Notre Dame prepares for 'strategic moment' fund-raising campaign

By MARK PANKOWSKI
Assistant News Editor

Notre Dame administrators have been working behind the scenes for the past 20 months on a fund-raising campaign which they hope will be larger than the five previous campaigns combined, administrators said.

The campaign, set to end in December of 1990, is still in its early stages, during which campaign leadership and large contributions are sought, according to Vice President of University Relations William Sexton.

The campaign has been titled "Notre Dame: A Strategic Moment," according to Assistant Vice President for University Relations Richard Conklin.

In a speech on Oct. 2, 1985, University President Father Theodore Hesburgh revealed the campaign and its goal to faculty members.

"... We are embarking on a sixth (campaign), larger than all the others put together," Hesburgh said.

The money raised from the campaign, which would total more than $295 million if its goal is reached, will be used primarily for financial aid, administrators said.

Endowed chairs, support for research and the construction of women's dorms will also be funded, according to Director of Development Joseph Sandman.

Although the campaign began 20 months ago and contributions and commitments made since July 1, 1985 will count toward its goal, the campaign won't be officially announced to the public until May, 1987, said Sexton.

The campaign hasn't been officially announced because administrators first want to collect large contributions which, when revealed at the formal announcement, will provide momentum to the campaign, said Conklin. He who would not say how much had been collected so far.

Although Hesburgh didn't divulge specific details about the campaign during his October address, he did tell faculty members that they'd be hearing more about the campaign before it was publicly announced.

Politicians make stink over ethanol funding

Associated Press

SOUTH BEND - Support is eroding in the Indiana General Assembly for state subsidies needed to keep the $186 million New Energy ethanol plant in business, an Indiana legislator says.

"It is clear to me that someday they will have to sell the plant," said Republican Patrick Kiely of Anderson, chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee.

Ethanol is distilled from corn and other plants and is used as an octane booster in unleaded gasoline.

The plant's future is uncertain without oncoming government subsidies of one form or another, said Donald Evans, vice president of New Energy.

At issue in the legislature are two bills passed by the House that have been assigned to the Senate Rules Committee. Neither of the measures has made progress there.

One bill would continue to exempt gasoline blended with ethanol from one-fifth of the 5 percent sales tax assessed on gasoline. The exemption was adopted to enhance gasohol sales.

The other would provide a direct subsidy of about $7.8 million in the next fiscal year to New Energy in the form of monthly payments of 15 cents for each gallon of ethanol produced.

After assigning the bills to the Rules Committee, Sen. Robert Garton, R-Columbus, Senate president pro tempore, said it was his understanding that the subsidies, which have been paid since the plant began production 15 months ago under authority of previous legislation, were due to expire July 1.

Garton said he is opposed to direct subsidies and that "either ethanol has caught on in the market or it hasn't."

Evans said his company believed it would receive state support for the next fiscal year beginning July 1.

"If we had known we would not be supported by the state for two years we would not have located in Indiana," he said. "We thought we had a good-faith commitment from Indiana."

Reasons for continued subsidies were cited by New Energy President Barry Dierenfeld in a letter last week to Mutz.

He cited decreasing oil prices, which make ethanol less competitive in price, and cheaper imported alcohol from Brazil.

New Energy also is losing revenue from the sale of distillers dried grain, a high-protein livestock feed and by-product in ethanol production, Dierenfeld said. Prices for the by-product have dropped from $180 a ton in 1981 to $92 last year, he said.

That large decrease more than offset the savings gained in declining prices New Energy pays for corn for its plant, he said.

Even with continued state subsidies, New Energy would suffer a net loss of $853,000 to $4 million in the next fiscal year, according to figures Dierenfeld presented to Garton.

Former contras leader blasts CIA for methods, views in Nicaragua

By DAN McCULLOUGH
News Editor

When the Nicaraguan contras allied themselves with the Central Intelligence Agency, it was one of the worst things that could have happened to the contras cause, according to Edgar Chamorro, a former contras leader.

Chamorro, who spoke last night in front of approximately 300 people in the Memorial Library auditorium, said he split with the contras cause because of the growing influence of the CIA in the Nicaraguan Democratic Forces (FDN), the contras group he co-founded.

Chamorro said he struggled with the CIA's methods and philosophy toward the Nicaraguan situation. He told the story of a CIA agent who arrived dressed entirely in black who called himself the "priest of death."

"He thought he was the priest of death, but they nicknamed him 'the umpire,' like in baseball," he said.

"One of the first things that really surprised me was when I found out that we were killing prisoners as policy," said Chamorro.

Another thing that disturbed him, he said, was the manual for guerrilla warfare that the contras put together with the cooperation of the CIA. "Morally, it was offensive for me That manual was recommending that we FDN train our people to hire professional criminals, to kill selected people. And one of the things that really shocked me was there was this paragraph about creating martyrs."

"It was planned. It was pre-planned in cold blood," he said. "That meant some of us had to go in the process."

Another problem Chamorro said he had with the CIA was that their intentions and those of the FDN's were not the same.

"Your intentions, objectives and motives must be similar, must match with your partner in a political joint venture. What objective? To overthrow the Nicaraguan government. But you could not say that."

Instead, Chamorro said that American interests forced the FDN to comply to a policy of duplicity. "We were going to overthrow the government of Nicaragua. But we cannot say that in public. There was an element of duplicity. And the duplicity was that we were supposed to talk to the press and the Congress in different terms."

But Chamorro said he could no longer go along with this, and in November, 1984, he decided to go public. "In this speech, I said our purpose was to overthrow the Sandinista government," he said. "I realized that the moment I was giving my personal opinion, the moment I was getting the wrong kind of feedback from the people in Washington," he said.

Soon after that, Chamorro said, he knew the situation was wrong and he had to do something about it.

"I thought I was a very conservative person, but my group moved so much to the right that now I am called a Sandinista agent ... just because I dare to tell the story, and because I want to say that if we are going to help Nicaragua or Central America it has to be out of honesty. People don't trust politicians, much less politicians who are being paid by America to prowl around," he said.

"There is very disgusting manipulation. There are people out there who have created the policy that is not very clear in the objective, the interest and the motive," he said.

Chamorro said he is now opposed to the policies of the contras, and is working toward finding other solutions to the Nicaragua problem.

"I believe there are other alternatives like diplomacy, like political pressures that should be used. I don't believe Nicaraguan people should die in this futile policy that has not even been defined," he said. "This policy has not worked so it must be immediately stopped."

"Right now I am trying to find the political solution to the Nicaraguan conflict," he said.

In Brief

Winnie Mandela said yesterday her imprisoned husband Nelson Mandela, inspirational leader of South African blacks, will be released, but she did not know when. She told reporters, "I do not have the slightest idea when or where he will be released, but he will be released." It did not appear that the 67-year-old guerrilla leader, who has been serving a life sentence since 1964 for plotting sabotage, would be freed for days, at least. -AP

The crown of Miss Garlic was bestowed on Patricia Gorrasi over the weekend. She was named queen of Garlic Fest II with a spray of champagne and a shower of petals from the "love bulb." Gorrasi, 49, dazzled a three-judge panel with her painted garlic jewelry and spicy answers in the question portion of the contest. She deemed the title an honor, explaining with a shrug, "Hey, I can't be Miss America." -AP

Marilyn Klinghoffer, whose husband was murdered by Palestinian hijackers on the cruise ship Achille Lauro and who later became active in the fight against terrorism, died yesterday of cancer at the age of 59. She had been in Lennox Hill Hospital in New York for about two weeks and had been diagnosed as having cancer in 1984, said Letty Simon, a family spokeswoman. -AP

"Blue baby" procedure pioneer, Dr. Helen Brooke Taussig, will get a chance to meet one of her early success stories this week. The 87-year-old doctor will hear Samuel Sanders perform Tuesday at the university's Peabody Conservatory of Music in a recital in her honor. This will be the first time she has met Sanders since 1947 when he had the operation at age 9. "I wouldn't be performing if it were not for Helen Taussig," Sanders said. -AP

Ron Reagan Jr. opened the "Saturday Night Live" show this weekend with a little "Old Time Rock'n Roll." President Reagan's son starred in the opening skit by dancing in his briefs, romping through the White House and playing a broom like a guitar in a takeoff from the movie "Risky Business." -AP

The mystery-meat of college folklore is not on the menu at a University of Illinois dining room. Volunteering to help others: a calm in the eye of the storm

The Career and Placement Office everyday is a Grand Central Station of future-hunting seniors, ranging from the confident to the frantic. At the Freshman Year of Studies Office, only its inhabitants' slightly younger faces differentiate it from the seniors' stomping ground. In the library, the middle classes are squirming and sweating under a pile of textbooks and term papers.

As students spin around and around, bouncing from class to interview to lab to dorm to dining hall to library, the Administration Building swells with talk of colossal fundraisers, student body diversity, and the constant tug-of-war between teaching and research. Money needs to be generated for new classroom facilities and an automated library and dormitories and . . .

This tornado of growth and progress touches down a few times and wreaks havoc with such ideals as the University's mission and its Catholic identity.

One afternoon last September I needed to find respite from this funnel of academia. I was searching for an idea to fill this space and I ended up near the library reflecting pool. I looked for inspiration in the trees, in the cracks of the sidewalk, even at the bottom of the pool where there was nothing but slang etched in dirt.

Several ideas passed through my head, but none stayed around long enough for me to grab onto it. When I had just about given up on finding an idea in this sector of campus I noticed a young man, another student, walking in my direction from the Library Circle. He had with him a small child, about four or five years old. The boy was oriental and the Notre Dame student obviously was trying to teach him English. The two stopped in front of the library, directly under the mosaic.

"Top, that is the top," the young man said squatting down to the boy's level and pointing to Jesus on the library wall.

"Top," the boy repeated.

"You are at the bottom," the young man patted the ground as he spoke. "Do you want to go to the top?"

"Top," the boy said again.

The couple then straightened up and walked out of my earshot, toward the library. The boy tried to put his arm around the student, but he could only hold onto his leg. All the while he was looking to the top.

It struck me then how ironic this situation was. Inside this looming structure, both a working tool and a symbol of all the higher learning Notre Dame tries to stimulate, hundreds of people were studying books written in more languages than even Father Hesburgh must know. Problems of astrophysics and Aristotle were being analyzed. Students were questioning existential philosophy and the balance of power in Latin America.

Sarah Hamilton

Editor-in-Chief

But on the outside, another student was using the building to teach a very simple lesson: top and bottom. He was sharing his language and his time with another person.

This student may participate in the Big Brothers-Big Sisters program, or NCAA Volunteers for Youth or any number of service oriented organizations, or none at all.

The point is that this Notre Dame student had jumped out of the collegiate tornado to give of himself for someone else.

Father Hesburgh remarked about his students' generosity and social consciousness in an interview that appeared in the Oct. 17, 1985 edition of Catholic New York. "We have 2,000 students working in various programs all over town, programs that help people in one way or another. And about 10 percent of our graduates volunteer a year or two of their lives for some kind of public service," he said.

"They've (the students) gotten the message that you've got to be a part of the community, even if it's only temporary," he continued.

Whether the students finally have grasped a message of responsibility, or simply have grown to realize an uncomplicated sense of priority is an issue that can be debated. But the fact remains that students are caring.

Later that afternoon I saw the student and the boy leaving the library. The former probably had taken his small friend to the 13th floor so that he could show him the whole campus, this institution of higher education. The college student may have been carrying the boy on his shoulders, but it was the latter who was saving his teacher from the tornado.

Students to the rescue of confused taxpayers

By JOHN M. COONEY
News Staff

Some Notre Dame students soon will be coming to the rescue of South Bend residents who are befuddled by loopholes, dependents and deductions.

Notre Dame's Department of Accountancy will once again sponsor a tax assistance program from Feb. 8 to April 15 at nine sites in South Bend, Mishawaka and on the Notre Dame campus.

Several faculty member, 45 students and 12 to 20 certified public accountants from eight local firms will participate in this year's program, according to Kenneth Milani, associate professor of accountancy and advisor to the program.

Students participating in the 15 year old program will prepare the tax returns for eligible local residents. Last year, students helped file 1,600 returns generating $278,000 in tax returns.

The tax assistance program is open to students, who have completed Accounting 476, Introduction to Federal Taxation. The students learned to fill out "all the federal forms and the State of Indiana tax forms," Milani said.

Not only does the program provide a valuable service to the community, but the students participating also gain excellent experience in dealing with tax related problems, said Milani.

"The program allows students to apply some knowledge that they gained in a practical manner and assist people that need their help," he said.

Tim Kimmel, senior accounting major and a center supervisor for the program, said that because "you are actually working with real people with real problems ... you can gain invaluable experience."

The program is different from classroom experience because it forces the student to "recognize, react, and respond to a variety of situations in a short period of time," said Milani.

Although other universities have similar programs, Milani said the Notre Dame program is unique in that it goes into the neighborhoods. This opens up the program to people who would not otherwise come to the university to have their tax forms completed. This is "a real hurdle for most people," admitted Milani.

The Notre Dame tax assistance program is open to people whose income is under $20,000 a year and to the unemployed. Those eligible and interested should bring to the program such items as the tax package, W-2 earning forms, bank interest statements and a copy of last year's tax return if possible.

Information about the times and locations of the program is available by calling 239-5296.

MOVE survivor convicted

Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA - A jury found a MOVE member guilty of riot and conspiracy yesterday in a confrontation between police and the radical group that left 11 people dead and 61 homes destroyed by fire.

Ramona Africa, 30, was acquitted on 10 other counts, including aggravated and simple assault, recklessly endangering and resisting arrest.

A common Pleas Court jury deliberated over three days before issuing the verdict.

The charges stemmed from the siege in May that began when police tried to arrest Africa and three other members of the armed radical cult.

An early-morning shootout gave way to a day-long standoff that ended when police dropped a bomb on MOVE's fortified headquarters and touched off a fire that destroyed 15 blocks.

Africa, the only adult MOVE member known to survive the battle, represented herself at trial. She contended police and city officials had conspired to annihilate MOVE.

Police have said they brought heavy weaponry to the siege because MOVE had threatened violence and had once before, in 1978, drawn police into a shootout in which an officer was killed.

Former Police Commissioner Gregore Sambor testified the bomb was intended to blow a hole in the MOVE compound's roof so that tear gas could be inserted.

The only other MOVE member known to survive the fire was 13-year-old Birdie Africa, now known as Michael Moses Ward.

New social group seeks active role

By MARK MELLETT
News Staff

In the spirit of "We are the World," the Overseas Development Network, Inc. seeks students who want to play a direct role in global development issues.

ODN, Notre Dame's newest social concern group, was started by senior Paul Aiello and junior Sophia Twarog, with the help of Ken Jameson, professor of economics. The club is in conjunction with the original ODN, which was established in Massachusetts in 1983.

With the Catholic tradition of Notre Dame, ODN hopes to tap the resource of human compassion, Twarog said. She said the group is seeking to bring those who genuinely care for the welfare of others into the organization.

"As a Catholic university, we should be called to more than academics," says Twarog. "It's a good outlet for the need that students have to be a part of social development and welfare."

Twarog said a unique aspect of ODN is that they actually take part in the financial development of a region in a Third World nation. Through activities such as films, lectures and dances Twarog said she hopes to raise enough money to fund a small-scale development project in an underdeveloped area of Latin America, Africa or Asia.

Grassroots projects already established by the ODN of Massachusetts include tricycle making and tree planting projects in South America and Africa.

Within the activities, the student will be orientated to the culture of the nation dealt with, Twarog said.

"A key part of ODN is education," she said. Twarog plans to bring advocates of social development to

Notre Dame to lecture and wants to present workshops headed by Notre Dame professors.

Twarog said ODN considers itself a liaison to an awareness of what is available in organizational work for students. Presently, 1,500 development organizations are offered. ODN can "open the door for students in the long term with internships and job training," Twarog said.

ODN also hopes to strengthen the quality and organizational effectiveness of campus organizations, she said. By working with RASTA, World Hunger Coalition and SOLA, the new group wants to unify the potential of the campus.

"We have a lot of ideas," Twarog said. "Frankly, I feel we have the energy to follow through on it."

The group's first meeting will be tonight at 7 in the Center for Social Concerns.

Your plasma makes a difference.

How is plasma different from whole blood?

Have no doubts about it—your donation makes a difference. The difference between a boy leading a normal, active life or being an invalid. These boys have a blood disease called hemophilia, which simply means that their blood cannot clot by itself. They previously led a pretty sheltered life because they could bleed to death from a minor injury. Today they can be treated with a clotting factor that their own bodies do not produce.

And that clotting factor is taken from the plasma you donate.

How much plasma is needed?

A lot. For example, one unit of plasma yields less than a teaspoonful of the clotting factor hemophiliacs need. So you can see the need for large volumes of plasma just for hemophiliacs. And thousands of units of plasma are used in hospitals and emergency rooms every day to save many lives.

Plasma is the liquid in which blood cells are transported. Approximately half of blood is plasma. The blood cells are separated from your plasma at the donor center by a process called plasmapheresis and returned to your body. The plasma taken from your blood is about 92% minerals and water, most of the remainder is proteins. It is these proteins that are used to treat people with various diseases or injuries.

Comedian activist comes to ND

By PRATIBHA TRIPATHI
News Staff

Using humor in the crusade for a better world, Dick Gregory will speak to the Notre Dame campus as part of black awareness month at the Library Auditorium today at 7 p.m.

Although not as well-known to students as the other campus speakers, Gregory is an influential human rights activist. He is also an author, lecturer, philosopher, political analyst and expert on nutrition and diet control.

His lack of popularity is one of the reasons Esther Ivory, chairwoman of Black Cultural Arts Festival, cited for bringing Gregory to the campus.

"We want to introduce blacks that aren't well known," Ivory said. "The purpose is to bring people, in particular blacks, who would not ordinarily be invited."

Gregory began his career as the first black comic to work in first-line white night clubs. From a comedian to a humanitarian, he bridged the gap between the black and the white by shattering the color barrier.

As the '60's progressed, Gregory joined the budding civil-rights movement. Inspired by Gandhi, Gregory began experimenting with prolonged fasting in protest of the Vietnam War.

He has fasted over 100 times, at up to 167 days, to draw attention to important issues such as the plight of blacks, acid rain, and the ERA. Anticipated topics of Gregory's speech are apartheid in South Africa and hunger in Ethiopia.

Once weighing over 300 pounds, Gregory transformed his body to its present lean state. He became a leading advocate for a vegetarian diet and better health. Gregory focuses on individual diet and health as a common ground, a practical starting point for healing and change.

Knowledge of his talent spread quickly and he became a regular on television, becoming popular for his one-liners. A best seller on health and nutrition, "Cooking with Mother Nature," is one of his eight written works.

Manila vote counters walk away, claim Marcos falsified returns

Associated Press

MANILA, Philippines - Thirty computer operators marched out of the government's election commission yesterday, claiming the ballot-counting that showed President Ferdinand Marcos defeating Corazon Aquino was falsified.

An international observer group, meanwhile, accused Marcos' partisans on yesterday of vote-buying, intimidation, snatching ballot boxes and tampering with election returns in Friday's special presidential election.

The computer operators wept on each others' shoulders after parading single file out of the Marcos-appointed commission's counting center.

"There was something wrong," a woman operator explained. "What's posted on the tabulation board does not tally with the computer board, and we don't know who is doing it. We can't take it any more."

The woman, who refused to give her name, told The Associated Press that workers spotted the problem Saturday night, when Aquino was leading in the commission's count by 100,000 votes. By midday yesterday, Marcos had taken over the lead.

By this morning, with 28 percent of the precincts reporting, the commission's unofficial tally gave Marcos 3,056,236 votes to Aquino's 2,903,348, a split of 51.28 percent to 48.72 percent.

But an independent count by the National Movement for Free Elections, a citizens' ballot-monitoring group known as Namfrel, had Aquino in the lead by 5,576,319 votes to 4,806,166 for Marcos, or 53.7 percent to 46.3 percent.

The Namfrel tally represented 49.14 percent of the Philippines' 86,036 precincts. Final election results from this nation of 7,100 islands are not expected for days.

After the workers - 27 women and three men - marched out, tabulation was suspended. The total number of workers tabulating was not known but there were about 300 computers in the center.

Victorino Savellano, chairman of the nine-man Commission on Elections which operates the tally center, denounced the workers' charges as "a political attempt to sabotage our efforts." He said the commission's count is based on authenticated tally sheets which "are beyond doubt" and which anyone could see.

Marcos, who initially predicted an 80 percent landslide, was hard-pressed throughout his first seriously contested campaign since 1969, when he won re-election by defeating former Sen. Sergio Osmena Jr.

In 1972, Marcos imposed martial law, which lasted until 1981. He then won another election, but no major opposition parties fielded a candidate. Marcos has held power for 20 years.

Marcos' latest six-year term was due to expire in 1987, but he called the special election to show domestic and foreign critics, particularly in the United States, that he still enjoyed overwhelming support in the Philippines.

Certification of the election result is up to the National Assembly, which was scheduled to begin its own separate survey today.

Citing the difference between the two counts, Political Affairs Minister Leonardo Perez said he would seek the assembly's approval to terminate all other vote-counting immediately.

Calm returns to riot-torn Haiti

Associated Press

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti - After two nights of wild rejoicing and mob retaliation against the hated secret police of the ousted Duvalier regime, life began returning to normal yesterday in this slum-ridden city of 1 million people.

Trashed, burned-out shells of businesses that were associated with the 28 years of Duvalier family rule bore silent witness to a celebration that turned violent, killing at least 100 people and causing great material damage.

Jean-Claude Duvalier became Haiti's "president-for-life" in 1971 at age 19 on the death of his father, Francois "Papa Doc" Duvalier. He fled to France on Friday on a U.S. air Force plane with about 25 family members, guards and associates after the United States and Jamaica convinced him to step down in the face of mounting violence.

A military-civilian council assumed interim control.

Duvalier's departure sparked riots and revenge killing against the Tonton Macoutes, the Duvalier dynasty's dreaded private militia.

Reporters said Macoutes were beaten and hacked to death with machetes Friday and Saturday.

At least 100 bodies were seen stacked in a morgue at General Hospital, but how the victims died or when they were brought there could not be determined.

France granted Duvalier and his party temporary refuge while it searched for a country willing to offer them permanent asylum. Several already have refused. The French are expected to approach some of the 25 French-speaking African nations, most of which rely heavily on France for aid and commerce.

The provisional military-civilian council on Saturday announced Haiti's new Cabinet. The Cabinet is expected to issue its first communique today, including a date to reopen schools closed Jan. 8 because of national unrest in this impoverished Caribbean island nation of 6 million people.

The national government radio yesterday announced that a member of the new Cabinet, Minister of Justice Gerard Gourgue, formerly president of the Haitian Human Rights Commission, had obtained the release of 26 political prisoners. Further details were not immediately available.

Duvalier, long accused of human rights violations, steadfastly held that there were no political prisoners in his jails.

U.S. embassy spokesman Jeffrey Lite said yesterday that Washington was considering releasing $52 million in foreign aid already approved for Haiti but held up because of the human rights situation under Duvalier.

asked to help as the campaign gets into high gear," he said.

The department of development, the fund-raising arm of the University, already had begun work on the campaign before Hesburgh's speech, according to Sexton.

Those able to either assist with the campaign or make "significant personal contributions" were flown to campus on five weekends last spring to meet with University officials, he said.

Five more such "fly-in weekends," each involving six couples, have been scheduled to begin this March, said Sexton. In addition, the University will invite 100 more potential donors to the campus this fall, he said.

Similar plans for the campaign have been made for next year, he said.

The idea for the campaign grew out of the PACE report, a study which spelled out the University's priorities, according to Provost Timothy O'Meara, who was in charge of the report released in 1982.

In order to fund those priorities, O'Meara said, a campaign bigger than all previous fund-raisers was necessary.

Although the concept of "Notre Dame: A Strategic Moment" is similar to past campaigns, its goal is much more ambitious because "we're a larger University and our needs needs have increased," he said.

"We see there's much more to be done," O'Meara said. "We believe that our benefactors also see that and they're willing to give."

According to Sexton, the major thrust of the campaign is to build-up the University's endowment, which now stands at approximately $310 million.

Hesburgh, who declined to comment about the campaign but instead referred all questions to Sexton, said during his October address that the University hopes the campaign will bring the endowment "up to over a half a billion dollars."

This, he said, "plus faith, is the guarantee of continued progress and avoiding the growing dilemma of either hopelessly high fees or curtailing our steady upward movement."

According to Sexton, most of the funds collected will go to financial aid for students. Approximately 20 percent of the funds will be used for undergraduate financial aid, and approximately 12 percent for graduate financial aid, he said.

Endowed chairs, which establish professorships to attract top scholars to the University, will receive the next largest portion of the funds, he said. The next biggest share will be used for research support and equipment, he said.

Money from the campaign will also finance the renovation of the Administration Building and construction of a new classroom, Sexton said. Funds will also go to the Center for Social Concerns, he said.

According to Sandman, campaign money already has funded the addition to the law school, and will eventually fund the construction of women's dorms. Campaign contributions also will enable the Memorial Library and Snite Museum to add to their collections, he said.

In addition, campaign money will be given to various institutes at the University, such as the Institute for Pastoral and Social Ministry.

In order to fund these projects and institutions, administrators are soliciting funds from all Notre Dame constituencies, said Conklin. These include alumni, parents, board of trustees' members, corporations and foundations, such as the Ford Foundation, he said.

Most of the contributions given so far have been toward scholarships and endowments, Conklin said.

Included among these is one of the largest personal gifts ever received by the University - $6 million from Joan Kroc, widow of the founder of McDonald's, to establish an Institute for Peace Studies.

After the amount of these contributions are made public during the official announcement, the campaign's national phase will begin, Sexton said.

The national phase will encompass 190 cities by 1989, with special events such as dinners being held for potential contributors in those areas, he said.

Those contacted during this period will primarily be alumni, according to Conklin. Parents not solicited earlier in the campaign will also be asked to contribute, he added.

Although this campaign is the most ambitious, it is certainly not new to the University.

The first major fund-raising campaign was called "Challenge I." Beginning in 1960, it lasted three years and raised a total of $24.6 million in gifts and commitments.

The next major campaign, "Challenge II," began as the first ended and also lasted three years. "Challenge II" raised a total of $22 million.

Immediately after that came "SUMMA," which lasted six years and raised a total of $62.5 million.

Three years after "Summa" ended, "Campaign for Notre Dame" began in 1975. It lasted almost six years and raised a total of $180.5 million.

A few months after that, "Athletic Endowment Fund" began. It lasted less than a year and raised a little more than $10 million, according to Carol Hennen, manager of accounts and records.

The total amount raised during these five campaigns amounts to almost $300 million.

Although Hesburgh didn't specify which five campaigns he was referring to during his October address, several administrators agreed these were the five he was speaking of when he said the present campaign's goal is to surpass the five previous campaigns combined.

AIDS victims in prison battle crowds, threats

Associated Press

VACAVILLE, Calif. - There is little comfort for the inmates of the special section of this prison, the place Californian sends inmates who are dying of AIDS.

Some lie draped across the beds of their hospital cells, staring through the bars with gaunt faces. Down the hall, in a dormitory the size of a large living room, the stronger ones talk and kill time.

They sound like most prison inmates. Steven Mednick, a 29-year-old convicted burglar, echoes others as he complains to a visitor: "it's severely overcrowded... the food's cold... the restroom's dirty."

Officials say they do what they can to maintain good conditions.

But the conversation soon comes around to AIDS as Mednick says bluntly, "I don't want to die in prison."

Many inmates in the general prison population fear the AIDS victims and refuse to be housed near them.

In fact, Lt. Joe McGrath, the prison's spokesman, said hospital and dorm areas were set aside for victims after members of the general population issued a threat: "if you don't take care of them, we'll take care of them."

The AIDS victims in the hospital and dorm balk little at the segregation. "Being quarantined is saving my life," says one.

Khoury said the inmates at Vacaville picked up the virus from homosexual sex, from injecting drugs with a hypodermic needle used by an AIDS carrier, or from both activities. Nearly half are homosexuals and about three-quarters are drug users, he said.

"I'm both a homosexual and a drug user," said Keva Smith, 30, a San Franciscan who violated his parole on a grand theft conviction.

Twenty percent of those with pre-AIDS develop AIDS within two years; researchers aren't sure what will happen to the rest.

OC students play a game of cat and mouse (and bird and dog...)

features writer

Someone said that a dog is man's best friend. Well, there are some off-campus students who would like to add mice, fish, cats and other assorted animals to that list.

Many off-campus students have discovered some of the joys and pitfalls involved in owning a pet. Junior Mike Frey says his mouse Knute is "a good friend. I can talk to him and he can't talk back." Frey and his roommates also have three fish: Darby O'Gill, Snooter and Goldie.

The advantages of having pets far outweigh the disadvantages, according to most pet owners.

"They aren't that hard to take care of," senior Kevin Hamer said of Knute and the fish. "It is a pain to clean the tank, but I imagine a dog would be harder to take care of."

"I am glad we have a pet," said junior Ralph Mastrangelo, who has a cat, Gumby, and a kitten, Pokey. "You are never alone with a pet around. Heck, she even moonwalks!" Mastrangelo's roommate, junior Otis Boersma, said the cats were the best pets he has ever had. Maintenance does not seem to pose an obstacle, according to Mastrangelo. "There are no problems in taking care of a cat. You have a litter box and that is it," he explained.

When long breaks in school come around, most students either have friends come in to feed their pets or they take their animals home with them. There is never any question in the Frey and Hamer household as to where Knute will be spending his vacations. Proud owner Frey said, "My mouse comes home with me."

Once a student gets a pet he likes, there are almost no problems, but finding the right pet is sometimes more difficult than one would think. Mastrangelo and his roommates had always wanted to get a dog when they moved off-campus, so they did. But they could not keep him.

"We had a serious flea problem for the first three months of last semester," Mastrangelo explained. "You could not sit on the couch. I had fleas in my bed and everywhere."

Good pets not only provide a hassle-free friendship to their owners, they are also "kind of a conversation piece," as Hamer put it. When he and his roommates have parties, the mouse is put away ("reserved for special occasions"), and everyone takes time to tap on the fish aquarium.

Senior Gio Latoni, who refers to his pet as Thomas the Mouse, said there was another advantage in having a pet. "I think it is a good way to keep people out of the house when you are gone all day or at the library at night. If you do have a pet in the house, people think twice about going in," he explained.

Mastrangelo echoed Latoni's sentiments. "Most people who live in houses, especially if they are around bars, do get pets" for safety reasons, he explained.

"Everyone that can have a pet, should," Hamer said. "And those that can't should make friends with someone who has one."

"Share the fun of a pet!" he cheered.

Winter just isn't the same without snow shoveling

Dave Dvorak

Out of the lunchbox

We always hear of American workers losing their jobs and being replaced by machines. It's pretty unfortunate, but the reasons are simple.

Machines are more efficient than humans. Machines don't take coffee breaks or demand weekly paychecks. Machines don't go on strike.

Yet, as logical as this seems, we know deep down that there is something unnatural about mechanical monsters cranking out products that human hands were meant to fashion.

Face it, the machine-knit sweater you bought at The Gap doesn't mean nearly as much to you as the one Grandma knit you for Christmas.

The perversity of all this becomes especially unsettling when we consider that even the great American institution of snow shoveling is in serious danger of extinction. The culprit? The gas-powered snowblower, of course.

Anyone who spent his childhood in a cold winter climate knows that shoveling sidewalks on cold winter afternoons was an important part of growing up. It built character. It built discipline. It built shoulder muscles.

It was also an important source of employment. On snowy afternoons, my friends and I used to run home from school, grab shovels and hit the streets. Together, we'd walk from house to house, ringing doorbells and offering to sell our services.

Rarely could a housewife or a little old lady say no to a few bright-eyed kids with red cheeks and runny noses. They would usually smile and say something like, "You know, I was just thinking about how badly my walk needed to be shoveled." My neighbors were wonderful liars.

Once we got the job, my friends and I persisted until it was finished. We'd barely be able to lift the shovels as we heaved the snow aside. But we always did a thorough job, making sure the sidewalk was clean right down to the cement.

We usually earned a buck or two apiece for each sidewalk we shoveled. It was tax-free income that could later be invested in candy, Christmas presents or a new baseball glove.

But I feel sorry for kids growing up in my neighborhood today. None of the neighbors on the block need their sidewalks shoveled anymore. After all, Mr. Thurber, a guy down the street, bought a Toro snowblower last year.

Mr. Thurber is a skinny, wimpy guy. His wife, who's twice as big as he, is always bossing him around. When his kids play cowboys and Indians, they like to tie him up and shoot rubber-tipped arrows at him.

But after every snowfall, Mr. Thurber rolls that fearsome red machine out of the garage. With one quick pull of the cord, the thing roars to life, shattering the sacred silence of the winter landscape.

Mr. Thurber himself undergoes a frightening change of character. A maniacal gleam appears in his eyes and a sinister smile spreads across his face. His wimpiness suddenly gives way to confident machismo. Newly-realized power rests in the grips of his hands.

With a simple squeeze of the power-drive lever, Thurber and his snowblower take off down the block. The red monster lunges ahead, gobbling up snow and anything else in its path, throwing everything furiously through the air.

The hearts of all persons nearby are swept by terror as the half-crazed man and his machine approach. Mothers grab their children and run indoors; other kids dive frantically into snowbanks to get out of the way.

When Thurber is finally finished, he has cleared all the sidewalks on the entire block. It's not an act of charity, though; it's a power trip.

He shuts off the snowblower, and by the time the deafening roar has ceased, Mr. Thurber has returned to his normal wimpy self. With a struggle, he wheels the machine into his garage. His wife opens the door and yells at him to set the table for dinner. Like a beaten dog, he hangs his head and follows her into the house.

Meanwhile, all the kids in my neighborhood are out of jobs. I often wonder what they do with themselves all afternoon. I'm worried that they might end up like the kids from somewhere like southern California, where snow shoveling never has and never will exist.

Mention snow shovels to California kids and they'll think you're talking about a new wave band. Since they don't ever shovel snow, they waste their childhoods flinging Frisbees, riding skateboards and playing Hackey Sack. As they grow up, their priorities come to include activities like surfing and getting their hair permed.

That's no way for a kid in my neighborhood to grow up. Give him a snow shovel and put him to work.

Coed dorms would trade old problems for new

The recent discussion of parietals at Notre Dame and Saint Mary's has brought out many interesting issues. One perspective suggests that the present policies inhibit freedom, treat students as children and are potentially harmful to personal development. The other point of view argues that these policies allow for privacy, preserve the common good and thus enhance individual development.

Patrick W. Utz

guest column

In defending either position, proponents suggest that the opposing position contributes to an unhealthy environment. One might look at these issues from a philosophical, political or even theological perspective. I would like to address these issues from the perspective of a psychologist.

What is a psychologically healthy environment? Examining society or families on the restrictive/permissive continuum would lead one to conclude that only at the extremes are environments unhealthy. Both totalitarian regimes and laissez-faire governments produce undesirable effects. Parents who insist on absolute control or, on the other hand, abandon their authority are likely to encounter serious problems in the family system.

Most societies, like most families, function toward the middle on this continuum. Thus, a healthy community could be defined as one that does not produce a large number of psychological problems. A healthy individual is one who is able to cope effectively with the unique stresses of his or her environment.

There have been a variety of policies and procedures related to "visitation" on the campuses where I've worked. The policies themselves do not seem to produce an unhealthy environment, since most are neither totally restrictive nor totally permissive. It is clear, however, that patterns of problems are associated with residential policies on campus.

In a residence hall which houses men and women, the students tend to develop their own "codes." There is typically a taboo against dating someone who lives in the hall. I am aware of a student who moved out in order to be able to date someone from her previous hall. While not forbidden, it is customary not to bring dates into the coed hall. Areas usually are informally defined as "male" or "female," with opposite sex residents expected to respect the different territories.

Relationships between the sexes in the halls tend to be more "brother-sister." It took me some time, coming from a Catholic background, to realize that sleeping in the same room, or even the same bed, did not imply sexual contact. Students on many campuses pushed for such living arrangements and once granted, many expected coed living to become the modal style. In fact, after early strong interest, most campuses have found either a stable or decreasing level of interest in coed dorms.

Students in coed dorms have problems maintaining boundaries. They also report needing more time with same-sex students in order to explore their thoughts and feelings in a less stressful setting. Many report missing the privacy associated with single-sex dorms.

On the other hand, when male/female contacts are restricted, and sexes live totally separately, other problems surface. Casual male/female relationships are often difficult to establish. The talk on either side tends to be generalized.

At Notre Dame we hear comments about "Girls here are..." or "All the guys here care about is..." Much of the aggressive humor is typically directed at members of the opposite sex. Most important, there is less evidence of an androgynous environment. Roles are more sharply defined, stereotypes more deeply entrenched.

Notre Dame would be described as restrictive in residential policy and, until recently, permissive in alcohol use policy when compared to the majority of college campuses. Consequently, we experienced a developing loss of boundaries in alcohol use while at the same time we wrestle with male-female issues which long ago disappeared from many campuses.

Should more changes be made in either area, a new set of community and individual problems would surface. If changes are to be made, it would be my view to look to philosophical, political or theological bases for such changes. From a psychological perspective, it would seem that we would be trading one set of problems, which are associated with a most complicated developmental stage, for another set of problems.

I would like to thank the editorial staff for the invitation to comment on this discussion.

Patrick W. Utz is the director of the Counseling and Psychological Services Center at Notre Dame.

We must be aware of our top officials' proposals

If Attorney General Edwin Meese has his way, the philosophy on which our entire criminal justice system is based could be thrown right out the proverbial window. In an interview published in U.S. News and World Report, Meese was asked about his criticism of the Miranda ruling, which gives suspects the right to counsel by an attorney before police questioning. Meese was asked, "Shouldn't people who may be innocent have such protection?"

William Wilson

or to tear the pages

Meese replied, "Suspects who are innocent of a crime should. But the thing is, you don't have many suspects who are innocent of a crime. That's contradictory. If a person is innocent of a crime, then he is not suspect." Oh, if it were only true. How many innocent people have gone on trial for a crime they did not commit? Yes, they were most likely, and hopefully, acquitted, but they had to be suspect to be charged.

Desire for law and order is something which most of us possess. Yet it becomes frightening when our nation's highest law enforcement officer suddenly wants to change our principle of "innocent until proven guilty" to "guilty until proven innocent."

Of course, it is easy for us to go along with Meese's thinking. One could assume that most of us are not guilty of anything worse than a traffic violation. Most people do not commit serious crimes, so they do not concern themselves with the rights of those who might be so accused. But put yourself in the shoes of someone who is accused of committing a crime. You may be innocent - only you yourself truly know - but if you are, what do you think might happen to you if you were questioned by police without the counsel of an attorney?

Our criminal justice system is a complicated place. An innocent person trying to muddle through it without the assistance of a trained specialist would be like a philosopher trying to decipher a complex electrical schematic drawing.

One of the basic tenets of our justice system is that the worst thing which could happen would be an innocent man going to jail. It is better for a guilty man to go free than for an innocent man to be imprisoned. And without the assistance of legal counsel, many innocent people might go to jail.

Fortunately, it is most likely that Meese never will get his wish regarding the Miranda ruling. But I bring this up to you for this reason: we need to be constantly aware of what our leaders and policy makers are thinking. We need to question their actions so we are assured they are doing the right thing. You don't have to immediately write the attorney general and tell him your opinion, but just be aware of what's going on. A wolf will have a better chance at catching a sleeping sheep than one who is wide awake.

P.O. Box Q

The Aquino candidacy allowed free expression

Dear Editor:

Jim Lahren's articles on the Philippine elections establish either one of two things: his ignorance or his naivete. How simple it is to disregard Corazon Aquino as a "viable election choice" and to advocate a military coup and say it is in "the best interest of the people."

I doubt very much that Lahren knows how unpopular the military is, and should they do something as foolish as to attempt a coup the results would be tragic. Violence would surely erupt, especially between the army and the NPA, the Communist-led New People's Army. Moreover, President Marcos holds the reins of the military through his good friend General Fabian Ver, chief of staff of the Armed Forces. It would be quite impossible to plan a coup in a country with 7,000 islands without news of it leaking to the president and his putting an end to it.

Lahren goes on further to say Aquino is not a viable election choice. He seems to think President Marcos' re-election is again "in the best interest of the Philippine people." Marcos has been in power for 20 years, and he is a sick man.

Furthermore, the country's economy is deteriorating. The Philippines has a huge foreign debt and many businesses are closing. Many foreign investors have left the Philippines, and with good reason. Would any sensible businessman choose to invest in an economy that was unstable and run by a corrupt government? A government led by a man who has questionable credentials, possibly fabricated to make him a bigger hero than the liar he is? I doubt it. And who is to stop him? Not his wife, nor the military (he would simply bribe them all), and certainly not his conscience.

It has been at least 17 years since a presidential election has been held in the Philippines. The opposition has not been given a chance to form a political party as strong as the President's KBL. It is only through Corazon Aquino that the opposition has made a move to unite. Yes, she is inexperienced, but she has one thing to offer that Marcos doesn't: credibility. She will bring credibility back to the government and the country and hopefully bolster the failing economy, something Marcos has failed at. I wonder whether Lahren is aware of the fact that Corazon Aquino is estranged from the members of her family that own the enormous sugar plantation and that her farm was appropriated by the government.

A final point I wish to make (again contrary to Lahren's opinion) is that the United States made the right decision in calling for early elections. Marcos' popularity was decreasing and it is only fair to see whether the Filipinos still wanted him as their leader or not. Moreover, it gave the United States a chance to reevaluate its policies towards the Philippines, the big question being whether or not they would support an unpopular government. Although the electoral process in the Philippines is obviously more tainted than what Americans are used to, it gave the Filipinos a chance to express themselves. Perhaps this freedom of expression is what the country needed all along.

James Roach's victims were forgotten in letter

Dear Editor:

As a lawyer, a member of the law enforcement community and a frequent visitor to the University of Notre Dame, I feel compelled to respond to Ms. Kinta Haller's letter attacking the moral justification for the death of James Terry Roach in South Carolina's electric chair.

This letter obviously was written absent any knowledge of the factual settings surrounding this tragic case. To concentrate solely on the punishment earned by Roach for the heinous crime which he perpetrated upon two innocent residents of the Columbia area is unfortunate.

Often well-meaning persons such as the writer of this letter ignored the truth. The truth is that both Roach and Joseph Carl Shaw, his partner, received the punishment which fit the crime they perpetrated and freely admitted. To forget the innocent victims, Carlotta Hartness and Thomas Taylor, is sad. Truly, victims of crime have, in the words of the Supreme Court, "been forgotten, unwanted and unrepresented."

To fully appreciate what really transpired in this case and to allow each individual the ability to determine his position as to the death penalty, it is necessary to review the facts surrounding this crime.

The following facts were taken from edited excerpts of the South Carolina Supreme Court:

Shaw, Roach and Ronald Eugene Mahaffey spent the morning of Saturday, Oct. 29, 1977, "shooting up" with drugs and drinking beer. At approximately 1 that afternoon the three decided, in Mahaffey's words, "to see if we could find a girl to rape."

Shaw, Roach and Mahaffey drove to Polo Park, a baseball park, located off Alpine Road northeast of Columbia. There they saw a parked late model car occupied by Taylor, 17, and Hartness, 14.

Shaw, who was driving, pulled up beside the parked car in such a way that Roach, who was in the front passenger's seat, was directly across from Taylor, the driver of the parked car. Mahaffey was in the back seat.

At a prearranged signal from Shaw, Roach leveled a .22 caliber rifle through the car window at Taylor and demanded money. Taylor gave the three his wallet.

Shaw and Mahaffey got out of their car and Mahaffey took the keys out of Taylor's car. Shaw ordered Hartness out of Taylor's car and forced her into the back seat of his car with Mahaffey. Shaw got back into his car, turned to Roach and said, "Ok, now." Roach then shot and killed young Taylor who was still sitting in his parked car.

Hartness was carried to a dirt road a short distance away where she was raped and forced to perform deviant sexual acts.

Shaw asked who would shoot Hartness and Roach volunteered. Shaw instructed Hartness to put her face to the ground but she refused. Shaw drew a circle in the dirt, drew an "X" inside the circle and told Hartness to place her head in the circle. Hartness again refused and pleaded for her life. Shaw told Hartness a third time to place her head on the ground and she complied. Roach shot Hartness in the head, causing her body to convulse. Shaw then took the rifle from Roach and fired into Hartness' head, killing her.

Shaw, Roach and Mahaffey left the scene, disposed of the rifle and bullets, and returned to Polo Park to satisfy themselves that Taylor was dead.

Later that night Shaw returned to the scene of Hartness' murder and mutilated her body.

Shaw, Roach and Mahaffey were arrested on Nov. 3, 1977. Each was indicted for two counts of murder, two counts of conspiracy, rape, kidnapping and armed robbery. The state elected to seek the death penalty for Shaw and Roach and served the Notices required by Section 16-3-20(B), Cum. Supp. 1978, on Dec. 14, 15 and 16, 1977. At this hearing, evidence in extenuation, mitigation and aggravation was introduced. The trial judge found aggravating circumstances and imposed sentences of death upon both Shaw and Roach.

On Jan. 10, 1986, James Terry Roach, an adult, 25, received the penalty for an adult crime.

Accusation against CBS was not completely true

Dear Editor:

I was appalled Thursday to find another article by Rich Coglianese in The Observer. After being so ridiculed for his idiotic article on the restoration of the Latin Mass, I felt that Coglianese would learn to enter the realm of reality. Unfortunately, I was wrong. His latest pathetic effort, concerning CBS, was equally inept.

I believe that his accusations of CBS being sympathetic toward Cuba are not entirely correct. I would like to know why he bases the aim of a network on the actions of a lone employee, Robert Taber.

His conclusion that the CBS network "would not stoop to insult Castro" does not take into account all the other important factors concerning the poll of Grenada residents and their subsequent airing, or lack thereof. I must agree with Coglianese that the coverage of the children at McAuliffe's school was tasteless, but so were the repeated broadcasts of the shuttle explosion and the reaction of the McAuliffe family at Cape Canaveral by the other networks. I fail to see how being an altar boy is the first step to the priesthood. Silly, clueless me.

I also find it hard to believe that Ted Turner wanted to buy CBS to transform the network. Perhaps money and prestige were more likely motivators. I would just love to see Jesse Helms buy CBS. Why, we would be able to hear the Moral Majority on network TV. Such joy!

Blue Devils knock off Ga. Tech, set to host Notre Dame on Sunday

Associated Press

DURHAM, N.C. - Mark Alarie scored 24 points and Johnny Dawkins added 22 as fourth-ranked Duke broke open a tight game early in the second half and beat second-ranked Georgia Tech 75-59 in an Atlantic Coast Conference game yesterday.

The victory improved the Blue Devil's record to 22-2 overall and 9-2 in the ACC, a game behind top-ranked North Carolina. Georgia Tech has lost two of its last three, both ACC games, and dropped to 18-4 and 6-3.

The Blue Devils travel to Stetson tomorrow before returning home to host the Fighting Irish of Notre Dame Sunday in a nationally-televvised contest.

The combination of a ball-hawking defense and Georgia Tech's cold shooting helped the Blue Devils race off on a 16-6 spree at the start of the second half. Alarie scored four straight baskets in the spurt, and it was his layup which capped the streak and gave Duke a 50-39 edge with 15:41 left to play.

The Yellow Jackets got within 52-46 at the 9:55 mark on a Duane Ferrell drive. But six straight Duke points pushed their edge to 62-49 with 5:49 left, and the lead grew as large as 68-53 on a Dawkins dunk with 3:25 remaining.

The final score was Duke's biggest advantage.

John Salley led Georgia Tech with 17 points, while Mark Price scored 12, Bruce Dalrymple had 11 and Tom Hammonds 10.

Georgia Tech committed 21 turnovers, 12 in the second half, and cooled off to 46 percent from the field after shooting 56 percent in the first half.

Duke shot 45 percent in the opening period, but warmed up to 60 percent in the second half and finished at 52 percent.

over the Musketeers. The 6-2 Botham's 25 points on 10-of-12 shooting and eight rebounds provided much of the crucial inside punch early, while the freshman guard Toney came off the bench to score 20 points (9-of-11 shooting) and add six assists to the winning cause.

"I think Diondra Toney was the big difference in the game," noted DiStanislao. "She showed a lot of quickness and did a good job defensively, and she was excellent at passing the ball around on the offensive end."

Toney and sophomore guard Mary Gavin (12 points, 5 assists) did an especially fine job in limiting Xavier's premier player, guard Deborah Long. While Long's 13 points were second only to teammate Maureen Fredrick (14 points) for tops on the Musketeers' list, the 5-8 senior committed 9 turnovers and was unable to do any serious damage.

This inability to keep pace with Notre Dame turned the game into an early rout, giving the Irish a 51-35 halftime margin and allowing senior forward Trena Keys and teammates Lavetta Willis and Lynn Ebben an early exit to the bench for some rest. Keys wound up with 17 points in only 21 minutes of play, while Willis contributed 16 points.

ND track team finishes 3rd in meet

By PETE SKIKO
Sports Writer

Ten personal records were set by members of the Notre Dame track team in Friday's Indiana Intercollegiate Track Meet held in West Lafayette, Ind.

Head Coach Joe Piane watched as Notre Dame took third place out of an eleven team field. Only Indiana and Purdue outscored the Irish.

"Overall, we were very pleased with the meet," said senior co-captain John McNelis. "A lot of guys ran their best times of the year, and this was a great tune-up for the Central Conference meet next week."

The Central Collegiate Conference meet spans five states' schools and normally provides the Irish with one of their biggest challenges of the year.

Stand outs for the Irish on Friday were senior Jim Tyler and junior Rob Nobles. Tyler came back to West Lafayette to defend his first place showing in the 1500 meters of a year ago, and once again he was the first to break the tape. Nobles, who took second place at the outdoor Indiana Intercollegiate last year, won the 500 meters on Friday.

Middle-distance runner McNelis was nipped at the tape in the 800 meters, chopping a second off of last year's time as he finished in 1:52:15. Junior Mike Collins finished second in the 3000 meters, and Jeff Van Wie finished third in the 1000 meters.

Junior co-captain Joel Autry, who competed in the triple jump and the long jump in Friday's meet, is happy with the progress the team has made and feels that it's peaking at just the right time.

"In about a month, we've got IC4A's," said the Fort Wayne, Ind. native, "and right now we're in a really good position to send a lot of guys. The IC4A's are big. It takes some quality individuals to make them, and I'd say we'll be represented well there."

The IC4A Championships are held in Princeton, N.J., on March 8 and 9, the week before the NCAA Indoor Championships.

The Irish next run in the Central Collegiate Conference meet on February 14-15, in Madison, Wis., and then it's on to Bloomington for the Indiana TAC on Feb. 21.

Tway wins playoff, Williams title

Associated Press

SAN DIEGO - Bob Tway escaped with a playoff victory yesterday - his first on the PGA tour - when Bernhard Langer missed a four-foot par putt on the second extra hole of the Shearson Lehman Brothers Andy Williams Open Golf Tournament.

Twain, 26 and in his second season on the tour holed his two-to-three foot putt for par after Langer, a West German who holds the Masters title, three-putted for bogey on the par-3 hole.

Each completed 54-holes in this rain-shortened event at 204, 12 shots under par. Langer, winner of 17 international events, had a closing 68 and Tway had a hard-fought 69.

Both made routine pars on the first playoff hole.

On the next, Langer put his tee shot some 30 feet from the flag and Tway was about 20 feet from the cup.

Langer ran his first putt some four-to-five feet beyond the cup, and Tway, with a chance to win, also missed. He went two-to-three feet past the cup.

Langer, using a cross-handed grip and putting through the shadow of a television tower, pushed his second putt to the right and, tight-lipped, tapped in for bogey.

Tway holed his short one for the title and the winner's share of $81,000 from the total purse of $450,000.

Langer, who made up two shots over the last three holes, won $48,600.

Langer, playing about 45 minutes in front of Tway, dropped an 18-foot birdie putt on the 16th hole of regulation to close within one stroke of the lead.

Tway, in the lead alone, dropped back into a tie when he drove into the rough, hit his second through the green and bogeyed the 17th.

He holed a gritty, 6-to-8 foot second putt for par on the 18th that preserved a share of the lead and forced the playoff.

Paul Azinger, who once held the lead alone, Mark Lye and Mike Hulbert finished one shot out of the playoff at 205. Hulbert had a closing 67, Lye 69.

Azinger, a second-year player, surrendered a chance for his first victory when he snatched his tee shot into an unplayable lie on the 16th and made double bogey. He also had a last-round 69 in the chilly, sunny weather.

Gary Koch, Larry Rinker and Gary Hallberg were another shot back at 206. Hallberg and Koch closed up with 67s, and Rinker had a 68 on Torrey Pines' South course.

Isiah Thomas, shown here in an earlier regular-season game, scored 30 points to lead the East All-Stars to 139-132 victory over the West. Thomas, the game's MVP, also dished out 10 assists in the East's come-from-behind victory. Game details appear at right.

East All Stars beat West, 139-132; Pistons' Thomas wins game MVP

Associated Press

DALLAS - Isiah Thomas scored 12 of his 30 points in the fourth quarter, four during a critical 8-0 streak near the end of the game, to lead the East to a 139-132 victory yesterday in the 36th NBA All-Star game.

Thomas, repeating his Most Valuable Player performance of 1984, gave the East the lead for good with two free throws with 2:09 remaining, making the score 131-130. The Detroit Pistons' guard, who also had 10 assists, added two more free throws 20 seconds later to complete the 8-0 run.

The West led for most of the game until the stronger East started pushing the ball inside to Philadelphia center Moses Malone, who scored seven points in the final quarter. Thomas scored most of his 12 fourth-quarter points early in the quarter to keep the East close.

Boston's Larry Bird added 23 points and Malone and Milwaukee's Sydney Moncrief 16 each for the East.

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar and James Worthy, both of the Los Angeles Lakers, led the West with 21 and 20 points. Worthy, in a spectacular performance, scored 14 of his points on layups or dunks.

Houston's Ralph Sampson and Denver's Alex English added 16 points each for the West.

After the lead changed hands only once in the first half, which ended with the East ahead 69-66, there were 11 lead changes and six ties in the third period.

Earvin "Magic" Johnson of the Lakers missed almost half of the second half because of foul trouble, but finished with 15 assists after collecting 10 in the first half. Johnson's two free throws with 1:11 to go cut the East's advantage to 133-132, but an offensive rebound and basket by New Jersey's Buck Williams restored a three-point edge with 58 seconds left, and the West didn't score again.

Worthy scored 10 points in a span of less than four minutes as the West led for all but 24 seconds of the first quarter.

Johnson had six assists in the period as he attempted a spectacular pass nearly every time down the floor.

The West hit 13 of its first 17 shots but 11 turnovers in the first nine minutes allowed the East to stay close.

Three baskets apiece by Philadelphia's Julius Erving and Thomas helped the East cut a 14-6 deficit to 22-21 and the West settled for a 36-34 margin at the end of the quarter.

English had eight points in less than 2-and-a-half minutes early in the second quarter and Abdul-Jabbar hit two straight baskets to give the West its largest lead at 53-44 with 6:51 left.

Bird, Saturday's three-point contest winner, scored 12 points, including two three-pointers.

Irish wrestlers drop matches with Purdue and Clemson

By RICK RIETBROCK
Sports Writer

Notre Dame's wrestling team lost matches to Clemson and Purdue, but Irish head coach Fran McCann said that it was by no means a lost weekend.

Even though his team's record fell to 5-6, McCann said the Irish show signs of stepping up to a higher level of quality that will enable them to compete with solid squads on a regular basis.

"I really felt good about what our guys did out there," McCann said. "I saw some very positive things that show me we've come a long way. We've made a lot of progress."

Unfortunately, the progress did not show up on the scoreboard against an experienced Purdue team, as the Irish were beaten soundly, 38-9.

The only Irish victories came on decisions from freshmen Jerry Durso and Chris Geneser, and junior Dave Helmer.

McCann said he knew Purdue was a talented squad, and they proved to be every bit as tough as he expected.

"We expected Purdue to be a very good team and they were," he said. "They're a veteran team with five senior starters, and they really come at you."

"I think they are probably the third best team in the Big Ten, but despite that there were some tough matches that could have gone either way. If we could have come out on top of those, it could have been a lot closer."

Clemson came into the match ranked 20th in the nation and with three nationally-ranked wrestlers on its squad. The Irish wrestled very well against the Tigers before falling, 26-18.

Notre Dame pulled out to an early lead when 118-pound Carl Hildinger won by forfeit and 126-pound Dave Carlin won by a 10-4 decision.

Durso then defeated Clemson's Bobby Taylor by technical fall to raise his record to 33-6. The 33 victories by the 134-pound freshman tied a Notre Dame record for wins in a season by a freshman previously set by Phil Baty in the 1981-82 season.

The Irish could get only one more victory, however. Dave Helmer scored a 7-3 decision at 190 pounds.

McCann said the Irish were very close to upsetting the Tigers.

"We gave them a very good match," he said. "One match that was critical was at 167 pounds, where Geneser went against their guy who is ranked No. 5 (26-3-1 Mike Pitts). Chris wrestled him tough and lost 7-6."

"If we win that one, the match can go either way."

The three matches against Michigan State, Clemson, and Purdue in three days made up quite a demanding stretch for the Irish, but McCann said that type of stretch is helpful in building a solid program.

"We got banged up a little," he said. "It was quite a tough weekend, including Thursday at Michigan State, but we have to go through something like this to help our young team improve."

The Irish will have some time to recover from the tough going they have endured in losing their last four matches. Next Saturday, they will travel to Bloomington to face Indiana.

a very unselfish player but you saw today that when it comes to showtime, he can take over."

It looked as though Washington may take over from the beginning, as he used his superior strength to draw two quick fouls on David Rivers. The Irish then switched to a zone defense, protecting Rivers and shutting off Syracuse's inside game.

Meanwhile, the Irish offense got untracked, as Ken Barlow began to find the range on his jumper. The senior forward scored two of his 16 points when his 12-footer gave the Irish a 15-14 lead with 13:20 remaining in the first half.

The Irish gradually expanded the margin to 10, as Donald Royal scored two of his team-high 20 points, canning a pair of foul shots with 4:08 left in the half.

Notre Dame couldn't slam the door on the Orangemen, however, as Syracuse closed the margin to four by the half. It started to look like the same old story on the road for the Irish.

Washington started to dazzle in the second half, and Rivers was forced to the bench on his fourth foul with 12:43 remaining. The benching was short-lived, though, as Sherman Douglas' rebound goal brought Syracuse within one at 57-56. Phelps took a calculated risk, and Rivers reentered the lineup.

Undaunted, the Orangemen continued the comeback, taking a two-point lead at 67-65 when Washington banked home a leaning 12-footer with 6:13 left. Phelps called a timeout to settle his club down, and it worked.

First, Tim Kempton scored a three-point play to give Notre Dame a lead it would never relinquish. Then the Irish proceeded to pad the lead with clutch foul shooting, hitting 13 of 17 down the stretch.

Perhaps just as important was the fact Notre Dame snared the rebound on all four of its misses, allowing the Irish to take more time off the clock.

Overall, Notre Dame collected 14 offensive rebounds on its way to out-rebounding Syracuse. The Orangemen had entered the game second in the NCAA in rebounding margin.

"We work a lot on getting missed foul shots," noted Phelps. "I'm glad that Kempton and Rivers missed them today when we won, instead of in a loss. Both of those guys have won a lot of games for us in the past."

On this snowy Saturday in central New York, however, there were plenty of heroes to take credit, and Phelps was generous in handing out the praise.

"Everybody played well for us today," commented the Irish coach, who must prepare his team for tomorrow night's battle with Fordham at the ACC. "We never lost our composure, we did a good job on the boards and we made the key foul shots."

And in the end, the foul shots won out over the foul language.

IRISH ITEMS... Washington was named the game's MVP... Phelps passed along his condolences to Boeheim on the passing of the Syracuse coach's father. James Boeheim, 68, died Thursday after a long bout with cancer.

Women's swimming sweeps dual meet with Valpo, UIC

By KATHLEEN McKERNAN
Sports Writer

"We swam very, very fast," Notre Dame swim coach Tim Welsh said of the women's swim team after its performance Friday night in the Rolfs Aquatic Center. In the double-dual meet, Notre Dame soundly defeated Valparaiso, 67-46, and Illinois-Chicago, 71-42.

With the wins, the Irish raised their record to 7-2, but more importantly they came together more completely as a team and gained important experience in championship events.

"A couple of very important things happened in these meets," coach Welsh said. "First, we made substantial time drops. Second, we swam two new events."

Those events were the 1650-yard freestyle and the 400-yard individual medley. Usually in dual meet competition, teams compete in 1000-yard races instead of the 1650. In the upcoming championships, however, the Irish will compete at the 1650 distance. Friday's meet gave them an opportunity to prepare for the championships in that event.

"What was exciting about that event was that not only did we swim it fast, we swam it well," an obviously pleased Welsh said. "We balanced the smaller parts of the long race very well."

Notre Dame's two 1650 swimmers, Anne Costello and Sarah Vakkur took first and second places respectively, with less than six seconds difference between the times in the long event. And while only Costello and Vakkur placed highly in the event, the fact that the team was able to compete successfully in the new event gave everyone a big boost of confidence, according to Welsh.

Sophomore Amy Darlington of Fairfield, Ohio, also contributed strong swims to Notre Dame's cause on Friday. Darlington swam the 400-individual medley in 4:48.64, a new Irish record.

"Amy's success and the 1650 race were the most significant swims as far as indicating coming championship performances," Welsh said.

Jean Browne, a freshman from Allentown, Pa., turned in strong swims in the 100-yard freestyle race and the 200-yard freestyle relay. In the 100 freestyle, her 57.93, which she swam in exhibition, would have won first place honors. She also participated in the relay with the fastest time of 1:43.62.

"One good thing about this meet was seeing Jean Browne come around," said Welsh. "That was just terrific."

Junior Suzanne Devine, the Notre Dame record holder in many of the butterfly and freestyle events, also had an excellent meet. She finished first in the 100-yard butterfly and dropped under two minutes in the 200 freestyle.

Coach Welsh was especially pleased, however, with the way the team has pulled together as a unit recently.

"The team has really started to jell over the past few weeks," Welsh said. "A couple of things have been important to our recent successes. First, we've had considerably improved performances, which builds confidence. Second, we've had some easy wins, which makes things easier during our most competitive meets."

The women swimmers had faced Valparaiso and Illinois-Chicago in the season at the Notre Dame Relays, yet they still really did not know what to expect. Valparaiso came into the meet with an undefeated dual-meet record of 8-0 after finishing with a 5-8 mark last year. They also had beaten five teams that they lost to last year.

"It was important that our swimmers were relaxed and comfortable for this meet," Welsh said.

The relaxed Notre Dame women dominated Valparaiso and Illinois-Chicago. Near the end, when an Irish victory was assured, Notre Dame relaxed even more and let the other two swim more or less against each other.

Men's swimming downs Ferris St.

By SCOTT INGLIS
Sports Writer

A determined Notre Dame men's swim team met the men from Ferris State Saturday and came away with a big 78-35 victory at the Rolfs Aquatic Center. The win, which came in Notre Dame's last home meet of the year, lifted the team's record to 4-5 and served as a sign to Head coach Tim Welsh that his team is coming together at the right time with the Midwest Collegiate Conference championships just a few weeks away.

"The exciting thing is that we won one and won one big," said Welsh. "This was the kind of meet that the team really needed. It was good for moral, good for confidence and good for the upcoming championships."

Notre Dame started the meet well and never looked back, taking the first event, the 400-yard medley relay in 3:39.53, in a time that was almost three seconds faster than any previous time this season.

"That has been a meet goal for us for some time," said Welsh. "This is the first time we have led a meet from the beginning. It was an awfully big lift to start off the meet 7-0."

Things only got better from there for the Irish, as the men took first place in nine of the eleven events on the day from Ferris State and led the meet from start to finish. Welsh attributed his team's success to key swims combined with other circumstances.

"We were a little faster today than we have been, and they were a little slower," noted Welsh. "But we knew we had to swim well to win. Everything fell into place for us with all the x variables turning out in our favor. Those things combined made for the lopsided score."

Exceptional performances for the Irish were turned in by double-winners John Koselka and John Coffey. Koselka, a freshman, took first place in both the 50-yard free style and the 100-yard free-style with times of 21:97 and 49:65 respectively to boost the Notre Dame effort.

Coffey, a senior co-captain, came through with a win in the 200-yard free style with a time of 1:49.80 and the 200-yard backstroke in 2:06.06 to lead the Irish.

With the meet well in hand at the end, Notre Dame was able to have a little fun, putting together an all-senior team for the last event - the 400-yard free relay. Although the team was edged out by Ferris State at the end, Coach Welsh felt it was a good way to end the meet and the home season.

"This was a nice way for the seniors to end up their careers here," Welsh said. "Now we are looking ahead to our meets next week against Illinois-Chicago and Northern Illinois. With the win today, our two primary goals for the season, a winning record and a win at the conference meet in Evansville, are well within reach."

Notre Dame topples No. 8 Syracuse, 85-81

Irish silence crowd, sink 41-of-48 from line

By CHUCK FREEBY
Sports Writer

SYRACUSE, N.Y. - The Syracuse University student body has a questionable "tradition" of yelling an obscenity after an opponent makes a free throw.

It had a chance to practice that obscenity and a lot of others Saturday, as No. 14 Notre Dame upset seventh-ranked Syracuse, 85-81, before a crowd of 32,397, third-largest in Carrier Dome history.

The Irish, now 16-4, won this game where they have won so many others this season - at the free throw line. Notre Dame converted a school-record 41 of 48 attempts from the foul line to snap the Orangemen's 15-game home winning streak.

"That's part of our offense", noted Notre Dame coach Digger Phelps, who watched his team play some of its best basketball of the year. "We want to get to the line. We work a lot on getting the ball inside during practice so we can draw the foul."

That's precisely what the Irish did all day, as they took advantage of injuries to Syracuse's Rafael Addison and Rony Seikaly. With those two frontcourt players out of the lineup, Notre Dame's big men had a field day inside.

"We wanted to take it to them," noted Phelps. "We played really aggressive, and we felt we could exploit that weakness."

"We knew Seikaly liked to block shots but we felt if we took it right at him, we could get him in foul trouble. That was our game plan, to get them in foul trouble."

It worked, too, as four Orangemen fouled out of the contest, which dropped Syracuse to 18-3. Still, Syracuse coach Jim Boeheim didn't think it was all because of Notre Dame's play.

At first, Boeheim declined to comment on the officiating, which resulted in a technical foul for the Syracuse coach with 24 seconds left. Calls enraged both coaches throughout the course of the ballgame, and Boeheim went on to make some statements which were less than complimentary of the Atlantic Coast Conference crew.

"Somebody got us in foul trouble," hinted Boeheim. "It was physical at one end, and at the other end, everything we did was a foul. I don't mind a physical game, if it's the same on both ends."

The contest wasn't all physical, though, as some outstanding guard play by Syracuse's Dwayne "Pearl" Washington kept the Orangemen in the game.

Washington tied a season-high with 28 points, many of them coming on jump shots with a hand in his face. His scoring along with eight assists left both coaches looking for superlatives.

"Dwayne played an exceptional game tonight," said Boeheim. "He kept us in the game almost singlehandedly."

"Pearl's the next Oscar Robertson," exclaimed Phelps. "He's

Syracuse forward Wendell Alexis scored 25 points in a losing effort, as Notre Dame downed the Orangemen, 85-81. Alexis played all 40 minutes of the game and pulled down a team-high five rebounds. Chuck Freeby details the victory in his story at left and tells what the game meant to the Irish in his story at right.

ND dominates inside, Price puts end to slump

By CHUCK FREEBY
Sports Writer

SYRACUSE, N.Y. - Boom, boom, boom.

That's what it sounded like inside the Carrier Dome all day Saturday, as No. 14 Notre Dame beat Syracuse like a bass drum on its way to an 85-81 upset of the seventh-ranked Orangemen.

Boom.

That's the sound of the Irish frontline pounding away on the inside. The fearsome foursome of Ken Barlow, Donald Royal, Tim Kempton and Jim Dolan not only made major contributions on offense, but they took away the Orangemen's inside game on defense. A tenacious zone defense limited center Rony Seikaly to five points and shut out Syracuse's leading scorer, Rafael Addison, who was already bothered by a sore ankle.

"We dominated the inside all day and dominated the outside when we had to," noted Irish coach Digger Phelps. "Ken Barlow came through for us today, Joseph Price came through for us, and we just got a good team effort."

Price was particularly satisfied with his performance. Phelps made it no secret at last Thursday's press conference he was unhappy with Price's play, but the senior guard responded with 12 points and 28 solid minutes of play.

"Considering the slump I've been in, I'm happy Coach still had the confidence in me and let me play," said Price. "When I hit my first shot, it took a little of the pressure off me. As everybody says, when I hit my first one, I'm on the road."

Boom.

That's the sound of noise reverberating through the massive Carrier Dome. A crowd of 32,397 - some of them sitting at least 70 yards away from the playing floor with an obstructed view - made noise all day long. All the yelling, however, failed to intimidate the Irish.

"We couldn't let the fans dictate to us at the free throw line," noted Royal, who connected on 14-of-17 from the foul stripe. "We knew we had to do well at the line."

Notre Dame did just that, setting a school record and a Carrier Dome record by connecting on 41 of 48 free throws.

Boom.

That's the sound of Notre Dame knocking on the door of the NCAA tournament. Saturday's win left little doubt in the minds of many that the Irish could be a force come March.

"We deserve to be ranked," emphasized Phelps after the game. "I know a lot of people question that, but I think today gives us credibility. This is a win that could only help us in March."

"The victory means a great deal to me," added point guard David Rivers. "It's great to beat a ranked team. We proved that if

Irish women whip Xavier, will face UIC tonight

By MARTY BURNS
Assistant Sports Editor

You could say the Notre Dame women's basketball team blew out Xavier Saturday afternoon at the ACC, but you'd be wrong.

That's because "blow out" would be much too mild a term to describe Notre Dame's 104-57 massacre of the Lady Musketeers. Call it a thrashing, a pounding, or maybe just an utter subdual by a clearly overwhelming force.

Whatever you call it, Irish head coach Mary DiStanislao called it an impressive win for her team, now 13-7 on the year and 6-1 in the North Star Conference.

"I think it was just a case of a team that was really ready to have a good game," said DiStanislao, who saw her team's 17-game NSC winning streak end last Wednesday against Dayton. "The Dayton loss last week was a very difficult loss for us. I think the team was ready to put it behind us."

Notre Dame will have the opportunity to add another victory to its record tonight when it faces the University of Illinois (Chicago) in Chicago. The match tonight with the 9-12 Flames will be the last non-conference game of the season for the Irish before they begin their seven-game stretch towards a second consecutive NSC title.

Notre Dame should be in good emotional straits for that stretch drive after its domination of Xavier on Saturday. Five Irish players scored in double figures as the host team rolled to its most lopsided victory since a 107-61 win over the same Xavier team last year.

Strangely enough this win on Saturday occurred despite the fact that Notre Dame was hurting for the battle, as key bench-players Heidi Bunek and Kathy Brommeland sat out the game because of illness. This loss of bench strength, coupled with a flat opening by the Irish, seemed to bode well for Xavier's hopes at least to keep the game close.

But even those minor hopes were shattered soon after when it became apparent that the Musketeer offense could not contend with the quicker, taller Irish defense. And while the Xavier backcourt was being stymied in its attempts to get the ball inside (the Musketeers committed 33 turnovers on the day), Notre Dame was getting easy shots underneath on the other side.

"I think it took us a few minutes to get started," said DiStanislao. "I think we were a little flat and we weren't getting good defensive play. But even though we were a bit short-handed without Bunek and Brommeland, we still knew we'd be able to get the ball inside."

Irish players Sandy Botham and Diondra Toney must have known this also, as the two showed no mercy in directing the onslaught

see IRISH, page 10

Notre Dame's Diondra Toney found the going tough inside on this trip down the court. This was as tough as it got for the Irish, though, as they thoroughly whipped Xavier, 104-57. Toney scored 20 points and handed out 6 assists in Notre Dame's romp. Marty Burns has the game story at left.
