Teens arrested after $10,000 binge

Associated Press

COLUMBUS, Ohio - Two California teen-agers took off on a cross-country binge of fancy meals and new clothes after finding a suitcase stuffed with about $8,000 in drug money, but their spending spree attracted police, who arrested them five days later.

Raymond Salter, 13, and Marc Hairrell, 14, were picked up Sunday at Port Columbus International Airport with nearly $5,000 and a bag containing less than a gram of cocaine.

Each was being held Wednesday on a charge of drug abuse, but Columbus Police Officer Floyd Wise said he would probably seek dismissal of the charges so the boys could return home to Petaluma, Calif. A detention hearing set for Wednesday was continued until Thursday.

"They were buying fine dinners, riding in taxis and limousines," Wise said. "They just got mixed up in something that they shouldn't have."

Wise said the boys told police they left California Nov. 26 after Hairrell found a suitcase that had been tossed out a window during a police search at a Petaluma home. It contained an estimated $8,000 in cash and a bag containing less than a gram of cocaine.

"They didn't even realize it was cocaine," Wise said. "All they saw was the $100 bills, the 50s and the 20s."

He said the teen-agers flew to Chicago from San Francisco on Thanksgiving Day, buying tickets under assumed names. After spending a few days in Chicago, they flew to Columbus, where Salter grew up.

The youths were arrested after police were told of two teen-agers leaving $100 tips with airport concessionaires. At the time, Wise said, the boys had ditched the suitcase and stuffed the money into their pockets.

He said he charged the boys with delinquency counts of drug abuse simply to hold them until their parents could be contacted. Wise said the boys had purchased round-trip tickets, so their transportation home would be no problem once they are released.

He said the cocaine found in the boys' possession had an estimated street value of less than $100.

During their spending spree, the boys bought new tennis shoes, leather jackets and a pair of stereo cassette players. They also bought dinners at expensive restaurants, police said.

"They went through about $3,000," said Wise. He said the boys had $4,993 in their possession when they were arrested.

Wise said he was astounded no one had reported the lavish spending earlier.

"It's true. Money talks, without a doubt," Wise said.

Poindexter refuses to answer Senate

Associated Press

WASHINGTON - President Reagan's former national security adviser refused Wednesday to give Congress details of the secret sale of weapons to Iran or the diversion of profits to Nicaraguan rebels. Vice President George Bush conceded that the spiraling controversy has harmed the administration, saying, "Clearly mistakes were made."

Vice Adm. John M. Poindexter became the second recently-departed administration official to invoke the Fifth Amendment in declining to answer questions from the Senate Intelligence Committee.

Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., vice chairman of the committee, vowed that lawmakers would piece together the facts "with or without them," and other committee members said that unspecified Cabinet secretaries will be called to the panel's heavily guarded room to testify.

While Congress continued delving into the most serious crisis of the Reagan presidency, there was increasing pressure for the departure of Donald T. Regan, the president's powerful chief of staff. But White House spokesman Larry Speakes said Regan has no intention of leaving and said the president "has not asked him to leave."

Reagan did not discuss possible staff changes when he spoke to businesswomen in the White House. Instead, he said he hoped the furor would not undercut support for the Contra forces fighting the Sandinista government in Nicaragua.

"We cannot let recent events distract us from the cause of those brave fighters for freedom around the world," he said. As his audience applauded, Reagan said, "Yes, you did just make my day."

Reagan could not have been as pleased with the word he received earlier in the day from key GOP congressional leaders. One participant, speaking on condition he not be identified by name, said Reagan was advised to seek changes in his administration.

Outside the White House, Senate Republican leader Bob Dole of Kansas said the message to Reagan was this: "there are going to be more and more stories, every day there will be something new. Some other player will be involved, somebody the president never even heard of."

Bush's comments came in a speech in which he said he fully supported Reagan's decision to make secret arms sales to Iran, but knew nothing of the diversion of profits to the Contra forces. Reagan also says he knew nothing of the diversion of funds until Attorney General Edwin Meese III told him a little more than a week ago.

In voicing strong words of support for Reagan, Bush added, "There is no denying

Theologians meet for symposium at ND

Special to The Observer

Several Catholic and Jewish theologians met Tuesday and Wednesday at the Center for Continuing Education for a symposium entitled "Teaching and Preaching about Judaism in Christian Parishes."

The symposium began Tuesday with a presentation by Eugene Fisher, executive secretary of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops' Secretariat for Catholic-Jewish Relations. Fisher spoke on "The Presentation of Jews and Judaism in Catholic Teaching and Preaching." On Tuesday evening, Rabbi Leon Klenicki, director of the Department of Interfaith Affairs of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, gave a presentation entitled "Objects and Subjects of Faith: How We Teach Each Other." On Wednesday morning both Fisher and Klenicki led an informal seminar on "Theological Education and Christian Jewish Relations."

Eugene Fisher has held his present post in the Bishops' Conference since 1977, the first layman so appointed. A member of the Vatican Commission for Religious Relations with the Jews, he has lectured and published widely on relations between Christianity and Judaism.

Rabbi Klenicki, a native of Argentina, began his schooling in Buenos Aires and in 1967 received his rabbinical diploma from the Hebrew Union College-Jewish Institute of Religion in Cincinnati. The following year he delivered the major paper representing the Jewish community at the first Latin American meeting of Catholics and Jews in Bogota, Columbia, during the visit of Pope Paul IV to that country.

The symposium was sponsored by the Department of Theology with funds from the Crown-Minow Endowment for Jewish Studies. The purpose of the Endowment, is to encourage exchange and understanding between Judaism and Christianity and to advance Jewish studies at Notre Dame by bringing together scholars and religious leaders for a series of lectures, dialogues and symposia for faculty members, students and the South Bend community.

"At a time when we are supposed to be celebrating peace, it seems insane to turn war into a Christmas present," he said. - Associated Press

Mating season was over weeks ago but a wild moose in Shrewsbury, Vt. is still making cow eyes at a brown and white Hereford named Jessica. When farm owner Larry Carrara spreads grain for his cows, the moose stands up and nudges a few cows aside to let Jessica eat. "He always watches out for Jessica," Carrara said. "He's acting like he likes it here. He's playing like a big shot," game warden Donald Gallus said Tuesday, 40 days after the love-struck moose wandered in to civilization. - Associated Press

Reaching 21 means another step in student's road 'over-the-hill'

"Can I see your I.D.?" the bartender will say with a cynical tone in his voice tonight. Those are the ominous words which strike fear into undergraduates everywhere. My impulse will be to turn around and walk out. I have been spotted.

"Can I see your I.D.?" the bartender will ask again impatiently. "What should I do?" I'll think, "I'm caught."

It doesn't matter anymore, fortunately. Today is December 4th and I have been waiting 21 years for this particular day. Today I join the ranks of the "legal."

No matter how closely a bartender or bouncer scrutinizes my Indiana driver's license, he can now find a true 21-year old who wants to patronize his establishment.

Over the past few years I have had the opportunity to be legal on a temporary basis in states with lower drinking ages, but turning the big "2-1" always marked the last hurdle to adulthood while growing up in Indiana, which always had a 21-year old limit.

"Give me a Bud" seems to be the last significant phrase to master after a series of hurdles in the road to becoming adult. At first glance reaching the age of 21 means the phrase "over-the-hill" is not very far away.

Of course this isn't correct. Along the trip over-the-hill I will encounter other phrases: 'what do I want for a career', 'for better and for worse', 'mama...dada', but these are only found in adult life. There are other obstacles to encounter, and now that I am adult I have to be ready for the challenge.

It couldn't have been that long ago when my only goal was to reach double digits, the age of 10. That hurdle was long forgotten by the time I had grown up and reached the teen years. This is when my regular income began (in the form of allowance). All too soon this source will stop and I will have to search for other funding. Letters like IRS will replace the ABC's.

Time passed until the first date occurred, the big moment. Another hurdle survived when you find out she really did like me. Now, the stakes are a little higher as I begin to search for someone to say "I do." The debate about what to do on a date changes into how many little Bearby's will be running around the house.

There were the important occasions when "Big Wheel" turned into a 10-speed bike. Soon after, the next milestone followed as I nervously passed my driver's test. I now had a driver's license. It was then I should have realized that just four short years later that license would mark my true rise to adulthood. The superficial goals of aging I had attained became a little more meaningful as I cast my first ballot. "The right to vote" was more than just a vote for homecoming queen. There was some responsibility now, something which was a foreshadowing that I will make a difference in "the big picture."

Scott Bearby

High school graduation marked a real transition, going away from home to a new setting. Adulthood was just around the corner, time to grow up, I thought. Fortunately I had a little extra time, for despite the growing process there is also a balance of lighter moments.

I find that just as I have surpassed one set of goals for the first 21 years more loom ahead of me. There seems to be a parallel of experiences from youth to adulthood and as the next 21 years begin.

The future is rather intimidating, but so was growing up.

I realize I have reached the verge of adulthood as I look at my I.D., getting it ready for its first real use. If the true indication of becoming adult is when I am no longer carded by the bartender I am glad that my I.D. picture looks like I am only 18. It's just as well I will be carded for a few years to come because I'm not ready to grow up entirely.

Come to think of it, I wouldn't mind being carded for the rest of my life. No one should be able to grow up completely because there is always another challenge to meet.

Abrams Chair recently inaugurated at ND

By Sean Hickey
News staff

The inauguration of the Abrams Chair of Jewish Thought and Culture was celebrated recently, according to Michael Loux, Dean of the College of Arts and Letters.

Unlike numerous other chairs which exist at Notre Dame and provide "permanent jobs for distinguished scholar-teachers who have made dramatic marks in their respective fields," the Abrams chair "allows a new visiting faculty member to occupy the chair every year," said Loux.

The visiting faculty members, however, "must have made an important contribution to Jewish thought and culture," Loux said. "Therefore, the department in which the occupant of the Abrams Chair teaches will vary from year to year," he said.

The Abrams Chair is endowed by a gift from Mr. and Mrs. Edward Abrams of Atlanta, Georgia. Abrams, a South Bend native, graduated from Notre Dame in 1950 and is presently president of Abrams Industries, Inc., and an active member of the Advisory Council of the University's College of Arts and Letters. Abrams also endowed the Library Collection in Jewish and Hebrew Studies at Notre Dame.

Mrs. Abrams is a member of the University's Women's Advisory Council.

Novelist Chaim Potok, author of such novels as "The Chosen", "The Promise", and most recently, "The Book of Light", was a guest speaker at the inauguration.

that our credibility has been damaged by this entire episode and its aftermath."

Bush said the shaping of the Iranian policy involved difficult choices and was clouded by the way in which the president's goals were executed, "specifically allegations about certain activities of the National Security Council staff. Clearly, mistakes were made."

Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, in France on an official trip, said Reagan received bad advice from aides advising him on a new policy toward Iran. "What he was trying to do was to open an agreement and an arrangement with people whom he had been advised were of a far different character than the people he was quite properly denouncing as being fanatical lunatics in Iran.

"I think unfortunately some of that advice has not turned out to have been accurate or correct," Weinberger said.

Meanwhile, Transportation Department documents show that a former CIA air transport company, said to have played key roles in both arms sales to Iran and shipments to the Nicaraguan rebels, flew more than 400 tons of cargo this year into an air base used by an American-manned Contra resupply operation.

Southern Air Transport of Miami reported it made 15 flights into a military airport in El Salvador. The flights coincide with creation of an air resupply wing to carry weapons to the Contra rebels - an effort that government sources said anonymously was managed by North.

While the administration awaited appointment of an independent counsel to investigate the once-secret arms sale to Iran and the funneling of profits through a Swiss bank account to Nicaraguan forces, Senate leaders appeared headed for creation of a single "supercommittee" to conduct its own probe.

Army to wait to destroy old nerve gas

Associated Press

LEXINGTON, Ky. - The Army apparently will wait an additional six months before deciding how to destroy obsolete nerve-gas weapons stored in Kentucky, Indiana and six other states, the Lexington Herald-Leader reported Wednesday.

The official announcement of the delay should be made Friday, according to the newspaper.

"We are not in a position to confirm it, but we are in a position to say it (delay) is very probable," said Larry Van Hoose, administrative assistant to U.S. Rep. Larry J. Hopkins, R-Lexington.

Hopkins already has told Army officials he would resist a "potentially catastrophic and profoundly dangerous rush to judgment."

The Army's environmental impact statement, explaining its plans for disposing of the nation's stockpile of aging chemical weapons, was scheduled for release Dec. 30. It was to be followed in January by an official decision by Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh Jr.

The timetable evidently has changed. "We have reason to believe it is being pushed back by as much as six months," said John Chambers, press secretary for Sen. Wendell Ford, D-Ky.

An Army spokeswoman said "we are taking a hard look at the schedule," but declined to confirm any change in plans.

'Blanket of soot' may be raising temps around North Pole, government study says

Associated Press

WASHINGTON - A warm blanket of soot may be raising temperatures around the North Pole by absorbing newly arriving sunlight as well as light reflected from the icecap below, government scientists reported Wednesday.

"One pollution plume we encountered on a flight over the icecap off Barrow, Alaska, last March was the equivalent of five of six large power plants putting all their effluents in a single plume," said Dr. Russell Schnell of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

The pollution "was about 100 miles wide and 1,000 feet deep, and when we first flew into it we thought we had flown into the plume of a volcanic eruption. We didn't believe the instruments on the aircraft," Schnell said in a statement.

The NOAA report was based on a five-nation study of the haze that has been observed over the Arctic region in the last three decades.

This haze layer has been reported as much as 18,000 feet thick and scientists have expressed concern about its warming the Arctic climate, although they remain unsure of the exact effects as yet.

There have been reports of a reduction in the amount of pack ice in the Arctic in recent years, although direct evidence has not yet tied this to the pollution layer.

The average surface temperature of the Earth has risen slightly in recent years, probably a result of the so-called greenhouse effect in which the increasingly polluted atmosphere traps more heat from the sunlight.

The Arctic pollution probably moves north from industrial and chemical complexes in eastern Europe and Asia, NOAA said. Examinations of air flow and a chemical analysis of the pollution indicate that some of the soot traveled as much as 4,000 miles, Schnell reported.

Another participant in the study, Tony Hansen of the University of California's Lawrence Berkeley Laboratory, said that at times the Arctic pollution exceeded levels measured over the Atlantic Ocean off the coast of New Jersey.

Hansen said on one test flight carbon soot in the Arctic region was measured at 700 nanograms per cubic meter, while the highest concentrations found in the New Jersey studies last January were 500 nanograms per cubic meter. A nanogram is about one-billionth of the weight of a typical paper clip. A cubic meter is a little more than a cubic yard of air.

'Nuclear winter' test scrubbed after crash

Associated Press

SAN DIMAS, Calif. - A long-awaited experimental brush fire to study whether smoke and dust from an atomic war would trigger a "nuclear winter" was scrubbed Wednesday after a helicopter crashed while igniting a test burn.

The pilot escaped serious injury, but the accident left in doubt when the $750,000 experiment would be performed.

Gordon Rowley, fuels management officer for the U.S. Forest Service and the official with the final say on the burn, said the fire would be rescheduled for Friday at the earliest. If it does not take place by Dec. 15 or 16, it will probably have to be delayed until June because of difficulty in assembling the needed firefighting aircraft under favorable weather conditions, he said.

Two of the planes that were to have observed the burn promptly left the area to watch another, smaller controlled burn Wednesday near San Diego, said Bernie Zak, scientist with Sandia National Laboratory in New Mexico.

"It's very disappointing," said Joel Levine, atmospheric chemist for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration. "No other experiment will answer the questions we were planning to address. I think everyone's disappointed."

The chopper was dumping thickened gasoline to start a 5-acre preliminary burn around 10:40 a.m. when the cable suspending the torch from the bottom of the aircraft snagged on telephone lines, causing the crash, county fire Capt. Garry Oversby said. He said smoke from the test burn may have blocked the pilot's view of the wire.

Eyewitness Bob Turr, a helicopter pilot reporting for radio station KFWB, said the Los Angeles County Fire Department "heli-torch" chopper caught on a wire across Lodi Canyon and lost its tail. He said the pilot escaped the wreckage, but the helicopter tumbled down the canyon afterward.

"He went through the smoke, and at the very top of the ridgeline there is a set of . . . wires. What happened was the copter came across those . . . wires and snagged. The front portion of the helicopter rolled over and went down the hill, disintegrating," Turr said.

Helicopter pilot Gary Lineberry, 46, of Valencia suffered "some minor abrasions on his forehead," said chief nurse Pat Titus at Foothill Presbyterian Hospital in Glendora.

Oversby said the Bell 260 helicopter was badly damaged. The tail rotor dug into the ground, breaking on impact, he said. A piece of the rotor flew off and hit the door of a nearby Forest Service fire truck carrying several people, but none of them were hurt.

About 200 scientists and firefighters had gathered near Johnstone Peak, 30 miles northeast of downtown Los Angeles, to observe the oft-delayed burn. The controlled fire, which was to have consumed 320 to 480 acres, had been expected to create a 10,000-foot-tall smoke plume for study, said Philip Riggan, the U.S. Forest Service's scientist-in-charge of the experiment.

ND speech and debate team made 'marked improvement' this year

By Lisa Davison
News Staff

Members of the inexperienced Notre Dame Speech and Debate team made a "marked improvement" this year, winning prizes in four tournaments, said Frank Guliuzza, Director of Forensics.

"At this point last year, they hadn't won anything. This year we've won eighteen trophies and awards," Guliuzza said.

Guliuzza added that he is pleased by his team's success, especially because of their youth and inexperience at the college level. "They are a very young team with a lot of potential," he said. "I think they could be a really strong group if they work hard. The only thing that would hold them back would be lack of effort."

Guliuzza said he hopes to help qualify students for the National Individual Events Tournament and help the team qualify for the National Debate Tournament. "As a team, we want to build a balance between debaters and those in individual events, a competitive squad as opposed to a star team," he said.

Dominic Alfaro and Sean O'Donnell competed and qualified for a national competition. "They are two of the more experienced so they can add some leadership," Guliuzza said.

Guliuzza does some recruiting among incoming freshmen with an interest in forensics but students basically discover the team by "word of mouth" said Guliuzza.

Sophomore Rob Hennig said he sought out the program himself last year. "The people who are on the team now are people who have tried to find the program," he said.

Guliuzza said that Hennig has performed well. "It's Hennig's first year of competition. He had a lot of experience in high school. He's done very well in both debate and individual events," he added.

Hennig said the two separate events have advantages. "I can appreciate both," Hennig said.

"You're learning to think on your feet."

Hennig and teammates Mike Monberg, John Failor, and Paul Bielski won first and second place in the Junior Debate division at a tournament at Wayne State University in October.

Earlier in October, Hennig, Failor, Bielski and Steve Rawlings captured third place finishes in the Novice Debate division at a tournament at the University of Denver.

Guliuzza said Notre Dame hosted a debate tournament early in November. "Schools from five different states attended and Notre Dame won the team championship, but as host school, declined the team award," Guliuzza said. Peggy Kramer and Alfaro won first place awards in the tournament.

According to Guliuzza, the good teams are from the traditionally academically-oriented schools such as Harvard and Northwestern. He said he wants Notre Dame to be included in this group, because "it would be a real boon for Notre Dame to be strong again in speech and debate."

Hennig said, "What we need, I think, to build an effective program is more resources, more support from the university in the form of graduate assistance and office space."

For the rest of the year the team will prepare for regional tournaments, Guliuzza said.

Report says thyroid pills can relieve PMS

Associated Press

BOSTON - Thyroid hormone pills can relieve premenstrual syndrome for many women whose symptoms appear to be linked with sluggish thyroid glands, suggests a new, preliminary report.

The study found often-mild thyroid deficiencies in 94 percent of the victims of premenstrual syndrome who were tested. Those who took thyroid pills "reported complete relief from the symptoms of PMS."

However, several experts said they doubt that underactive thyroids - what's known as hypothyroidism - contribute to premenstrual syndrome for most victims of the common disorder.

The apparent link between the thyroid gland and premenstrual syndrome was discovered by Dr. Nora D. Brayshaw of the Biopsychiatry Center in Watchung, N.J. The results of her preliminary experiments were published as a letter in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine.

In an interview, she said she has found more than 300 women "where the correlation is absolutely profound" between premenstrual syndrome and underactive thyroids, and said she has used thyroid pills routinely to treat them.

"I am so sure I know it works that when it doesn't, I've been able to find a problem," such as drinking or drugs, that interferes with the thyroid supplements, Brayshaw said.

Brayshaw said low thyroid function may not actually cause PMS. Instead, the two problems could be the result of some broader underlying hormonal disorder. But she said she believes virtually everyone with premenstrual syndrome has thyroid deficiencies.

Buying personal clock cannot solve bell dilemma

Don't panic! This crank epistle is about an entirely new subject. The new subject does not pose real heavy ethical, moral, or legal questions; so all the titled sages in the dome need not dive for their foxholes. The new subject is bells. Just bells. Hang in, while a narrative historian narrates a tale.

Bob Kerby

In early September, having noticed that the class bells were not ringing, I started calling this office and that to ask that the bells be turned on. I phone every September because the bells never work when the University first convenes. In years past, the various people I called - clerks, secretaries, administrative assistants, and one associate dean - often explained that administrators don't like the bells; so they forgot to turn them on. I then reminded them that teaching is, after all, one of the minor peripheral functions of this institution, whether administrators liked it or not. Usually, those whom I surprised with this revelation got the bells turned on, bye and bye.

This September, my fifth telephone call turned up a secretary who told me that "someone" in the dome had decided not to turn on the bells this year. That was a new excuse. So I called the dome. I talked to the assistant registrar in charge of all the University's bells. He was most congenial and most eager to oblige. He assured me that he would fix everything. I marvelled at the efficiency with which a single bushleague teacher's petition through channels galvanized the dome to decisive action. I put my trust in the dome.

A couple of weeks passed. Then I began hearing bells. I heard them at 6:55 am, 7:45 am, 8:00 am (I get to work early!), and etcetera. I heard them until 9:15 am. Then, at 9:15, they quit. No more bells. That seemed odd.

So again I called the assistant registrar about the bells. He promised to check it, right away. He checked it. About two weeks later, we had bells from 8:00 am to 2:15 pm. They quit at 2:15. After 3 pm, true, all the bells went berserk, ringing damn near every minute on the half-minute; but at least until 2:15 they worked like they were supposed to work, starting and ending classes on schedule. That was progress, if not yet perfect.

So again I called the assistant registrar about the bells. So did lots of other folks. Some complained about missing bells. Some complained about berserk bells. The assistant registrar said he'd fix it. He even prepared to summon first-class professional bell-fixers from the professional bell-fixers' guild.

Then - the Monday before fall break somebody told the assistant registrar that, last spring, the clique that makes decisions hereabouts had decided never to ring the class bells again. Needless to say, this high-powered policy decision had not been published, or announced, or explained. And, needless to say, this high-powered decision was made by clowns who don't teach.

Nobody had told the faculty about this decision. Nobody had even told the assistant registrar. Granting that the dome seems unable to tell anybody else what is going on, one must now wonder about the quality of coordination within the dome itself. Should not somebody have told the assistant registrar that all his bells were to be turned off last spring?

I proposed an instant solution: why not put clocks in classrooms? The Great Republic has been mass-producing wall clocks since 1814, so the technology should be adequate by now. At first, the proposal met some obstacles. First, the assistant registrar told me that classrooms already had clocks. That surprised me because no matter how hard I looked, I could not find any clocks in the classrooms I was teaching in. Second, the assistant registrar offered to buck my inquiries to a coordinator in charge of clocks. Can the coordinator really make policy decisions, queried I? No, said the assistant registrar, but she can listen real well. I didn't really want somebody to listen real well. I wanted somebody who could start and stop classes on time. So I told the assistant registrar, who had promised to fix everything 'way back in September' to get a clock into my classroom. Like now!

A couple more weeks passed. Still, no clock. So, one day, I went to G. L. Perry's five-and-dime and purchased an Ingraham battery-driven quartz wall clock, plus all the fixings, for $13.31. The batteries would need changing, now and then, but I figured that would give an unemployed assistant registrar in charge of bells something to do. I sent the bill to the dome.

Just as I was about to mount my clock, a Seth Thomas plug-in clock appeared in my classroom. The first time I saw it, it was running about 25 minutes slower than the rest of the cosmos. Next time, it was only 6:22 minutes late. The third time, I climbed on a chair to reset it, despite my age, decrepitude, and general blubbery infirmity. At least I got the time right.

The fourth time, I went to my classroom and somebody had kidnapped my Seth Thomas's clock. Darned if I know who is holding the Seth hostage. All I know is that since Seth's disappearance, I have been teaching my classes both bellless and clockless. All the while, more and more students show up late. All the while, more and more classes run over time. All the while, the official rule mandating a fifteen-minute break between classes erodes. All the while, my own classes start crumbling through their penultimate moments, while fidgety students - not all of whom can be expected to be enraptured by my electrifying lectures wonder what time it is. All the while, the teaching function of this University suffers.

On Nov. 21 I received a note from the dome telling me that deans - who don't teach - and "building deputies" - whoever the hell they are - had decided, "last year," to "eliminate the last of the classroom bells." I treasure the note: it's the first note I've received from the dome in two and a half years. But I wish it explained why deans and building deputies - whoever they are - have to wreck my classes.

Being an old Air Force veteran, I hack my watch regularly. I expect the world to start and stop on time. Why won't deans and building deputies - whoever they are - appreciate my fondness for punctuality? I appreciate that it's only been 200 years since the Western civilization accommodated to clocking time, but should not universities be at the cutting edge of innovation?

Debates exemplify the spirit of education

Dear Editor:

Just as students often moan about their teachers, it is commonplace to hear faculty mumbling and grumbling about the lack of interest Notre Dame students supposedly show concerning current events, intellectual matters and, in general, anything other than romance, sports and grades. In this context, I find the news of a series of serious, substantial debates being organized and conducted by Grace Hall students, under the direction of Assistant Rector Joseph McKenna, worth noticing and commenting upon.

I want first of all, to heartily congratulate these students and McKenna for their work. I am pleased, very pleased, to know that these students of Grace Hall, outside of their classes, are taking the time to debate and learn about topics such as the role of women in the Church, gun control, immigrant legislation and public school sex education. McKenna and the students involved are, in my opinion, setting a very fine example for members of other dorms; I hope to see the idea of organization of and participation in such debates spread across campus until the day that all of our students are involved in debating the issues of the moment, as well as more perennial issues.

The example set by Grace provides a fine model of self-education (students educating other students, students educating each other in a setting that does not require faculty lecturing and students memorizing) that may, in the end, be just as important for intellectual moral development as any of the classes that we teach here.

Women's peace group remember Parks' ride

Dear Editor:

"We are gathering together to educate ourselves and others in order to grow in the power of our common sisterhood, to lead us to an understanding of our responsibilities in the world today, and to the action we must take accordingly." This was the beginning of an invitation proposed last year at this time in this same column, an invitation to join a group of students concerned with social justice: Women United for Justice and Peace. We began our efforts with a celebration of Rosa Parks Day. Since then we have engaged in many activities and our numbers have grown.

We wish to join together in honor of Rosa Parks to celebrate our anniversary. On Dec. 3, 1955, this courageous woman defied an unjust law by refusing to give up her seat on a city bus to a white passenger. This act sparked riots, strikes and a court battle which resulted in the desegregation of Montgomery busses. We wish to honor the "Mother of the Modern Civil Rights Movement." We look to her courage and spirit to inspire us in our continued struggle for social justice. We join with Rosa Parks in affirming that one small act can produce great change in our nation and our world. Please join us Friday, Dec. 5, 12-1:30 at the Fieldhouse Mall as we pause to celebrate Rosa Parks' effort and our efforts of the past and to prepare ourselves to continue to strive to fulfill our obligation as peacemakers.

Thanksgiving food drive fed many needy families

Dear Editor:

The members of the World Hunger Coalition would like to extend their thanks to everyone who made Thanksgiving Collection a success. Without the cooperation of the rectors and liturgical commissioners the collection would not have been taken up in the dorms, so we'd like to thank them for their invaluable assistance. We also thank the wonderful staff of University Ministry for their support and for donating $200 from Sacred Heart's Sunday collection towards our cause.

Most of all, we thank the very generous student body who donated more than $700. With this money we were able to buy 22 baskets of food for needy families in South Bend.

These baskets included bread, milk, oranges, potatoes, yams, cranberry sauce, stuffing, pumpkin pie and a turkey for every family. The rest of the money went to St. Augustine's Soup Kitchen and to Hope Rescue Mission, two local organizations that feed the hungry and homeless.

Many people were able to celebrate

Thanksgiving because of Notre Dame's incredibly caring response to this project. Thank you all for making it possible.

Description of season given at luncheon

Dear Editor:

Friday, before the game, at a benefit luncheon in Los Angeles I was graced with the presence of our dearly beloved Louis Holtz.

I asked him to take a look back and into the future and give one word to describe his first season.

"There isn't a single word to describe. I don't think I could in a single word. No word really comes up unless it would be frustrating, and I don't think frustrating would be a proper word. If I thought for a minute, I think a single word would be 'foundation.'"

"And what would the word be for next season?"

There was a long pause, and he finally answered, "rebound," with a definite mischievous grin.

Preemption of final kick shows network's priority

It was the perfect commercial, an advertiser's dream. It had everything—an oh, so seductive product, sleek, shiny and powerful that implies wealth, status, and impeccable taste. Imagine its benefits: women, wealth, prestige, and freedom from the nagging doubt that you can't perform.

Maggie Sieger

guest column

The time-slot had been researched beyond anyone's wildest imagination: whom to aim it at, when they watched, when they took a bathroom break, what attracted them, and their mothers' maiden names.

CBS, with a little help, even provided a captive audience. Nary a soul, glued to the tube and teetering on the edge of their seats, left during the time-out.

Who could ask for anything more? Thousands of viewers had turned on and tuned in to CBS in order to see Notre Dame battle University of Southern California.

When it came down to those final two seconds, prayers were recited, close losses relived, the "phantom touchdown" recalled.

Viewers all around the country held their breath and waited for The Kick. As expected during any break in the action, CBS broke for a commercial. What wasn't expected was that a Porsche would preempt the final effort of John Carney and the Fighting Irish.

Confusion and then disbelief set in as I read the announcement that I was watching the celebration AFTER the kick. Viewers were left with a vague,

"I guess we won't."

Trying to placate the viewers with a quick replay of the kick was a cop-out. Viewers would much rather have watched a replay of the celebration or, even better, no replay at all.

Rubbing salt in the wound, CBS didn't even acknowledge its mistake. Somewhere, there has to be a button or switch that vaporizes a commercial and returns to the program. Why didn't they use it?

I have to ask, what was the MAIN show Saturday afternoon? According to CBS, it was the peddling of a Porsche.

CBS' job was to provide entertainment and no matter what crazed "aficionados" say, football is just that.

The tension that comes with any close game is a form of entertainment. The death-grip on a beer can, the knots in your stomach, the percentages, possible miracles, and performances-to-date that run through your mind are all part of the game, as is the wild celebration afterwards.

CBS failed to do its job. Miserably. In choosing to be peddlers before producers CBS disappointed its viewers, and may even have lost a few. Hopefully, there are some fans who are so thoroughly disgusted with the choice of "money above all" that they have vowed never to watch CBS again.

Perhaps that's an unrealistic decision and one that will soon be forgotten, but the short-sighted decision that prompted it will be remembered. For a long time I'll be saying, "Porsche, there most definitely IS a substitute!"

Social awareness gained through Peace Corps

It is Nov. 15, 11:30 p.m., and the night is warm and muggy. Over 5,000 miles away, Notre Dame has just lost in the final minutes to Penn State, 24-19. My housemate, Tom, and I have spent the last agonizing hour hunched over his short wave radio listening to the game being broadcast over Voice of America. The reception was weak and garbled reminding me just how far away I am from home.

Mark Toner

guest column

Right now, I'm sitting alone in my living room trying to compose a letter that can translate my Peace Corps experience into words. If this letter seems confused, it should be because it is impossible for me to draw one overriding emotion from the multitude I have felt since my arrival, that is, a single emotion which can adequately encompass my situation.

First, some basics: I am a health volunteer, working and living in the capital city of Monrovia. It is a bustling, crowded, dirty Third World city that is full of outdoor markets, run-down shanties, and malaria-infested swamps. I am fortunate enough to have running water (which must be boiled before drinking) and electricity for most of the year. I also consider myself fortunate to have indoor plumbing, since public sanitation here is several notches below American standards, to say the least.

If my portrayal of Monrovia seems overly negative, I apologize. I am attempting to present a realistic Africa, set apart from our Hollywood images of lush tropical jungles and wide open plains teeming with game. Liberia is, in many ways, a very beautiful country. It is also, however, extremely underdeveloped.

As a health worker, underdeveloped means that thousands of children die each year from immunizable diseases: measles, diphtheria, whooping cough, and polio. Over a million infants in Africa died last year because of common diarrhea. The purpose of the organization for which I work (Combating Childhood Communicable Diseases) is to try to make life a little bit happier for the children in this country by immunizing children and giving health training to mothers.

CCCD has been working for months with up-country clinics, trying to coordinate the logistics for a nationwide vaccination campaign. We have also been closely involved with radio stations promoting the campaign to families in the remote villages located in high bush country.

The limitations put upon us, however, are staggering. As of now, there is no kerosene in the country, which means that the refrigerators needed to keep the vaccines from spoiling will not run. There is also a severe vehicle shortage. Some counties have only one jeep, in poor condition, to cover their entire area. They must travel to villages hours up-country on roads that most Americans would consider impassable.

I'm aware that this letter is sounding a bit self-righteous or sanctimonious. I am not on a one-man crusade to save the world from the clutches of poverty and disease. Those sentiments are all the heady stuff of idealism, which does not mix well with the reality of my situation.

I do, however, believe in my work here. Despite the countless problems, there is also the immeasurable success of saving a large percentage of these children from preventable deaths.

Finally, there is a great deal of self-sacrifice involved in being a volunteer. Peace Corps is neither a carefree adventure nor an exotic vacation; those attitudes cannot sustain you through a two-year period. I have personally left a great deal behind in the states: my friends, my family, and a girlfriend that I love very much. It is hard but rarely is anything worthwhile easy.

I have learned more about myself in the last few months than I could have ever thought possible. In a sense, that is exactly what I understand Peace Corps to be—a learning experience. I'm learning to manage in a very different culture. The Liberians I encounter are perhaps learning that not all Americans are machine-gun-toting Rambos. If in the process of this educational exchange I am able to improve in some small way the quality of life here, I will consider my two years to have been successful.

I hope this letter doesn't sound too pretentious or morally superior. Believe me, I am neither of those things. I do, however, feel that if people have beliefs, they should be willing to actually pursue them. It is easy to forget this when one is lost inside the secluded world of academics.

There are so many opportunities for Notre Dame students to become more socially aware. The CSC offers a variety of programs needing volunteers. Please realize the value of setting the books aside and becoming involved. Remember, the human spirit can become dry and brittle from too much studying. It helps to immerse it from time to time in the warm waters of humanity.

(Michael Grant), is recounting the past nine years of his life. He is a man who, in the beginning, simply writes a pro-euthanasia novel based on his own experiences with his infirmed mother. The Nazi party discovers his work, and gradually indoctrinates Halder into their system. Taylor portrays Halder as a "good" person who, through his apathy and unwillingness to confront the Hitler regime, contributes to the terror.

The cast consists of ten members plus two musicians, a flutist and a pianist. Some of the cast have dual roles. All performers stay on stage for the whole performance, while Halder drifts in and out of certain memories of the past nine years. The cast and crew take the potentially confusing events of Halder's random memory and make them very easy for the audience to understand. The lighting and actor's positions make it very easy for the viewer to understand Halder's haphazard recollection of his experience.

Brian Loeffler plays the role of a Nazi Over-Leader to near perfection, maintaining his role as a dedicated Nazi when he is far from the spotlight. One intriguing aspect of the play is the relationship between Halder and Maurice. Both agree early on that Hitler's rise is temporary and the anti-Semitism will eventually end. Halder becomes a significant part of the Nazi party while his friend Maurice, a Jewish psychiatrist, becomes more worried for the safety of himself and his family. Although he calls himself a Nazi, Halder is still a close friend of Maurice's. The stereotypical relationship between Nazi and Jew is negated by the bond between Halder and Maurice. This relationship encapsulates Taylor's theme: a large part of the people involved in the Nazi atrocities were not crazed killers or 'Jew-haters' but basically good people who did not have the backbone to contradict a few strong personalities.

In the final analysis, "Good" is well performed by the Department of Communication and Theatre. Some people, however, could have difficulties with the language and crude situations. Taylor intended these instances to represent the reality of the Holocaust through various graphic scenes. The cast and crew give a fine performance, and will continue to do so Thursday through Saturday at 8:10, with a 3:10 performance on Sunday. Tickets are available for all performances.

A down-to-earth yet heaven-grounded strength, joy, and love seem the marks of Sister Madeleva's personality, and her Sister Madeleva (1887-1964) was two years younger than Ezra Pound the most typical (and untypical) modern poet, from whose "constitution iconoclasm" she firmly disassociated herself in the early 1920's. Although she of the modern movement, Sister Madeleva was equally out of step with the great Victorians. She was a religious poet, raising sceptical brows at Browning and Tennyson as well as at Pound. There were poets ("Whose inspiration was poetry") and religious poets ("whose inspiration was religion -- the binding back of man to God"). Browning and Tennyson were poets. Browning's religious poetry shows him "not a soul satisfied by union" but "an ethical teacher." Tennyson "glories in religious sentiment" but is not a religious poet. She is as firm with Tennyson as with Pound. For Tennyson "God made excellent stage property." On Galahad's rig she comments Crowns" she contrasts the cutting of a nun's hair.

*No even to plait a belt for Galahad
Should I have shorn the locks that men thought fair;
But for my Lover Lord, divinely glad
I doff the shining crown that was my hair.*

Sister Madeleva distinguishes the poet of religious sentiment from the religious poet in the following brilliant juxtaposition of Tennyson's "The Passing of Arthur" and Hopkins' "Heaven Haven"

*I am going a long way
To the island-valley of Avilion;
Where falls no hail, or rain, or any snow,*

Where I will heal me of my grievous wound.'

Sister Madeleva's tradition is that of the religious poets. These are of two kinds: "The poets of doctrine," such as John Keble, John Henry Newman, Father Faber, Aubrey DeVere, and "the poets of personal experience" such as Coventry Patmore, Christiana Rossetti, Gerard Hopkins, Lionel Johnson, Francis Thompson, and Alice Meynell. Most of Sister Madeleva's poems are in the personal experience tradition. Sometimes her rhythms echo the subtle syntax and rhythm of the best of this group as in these lines from an elegy "To a Young Girl": *Already in this first immortal hour
Your young years, which like petals did upcurl
In promise exquisite, unfold, unfurl
To perfect, heaven-blown, and forever fadeless flower.* Francis Thompson? Gerard Hopkins? Sister Madeleva.

This review has been an attempt to "place" Sister Madeleva as a poet. Perhaps it would have been better to cite the many poems with St. Mary's College focus or significance. As Sister Eva Mary Hooker says in her "Preface" these poems are in a special way sent to the "Saint Mary's community of students, teachers, parents and friends." Surely I should have cited more of Sister Madeleva's own poems. Her harness-maker father gave her a habit of craftsmanship as well as a love of poetry. Whether she writes of her namesake Mary of Magdala unsnarling her hair and soul or of "Penelope" weaving and unravelling the robe of memory, her art finds rhythms to catch these symbolic actions and give them her own meaning.

personality filled her every act. As a strong and down-to-earth medievalist in Chaucer's Nuns she ticked off the male scholars, mockers of Chaucer's Prioress's dainty table manners: "None of them ever wore a religious habit or had the least idea of what real distress a Sister feels at getting a spot on her habit, especially at table. Her habit is holy to her...." As a college president, asked whether O'Laughlin stage would hold up under a concert of four pianos, she calculated with joyful exactitude: "The stage will support twelve elephants. Why, then could it not support four concert pianos?"

As a poet for half a century, distilling the "hish concentrate" of her poetry in those rare moments frugally allotted her in a busy life, she showed herself a loving devotee of the art, but only as her gift in a higher devotion:

*Dear God,
Herewith a book do I inscribe and send
To You Who are both its beginning and its end;
A volume odd,
Bound in some brief, allotted years,
Written with love and tears;
Fragments of which You are the perfect whole
Book of my soul.
Break, reak the sealing clod
And read me, God!*

assimilated free verse as well as traditional forms, she did not follow the modern movement. On the other hand she feared that the facile Edna St. Vincent Millay (whom she admired and from whom—as well as from Mrs.

Eligteen years after its first printing, a new edition of "The Four Last Things", collected poems of Sister M. Madeleva Wolff, C.S.C., with a new foreword by Sister Eva Mary Hooker, C.S.C., will be released by Saint Mary's College on November 15. President of the College from 1934 to 1961, Sister Madeleva's works were known for their combination of poetic skill and mystical insights.

Originally published in 1958 by MacMillan and Co., "The Four Last Things" was widely reviewed and enthusiastically received. At the time of its initial release, "Monitor" praised the collection as a work of "pure literature."

SMC basketball adds to win streak by topping Judson in home opener

By GLORIA ELEUTERI
Sports Writer

Saint Mary's used a team effort Tuesday night in the home opener against Judson College, to pull off its third straight victory.

"In my three years of coaching at Saint Mary's, the team has not had any kind of win streak," said Coach Marvin Wood.

Several tie scores throughout most of the first half gave the impression of a close game. But the Belles got on track after a field goal broke the 17-17 tie. A burst of five unanswered baskets put Saint Mary's ahead by a ten point spread for the rest of the half. When the two teams headed for the locker room, the Belles were on top by a score of 37-27.

The second half brought a larger gap between the two teams. Saint Mary's led by as much as 18 points in the beginning of the half. They maintained a 15-18 point margin for all but the last three minutes of the half. It was not until that point that Judson came within eleven points. But that was as close as the Belles allowed them as the final seconds ticked off the clock.

"Key contributions by the front line helped our game," said Wood. "Both returnees and freshman are working well on the court. I used all those who suited for the game."

Particular standouts on the offense were Julie Radke, Tammye Radke, Kris Pantelleria, and Stephanie Duke. Each of these players reached double figures with Duke leading with 15 points. Tammye Radke contributed 11 assists along with 14 points while sister Julie and Pantelleria added 10 and 12 points respectively.

Defensively Duke and Anne Gallagher controlled the boards with eight and seven rebounds.

"The team has set a goal of 15 turnovers a game, and with only one over this game, I think that is good," stated Wood. "This was also our first game in six days with only one practice in between."

Wood said he was also pleased with periods of good play which included crisp passing and accurate shooting.

With the hopes of total team contribution continuing, the Belles travel to the Siena Heights Invitational Dec. 5-6 when they will face Nazareth College.

Pacers win; Tisdale stars

Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS - Wayman Tisdale scored 27 points and six other Pacers scored in double figures as Indiana broke open a close game in the fourth quarter to defeat the Washington Bullets 116-103 in NBA action last night.

Indiana broke an 83-83 tie at the start of the fourth quarter with a 10-2 spurt led by Kyle Macy, who had 12 points of his 18 points in that period.

The Bullets crept to within four at 101-97 on a free throw by Terry Catledge with 4:07 to play.

with a 141.2 rating. This season, Beuerlien completed 151 of 259 passes for 2211 yards and 13 touchdowns, and he holds Notre Dame records for attempts (850), completions (473), yards (6,527) total offensive attempts (850) and total offensive yards (6,459).

Kovaleski, this season's captain, was named the team's Defensive Most Valuable Player. Kovaleski led the squad with 88 tackles.

Banks was named the Outstanding Lineman Award by the Moose Krause Chapter of the National Football Foundation and Hall of Fame. This was the first year of this award. Banks made 57 tackles at the defensive end position after switching from linebacker this season.

Jackson earned the Notre Dame club of St. Joseph Valley's Scholar-Athlete Award. Jackson has 3.0 grade point average in accounting and caught a career-high 31 passes for 592 yards and two scores this season.

"When we do turn this football team around and win the National Championship, these are the guys who started it," said Irish mentor Lou Holtz in thanking the seniors for their efforts. "I've been around some great football teams and will be around some great teams in the future, but I've never had more respect for a team than this one. This team will go down in my mind as being the greatest competitors."

Featured speaker and former Notre Dame coach Ara Parseghian also complimented the team for its never-say-die attitude and gave the team what almost amounted to a lockerroom pep talk.

proud of the way you played your games. (But) if you apply just two percent more effort and eliminate the mental errors, you'll be playing in a major bowl next year."

Irish Items - Several Irish seniors will play in post-season all-star games. Beuerlein, John Carney, Steve Lawrence, Troy Wilson and Wally Kleine will play in the Blue-Grey game. Kovaleski will play in the Japan Bowl, while Banks will take part in the East-West Shrine game. Shawn Heffern is the final player named so far to participate in post-season play. He will compete in the Hula Bowl. . . The Faculty Board in Charge of Athletics met Tuesday but did not decide the fate of several players applying for extra years of eligibility because of seasons missed with injuries. According to Associate Sports Information Director John Heisler, because of the large number of players applying, it's a matter of the board getting all the reports from the trainers and doctors. At least 10 players are applying for extra years.

Wilson won't appeal; denies shot was cheap

Associated Press

LAKE FOREST, Ill. - Chicago Bears linebacker Otis Wilson said yesterday he will not appeal his one-game suspension for Sunday's injury to Pittsburgh Steelers wide receiver Louis Lipps.

"I just want to get back to football, get ready for the playoffs and get this thing behind me," Wilson told a news conference at the club's north suburban headquarters.

Bears President Michael McCaskey said the penalty, announced Tuesday by NFL commissioner Pete Rozelle, might have been less severe had the incident not come so close on the heels of Green Bay nose tackle Charles Martin's body slam of Chicago quarterback Jim McMahon a week earlier.

On Tuesday, Rozelle upheld a two-game suspension of Martin for the violation.

"If it was just this one incident, it probably would have just been a money fine," McCaskey said. "I think the commissioner wanted to send a clear message and, being that we are the Super Bowl champions, we became the vehicle for sending that clear message."

Wilson and McCaskey both said Wilson did not intend to hurt Lipps, who left the game with a concussion.

Women swimmers count on depth this weekend and . . .

By THERESA KELLY
Sports Writer

Final exams for the Notre Dame women's swim team will begin Friday as the Irish take on Mankato State and continue as they host the Irish Invitational Meet on Saturday. Both events will be held at Rolf's Aquatic Center in the ACC. Coach Tim Welsh says there are two main objectives for this weekend. The first is to get experience in a two day meet. "We'll swim the two meets like one two-day meet," says Welsh. The championship meet in the spring is a three day event, so the squad will be gaining valuable experience in competing in extended meets.

The second objective is to turn in a good performance before exams, particularly at the Irish Invitational.

"Teams swim better preparing for the last weekend," says Welsh. "We see this as a final exam in swimming, to see what we've achieved and learned so far."

Welsh says his Irish team looks better "on paper" than the Mankato State swimmers.

"It looks like we have more overall depth, but you can never tell how a team will perform," he says.

Welsh added that while the visitors may have an edge in the diving events, Notre Dame has more distance freestyle depth.

"The race for first in each event will be good," says Welsh, but he added that he expects his team to take the victory at the dual meet.

The Irish Invitational is a newly created meet designed to be a companion to the Notre Dame Relays.

"The Invite has more of an individual focus than the Relays," says Welsh. "We feel it is important to swim all the events in a championship program before exams."

Notre Dame will be hosting the teams from Saint Mary's, the University of Illinois at Chicago, and the University of Wisconsin at Milwaukee.

Welsh expects a competitive, exciting meet. The Irish competed against UI-C at the Notre Dame Relays, and the opponent has improved since then. UI-C is coming off an excellent meet against Northern Illinois. The UW-Milwaukee team won last year's Notre Dame Relays.

. . .so will Irish men

By KEVIN McCORMACK
Sports Writer

No, it's not the last week of the semester yet, but Notre Dame Head Men's Swimming Coach Tim Welsh will be giving out grades to his swimmers this weekend when the Irish take on Mankato State on Friday and then swim in the Irish Invitational on Saturday.

"This weekend's meets will be similar to the importance of a first semester final exam," says Welsh, "This is the first time this season we have adjusted our training for a particular meet. It will be the summation of all the fall training so I'll be grading each performance."

According to Welsh, the Irish are in pretty good shape and should be well-prepared for the rough weekend ahead.

"The whole team is ahead of where we were last year. We've trained more and we're in better shape overall as a program."

Most recently, the hottest Irish swimmer has been sophomore Eric Bodham, who has excelled in the backstroke events. Against Ferris State, he swam a blazing 2:01.77, good enough for a Ferris St. pool record. He also leads off the 400-yard medley, combined with breastroker Brian Vogel, butterflyer Mark Jensen, and freestyler Chris Petrello.

Overall, however, Welsh points out that there are no real superstars on the team and that the Irish will rely heavily on depth in all events to succeed throughout the season.

As far as this weekend goes, Mankato St. is "sort of an unknown" as Welsh phrases it.

"From prior results this season, we should win the meet," he says. "The key will be to establish control early - in the medley relay and the 1,000 freestyle."

The Mankato St. meet is slated for a 6 p.m. start Friday night.

The Irish Invitational will be composed of two Saturday sessions, one at 11 a.m., and the other at 3 p.m.

country."

The tournament will run throughout the night on Friday and for the entire day on Saturday.

"We didn't get finished the first night last year till 1 a.m. We start out on Saturday at 10 a.m., and the finals are at 7 p.m. It's a demanding tournament," says McCann.

Notre Dame wrestlers are looking forward to the challenge.

"Coach McCann said if we want to be the best, we got to wrestle the best. It will only improve us both mentally and with our technique," says 142-pound sophomore Pat Boyd.

"If we want to go to nationals, we'll see a lot of these guys later on, and we'll be used to the competition."

Starting for the Irish the weekend will be 118-pound freshman Andy Radenbaugh, 126-pound senior Greg Fleming, Durso, Boyd, junior Ron Wisniewski at 150 pounds, 158-pound junior Dan Carrigan, Geneser at 167 pounds, and senior Dave Helmer at 190 pounds.

After the Las Vegas Invitational, the Irish will return home for a match at the ACC Pit next Wednesday against Wisconsin Parkside.

Irish looking for season's first win; Royal is sidelined for three weeks

By DENNIS CORRIGAN
Sports Editor

When the Notre Dame basketball team takes to the floor tonight to seek its first win of the season after a close loss to Indiana, it will be seeing red, the Big Red of Cornell that is. And after losses to two Top-20 teams, 0-2 Cornell may be just what the Irish need.

The Big Red's two losses came at the Sun Met classic in Fresno, Calif. The Big Red threw a scare into host Fresno State, losing in double overtime, 62-56. But in the consolation game, Pan American handled the Big Red with ease, handing first-year coach Mike Dement's squad an 89-75 loss.

Cornell's leader is 6-1 senior guard Stan Bajusz. Bajusz had 17 against Fresno St. and 23 versus Pan American. Last season, Bajusz made the All-Ivy team and was and honorable mention all-American while averaging 18.4 points a contest. Sophomore Josh Wexler is Bajusz' backcourt mate. The 6-1 Wexler had 8 points in the Sun Met tourney and handed out 11 assists in the two games.

Cornell's middle man is 6-8 junior Greg Gilda who had 20 points and 13 rebounds against Pan American after foul trouble limited him to eight points and four rebounds against Fresno St. Gilda gets help up front from 6-7 junior Mike Milane and 6-6 Wolfgang Florin.

Key reserves for the Big Red include 6-1 guard Sam Jacobs (13 points against Pan American) and 6-5 forward James Paul (11 vs. Fresno St).

"We were very disciplined against Fresno, and I felt we should have come away with at least one win," says Dement of his club. "We showed some signs of being able to come back (from a 19-point deficit against Pan American), but we just ran out of steam.

"I'm concerned that we'll only have one day to get ready for Notre Dame, but they will only have one day to get ready for us after playing Indiana. We'll try to key on David Rivers, which few teams have done successfully."

Digger Phelps and his squad received some bad news yesterday when they learned the Donald Royal, the team's leading scorer with a 15.5 average on the young season, will be out three weeks with the calf tear he sustained Tuesday night against Indiana. At first Royal's injury was diagnosed as a day-to-day thing.

With Royal absent, the emergence of freshman Scott Pad-

ND wrestling team goes westward for rugged Las Vegas Invitational

By STEVE MEGARGEE
Sports Writer

Taking its chances against most of the top wrestling schools in the country, the Notre Dame wrestling team goes west this weekend for the Las Vegas Invitational on Friday and Saturday.

"All the top teams west of the Mississippi except for the University of Iowa will be there," says Head Coach Fran McCann. "As far as tournament competition, this is the toughest before the NCAA's."

Highlighting the tournament field that includes 35 to 40 schools will be Iowa State, Oklahoma State, and Oklahoma - three of the top four teams in the nation - and West Coast powerhouse Arizona State. Notre Dame is competing in this tournament only two weeks after participating in the St. Louis Open, which featured Oklahoma and Wisconsin.

"This is much more difficult (than the St. Louis Open). There will be more teams and better teams," says McCann. "About seven of the top 10 schools will be in this tournament."

In last year's Las Vegas Invitational, 126-pound Jerry Durso's fourth-place finish and 167-pound Chris Geneser's eighth-place finish led the Irish to 13th place overall. The team is hoping to reach the top 10 this year.

"Last year, coming in as freshmen, we didn't know what to expect, and I think we've gotten a lot better since then," says Durso, this year's team captain. "It's important to do well to know where we stand with the best teams in the

FB awards given out

By DENNIS CORRIGAN
Sports Editor

It was a time for looking back and looking forward at last night's 67th annual Notre Dame football banquet. Tim Brown, Steve Beuerlein, Mike Kovalski, Robert Banks and Milt Jackson received awards and 59 players received monograms for their play this season.

Brown received the team's Most Valuable Player Award from the National Monogram Club as voted by his teammates. Brown finished the season ranked third in the nation in all-purpose yards per game with 176.1 a contest which also established a school record. The 6-0 junior is a consensus first-team All-American and his performance this season has made him one of the leading candidates in next year's Heisman trophy race.

Beuerlein, a four-year starter, was voted the team's Most Valuable Offensive Player, finishing 13th in the nation in passing efficiency

A realistic glance at the Bears: St. Louis style

In this newspaper's quest to provide sports coverage that is of interest to the Notre Dame students, I now present my first-annual look at the playoff-bound Chicago Bears.

First of all, I believe that, since I am not from Chicago (and I don't pretend to be every Sunday), and because I am from St. Louis (and I love to see Chicago sports teams lose), I can give a somewhat-unbiased look at this team that is dear to so many on this campus.

Actually, I can honestly claim to be an intelligent Bears observer. My mother is from Chicago, and every time for the past hundred-or-so years the Bears were on television, my family would watch the game. I followed Neill Armstrong's teams, led by quarterbacks Bob Avellini (1975-78), Mike Phipps (1980), and Vince Evans (1981-82).

And I have watched the Bears closely in the Ditka era, first of all because they have been consistent winners, and secondly because they have not beaten the St. Louis Cardinals in seven tries.

On the subject Ditka, the man is an excellent coach, no doubt about that. But his public image is not exactly clean-cut, thanks to the press (although the press is not entirely to blame). Ditka has a habit of criticizing the media for problems he and his team have. So when he happens to be caught in, say, a DWI case, the press is not about to take it easy on the man. That's too bad, because it really doesn't benefit anyone.

Besides that, Ditka has to put up with all the ballyhoo about his quarterbacks.

The Chicago Tribune ran a story in which the lead paragraph said "There is life after McMahon."

Pete Gegen

Assistant Sports Editor

O.K. McMahon is a main ingredient in the lifeblood of the Bears offense. But Ditka is the one who deserves the credit - the Bears have proved that they can survive with Mike Tomczak at the helm (5-0 this season). And the defense has survived the heart-breaking loss of its dear friend, Buddy Ryan (and to think the Cardinals were looking at him as their head coach).

While on the subject of quarterbacks, I was shocked when Doug Flutie was signed by the Bears. Heck, the Cardinals don't even have one decent quarterback, and the Bears have three (sorry, Steve Fuller).

I also cannot imagine how so little can be heard from a player like Walter Payton. Every weekend its "McMahon this" or "Ditka that." Before Ditka, Payton was THE player for the Bears. Memories of Carly Simon's "Nobody Does It Better" still flash through my head when I see him run. But, given the current team-press relations, its probably better that the NFL's all-time leading rusher stays out of the headlines. And Ditka, do us all a favor and let Walter score a touchdown in this year's Super Bowl.

Super Bowl? How can they make the Super Bowl without McMahon? Chicagoans are continually asking this question, but to us unbiased observers, it is obvious that the Bears can breeze through the National Football Conference playoffs. Who's going to challenge them, the Redskins? After watching them struggle against the Cardinals, I don't think so.

All the Bears need to do between here and Pasadena is work on their public image. The press jumped all over Otis Wilson for his forearm to the head of Louis Lipps last week, comparing it even to Charles Martin's job on McMahon. And Willie Gault gets a beautiful spread in Sports Illustrated featuring his skill in track and ballet, but on the subject of the Bears the magazine features only his complaints against the quarterbacks, especially McMahon.

No matter what the press thinks of the Bears, and vice-versa, you can't take away the fact that they are winners. But for their public image, I think they will need something a little more effective this time than "The Super Bowl Shuffle II."
