U.S. corporations to invest in South Africa and save their consciences," said John Gilligan, O'Malley professor of law.

Yet, the Sullivan Principles can also be viewed as an impetus for altering the structures of apartheid,

South Africa Investments

according to Father Oliver Williams, associate professor of management. "Currently," Williams said, "blacks are being trained to manage, and they are receiving equal pay. It is a catalyst for change."

Saint Mary's government professor James Murphy said the Sullivan Principles promote greater understanding in the western world of the situation blacks face in South Africa.

"Constructive engagement, the Sullivan Principles, and the European Economic Community's codes for corporate conduct have done more to bring to world attention the plight of South African blacks," Murphy explained.

Stockholders, such as the University of Notre Dame, who invest in U.S. corporations with holdings in South Africa have been encouraged to consider divesting themselves of such stock as a strategy to pressure corporations and the South African government to grant more rights to blacks.

As a general principle, Gilligan said such stock should be divested, depending on the magnitude of a company's holdings in South Africa, and how much stock an individual investor owns.

Professor of government and law Donald Kommers discounted the simplicity of divestment, stating, "I'm not sure I would oppose owning stock in a company even if it does not uphold the Sullivan Principles. Only by knowing the consequences of disinvestment can one judge the morality."

Believing immediate action to be vital, Professor Walshe said, "The political situation is fluid right now. At this point, corporations should put additional pressure on the government."

Change in South Africa will come either slowly over several decades or quickly in a bloody and violent civil war, the professors predicted.

Williams is cautiously optimistic about South Africa's future. "They (the Sullivan Principles) are slowly and progressively giving rights to blacks. I confess I can't see the light at the end of the tunnel. But, it is marvelous what has happened in this country over the last 30 years."

Gilligan, on the other hand, foresees violence for the racially troubled country. "The dominant political faction seems determined to resist change, no matter what," Gilligan said. "This can only result in increasing violence on the part of those in government and those who are trying to change things."

"As long as South Africa is a respected member of the world community, I don't think things will improve," he added.

Recipe for a good time: Watch hockey, enjoy

An excerpt from my favorite cookbook:
Take 12 slightly crazed French Canadians wielding long pieces of timber. Add a slab of ice, a frozen rubber disc, and three men in zebra-striped shirts. Let stand for half a year, then gently stir in 15,000 noisy fanatics. As a final touch, add a dash of champagne from Lord Stanley's favorite mug for incentive.

That, for the uninitiated, is the formula for The Playoffs, National Hockey League style. For the last six months, the NHL's 21 teams have skated their way through 80 regular season games. Now it's time to find a champion.

The race for the right to drink from the Stanley Cup, hockey's equivalent of the Super Bowl, generates more excitement in Canada than a Billy Joel concert does at Notre Dame. But here in the States, hockey is only marginally more popular than Walter Mondale.

Part of the reason for all this hockey apathy may be ignorance. But with teams in 14 cities across the country and various cable "super systems" beaming games to virtually everywhere, most people are probably familiar with hockey.

Maybe the competition is too stiff. For most of the season, hockey competes with basketball and football for a sports fan's cash and attention.

Basketball, however, suffers from almost as much of an identity crisis as hockey does. Besides, all those end-to-end scoring drives make watching basketball as rough on the neck as watching ping-pong.

Football is a different story. With bone-crunching blocks and tackles, it attracts basically the same type of person who goes to hockey games. But football games are only once a week, and the season ended way back in January.

It isn't that hockey is hard to understand, either. In fact, hockey is quite simple if it is looked at as a hybrid of soccer and roller derby.

In theory, hockey is a lot like the intricate game of soccer. The purpose of soccer is to score a goal by maneuvering a ball around opponents and kicking it past a goaltender. The team with the most goals wins. Hockey is just about the same thing, except it's played on ice. Also, instead of kicking a ball, hockey players use a stick to hit a piece of frozen vulcanized rubber called the puck.

In practice, however, hockey often has more in common with the rough 'n' tumble sport of roller derby. Roller derby, for those who never called New York City home, is the ultimate in circus sports. Players skate around an oval roller rink, scoring points by cruising past opponents without getting knocked into the audience. It is a fairly violent sport, with ridiculous referees who ignore rule violations.

Keith Harrison

Hockey rarely gets as silly as roller derby, but there are similarities. For instance, the average hockey player does not think twice before whacking an opponent across the shins with his stick, an act commonly known as slashing. And just as in roller derby, every time one player knocks another on his wallet the crowd goes wild.

Granted, when things get dirty and the players start taking cheapshots, hockey becomes a parody of itself, as it was in the movie "Slapshot." But when played properly, it combines excitement and grace like no other sport around.

So the Great Hockey Mystery continues. People have yet to realize that spring means more than just the opening of baseball season or young men thinking of love. It also means the Stanley Cup playoffs. Certainly, there are other diversions, but do you really want to spit watermelon seeds competitively at An Tostal?

 All right then, why not give hockey a try?

Ruckelshaus, former EPA chief, contrasts past agency experiences

By MARY CAROL CREADON
Senior Staff Reporter

Public involvement in environmental issues is the answer to Environmental Protection Agency effectiveness, said former EPA administrator William Ruckelshaus at last night's public talk in Washington Hall.

The agency's first administrator in 1970 and fifth in 1984, following Ann Burford's resignation, contrasted the issues facing the EPA in the 1970s with those of the 1980s.

When the agency was formed in 1970, said Ruckelshaus, the United States faced serious environmental problems with conventional pollutants in air, land and water.

"The people in Denver were desiring to see the mountains again while the people in L.A. were desiring to see each other," Ruckelshaus joked.

The EPA was created to implement the new environmental laws such as the Clean Water Act of 1972 which called for "fishable and swimmable" waters, said Ruckelshaus.

"Great progress" was made with these conventional pollutants. Yet these issues were secondary to the newer, deadlier pollutants uncovered since the 1970s such as acid rain and toxic waste, he said.

Ruckelshaus said these "second generation issues" are so much more complex than those of the 1970s because scientific uncertainty of their health effects is so great. Although it is known that these newer pollutants cause cancer and reproductive defects, definitive action by the EPA on these issues is complicated by the public's mistrust of the agency.

Ruckelshaus explained the EPA is being sued by the public and industry "80 percent of the time" because there are so many conflicting interests.

The only way progress will be made is if the American people learn to trust that the EPA is doing the right thing. Ruckelshaus stressed the public must gain a level of understanding of the environmental issues and the real options from which the EPA has to choose.

It will take time before all of society recognizes the environment need not be exploited for economic growth, he said, but "we do not have that much time to get these pollutants under control in the context of freedom."

The EPA needs to devise a system through legislation by which the people will be forced "to respond to the real choices," said Ruckelshaus.

Italian union president speaks about peace

By MICHAEL J. CHMIEL
Staff Reporter

Hoping to encourage a new alliance for those who are concerned about the quest for peace throughout the world, Domenico Rosati, president of the Italian Christian Workers Association, addressed a press conference yesterday afternoon prior to a private seminar he gave to University faculty members.

Rosati, speaking through an interpreter, called for increased efforts to become united in the search for peace and in the determent of nuclear weapons.

"The basic motive for me being here is to see if it is possible to begin to build up a new alliance," said Rosati. "We have tried to stop the arms race, we have tried to block the deployment of weapons in the East and in the West, and now, we are trying to answer the proposed star wars."

Rosati's organization maintains an important role in Italian society by influencing people in each of the diverse political parties which exist there. Although his group is rooted in Christian thought, they are able to reach out to all sectors of their society with the intention of educating in regard to a need for peace.

Rosati chose to come to the United States and visit with many key leaders who share his desire to achieve peace. He believes that although the language is different, the objectives of his group are similar to those of other groups, and a dialogue needs to be established in order to make advances.

"Unfortunately, we have been unable to coordinate our actions in the last years," said Rosati. "We can build up a new alliance by varifying what we're thinking about and what we think our objectives are. We need to see what kind of initiatives we're going to take."

With respect to U.S.-Soviet relations, Rosati called for a freeze on

"testing, deployment, and research in the field of both nuclear and conventional weapons." He also alluded to the possibility of a Reagan-Gorbachev summit.

"I believe that it (a summit) is a possibility and that there seems to be interest on both sides that this happens," said Rosati.

The prevailing opinion overseas of Reagan and U.S. foreign policy is critical, Rosati said. He explained that many see confrontations throughout the world as confrontations between the two superpowers.

"They (those overseas) are very critical especially about the fact that American foreign policy seems to begin from a deductive position that very often is not founded on certain principles," Rosati said.

In regard to the state of his own country, Rosati strongly supported the idea of a democracy and believes this form of government is working well in Italy. He explained that all of the different factions in Italy have been faithful to their democratic government ever since the adoption of a democratic constitution in the late 1940s.

"Over the years, both components of Italian society - the Communists and the Catholics - have always had difficult moments but have always made references back to the democratic constitution. They have been loyal to it."

Rosati believes there has been a greater effort in the Church for peace recently and he supports this effort.

"Ever since Vatican II and Pope John XXIII, there has been a greater emphasis on the part of Catholics in regard to the values of peace and the values of social justice and the fight against terrorism," said Rosati.

He also explained that the traditional idea of peace as the fruit of justice has changed to an idea of justice as the fruit of peace. With this, the notion a just war must be relinquished, he explained.

paramilitary operations in Nicaragua."

But Reagan promised in a letter delivered to Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole only a few hours before the vote that he would use the funds only for non-lethal purposes for the rest of the fiscal year ending Sept. 30.

Despite Democratic skepticism about Reagan's intentions, Dole said, "I think we can trust the word of the president of the United States."

Still to come late last night was a tougher challenge for Reagan in the Democratic-controlled House where the president's proposal to aid the Contras faced likely defeat.

Reagan's letter was a surprise, and marked an open, last-minute effort to sway wavering senators and House members to his side in a highly-emotional legislative battle reminiscent of the early years of the Vietnam War era.

"I think the president's letter was a carefully-crafted attempt to get bipartisan support," said Dole.

As the debate closed, Vice President George Bush - in his role as president of the Senate - was on hand in the event he was needed to break a tie vote.

In his letter to Dole, Reagan said, "I intend to resume bilateral talks with the government of Nicaragua and will instruct our representatives in those talks to press for a cease-fire as well as (Roman Catholic) church-mediated dialogue between the contending Nicaraguan factions."

Retired ace discusses experiences, God, country, war

By BUD LUEPKE
Senior Staff Reporter

America's top living air ace, retired Col. Francis Gabreski spoke last night on topics of God, country and war. Recalling several war stories, Gabreski's lecture focused on the timely use of war in defense of values.

Gabreski was a sophomore at Notre Dame when he joined the Air Force in 1940. "I knew America would get into the war eventually and I wanted to make sure I was fighting it in the air not on the ground", he said.

Gabreski was in Hawaii when the Japanese attacked Pearl Harbor.

In 1943, Gabreski was sent to England, and in 1944, he volunteered to lead his squadron into Germany. After bombing an air field, he was forced to make a crash landing. He was a prisoner of war for 10 months.

During his tour in the European Theater of Operations, Gabreski destroyed 31 enemy fighters in aerial combat and three more on the ground. In Korea, Gabreski claimed 6.5 more enemy jets and became the eighth "jet ace" in history with over 5000 hours flying time, 4000 of which were in a jet.

Gabreski said his belief in God and country helped him avoid the dangers of fear and fright when facing death.

One of his narrowest escapes occurred when his plane began to smoke with a German pilot in pursuit. Gabreski said he prayed, "Lord, I am now in your hands." Gabreski's fear left him, and he put his plane in a tail spin to fool his adversary and escape in a cloud.

Among many other awards, Gabreski has received the Distinguished Service Medal, the Distinguished Service Cross, and the Bronze Star, as well as other decorations from Great Britain, France, Belgium, and Poland.

Gabreski said he fought against "the enemies of freedom" and for "the defense of Christianity". He said that while war should only be used as a last resort, it should not be avoided when values of God and country are at stake.

Engineers and scientists should also contribute to peace efforts. In times of national emergency, he said, "high technology has never failed us." He said the atomic bomb saved thousands of lives and that it was best for America to use it first because Hitler was so close to having it.

Gabreski stressed faith in God and values of freedom and democracy. But he also stressed the need to defend these beliefs against other beliefs existing "where vodka and caviar flow freely and human minds do not".

Gabreski's lecture was sponsored by the Air Force ROTC.

After a question and answer session, Gabreski was given an Air Force ROTC jacket and a diploma.

Watergate figure Ervin dead at 88

Associated Press

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. Former Sen. Sam J. Ervin Jr., the self-styled "country lawyer" whose homespun humor, animated eyebrows, and love of the Constitution made him a folk hero when he presided over the Senate Watergate hearings, died of respiratory failure yesterday. He was 88.

Ervin died at about 4:15 p.m. at Bowman Gray Medical Center at N.C. Baptist Hospital in Winston-Salem, according to Roger Rollman, a spokesman at the hospital.

"The cause of death was attributed by his doctors to respiratory failure which developed during the day," Rollman said. "The kidney failure for which Mr. Ervin was admitted to the center was a significant contributing factor in the death."

Rollman said Ervin, who became ill March 30, was suffering from abdominal pain, emphysema and an infected gall bladder.

"He underwent surgery for the gall bladder," Rollman said. "His post-op course became complicated by kidney failure leading to his transfer to the Winston-Salem medical center Monday."

Ervin was moved from Grace Hospital in Morganton to Bowman Gray on Monday suffering from acute renal failure after it was determined he needed more specialized treatment than was available at Grace, said Mary McBride, his secretary.

During his 20 years in the Senate, Ervin was both a critic of civil rights legislation and a champion of civil liberties. He fought affirmative action proposals, battled efforts to return prayer to public school, and exposed military surveillance of anti-war protesters and other dissenters during the Vietnam War era.

His strict interpretation of the Constitution defied easy political classification. He sided with both liberals and conservatives in becoming one of the chamber's most respected authorities on constitutional law.

That independence made him a natural choice when Senate leaders cast about for someone to chair the sensitive and potentially explosive hearings on Watergate in the summer of 1973.

Hogs run wild after train wreck

Associated Press

SULLIVAN, Ind. - Between 10 and 20 hogs died, and another 200 ran loose in the countryside south of Sullivan yesterday after a stock truck collided with a freight train, Indiana State Police said.

Dispatcher Joe Watts said the hogs were being transported in a tractor-trailer rig driven by James Kemp, 24, of Spragueville, Idaho, when the truck collided with a Seaboard System train. The accident occurred about 5:30 a.m. on U.S. 41 just south of the city, Watts said.

"Approximately 219 hogs escaped from the stock trailer. A few hogs were dead at the scene and the rest are running loose," Watts said.

He added that officials weren't sure exactly how many hogs were killed.

SMC council surveying students' drinking

By MAE WHITEMAN
News Staff

Saint Mary's Alcohol Education Council is conducting a random-sample survey of 400 Saint Mary's students concerning drinking habits, but "Notre Dame's alcohol policy has nothing to do with our survey," said Pat Rissmeyer, the director of resident life and housing at the College.

Council member Molly Sullivan said, "This is a follow-up survey. The first survey was taken in 1979. We want to find out about the drinking habits of our students and what our students need to know about alcohol. For example, do our students realize that coffee does not sober a person?"

The council plans to build a program more suited to students' needs. In the future, they may aid with family drinking problems or organize non-alcoholic social programs.

"We want to see what impact our previous program has had. It will give us hard data," Sullivan said.

The surveying started at the beginning of this year, and surveys are due this Friday.

The council hopes to have the data organized by the end of this semester since the programming is being done by hand.

Kevin Herbert, a mild-mannered ND freshman by day, "Boss" by night.

Tommy Shaw may not be the star in this weekend's MTV bash at the ACC. The life of the party is likely to be a Domer from New Jersey. His name is Kevin and he looks like just another guy from the Garden State - until he does his magic transformation. He becomes The Boss.

Herbert, a.k.a. Bruce Springsteen, was the winner of Notre Dame's Rock-Alike contest, and will represent the University in the national Rock-Alike finals to be held before the Shaw concert Saturday night.

In anticipation of his performance, MTV took Kevin Herbert, a Stanford Hall freshman, to dinner on Monday evening. Then they took him to lunch on Tuesday. Then they introduced him to a girl named Nina and put him in front of a camera. Better than that, they did all that in New York City. And best of all, you can see it on television.

Tonight at 6 o'clock, MTV will broadcast a Nina Blackwood interview with Notre Dame's own Boss.

Monday morning, Kevin was already mentally preparing for the Rock-Alike competition. "I'm really excited about Rock-Alike and performing and about the home crowd advantage." The event is being held at Notre Dame to reward the University's victory over 12 other schools in the MS fundraiser drive.

Although the performers will be judged by a panel of five judges including Tommy Shaw, Nina Blackwood, and MS Organizer Bev Noyes, Herbert said, "The biggest thing for me is the student support at this thing. I want everybody to let MTV know that there is support of their candidate." He hopes "the 12 million american households watching have a good impression of the MS campaign, because they're trying to expand it for next year."

His competition includes "a really good Billy Idol from the University of Iowa and a girl from the University of Wisconsin as Cyndi Lauper." Herbert added, "altogether there are three Billy Idols, another Bruce, Huey Lewis, and Mick Jagger" among the competition.

But Herbert is confident he has at least a 50-50 chance, because "I do look a lot like Bruce." He even wants to work an American flag into his act. "I think it will really be an awesome performance. If I don't knock the microphone over when I swing around with my guitar, I think I will be alright."

Herbert explained that he became involved in the Rock-Alike Contest after the Millions Against

MS committee publicized the event. "People had told me I look like Bruce Springsteen," Herbert said. "And I like Bruce so I thought I'd give it a shot and be Bruce for a song."

Herbert was introduced to Springsteen music by his elder brother, Gus, who also lives in Stanford.

In preparation for the performance, Herbert said he will perform "Born in The U.S.A." "I listen to the song a couple of times a day. I look in the mirror to see if the words, the lip sync, is right. The key was getting the words down, but the biggest problem was getting used to the guitar."

Herbert doesn't plan to do anything special for Saturday night. "I just try to put myself in Bruce Springsteen's shoes," Herbert said. "We look alike, plus we're the same height and from the same state."

"I think about the words in the song," Herbert continued. "I think about what he's saying about Vietnam vets. There's a lot of emotion. It gets me psyched up."

If he wins this final round of competition, Herbert will receive a paid internship with MTV in New York City this summer. Because New York is fairly close to Rumson, New Jersey, home the real Boss, there is a chance that Herbert will meet his idol.

"That would commensurate life. I could die a happy man," said Herbert. "He's a demi-god."

Juke box heroes aren't foreign to ACC crowd

Tim Adams

Concert review

The popular group Foreigner rocked the ACC last night with a juke box full of hits, playing before a packed crowd.

As the lights were turned off, the audience roared with delight. The red tarpaulin covering most of the stage was lifted, revealing the four members of Foreigner, as well as three keyboardists on elevated platforms.

Then the unmistakable chords to "Feels Like the First Time" echoed out, accompanied by shrieks from the crowd and the ever-present glow of lighters. Then the group ripped into "Double Vision" and "Cold as Ice," those old AOR standbys. "Ice" was spiced up by a saxophone solo played by one of the three keyboardists.

Most groups, when playing a concert, usually receives less and less applause as the night wears on, but last night's crowd maintained peak interest through almost every song, getting lazy only when Foreigner played an unfamiliar tune (and there weren't many). If the group failed to vary its approach in the concert much, they made up for it by the songs' popularity.

Other songs getting a good response were "Head Games," "Waiting for a Girl like You," and the current single, "That was Yesterday."

The peak of the concert, without a doubt, was the rendition of "I Want to Know What Love is." On record, the song features a choir, and lo and behold, Foreigner brought one with them last night. The image of 25 swaying, whiterobed singers bouncing to the beat and clapping hands, encouraging the audience to do the same, was moving.

Soon the entire crowd was on its feet, swaying, clapping, and singing along, too. They received a tremendous ovation, and I could tell the audience was especially pleased, because the number of lighters being held up was incredible.

Coming close to this song, in terms of excitement generated, was the teen passion anthem, "Urgent." It, too, got a standing ovation, concluding the first portion of the concert. After the group exited the stage, the crowd hungrily demanded an encore. The four guys came through, delivering bombastic versions of "Dirty White Boys" and "Hot Blooded," before they left once again.

But the crowd was not satiated, so Foreigner appeared one last time and led slowly into "Juke Box Hero." As the song cranked along, an inflatable juke box appeared on the right side of the stage; the crowd went nuts. Lead guitarist, Mick Jones jammed furiously until the song ended, and so did the juke box, in a flash of smoke. The audience went home very pleased.

Opening the concert was Giuffria, a hard rock quintet featuring one of the members from Angel. They are best known for their Journey clone hit, "Call to Your Heart." They provided the evening's low point when the lead singer alluded to partying and snorting cocaine as a "cool" type of rebellion.

Caricature of Germans also must be forgotten

We have all, at one time or another, been exposed to the stereotype of the "typical" Jewish person. The nose protruding just so from the face and the hair lying in a just so manner have come to represent the face. Eyes scanning for coins and employment as an investment banker have come to represent the lifestyle. Conversations concerning Jews can be carried on without reference to these tasteless caricatures. Yet, there is one topic which seemingly cannot be dismissed - the Holocaust.

Dave Kroeger

Wednesday's child

The nation's capitol was the scene of one of the year's biggest mini-dramas as the White House announced that President Reagan would visit a German cemetery later this year. The knowledge that S.S. graves were in the burial ground brought a screaming pro-Jewish force to its feet. The normally decisive administration found itself on the defensive as more and more people began to rail the White House for what the media considers to be a "boo-boo."

Among the critics was Elie Wiesel, who coincidentally happened to be in Washington this week to receive an award from President Reagan. Wiesel made it clear that he was, in no uncertain terms, opposed to the visit. He said that the perplexity of the Jewish people in regard to the visit "knows no bounds." Well, that's really nice, Elie, but one would have to say that your egocentricity knows no bounds, either.

The powerful Jewish lobby which emerged after World War II has gone too far this time. How dare the Jews claim that Reagan has no right to visit that cemetery. How insensitive to think that the lives of those German soldiers are unworthy or tainted by some type of poison. They are people, just like you and me, with the same problems and the same aspirations. Their cause, in the frame of historical justification, was wrong, but that does not make them any less deserving of respect than those who fought for the "right" side.

Look at the facts. World War II ended 40 years ago. Most people living today were born after that or were too young to really participate in the war before it ended. The time has come to start forgiving the German people for a crime which their fathers committed. The time has come to remove the stigma which covers the eyes of our world's people. President Reagan's visit, should it be carried out, will be a major step in putting the past aside.

This, of course, infuriates Jews, who feel that the horrors of the Holocaust should never be forgotten. Granted, the murder of over six million people should remain with us, but why do we need to carry with that memory the hatred of the perpetrators? Is it not enough to channel energy toward the ending of human misery, or must we be sidetracked by a bunch of bones lying halfway around the world?

I can understand the bitterness that Wiesel must feel after enduring two concentration camps, but the Jewish people have no monopoly on suffering. We need only look at Cambodia to discover that holocausts are a dime a dozen. I can understand pleas for sympathy, but I refuse to be manipulated into pseudo-worship of the formerly persecuted. It is this use of America's guilt which has caused our seemingly endless contributions to an Israeli government which has rarely been anything other than a little child which says "gimme, gimme" when it wants and "anti-Semitism, anti-Semitism" when it does not receive.

If the administration has stepped on a few toes in its announcements, then so be it. That visit is much more important than the whinings of people like Wiesel. It will signify that we are beginning to forgive the German people for their past sins, in much the same way that America has begun to seek forgiveness for Vietnam. The methodical murder of over six million Jews is indeed a tragedy. Those who killed them were undoubtedly of very warped reasoning. Is that not a tragedy, too? It seems that more than one caricature needs to end.

Notre Dame has lost the activism of the past era

An old friend, a Notre Dame alumnus, is coming to town. We met in the late 60s in a course on church history taught by Professor William Storey. Twelve years have gone by since we last met: I was out of the country when he returned to campus for his tenth year reunion.

I will call my friend G, to protect his privacy and to save him any embarrassment should I lapse into hagiolatry. During those first few classes, I was struggling with shyness and a deplorable case of intellectual intimidation. G, I primly decided, was an intellectual ex-was the dotty kind - the hallmark of the genuine article.

G was no accident. The chemistry was all set when his father, a German Lutheran, married his Irish Catholic mother who converted to the Lutheran Church. Living with the menage was a maternal grandfather whose daily ritual it was to take out his prayer-wheel to offer prayers for his apostate daughter's return to the one true faith. The exercise was carried out with relish.

Mama seems to have had a touch of Madame Blavatsky about her. A psychic Celt, she apparently had good-natured encounters with the spirit world. Then there were the batty uncles, Checkers and Flip-Flop Maloney, who were usually in inaccessible exile somewhere in the Rockies. Their personae were unclear; they may or may not have been larcenists, grand or otherwise, and they may or may not have done time. They could have been pure comic invention, useful names to invoke in the presence of anyone menacing the family. The stories of nuttiness were legion and beguiling.

While he was at Notre Dame, my friend developed a passion for the writings of Sidney Smith, an early 19th century Anglican divine. This, I thought, revealed real class. Smith was the best kind of Anglican clergyman - a man of robust faith, with a talent for the bon mot. It was Smith who said: "I have never read a book before reviewing it, it prejudices a man so." And, "I have, alas, only one illusion left and that is the Archbishop of Canterbury." Before he left Notre Dame, G had his portrait painted as Smith - a splendid parting jape - the Sun Belt Lutheran at a Catholic university wearing the mask of an Anglican wit.

It will be good to see G again. Fr. Don McNeil's note to G's friends read, "G has been involved in social justice work." I was not surprised. His imminent arrival has evoked in me a nostalgia for those times in the late 60s and early 70s. Oddballs and characters were given room to thrive and the political atmosphere on campus was far from monochromatic. Reactionaries were more likely to be found under stones - their natural habitat - and ROTC was in retreat.

These days I worry a lot about pre-profession earnestness and military recidivism. I have in mind a book which I would love to make required reading for all those uniforms strutting around: Virginia Woolf's "Three Guineas." She has pinpointed, better than anyone, what uniforms, braiding and medals signify, and it is not very nice. While the campus seems to me a bland place nowadays, I hope there is still enough good humor around to nourish original individuals like G.

hibitionist; definitely not to be trusted. This impression was soon to bite the dust. G, I discovered, was a natural enthusiast and gifted with ebullience.

G is a Lutheran pastor now; while he was an undergraduate here, he was our token Protestant. He bore his tokenism gracefully although, once in a while, he had a little sport at Notre Dame's expense. Each year, on the anniversary of the occasion when Martin Luther pinned his famous theses to the doors of Wittenberg Cathedral, G, a great believer in wholesome traditions, would pad off with Luther's thesis and post them on the doors of the Sacred Heart Church.

In the course of that semester with Dr. Storey, G and I became friends and co-conspirators; we shared a sense of glee as we logged the sins of the wicked old medieval Church. At the same time, our twentieth century complacency was nudged by books like "Piers the Ploughman" and "The Imitation of Christ." "Piers the Ploughman" should be required reading at a Catholic university, for it encourages the Christian pilgrim to remain stout of heart through the bad times when the Church becomes bloated and idle or, more alarming, when it switches to repressive activity. It has been said of history that it is the story of one damn thing after another: ditto for the Church.

As our friendship grew, G recounted stories of his family. Most of them were surely true, but I suspected the odd apocryphal addendum. Anyway, they were an impressively eccentric tribe. This was unusual because Americans are not, on the whole, good at eccentricity; WASPS manage it now and again, but they nearly always plump for the curmudgeonly species which does not inspire mirth. We Catholics, for the most part, do not stand a chance; conformity comes with our catechetical primers. G's family's eccentricity

Conservatives should be happy with today's press

There are many assumptions which are tossed around like facts. One such assumption is that there is a liberal bias in the press.

Conservatives love to complain about Dan Rather's supposed harassment of President

gravity is a myth

Reagan. Jesse Helms is so convinced that CBS is biased he wants a coalition of conservatives to buy CBS's stock and thus become "Dan Rather's boss." Adding to the problem is the fact that even intelligent conservatives buy into this assumption.

Last week at his lecture, I asked conservative columnist James Kilpatrick about liberal bias in the press and he said that he thought there was such a slant. He did qualify his answer by only attaching the label to the "prestige press." Specifically, he mentioned CBS, The New York Times, and The Washington Post. He did not, however, offer any empirical evidence.

For most conservatives there is no need for any evidence; they simply know that they are right. In two thoughtful essays in the latest issue of The New Republic, Fred Barnes and Michael Massing present evidence to refute this long held belief. The essays point out that there has been tremendous growth in what can be called the conservative press.

Examples given include the births of the national newspaper USA Today and the twenty-four hour cable news network CNN. Both of these relatively new news organizations are commonly viewed as more conservative than their older counterparts. The essays further point out that conservative are represented in what critics call the liberal press. For instance, conservative columnist George Will regularly appears in both Newsweek and The Washington Post.

What is apparent from both essays is the idea that the press will usually reflect the current political climate. And as any good liberal knows the times are definitely conservative now. The conservatives, however, are mired in the past and thus cannot forget the liberal press activism of the 1960s and early 1970s. If press critics would only look at what appears in print and on the television screen they might not be so upset. Personally, I am sick of seeing Ronald Reagan at his ranch, trying to look like a macho cowboy, on the evening news every three weeks or so. The fact that he always says everything is going great adds to my disillusionment. I think the conservative point of view gets plenty of coverage.

Even college newspapers, once great bastions of liberalism and in some cases even radicalism, have become conservative. A perfect example is The Observer. There are now daily quotes, usually endorsing conservative views, on its editorial page. Furthermore, there was The Observer's endorsement for the re-election of a conservative president who eliminated college students' social security benefits in his first term and is now threatening to drastically curtail the Government Student Loan program in his second term.

It seems that Helms and his friends should be more than satisfied with the current state of affairs. Maybe it is now time for liberals to yell and scream about a conservative bias in the press.

Maintenance and food departments praised

Dear Editor:

I would just like to take this opportunity to publicly thank The University Food Services and University Maintenance Department, in particular Bill Hickey and John Manhaut, for their efforts during this year's Collegiate Jazz Festival. I found these two men extremely dedicated to serving students to the utmost of their abilities. In my dealings with them the past two years, it is clearly evident that the student events and needs rank at the top of their priority lists. I do not only appreciate their efforts as a way to make my job easier, but also appreciate them because they do so much to enhance the environment here at Notre Dame.

Hickey and Manhaut, and the departments they represent, are prime examples of this University's finest employees.

I not only thank them but their staffs and workers who are just as helpful and pleasant. We are fortunate to benefit from their service. Thank you.

Students should respect the effort of Gideons

Dear Editor:

I would like to take this opportunity to commend the Gideons. They put a great deal of effort into doing what they believe is right. For this reason they deserve commendation.

However, this highlights a problem. A lot of things have been said about Notre Dame students, but now the addition of "wimps" to the list seems justified. The day the Bibles were distributed at the dining halls quite a few later ended up sitting on the tables or moving down the conveyor belt. Days later I was still seeing Bibles perched at convenient ledges around campus and in garbage cans. Why was this? Had people read it and then decided they did not want it? Not likely, considering almost everyone here has probably seen a Bible before. So then why were the Bibles all over campus? Because some students are wimps. When approached at the dining hall they were afraid of possibly hurting someone's feelings, or they just could not refuse a bargain or did not want to appear unholy by refusing a Bible. (It is like telling God to get lost, right?) So instead of having the guts to say the incredibly difficult phrase "no thank you," they accepted the gift, and with it the hard work and dedication of the Gideons. They managed to take the good achieved by others' hard work and turn it to waste; now there is a fine afternoon's work to be proud of.

Maybe if guests on our campus are treated with a little more respect in the future, fewer negative things will be said about Notre Dame.

Stealing license plate does not make you cool

Dear Editor:

To the person who stole the license plate "DOMER" off my car outside the University Club on Saturday afternoon, please think about the following. I obtained the plate in the first place to display my pride in the University and the type of student here. I find it ironic that a student at the same institution tries to display his pride by stealing my plates. One motive behind this act of thievery probably was to be cool. Do you think it is cool to know that I have to go out and replace the personalized plate at a cost of $60, plus go through the hassle of obtaining it? Your only use for the plate now is selfish gratification for display in a room. Are you proud of the fact that you are a thief and the plate is now on your wall? Are you now cool?

As a graduating senior I would like the plate returned. Think about it!

Senior lists reasons for awaiting graduation

Dear Editor:

As a senior, I look forward to graduating next month for many reasons, both positive and negative. Hard work finally pays off; another summer of fun and sun awaits me; and there is a new step in my life on the horizon: law school. Yet life is not heaven on earth, and neither is Notre Dame. No one, nor any institution, is perfect. There are, as a result, many things I will not miss when I leave Notre Dame.

•The dining halls' "insult a nationality" evenings when dinners are devoted to themes denigrating certain ethnic groups by serving food which the groups would be embarrassed to call their own.

•The ground crew's destruction of the quads by cutting lawns that have just been rained upon for hours.

•U-93's "Street Talk" interviews at University Park Mall, when locals with small-sized brains attempt to discuss such topics as nuclear weapons and Gerry Faust (a perfect couple, don't you think, since they both signify devastation - whether its object is the world or a proud tradition).

•Ruthless and dumb administrative athletic decisions made by Father Joyce under the guise of some farce of a committee.

•Mushrooms, particularly those served by the dining halls in every dish that could conceivably have a vegetable in it.

•The weather in northern Indiana (need I say more?).

•A student government torn by conflicts of self-interest and pride.

•The 24 hour-a-day freak show in the LaFortune lobby.

•Rules in increasing numbers which tighten the stranglehold around student necks, but enforced ostensibly for our own well-being.

•The on-going, slow, jockeying for position among upper-level CSC priests for Father Hesburgh's job.

•Having to worry about the daily progress of the Mishawaka Cavemen basketball team.

•The Credit Union, without question the banking institution of this country which most serves itself while least serving its members, and •Father Hesburgh's lectures on the nuclear arms race, something he surely must do in his sleep.

What I will miss, however, is complaining about all of these things.

Pettifer's identity seems to be a mystery

Dear Editor:

Who is Ann Pettifer, and when did she graduate from Notre Dame? She is not listed on any Alumni Office records as having ever attended the University. Is Pettifer a married name? A pseudonym? Is she a faculty member? Why do we hear from her so often?

Interhall season nears its end with many teams fighting for victory

By FRANK HUEMMER
Sports Writer

With final exams fast approaching, interhall activities are in full swing. Teams are giving it one last shot to go all the way and win the various tournaments and divisions.

Only four teams remain in the 22-team open soccer round-robin tournament. In the Backs Division, Holy Cross dribbled around I.S.O. for a 2-0 victory and the division crown. Meanwhile, Zahm was able to streak by Dick Addis by a 1-0 score to win the Strikers Division. These two teams will play Monday at 7 p.m. on Cartier Field to earn the right to play the winner of the Wings Division. Awful Lawful and Missing Faculties will tangle for the Wings' title at 7 p.m. Thursday on Cartier.

In fast-paced indoor soccer action, two off-campus teams battled it out for the championship. In the end, it was Zuber's Entourage outlasting the Pumas to claim the title.

In women's soccer, Lewis (4-0) is leading the league, but Pasquerilla West remains close behind at 3-1. Breen-Phillips and Badin both have a legitimate shot to catch these two teams, as they sport 2-1 records. Lyons (1-2), Walsh (1-3), Farley (1-

3) and Pasquerilla East (0-4) round out the eight teams in the tournament.

One sport that is growing quickly in popularity is lacrosse. Everyday one can go outside, enjoy the sunshine and see lacrosse sticks twirling in the air. Interhall lacrosse competition is fierce, however. Holy Cross has been tearing up the Blue Jay Division as it has defeated all three of its opponents. Following close behind are Howard and Morrissey, both at 2-1. Carroll (1-1), Dillon (0-2) and St. Ed's (0-3) complete the Blue Jay Division.

"The playoff competition will be very tough," Greg Abbott, Holy Cross captain, said, "because of the balance of the other division."

The Terrapin Division shows four teams with excellent opportunities to capture the top spot. Keenan, Off-Campus, Cavanaugh and Flanner all are 2-1, while Grace (1-2) and Zahm (0-3) fill out the rest of the division. The upcoming games will play a significant role in determining who will capture the lacrosse title.

Beside the heated contact of Lacrosse, the summer sounds of baseball can be heard in the air all around the Notre Dame campus. Six teams still are competing in the round-robin tournament. This week's action features a showdown between Holy Cross and Stanford A-1 in the Kaline Division finals at 4:30 today.

"They (Holy Cross) present a problem because they can score a bunch of runs," Stanford captain Tony Dawson said. "The first five batters can all put the ball out of the park."

Holy Cross's captain Greg Abbott agreed that the Stanford-Holy Cross matchup will be a good one.

"It will be a tough game," Abbott said, "but we have played tough defensively, have shown solid hitting and, so far, phenomenal pitching."

In the Mantle Division, teams from Morrissey and Flanner battled it out yesterday.

Finally, in the Ruth Division, Keenan III and Grace I will be playing for the division championship at 4:30 p.m. tomorrow.

"All the remaining teams are quite competitive and have the capabilities to win the tournament," Keenan coach Jay Palma said.

Whatever your sport is, you are sure to find plenty of action as the interhall competition really begins to heat up.

Yung works for Belle tennis team

By CHRISTINE FORTIN
Sports Writer

The Saint Mary's tennis team will host Notre Dame for a challenging match this afternoon, and will depend greatly on the talents of senior Renee Yung, who has contributed much to the team over the year so far.

Yung, a native of Genoa City, Wisconsin, has been playing tennis since seventh grade and has been teaching tennis for five years. In high school, Yung played varsity tennis all four years. She was named an all-American player for two of those years, and became team captain her senior year.

Her decision to attend Saint Mary's was based on two major factors. She wanted to attend a school with high academic standards that also offered a fine tennis program. Yung turned down a tennis scholarship offer from Flagstaff University in Arizona to attend Saint Mary's and says she has absolutely no regrets.

She currently holds the No. 5 singles and No. 2 doubles positions for the Belles. She feels most comfortable playing doubles because that is the position she played in high school. However, she enjoys playing singles, too, and feels she is learning more with every match she plays.

Balancing the responsibilities of being a varsity team member, an R.A. and a student can make for a rather hectic schedule, but Yung does not find it burdensome.

"It gets difficult at times," she explained, "but everything I'm doing I enjoy. And I've learned to schedule my time well."

She was named most improved player for the Belles her freshman year. Although a senior, this is only to play tennis so she could devote her time to her studies. She has another semester yet to go at Saint Mary's and intends to play with the Belles during the upcoming fall season.

She feels her role on the team is no different from anyone else's, which is to play as well as possible for the team. Sophomore Caroline Zern, Yung's doubles partner reinforces Yung's concern for the team.

"Renee is a very supportive, team-oriented player," commented Zern. "Her main objective is to help out the team in any way she can."

"The whole team is working very hard," commented Yung, preoccupied with the thought of the national championships, which will be held in Kansas City, Missouri, in late May.

She added that while she has her mind in every match she plays, she is also thinking about improving and gaining confidence for nationals.

"(Coach) Jo-Ann (Nester) has scheduled a lot of good teams this season to prepare us (for nationals)," she said. "I am very much looking forward to nationals."

The Belles will be hosting the Irish at 3:00 this afternoon. And Yung most definitely has some goals set for the match.

"We want to beat Notre Dame," she said. "Stroke for stroke I feel we are as good as they are. We're all looking forward to this match."

sixth round of the tournament. Armed and Dangerous III fell victim to WBBS, 21-13, at 6:15 on Stepan 3.

WBBS jumped out to a 9-2 lead, but A and D came within two at 12-10. Three consecutive outside jumpers for WBBS put the game out of reach, then. Mike "Hopper" Crowley hit nine of his 10 shots for the winners, while Dave Taiclet canned 6-of-9 for A and D.

A lot of people passed up Hungarian Noodle Bake at the dining hall to see Tofu Vegetables I on Stepan 1 at 5:00. They were not disappointed, as both the noodle bake and the Veggies lived up to expectations. The stir-fried freshmen from Alumni Phi Runna Gunna off the court, 21-12. Bill Zadel hit 7-of-11 and teammate Paul Reuvers pitched in 6-of-7 for the winners. Andy Reardon went 4-of-7 for the losing fraternity. Ed Smierciak and Four Other Guys Better Than John Paxson continued to roll yesterday, knocking off Keenan Inmates, 21-13, on Bookstore 10 at 5:00. Ken Schuerman paced the winners with 10-of-19 shooting, while Rick Bliha hit 5-of-23 for the Keenan residents.

Another crisis hit Ethiopia yesterday, as the last Ethiopian teams in Bookstore XIV bowed out of competition. Josephus and the Ethiopian Shim Sham was knocked out by First Source Bank Travelling All Stars and Motor Kings, 21-17, on Stepan 2 at 6:15. Dan Duff led the All Stars with 10 points on 17 attempts, while John Reilly hit 6-of-12 for the Ethiopians.

Five Ethiopians Hungry To Win were starved on Lyons 12 at 5:00 by Dangling Manhood. Joe Howard's 9-of-15 led the 21-of-39 winners to the victory, 21-12. Dan Johnston went 4-of-14 in the Ethiopians' losing effort.

A large, boisterous crowd gathered around Bookstore 9 at 6:15, when Let's Go Crazy met Revenge Factor. The crazies took a small lead early in the contest and held on to win, 21-14. Steve Nicgorski canned 8-of-14 from the field and hauled down 11 boards to lead the winners. Paul Schoner went 5-of-15 and grabbed six rebounds for Revenge Factor.

A smaller, more subdued crowd kept time as two Rhythm Methods battled on Bookstore 10 at 6:15. The pre-tournament naming of the teams proved correct, as Rhythm Method (I) beat Rhythm Method II, 21-17. The two teams were neck-and-neck for most of the game, but the better Method pulled ahead at 16-14 and never looked back again. John Sheehan hit 8-of-18 for the winning Method, and Joe Butkovich went 6-of-12 for the second Method.

Other fifth-round winners were Showtime, Four Dingleberries and a Kresgie, Red Barons, Jimmy G. and the Spots, Rousseau's Noble Savages and Tequila White Lightning.

The Sweet Sixteen will pair off today on the asphalt of Lyons and the bookstore. All games start at 5:00 or 6:15.

Notre Dame baseball squad splits a twinbill

By SEAN MURPHY
Sports Writer

The Notre Dame baseball team split a doubleheader with the Flyers of Lewis University yesterday, hiking its record to 16-22-1 in the process. After losing the first game by a score of 9-4, the Irish bounced back to take an impressive 11-5 victory in game 2.

In the first game, Irish pitcher Dan Sacchini (1-2) lasted only two-thirds of an inning, giving up four walks and three runs. Lewis never trailed in the game as pitcher John Rifnstuhl threw all seven innings for the Flyers, yielding only four runs on eight hits.

The Irish trailed 9-1 going into the seventh inning, when senior John Murphy hit a pinch-hit solo homerun and junior Tom Shields belted a two run homer. Although the Irish lost the game, their dormant bats were beginning to come alive.

The hitting continued in the second game as the Irish exploded for 16 hits and 11 runs. The Irish scored in each of the first five innings, and led 11-1 at that point.

Junior pitcher Mark Watzke (2-2) collected the win for the Irish as he threw six innings and gave up only three earned runs. Senior Jason Schomer came on in relief and was awarded the save. For the Flyers losing pitcher Pat McKune was pulled in the second inning after giving up five runs.

The big bats for the Irish in game two belonged to senior captain Jackie Moran and sophomore John Loughran. Moran was 4-for-5 and scored three times, while Loughran collected three hits on four at-bats.

One of Moran's runs was batted in by Junior Rich Vanthournout, on a record-tying line drive hit to center field. The hit was Vanthournout's 56th of the season, tying the record set by Mike Metzler last year.

The Irish moved to 16-22-1 with the win, while the Flyers fell to 30-15. Notre Dame will travel to Ohio today to face Bowling Green in another non-conference doubleheader.

Irish linebackers continue progress over spring

By MARTY BURNS
Sports Writer

The injuries which decimated the Notre Dame linebacking corps last year may not have been a total waste after all.

The fact that several raw talents emerged into capable players with the experience granted because of those injuries means that the Irish linebacking crop should be an extremely deep and effective bunch for this year's campaign.

So far through the 1985 spring season, the packed squad of healthy linebackers has shown much of that expected depth and talent. And that is a good sign for the Irish, because the success of the four linebackers in the 3-4 defensive alignment will be an integral factor in the overall success of the defense.

Overseeing the progress of the linebackers during the spring practice sessions are Irish assistant coaches George Kelly and Bishop Harris. Harris, in his second year of duty on the Irish staff after a brief stint as an assistant at Louisiana State University, handles the outside linebackers, while the 16-year veteran, Kelly, watches over on the inside.

Kelly's players at the inside linebacker position are called upon not only to make tackles but to contain the running game and take away the short pass as well.

"The inside linebacker has to be adept at covering the short pass and playing the run," says Kelly. "They should be the leading tacklers."

Kelly's prize pupil of the bunch, 6-2, 231 lb. Tony Furjanic, led the entire squad in tackles in 1983, but ligament damage in his leg kept him out of action for most of the '84 season. Furjanic, who still managed to finish fifth in tackles for the year, has the added responsibility this year of being one of the four Irish captains, as well as the defensive signal-caller in the huddle.

"Tony (Furjanic) is an outstanding football player," says Kelly. "He's also assumed the position of leadership with all the authority with which I thought he would."

Although junior all-America candidate Furjanic has been the anchor in the middle for the Irish this spring, his injury last season allowed a few other players to stake an experienced claim to the back-up role.

Among those players who are seeing action this spring in the middle are juniors Dave Butler and John McCabe. McCabe, a 6-3, 228 lb. native of Arlington Heights, Ill., saw action in every game last season after making the switch from nose tackle. Although McCabe played rather well in filling in for his injured teammates, his progress has been slowed this spring by nagging injuries. The 6-3, 221 lb. Butler, meanwhile, saw less action than did McCabe, but has made significant strides this spring toward getting some more playing time in the fall.

To the side of these players will be another inside linebacker - the strong side linebacker. As of this moment, 6-2, 218 lb. Mike Kovaleski and 6-3, 227 lb. Ron Weissenhofer are neck-and-neck in the race.

Kovaleski, who broke his collarbone earlier in the year and who is sitting out the spring drills, would seem to be the favorite for the position. After all, the sophomore led the team in tackles by a wide margin last year despite the fact that he was able to start only eight games because of various minor injuries. Still, Kelly feels that Kovaleski's injury this spring may have impeded his development to a significant degree.

"Mike Kovaleski has started for us the past two years," says Kelly. "But he could have improved even more if he had not been hurt this spring."

Weissenhofer, meanwhile, has missed quite a few games over the past two seasons because of nagging injuries. This year, he finally has been healthy for a spring session, and the chance to play has paid off so far for the junior from Oak Lawn, Ill.

"There will be a battle between Weissenhofer and Kovaleski for the position," notes Kelly. "Weissenhofer was out for almost a year and a half as a result of injuries, but he's really starting to get back into the groove now, and he's impressing us."

Playing admirably behind Weissenhofer this spring has been 6-5, 210 lb. freshman Wesley Pritchett.

"Pritchett is one freshman that has certainly emerged this spring," adds Kelly. "I think the injury to Kovaleski has allowed him to get all the work which he needed. It's conceivable that the strong side will be split up to make room for Wesley in the fall."

Also seeing action this spring at the inside linebacker spots are 6-1, 195 lb. freshman Greg Harris, and 6-2, 205 lb. sophomore Tom Galoway.

All in all, Kelly seems pleased with the play of his inside men this spring, but he notes that many of these combinations are subject to change.

"This has been a very good spring for us inasmuch as we've had so many more players missing in the past," notes Kelly. "The fact that so many have been able to participate this spring has given us a better look at the depth."

"It's difficult these days for one set of linebackers to play the entire game. We have much more confidence this spring in the backup people."

Confidence is what Bishop Harris must have felt when he looked at his array of experienced outside linebackers this spring. He saw returning starters Robert Banks and Rick DiBernardo, top-substitute Cedric Figaro, and newcomer Mike Larkin, who moved over to the outside after starting at the inside linebacker last season.

Actually, Harris has seen little this spring of the 6-3, 238 lb. DiBernardo. The junior from Garden Grove, Cal., had surgery recently on his wrist, and is expected to remain out of action until the fall. But, then again, Harris has already seen DiBernardo's 30 tackles last season, and he knows his extensive capabilities.

"DiBernardo will definitely play a major role," says Harris. "He played an awful lot for us last fall, and we'll count on him heavily again this year."

The 6-1, 221 lb. Larkin, meanwhile, has used the spring to its fullest to reacclimate himself to the same outside position where he had worked last spring. Injuries to key personnel on the inside, however, forced Larkin to abandon the experiment and move back over to his old position.

Harris, meanwhile, has been quite impressed with the quickness and attitude of his defensive stalwart.

"Mike was behind the others coming into the spring," says Harris. "The only experience he had at outside was all from practice. But he's a quality athlete, and he's responded well."

Harris sees Larkin as the "big-play" type of player. Larkin, who is also a captain on the squad this year, showed this in the fall by connecting on 39 tackles in an injury-shortened season.

"Mike has the knack for making things happen," adds Harris. "He just has to continue to work hard."

Rounding out the situation at the outside are 6-5, 234 lb. sophomore

Robert Banks, and 6-3, 235 lb. freshman Cedric Figaro.

Banks has seen a great deal of action this spring, and he has continued to play like he did in the fall when he started all 11 contests and registered 68 tackles.

"Banks improved every game last year," notes Harris, "and he has a great attitude this spring. He's a much-improved player."

Harris has even more inspiring words for Figaro, who made 30 tackles last year while filling in for injured starters.

"Figaro is probably one of the best freshmen in the nation," says Harris. "He has the potential to be a great player. He just has to keep working hard like he has in the spring so far."

6-3, 190 lb. freshman Darrel Gordon and 6-4, 200 lb. sophomore Lee Ritzau also have played some downs this spring at the position.

Inside and outside, this spring the Fighting Irish appear to have the quality athletes and the necessary depth.

Exciting action marks yesterday's play as Bookstore field cut to 16

By PHIL WOLF
Assistant Sports Editor

Most of the games were not as close as might be expected this far into the tournament, but the fifth round of Bookstore Basketball XIV did have its exciting moments yesterday.

There were a few close contests, a couple blowouts and some great individual efforts. There was crowd support and referee abuse. And there was some good basketball as the "Sweet Sixteen" emerged from the original field of 560 teams.

One of the most closely contested games of the day was on Stepan 4 at 5:00, when The Chairmen of the Boards met Four Fags and a Zahmbie. It took 22 points, but the Howard-Zahm combination put the Chairmen out of the tournament with excellent outside shooting. The winners outshot their opponents, 22-of-38 to 20-of-45.

Zahmbie Chris Campilii hit 6-of-7 for his team, while Howard's Dan Michelini went 6-of-10. Jeff Jones was 6-of-15 for the Chairmen, and teammate Dan Kerrigan pegged 6-of-16.

The Board members were able to outrebound the freshmen, 17-16. Howard's John Patino hit all four of his shots, while Chairman Dave Detmer was a perfect 3-of-3.

The next game on Stepan 4 pitted Mr. Coffey and the Non Dairy Creamers against Revenge of the Fun Bunch at 6:15. To say that the Creamers got creamed would be as inaccurate as saying that the Fun Bunch had a fun day of basketball yesterday (not to mention that the puns are getting worn out). At the end of the hard-fought game, it was the Fun Bunch that was victorious, 21-18.

Matt Dingens paced the winners with 7-of-13, while Eric Janowsky hussled his way to nine points on 18 attempts for the Creamers. The Fun Bunch hit 21-of-45 as a team, while the losers made 18-of-44. The Bunch had a 27-13 rebound advantage.

Uncoachables could have used a little assistance from the sidelines yesterday on Stepan 2 at 5:00. Weethy's Warriors won that battle, 21-15, with a 26-19 margin on the boards and some good shooting. Keith Sawayda hit half of his 20 shots, mostly from the outside, for the Warriors and pulled down seven rebounds. Allyn Morris hit 6-of-8 and crashed the boards successfully six times. Scott Veselick got inside well to hit 6-of-12 and grabbed seven rebounds for the coachless losers.

Eight teams advance in Women's Bookstore; action continues today

By MICHAEL FLANNERY
Sports Writer

Four of the 'Elite Eight' have been chosen. Four others will make it today. But those teams who were victorious yesterday won't have long to celebrate. The women's 1985 Bookstore Tournament is winding down to a furious finish.

Four games played yesterday pitted 'Sweet Sixteen' teams against each other, with the winners gaining a spot in the final eight-team bracket. Yesterday's four other winners merely gained entrance into the 'Sweet Sixteen', and will face each other today to advance to the round of eight.

To start, let's look at the games which completed the 'Sweet Sixteen.'

On Stepan 1, 2 Enlightened Souls, 2 Healers and an Embezzler Who Play Hoops did indeed show up to play, but without much success. Going All the Way had little trouble handling this motley crew, 21-11, as Kathy Immonen hit 5-of-13 and Theresa Schwebel hit 5-of-9 in the 15-4 victory. Meghan Flattery also chipped in, canning 4-of-6. Jackie Kennedy and Susie Baker were a combined 2-for-18 for the losers.

3 Wenches, A Smick, and a Hatchet weren't enough to stop Negligence. Renee Lanam made seven of 22 shots and Yvonne Bradley shot 10-for-34 for Negligence as they posted a 21-13 victory. Mary Langer (6-17) and Sarah Molinsky (6-20) led 3 Wenches, etc.

Balanced scoring helped Five Women Who Want to Go All the Way (and Play B-Ball, too) crush Why?, 21-17. 5-5-4-4-3 scoring was more than enough to offset Why?'s combined 7-of-27. Even better, 4 of the Five Women... shot better than 50 percent.

The best game of the day occurred on Stepan 4 at 4:00. Does on Their Own went into overtime to beat The Violent Femmes, 23-21. Mary Ellen Mileski (6-11) and Laura Gleason (6-12) helped tame their formidable opponent. Mary Borkowski might have changed the outcome if she had shot better than 4-22. Jane Weldon carried the losers, hitting 10-of-19.

The other four games yesterday were for a spot in the 'Elite Eight.'

The Quixotic Quint proved they could do more than battle windmills as they beat We Shave Points but Not for Drugs, 21-14. Reggie Richter dominated the game, hitting 13-of-24 to lead her team. Karen Phelps (5-19) and Beth Nolan (4-9) led the losers.

Foul Trouble squeaked by Slammers 21-18 on Bookstore 10. Carrie Bates did most of the damage for the winners. She canned an impressive 12-of-16 shots. Heather Koch bombed away all day for Slammers but only came up with eight points after taking 30 shots.

On Lyons 11, the DUI's crushed Skippies Need Not Apply, 21-7. Nancy Fitzpatrick hit 7-of-15 to lead the assault. Jackie Gibbons shot 4-14 in a losing cause.

On Lyons 12, RTHBKA rolled over The Dialectics, 21-2. RTHBKA were led by Dava Newman, who threw in 8-of-17 shots. The Dialectics should have stayed home. They managed only 12 shots for the game.

So now you have finished
And your mind has gone numb
Except for one thought
Which is "Freeby, you scum!"
"You have given me questions
Which are far beyond hope
And I have sat here
And looked like a dope"
Yes, many questions were hard
That much is true
But there's no need to sit there
Feeling saddened and blue
Just look at it this way
Before you abuse me
After taking this test
Won't your finals look easy?

Pick of the Week ... OK, so I'm no Robert Frost (or David Frost or Jack Frost, for that matter), but this week's pick is worth paying attention to. The Irish lacrosse team could take a big step in deciding the championship of the Midwest Lacrosse Association this weekend. The Irish stickmen face archrival Ohio Wesleyan on Saturday at 1:30 on Cartier Field, before entertaining Wittenburg on Sunday.
