Refueling jet crash at Dyess AFB 'particularly terrible'

Associated Press

ABILENE, Texas - A military refueling jet bound for Hawaii with 19 people aboard crashed in a ball of flames on takeoff Tuesday at Dyess Air Force Base, killing at least 17 people, the Air Force said.

Military dependents were among the 12 passengers on board, said Dyess spokesman Sgt. Al Dostal, but he did not know how many. The plane had a crew of seven, he said.

The plane's crew "never got off the ground," said witness Vernon Wright, 19. "The first thing I saw was just the mushroom of the smoke."

"I heard the plane as it was coming down," said Skeet Jackson of Abilene. "Engines were backfiring and missing. It curved off to the left and crashed. And then I saw the ball of smoke and fire go up."

Initial reports forwarded to Air Force commanders at the Pentagon suggested the pilot of the plane experienced some kind of problem during his take-off roll, according to officials who spoke on condition they not be identified.

"It was toward the end of the roll and he apparently had no choice but to press on," said one source.

"But he didn't have the power to get up for some reason," added another.

The wreckage burned for more than an hour after the crash. The plane came to rest tilted at about a 45 degree angle, a charred wing tipped toward the sky.

At least 17 people were killed, said Lt. Col. George Peck, a spokesman at Strategic Air Command Headquarters at Omaha, Neb.

Military officials said they were recording the bodies as they found them.

"Any aircraft accident is bad, but the fact that there are as many fatalities makes it (the crash) a particularly terrible one," said Maj. Dennis Pierson of SAC Headquarters in Omaha.

The plane, based at K.I. Sawyer Air Force Base near Marquette, Mich., was en route from Dyess to Hickam Air Force Base in Hawaii on a training mission with 19 people on board, said Dyess Airman 1st Class Beverly Foster.

Some of those aboard were from Sawyer, said base spokeswoman Sgt. Anita Bailey. "We're trying to get in touch with the families now but it's hard, because there's some confusion," she said. "We're waiting for confirmation that these people have been contacted."

The sources in Washington said the plane was carrying close to a full load of fuel totaling 155,000 pounds, including its own fuel and fuel to transfer during the flight to Hawaii to some F-16 fighters flying

U.S. teens bomb international math and science survey

Associated Press

WASHINGTON - American teen-agers scored last in math and well below the mean in science in an international survey whose results "pose a serious challenge to our position in the world community," the Educational Testing Service said Tuesday.

The U.S. youngsters were outperformed in math by their counterparts in four other countries and four Canadian provinces and were among the worst science achievers in the assessment of 24,000 13-year-olds.

"The obvious conclusion is that unless we're careful, the Buck Rogers of the 1990s is going to be living in Seoul, Korea, instead of Chattanooga or Chicago," said former Tennessee Gov. Lamar Alexander, now president of the University of Tennessee.

"How many times must this nation be reminded of its educational deficit?" Education Secretary Lauro Cavazos asked in a statement, referring to repeated findings that U.S. children perform poorly in math and science.

Cavazos called the situation "a national tragedy," while other educators termed the survey results frightening and devastating.

ETS officials tried to put a less-pessimistic face on their findings, noting that almost all of the U.S. teen-agers demonstrated mastery of basic math skills and knowledge of everyday science facts.

"We are making improvements on our own terms. We are educating every child in America," said Archie Lapointe, executive director of the ETS center for the Assessment of Educational Progress.

"Everyone is talking now about higher-order skills, higher standards. I'm very confident that this is going to happen," Lapointe added. "If we articulate what we want to do, the schools will deliver."

But Albert Shanker, president of the American Federation of Teachers, said elementary school teachers won't be able to deliver unless they are required to take math and science courses to qualify for their licenses.

"We've got a long way to go before we turn it around," Shanker said. "The next generation of (elementary school) teachers has already been educated without math or science. You've got a terrible pipeline problem."

The assessment, financed by the National Science Foundation and the Department of Education, was based on tests of students in Ireland, South Korea, Spain, the United Kingdom, the United States, and Canada's British Columbia, New Brunswick, Ontario and Quebec. The last three were divided into French- and English-speaking samples.

Korean students demonstrated the highest overall mathematics achievement while those from the United States and French-speaking Ontario showed the lowest. Youths in South Korea and British Columbia turned in the best science performance. The United States, along with Ireland and French-speaking Ontario and New Brunswick, "perform well below the mean," the report said.

Nicaraguan hijacks Colombian airliner

Associated Press

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica - A Nicaraguan Indian exiled in Colombia hijacked a domestic airliner with 122 aboard to Costa Rica on Tuesday by threatening to set a passenger afire with gasoline, officials said.

A passenger said the co-pilot overpowered the hijacker, who was carrying two orange juice cartons of gasoline with wicks, just before the plane landed.

An anti-terrorist squad arrested the hijacker, and three other people were detained after the Ace airline Boeing 727 touched down at an airport near the capital, said Interior Minister Carlos Disanti, who declined further comment.

The Red Cross treated some passengers for shock, officials said, but no other injuries were reported.

Public Security Minister Hernan Garron said the hijacker was identified as Alvin Antonio Siu, a Miskito Indian living on San Andres Island.

A public Security Ministry statement said Siu would be turned over to Costa Rican judicial authorities and formally charged with hijacking the plane, which officials in Colombia said had 116 passengers and a crew of six.

A chuckhole in Tulsa, Okla. was so deep it prompted Bill Schreiber to stand in the street with a 10-foot pole to warn motorists. Schreiber and others lowered the pole completely into the manhole-sized hole as startled motorists steered away. City workers barricaded three of four lanes of Boulder Avenue south of downtown Tuesday morning after officials were informed of the two manhole-sized holes that opened into a cavern big enough for a car. A storm sewer cave-in apparently was to blame, officials said. - The Observer

Magazine not at fault; it's all in how you see it

The opinion expressed in this space yesterday disturbs me, because I think it speaks ill of men- and women.

Both sexes by now are familiar with the annual Sports Illustrated Swimsuit Issue, which is due out next week. Every year at this time the scantily clad women pictured therein will unleash a flood of angry letters and protests against the exploitation of women, male chauvinism, etc. But this issue isn't the problem, and I'll tell you why.

This Swimsuit Issue will mark the magazine's 25th anniversary of publishing photos of females in the latest swimwear. The reason is as easy to see as the women who model the suits. It's not the pictures that are so offensive; it's the thought behind it.

Does SI publish photos of curvaceous women clad in cutaway spandex just for profit? It certainly stands a lot to gain. Thousands of subscriptions nationwide (for men and women, mind you) plus newsstand sales adds up, and this is just a single issue.

Can swimsuits such as those featured in the issue properly be classified "sport?" I don't think so. Swimming itself is an activity; competitive swimming, e.g. the Olympic 100-meter freestyle, is sport.

Most will agree SI serves its readers well, colorfully reporting on a variety of sports, from football to fencing. But what does the Swimsuit Issue serve, if not readers' interests?

Let's face it, sex sells. There's no question sex helps Sports Illustrated sell magazines. It's made Hugh Hefner a millionaire. The models in next week's Swimsuit Issue will make careers out of it.

Glamorized and softened by the fashion industry, sex has made men and women try to improve their "look." And that's not necessarily a change for the better. I've met too many physically attractive women devoid of personality.

Is Sports Illustrated's Swimsuit Issue pornography? If the definition hinges on such nudity and explicit sexual references as one finds in Playboy and Penthouse, then no. Sports Illustrated doesn't even come close to the pictorial trash in those magazines.

The revealing bathing suits in the Swimsuit Issue are not the problem here. The problem is the way men and women view each other. Magazines whose pictures are intended to stimulate make us voyeurs. That's why publications such as Playboy are garbage; they make men see women as sex objects.

But women also are guilty when it comes to seeing others as objects, not persons. I wish I had a dollar for every cheesecake photo or blowup of the now-famous Soloflex poster boy I have seen in women's dorms on campus.

Regis

The only thing Sports Illustrated's Swimsuit Issue illustrates is how much we must rethink our evaluation of swimsuits. Does form mean more to us than function? Most of the suits I've seen in SI don't look comfortable to wear, let alone wear swimming. Lacking comfort and practicality, what other purpose can they serve but visual effect?

We are all to blame for viewing others as objects rather than people. Sports Illustrated isn't at fault for this attitude. It's only begun to cash in on it for the last 25 years. Consider that a capitalistic coup, business types. Men and women have been degrading each other long before Sports Illustrated ever went to press.

Both sexes have been shortchanged by magazines that respect the body more than its owner. Men and women should stop complaining about exploitation and start working to change some of the attitudes which prevail today. Once we're able to look past appearance to see others as people, we can do away with revealing swimsuits and the magazines issues that feature them.

Jury problems mar Iran-Contra trial

Associated Press

WASHINGTON— Oliver North's Iran-Contra trial quickly ran into jury-selection trouble Tuesday and the judge said there could be problems with "triability of the case" because so many people had seen or read of North's testimony in congressional hearings.

U.S. District Judge Gerhard Gesell said only 16 of the first 54 prospective jurors indicated on questionnaires they weren't exposed to North's congressional appearances. The former White House aide testified to House and Senate investigating committees in 1987 under a grant of limited immunity from prosecution based on his testimony.

Gesell decided to hear arguments on how much exposure to such testimony ought to be allowed before a possible juror was disqualified. He said he would rule Wednesday.

Indicted last March, the retired Marine lieutenant colonel and decorated Vietnam veteran is the first figure in the Iran-Contra affair to come to trial.

He could face up to 60 years in prison and $3 million in fines if convicted of all 12 crimes with which he is charged.

North's trial on charges of lying to Congress, shredding evidence and conspiring to commit tax fraud "arises following a period of fairly intense publicity on television, newspapers, magazines" which will continue, Gesell said.

Gesell wants to find 50 people out of a pool of 300 who have not been exposed to the congressional testimony of North or other witnesses at the congressional hearings.

He quickly excused the first five prospective jurors after all said they had been exposed to North's 1987 testimony.

One said she had the television turned on and was aware of North's immunized testimony, in which he detailed activities in connection with which he is now accused of crimes.

Another prospective juror said she had monitored North's congressional appearances "rather continuously."

Two others agreed with the judge's characterization that they had been "interested" in North's testimony. A fifth said she may have seen portions of North's congressional appearances "once or twice a week" during the time he testified.

North's attorney, Brendan Sullivan, also sought to rule out as jurors anyone who in recent days had seen North's congressional testimony replayed in news reports as the trial start neared.

Fired White House aide Oliver North, left, arrives at Federal District Court in Washington Tuesday for the start of his trial on charges of lying to Congress and other charges stemming from the Iran-Contra affair. He is escorted by a security guard.

John Kecker, who heads the prosecution team for independent counsel Lawrence Walsh, said he wanted to present arguments on the process of automatically disqualifying prospective jurors because they thought they might have been exposed to North's testimony.

The judge said he wanted to consider "how we're going to deal with this problem." He said, "This relates to the triability of the case."

According to Gesell, most of the first batch of prospective jurors responded "yes" to questions asking them if they had seen, read or listened to any part of North's congressional testimony.

The questionnaire each of the prospective jurors was told to fill out carried a written warning not to read or listen to anything about North. It also asked whether they know or have any connection with any of 195 people whose names have come up in the Iran-Contra case, including former President Reagan and President Bush.

Alumni Assoc. hopes to improve student relations

By MAURA KRAUSE
Staff Reporter

Mr. Rich Daly, Assistant Director of Alumni Association, spoke to the Hall Presidents Council last night on improving relations between the students and the association.

Daly, a 1983 graduate of the University, spoke on student's "impressions of the alumni association," and asked for the presidents attendance at a meeting with alumni associations student relation board.

Daly stressed that the association accepts "subway alumni, actual alumni and even people not yet attending the university as members. However, many people don't get involved because of money, but we don't raise any money. We are friend raisers not fund raisers."

The Notre Dame Alumni Association is the largest alumni association in the world with over 200 active clubs across the country.

The alumni association "wants to know what you think we should be doing," said Daly.

The association will be holding a meeting in the Gold Room of the North Dining hall on Thursday, Feb. 2 from 4:30-6:30 for the students to talk with the student relations committee. Come and see that, "there's more to the Notre Dame Alumni Association than just plaid pants!"

New library hours were also announced. The library will now open at 10:00 on Sundays instead of 12:00. Extended hours in the evenings are also being considered.

Dates for student body elections were announced with the petitioning period being Feb. 7-Feb. 14, campaigning the 19-26, the primary will be Feb. 27 and run off on March 1.

Class elections will begin with petitioning March 1-3 with petitions due after break on March 14. The campaign will run March 14-19 with the primary and runoff being March 20 and 22 respectively.

Eric Straub of Irish Insanity once again spoke to the council about ways to raise spirit at Notre Dame sporting events. The upcoming Duke basketball game will have a 'wear green' theme. Pom Pons will be distributed at the game and there will be free face painting.

Correction

An article in yesterday's Observer about a new student parking lot incorrectly attributed a statement. Mr. Don Dedrick, director of Physical Plant, said the new lot "cost about $85,000, which included fencing and lighting."

If you're going to drink and drive tonight, don't forget to kiss your mother goodbye.

Quayle in Latin America to talk about Contras

Associated Press

WASHINGTON- Vice President Dan Quayle, on a mission to encourage democracy in Latin America, will meet with El Salvador's outgoing president and representatives of rightwing factions but not with anyone from the leftist party battling for power in the upcoming election, U.S. officials said Tuesday.

Quayle's stop in San Salvador on Friday will include meetings with President Jose Napoleon Duarte and members of his Christian Democratic Party as well as with representatives of the rightist Nationalist Republican Alliance, or ARENA, and "a very diversified group of people," said a senior Bush administration official.

But Quayle will not meet with leftist presidential candidate Guillermo Ungo or members of his Democratic Convergence Party, those officials said.

The officials, who briefed reporters on the condition of anonymity, said Quayle's schedule should not be read as a sign the administration is taking sides in the March 19 election or is signalling any rejection of the recent truce proposal put forward by the guerrilla coalition allied with Ungo's party.

The explanation the officials offered for Quayle's willingness to meet with candidates of two political parties but not the third was that "it would send the wrong signal at this point, given the delicacy of the internal situation . . . We want to go down there and see what the major parties have to say."

Another U.S. official knowledgeable about relations with El Salvador said it would be awkward for Quayle to meet with a civilian ally of rebels fighting to overthrow the U.S.-backed government.

Quayle's three-day journey, with a stop in Venezuela on Thursday for the inauguration of that country's new president, Carlos Andres Perez, is being characterized as a chance for the vice president to get acquainted with Latin leaders, hear their concerns on such issues as the debt crisis and regional strife, and show U.S. support for Latin democracies.

One official who briefed reporters said the trip would also bolster Quayle's statements that he will be a top adviser to Bush.

The vice president "will be privy to information that no one else has right now," and will relay it to the president, the official said. Bush's policies on such matters as Latin American debt and the regional peace process are under review.

Quayle's office has not released the names of the heads of state with whom he will meet in Caracas.

German firm allegedly sold weapons to Libya

Associated Press

MUNICH, West Germany - Prosecutors on Tuesday launched a criminal investigation of a Munich company suspected of illegally selling rocket guidance equipment to Libya, West German television reported.

The ARD television network said customs officials in Stuttgart gave Munich investigators documents linking the company Globosat to the alleged sale of rocket guidance equipment to Libya.

The report gave no additional details but said officials suspect West German export laws and regulations governing the sale of military technology may have been violated.

Earlier Tuesday, a government-owned company said it found evidence that it was duped by another West German firm into providing plans for a suspected poison gas factory in Libya, believing the technology was being used for a Hong Kong pharmaceutical plant.

The government-owned Salzgitter Industriebau GmbH said in a statement that a review of company records "revealed that they were deceived" in its transactions with Imhausen-Chemie, a company suspected of playing a larger role in the suspected chemical weapons plant in Libya.

Salzgitter said that among its records was a letter from Imhausen-Chemie that mentioned Rabta, site of the plant south of the Libyan capital of Tripoli.

Soviet troops to be out of Kabul early

Associated Press

KABUL, Afghanistan- Convoys of Red Army soldiers and equipment moved slowly toward home through the rugged Hindu Kush mountain range Tuesday, ready to fight their way past Moslem guerrillas if necessary, their commander said.

Lt. Gen. Boris Gromov, Soviet commander in Afghanistan, denied U.S. allegations that the Soviets were conducting a "scorched earth" policy as their last units left Afghanistan before a Feb. 15 deadline.

"That does not correspond with reality," he said of the accusation made Monday in Washington by Charles Redman, spokesman for the State Department.

In Islamabad, Pakistan, Western diplomats said privately that all Soviet forces were expected to be out of the Kabul area by Feb. 6, nine days before the deadline set by a U.N.-mediated withdrawal agreement.

Spokesmen in Islamabad for the guerrillas, who began fighting after a communist coup 11 years ago, said four long-range Soviet missiles killed 70 people in villages near the Salang Highway north of Kabul, the main Soviet withdrawal route.

According to the diplomats, an increase in attacks by Soviet and government forces in the past week appeared aimed at pressuring the insurgents toward a political settlement. The guerrillas have refused offers of such a settlement from both the Kremlin and its client government in Kabul.

The last 11 staff members of the U.S. embassy, which was closed Monday, left Kabul on Tuesday and a Soviet airlift of food and fuel resumed. The capital's airport was closed Monday by heavy snow.

Six Ilyushin 76 transport planes dropped flares to deflect missiles as they landed in the space of 90 minutes at midday. Each was followed by a camouflaged military helicopter dropping flares.

Guerrillas supported by the United States and Pakistan control the hills and mountains around Kabul and often fire heat-seaking missiles at aircraft near the airport.

They also have attacked supply convoys bound for Kabul on the Salang, which connects the capital to the Soviet border 250 miles away, causing severe food and fuel shortages that made the Soviet airlift necessary.

Activist claims he saw Tower drunk and with women other than his wife

Associated Press

WASHINGTON - A conservative activist testified Tuesday he has "on a number of occasions" seen Defense Secretary designate John Tower publicly inebriated and in the company of women other than his wife.

But members of the Senate Armed Services Committee said after a closed session with the witness that he failed to provide specifics to support his allegation.

"I have made enough personal observations of this man here in Washington to have serious reservations about his moral character," Paul Weyrich told the Senate panel, which is conducting Tower's confirmation hearing.

Tower refused to comment on the allegations or executive session as he left the committee office. A closed session is scheduled Wednesday morning followed by an open session on conflict of interest.

Weyrich's comments prompted quick criticism from Sen. Malcolm Wallop, R-Wyo., who complained about "innuendoes ... and insinuations" against the former Texas senator.

Sen. Sam Nunn of Georgia, the committee chairman, suggested that any further discussion of Tower's personal fitness take place in a previously scheduled afternoon session that was closed to the public.

Senators emerging from that session sounded unimpressed.

"I heard nothing that you didn't hear in the open session. I didn't hear anything persuasive to me," Wallop said.

Sen. Alan Dixon, D-Ill., said, "As an old trial lawyer, I would have to say that most of what I heard has to fall into the hearsay category, even given the high motives of the witness," said Sen. Alan Dixon, D-Ill.

Weyrich was unclear whether Tower was married on the occasions he saw him, according to Dixon.

Cigarette vending threatened by bill

Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS- The sale of tobacco products from vending machines would be prohibited in shopping malls, fast food restaurants and other places frequented by young people under a bill approved Tuesday by an Indiana House committee.

By a 10-0 vote, the House Family and Children Committee approved a compromise version of House Bill 1505. The measure now advances to the House floor, where the bill could be changed.

As introduced, the bill called for an outright ban on the sale of cigarettes through vending machines. Owners of vending machines objected, saying their industry could be wiped out.

Negotiations involving health officials and representatives of vendors yielded a compromise to permit vending machine sales of cigarettes in restricted areas such as taverns, the bar areas of restaurants and in industrial or office buildings customarily frequented by people over 18.

At the same time, the bill was amended so it applies to all tobacco products, including smokeless tobacco and cigars, instead of just to cigarettes.

"Neither side was really happy about it, so I guess that's an indication we have something here," said Rep. Donald Dean, R-Bloomfield, the bill's sponsor. "We've got to a point where we haven't eliminated an industry altogether but we can regulate it some."

As it stands after the changes by the committee, the bill would make it a Class C infraction to sell tobacco products in vending machines in areas where people under 18 customarily visit or have unrestricted access.

Vending sales would be permitted in restricted areas or in other areas where the owner or an employee of the business could operate the machine, thus preventing a youngster from walking up and purchasing cigarettes.

The maximum penalty for a Class C infraction is a $500 fine.

"Our goal was to impede access to tobacco products by minors, and I think largely we have done that," said Mike Abrams of the Indiana State Medical Association, which supported the bill.

Stanley Nice of the Indiana Vending Council said he could live with most of the compromise language, but he fears further restrictions that might be imposed on his industry later.

Handwriting can help determine job

Associated Press

BATTLE GROUND, Ind. - Businesses could learn a lot about prospective employees by watching the job applicants' P's and Q's, a handwriting analyst says.

Laura Clavio, who operates Associated Handwriting Consultants, says more and more businesses are seeking the services of graphoanalysts to screen job applicants.

Clavio says that by looking at samples of handwriting she can tell if a job applicant is honest or deceptive, outgoing or withdrawn.

"If you're applying for a job, you're going to make the best impression you can," she said.

"For instance, someone who needs a lot of variety and change and physical activity is not going to be happy as a bank teller," she said. "We can see things in handwriting that can't be asked in a question."

Clavio received her training in graphology from the Chicago-based International Graphoanalysis Society, as did her three associates, Kim Shipp of Lafayette, Connie Newell of West Lafayette and Geneva Todd of Delphi.

Todd used graphology for six years to help her husband screen salesman applicants at the car dealership the couple once owned.

"He did not do any hiring without my looking at their handwriting," she said.

"You want to be sure the person is outgoing enough to meet with people and be interested in people," Todd said.

across the Pacific.

The Air Force said the KC-135A tanker crashed at 12:10 p.m. near the south end of the Dyess runway, near U.S. Highway 277 about six miles southwest of Abilene.

The maintenance record for the plane, powered by four Pratt & Whitney jet engines, was not yet available, Peck said.

There is no ejection system on the plane, built in 1963, said Peck.

It was the second crash at Dyess in less than three months. A B-1B bomber crashed there Nov. 8. The four-man crew safely bailed out.

The KC-135, dubbed the Stratotanker, is the backbone of the Air Force's refueling fleet.

The aircraft, a military spin-off of the Boeing 707, normally takes a crew of four or five. It can carry a sizeable load of passengers even when carrying fuel.

A KC-135 crashed Oct. 11, 1988, at Wurtsmith Air Base near Oscoda, Mich. That plane, also based at Sawyer, crashed and burst into flames on landing, killing six and injuring 10.

New Soviet crime rate figures out

Associated Press

MOSCOW - The Soviet government, in keeping with a new policy to disclose crime statistics, said Tuesday that 111 murders were committed in the entire country in January, including one policeman killed in the line of duty.

Militia Col. Yuri Arshenevsky, a spokesman for the Interior Ministry, was quoted by official news agency Tass as saying previously classified crime statistics henceforth "will be available for everyone."

The first figures released as part of the new policy showed 93 of the 111 January murders had been solved and that most "were committed at home due to drunkenness and jealousy," Tass said.

In January 1988, New York City reported 152 cases of murder and non-negligent manslaughter.

Tass said 137 holdups were committed in January 1989, only 61 of which were solved. The report added that drivers of unregistered taxis increasingly are being victimized.

"One militia serviceman was killed this month when performing his official duty of maintaining public order, and 12 were injured," the report said.

New health policy shocks British

Associated Press

LONDON - The government Tuesday proposed the biggest shakeup in Britain's free health system, boosting private health insurance and allowing big hospitals to charge fees.

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, in a statement introducing a government policy document, called the plan the "most far-reaching reform of the National Health Service in its 40-year history."

The opposition Labor Party, which introduced free health care after World War II, accused her Conservative government of setting out to wreck the system.

The changes will be drafted later as a parliamentary bill that is assured of passage by the Conservative-dominated Parliament. They are expected to be in operation within the next three years.

The plan was seen by some as an attempt to borrow from the American health system, with its emphasis on private care, without increasing spending.

"In other words, excellent care, eventually, for perhaps as much as three-tenths of the population, but deteriorating health care for the remainder," said Dr. David Owen, a physician who leads the centrist Social Democratic Party.

Government officials said the reforms would streamline the health bureaucracy and give the public wider choice, while denying no one access to free treatment.

Under the plan, the 320 biggest and most sophisticated of the 2,000 state-run hospitals in Britain can become self-governing in 1991, taking fee-paying private patients and billing local authorities for the others.

Breaking another post-war tradition, the self-governing hospitals will charge patients for extras such as choice of meals, private telephones or television.

Threats of tampering worry FBI

Associated Press

GARY, Ind. -A series of anonymous letters threatening the injection of poisons into various food products prompted the FBI to offer a $25,000 reward Tuesday for information leading to an arrest and conviction.

A total of 56 letters have been mailed to major American corporations between Oct. 1986 and June 1988 threatening to inject rat poison and cyanide in such products as baby food, toothpaste, baking supplies, juices and candy, said agent Charles Grelecki.

No instances of actual product tampering have been connected to the letters, said Grelecki.

Most of the letters carried a Gary postmark. Two were mailed in San Diego, Calif., one from a suburban Chicago area and three from Michigan City, he said.

FBI analysts report all the letters were hand-written in ink by one person, probably a white male between the ages of 35 and 50. The analysts say the writer may be a radical consumer activist who intends no harm and is attempting to goad companies into using better tamper-resistant packaging.

If that is the case, the FBI "fully understands the writer's motive," but cannot condone his method, Grelecki said.

The agent asked anyone who may have information related to the case to call the FBI, and urged the letter writer also to make telephone contact with agents.

"Our first concern is to identify the subject," he said.

EE Savings Bonds are a good gift idea

By WILLIAM WILSON and GLORIA MARULLO
Special to The Observer

If your shopping list itemizes children—but not their precise ages or interests—you are probably panicking at the thought of trying to buy birthday presents that they will like or need.

Forget it. First, they probably have every toy advertised on TV; second, their designer jeans cost more than your entire wardrobe; and third, you really can't bring yourself to waste money.

So what's the answer? The lowly EE savings bond.

For the same price as a Gucci sleepset—or for a fraction of the cost of the latest electronic gizmo—the EE bond has the advantage of being pre-assembled, non-allergic, and one-size-fits-all. Best of all, it doesn't need batteries.

EE bonds can be purchased at any bank or financial center and, unlike most investments, the terms are such that even a child can understand them. You purchase a $50 bond for $25. The reason you only pay $25 for a bond that eventually matures at $50 is $25 of interest will accumulate over the life of the bond. The same logic applies to EE bonds of all maturity values. You can purchase a $100 bond for $50; a $200 bond for $100; a $500 bond for $250 or a $1000 bond for $500.

Clearly, there is a bond for nearly every price range.

In addition to getting you off the hook at Christmas and birthdays, EE bonds have some powerful tax advantages. EE bonds are exempt from all state and local taxes; and federal tax on the accumulated interest is paid only when the bond is redeemed—at the child's low income tax rate (assuming the child is over the age of 14 at the time the bond matures).

While the EE bond will never earn the top interest rate, its tax advantages and simplicity make it a very respectable investment. In November 1988, the rate on EE bonds was boosted from 6.9 to 7.35 percent. (The U.S. Treasury pegs the rate of return on EE bonds at 85 percent of the rate on marketable five-year Treasury notes and recalculates the EE rate every six months, on November 1 and May 1).

There is no "ceiling" or maximum rate for the bonds, so during inflationary years, the rates will keep pace with other securities. Should interest rates start to drop, however, a "floor" rate of 6 percent guarantees that EE bonds will always pay a minimum of 6 percent.

The maturity for an EE bond is normally 12 years (based on the floor rate of 6 percent). When the rates are higher—as they are now—the bonds reach their face value sooner. Because of the variable rate, the easiest way to know the value of a specific bond is to check redemption tables available at any bank.

Bonds must be held a minimum of six months after purchase. This is part of your strategy. If an older child must hold the bond for six months, he or she will be less likely to cash it in.

Commodity fraud task force formed by Feds

Associated Press

WASHINGTON—Attorney General Dick Thornburgh, flanked by the U.S. attorneys from New York, Chicago and Kansas City, today announced the formation of special task forces to target "crime in the suites," primarily securities and commodities fraud.

The Securities and Commodities Fraud Task Forces, including 15 additional assistant U.S. attorneys, will be located in six cities: New York, Chicago, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Kansas City and Denver.

U.S. attorney Rudolph Giuliani in New York and U.S. attorney Anton Valukas in Chicago already have undertaken substantial investigations of the markets in those two cities.

Thornburgh said the task forces were being formed to "combat what can aptly be called crime in the suites." Fraud is being committed "under the guise of respectability in the financial and securities markets," he said.

In addition, Thornburgh said the Treasury loses more than $90 billion a year as a result of tax fraud, and white-collar crime has been a factor in many recent business failures, including many of the bank and savings and loan closings.

There was no immediate word on how much the new effort will cost. Those involved in the task forces will be senior, experienced prosecutors who will be replaced in their current jobs by new attorneys, Edward Dennis, assistant attorney general in charge of the Justice Department's criminal division, said at a news conference.

The task forces will concentrate on the most complex and difficult frauds, including stock loan frauds, precious metals fraud, "parking" of securities with buyers concealing how much of a stake they have in a company's stock, and major bank and brokerage frauds, plus tax evasion, obstruction of justice and perjury, Thornburgh said.

Hints on collecting records for your 1988 tax return

By KEN MILANI
Special to The Observer

As the new semester starts, now might be a good time to do something about your 1988 tax return. Here are a few actions you might consider:

- Take some time getting prepared. Find and look at last year's return. This can open several areas of thought such as the gain or loss of a dependent or a significant shift of income or deductions.

- Accumulate and organize the data you'll need. Information you should be gathering would include income information (e.g., payroll summaries, interest, dividends), expenditure data (e.g., medical payments, property tax receipts, interest paid, charitable contributions) and other documentation that might have tax implications such as property contributions made to a charity or travel involved to receive medical care.

- Examine your life since January 1, 1988 with a specific view to tax ramifications. For example, did your church sponsor a special fund raiser during 1988? If so, what was the nature of your contribution—time, talent and/or "treasure"? Did you redeem U.S. Savings Bonds to pay for an emergency expense or to complete a remodeling project? A look at a calendar or going through your check-book register can help jog your memory.

- Expect to spend more than one session in pulling much of this information together. More often than not, missing information can cost you money when it comes to filing whatever version of the 1040 you use. Investing some time to procure the needed information may lead to a more healthy refund or a smaller check to "Uncle Sam."

- Seek out advice and help from reputable and reliable sources. There are several books and manuals available in addition to the help provided by the Internal Revenue Service and/or paid preparers.

Ken Milani is the Arthur Young Faculty Fellow in Taxation and a professor of accountancy. This column is a collaborative effort of the Internal Revenue Service and the University of Notre Dame-Saint Mary's College Tax Assistance Program.

Interest rates hurt first-time home buyers; fuel mortgage rate rise

Associated Press

NEW YORK—In 1982, the median-priced existing home required a monthly payment of $702. In October 1988, the median-priced home required only $588 a month to carry.

This is a story about the impact of interest rates—and it is only beginning. The 1982 house cost $67,800, the 1988 house cost $88,100. That is, the lower-priced house cost $114 more to carry than the higher-priced one.

The explanation for this otherwise strange situation lies in the interest rates that prevailed in the two periods. In 1982, the average interest rate was 15.38 percent. In October of 1988 it was 9.41 percent.

Interest rates power housing markets. Consider this additional statistic: in 1982, when home prices were lower,

MORTGAGES

Based on October prices and rates, the NAR offers this rough affordability guide.

Income	Mortgage	House Price
$20,000	$50,000	$62,500
$30,000	$75,000	$93,800
$40,000	$100,000	$125,000
$50,000	$125,000	$156,300
$60,000	$150,000	$187,500
$70,000	$175,000	$218,800

Observer Graphic

monthly payments took 35.9 percent of median family income. In October 1988, the percentage was only 22.2.

The significance of such figures, compiled by the National Association of Realtors on the basis of 20 percent downpayments, is becoming increasingly important now, the reason being that home mortgage rates are rising.

It's bad news for a lot of people.

While the immediate emphasis is likely to be on the growing difficulty of families to find affordable homes, the impact is more widespread. Sellers may have to wait longer for a sale. Agents may face reduced income and possibly lose jobs. Builders conceivably could have to lay off workers.

John Tuccillo, NAR chief economist, believes the higher trend of rates will last through the winter. They'll continue higher for about five months, he says, "and this will cause a further decline in affordability conditions."

The potential homebuyer who won't be hurt, and might even be aided by these conditions, is the all-cash buyer. While such people are rare, they do exist; most of them probably are those who have just sold another home.

Market closes up 18.21; trading active

Associated Press

NEW YORK—The stock market finished higher today in active trading, rebounding briskly late in the session.

Analysts said the market succumbed early today to profit-taking in the wake of last week's impressive rally, which continued on Monday.

Wall Street's bullish enthusiasm was dampened somewhat by comments today by Federal Reserve Board Chairman Alan Greenspan, analysts said. Among other things, Greenspan told Congress' Joint Economic Committee that the potential threat of inflation still persists in the economy.

After the market tested lower levels, however, it bounced back late in the day and again showed the strength characterizing its recent rally. As the Dow Jones average of 30 industrials fell toward the 2,300 level, a massive buying surge was said to be triggered.

The comeback reinforced market players' belief that many foreign investors and U.S. institutions are poised to jump on the rally bandwagon.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 18.21 points to 2,342.32.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by about 9-to-5 on the New York Stock Exchange, with 956 up, 533 down and 479 unchanged.

Big Board volume totaled 194.05 million shares, up from 167.83 million in Monday's session.

The NYSE's composite index rose 1.27 to 166.63.

At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was up 1.14 at 323.02.

Dating: A unique social alternative

For three years I have promised myself that I would address the continuously negative attitudes that exist toward dating in the Notre Dame/Saint Mary's community. Every time I have heard an accusatory comment or defeatist position regarding dating, I have mentally planned a response, but I somehow always placed it aside and forgot my anger until the next irrational outburst. The desire to write finally materialized because the heart of the problem occurred to me several weeks ago.

Elizabeth Crummy

guest column

The most prominent problem that exists in the dating scene is that of our personal attitudes and preconceived notions as to how romantic, or even platonic, overtures will be received. The general stance regarding dating seems to be that the opposite sex is an enemy that will either gun us down or entrap us. In either case, we are reluctant to accept responsibility for our actions and efforts. We hide behind the platitudes and weak excuses that have existed on this campus presumably since 1972. We find it easier to tell ourselves that all efforts to change dating scene precedents will fail than to venture into that territory ourselves.

Girls are not any more or less physically appealing here than at any other school in the USA, nor are their personalities any more or less friendly or approachable. Notre Dame men are not any more or less athletic, handsome, opinionated, or chauvinistic than at any other school either. We all seem to be convinced that the administration deliberately assembled the extremes of the geekiest and most unattainable people to make our social lives infinitely complicated. Just because we demand perfection from ourselves, let's not be so harsh on one another.

Many people say that they fear rejection. When it comes to jobs—a far more important event in life than Saturday night—we joke about rejection, we buy one another drinks and celebrate the absurdity of letting one person's opinion destroy our self-image. If we are all so paralyzed by the fear of rejection, how did we get here in the first place? How did we win essay contests, get onto a sports team, make the Chorale, play, Glee Club? Notre Dame is not a place filled with those afraid of rejection. Do we only try for those things which we are certain of obtaining? Why should (human) relationships be any different? They are much more important than any grade or club. Life still continues when we fail a test, blow an audition, or lose a race because we refuse to be defeated.

The second biggest problem is fear of commitment. "If I ask him out, then he'll think that I like him." That's exactly the point you want to get across. "What if she wants a commitment from me?" Honestly, how can someone want any kind of firm relationship before you've spent any time together? A date is not a marriage proposal.

Personal examples are always risky, but maybe one would help to reinforce what I am saying. I recently wanted to get to know somebody that I had admired from afar. How to meet him? Some of my friends vaguely knew him and said that I really should make the effort to call him and meet him. Not being the most adventurous of souls, I went for the tried and true SYR plan. So, we SYR'd together, and we are on the way to a nice friendship; not only he and I, but he and many of my friends too. No pressure, no commitment, no marriage threats. Just a fun dance, great pictures, a new friend, and a few boxes of candy. I might not always have done that. There was a time when I would have been paralyzed by something as simple as that, because I would have feared rejection. But I went out on a limb, and I lived to tell about it. That's what all of us need to do, I think.

I know there is nothing new in what I have written here, so don't try to look for innovative ways in which to ask someone out. The only thing that I have tried to express is that we all need to take a good look at ourselves and the ridiculousness of the dating scene. If we complain, merely relying upon what others tell us is an irreversible situation, then we can resign ourselves to a miserable time here and elsewhere. It is not the atmosphere, I can guarantee that. It is all of us who are too scared to take initiative in the most important issue of life—human relationships. If you get rejected, make a voodoo effigy of the creep and then ask out another one of the 5,000 available types. There's nothing to lose but a little bored time and an unhealthy attitude.

Elizabeth Crummy is a senior English and philosophy major.

Reagan: Out of touch with reality

Dear Editor:

A recent column by Kevin Smant (The Observer, Jan. 21) offers a glowing evaluation of the Reagan presidency. Because I am one of those "embittered, self-flagellating intellectuals" who have been critical of the Reagan presidency, I thought a dissenting view would be appropriate.

I should begin by noting two points of agreement with Mr. Smant. First, Reagan has clearly made Americans feel better about themselves and their country. Second, efforts to "paint (Reagan) as somehow a conspiratorial, devious evildoer" (if they ever existed) are certainly misguided. These points of agreement should also indicate the failures of the Reagan presidency.

Reagan never intended to increase the federal deficit and the trade deficit, create a climate which fosters racial violence, eliminate the safety net for the poor, feminize poverty, reduce protection of workers on their jobs, despoil the environment, increase inequality, concentrate wealth, etc. He was simply incapable of understanding that the policies he pursued would have those consequences. In short, Reagan was a nice, but ignorant man, captured by an ideology.

A chasm separated reality and policy discussions at the Reagan White House. Reagan thought in terms of anecdotes and movies rather than general propositions and evidence on the economy, relations with the Soviet Union, etc.

But let us be fair to Reagan and examine his crowning achievement (aside from making us feel better about being Americans): the INF Treaty eliminating medium-range nuclear weapons in Europe. In fact, Reagan lost opportunities to conclude this treaty earlier as a result of his mindless "evil empire" rhetoric. Such rhetoric may make Americans feel better (presumably we are the good empire), but it serves foreign policy purposes poorly.

Gorbachev presented Reagan with countless opportunities to negotiate reductions in nuclear and conventional weapons. Reagan failed to take advantage of these opportunities until his second term, the time during which presidents typically pursue aims which will mark their place in the history books. Yet, even then, Reagan proposed an agreement with the Soviets at Reykjavik which seemingly had not been examined by his staff!

At home, Reagan plunged the country into the deepest depression since the Great Depression, despite his intentions to spur the economy. He never understood that his policies would have the effect of plunging poorer families, particularly single-parent households, into deeper poverty. Reagan simply thought that individuals ought to "pull themselves up by their own bootstraps." Such Horatio Alger stories have no basis in reality.

One final observation concerns the budget deficit. Ronald Reagan and his fans have never understood the budgetary process. Their notion of reasonable and fair presidential control of the process was that Reagan ought to have complete control. Sorry, Ron, but some day you ought to read the Constitution.

Furthermore, blaming Congress for the deficit ignores reality. First, the budget which sets the agenda is the president's budget; Congress rarely departs significantly from the president's budget because the president has more resources to monitor the programs run within his agencies. Second, even if congressional pressures to increase spending (to serve constituents) exist, it is the height of absurdity to claim that such pressures were fairly constant until Reagan became president and then dramatically skyrocketed. The explosion of the deficit occurred when nothing except the occupant of the oval office had changed. So, Mr. Smant, I must dissent from your rosy, feel-good assessment of the Reagan presidency. And by the way, a good historian might be a little more reticent about singing the praises of an "era of good feeling." Remember what followed the 1920's and another series of Republican presidents?

'Murphy Brown' sends CBS into high gear

On a recent segment of "The Pat Sajak Show," Pat joked that CBS gave him a new jeep, but he could not get it out of the third gear. The main reason CBS remains the third placed network is the quality of its programming; however, this season CBS has managed to air some outstanding shows. The new situation comedy "Murphy Brown" is a prime example of CBS' renewed commitment to quality.

"Murphy Brown" airs Mondays at 9 p.m. Candice Bergen stars in the title role as a reputable news reporter for the hit television magazine "FYI." Other newsroom members complete the show's regular cast. Corky Sherwood (Faith Ford) is a former Miss America who organized a closet in the talent competition. "FYI's" executive producer is the young Miles Silverberg (Grant Shaud). Jim Dial (Charles Kimbrough) and Frank Fontana (Joe Regalbuto) help to keep things running smoothly in the office.

Of course, a situation comedy's main goal is to make people laugh and "Murphy Brown" does this more often than Roseanne Barr whines. One person says of Corky, "Of course, when she said she loved animals, no one took Another episode centers around George Bush's Inaugural Ball. While Murphy searches for the reason her name is not on the list of guests, Miles toys with the idea of asking Corky to be his date. Murphy jokes that Corky is so much taller than he. "Do the words Mutt and Jeff mean anything to you?" Realizing that Miles does not appreciate her caustic comment, Murphy lends some support: "You're bright; you're funny. You know all the state capitals."

"Murphy Brown" is a wonderful show not only because of its humor but also due to its timeliness. The newsroom scenario provides a forum for new humor that does not logically fit into a family-based sit-com. For example, a local bartender (Pat Corley) speaks to Murphy about the Inaugural Ball. "I don't want to go; I have to. Bush wants to thank me for that 'Thousand Points of Light' idea. Hell, Murph. It was a joke. I didn't think it would get him elected." It is her literally." Murphy has a problem with the fact that her boss, Miles, is so young: "It's just that while I was getting maced at the '68 Democratic Convention, you were in your living room wishing you were Adam West." She adds, "You haven't experienced pain until the 'National Enquirer' puts your head on Pia Zadora's body."

precisely this witty, intellectual humor that puts the sparkle in "Murphy's" eye. And the show performs its magic without ever mentioning Dan Quayle.

CBS has one of this season's best new comedies in "Murphy Brown." It is a delightful—often sarcastic—half-hour of quality entertainment. If CBS continues to feature shows like this, Pat Sajak better fasten his seat-belt.

Stay Tuned: Once joined in a TV marriage, Mary Tyler

Moore and Dick Van Dyke are now joined in a marriage of cancellation. Both their new shows, "Annie McGuire" and "The Van Dyke Show" were cancelled by CBS. This May will be a blockbuster month for avid movie fans. "Batman," "Karate Kid III," "Star Trek V," and a third Indiana Jones movie starring Sean Connery and Jones' father will open to start off a summer of movies that Hollywood producers hope will surpass even this past summer's huge box office revenues.

The traditional jazz of

accent writer

Finally, the prayers of both jazz aficionados and other music lovers have been answered! Next week the campus jazz quintet In Cinq will be bursting into the area club scene at the Center Street Blues Cafe in Mishawaka, a mere ten minute ride from Notre Dame.

The three hour set of traditional jazz will begin at 8:30 p.m. on Wednesday, February 8. Cover charge has been specially lowered to $2 for this performance. The Center Street Blues Cafe offers table service with moderately priced meals and alcoholic beverages will be available to those 21 and older. It is located toward the rear of the 100 Center Complex, a mall on Lincolnway in Mishawaka.

In Cinq consists of five Notre Dame undergraduate, graduate, and law students:

Rob Ginoccio plays the alto saxophone, Vince Marcopoli is the guitarist, Andy Kolesar plays bass, Kevin Tracy is the pianist, and Paul Loughridge plays drums. All these musicians are also members of the University Big Bands.

At the beginning of this year, each of these musicians were auditioning for spots in one of the two Big Bands. Ginoccio and Loughridge heard the other three as they auditioned and later approached them to see if they were interested in forming a quintet that would play traditional jazz music.

It is usual for some members of the Big Bands to pursue their interest in jazz by forming smaller jazz combos. These smaller groups are, in the words of Ginoccio, "university-sponsored and student run." They play for various campus events and sometimes represent the University off campus. They are given the privilege of rehearsing in the Loft, the top floor of the Band Building.

Since In Cinq was founded, they have performed on campus on the Fieldhouse Mall and participated in the Bop and Beyond Concert, an annual performance by the campus jazz combos. They also appeared as guest fine arts performers at a local private school. While providing music for a United Way cocktail party at Center Street Blues Cafe in November, they attracted the attention of the establishment's general manager, Ken Parfitt, and their fine performance prompted him to ask them to return.

Last week I sat in on one of the band's rehearsals and was duly impressed. They are very competent musicians and work together very well. The four members present did a fair rendition of the jazz standard "Take the A Train" and when Loughridge, the drummer, finally showed up they launched into a driving and electrifying version of "Maiden Voyage." Hopefully these two tunes will be on the playlist for next week's performance.

The South Bend area does not attract many big-name jazz artists and according to Ginoccio, "In Cinq is one of the only bands in the area playing traditional jazz." Likewise, the Center Street Blues Cafe is one of the only clubs featuring this sort of music. "This is an opportunity to hear jazz in its intended environment," said Kolesar.

Calvin and Hobbes

The band expects to be very busy this semester. They will be performing on campus over Junior Parents Weekend and will be holding a benefit concert on February 24 in Holland, Michigan. On April 2 they have a gig at a Chicago area high school and will be participating in the Collegiate Jazz Festival held in Stepen Center on April 7-8. Tentative arrangements are being made for the Elmhurst College Jazz Festival in Chicago, several appearances at local schools, a performance for the Michiana Jazz Society at South Bend Union Station, and participation in the Michiana Jazz Festival in Elkhart.

Expect a great performance from In Cinq next Wednesday. They are definitely a group to see.

McCloud has FSU in Top 10

Underrated guard leading surge in Seminole basketball

Associated Press

TALLAHASSEE, Fla.-- High-scoring Florida State point guard George McCloud enjoyed a spectacular January, leading the eighth-ranked Seminoles to an 8-0 month and a return to college basketball's Top Ten.

McCloud, a 6-7, 205-pound senior, averaged 26 points a game in that time, hitting 50 percent of his 66 attempts from 3-point distance and 58 of 68 free throws.

As a result, the Seminoles take a 16-1 record into February and Wednesday night's Metro Conference game against Memphis State.

Florida State slipped into the Top Ten on Christmas week for the first time since 1972, when the school made its lone Final Four appearance, but a one-point loss to Villanova knocked the Seminoles back to 14th.

The 68-67 loss, along with the loss of two of the team's top six players, left coach Pat Kennedy's squad with a mission.

McCloud

"You're going to stumble more than once usually," said Kennedy. "We stumbled at the same time... everyone had a bad shooting night, but we learned a little more about playing against a good zone defense."

Kennedy looks back with positive feelings about his team's lone setback.

"It was definitely a blessing for us," said Kennedy. "It helped the kids see things better. We've rounded out into a good balanced club now."

"There is no question in my mind that we are a Top Ten team now. They are very focused and everyone is playing with confidence right now."

The Seminoles enjoyed a perfect month climaxed by conference road wins last week at South Carolina and Virginia Tech that catapulted them from 11th to eighth, and put them atop the conference with a 4-0 record.

McCloud, who has not had much national acclaim, led the way. He scored the winning basket in both road games last week and sent the Arkansas game earlier this month into overtime with a 3-pointer. Florida State won that game 112-105-- one of five times the Seminoles scored at least 100 points in January.

"I can't believe there has been any player in college basketball this year who has been more of a clutch player," Kennedy said. "He's a dangerous 3-point shooter."

Kennedy has managed to keep the team on course despite injuries to Tharon Mayes, the club's third-leading scorer and quickest player, and sixth-man Michael Polite, who was sidelined in December with Guillaine-Barre syndrome.

Derrick Mitchell took over for Mayes, giving Kennedy four seniors and a fourth-year junior, Kentucky transfer Irving Thomas, in the starting lineup.

"Looking at us as a potential tournament team, we've got a lot of ingredients," said Kennedy. "We play very hard."

Terence Greene's team has struggled for much of the season, but DePaul did come away with a win Tuesday night. The Blue Demons defeated Duquesne 85-63.

Knight blasts ESPN package

Big 10 colleagues like TV exposure of late-night games

Associated Press

CHICAGO-- Indiana's Bob Knight is against late games for television, but his fellow Big Ten basketball coaches said Tuesday the advantages outweigh the disadvantages.

"It depends in what chair you're sitting," said Purdue's Gene Keady, in the coaches' weekly telephone news conference. "If you've won three national titles, you're not concerned. But the rest of us will take any recognition we can get."

Most of the coaches are against the late starting times of the doubleheader cable television package ESPN has put together on Monday nights. The package has the Big East playing the first game and the Big Ten the second, and Knight's Hoosiers have played at 9:30 p.m., on three of the last four nights-- winning all three.

After Indiana defeated Iowa 104-89 Monday night, Knight declared it would be Indiana's last late game.

"We don't need this," he said. "It's ridiculous to be here at this hour."

Other Big Ten coaches agreed the late starting times are disruptive, especially for the visiting team. The Iowa-Indiana game, for example, started at 9:38 p.m. EST and ended shortly before midnight. But they want the exposure.

Dr. Tom Davis

"We'd like to play at a more livable hour, but that's not the way it works," said Iowa's Tom Davis. "Some of us in this league need national recruiting. Those who have to recruit nationally love ESPN. We view it as a tremendous positive. It's disruptive, but a majority of us are willing to accept it."

Steve Yoder of Wisconsin hit on all phases of the problem.

"I understand what Bob's talking about," said Yoder. "It's great exposure. Some teams feel they don't need the publicity. I don't think the starting times are good, but you have to be flexible."

Yoder wondered, "Are we giving in to the Big East? it seems to me more people are watching Big Ten games than the Big East."

Bill Frieder of Michigan suggested rotating the games, with the Big Ten starting the first game one Monday night and the Big East the next Monday night.

"I've got dual feelings," Frieder said. "I don't need ESPN, we've been on national television often in recent years. We don't need it but the Big Ten does."

"The Wisconsin, the Northwesterns, the Michigan States need it. But these things go in cycles. Overall, the money is there and the exposure is there and it's good for the league."

Jud Heathcote of Michigan State said he's never liked early-afternoon games.

"TV has dictated our schedules," he said. "You can talk all you want about dollars and exposure, but I think the last thing we'd want to give up is ESPN exposure."

Heathcote's only complaint is that every school isn't on ESPN twice a year.

Then, as an afterthought to Knight's complaints, he added, "If Bobby doesn't want it, we'll take his spot."

The Observer / Robert Jones

Indiana coach Bob Knight is fighting against Big 10 games being held on late Monday nights to accommodate ESPN. Many of his peers in the Big 10, however, feel that the television exposure is what's best for the conference.

NFLPA officials say dues are paid; statistics present a different story

Associated Press

NEW YORK-- The NFL players Association received dues from only about a fourth of its members in the year it struck the league for 24 days, but union officials said Tuesday that a majority of the nearly 1,600 players have now paid up.

According to the union's financial statement for the period from March 1, 1987 to Feb. 29, 1988, filed with the Labor Department Jan. 23, the organization received $877,441 in dues compared to $3.7 million for the 1986-87 period.

Dues for the earlier period were $2,400 per player compared to $2,000 in the later report. Still, even at the lower figure, that comes out to just 438 players who paid up.

But Gene Upshaw, the union's executive director, said Tuesday that the period covered was one in which there was no automatic dues checkoff-- by which the teams automatically pay dues to the union from the player's paychecks. As a result, players had to make direct payments to the union.

"We didn't even start collecting dues until December," said Upshaw, whose salary of $164,847 during the period represents a four-percent increase over the previous year's. "The period in the report ends March 1 and we kept on collecting dues. We have a majority of players paying now."

The report came a month after two reports that the Labor Department had passed along information from its audit of the NFLPA to the Justice Department for possible action.

Neither agency has commented on the allegations and Upshaw and his assistant, Doug Allen, said two weeks ago at a news conference that what was reported as a $100,000 loan to Upshaw in the reports was no more than deferred payment.

There was no mention of that payment in the financial statement.

Upshaw is by far the highest paid employee of the union, receiving a total of $182,156 in salary and expenses. Allen received $89,136 of which $67,350 was salary, and Frank Woschitz, the public relations director, received $57,760 in salary and $22,096 in expenses.

Dick Berthelsen, the union's general counsel, is not listed on the report but his salary is part of professional expenses, which total $494,139.

This financial report was due last May 29 and was filed eight months late, not atypical for the NFLPA, which in the past has filed its reports even later.

It shows that the union, which dismissed 17 of its 36 employees during the period, had a net loss of $310,000, which Upshaw said is largely on paper because it was forced to list future severance pay.

Several NFL stars could become free agents

Associated Press

NEW YORK— Many will be household names. Some may even be legends. On Wednesday, many of the NFL's biggest stars could become free agents when the league puts into effect its new contract plan.

A radical departure from the old free agency system, it is being imposed unilaterally without a union contract and will unconditionally free more than 600 players. Each team will be allowed to protect just 37 of the average of 59 on its roster.

"You'll see Super Bowl players, Pro Bowl players, very big names," said Tex Schramm, president of the Dallas Cowboys and a member of the owners' Management Council.

"But there will be reasons for them— they'll be bad medical risks, they'll be older. A lot of them will be getting good salaries, own homes in the area, things like that. They won't want to move."

Under the old plan, players offered a contract by another team could move only after their team waived its right of first refusal. The new team would also have to compensate the old one with draft choices.

Only two players in 10 years moved under that system, most recently, linebacker Wilber Marshall of Chicago, who signed a $6 million, five-year contract last year with Washington. He joined the Redskins after the Bears declined to match the offer and Chicago got two first-round draft picks in return.

Parts of that system remain in effect— protected players whose contracts have expired still would be subject to first refusal, and teams signing them would have to part with draft choices. The rest, under contract or not, will be free until April 1 to go elsewhere without compensation.

Although few teams have identified unprotected players, the consensus is that most will protect younger players with potential while leaving older, more established players unprotected. The older ones have less incentive to move; high salaries, or injury problems that make them unattractive to prospective bidders.

The Chicago Bears, for example, have already said they will not protect three starters from their 1986 Super Bowl champions, including 31-year-old linebacker Otis Wilson and cornerback Mike Richardson, 28. Wilson, coming off reconstructive knee surgery, vowed to return to haunt the Bears.

The New York Giants will probably leave unprotected 29-year-old nose tackle Jim Burt, who has a history of back problems, and starting guard Billy Ard, also 29.

Others likely to be set free include quarterback Danny White and defensive tackle Randy White of Dallas; running back Tony Dorsett, defensive end Rulon Jones and cornerback Mark Haynes of Denver; running back Ottis Anderson of the Giants; defensive end Bruce Clark and nose tackle Tony Elliott of New Orleans and center Dwight Stephenson, the perennial All-Pro center of the Miami Dolphins who missed all of the 1988 season with a serious knee injury.

Stephenson is a classic case of a player who wouldn't want to leave and who is unlikely to get a major offer because of his knee problems.

Knicks defeat Pacers, stay hot at home

Associated Press

NEW YORK— Reserves Gerald Wilkins and Kenny Walker scored New York's first 11 points of a 16-5 second-half spurt that carried the Knicks to their 15th consecutive home victory Tuesday night, a 120-111 decision over the Indiana Pacers.

The win gave New York an 18-1 home record and a 10-6 mark in January, the first time since February 1984 the Knicks won 10 games in a month.

Despite their 1-20 road record, the Pacers stayed close as Chuck Person scored 47 points, five more than his previous career high. Indiana did not wilt in the fourth quarter despite losing point guard Vern Fleming to a sprained left ankle.

The Knicks were led by Charles Oakley with 22 points and Johnny Newman with 19.

New York appeared to take control with an 82-73 lead in the third period but three baskets by Person and a free throw by Reggie Miller got Indiana within two with 2:26 left. Wilkins then scored six points and Kenny Walker five, including a 3-pointer, giving New York a 93-83 lead.

A 3-pointer by Trent Tucker and a basket by Patrick Ewing made it 98-85 and the Pacers got no closer than five after that.

Person scored 16 points in the first quarter and the Pacers shot 15-for-23 in taking a 37-31 lead.

The Knicks started the second quarter with a 25-13 run for a 56-50 advantage but Person scored the first six points of an 8-0 run as Indiana regained the lead. A 3-pointer by Newman gave the Knicks a 63-60 edge at halftime.

NOW THAT YOU'RE FINISHED WHERE DO YOU START?

Graduation probably represents the end of a race well run. But with every company telling you how bright your future is, how do you decide where to start your career?

To begin, you'll have to ask the right questions.

What are the entry-level jobs for someone with your major? How well will you be trained? Will you be pigeonholed, or will you have a chance to explore diverse career opportunities?

The Travelers, a $50 billion insurance and financial services leader, offers positions in insurance, finance, actuarial, management, data processing and much more. We have great training to start with, and varied career paths to pursue as you develop your skills.

So, now that you're finished, why not start with The Travelers... and begin the real race?

We'll be on campus Wednesday, February 15th and Thursday, February 16th. To schedule an interview, sign up in the Career/Placement office.

Five ND players in combine

Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS --The NFL's annual scouting combine, a chance for the league's scouts, coaches and general managers to test and interview more than 300 of the nation's top college seniors, begins Thursday at the Hoosier Dome.

Among those expected to participate are UCLA quarterback Troy Aikman, the projected No. 1 pick in the April 23-24 college draft, and offensive tackle Andy Heck and defensive end Frank Stams, both All-Americans from national champion Notre Dame.

The four-day program, closed to the public and the media, will include physical examinations, drug tests, intelligence tests and evaluations of strength, agility, speed and football skills.

Also in town will be virtually every coaching staff and most general managers in the NFL. Indianapolis has been chosen as a regular site not only for the climate-controlled conditions of the Hoosier Dome but also because the Dome is near many downtown hotels.

Agents trying to corner the uncommitted athletes also will be hanging around the lobbies.

For Coach Ron Meyer of the Indianapolis Colts, the meetings are an opportunity to check out talent first-hand, albeit in non-contact situations. But Meyer says a player's time in the 40-yard dash may become less important than his overall desire and willingness to compete.

"During this week, we use a great deal of personal one-on-one visitation," said Meyer. "We don't give a lot of psychological tests like some clubs do, but I like to interview and get to know as many players as possible."

A year ago, O'Brien Alston was an obscure linebacker from Maryland who had unimpressive workouts at the Hoosier Dome. But judging starter last season as a rookie.

Heck and Stams are among five players from unbeaten Notre Dame invited to the camp. The others are linebacker Wes Pritchett, the team's leading tackler, tailback Mark Green and safety George Streeter.

From Purdue, safety Marc Foster and linebacker Jerrol Williams will be here. Foster, a two-time member of the All-Big Ten team, had 325 career tackles and tied Rod Woodson's school record with 11 interceptions. Two years ago, Woodson was the talk of the combine after dazzling scouts with his athletic ability.

From Indiana will come offensive tackle Chris Simons, placekicker Pete Stoyanovich and tight end Tim Jorden. Stoyanovich, who never missed an extra-point kick in his college career, is projected to go fairly early in the draft.

Another player invited to the workouts is Greg Werner, a tight end from DePauw. Werner had 119 receptions for 1,742 yards and 17 touchdowns as a three-year starter at DePauw. Also a pitcher with a chance to be picked in the baseball draft, Werner could become the first DePauw football player ever to be selected in the NFL draft.

Andy Heck

partly from interviews, the Colts decided Alston was worth another look and sent linebacker coach Rick Venturi to visit him on campus. Venturi liked Alston, the Colts drafted him in the 10th round and he quickly developed into a last weekend in the National Catholics at the 167-pound division.

"That was the best I ever wrestled," stated Tomazic. "I couldn't have been more satisfied with my performance."

As a freshman, Tomazic compiled a 15-14-1 record in his first ever college season.

"It was a big turnaround from high school," said Tomazic. "I learned more last year than I ever have before."

At California, Tomazic starred for El Dorado High, the same school from which Olympic three-time gold medal-winning swimmer Janet Evans will graduate this summer.

Tomazic is learning the college game from one of the best in the nation. Wrestling against Geneser every day in practice, he has gained valuable experience from one of Notre Dame's greatest wrestlers ever.

Irish coaches have been very pleased with his progress this year, especially with his two wins against Scott Chenoweth and his victory in the National Catholics.

"There is no doubt he is able to make the NCAA Tournament," exclaimed McCann. "It is a mental game, and if he can overcome that hurdle he could go very far."

Tomazic will be looking to extend his record to 17-10 with a win against Michigan State, but he also has his sights set on reaching the NCAA's later this season.

"My goal is to make the tournament," said Tomazic. "The way I've been wrestling lately, I really believe I can make it."

ND baseball team to play USC during week of football game

Special to The Observer

After sweeping the University of Miami in an exhibition baseball series last fall, the Notre Dame baseball team has signed to play another big-name baseball team next autumn.

In the week leading to the 1989 Notre Dame-Southern California football game, the Irish and Trojan baseball teams will meet twice at South Bend's Stanley Coveleski Stadium.

The two exhibition baseball games are scheduled for Thursday, Oct. 19, and Friday, Oct. 21. The Irish football team clashes with USC on Saturday, Oct. 22, at Notre Dame Stadium.

Southern Cal perhaps had the dominant collegiate baseball program of the 1970s. The Trojans consistently are one of the top teams in the Pac 10, the best baseball conference in the country.

Before last fall's Notre Dame-Miami game, the Irish baseball team played a two-game exhibition series with the Miami baseball team.

Notre Dame surprised many college baseball followers by sweeping the games from the Hurricanes, who have reached the NCAA tournament each of the last 16 years.

The Irish won 11-2 in the first game of that series, then came away with a 9-8 decision in the rematch.

Notre Dame posted a 39-22 record last season, which included a school-record 16-game winning streak and a no-hitter by junior pitcher Brian Piotrowicz. Those 39 victories also set a Notre Dame season record.

Murphy.

After playing right field during his freshman and sophomore years, Peltier moves to centerfield this season.

CoppertoneBaseball America also mentioned Pesavento, a shortstop, in its "others to watch" section.

Pesavento, an 11th-round selection by the Toronto Blue Jays last spring, turned down the offer and returned to Notre Dame.

"People better not forget about Pesavento," said Murphy. "If they just concentrate on Peltier, Pesavento will beat them. He'll get a base hit to left, steal a base, whatever he has to do to win."

Coming off a 39-22 season that featured a 16-game winning streak down the stretch, the Irish open the new campaign Feb. 23 against Trinity.

After that opening-day game at San Antonio, Tex., the Irish head upstate for a matchup with perennial College World Series participant Texas.

"That's the ultimate road game," said Murphy. "There will be no more than 10 friendly faces in a crowd of 10,000-plus. It'll be their 16th game and our second."

The Irish follow the Texas road trip with six games in Florida and four contests at North Carolina. The Florida trip includes a rematch with Miami March 8. The Hurricanes will look to avenge last fall's 11-2 and 9-8 losses at Notre Dame.

"Miami's already come out public on the Mutual Radio Network and termed it as 'The War You Don't Want to Miss,'" said Murphy.

Notre Dame called last fall's two-game series, played the week of the Notre Dame-Miami football game, "The Battle Before the War."

The Irish open their home schedule March 29 against Chicago State.

After back-to-back losing seasons, Murphy successfully parlayed a play on the classic song, "You've Lost That Lovin' Feeling," into a winning season. He has returned to pop culture in choosing a theme for this year's team.

"Last year, it was 'Bring Back That Winning Feeling,'" said Murphy. "You know that Nike commercial, 'Just Do It?' That's our theme for this year, 'The Best Is Yet to Come: Just Do It.'"

Flyers battled back and forged a 20-20 tie with eight minutes left on Negele Knight's six-footer in the lane. Knight finished with 13.

Elmer Bennett scored the last four points of the half to provide the Irish with a 39-31 halftime lead, but the issue was still very much in doubt until midway through the second half. Knight's 10-foot jumper with 10:50 remaining kept the margin within striking distance at 58-50, but the Irish slowly pulled away and Dayton could not climb within eight points the rest of the way.

"One thing we had talked a little earlier than we wanted to because of foul trouble," said Phelps, referring to Tim Singleton's four and Fredrick's three personal fouls early in the second half. "But we got what we wanted out of the game. We saw what they could do."

Freshmen Daimon Sweet (14 points) and Bennett (12) played 24 and 18 minutes against the Flyers, respectively.

The Irish don't get much of a break before heading into another home contest against Marquette tomorrow at 8 p.m.

The greatest fans of all time

Packer cites ND crowd in '77 USF game as best ever

Associated Press

Billy Packer has no trouble remembering the best college basketball crowd he ever saw. He can't forget the roar.

"The University of San Francisco in 1977 was undefeated and ranked No. 1 in the nation," said Packer, the CBS-TV college basketball analyst, remembering the game at Notre Dame's Athletic and Convocation Center.

"Digger Phelps probably had one of his greatest games ever in terms of keeping the crowd ready. He kept his team in the locker room and came out and worked the crowd. Meanwhile, the San Francisco players are out on the court shooting baskets, looking around, taking this in.

"This goes on for awhile. When Digger has it to the highest peak possible, Notre Dame comes out onto the court. The toilet paper comes flying down, the crowd goes crazy. It was mind-boggling. The sound was deafening.

"By the time the game started, the game was over. It had gotten to San Francisco. They lost the next game. They never did anything in the tournament. They never recovered."

Notre Dame won 93-82, the Dons' first loss of the season. San Francisco then lost to Nevada-Las Vegas 121-95 in the opening round of the NCAA tournament.

Packer thinks Phelps may be able to do more with a home crowd than any other coach.

"He had the ability to incite an emotional atmosphere about a certain game," Packer said. "It may have a tendency to hurt his team during the NCAA tournament because you can't sustain that over a three-week stretch."

Packer said the best crowds on a regular basis show up at Thomas and Mack Arena, the home of Nevada-Las Vegas.

"The entire pre-game celebration is designed and choreographed by the students. With the fireworks and the light displays and the smoke and Tark (Coach Jerry Tarkanian) going across the top of the ceiling. It really throws the visiting teams.

"Then in the front-row seats, you see the people who own casinos root like hell, as if it was their sons and daughters playing. They root like crazy. I think it's an escape from their normal work.

"I told (Missouri coach) Norm Stewart last year: Take your team off the court prior to all that pre-game hoopla and don't let them see it. No matter who you are, it's going to distract you. I would suggest that anybody who plays there, does that. Now Missouri beat them (81-79). I'm not taking credit for it, mind you."

Packer thinks Duke's crowd is right behind.

"They have been some of the most unmerciful crowds in terms of how they can get on a given player or a given team. I remember them wearing Lefty Driesell masks (parodying the former Maryland coach). They threw pizza boxes at NC State after it had an incident involving pizza. After one incident, they threw car keys. After a team had an incident with a girl, they threw panties on the court."

Packer also remembers a game when the crowd lost control, when Louisville traveled to Memphis State in the early 1980s.

"The crowd lost perspective. They were constantly throwing money. Someone threw a knife onto the court, an open switchblade."

At the other extreme is the crowd that's completely silent.

"The worst crowd would be the opening round of the ACC tournament. When No. 1 plays No. 8, it's a totally social crowd, the people who have contributed the most money to the various schools. The only people who pay attention are those with the teams involved. Everyone else is socializing."

IH hockey continues; divisional races form

By ARTHUR GOLLWITZER
Sports Writer

The Interhall hockey season had its opening faceoff in December and has resumed in force since the start of the new semester.

Heading into Tuesday night's games, perennial powers Grace, Dillon and Off-Campus were in contention for the Gold Division title, while Stanford and Alumni are rising to the top of the Blue Division.

The six-game season culminates in February with a tournament involving the top two teams in their respective divisions.

Off-Campus, led by captain John Kirk, is on the road to defending its 1988 crown. The team has scored 23 goals while allowing only two in their two victories.

Grace and Dillon are two other undefeated teams in the Gold Division. Grace is hoping to rebound from last year's loss in the championship game, while Dillon is relying on a combination of veteran talent and youth. Dillon's team includes captain Marty Hull, veteran Chris Poppe, freshman center Mark Zoia and freshman goalie Chris Ohlmeyer. Dillon's stingy defense will be the key element in its title contention, having allowed only four goals in its two victories.

In Gold Division action last week, Off-Campus defeated Flanner 13-0, Morrissey topped Keenan 9-3, Grace skated past St. Edward's Holy Cross 7-4 and Dillon iced Morrissey 4-2. This action leaves Morrissey in contention with a 2-1 record, but Flanner, Keenan and St. Ed's Holy Cross need some wins soon.

Alumni leads the Blue Division with a 3-0 record. The main factor in Alumni's success this season is its potent offense. The front line of Steve Vairo, Mike Flynn and Pat Hogan leads a unit that averages almost eight goals a game. Despite the impressive record, Hogan is cautious. He said, "We have a young defense, and we are struggling a little," said the Alumni captain. "We need to play a little better to seriously contend."

with a grain of salt, or a grain of Caribbean sand if you will.

Yesterday's author was right-- I know few people who look like these models, and I don't think I'd hang out with somebody who enjoyed being photographed with sand all over her scantily-clad body.

Though a cliché, it is true that beauty is only skin deep.

But alone, these pictures are not dangerous. They do not make men ridicule women who eat ice cream. I wouldn't date a girl that wouldn't get an ice cream with me occasionally. Even if she were Kim Alexis.

And the pictures in the SI swimsuit issue seem a lot less dangerous and a little more visually appealing than the violent bloodbath pictures seen in professional wrestling magazines located just a fishnet's throw from the milk and eggs at the supermarket.

Robinson shines in Irish win

Center records 16 points, 11 rebounds in 85-75 triumph

By PETE SIKKO
Assistant Sports Editor

The Notre Dame men's basketball team ran and boarded its way to an 85-75 victory over Dayton last night at the JACC, and in the process gave center Keith Robinson a rare moment in the sun.

The 6-9, 225-pound center collected 16 points, 11 rebounds and some accolades from Irish head coach Digger Phelps after the game.

"Robinson is our Mr. Invincible," said Phelps, who watched his squad improve to 11-3 on the year. "He is the most underrated player in the country. He gets key offensive and defensive rebounds, and also scores the key baskets. If they were to rank the top five guys who make a team go, and never get recognition, Keith would be first-team All-American."

Phelps had good reason to pass around the praise after seeing the Irish bump their NCAA-leading rebounding margin (12 per game) even higher against the Flyers. Notre Dame had 46 rebounds, including 16 offensive boards, to Dayton's 28.

"The guards did a great job of getting the ball up the floor once we kicked it out to them," said Robinson, who has often labored in the shadows of LaPhonso Ellis and Joe Fredrick this season while posting consistent numbers himself.

Keith Robinson

"Tonight we were just able to get good position inside, get the boards and get our running game going."

That, according to Flyers head coach Don Donoher, was the difference.

"Between not being able to get enough rebounds and not being able to stop their running about before the game," said Ellis, who had seven rebounds, "was that we wanted to go out and control the tempo right away, before we had to come from behind or make things interesting. I think we did that."

Phelps also accomplished his goal of getting some of his younger players some experience while resting the starters, who will bear the brunt of the four-games-in-eight-days stretch the Irish are playing through.

"We had to go to our bench game, we just weren't able to make a run at it," said a subdued Donoher, who is in his 25th year with the Flyers. "It sure helps your running game when you're able to rebound like (Notre Dame) did. But our inside guys' rebounding was a joke."

Ellis led the Irish with 18 points, and he and Robinson made a formidable tandem against the outmanned Flyer frontcourt. Anthony Corbitt led Dayton with 15 points.

The Irish looked like they might run away with it early after an Ellis tip-in staked Notre Dame to a 13-4 lead. The Why all the fuss over swimsuit issue?

The following is a response to yesterday's page-two column on the evils of Sports Illustrated's Swimsuit issue and to all who hold views concurrent to those of the author.

Oh, lighten up!

As a sports writer, I felt it was my obligation to stick up for the most popular and successful sports magazine in America.

And an entire gender has been unjustifiably ravaged. Moreover, I am of that gender.

There probably are a few men on this campus drooling right now in anticipation of receiving the magazine.

Brian O'Gara

Irish Items

And there are just as many girls drooling over their posters of Patrick Swayze or some shirtless Joe Bob in tight jeans sitting on the hood of a red convertible.

Then these girls head off to sit on the pool tables at Bridget's. Probably somewhere near the aforementioned drooling guys.

You will find people like that everywhere, though I'd like to think they are in the minority.

Men here criticize women. Look at the Keenan Revue.

Women here criticize men. Look at Pop Farley's Talent Show.

But the majority of this ribbing (speaking of ribs, girls, remember where you came from) is innocent smart-aleck fun-poking. It is college humor and it is normal.

Girls will get grief about sweatpants for a long time, just as guys will get grief about baseball hats.

In general, we really do like most girls. We foolishly love some, stubbornly abhor others. I trust these feelings are mutual.

Let's get to sports, though.

Something was said about Sports Illustrated acting under the "auspices of a legitimate 'sports' magazine." It is a legitimate sports magazine—in fact, one of the best.

Sports Illustrated does several features on issues other than touchdowns and dunks. One of its best pieces last year was a feature on beer. A few weeks ago, SI did a feature on then-President-elect George Bush and his love of athletic activity.

The swimsuit issue is yet another extension of this venture by taking a look at innovative swimsuits on physically-fit women in exotic settings.

The emphasis on physical attractiveness should be taken

National Catholics champion Tomazic is making strides

By GREG SCHECKENBACH
Sports Writer

The Notre Dame wrestling team will try to continue its winning ways against Michigan State tonight at 8 p.m. in the Joyce ACC arena.

The Irish (6-1) are fresh off an impressive victory in the Catholic National Tournament last Sunday. Sportsvision will tape tonight's match and air it on Feb. 3.

Michigan State is the third team out of the Big 10 to challenge Notre Dame this season. Thus far, the Irish are 2-0 against the most powerful wrestling conference in the country.

"Michigan State is one of the more physical teams we will wrestle," said Irish coach Fran McCann. "Before the Iowa domination, Michigan State was the best in college wrestling."

Notre Dame beat the Spartans for the first time 23-20 last year in East Lansing. Michigan State returns seven of its 10 wrestlers from last year, including one of the country's best in 142-pound Stacy Richmond.

Notre Dame will counter with its usual lineup, which includes Andy Radenbaugh, Pat Boyd, Marcus Gowens, Todd Layton, Mark Gerardi, and Chuck Weaver. Notre Dame's all-time career victory leader, Jerry Durso, will try to add to his record. Another senior, Chris Geneser, will attempt to move up in the all time standings.

Radenbaugh leads the team with 28 wins in wins with 28, will try to continue his domination. Sophomore Todd Tomazic is also expecting big things in the rest of the season. The Placentia, Calif., native is coming off his first tournament win ever

ND's Peltier an All-American

By STEVE MEGARGEE
Assistant Sports Editor

Three weeks before the season's first pitch, members of the Notre Dame baseball team are catching national attention.

Senior Pat Pesavento and junior Dan Peltier both received mention on this year's Collegiate Baseball pre-season issue.

Peltier was one of six outfielders selected to the Copper-tonCollegiate Baseball pre-season All-America team.

As a right fielder last season, Peltier led the Midwest Collegiate Conference with a .414 batting average and also set Notre Dame single-season records with 21 doubles and 89 hits. After the season, Peltier was named a third-team Academic All-American.

The Clifton Park, N.Y., resident also recorded an on-base percentage of .581 with seven home runs and 70 runs batted in during his standout 61-game season.

Dan Peltier

"His biggest contribution is his attitude and the way he represents Notre Dame," said second-year Notre Dame coach Pat Murphy. "He also has outstanding ability, he's a fierce competitor and he comes to play each and every time."

As successful as Peltier was during his sophomore season, his accomplishments in last year's post-season MCC tournament and this fall's two-game series with Miami probably earned him a position on the team.

Peltier had 9 hits in 13 at bats during the MCC tourney, including a 4-of-4 performance against Evansville's Andy Benes, the first selection in last spring's major league draft.

In Notre Dame's two-game sweep of Miami last October, Peltier went 5-of-8 with a 2-of-3 outing off the Hurricanes' Alex Fernandez, another first-round pick in last spring's draft.

"Whenever you're competing with people of that caliber and come out as well as he did, you've got to be considered for some kind of honor," said
