Hawaii Club raffle to aid Iniki victims

By KENYA JOHNSON
News Writer

The Notre Dame Hawaii Club is raffling off two Penn State General Admission Tickets for the benefit of the people of Kauai, victims of Hurricane Iniki.

"The intensity is just the same as the Hurricane Andrew," said Diane Wong, co-president of the Hawaii Club. "There may not be as many people, but the damage in Kauai is just as bad and the people need a lot of help," she added.

Only four students at Notre Dame are from the island of Kauai: Ryan Delapena, Zoraida Radona, Clarissa Remigio, and Emmanuel Remigio. None of the students' families were injured but they did report some property damage.

Radona's family did not experience much damage, but, she said, "many friends and relatives are suffering."

"I think the only good thing out of the disasters is the togetherness I see from everyone. Kauai, and really the entire Hawaiian Island community, has come together to help one another," said Radona.

"As a freshman I'm really shocked to see how quickly Notre Dame students and alumni respond to the tragedy. I'm thankful and now very hopeful," she added. Delapena agreed.

"It's a great gesture by the Notre Dame community," he Group's job is to 'clarify the myths of feminism'

By CORA SANDBERG
News Writer

"People have a right to be scared of feminism because it questions the whole structure of Western authority," according to Ann Clark, chair of the philosophy department at Saint Mary's College.

This was the topic of last night's discussion, "What About the F Word?" sponsored by the Center for Women's Alliance.

Co-chair for the center, Sarah Miyata, said, "Our goal is not only to educate but enlighten people and clarify the myths about feminism today." In addition to Clark, the panel included Joe Incandela, professor of religious studies, Mary Caputi, professor of political science, and students Lisa Klauken and Renee Young.

Political and social changes are the major contributors to the changes in feminism as a social movement and as a study, said Caputi. Caputi discussed the way in which feminism has changed in the academic arena within the last twenty years. She expressed her concern about how feminism is perceived by students and faculty and said she hopes that women's studies courses will help students understand what exactly feminism is.

"A feminist is someone who promotes the equality of

Speaker: Peace message doesn't reach media

By THERESA ALEMAN
News Writer

People should mobilize and educate society on peace, according to Jackie Smith, a Notre Dame graduate student.

Smith, in her lecture Thursday, "Frame or Be Framed: The U.S. Peace Movement, the Media, and National Security Debates," discussed the reasons for grossly limited citizen input on foreign policy.

"The government, generally the President," Smith said, "is the main framer of foreign policy." Smith defined "framing" as "defining a problem, finding the cause of that problem, and suggesting solutions to it."

The main reason for limited public influence on foreign policy, Smith said, is societal concern with domestic affairs and general apathy toward foreign policy. Smith blamed this lack of interest on the national media's unilateral coverage of foreign affairs.

Smith said the national media has a profound effect on general debate, or lack of debate, over foreign policy. She blamed the media's apparent bias against peace movements on the fact that the media really never address the agenda of peace movements.

"The media draws on a select, reliable list of sources, and peace movement sources are generally regarded as biased, whereas the word of government officials regarding foreign policy is viewed as reliable," Smith said.

Peace movements gain inroads to media coverage, Smith said, by staging demonstrations to force the media into covering opposing viewpoints. These demonstrations, Smith acknowledged, usually appear as small groups of radicals with poorly defined agendas and proposals.

The media's effect on the efforts of peace movements, according to Smith, is generally negative not because the media disagree with the movement's stance, but rather because of "ineffective framing by members of peace movements."

Like it or not, American taxpayers are shelling out over $100 million to the Democrats and to the Republicans to conduct a presidential campaign.

So, how do you like the results so far?
If you didn't understand each and every one of these "sound bytes," don't worry about it.

The point of this list of "sound bytes" is to show how much of the campaign has been based on things that are fuzzy, trivial, irrelevant and, in some cases, downright silly.

Remember, this process decides who is going to occupy the White House for the next four years. We, as American citizens, should be demanding that the campaign be about things that are going to affect us and our children, not things that make for snappy headlines and high ratings.

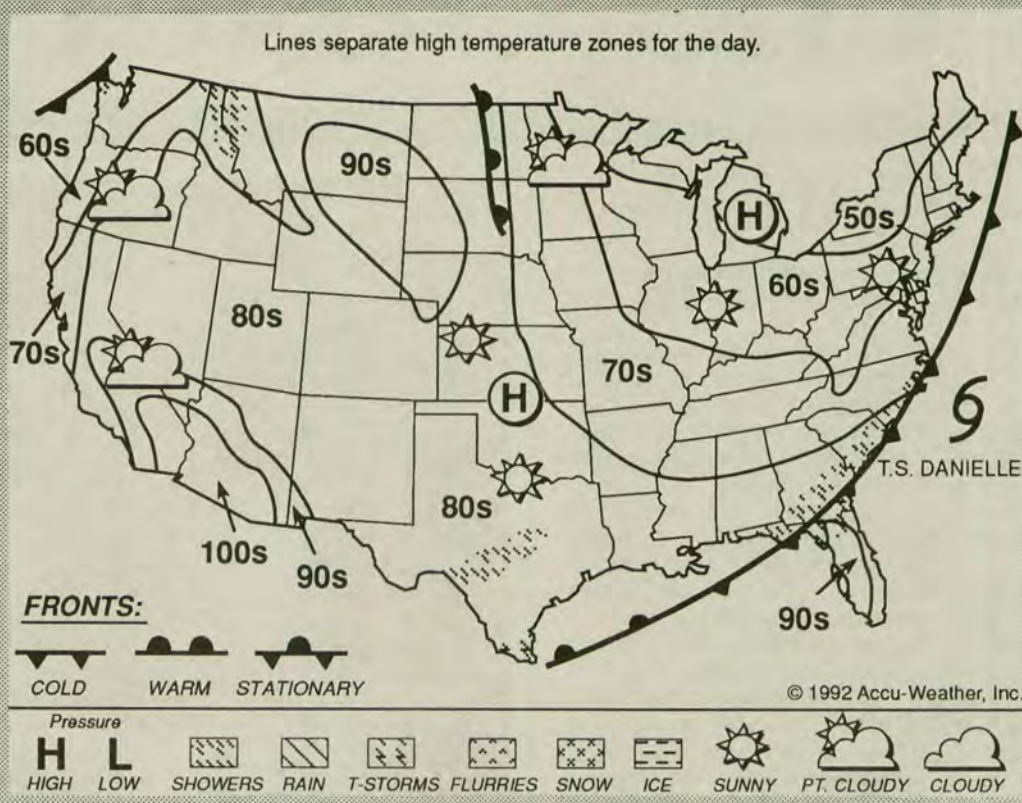

Is this any way to select a leader?

Marcos estate held liable for atrocities

■ HONOLULU (AP) — A federal court jury Thursday found the estate of the late Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos and his wife Imelda liable for torture and other atrocities committed against political opponents during his rule. A separate trial will be held on how much the estate must pay the plaintiffs. The lawsuit seeks damages of $2 million for each torture victim and $3 million for each of those killed or missing. The trial was on a lawsuit filed on behalf of as many as 10,000 Filipinos dissidents who said they were subjected to a campaign of torture, murder, rape and imprisonment during the period from 1972 until Marcos' overthrow in 1986. Marcos died here in exile in 1989.

Ford recalls 337,000 automobiles

■ DEARBORN, Mich. (AP) — Ford Motor Co. on Thursday recalled about 337,200 1984-85 model year Mustangs and Capris for possible seat belt problems. A small plastic part in front seat belts may melt from exposure to direct sunlight, allowing the belt's hook to separate from the strap. The plastic piece connects the hook to the strap, the company said. Owners were being notified of the recall by mail and told to bring their vehicles to dealers for free repairs. About 30,300 of the vehicles are in Canada. Ford knows of no injuries resulting from the problem, said spokesman John Ochs.

Fire at Universal's 'Backdraft' exhibit

■ UNIVERSAL CITY, Calif. (AP) — A welder's torch ignited a fire Thursday at Universal Studios' "Backdraft" attraction based on Ron Howard's 1991 film about firefighters, officials said. No one was injured and the fire was put out in 10 minutes by a Los Angeles County fire unit stationed at the studio, said Capt. Steve Valenzuela. An audience was in the attraction at the time and was evacuated as a precaution, said Joan Bullard, a Universal spokeswoman. The attraction was shut down, but Bullard said she believed the exhibit was still operable.

Nearly 50 missing in aftermath of French flooding

VAISON-LA-ROMAINE, France (AP) — Families claimed bodies that were laid out in rows of white coffins Thursday as firemen dug through the mud looking for more victims of the flash floods that killed at least 34 people.

Nearly 50 people were missing and officials said there was little hope any of them survived the storm, which may turn out to be France's deadliest. An October 1958 storm in the neighboring Gard region killed 36.

At least 23 people died in this ancient Roman town when the rain-swollen Ouveze River rose 50 feet Tuesday. The other deaths were elsewhere in the Vaucluse region of southeast France, a popular vacation area, and in the neighboring regions of Ardeche and Drome.

In parts of Vaison-la-Romaine, about 25 miles north of Avignon, stores reopened, cafes were crowded and children once again made their way to school.

But elsewhere, people picked through foundations of houses swept away by the surging river, helicopters circled overhead looking for the missing and workers dug cars out of the mud.

The Moulin de César campsite, shown on television broadcasts, looked like a child's playroom with campers and trailers tossed into treetops and overturned on top of campsite buildings.

"We found a body inside a car that was washed away," said fireman Claude Benetti. "It was engulfed in mud that broke right through the windshield. There weren't any injuries, the victim could only have suffocated."

As the toll mounted, ecologists and others threatened officials with lawsuits for allowing rapid construction of homes and camping sites in flood zones. Others said deforestation contributed to the flooding.

European currency markets have calmed; no immediate attacks on the French franc

LONDON (AP) — Europe's chaotic currency markets were relatively quiet yesterday morning, with no immediate attacks on the French franc after the central banks of France and Germany joined forces to prop up the currency.

On Wednesday, currency traders had tried to push the franc lower against the German mark but failed as the Bank of France and Germany's Bundesbank bought large quantities of francs.

Traders said yesterday that they believed the Bank of France was close to running out of money to support the franc. But they were cautious about staging a massive sell-off, fearing that the Bundesbank would put up a strong defense.

"It's not over yet by any means," said George Magnus, chief international economist at S.G. Warburg, a big London investment bank. "It still remains very nervous, as you would expect."

The wildly swinging currency markets have stirred fears of worsening economic troubles and seriously damaged moves toward closer economic and political ties among European Community members.

Stability in currency values, a single currency by 1999, is a goal of European unity proponents. It is important because it fosters consumer confidence and allows businesses to plan for production.

Last week, some traders made millions pushing the British pound and the Italian lira through the floors of the European exchange rate mechanism, which sets maximum fluctuations of member currencies in an attempt to maintain stability. The pound and the lira were removed from the mechanism and their value plunged sharply.

That allowed speculators who had sold the pound and the lira to rake in handsome profits as they bought the currencies later at much cheaper prices.

Traders' attempts to repeat that success by pushing other European currencies lower have not immediately proven successful.

Major demands limits on interference by EC

LONDON (AP) — Prime Minister John Major, seeking to mollify opponents of the European union treaty, called Thursday for a declaration limiting the power of the European Community to interfere in the affairs of its 12 member states.

"We need a definition, a settled order of what is for national action and what is for community action," said Major, who currently holds the community's rotating presidency, at the start of a two-day emergency session of Parliament. Major late Thursday won a 322-296 vote of confidence in his Conservative government's economic policies, which have come under fire since he removed the plunging pound from the European system of exchange rates on Sept. 16.

During a debate in Britain's 651-member House of Commons, Labor leader John Smith called Major "the devalued prime minister of a devalued government."

In Bonn, meanwhile, the German government vigorously denied a report that it and France were seeking to establish a "little Europe" that would exclude Britain and other countries.

Die Welt newspaper reported

Thursday that Chancellor Helmut Kohl and French President François Mitterrand, at a meeting in Paris on Wednesday, agreed to create a core economic union of Germany, France, Belgium, the Netherlands and Luxembourg by 1997.

The European union treaty, signed last December at Maastricht, Netherlands calls for a single currency and central bank, as well as common foreign and defense policies by 1999.

Economic and currency union could be implemented by 1997 if at least seven of the 12 signatories have met economic criteria spelled out in the treaty.

German officials called the report "fictitious," saying Kohl was committed to a European union of all 12 members. But a government statement did not deny Kohl and Mitterrand had discussed such a core union. It said only that the two leaders had not "agreed" on such a plan.

Observers in Germany viewed the discussion of a "mini-Europe" as an attempt to put pressure on Britain to ratify the Maastricht accord.

Getting a Kick Out of Life

Hentrich and his knee are better than ever

By RICH KURZ
Associate Sports Editor

Craig Hentrich has always been a competitor, whether on the football field, baseball diamond or classroom. But when he blew out the knee on his kicking leg last season, no one knew what to expect.

After all, this was a player who was named an honorable mention All-American after his sophomore season, in which he broke his own Notre Dame record for season punting average.

Even more distressing, no one, even the team doctors, had ever seen a torn anterior cruciate ligament (ACL), the ligament which holds the front of the knee together, in a kicker's or punter's kicking leg.

"That was the biggest crush I've ever had, athletically," said Hentrich. "It taught me that everything can end so suddenly."

The injury originally occurred in the Tennessee game. After that point, Irish fans learned the value of solid special-teams play. Most will remember only the blocked kick at the end of the game, but Hentrich's loss was more pronounced on the punting end.

Jim Sexton only managed an average of 31 yards on four punts in the second half, far short of Hentrich's 44.2-yard career average. This gave the already struggling Irish defense 13 yards less to work with, and made it that much easier for the Vols to score.

Nevertheless, the season wasn't over for Hentrich. He had several weeks before the Sugar Bowl, and made the most of them.

"I rehabbed before the Sugar Bowl," said Hentrich. "Everything was still wrong (structurally) with the knee, though with rehab and a knee brace, they thought I could still perform."

In New Orleans, he kicked an extra-point after the first Irish touchdown of the game, and then the ensuing kick-off. But it was that play that caused the serious damage. After the kick-off, Hentrich was running down the field when the knee blew out on him.

"We couldn't find anyone at all with a similar injury," said Dr. Willard Yergler, the team physician. "It needed to be fixed, but we didn't know what to expect after it was repaired."

What laid ahead was a route that no other kicker had been down before.

"The doctors were pretty optimistic and that made me feel better," he said. "I felt confident (that I'd get to kick again)."

After the surgery came a great deal of work before he could do so.

"We brought him along slowly," said Yergler. "We gave him plenty of time to heal. Every time you kick, you hyperextend your knee, and you take the chance of stretching it."

As a result, Hentrich wasn't able to start kicking for six months after his surgery, but that time wasn't spent idly.

"It was pure rehab, doing weights and calisthenics to strengthen it," he said. "I learned a lot, I'm stronger (physically and mentally) than ever before."

Irish foes should take heed of his greater strength. If he keeps up his average, he'll finish with the longest punting average in Notre Dame history.

"Craig is a great punter. He's done an excellent job," said assistant head coach Ron Cooper, who is in charge of handling the punt team. "He makes my job fairly easy. He's very consistent and fields bad snaps."

"He knows what's going on with the coverage and where the pressure's coming from."

But opponents have more to watch out

The Observer/John Rock

for than just his kicks. A quarterback in high school, Hentrich can beat opponents on fakes as well, as he threw for a first down to Greg Davis in last year's Indiana game.

On the other side of the ball in high school in Godfrey, Ill., Hentrich picked off 12 passes as a safety during his sophomore and junior seasons. His talents spilled over to the baseball field, where he set a school record with 66 hits in a season while hitting .503 and helping his team to a second-place finish in Class A.

"I wanted to play (baseball at Notre Dame) real bad. I'd love to give it a try," said Hentrich, but responsibilities to the football team made that an impossibility.

With that kind of all-around athletic talent, it should come as no surprise that Hentrich handles both punting and kicking duties for the Irish. In each of his first three seasons, Hentrich would have finished among the nation's leaders for punting average, except he did not have the necessary attempts to qualify.

If Hentrich gets a chance to kick 18 more extra-points this season, he will be able to break Carlos Huerta's NCAA record for consecutive extra points made of 157. His 31 field goals tie him for third on the all-time Irish list, and he needs just eight points to break Dave Reeve's Notre Dame record for most points by a kicker (247).

Given the Chicago Bears' recent decision to keep Chris Gardocki because he can both kick and punt, Hentrich's ability to do both well makes him even more valuable.

"A big reason I was recruited was to kick and punt. When you're a kicker and a punter, when you can do both, it opens up a spot for somebody else," said Hentrich. "At Notre Dame, it's another person on the travelling team who could be important in the game."

It could also be important for his future employment possibilities. With a degree in management information services, a job as a computer analyst lies ahead, but maybe not immediately.

"Professional football is the goal of any college football player," said Hentrich, "but I'm not going to let that affect how I play this season."

"I want to improve off last season, average 45 yards a punt, stress hang-time and become more consistent."

The Notre Dame football team realized last season just how valuable Hentrich was to the team. Many games are won or lost on special teams, and with Hentrich in the line-up, the Irish have one thing less to worry about.

Boilers need some straw inspiration

By MIKE SCRUDATO

The question surrounding tomorrow's game is which Purdue team will show up, the one which crushed then 17th-ranked California, 41-14, two weeks ago or the squad which lost to Toledo last Saturday.

Notre Dame coach Lou Holtz has no doubts about who the Irish will meet.

"You can count on this—the Purdue team we see on Saturday will be the one that knocked off California, not the one that lost to Toledo," the seventh-year coach stated.

The key to Purdue's success will be its defense, which virtually shut down Heisman Trophy candidate Russell White, holding him to 79 yards rushing, in the win over Cal.

Last week, however, without

"Stopping the run is first and foremost."

- Lou Holtz

the inspiration of straw-chewing opponents, the Boilermaker defense surrendered 420 yards of total offense, 305 of which came in the air.

To be successful against Purdue, the Irish will have to once again have to air it out behind Rick Mirer and his talented receiving corps. Mirer threw for 260 yards and three touchdowns last week against Michigan State.

Tomorrow he will attempt to break Joe Theismann's Notre Dame record for most career touchdown passes, a mark Mirer tied last week.

Purdue will depend on Outland and Lombardi Trophy candidate Jeff Zgonina to put pressure on Mirer and keep the Irish passing game in check.

"You know he (Zgonina) is going to put pressure on the passer," Holtz commented. "He provides an anchor for their defense."

Zgonina will team with Eric Gray and James Cole, two sophomores, on the defensive line, while inside linebacker Eric Beatty leads an experienced group of linebackers, which contains three seniors.

Beatty was Sports Illustrated's Defensive Player of the Week following a 20-tackle performance versus Cal.

The fourth linebacker is red-shirt freshman Jim Maciag, who graduated from the same high school as Zgonina.

The Purdue front season will face a Notre Dame offensive line which will be at full strength for the first time this season, as right guard Todd Norman returns from a preseason knee injury.

The strength of the Purdue secondary is junior Jimmy Young, who was an All-Big Ten selection last season. But aside from Young, the Boilermakers' secondary is the weakness of its defense.

Their task will not be made easier by Notre Dame's receivers. Senior Ray Griggs returned from an ankle injury last week to bolster an already impressive bunch. Griggs, who caught three passes and scored a touchdown at Michigan State, will start at flanker and Lake Dawson will remain the Irish's starting split end.

The Notre Dame backfield of Reggie Brooks and Jerome Bettis will need another big day to outplay its Purdue counterpart. Tailback Jeff Hill is one of the best in the Big Ten.

"Jeff Hill is a very durable back, who has got good strength and quickness," Holtz explained. "He protects the ball very well and their offense is set up to take advantage of his talent."

Hill enters the game averaging 5.9 yards per carry and was the Big Ten Player of the Week after rushing for 106 yards on 21 carries against the Golden Bears two weeks ago.

Hill will be running behind fullback Houston Malden and a massive line which averages 280 pounds per starter and has not allowed a sack this season.

"Stopping the run is first and foremost," Holtz said.

Though Hill is a known-entity, the Purdue quarterback is not. Projected starter Eric Hunter was injured in preseason drills, and Matt Pike has filled in admirably, completing 50 percent of his passes for 337 yards in his two games as a starter.

However, Hunter may or may not return this week. This uncertainty has caused a lot of problems in Notre Dame's game preparations.

"It's like preparing for ghosts," Holtz commented. "Both present problems."

But Holtz was especially praise-worthy of Hunter.

"He reminds me of Roger Staubach when he was at the Naval Academy. The worst thing you can have happen is to get him in trouble. He can take a bad play and make it a good one."

"He scrambles, he is quick and he has a strong arm," the seventh-year coach noted.

Whether Hunter or Pike is calling the snaps, his main target will be Ernest Calloway. The senior has led Purdue in receptions the past two years and tops the Boilers in the category once again this season.

The Boilermaker offense should be able to put some points on the board against the Irish defense. Unfortunately for Purdue fans, Notre Dame will not emerge from the tunnel in straw hats, and the Air Holtz offense which was displayed in the 52-point explosion against Michigan State should be able to easily outscore the Boilers.

Skip Holtz did not plan to follow Lou

By JIM VOGL
Assistant Sports Editor

Skip Holtz

Skip Holtz may be following in his father's footsteps, but that has not always been his intention.

Now Notre Dame's offensive coordinator/receivers coach, the younger Holtz started out on another path. He enrolled at Holy Cross Junior College, and in 1984, a year before his father was hired to coach the Irish, he transferred into Notre Dame with visions of pursuing a business career.

"I wanted to be the filthy rich, Donald Trump-type," said Holtz.

But by senior year, he "saw the light at the end of the tunnel." He forecasted that an eight-to-five desk job just wouldn't bring happiness. Only coaching football could.

"I've been around the game my whole life. It held my interests. It's something I enjoy doing more than simply making money."

So far, he has succeeded in his journey, working his way back to Notre Dame in 1990 as a volunteer receivers coach, before becoming full-time last year, and then adding the responsibilities of offensive coordinator this season.

But the younger Holtz never rode his father's shirt-tails along the way.

"I don't look at it from the standpoint that he's my dad. I'm just learning a lot about football and I'm learning it from the best," he said.

He worked hard to earn himself a spot on the football team as a reserve flanker in 1986 and made 51 appearances on special teams, earning a monogram. Holtz holds this as a key experience in his learning process.

"With memories of being a player still fresh in my head, I know what it's like to sit in meetings and try to understand the X's and O's. I also know that at a school like Notre Dame, you're required to be class."

That same year, he sent out applications for the profession's entry level position.

"The most important thing for me was to go somewhere else and make it on my own," stated Holtz, whose thorough knowledge of the game and whose work ethic truly impressed Florida State coach Bobby Bowden. After graduation, Holtz headed South and worked as a graduate assistant on two of the finest Seminole football teams in history, as they finished 11-1 both years.

Holtz explained the not-so-glorious work of an "intern coach."

"It involves all the behind the scenes work coaches don't want to do." Under FSU receivers coach John Eason, he cut up films, broke down the opponent's secondary, organized work for the offense and reviewing game tapes.

Holtz's responsibilities have grown considerably since then. He supervises the running and passing games, sets practice schedules and organizes practice tempo, and works integrally in developing a game plan.

While Lou Holtz calls all the offensive plays on the field, his "eyes in the sky", including Skip Holtz, assistant head coach Ron Cooper, quarterbacks coach Tom Clements and running backs coach Earle Mosley study formations, coverages and trends during the game and offer information and advice from the skybox, so Lou can "plug the pieces into the puzzle."

Like any businessman who aspires to own his own company, Skip Holtz would like to further expand his horizons and become a head coach some day. But for now, he is content where he is.

Purdue's upset over Cal evokes memories of past

By ROLANDO DE AGUIAR
Associate Sports Editor

In recent years, Purdue has proved itself to be one of the sweetest cream puffs on the Irish schedule, a tasty little treat early in a season full of top 20 teams.

But this year, Purdue is one of the top squads on the Irish schedule. The Boilermakers (1-1) trounced 17th-ranked California, 41-14 in their season opener. The next week, Jeff Sagarin's computer rankings placed Purdue atop all other college football teams.

Though the Boilers dropped a 33-29 decision to the Toledo Rockets last Saturday, this week's matchup heads back to the days when the Purdue-Notre Dame game deserved a nationwide television audience.

In 1966, the Boilermakers, ranked eighth and coming off of a 42-3 thrashing of Ohio University in the season opener, came into Notre Dame Stadium to face the sixth-ranked Irish. Purdue, who had beaten Notre Dame 25-21 the previous season, was led by quarterback and captain Bob Griese.

But Griese would not be able to lead the Boilermakers to another defeat of the Irish. Notre Dame, its defense led by captain Jim Lynch and future NFL Hall-of-Famer Alan Page, held the potent Purdue offense to its lowest output of the season in downing the Boilers 26-14.

The Irish went on to win the 1966 national championship with a 9-0-1 record, while Purdue finished the season 9-2.

Two years later, Notre Dame and Purdue met in a classic matchup as the first-ranked Boilermakers traveled to South Bend to face the second-ranked Irish.

But Purdue, employing the high-powered offensive scheme they had been unable to execute two years before, trounced the Irish 37-22.

But the Boilermakers suffered two losses later in the 1968 season en route to a third-place Big Ten finish.

Taylor is larger than life

By JENNY MARTEN
Associate Sports Editor

Big would be an understatement. Standing at 6'4" and weighing in around 300 pounds, Notre Dame junior Aaron Taylor is one of the more massive members of the Irish offensive line.

But, how does someone get to be that size? Left tackle Lindsay Knapp has an explanation. "He likes to eat a lot. Once at the Great Wall buffet, he just pulled his chair up to the buffet and started eating," said Taylor's offensive line mate.

"I realize that I have the potential to be great, but my goal is to be the best."

- Aaron Taylor

Taylor doesn't know how he got to be the size he is, but he attributes some of it to natural size and lifting weights. Credit could also be given to Taylor's mom, Mardi and her cooking.

"She loves to cook and I love to eat," admitted Taylor, who is from Concord, California. "I hate it when I go home because I always gain weight. I gained eight pounds when I went home before the Sugar Bowl last year.

"No where in my family is anyone as remotely big as I am. It's like I'm a mutant. I was always the biggest kid in the class."

His size is an asset now as he enters his second year as a starter on the Irish offensive line. The left guard is expected to continue to improve and to become one of the best linemen to play for Notre Dame. Taylor's name has even been mentioned as a preseason All-American candidate.

"He has ability, desire and football sense. He has the talent to be an exceptional lineman for us," said Irish offensive line coach Joe Moore. "We expect him to be a great player, not just a good player."

Taylor wants to surpass these expectations, but knows that what remains for him to work on is mostly mental work. His goal is to maintain his focus every day and keep his confidence up.

"I realize that I have the potential to be great, but my goal is to be the best. Right now, I don't feel I'm where I'm capable of being or where I'll be when I get out of here.

"I have never played with perfect technique and been outmanned. I've only beaten myself," said Taylor.

Emotional and aggressive on the field, Taylor likes to get downfield to block for the backs and make some hits. In the team sport, he relishes the individual competition that results when a defensive lineman sets up opposite him.

"A lot of ego is involved in lining up one and one on someone with him trying to do his best against you. It's a realization of aggressiveness in a positive way," said Taylor.

Another advantage in a one-on-one situation is knowing what the guy next to you is going to do and this comes from playing together. The projected 1992 five starting offensive linemen have yet to be on the field at the same time either at practice or in a game. Even Taylor has missed time on the line already this year sitting out the two-a-day fall practices because of nagging tendinitis in his shoulder.

Notre Dame head coach Lou Holtz would like to see his offensive line in full for many reasons, and he will get the chance tomorrow when right guard Todd Norman returns from a preseason knee injury.

"I think the offensive line is one area where they have to learn to play next to the guy next to him. The guy on you isn't always the guy whose there when the play is over, said Holtz.

"There is a communication you have to have with people and it comes from doing it over and over and having a feel for it. Aaron Taylor and Lindsey Knapp have a feel for it."

Taylor and Knapp have been playing together on the line for two and a half years and have become familiar with each other's moves.

"When you've been with someone that long, you really know what he's going to do and what he can do," added Knapp.

Playing together for so long should improve the play of not only Taylor and Knapp, but the entire offensive line.

Senate overrides veto of the family-leave bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate voted Thursday to override President Bush's veto of the family leave bill, shining a campaign-season spotlight on an issue Democrats think will wound him come Election Day.

Supporters of the legislation conceded that even with the Senate's 68-31 vote, a House override effort will probably fail. Nonetheless, Democrats relished the high-profile chance to contrast Bush's opposition to the bill with his rhetoric championing "family values."

"Those Republicans who voted with us today chose families," said Senator Al Gore, D-Tenn., Democratic Presidential candidate Bill Clinton's running mate. "Those who voted with the Bush-Quayle position chose to say, 'Read our lip-service to family values.'"

The measure would require more businesses with 50 or more employees to grant workers up to 12 weeks of unpaid leave each year to care for newborn babies or sick family members.

Meanwhile, the Senate marked time on a wide-ranging tax bill and a host of House-Senate conference committees labored to reach agreements on the various spending bills for the new budget year starting Oct. 1.

The veto fight is one of several over social and consumer issues that Congress is picking with Bush in the waning weeks of the campaign. Others will be waged over abortion rights and cable television rates.

Majority Leader Richard Gephardt, D-Mo., said the House will vote next Wednesday on the override attempt. But supporters and opponents alike said they expect the House to uphold Bush's veto. The House approved the bill by 253-177 last November — well short of the 289 votes, a two-thirds margin, that would be needed if all 433 members vote.

"It is difficult," said House Speaker Thomas Foley, D-Wash.

Three Navy admirals lose jobs for poor scandal investigation

WASHINGTON (AP) — Acting Navy Secretary Sean O'Keefe stripped three admirals their jobs on Thursday for failing to investigate aggressively the Tailhook sex abuse scandal and said that those who harass women "will be driven from our ranks."

In a sometimes emotional appearance before reporters, O'Keefe vowed to "get to the bottom" of the affair, which has haunted the Navy for more than a year.

"Sexual harassment will not be tolerated," he said. "And those who don't get the message will be driven from our ranks."

O'Keefe defended his top aide, Undersecretary Dan Howard, against criticism contained in a report issued Thursday by the Pentagon's Inspector General.

Two of the admirals said the report was wrong.

The report faulted the three admirals and Howard — and said their removal from office should be considered — for failing to investigate aggressively the alleged abuse of more than two dozen women at a Las Vegas aviators' convention in 1991.

O'Keefe said Howard had been given an "impossible task" and had, in effect, become a "referee" in a botched investigation. Howard performed as well as possible and the failure was not his, but that of the officials and officers reporting to him, O'Keefe argued.

A second — and potentially even more explosive — report by the Inspector General dealing with possible criminal charges stemming from the incident is due out in December.

The report said "lurid" sexual behavior had taken place at the annual convention at least as far back as 1985 and naval leadership had done nothing to stop it.

At his news conference, the secretary announced:

- Rear Adm. Duvall M. Williams, the one-star commander of the Naval Investigative Service, which handles criminal inquiries, will be replaced with a senior civilian.

- Rear Adm. John Gordon, the Navy's two-star judge advocate general and its chief legal officer, will be replaced.

- Rear Adm. George Washington Davis, the Navy's Inspector General, will be reassigned after the Senate confirms his replacement.

The Inspector General's report asked O'Keefe to consider "appropriate disciplinary action" for Gordon and Williams. The secretary said he'd not yet made any such decisions.

A Navy source, who spoke on the condition of anonymity, said the two had been put on "terminal leave." That means they may be permitted to retire in their current grade. Because all retirements of flag officers must be confirmed by the Senate, however, the lawmakers could have a say in the final disposition of the two admirals.

Williams, in a statement issued through his office, lambasted the report.

"I decided to retire because I believe it to be fundamentally unfair that I could be tried, convicted and sentenced by the DOD IG without due process in a report containing so many inaccuracies and distortions," Williams said, adding the "process in which we are now involved does a terrible disservice to the U.S. Navy."

Gordon, in a separate statement, also faulted the Inspector General's report, calling it "flawed and factually inaccurate." Gordon said he will "do everything I can to set the record straight," but didn't say how.

Davis did not immediately respond to a request for comment.

NEH report: campuses threatened by politics

WASHINGTON (AP) — The head of the National Endowment for the Humanities on Thursday criticized college professors who try to stop students from expressing unpopular or biased opinions.

In a report to Congress, NEH Chairman Lynne Cheney warned of the dangers of substituting political advocacy for the traditional idea that teaching and learning are about "seeking evidence, evaluating it critically, (and) weighing conflicting opinions — about trying to tell what is true."

Cheney, who discussed the report at the National Press Club, acknowledged that college campuses are not saturated with professors who become political activists pressing their views on students.

But she stressed "colleges and universities in every part of the country have been affected."

As an example, the report cited two professors who argue that since all historical writing is propaganda anyway, it should be judged not by its faithfulness to the past but by "its political utility." It also quoted Mari Matsuda of the University of Hawaii, who argued that freedom of speech deserves only selective protection, defended mainly for women and minorities.

"In some quarters, there is no longer any question of whether to use the classroom for political purpose; the only question is how most effectively to do so," said Cheney.

Sixth round talks end in Middle East

WASHINGTON (AP) — Israelis and Arabs concluded a sixth round of peace talks Thursday, having finally "dived into deep water" of negotiations. The rhetoric was hopeful, but neither side appeared ready for significant concessions.

Negotiators agreed to convene a seventh round on Oct. 21 in Washington, to last as long as this one — one month, with a week off for consultations at the beginning of November.

"We believe the parties have achieved a good foundation for future progress," said Assistant Secretary of State Edward Djerejian.

"There was a different and more cordial tone between the parties," he told reporters, summing up the sixth round. "The parties are definitely grappling with the tough key issues of territory, peace and security."

On the plus side, Israel and Syria worked together on a joint statement defining the principles of their talks; Israel and the Palestinians began work on an agreement granting self-government to the 1.7 million Palestinians under Israeli occupation.

On the minus side, Israel and Syria failed to reach agreement on the document, saying major differences persisted. And the Palestinians left here bitter about Israel's refusal to stop Jewish settlements and alleged human rights abuses in the territories it occupies.

"This period has been very useful as an exploratory period," said Palestinian spokeswoman Hanan Ashrawi. But, "the areas of agreement remain very minimal."

Still, Israeli spokesman Yossi Gal said, "It's our belief that peace in the Middle East is becoming less a matter of contention and more a matter of time."

Negotiations with Syria, at least, appeared stuck on the same dispute that has bedeviled them from the start. Israel wants to know what kind of peace Syria will offer in return for an Israeli withdrawal from the Golan Heights.

House votes to limit nuclear weapons tests

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House voted overwhelmingly Thursday to reverse President Bush's policy on nuclear weapons testing, imposing strict conditions on the underground blasts and ending them entirely in 1996.

On a vote of 224-151, lawmakers adopted a Senate provision that had been the subject of earlier administration veto threats.

But a senior Republican source said the White House had abruptly decided Thursday to reverse course and accept the restrictions — in part because Democrats had attached them to a bill that also contains money for a massive science project in Texas, a state essential to Bush's re-election.

Peruvian rebel chieftain promises continued war

LIMA, Peru (AP) — Speaking from a cage in prison pinstripes, the captured chief of the Shining Path rebel movement on Thursday called his arrest a “bend in a long highway” that would not stop leftist revolution in Peru.

The speech before about 300 journalists at a downtown police building was the first time the legendary Abimael Guzman, 57, had been seen in public since he went underground in the 1970s. Guzman was captured Sept. 13 at a Lima safe-house.

The bearded, bespectacled Guzman was dressed in a black-and-white striped prison uniform that authorities apparently hoped would make him appear as a common criminal.

He spoke for seven minutes from a specially built 25-by-10 foot cage, surrounded by dozens of policemen with automatic rifles. Sentinels were posted on surrounding rooftops.

Pacing the cage and repeatedly thrusting his right fist into the air, Guzman called his capture “a bend in a long highway.”

“There are those who see this as a great defeat,” Guzman said. “They are dreaming. Let them dream.”

Guzman said Maoism, the variant of Communism that he espouses, was gaining ground and eventually would emerge victorious in the impoverished nations of the Third World.

Shelling stalls power restoration in Sarajevo

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Shelling frustrated U.N. soldiers’ attempts Thursday to restore electrical power that was knocked out three days earlier to 80 percent of the Bosnian capital.

In neighboring Croatia, the United Nations’ chief civilian officer warned Croatian officials not to begin returning refugees to the easternmost of four U.N. protection zones, saying that Serb militias were still menacing civilians.

Cyrus Vance and Lord Owen, the envoys leading the ongoing Yugoslav peace conference in Geneva, said they would fly to Banja Luka on Friday to investigate similar reports of intimidation around the Serb stronghold in northern Bosnia.

Serb fighters who want to remain tied to Serbia and Montenegro, the remaining republics in Yugoslavia, have captured two-thirds of Bosnia. At least 10,000 people have been killed since Bosnia’s Muslim and Croats voted Feb. 29 for independence from Yugoslavia.

Shelling began Wednesday morning as a team of engineers left U.N. Protection Force headquarters in an armored car for the damaged electricity station north of the city at Ugorsko. They made no progress on repairs.

Sarajevo has suffered from irregular electricity and water supplies for much of its nearly six-month-long siege by Serb forces. Only about 20 percent of the city of 400,000 residents has had power since shells slammed into the Ugorsko power substation Monday night.

Former East German spy chief indicted on charges of treason, bribery and espionage

BERLIN (AP) — Markus Wolf, a leading figure in Cold War intrigue who directed 4,000 Communist agents as East German spy chief, has been indicted on treason, bribery and espionage charges, Germany’s chief prosecutor announced yesterday.

The exploits of Wolf, 69, are the stuff of legend and include the supervision of one operative whose unmasking led to the fall nearly two decades ago of former Chancellor Willy Brandt.

During the height of the Cold War, Wolf had about 2,000 agents in West Germany. Most of the rest were scattered in other NATO countries.

He joins a growing list of former East German officials being brought to trial in the aftermath of the 1990 German unification.

The prosecutions are being questioned in some quarters, however, by people who argue that East Germany was essentially treated as a sovereign state by West Germany although not formally recognized.

Ousted East German Communist boss Erich Honecker is expected to go on trial in November on manslaughter charges stemming from the deaths of people who tried to escape to the West.

In announcing the indictment of Wolf from his office in Karlsruhe, chief federal prosecutor Alexander von Stahl said investigators are still gathering evidence against the former spy chief.

Von Stahl said one spy in the employ of Wolf was Guenter Guillaume, whose discovery brought down the Brandt government in 1974. Guillaume had been one of Brandt’s advisers.

Von Stahl listed 11 other well-known cases he said Wolf was involved in. The operatives listed read like a “Who’s Who” of prominent East German spies caught in the West.

One of them is Klaus Kuron, who acted as an East German spy while working in West Germany’s chief counterintelligence agency.

Wolf was arrested on his return to Germany just one year ago, on Sept. 24, 1991, after fleeing to Moscow to avoid prosecution. He was freed 10 days later and is believed to be living in former East Berlin.

Hans-Juergen Foerster, spokesman for the chief federal prosecutor’s office, said Wolf faces a maximum penalty of 15 years in prison if convicted.

First-time claims by jobless for benefits rose in Sept.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The number of Americans filing first-time claims for jobless benefits rose to 414,000 in mid-September, the highest level in five weeks, the government reported yesterday.

The Labor Department said the 15,000 increase during the week ended Sept. 12 was due in part to more new claims by the victims of Hurricane Andrew in South Florida and Louisiana.

It was the first time in five weeks that claims totaled more than 400,000. Although claims for the week ended Sept. 5 initially were reported to have totaled 400,000, they were revised down to 399,000 in the latest report.

Claims had plunged by a record 91,000, to 383,000, during the week ended Aug. 15, falling below 400,000 for the first time since they totaled 382,000 during the week of Oct. 6, 1990.

But they started back up the following week, rising to 386,000, and to 394,000 during the week ended Aug. 29 before hitting 399,000 during the week ended Sept. 5.

Because of the volatility of the weekly reports, many analysts prefer to track a four-week moving average of claims which smooths out the erratic changes and is considered a more reliable indicator of the labor market.

The average was 398,250 during the period ended Sept. 12, up from 390,500 a week earlier when it dipped to the lowest since 387,250 during the period ended Oct. 6, 1990. The average was 409,250 during the period ended Aug. 29.

The department cautioned that recent claims numbers probably are being held down artificially by some claimants using a special emergency unemployment program that is not counted in the weekly release.

Consumers' caution keeps economic growth anemic

WASHINGTON (AP) — The economy grew at a slightly less anemic rate than first thought in the April-June quarter, but new claims for unemployment benefits rose in mid-September for the fourth week in a row, the government said Thursday.

Consumer caution held the seasonally adjusted advance in the gross domestic product to an annual rate of 1.5 percent in the second quarter, the Commerce Department said, revising its previous estimate of 1.4 percent.

Separately, the Labor Department said 414,000 Americans filed applications for unemployment during the week ended Sept. 12, an increase of 15,000 partly attributed to claims from victims of Hurricane Andrew. It was the fourth consecutive rise.

Analysts expected the mostly gloomy economic news to continue between now and the Nov. 3 Presidential election.

"I can't see how the impression could possibly change before the election," said economist Paul Boltz of T. Rowe Price Associates in Baltimore. "George Bush is stuck with (talking about) family values at this point."

Next week, the Labor Department reports on September's unemployment rate. Many economists fear the end of a federal summer jobs program for teenagers and job losses from the hurricane will cause an increase from the 7.6 percent August rate.

On Oct. 27, only a week before Election Day, the government releases its first estimate of GDP in the July-September period. In advance, economists were expecting at best a modest improvement compared with the second quarter.

"What the numbers show is the economy is not particularly buoyant," said Paul Lally of R.H. Wrightson & Associates in New York. "We're still struggling to get our head above water."

He noted that much of what growth existed in the second quarter came from an unwanted buildup in inventories as consumers cut back on purchasing. Retailers with well-stocked shelves probably will order fewer goods in the third quarter, detracting from growth, he said.

The second quarter performance followed a moderate increase of 2.9 percent at an annual rate in the first three months of the year. That's considered poor for just after a recession but it still was the best growth since the early months of the Bush administration.

American consumers, whose spending accounts for roughly two-thirds of all economic activity, were behind the slowdown. Their spending edged down 0.1 percent in the second quarter after spurring 5.1 percent in the first. The decline encompassed a 2.1 percent drop for durable goods — big ticket items such as autos and appliances.

Officer: U.S. 'didn't have the stomach' to fight over possible unreleased POWs

WASHINGTON (AP) — The top military officer at the end of the Vietnam War told a Senate panel Thursday that the nation "didn't have the stomach" to resume fighting over possible unreleased POWs after peace had been negotiated.

Admiral Thomas Moorer, who was chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff from 1970 to 1974, said it was politically impossible for President Nixon to reopen the war in 1973 on the unconfirmed possibility that not all Americans had been returned from Laos.

At that time, in 1973, Nixon had concluded peace talks with the North Vietnamese. The government of Laos was not represented in the negotiations. Also, Nixon was preparing to hold welcoming ceremonies for U.S. POWs released under those Paris peace accords.

"We would have had to go to Laos ... and physically sweep out the whole area," Moorer said.

"We didn't have the stomach for it. We didn't have the will," Moorer said, adding later that he referred to the nation as a whole, not just military and Nixon administration officials.

Moorer testified before the Senate Select Committee on POW-MIA Affairs as it held a third day of hearings with former military and Nixon administration officials from two decades ago.

Some former officials have testified there was reason to believe that more Americans than the nine eventually released from Laos had been held in that country as a result of the fighting in Southeast Asia.

Former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger also acknowledged the possibility there may have been more living Americans in Laos, though he denounced as "a flat-out lie" the allegation U.S. officials knowingly abandoned Americans there.

Committee Chairman John Kerry, D-Mass., said, "The evidence is overwhelming to the committee there is a gap between stated public policy at that time and reality."

In a just-released deposition to the committee, Moorer was questioned about orders he issued in March 1973 to delay withdrawing the final U.S. troops in Vietnam until a full accounting of POWs had been provided. One day later, Moorer reversed those orders.

Happy 21st Geoff!

We Love You.

Detroit teachers defy judge's order to return to work

DETROIT (AP) — Most of Detroit's 10,500 teachers defied a judge's order to go back to work Thursday, and picketed noisily outside schools.

Negotiations to end the 3 1/2-week-long strike resumed.

Teachers said they were willing to stay on the picket line as long as it takes to win a contract, even though school was to have started Aug. 31. The strike has prolonged summer vacation for Detroit's 168,000 students.

"We need to recall the board," Terry Bagwell, one of about 30 teachers marching outside George Washington Stark Elementary School, said, adding that she believed the teachers would prevail. "This is a union town."

Wayne County Circuit Judge Robert Colombo Jr. on Tuesday ordered the teachers to return to work under a contract that expired in June.

The Detroit Federation of Teachers and schools began bargaining Thursday morning for the first time since Sunday, schools spokesman Steve Wasko said.

The sides disagree over wages and the rules of "empowerment," a plan that would put more authority and autonomy in individual schools.

The city already has some schools operating under the plan, where teachers, students and principals together work out their schools' problems and needs.

The teachers also have asked for an 8 percent raise; the district offered a 3 percent bonus tied to teachers' attendance at staff workshops and seminars. Detroit's teachers with a bachelor's degree start at $27,000 a year, earning $41,000 after 10 years.

Union officials said teachers were reporting to work at a rate of one to two per 75 people not reporting or picketing. Wasko said officials would know Friday how many teachers reported for work.

Wasko said school officials would consider going back to the judge to seek a contempt-of-court order. If found in contempt, he could jail people who ignore the back-to-work order or fine the union.

In 1973, Detroit teachers ignored a similar court order. While no strikers were jailed, the union was assessed fines that eventually totaled $209,000, plus $2.5 million damages. Those fines were forgiven after the strike was settled in mid-October.

Some of the teachers who generally support the strike expressed uncertainty about the empowerment plan.

"It's just the general fuzziness of what empowerment means," said Dennis Kevonian, an English teacher at Finney High School who was on the picket line. "If we had an easily understood plan, it'd be OK. I'd welcome a chance to do the things I wanted to do."

Facing a financial crisis, mayor clashes with union

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Mayor Ed Rendell, whose city teetered on bankruptcy three times under his predecessor, faced his first major crisis only months after he took office.

With municipal workers threatening to strike, he decided Wednesday to practice brinkmanship: He imposed a new contract with concessions on the 15,000 employees.

"This isn't a battle to protect the rich people as some of the unions have suggested," he said. "This is a fight for our future."

It's a fight facing financially squeezed mayors across the country.

Union attorneys went to court Thursday in an attempt to stop the city from implementing the terms, and the City Council and Civil Service Commission met to begin the process of implementing what Rendell called his "last, best" offer to the workers.

The unions also ordered their members to go to work Thursday while the legal battle continues. A hearing is scheduled next week on the unions' claim that implementation of Rendell's conditions violates state labor law.

The conditions include a four-year contract with small wage increases in only the third and fourth years, a reduction in sick leave and paid holidays, and more management control of work rules and job descriptions.

"I don't think there can be any labor trouble if I'm asking the courts for a ruling," said James Sutton, head of District Council 33 of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees. The council represents the 11,000 blue-collar workers.

Without the $99 million savings the contract represents, and without other cash-saving moves Rendell has proposed, the city would face a deficit of $248 million this year.

Under the administration of his predecessor, W. Wilson Goode, the city posted deficits for four years in a row. By summer 1991, the city's bonds had fallen to junk level on Wall Street, forcing the city to agree to the creation of a state oversight board that would sell bonds in its place.

While campaigning, Rendell said he was willing to risk a strike to get a grasp on labor costs, told city residents that they no longer could look to Harrisburg or Washington, D.C., for a bailout, and promised not to raise taxes or cut services.

Upon taking office in January, he took a 5 percent pay cut, ordered the same for his top deputies, and forged a working relationship with a council that often had battled Goode and refused to act as the city headed into financial ruin.

And he led a group of people in a cleaning of City Hall, posing for a much-publicized photograph that showed him scrubbing a rest room.

In March, he unveiled a five-year financial plan that was required before bonds could be sold on behalf of the city.

Rendell has estimated that the plan, which included a basic reorganization of city government and major labor concessions, including a four-year wage freeze, would save the city $1 billion over five years.

"The city has reached a critical point," said Michael Johnston, an analyst for Moody's Investor Service Inc. in New York.

Man opens fire in Calif. courthouse and kills one before being arrested

SAN BERNARDINO, Calif. (AP) — A gunman opened fire and killed a man in the San Bernardino County courthouse Thursday as bystanders in the hallway scurried for cover, authorities said.

Witnesses heard three shots fired and soon afterward police arrested Lynn Waller, 30, of San Bernardino, said police department spokeswoman Sherrie Guerrero. But it was unclear if he was the gunman. Police also recovered a weapon, but didn't immediately say what type.

Another man thought to be involved in the shooting also was being sought.

The gunshots followed a heated argument between family members involved in a child custody battle, witnesses said. Several children were in the area at the time of the shooting; no other injuries were reported.

"All of a sudden you just heard a big bang and I looked up, I mean, it was fast. You could see the fire and the gun went off two more times and I saw a person fall. Everybody ran," said witness Connie Simpson.

The gunfire erupted mid-morning on the third floor in the hallway outside Superior Court. Dozens of people in the corridor dropped to the ground or ran for cover.

The courthouse was closed to the public for several hours while officers combed the grounds and searched flower-beds for the weapon.

The 200 to 250 courthouse workers remained on their jobs.

Visitors to the courthouse 60 miles east of Los Angeles are not screened by metal detectors, which are in place in many courthouses in the country.

Use of metal detectors has been considered several times, said Fea Herrick, director of court services, adding that searches have been used only during special cases.

The shooting was the latest violent attack at U.S. courthouses.

Nine people have been slain this year in courthouses around the country.

Child tries to 'divorce' parents

Florida case could set a legal precedent

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — Squirring and chewing a gum drop, a 12-year-old boy went to court Thursday seeking a "divorce" from his parents in a case that could help give children more protection against parental abuse.

Gregory Kingsley, brown-haired and pale, sat in the back of the courtroom with members of the foster family he hopes to live with permanently.

His mother, Rachel Kingsley, cried as she denied allegations that she abused, neglected and abandoned him for most of his life. In the past eight years, Gregory has lived with her only seven months.

Mrs. Kingsley also denied that her fiancé, Steve Hack, had recently beaten her in the presence of her two younger sons, who live with her in St. Louis.

A former sister-in-law, Jeanette Glenn, detailed instances of abuse and neglect, accusing Mrs. Kingsley, 30, of being an alcoholic, a drug abuser and even a prostitute.

Sobbing, Glenn said she hoped the two younger boys also could be taken from her

"because nothing's going to change. ... That's the pattern for her."

Gregory said he felt unloved and unwanted most of his life. He smiled occasionally in court, chewed on a gum drop and whispered to those around him.

The trial was shown live on CNN and Court TV.

Child welfare advocates and legal scholars said the case could establish a significant legal precedent, but some said it was unlikely to have much practical effect.

Charmaine Crouse Yoest, policy analyst with the conservative Family Research Council in Washington, said, "The ramifications are huge. ... You're looking at a fundamental shift at the way we view children."

Howard Davidson, director of the American Bar Association Center on Children and the Law, said it was unlikely that many children would be hiring lawyers to sever parental custody in the future. He said the case was mainly significant because it had attracted so much attention, not vice versa.

"All of the publicity makes it significant," he said. "To my knowledge, this is the first time in American history that a termination-of-parental-rights hearing has been broadcast on national television."

Mrs. Kingsley said she tried hard to provide the boys a stable home, but was forced to put them in foster care because she couldn't afford to keep them on a $200-a-week salary.

Under questioning from Gregory's foster father, attorney George Russ, Mrs. Kingsley denied she had a history of alcoholism. Later, she accused Florida social workers of thwarting her attempts to contact Gregory.

"I tried to call for his birthday and he was away on a camping trip," she said. "They told me he didn't want to speak with me after a while."

Glenn said she had been a frequent visitor to the Kingsley home in a St. Louis suburb when the children were young.

"Gregory finally has a chance to have a decent life with people who love and care for him," Glenn said. "I want that to happen."

Mothers may be blamed for allowing kids' abuse

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. (AP) — Two toddlers are dead, killed by their mothers' abusive boyfriends. Now the state Supreme Court must decide whether the mothers helped kill their children by tolerating the abuse.

The prosecutors say yes, because the two women, convicted in separate cases, turned their children over to the men and let them beat the children.

But defense attorneys maintain their clients shouldn't be punished for the violence of others; one was absent when the fatal blow was inflicted, the other is legally blind and couldn't see the evidence of physical abuse, the lawyers argued Wednesday before the high court.

"The fact is, this child's death was not caused by the culmination of a pattern," attorney Jim Reddy, a Cook County public defender, said of the killing of three-year-old Eleticia Asbury. "It was caused by a sudden, violent act."

Each woman was convicted in a Cook County court several years ago of murdering her child by permitting abuse. The high court combined appeals of both cases because they raise similar issues.

Experts suggest the convictions are highly unusual.

The case of Violetta Burgos, the blind woman, concerns the death of her daughter, Eleticia, in April 1986.

Burgos was dating Elijah Staniel — despite a state order barring her from seeing him because of his violence — and let him discipline her daughter with spankings and beatings and, fatally, with blows to the stomach, authorities said.

Eleticia died from injuries to her liver and intestine.

Convicted in a non-jury trial, Burgos and Staniel were sentenced to 60 years in prison, but an appellate court overturned Burgos' conviction. The court said prosecutors failed to prove Burgos aided or encouraged the deadly beating.

Kentucky Supreme Court strikes down state anti-sodomy law as unconstitutional FRANKFORT, Ky. (AP) — The Kentucky Supreme Court struck down the state's anti-sodomy law Thursday, ruling that it violates the constitutional rights of homosexuals.

"We need not sympathize, agree with, or even understand the sexual preference of homosexuals in order to recognize their right to equal treatment before the bar of criminal justice," said the 4-3 opinion.

The court's dissenters said the ruling will promote homosexuality.

The law barred "deviate sexual intercourse with another person of the same sex." There is no Kentucky law against adultery, fornication or deviate sexual intercourse between heterosexuals.

According to the American Civil Liberties Union, the Kentucky court joined its counterparts in New York and Pennsylvania in rulings that anti-sodomy laws violate privacy rights. Similar decisions have been returned by lower courts in Texas and Michigan. In 1986, the U.S. Supreme Court upheld Georgia's anti-sodomy law.

Dozens of groups and organizations lined up on both sides filed legal briefs in the Kentucky case.

The National Gay and Lesbian Task Force said eight states have laws against sodomy between people of the same sex. Sixteen others and the District of Columbia prohibit sodomy even between people of the opposite sex.

Writing for the majority, Justice Charles Leibson said that just because a majority of people "finds one type of extramarital intercourse more offensive than another, does not provide a rational basis for making criminal the sexual preference of homosexuals."

Leibson wrote that Kentucky has the "legally protected right of privacy based on our own constitution and common law tradition long before the United States Supreme Court first took notice of whether there were any rights of privacy inherent in the federal Bill of Rights."

Reaction to the decision was split.

"The court has told the state that it has no business in your bedroom if your conduct is not harmful to others," said Everett Hoffman, executive director of the ACLU of Kentucky.

An attorney for one of the groups that sought to keep the law on the books warned of dire consequences.

Black voters not enthused by choices

BALTIMORE (AP) — Kwabena Hardy, like many black voters, doesn't feel much enthusiasm for Democrat Bill Clinton and running mate Al Gore.

He's undecided about how to cast his first Presidential ballot, but allows that he'll probably vote Democratic.

"It's going to be hard, but I have to," says the 19-year-old student at Morgan State University, who turned out to hear Gore speak at a recent rally in Baltimore.

Politicians in both parties "use their pulpits to say things to our people that will butter them up and get us to vote for them, but in the long run they turn around and stab us in the back," Hardy said.

His ambivalence is not unusual. Clinton's effort to win over working-class whites who deserted the Democratic Party 12 years ago has left many black voters feeling ignored.

At the same time, however, many blacks "feel that they've had Reagan and Bush in office for 12 years and any change would be better," says David Bositis of the Washington-based Joint Center for Political and Economic Studies.

A nationwide poll taken for the bipartisan center and Home Box Office in June showed that 77 percent of blacks disapproved of the job Bush was doing.

Clinton's challenge will be to lure those blacks out to polling places on Election Day.

The Democrats are walking a political tightrope with Clinton's decision to craft a single message for black and working-class white voters, who have followed divergent political paths the last 12 years.

Clinton has pleaded for racial harmony, promised assistance to decaying cities and proposed revisions in welfare programs — messages aimed at black voters.

The broader theme of his campaign has been revving up the nation's stalling economy, an issue that plays well among the so-called Reagan Democrats.

Perot's son says dad doesn't want the presidency

DALLAS (AP) — Ross Perot's supporters are telling volunteer leaders who will meet with him Monday they want him back in the Presidential race. But Perot's son and other associates say his goal is not to win the Presidency but to force the campaign onto "the tough issues."

In several interviews during the past week, Perot has suggested he would launch an active campaign if supporters who put him on state ballots want him to do so.

And Orson Swindle, national coordinator for Perot's volunteer organization, said Thursday that a canvass he ordered of state offices found plenty of backing if Perot decides to run.

"This is not a token gesture," Swindle said on NBC's "Today" show. "If he goes for the Presidency, he goes for the Presidency."

But Perot's son, Ross Perot Jr., said his father's goal "is not to be President of the United States."

"His goal is to fix the country, fix some problems, to keep the two candidates really focused in on what the problems are," Perot Jr. told KDFW-TV. "And he wants to make sure they can't avoid the tough issues."

Earlier this week, former media adviser Jim Squires said Perot had no illusions of winning the election, but might begin running ads and making speeches in states such as Texas and Florida, where he might affect the outcome.

Perot's advertising consultant, Murphy Martin, said the spots he has prepared for Perot focus on issues rather than the man.

Asked if the spots use biographical material, Martin said, "That's not really the purpose. We're talking about problems that face the country, how to solve those problems and who can best do that."

When he was asked whether the spots say "Vote for Perot,"

Martin said, "They say what is necessary to relay the message and that's all I can say."

House Speaker prohibits Clinton-bashing on the floor

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Speaker Thomas Foley, upset by a steady Republican bashing of Bill Clinton, on Thursday banned further insulting references to the Democratic Presidential candidate in floor speeches.

Foley said the Arkansas governor would now be covered under a rule barring lawmakers from using the House floor to make such remarks about the President, Vice-President and lawmakers.

Foley did acknowledge that House rules allow lawmakers more freedom to attack candidates for President and Vice-President.

"However... in order to maintain decorum in the House, certain minimal standards of propriety in debate should apply to all nominated candidates for President and Vice-President," Foley said.

Within 30 minutes of his pronouncement, though, three Democrats got their knuckles rapped for out-of-bounds remarks about President Bush.

Foley, a Washington Democrat, issued his ban after Rep. Cass Ballenger, R-N.C., accused Clinton of lying about avoiding the draft and his participation in protests against the Vietnam War.

"We all know that Bill Clinton has lied about his past," Ballenger said. "He'll lie to achieve a personal goal and to maintain his political viability. The question today is what lies he has told about our future."

While Ballenger triggered Foley's action, aides said the speaker has been bothered for weeks over Republican use of the House floor to attack Clinton's integrity.

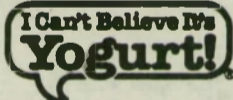

Rep. Robert Dornan, R-Calif., for example, has frequently taken the floor to call Clinton a "draft dodger" and "womanizer."

Health-care proposals of candidates compared

RAHWAY, N.J. (AP) — Here are some of the details of Bill Clinton's health care plan. Where noted are details of related proposals advanced by President Bush:

COST CONTROLS

- Establishes a National Health Care Board made up of consumers, providers, business, labor and government to set national and state health care budgets to limit public and private health care costs.
- Sets up managed care networks — organized systems of insurers, hospitals, clinics and doctors — that will receive a fixed amount of money.
- The spending limits are designed to create incentives for providers to reduce bureaucracy, eliminate duplicative technology and stop waste.
- Bans "pre-existing condition" exclusions so that insurance companies have to take everyone. Bush would also eliminate such exclusions.
- Establishes publicly sponsored purchasing groups that band together small businesses and individuals to buy private coverage, designed to create greater competition between health networks. Bush has proposed a similar system.
- Forces insurers to offer a comprehensive benefits package that covers basic needs such as pre-natal care, mammograms and routine health screenings. Bush would require states to develop basic benefits packages and insurance companies to charge similar rates for similar coverage.

- Attempts to bring down prescription drug prices to eliminate special tax breaks for pharmaceutical companies that raise drug prices faster than inflation.
- To trim paperwork, implements a single claims form, standardized billing codes and electronic processing. Bush advocates the same type of streamlining.

UNIVERSAL COVERAGE

- Forces employers to provide coverage for their workers. About 85 percent of employers already do; Clinton's plan would give tax credits to offset the new costs for companies that don't currently underwrite.
 - Sets up a government fund to guarantee coverage for non-workers. People would pay a sliding scale based on income.
 - Raises the health insurance tax deduction for the self-employed from 25 percent to 100 percent. Bush would do the same.
- Bush has not proposed universal coverage or cost controls.

Clinton outlines health plan

Bush spokeswoman says quality would suffer

RAHWAY, N.J. (AP) — Bill Clinton promised Thursday to press for a national health-care system for all Americans with strict cost controls and tax credits for small businesses and called President Bush's alternative hollow.

Clinton charged that Bush's tax-credit plan was designed merely to cure political ills rather than curb health-care expenditures, which he said have increased from $250 billion in 1980 to $800 billion.

"This is a matter that is critical for the future of this country's survival," the Democratic nominee told a crowd outside a New Jersey pharmaceutical company.

"Do not let these 40 days go by without making a decision that you as an American voter will insist and demand that this problem be solved not in another 10 years but next year," the Arkansas governor said. "That is a major, major, major factor in what ought to determine the outcome of this election."

Clinton highlighted health care as he campaigned in New Jersey and New York while Bush took a day off at Camp David before a busy campaign weekend. But the Bush campaign called Clinton's plan too expensive for average Americans.

"His plan would place a tax on every working American that they cannot afford," said Bush campaign spokeswoman Alixe Glen. "It would reduce the quality of care that we enjoy in this country and would ration care for most Americans."

Clinton also chided Bush anew for not agreeing to debates but with a new twist: suggesting Bush was afraid to face new questions about his role in the Reagan administration's Iran-Contra scandal.

Iran-Contra operative Richard Secord, meanwhile, disputed Bush's assertion that he didn't know about the Reagan White House's arms-for-hostages deals with Iran.

In interviews over the past week, Secord told the Associated Press that Bush has "not come clean" about his knowledge of the Iran arms sales.

Secord told the AP that the President "was in on key decisions; there's simply no question about that; for him to suggest otherwise is simply not the case."

"It's time for George Bush to come clean with the American people," said Clinton spokesman George Stephanopoulos. "What did Bush know and when did he know it? Why won't he tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth?"

Clinton's focus on health care is part of the Democratic candidate's effort to compare his domestic program with what he calls Bush's record of neglect.

Standing outside the headquarters of Merck & Co., Inc., Clinton said the toll of the health care crisis went well beyond the roughly 37 million uninsured Americans.

Private spending for health care undercuts American competitiveness by draining money that could be spent on new investment in equipment and jobs, he said.

Housing Secretary predicts voters will pick Bush after they know more about Clinton

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Secretary of Housing and Urban Development Jack Kemp predicted Thursday that voters will turn to President Bush when they learn more about Arkansas Governor Bill Clinton's economic policies.

"This egalitarian soak-the-rich, give-to-the-poor policy of the Clinton campaign, I think, eventually is going to turn the stomachs of the American people," Kemp told a Republican fund-raising luncheon.

Kemp, a former congressman, argued the Presidential race will come down to differences between Bush's call for lower taxes, less government and incentives for investment versus a Clinton plan the Secretary claimed would force taxes up.

"Raising taxes on American workers and entrepreneurs to fund more government programs is not putting people first," said Kemp. "It's putting government first, and it won't expand the economy. It will contract the economy."

Kemp contended that a progressive tax structure, with higher tax rates for higher income people, would remove incentives for investment and entrepreneurship which he said will be needed as the nation's economy changes as a result of the end of the Cold War.

"We cannot compete with a tax code that is steeply graded and progressive," said Kemp. "A progressive income tax is not a tax on the rich. It's a tax on the poor who hope to get rich some day."

James Blassingame, state director for Clinton's campaign, countered that Bush's economic plan "has come late and is shallow."

Instead of raising taxes for everyone, the Democratic Presidential nominee wants to lower taxes on the middle class and raise taxes only on the richest 2 percent of the nation's citizens, Blassingame said.

While giving a partisan pep talk to about 60 Republicans Thursday, Kemp also was promoting his own ideas for urban enterprise zones and reforms in public housing so occupants can buy their homes or apartments.

In his 50-minute speech, Kemp quoted a variety of other politicians from Ronald Reagan to Winston Churchill to Jesse Jackson.

Blassingame, noting Kemp's past differences with Bush, said the Secretary was merely "being a loyal soldier by going out on the election trail."

Irish Guard members respond to proceedings

In light of the events occurring over the past few days involving the disbandment of the veteran Irish Guard members, we would like to express our views of the proceedings.

To this day we do not know the exact charges brought against us. It is our understanding that fictitious rumors are the basis for our disbandment.

For instance, as stated in The Observer, the accusation of having a single, anonymous student claim that members of the Guard were forcing another Guardsman in uniform to consume alcohol in the middle of an Alumni Association tailgater is heresy and blasphemy at its finest.

It is a covenant law that no Guardsmen may consume alcohol, either publicly or privately, in uniform. In addition, how is it that only one student, one person, has deduced the idea that we were "pouring alcohol down the throat of another Guardsman."

If this accusation were so, would not the entire congregation at the Alumni Association gathering witness and question this act? Furthermore, this article was the first of our such knowledge of this accusation.

This and other unfounded rumors played a significant role in the decision made by Patricia O'Hara, Vice-President of Student Affairs.

As such, this allegation should have been brought to our attention, so we may have at least had the opportunity to rightfully refute and correct this and other such outrageous allegations.

Ms. O'Hara stated in yesterday's article that Student Affairs has "tried to preserve the positive potential of the Guard. Whether that will happen depends on the Guard.

They're pretty much masters of their own fate." Yet when we presented Ms. O'Hara with potential actions to improve our public image and the Guard itself, citing specifically volunteering our services to young people, she neglected these opportunities in order to make an example of the Irish Guard.

Obviously, we were not the masters of our own fate, nor were we allowed to preserve the positive potential of the Guard, as she would have you believe.

In reference to Ms. O'Hara's charges that our orientation activities were major indiscretions, let us further examine the actions of organizations both athletic and academic.

Be it Eta Kappa Nu, athletic teams, or dormitories, initiations occur campus-wide. Zahm Hall, in order to encourage enthusiasm, covers their new members with mud and paint, dresses them in togas, and parades them to the major social event of the first pep rally, highlighting the fact that many thousands of alumni and students are enabled to witness this public socialization process.

Why is there such a disparity between the initiations of these organizations and the Irish Guard? Never have we had a socialization process in the light of the public eye. The Office of Student Affairs has shown inconsistency in its disciplinary actions.

This University claims to be fair, yet we have been harshly and unjustly acted upon. With so many continuities between

Patrick Bednarz
Christopher Boone

other student organizations and the Irish Guard, why have we been singled out?

Student Affairs and Band officials learned of reported violations prior to our meeting scheduled for last week. When approached by Student Affairs, we were under the impression that our meeting would involve the introduction to its administrators, as has been practiced in the past.

Upon arrival, however, we were individually interrogated with accusations based on unfounded rumors and anonymous sources. Furthermore, besides the fact that Ms. O'Hara was never present during this interrogation process,

Student Affairs officers William Kirk and Ann Firth refused to state the exact nature of the improprieties. When asked, Mr. Kirk responded condescendingly and in an authoritative, unyielding manner saying, "I think it is obvious what has been brought forth against you."

It is for this manipulative, cowardly, unprofessional conviction that we find fault with the non-judicial proceedings which led to our disbandment. Through such action, it is evident that we were prematurely considered guilty.

When attempts were made to state clearly and repeatedly our innocence, we were then accused of dishonesty and making the proceedings more difficult than necessary. What evidence do they have of such allegations?

Rumors and the anonymous, fallible citing of one student do not constitute enough argument against the Irish Guard to lead to our disbandment.

The articles in The Observer (Sept. 23) indicate particular reference to the fact that the Irish Guard is "a fraternity and pride themselves on keeping many of the traditions secret."

Yes, we indeed are a fraternal organization in the literal sense of the word. Over the course of the season, a fraternal bond is naturally created; we become the best of friends based on loyalty, respect and admiration for one another, that is unique among all other organizations.

The traditions still in existence to this day promote this bond and due to its uniqueness alone, they remain solely with the Irish Guard. The most frequently asked question of the Guard remains, "What do we wear underneath our kilts?"

This simple yet traditional aspect of the Guard is the basis of our secretive nature, under which we have existed for forty-three years. It creates a mystique among the Notre Dame community which continues to peak interest in the distinctiveness of the Irish Guard.

This mystique by no means reflects poorly on the University's Catholic nature nor the Notre Dame family which we are chosen to represent.

Based on the above, it is apparent that the veteran Irish Guardsmen were disbanded in order to eliminate the supposed "cult-like" traditions under which we have been accused of acting.

This reasoning stems from the idea that if Student Affairs eliminates the current link to the traditions which have existed since the Guard's inception, they will be able to establish a Guard which conforms more appropriately with the values of this academic institution.

We are ten men, gentlemen all, with the honorable responsibility of representing this University as Irish Guardsmen. Not only do we understand this responsibility, we accept it with the utmost respect and admiration for the Golden Dome.

Student Affairs is an all-encompassing authority, ruled by the unyielding dictatorship of Ms. Patricia O'Hara, which has the power to eliminate any organization given a catalyst.

We express our dissatisfaction with the proceedings of the Office of Student Affairs and would like to warn all groups associated with the University of Notre Dame to take additional precautions to ensure the safety and well-being of your organization.

Though it has been indicated to us that the decision handed down by Ms. O'Hara is final, we would like to state that we will always be Irish Guardsmen at heart. She has single handedly taken away one of the most significant experiences of our lives here at Notre Dame.

We are helpless in our plight to regain our status as marchers on Saturday afternoons, yet it will remain "in our hearts forever." We wish the remaining five Guardsmen the best of luck and hope with all sincerity that their experiences are as rewarding and as memorable as ours. Here's to you lads...

No matter whom we vote for, it is a vote for power

"If you want to know about great, you've got to think big," I was explaining to my culturally-deprived friends Jocelyn and Dex, my old college buddy, as we stood on line for a movie the other day.

"Take Havergal Brian's so-called 'Gothic' Symphony, arguably the greatest music of this century."

"Never heard it," Jocelyn admitted. "What does it sound like?"

"Basically, I have no idea since I never heard it either," I told her truthfully. "But it's in the Guinness Book of Records under the heading 'Largest Symphony.'"

We had been trying to decide which of two movies to go see, and Jocelyn had said something about how she heard that this artsy one was really great.

"Uh, so being in the Guinness Book of Records makes that symphony really great, huh?" Jocelyn smiled weakly. Apparently this was something she hadn't really thought about before.

"Sure," Dex said, playfully elbowing Jocelyn in the ribs. "Doesn't everybody now basically recognize the Pacific to be a vastly superior ocean to the Atlantic? Or the Empire State Building to be a greater monument to monumentality than the Taj Mahal?"

Cool. I started to think that maybe Dex would come around to my side and agree to see the Hollywood film instead of the artsy one. But I had to solidify my position.

"Why do you think Bertolucci is such a great director, Jocelyn?" I asked, figuring a couple of familiar illustrations would help the point clear.

"Remember how his film '1900' was so long that the couple sitting behind us had to keep asking you to make me stop snoring? Now that was a great film—I remember you said so yourself."

"OK, look," said Jocelyn in that tone which meant put this monkeywrench in your pipe and stir it. "If we're really going to measure greatness in terms of greatness, why not put quantity on the side of the audience?"

Take a poll. If most people prefer the Atlantic to the Pacific, poor fools though they be—at this she returned Dex's playful elbow—then the Atlantic would be greater than the Pacific. At least until the next poll, of course."

Amazed at Jocelyn's reasoning, I flabbergasted, "Joc, think. If you were right, we'd have to spend millions of taxpayers' dollars every year siphoning Pacific water into the Atlantic to make the latter-mentioned ocean bigger than the aforementioned ocean. All because of some stupid poll."

Jocelyn gave Dex a quizzical look, probably hoping he would help her answer my question.

"Well," Dex came to her rescue, "we could always just change their names. When the Atlantic won the poll, we'd change its name to the Pacific, and call the Pacific the Atlantic."

Humph, I thought. No fair, Dex helping Jocelyn. So he was saying he didn't care which movie we went to? OK, I had to regroup.

I gazed up at the movie marquis thoughtfully, which got me distracted into trying to remember which Friday the 13th they were up to.

"All right," I said finally. "The winner would be called the Pacific, right? But then there'd be no point in taking the poll in the first place, cause everyone would know ahead of time that the Pacific would win no matter what. So nobody would vote, and the Pacific would win by acclamation." Put that in your hat and mull over it.

Clearly seeing that the inexorable conclusion of my argument meant the Hollywood movie, Jocelyn tried to stall. "You know, as a matter of fact, I sometimes feel exactly that way on election day."

Dex nodded. "Yeah, I know what you mean. Except that with American politics it's like you've got the Atlantic and the Pacific battling for greatest region of the earth, and no one's representing the deserts, volcanoes, forests, rivers, streams or whatever."

"Except of course you've got Gore, the senior senator from the Great State of Rainforests," Jocelyn added.

"Really," Dex said.

What in the world are these two talking about, I thought.

"Look, I don't know how we got on environmental issues," I said, the palpable voice of reason, "but we were talking about the greatness question."

"Yeah," Jocelyn said, "and now I can see that you were right after all about greatness."

"I was?" trying not to look too proud of myself. "Look, if you really want to see that artsy film, I guess I could be persuaded..."

"At least as an allegory of the electoral process. The whole thing is geared, basically, to insure that the greatest—that is, the most powerful—gets the greatest number of votes.

But in the end it doesn't really matter because power wins whatever the outcome. No matter whom we vote for, we're pretty much just voting for power itself."

"Huh?"
"She's saying that power perpetuates itself, which is why voting can never be a serious way of confronting power."

Dex was a big help on that one.

"So what are you saying, Jocelyn? That we should all stay home from the polls?"

"No, on the contrary. You know me; I can't stand the Republicans. And there are certain fundamental rights which only Clinton has vowed to protect. I am definitely voting for Clinton, and I'm going to try to persuade everyone I know to do the same."

"So voting does make a difference."

"In some ways yes, in some ways no. Your point about greatness winning no matter what just made me think that radical change of the system can never come from an action which confirms that system."

We'd finally reached the ticket counter. Dex and Jocelyn looked at me, as if to say whatever you choose is fine with us.

"All right," I said to the guy behind the ticket counter. "Three for that artsy movie, please."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Sophomore Class Council responds to allegations

Dear Editor:

We would like to take this opportunity to respond to the letter published last week that questioned the effectiveness of the Sophomore Class Council. We have already spoken with the authors of this letter, but we want to publicly answer their questions and refute their allegations.

We do appreciate the authors' interest in the Sophomore Class Council. We hope that more of our classmates express as much enthusiasm. At all times are we more than willing to listen to criticism—both positive and negative—not only about our performance as class leaders, but also about the events the Council sponsors.

In the first place, however, we certainly do not see ourselves as being "elite" members of the Class of '95, nor do we believe our fellow Council members feel that way. Rather, we think of ourselves as a group of dedicated, hard-working people.

Last spring we decided that a large council would best serve the interests of the class. Having a large council of sophomores provides a great number of minds to think up events, many opinions to be heard in discussion, and the personnel needed to carry out events. We are proud to have a council of so many sophomores willing to serve their classmates.

Admittedly, like most other organizations, the Council does suffer from inefficiency at times. However, this problem cannot be attributed to an excessive number of chiefs-of-staff as the letter suggested. In fact, there is only one chief-of-staff on the Council.

Likewise, it is untrue that 23 people are ever planning one single social activity and untrue that seven people are planning our Class Masses. That is not how our committees conduct their affairs.

In defense of our selection and appointment process, not one person on the Council failed in proving to be qualified. In all cases involving the selection of roommates, each one of them was the only person to apply for a position that needed to be filled.

And considering that there has only been only one general council vote, we cannot understand why we have been accused of "pork-barreling." Very simply, there has been none.

We believe that the Council has done a fine job this year. Our events have drawn well for the most part, and we have every reason to believe that they will continue to be well attended. We ask that you judge the effectiveness of the Council not by its size but by the events it sponsors.

Simi Valley resident defends reputation of his hometown

Dear Editor:

As a resident of Simi Valley, California, I as well as my family and friends were immediately affected by events that took place in April and May of this year in the Los Angeles area. I have heard all of the jokes about Simi Valley Police-men and about the "White Racists" that comprise the Simi Valley population.

I have heard all of the analogies that compare Simi Valley to the Mississippi of the '60s and that it is a haven for the KKK. There are 120,000 people that live in Simi Valley. In all of the years that I have lived there, I have never met a single person who I or anybody else thought was even a mild racist.

I have never seen or heard of anyone dressed in a KKK outfit, and I have never read about a racial beating in the local paper.

What upsets me is that people make blind accusations when they appear to know very little about the subject. The fact is, not a single Simi Valley police officer was involved in the beating of Rodney King; they were all L.A. police officers.

Of the twelve members on the Rodney King jury, two were from Simi Valley and the other ten were from the rest of Ventura County (i.e. Oxnard, Channel Islands, Ventura, etc.)

Contrary to popular belief, the trial did not occur in the "Simi Valley Courthouse" but rather in the East Ventura County Courthouse which is in Simi Valley and was not presided by a Simi Valley judge, but by a Ventura County Judge.

By no means am I trying to justify the outcome of this trial or to completely shift the blame. My point however, is this: the results of this trial are hardly the fault of Simi Valley alone. They are just as much the fault of Ventura county, the rest of the state, and the rest of the country.

The social and economic strife that facing us is dragging down the justice system of the United States. The injustices we have seen in the courtroom are rooted in the hard times that people everywhere are experiencing.

As several prominent black leaders stated during the riots, this has been a time bomb waiting to explode, and it could just as easily have happened in any city in the U.S.

It is too bad that a man had to be beaten, an injustice served, a city's reputation destroyed, and another city burned down so that our leaders could see these problems.

It awakens you to the problems we are dealing with in this country when your mother calls you at four in the morning crying hysterically thinking that your little brother is going to get beaten and that the house you grew up in is going to get burned down because of an event that you and your family had no control over.

How would you feel if you got the same phone call? Believe it or not, I'm not asking for sympathy for my hometown in this letter; I am asking for sympathy for all of us.

I am asking that we be sensitive to the lives of others regardless of who they are, what they look like, or where they are from, and, like Rodney King, I too am hoping that one day we might "all get along" so that we can live together in peace.

Student managers jobs demand dedication

By BILL FEKRAT
 Accent Writer

When talking about Notre Dame football, names like Holtz, Mirer, Bettis, and Dubose dominate discussions about the previous game's touchdowns, penalties, interceptions, and strategies.

A person can watch every game, read every article, and discuss every play, but that person will probably never know who the people are who paint the football helmets, raise the field goal nets, or follow Lou up and down the sidelines with the headset cord.

It is very seldom that anyone wonders who these people are, or how they found their association with Notre Dame football.

Behind the scenes of every athletic team, the Student Managers Organization works diligently throughout the year to support Notre Dame sports.

One hundred and thirty-one student managers work with all Notre Dame varsity teams making practice sessions, game preparation, and the game itself run as smoothly as possible.

Many sports fan would treasure the chance to work so closely with a team throughout its season and get to know the players and coaches on a personal level.

"I joined because I loved sports and I wanted the opportunity to become involved with a great football program," said Brian Maher, Personnel Student Manager.

Over the last few years, the manager's position has become a highly sought one. While positions are open for any Freshman or Sophomore to try out, only an outstanding few are selected to continue. This year there are 95 sophomores who help primarily with football and basketball practices, and game preparation.

At the end of the year, all of the managers evaluate each other, and the top 18 will go on into the next year assisting at all football practices and running day-to-day operations from the first day of August training camp through the end of the season, including any bowl game.

At the end of junior year, the managers once again evaluate each other. These rankings determine who will lead the organization for the next year. The order of rankings is also the order in which the managers choose which sport they want to work. Usually, those who make the top three become football managers.

This year the football staff is being run by Maher, along with Head Student Manager Art Monaghan, and Equipment Student Manager John Fligg.

During practice, the manager has to know the routine that each coach uses for instructing and drilling players. The jobs are not always glamorous - often they involve carrying around a bag of footballs, or charting plays, or generally running whatever errands coaches or players need. But every once in awhile a manager may get a chance to fill in as a runningback and run a play with the team.

The student manager's job is essential to the functioning of the football team, especially during

One of the primary aspects of game preparation is painting the helmets. Friday before home games, or Thursday before away games, the student managers work long into the night issuing uniforms, replacing worn and broken equipment, cleaning up the lockerroom, packing when necessary, and of course putting a new coat of gold

The ritual for students during the fall is the same: roll out of bed around ten, take a few Advil, go to a friend's, parent's, or relative's tailgater, watch the Notre Dame football team in action, return to tailgater, go home and fall asleep.

For one group at ND - the Notre Dame Security force - football Saturdays are not nearly as simple or entertaining.

Each Saturday morning at 7 a.m., ND Security officers report to work, ready to begin another shift in the belly of the beast that is an ND football game. Reinforcements arrive at 9 a.m. to join in the proceedings.

For the next twelve hours, working in conjunction with police officers from South Bend, St. Joseph's County and Mishawaka, this hearty group of men and women toil in the football stadium, parking fields, and surrounding traffic intersections to insure that everything goes smoothly.

Dan Hale, a lieutenant in the ND Security force, is the supervisor and coordinator of the officers working in the stadium parking areas reserved for University officials, benefactors, and the media; and in Red West, where the alumni park.

Hale's job is to make sure that his officers allow only those with special passes into the lots. In his fifteen years on this detail, Hale said he has heard every story and excuse ever invented.

"Basically, we've got it down to a science," said Hale. "A pass gets through, no pass goes home."

Hale came to ND Security "on a lark." While looking for a job, one employment agency asked him if he was interested in becoming a security officer. Fifteen years later, "the lark has turned into a career."

In the meantime, Hale was also able to graduate from the Police Academy in 1980. Hale said he enjoys his job, especially working with the "good, down-to-earth kids" of Notre Dame. "I've been very lucky," he added.

Chuck Hurley, Assistant Director of ND Security, feels the same way. He came here after 20 years with the South Bend Police Department, four of which he spent as Chief of Police. In 1988, Hurley was recruited by Rex Rakow, Director of ND Security, to apply for the Assistant Directorship. He did, and was accepted.

"It's the greatest thing that ever happened to me," said Hurley. "I work for

God, and with really being in Heaven come Notre Dame and its part that there are good people here.

Hurley especially likes the "honest kids" of Notre Dame attending Notre Dame at Saint Mary's. "If you have kids, you should have them at Notre Dame Security force," he said.

For home football games, Hurley coordinates security for the team from South Bend, St. Joseph's County, Mishawaka; the more involved, both in uniforms and in clothes, approaches 1

Notre Dame football

Assistant coaches appreciate positions and environment at ND

By KEVIN DOLAN
Accent writer

One of the commonly held beliefs about Notre Dame football is that head coach Lou Holtz has control of all aspects of the team.

While he does have the final say on what the team does, he gets plenty of help from his assistants; help that the team could never do without.

These little-known men insure that practice will run smoothly, spend hours planning game strategies and concentrate on their specialties during games in order to help Coach Holtz decide what the team should do. It is a taxing - and often thankless - job.

An assistant coach's week starts on Sunday morning with an 8 a.m. film session. Here, the coaches break down the previous day's game, identifying what mistakes were made and how to fix them. They leave the film room and break into staff meetings (offense and defense), where the film is discussed farther and plans are made for practice that week.

The coaches then gather again to watch more films, this time of the next opponent. It isn't uncommon for these sessions to last until 8, perhaps even 10 p.m.

The coaches are at work well before practice on Monday. Staff meetings are held at 7 a.m. and usually run until the film session begins at 3 o'clock.

Tuesday's and Wednesday's practices are about the same as Monday, both ending well into the evening for the coaches. Thursday, however, is what offensive coordinator Skip Holtz calls a "dress rehearsal" for the game. Few new strategies are introduced on Thursday; rather, the team and the coaches try to perfect all the things that they worked on that week. After practice, the coaches are able to get some much-needed rest with their families.

On Fridays, the assistant coaches spend less time with the Fighting Irish and turn to high-school action. Many films of high-school prospects are analyzed so that the coaches can plan their recruiting visits.

"You want to know what kind of players the kids are, so that when you go to their school, you can concentrate on what kind of person you're dealing with," said running back-coach Earle Mosely.

Saturday, game day, is almost gan State [a 43-yard completion to Lake Dawson], you're like, 'Yes! Yes!'

Assistant coaches are, for the most part, happy in their positions. "I'd love a head job, but I'm not actively seeking one," said Holtz. "My commitment is to Notre Dame, and as long as I'm here, I plan to do the best I can."

Mosely agreed. "I'm a quiet guy, but I've been a head coach in a high school, and being an assistant coach is equally rewarding," he said.

Both coaches also agreed that to be at Notre Dame was to be in a bit of a fishbowl, especially with the NBC television contract and high expectations for success.

The tradition of Notre Dame football is another source of pressure.

"You feel obliged to win because of all the ghosts that are around here as much as anything," Holtz laughed. "The tradition of this school as an elite school in both academics and athletics is a tradition that we work hard to uphold," he added.

Being an assistant coach is indeed a low-profile job, but it is still a full-time job; one that is fulfilling to the coaches here.

"I've been a coach for 16 years, and this job is one of the best I've ever had," Mosely remarked. As Skip Holtz said, referring to head coach Lou Holtz, "We're learning from one of the best."

It may not bring fame and fortune, but working for Lou Holtz and Notre Dame is a job that few coaches anywhere would be willing to trade, least of all the ones who are lucky enough to hold jobs in the shadow of The Dome.

All agree that the greatest feature of the job is being able to work with all of the people connected with Notre Dame athletics--from coaches and players through administrators in the Athletic Department.

All of the senior managers agree that being a manager is not being an outsider with the team. Instead, it is being an integral part of the team and receiving a quiet respect for their performance.

"I said at the beginning when I was a Freshman, 'I'm not going to waste my time, if all I get out of this is having to be bossed around by some dumb jock, I can find something better to do,' said Fligg. Another aspect of security is safety. In past years when ND had night games, pedestrian safety was a major concern. With the large amount of tailgating attenders roaming about, coupled with heavy traffic and darkness, Hurley said that he used to keep his fingers crossed "that no one would get hurt."

Recently, with the NBC contract specifying 12:35 p.m. kick-offs, this concern has thankfully become a much less of a problem for security. In addition, the earlier starting times have caused a decrease in alcohol-related arrests.

"ND security officers realize that a football game is a social event. We want people to have a good time, as long as they're not preventing others from enjoying themselves," said Hurley.

One last thought about Notre Dame Security from Hale: "People don't realize we're actually human beings."

They are indeed human beings, and they do a great behind-the-scenes service to Notre Dame.

The Observer/Pat McHugh

Dan Hale and Chuck Hurley agreed that working football games demands a love of both Notre Dame and its student body. On football Saturdays, approximately 150 security officers patrol the area around the stadium.

A profile in courage of the lonely God

A freshman reader has been asking me a question that comes every year: do I really think God is lonely? "Lately," I told the kid, "He's been doing better. Swaggart's downfall was a bummer. His mother's been out a lot, making field trips, so she says, to Sundance country, where she hopes they will build her a shrine."

This summer, a band of angels, swung too low coming over Jordan and crash-landed their chariot. Now they're rookies again, starting boot camp over."

The student looked to see if the chaps with the butterfly nets were in sight, coming for to carry me home.

"Being the Lonely God is no bed of roses," I told him; but I could see he had lost interest. Instant whimsy can be a litmus test separating the men from the boys. The lad wasn't ready to enter the orbit of the Lonely God; and though that's too bad, he needn't worry.

He'll run into the Lonely God when he's older, sitting alone, drinking, and feeling blue. The student will not know who He is, or anything about Him except that He keeps turning up when a fellow needs a friend.

Finally the student will say: "Who are you anyway?" and He will answer, "Have you heard of the Lonely God?"

The student will say: "He's Griffin's pookah." The pookah known to all of us, I hope, is an invisible, perhaps imaginary, six-foot rabbit named Harvey.

"He's not a pookah," the Lonely God, taking umbrage, will retort.

Father Robert Griffin

Letters to a Lonely God

"How can you tell?"
 "As the Lonely God, I can tell that I'm neither invisible nor imaginary." To prove His high calling, He will pull the Energizer Rabbit out of a Martini glass, and permanently cure the student's post-nasal drip.

"Rabboni!" will cry the student, awestruck, and the Lonely God will blush, and allow the student to see Him subliminally as the Burning Bush. I introduced Notre Dame to the Lonely God early in the alienated Seventies. Asking if He's really lonely is like asking if Aslan in the Chronicles is truly a lion.

He has to be lonely; this campus is his Narnia, and it comes with the territory. If this were the other Narnia which C.S. Lewis writes about, the Lonely God would be Aslan, the Redeemer Lion who sang his mythical country into its temporal existence.

The Kingdom of the Lonely God is only a myth if Notre Dame is a myth. He came here to show the lonely-Of-heart that He is their brother. We may outgrow our need of Him, and perhaps He hopes that we will, for He must wear many masks, and He must be called by many names.

But at a time when many were unsure of themselves, He was there for us—not as a Man of sorrows acquainted with grief; we would need a great growth in grace to reach Him at this depth—but as the companion who stayed with us to hear the chimes at midnight, because He had no place else to go.

We outgrow Him, lose Him, then find Him again. But He stays close, and is persistent like a heartbeat.

Metaphysically, you could say He is everywhere; but He's more intimate than that. Finding Him as a sidekick in New York, Brussels, Paris, and Cologne, I know He's part of me; if I'm part of Him, that's a secret He keeps.

I don't sense His whistling for me to come; I don't have a sense of Him returning, after an absence, to the scene of the crime. I don't feel that He walks with me, talks with me, and tells me that I am His own, like Christ in the hymn.

But dining alone in Simpson-on-the-Strand, just up from the Thames Embankment, it feels as unremarkable as breathing to find Him there, wishing me bon appetite, bring me zest for the meal.

But He's not there for me as Pooh-bear, or the Sunday school Jesus, or as the Divine Lover of my soul I would be embarrassed to be seen with in public. To tell you the truth, I would also not want to be seen in Simpson's sitting across from the great lion Aslan, wearing a napkin tied around his neck.

I don't think His adventures with the Domers here in Middle Earth have ended. I could tell you that you will know Him, when you meet Him, when He lets you see the nailprints in His hands.

But it wouldn't be true, because that's sentimental, like a holy card. He simply isn't a stuffed animal from the children's menagerie, cosmic and fuzzy-wuzzy at bedtime.

He's as real as the sidewalk I can bruise my knees on. He's as human as a cry for help out of the depths. Because He's made

His peace with the grave, He's sensitive to all the fears I have of dying.

As the Lonely God, He doesn't need dogmas to define Him.

He's not on deck to take my loneliness or yours away, but to fill it with His presence

I've never before tried to put the Lonely God into words; still, I'm not evangelizing on His behalf. But I'm putting you on notice: His friendship is worth having. He's not biodegradable, and He doesn't get shopworn, or have a shelf life.

Even without the school logo, He's part of the tradition, so I hoped you'd want to meet Him.

Men's X-Country hosts Invitational

BY SEAN SULLIVAN
Sports Writer

The Notre Dame men's cross country team will collide with 21 other Catholic colleges and universities in the 13th annual National Catholic Cross Country Championships tomorrow at the Burke Memorial Golf Course. The Irish, who are currently ranked number six in the nation, look good coming into this meet.

The All-American tandem of junior Mike McWilliams and senior captain John Coyle will be the leadership as well as the arsenal in Friday's attack. McWilliams and Coyle finished 1-2 in the season opener against Georgetown and should be two of the strongest runners in Friday's race.

Traditionally, the National Catholic Championships has featured intense competition with fantastic finishes. Last year's meet was one of the fastest invitationals at Notre Dame in recent years.

"Last year the leaders went out like lightning," said Notre Dame head coach Joe Piane.

John Coyle finished the race with a time of 24:21.5 and Mike McWilliams set his personal record for the home course with a blazing 24:04.6.

As in years past, the competition will be strong. While returning champion Providence will not be at this year's competition, Marquette and Loyola both have excellent teams. Marquette boasts a strong front with five returning seniors. And in James Westphal, Loyola has one of the top individual runners in the country. Last year, against Notre Dame and Providence All-Americans, Westphal won the race by six seconds.

Coach Piane stressed that for Notre Dame to run an effective race it is important for them to run as a team. In the last meet against Georgetown the Irish stayed together in the fast and intimidating pack formation throughout two and a half miles. While Georgetown may have sprinted out two quick runners initially, they were no match for the onslaught of the Notre Dame seven blazing over the Burke Memorial fairways.

Once again, fans should expect a hard-fought race. Look for Marquette and Notre Dame to battle it out in the first 300 meters. Coach Piane predicts that Marquette will have an explosive start in order to establish position early on.

The fast start has been a traditional tactic for Marquette. The Warriors will come on strong with their eyes on the prize of being National Catholic Champions. With 5 seniors on the team, this year is the year to do it.

Piane believes that beyond the Championship itself, many of the runners are on a personal mission to topple the Fighting Irish. But it will take more than vendettas to defeat Notre Dame. In years past the Irish have owned this race. In fact, a victory tomorrow will be the fourth Irish win in five years.

However, cross country meets are unpredictable and the winner of this race can only be established at 5:00 tomorrow along the chalk path of Burke Memorial Golf Course. So go out and cheer on the men's varsity cross country team as they make their surge towards the national title.

Women to fend for Catholics title

Special to the Observer

The women's cross country team plays host to the annual National Catholic championships Friday at the University's Burke Memorial Golf Course. The meet is scheduled to begin at 4:15 p.m. Featured squads include the Irish, Loyola, De Paul, Marquette and LaSalle.

Last year, the Irish finished third at the National Catholic meet. Last year's First and second-place winners, Providence and Boston College, are not returning this year and the Irish are expected to make a strong run at the title. Irish helmsman, Tim Connelly, is looking to the meet with enthusiasm.

"We have a job to do and now we have to go out and do it," says Connelly. "If we run as aggressively as we did against Georgetown, we should have a good shot at winning

California ruins No. 24 Kansas' perfect season, 27-23

LAWRENCE, Kan. (AP) — Dave Barr accounted for two touchdowns and Russell White smashed Chuck Muncie's school all-purpose running record Thursday night, lifting California past No. 24 Kansas 27-23 in the Jayhawks' first game as a ranked team in 16 years.

The Bears (2-1), 7-point underdogs, dominated Kansas along the line of scrimmage and never trailed while holding their hosts from the Big Eight Conference 27 points below their season average.

Kansas (3-1) closed to within 20-17 on Maurice Douglas' 31-yard touchdown run with 4:22 left in the third period following Charley Bowen's 21-yard interception return, and moments later Dan Eichloff tried a 47-yard field goal that could have tied it.

But Brad Bowers blocked the kick and the ball rolled to the Kansas 40. Six plays later, Barr's 11-yard touchdown pass to Sean Dawkins restored the Bears' 10-point lead.

The Jayhawks came right back and fooled the Bears on a halfback option pass from Matt Gay to Rodney Harris that covered 33 yards to the end zone. A try for two points failed, leaving California with a four-point lead with 8:13 left.

White, who ran for 153 yards in 39 carries, surpassed Muncie's all-purpose record of 4,194.

The Bears led 13-10 at halftime and went ahead 20-10 on Barr's 1-yard run with 7:02 left in the third quarter.

Kansas quarterback Chip Hilleary, who entered the game averaging more than 237 yards on offense, didn't complete a pass until 8:00 of the second quarter and only Cal mistakes kept Kansas within three points at halftime.

White went over left guard for 33 yards to the Jayhawks 17 early in the first quarter. But Barr's pass on second and 5 was tipped in the air by Kyle Moore and intercepted by Larry Thiel.

The Bears were driving early in the second quarter when Kansas' Robert Vaughn intercepted Barr's pass on second and 15 and returned it 11 yards to the Cal 44.

Barr hit Mike Caldwell for 11 yards on third and 9 on the second possession of the second quarter and two plays later found Dawkins down the right sideline for 37 yards to the Kansas 17. The drive stalled at the 15 and Doug Brien made it 10-0 with a 33-yard field goal.

The Jayhawks then mounted their only drive of the half, zipping 80 yards in six plays. Hilleary hit Gay for consecutive gains of 14 and 25 to the Cal 28. Then, fading back to pass, he was driven out of the pocket and bobbed and weaved into the end zone with 1:33 remaining in the half.

Fry wary of Colorado's Stewart-led aerial assault

BOULDER, Colo. (AP) — Iowa coach Hayden Fry calls Colorado quarterback Kordell Stewart "just a tremendous all-around athlete" who is not only uncommonly fast for a quarterback but is "faster than any running back we've ever had here."

According to Fry, Stewart also is an "avid weightlifter who squats over 500 pounds, which is what our top linemen do."

After handing out such accolades, how does Fry intend to stop Stewart when his Hawkeyes invade No. 10 Colorado on Saturday?

"I hope he doesn't play," Fry said.

No such luck, Hayden.

Stewart, who missed last week's 21-20 victory over Minnesota because of a sprained foot, will return to the starting role on Saturday.

"Kordell's looking good," coach Bill McCartney said at mid-week. "He'll definitely start. He's moving better and he's throwing well. By Saturday, hopefully, the injury won't be noticed."

Before his injury, Stewart was the nation's second-ranked passer, having completed 37 of 53 passes for 660 yards with seven touchdowns and one interception. He missed the second half of the Baylor game in Week 2, and was left at home last week as junior Duke Tobin faltered in the first half before true freshman Koy Detmer — the brother of 1990 Heisman Trophy winner Ty Detmer — rallied the Buffs with two second-half touchdown passes.

In case anyone thought Colorado suddenly had a quarterback controversy, however, McCartney emphasized that Stewart remains his starter, although Detmer is "very obviously in the picture now."

Quarterback, regardless of who mans the position, isn't a worry for McCartney. There are these matters of a disappearing running attack and an unexpectedly vulnerable defense.

When it operated out of the wishbone and variations thereof, Colorado consistently ranked among the nation's rushing leaders. But this year, the Buffaloes are averaging only 102.3 yards per game on the ground — a figure that ranks last in the Big Eight and 94th in the country.

"Where did all that go?" a mystified McCartney asks. "What happened to it? Is there no carryover? I thought we took a step backwards (against Minnesota)."

As for the defense, a veteran-laden unit which was expected to carry the load while the offense adapted to its new pass-oriented attack, it has suffered from missed assignments, sloppy tackling and a tendency to give up big plays.

"I'm proud that our defense showed good resolve and intensity and the ability to continue to play hard after 97 plays (last week), which is a lot," McCartney said. "Our backs were pinned for a good portion of the game. But, no, I'm not satisfied by a long shot. I know we can play better defense."

The Hawkeyes (1-2) figure to provide the Buffs (3-0) with their best test so far.

"Iowa is a powerful football team, far superior to the teams we've just played," McCartney said. "Their offensive line is made up of fifth-year seniors who are extremely well-developed physically. They play well together. Their quarterback (Jim Hartlieb) is a very accurate passer who is hitting on 66 percent of his throws. Danan Hughes is a legitimate first-round draft choice as a receiver. We've got big problems matching up with him."

"They've got weapons on both sides of the ball. They'll contend for the Big 10 title. They're stung a little bit right now because they lost two big games, but this is the kind of team that can beat any team in the nation."

The Hawkeyes, losers to North Carolina State 24-14 and top-ranked Miami 24-7, rebounded to beat Iowa State 21-7 two weeks ago. They were idle last week.

Norris, Brown ready for title fight

Simon Brown, shown here last March, faces WBC super welterweight champion Terry Norris on Saturday night. Norris is a 6-1 favorite.

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Sugar Ray Leonard, who was battered into retirement by Terry Norris, says he doesn't like Norris' style. Not Norris' boxing style, his hairstyle.

"I think he can become a star if he gets a new haircut," Leonard said recently of the fighter who knocked him down twice and easily outpointed over 12 rounds on Feb. 9, 1991. Norris laughed on hearing of Sugar Ray's opinion and said he will not give up his habit of shaving a message into the back of his head.

"Knockout" was the message, Norris carried into the ring for his last fight against Meldrick Taylor last May 9.

The 25-year-old Norris stopped Taylor in the fourth round of his seventh defense of the WBC super welterweight title. "I'll have something," Norris said Thursday when asked what the barbered message would be Saturday night when he fights Simon Brown, who is moving up in weight in a bid for a second world title.

Norris was a 6-1 favorite in the 12-round bout at the Caesars Palace Sports Pavilion.

"I've been in tough fights before; now I'm really going to be in a tough fight," said the 28-year-old Brown, who lost the WBC welterweight title when he was outpointed by James "Buddy" McGirt last Nov. 29.

"I know he's a tough fighter," Norris said. "He has a lot of power like Mugabi and Jackson."

Norris won a share of the 154-pound title when he knocked out John "The Beast" Mugabi in the first round March 31, 1990.

That was his second championship bid. In the first, he was making Julian Jackson look foolish until he went to the ropes and got cute in the second round of the WBC junior middleweight title match.

"I got a little too cocky," Norris recalled of the knockout loss. "He caught me with a good shot. It was lesson."

It was lesson taken to heart. The speedy boxer-puncher has won 12 straight, six by knockout.

Brown has fought once and won since his loss to McGirt, which snapped a 13-fight winning streak that included seven successful title defenses.

He spent five days in a hospital for treatment of dehydration after the McGirt fight.

"I had problems making weight," Brown said of the 147-pound welterweight limit. "But it was always one more fight. I did everything my body would do to make the weight. When you don't have body to perform even if the mind and heart want to. ..."

"I think he will be much stronger," Norris said. "That's a thing that's been on my mind. If he was weak at 147, he'll be more comfortable at 154."

Norris has a 32-3 record, with 18 knockouts. Brown, whose style is to force the action, has a 36-2 record, with 27 knockouts.

Cubs, Cards to remain in East

Owners' committee nixs Vincent's realignment

NEW YORK (AP) — Baseball's executive council rescinded National League realignment Thursday, a move that was expected following the resignation of commissioner Fay Vincent.

The Chicago Cubs, who are owned by the Tribune Co., had obtained a preliminary injunction blocking realignment, which would have moved the Cubs and St. Louis Cardinals to the NL West and the Atlanta Braves and Cincinnati Reds to the NL East.

During the maneuvering that forced Vincent from office on Sept. 7, some owners were said to have promised the Cubs they would move for realignment to be withdrawn if the commissioner was forced out.

David Hiller, vice president and general counsel of the Tribune Co., said the action was taken by the executive council on Wednesday evening. The Cubs and lawyers for the commissioner's office filed a joint motion Thursday dismissing the lawsuit, and U.S. District Judge Suzanne B. Conlon dissolved the injunction and vacated her July 23 decision, meaning it cannot be used as precedent.

The 10-person executive council rules the major leagues when the commissioner's office is vacant. Bud Selig of the Milwaukee Brewers, the council's chairman, denied earlier Thursday that realignment was withdrawn, then issued a statement praising the settlement.

"I consider this an extremely positive development for baseball," Selig said. "We can move forward to resolve the realignment issue through consensus rather than confrontation, which is the approach I would like to take to each and every problem confronting the game today."

After the Cubs obtained the injunction, the situation was further clouded by the San Francisco Giants' proposed move to St. Petersburg, Fla., an issue still unresolved. On Aug. 31, Vincent said he gave the NL permission to issue a 1993 schedule without realignment because of pressure from the Major League Baseball Players Association, which has the contractual right to demand a draft by July 1. The NL then issued its schedule to clubs on Sept. 2.

The executive council on Thursday appointed a committee of six owners and the two league presidents to "examine all aspects of divisional alignment, scheduling and possible new formats."

Bill Giles of the Philadelphia Phillies, who was named to the panel, said "it seems to me that we probably will have something by January or February."

"We have to look at more creative things, see if there's any consensus on three divisions, an extra round of playoffs, interleague play, possibly switching teams between leagues," Giles said.

The National League voted 10-2 for realignment on March 4, but the Cubs vetoed the move, a right granted in the league constitution to all teams involved in proposed shifts. Six clubs requested that Vincent use his "best interests" power under the Major League Agreement, and the commissioner ordered realignment on July 6.

The Cubs, concerned that a switch to the NL West would cause them to play more West Coast night games — and thus decrease advertising revenue for the Tribune Co. on its superstation, WGN — sued the following day. Conlon granted the injunction and a hearing on the commissioner's attempt to lift it was scheduled for Sept. 30 before the 7th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

In the interim, Vincent resigned under pressure, partly because of the maneuvering by the Cubs. Vincent said Thursday he didn't have any comments on the withdrawal.

"This was clearly a prudent and reasonable course of action in light of the fact that baseball recently empowered a committee to examine the entire issue of divisional alignment," Selig said in his statement. "Furthermore, because the deadline for establishing the 1993 National League schedule have already passed, it is not possible to realign for the coming season. These factors have given baseball a welcome opportunity to examine this difficult question without undue haste and in the spirit of cooperation, rather than forcing the issue in the courts."

Stanton Cook, chairman of the Tribune Co., did not return a telephone call to his office, but issued a statement saying "we are pleased that this matter has been resolved."

"We look forward to working with all the other clubs to explore the issues of league alignment for the future," Cook said.

Giants' move still on hold

NEW YORK (AP) — The chairman of baseball's ownership committee said Thursday his group expects to make a recommendation soon on the proposed move of the San Francisco Giants to St. Petersburg, Fla.

Fred Kuhlmann of the St. Louis Cardinals wouldn't say what he meant by soon, but others said a decision could come in the next two weeks.

A group led by Vincent J. Naimoli has offered to buy the team from Bob Lurie for $115 million — of which $10 million would be loaned back by Lurie. A group led by Charlotte Hornets owner George Shinn said it intends to make a counteroffer that would keep the Giants in San Francisco, but hasn't made a formal proposal to the National League.

"We're going to be very shortly making a decision with regard to recommendation," Kuhlmann said from St. Louis.

"Then it will be up to Bud Selig on how he wants to handle it from there."

Selig, who owns the Milwaukee Brewers, is chairman of baseball's executive council, which is exercising the powers of the commissioner following the resignation of Fay Vincent. Selig has not given a timetable for deciding the Giants' fate.

"There needs to be a lot of thought and a lot of consideration," Selig said Thursday. "It's just been discussed a little."

Stacy Walters, a spokeswoman for San Francisco Mayor Frank M. Jordan, said Shinn's group was still awaiting receipt of the Giants' financial records, a step necessary before a formal offer is made.

"We not yet been given permission by baseball to release those records," Giants spokesman Duffy Jennings said.

Study critical of college hiring

WASHINGTON (AP) — Only as men's basketball coaches do minorities hold more than a handful of the top sports jobs at major NCAA schools, the General Accounting Office said in a report to be released Friday.

"Except for historically black schools, minorities rarely held athletic department positions at Division I schools," the watchdog agency said in a report to Congress. "Head coach of men's basketball was the position most frequently held by minorities."

The GAO, which surveyed all 298 Division I schools, found only one traditionally non-black college that had a black head football coach in the 1990-91 school year.

And that was Dennis Green at Stanford, who resigned to become head coach of the NFL's Minnesota Vikings.

The agency also found only one school where a woman was the athletic director for both men's and women's sports programs — Merrily Dean Baker at Michigan State.

The survey showed that football coaches enjoyed the highest pay, averaging $114,759. Women's basketball coaches had the lowest, $44,996, compared with an average total pay package of $110,180 for men's basketball coaches.

However, when comparing the salaries of men and women who coach women's basketball, women came out ahead. Their average pay was $47,356 compared with $41,279 for male coaches of women's teams.

Fourteen percent of the traditionally non-black schools had black basketball coaches, according to the survey, but fewer than 5 percent of them had minority athletic directors or as directors of the women's sports programs. About 8 percent of 256 non-black schools that responded to the survey had minorities coaching their women's basketball teams.

Rep. Cardiss Collins, D-Ill., who requested the study as chairwoman of the House commerce and consumer protection subcommittee, said it confirms the poor record of college athletic departments in putting blacks and women into their top jobs.

"Employment practices for minorities at major colleges and universities is worse than the dismal record of professional baseball and football," she said.

Jones scapegoat for Bengals' defensive woes

CINCINNATI (AP) — Cincinnati Bengals cornerback Rod Jones, who has received some of the blame for Sunday's loss to Green Bay, says he's used to being a punching bag.

Jones says it's a self-perpetuating effect of his unwanted nickname, "Toast." A Tampa radio station came up with the moniker during Jones' days with the Buccaneers.

"Something like that catches on," Jones said. "When I left (Tampa), a teammate, Harry Hamilton, told me, 'That name is going to be laid on you again. Someone else is going to ask you about it when you go to another team.' He said just to be prepared and not worry about it."

At least some accounts of Sunday's game have criticized Jones' performance on two key passes in the winning drive by the Green Bay Packers.

But Bengals defensive coordinator Ron Lynn came to Jones' defense on Wednesday.

Rod played it the way we asked him to play it," Lynn said. "I have no complaints about the way Rod played."

That's a little different from what Lynn said Sunday.

Immediately after the game, both Lynn and head coach Dave Shula referred to the cornerback's responsibility for "re-routing" the receiver.

But Lynn said the game films show Jones did his job, particularly on the 35-yard pass to Kittrick Taylor that produced the winning touchdown.

"Rod didn't have to physically re-route the receiver because the receiver broke inside, then went outside," Lynn said. "Rod's job was to not let him get outside at the start, to fall off and cushion a deep throw into the corner. I don't mean into the corner of the end zone, but along the sideline in the 18-19 yard area."

"Rod was at least 18 yards deep and still running down the field when the pass was made. I have no qualms with what he did."

Fernandus Vinson, the safety charged with covering the deep area, overreacted to a fake to the middle, a move that left him unable to get back to the sidelines in time to disrupt Taylor.

of the nation's best teams, stifled the Hoosier offense, but Berticelli knows their capabilities.

"They've been shutout three times, but that's probably the first time that's happened in 100 years," he quipped. "It's not because they're not dangerous, they just came up against some tremendous goalkeeping."

The Irish have some pretty tough goalkeeping of their own. Sophomore Bert Bader has registered 13 shutouts during his career, just nine short of Notre Dame's all-time record.

Senior captain Mario Tricoli anchors the defense in front of Bader, and they will face quite a challenge tonight.

"We are a different team defensively than the last time we played them," Berticelli said. "We have improved defensively, but we still need to be better."

The Irish have shown improvement on both sides of the ball this year. Freshmen Bill Lanza and Eric Ferguson have bolstered the offense, along with junior Mike Palmer and senior Kevin Pendergast. Pendergast's early-season scoring barrage has lifted him into the Top 10 on Notre Dame's career goal-scoring list with 27 career goals.

"We are a much better team than we were a month ago," Berticelli added. "But so is Indiana, so we will have to be prepared for a tough game tonight."

Pirates all but wrap up East

MONTREAL (AP) — Pittsburgh virtually wrapped up its third successive NL East title as Doug Drabek pitched his fourth consecutive complete game and Barry Bonds hit a three-run homer for the 9-3 victory.

The victory moved the Pirates seven games ahead of Montreal and reduced Pittsburgh's magic number to three. It was Pittsburgh's 90th victory of the season, the third consecutive year in which the Pirates have won at least 90 games.

Drabek (15-10) allowed seven hits, struck out four and walked one for his fifth consecutive victory. He is 3-1 against the Expos this season.

Cecil Espy and Jose Lind added two RBIs each as the Pirates banged out 14 hits off Bill Krueger (0-1) and four relievers. Bonds hit a game-clinching homer in the sixth.

Phillies 3, Cubs 2

PHILADELPHIA—Rickey Jordan's pinch-hit RBI single following a 10th-inning brawl gave Philadelphia a victory over Chicago.

Darren Daulton Daulton singled off Bob Scanlan (3-6) with two outs and went to second when Dave Hollins was hit in the shoulder by a first-pitch fastball. Hollins charged the mound and a bench-clearing brawl ensued, after which Hollins, Scanlan and Cubs' manager Jim Lefebvre were all ejected.

It was the second time in the game that Hollins was hit with a pitch; he leads the majors with 18. Chuck McElroy relieved Scanlan and Jordan lined a 3-2 pitch to right field for the game-winning hit.

Mitch Williams (4-8) pitched two scoreless innings for the win.

Cardinals 4, Mets 3

ST. LOUIS—Todd Zeile's bases-loaded single capped a wild 14th inning as St. Louis rallied to beat the Mets.

The game was scoreless before Jeff Kent's three-run homer off Bryn Smith (3-1) put the Mets ahead in the top of the 14th.

Winfield sets RBI mark

BALTIMORE (AP) — Dave Winfield became the oldest player to drive in 100 runs, collecting four RBIs with a homer and a two-run double for Toronto as they defeated the Orioles 8-2.

The victory enabled Toronto to stay 3 1/2 games ahead of Milwaukee and open a six-game lead over third-place Baltimore in the AL East. Toronto's magic number is six, four to eliminate the Orioles, who have lost 11 of 17.

The 40-year-old Winfield has 103 RBIs. The previous high by a player in his 40s was 99, by Detroit's Darrell Evans in 1987.

Winfield's 26th homer gave the Blue Jays a 2-0 first-inning lead. He then capped a five-run second with a double into the left-field corner to make it 7-0.

Jimmy Key (12-13) allowed two runs and four hits in six innings for his fourth straight win. Ben McDonald (12-13), charged with seven runs in 1 2-3 innings, lost his sixth consecutive decision.

Athletics 4, White Sox 1

CHICAGO — Oakland reduced its magic number to clinch the AL West to two as Bob Welch won his 199th career game and Dennis Eckersley recorded his 51st save.

Eckersley, who has blown only two save opportunities, got his 11th consecutive save despite giving up his fifth homer of the season to Dan Pasqua in the ninth. He entered in the eighth with runners on first and second and retired Frank Thomas on a pop up before striking out George Bell.

Welch (11-6) won for the eighth time his last 10 decisions. He allowed four hits struck out two and walked two in five-plus innings.

Michigan leads Big Ten's search for outside wins

(AP) Michigan's fourth-ranked Wolverines will be one of the few Big Ten football teams favored to win this weekend.

Big Ten teams have a 10-13-1 record against outside foes. This will be the last week of regular-season intersectional play before the start of the conference race.

Michigan takes on a Houston team that defeated Illinois 31-13 last week, but the Wolverines should do a better job against the Cougars than the Illini. Indiana and Wisconsin are also favored.

Indiana takes on Missouri, and Wisconsin is at home against Northern Illinois.

Iowa, Purdue, Michigan State and Minnesota also will be in action, but all four are on the road and are underdogs. No. 12 Ohio State, Illinois and Northwestern are idle this week.

Iowa, after having a week off, travels to No. 10 Colorado; Purdue is at No. 6 Notre Dame; Michigan State is at No. 25; Boston College and Minnesota has a night game at Pittsburgh.

Michigan coach Gary Moeller wasn't sure earlier in the week who would start at quarterback. Elvis Grbac had an ankle injury and missed last week's game. Todd Collins stepped in and threw two touchdown passes in a 35-3 victory over Oklahoma State.

The Iowa-Colorado match should be interesting. Colorado since we've had so many days off," commented an excited Guerrero. "We know we're good and that we can play with them."

Kickoff time is scheduled for 7:30.

had to come off a 17-0 deficit to edge Minnesota 21-20.

Iowa coach Hayden Fry said, "I didn't think any team could match (No. 1) Miami in speed, but Colorado comes close."

Minnesota has faced outstanding quarterbacks the first two weeks and now goes against one of the more prolific passers in the nation in Pitt's Alex Van Pelt. Van Pelt completed 36 of 55 passes for 395 yards and two touchdowns last week, but Pitt lost to Rutgers 21-16.

Van Pelt surpassed Dan Marino's passing record of 8,597 yards and also completed a school record 91-yard touchdown pass to Dietrich Jells.

Portland, Stanford, and Wisconsin loom ahead in the upcoming week, intensifying the importance of the Duke game to start the stretch on a positive note.

"The next four games are very important for us," commented Petrucelli as he prepared his team for yesterday's practice. "We've had a good week of practice, and I think we're ready."

Duke will be the first test, and a hard one for the Notre Dame defense. For the first time all season the Irish defenders will be forced to stop a three forward attack.

Petrucelli has inserted Julie Vogal into the defensive line moving her from midfielder position to help combat the Blue Devil attack.

Sophomore Heidi Durham is the leader of that unit, after totaling seven goals, five assists, and nineteen points a year ago.

Offensively the Irish will be facing a tough Duke defense, led by goalkeeper Gretchen Young. The junior started in fourteen games last season, averaging only 1.66 goals per game.

Notre Dame will attempt to use its speed to counter the Blue Devil defense. Sophomore Jodi Hartwig, and Freshmen Rosella Guerrero and Ragen Coyne top the list of fleet-footed scorers who will put pressure on Duke.

"We are going to need to get a lot of numbers forward," commented Petrucelli. "We matchup well with their speed."

The Irish have had four days off since their last contest, a 4-1 win over Dayton, something which may work to their advantage.

The Saint Mary's volleyball team huddles during a break from its 15-12, 15-6, 15-9 thumping of Hope College

Saint Mary's volleyball destroys Hope College

By JENNIFER GUSTAFSON
Sports Writer

After a slow start, the Saint Mary's volleyball team was able to hold off the Flying Dutch of Hope College in three matches (15-12, 15-6, 15-9).

In the first game, the Flying Dutch jumped out to a 9-0 lead before the Belles settled down and began a comeback.

"They were a good serving team, but once we got use to it, we got into the game," noted Belles coach Julie Schroeder-Biek.

Once they got into the game, the Belles tied the score at twelve and never fell behind again. They jumped out to a 4-0 lead in the second game, and a 3-0 lead in the final game.

Mentally, the Belles became tougher as the game progressed. "In the beginning, it seemed like we knew we were better than this," said Schroeder-Biek. "We were beating ourselves."

Senior co-captain Laura Panowicz agreed. "Once we have control, we stay with it. We won't stop for anything. You can see it on the court as we come together more mentally and physically."

Defense has been the main focus at practice for the Belles this week. This extra work came through in their blocking. In comparison to other Division III schools, Rachel Zimmer of the Flying Dutch feels that the Belles blocking is quite advanced. "They are a really good team. They blocked very well. They were like a wall and we couldn't run any of our quick stuff effectively," said Zimmer.

Schroeder-Biek was thrilled with the way the defense has been improving and is especially happy with first time middle blocker Andrea Salazar. "I am pleased with her progress. Middle blocker is a difficult position, but Andrea is really coming through for us," noted Schroeder-Biek.

Another strong point for the Belles has been the bench. Every player received playing time in the showing against the Dutch. "We have a very strong bench and I am comfortable throwing any of them into the game," noted Schroeder-Biek.

The Belles hope to use this game as a confidence booster for this weekend in their triangular meet against North Central College and Carroll College.

"This win was extremely important for us," Panowicz pointed out. "It should help our morale and physical play. It will make a tremendous difference in our triangular this weekend-it will make us more prepared."

49ers look to capitalize on Saints' lack of offense

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — You'll get plenty of opinions on what's wrong with the New Orleans Saints offense.

"We're not in sync right now," said offensive coordinator Carl Smith.

The unit isn't holding the ball long enough, said receiver Eric Martin. "It's about execution. We've just got to find a way to get it done."

Guard Steve Trapilo said a review of game films indicates the line is doing a good job, "but it's not quite clicking yet."

"We have not had any consistency," said coach Jim Mora. "Our passing game is poor. Our percentage of completions is bad."

No matter what the problem, a cure had better pop up before Sunday night's game in the Superdome against the San Francisco 49ers, Mora said.

"Had it not been for our ability to play defense, we'd be 0-3 right now," Mora said. "Offensively, we're going to have to move the ball and score some points or we're going to lose."

Both teams are 2-1 and on top of the NFC West, where the Saints are defending champions. But they've gone about it in far different ways.

San Francisco's Steve Young has completed 45 of 66 passes. The 49ers have the NFL's top offense with 439 yards per game, the NFC's top rushing offense with 154 yards and the conference's No. 1 passing attack with 285 yards.

San Francisco's 93 points, second in the NFL to Buffalo, are 14 more than the Saints and their opponents combined this year. Twenty-four of the Saints' 51 points came in the second half in a win against Chicago. Two touchdowns against the Bears were scored by the defense.

New Orleans has averaged 258 yards per game. Bobby Hebert has completed 34 of 74 passes for 539 yards and four touchdowns.

Returns highlight young season

(AP) The first three weekends of the NFL season have seen 26 touchdowns scored on returns, the highest total at this point since the league began keeping statistics in 1932.

The scoring returns included nine fumble recoveries, eight interceptions, six punt returns, one kickoff return, one blocked field goal and one blocked punt.

Not included in the total was a spectacular kickoff return Sunday by Houston rookie Corey Harris, whose 98-yard dash to the end zone was called back by a penalty.

"I've never felt anything more exciting than that," Harris said. "I was standing there in the end zone doing whatever I felt like. And then I turned around and realized what had happened."

Even without getting the touchdown, the rookie from Vanderbilt still finished with three returns for 83 yards in the Oilers' 23-20 overtime victory over Kansas City that kept Houston one game behind Pittsburgh in the AFC Central.

"At least that kickoff showed what we're capable of doing," Harris said. "It was called back, but I think to break it like that you can say it's been done. Now it's just a matter of getting a few things corrected."

Harris corrected an earlier problem with bobbling the football that cost him the job of returning punts for the Oilers (2-1), who play host to winless San Diego on Sunday. He blamed the problem on wearing old contact lenses.

"It's easier to catch kickoffs because you know where the ball is going," Harris said. "It goes up from one spot and so you can track it better. Punts are different. You have to make a lot more adjustments on the punts."

Elsewhere in the NFL on Sunday, it's Atlanta at Chicago, Buffalo at New England, Denver at Cleveland, Minnesota at Cincinnati, Tampa Bay at Detroit, Miami at Seattle, the New York Jets at the Los Angeles Rams, Pittsburgh at Green Bay and San Francisco at New Orleans. On Monday night, the Los Angeles Raiders are at Kansas City.

Dallas, Indianapolis, the New York Giants, Philadelphia, Phoenix and Washington have open dates.

Because of Harris' depth-perception problems on punts, Pat Coleman is still Houston's punt returner.

"I really think that the opportunity to return punts will come, but right now I'm returning kickoffs," Harris said. "Coleman is doing a good job of that and although he didn't have any long returns, he did a good job of protecting the ball. You've got to protect it first."

The Houston-San Diego matchup pairs the NFL's top pass attack at 315 yards per game against the Chargers' No. 1 AFC pass defense, allowing 164.7 yards. The last time the two teams met was 1990 when Warren Moon threw for 355 yards and two TDs in a 17-7 victory.

San Diego has amassed over 300 yards for two consecutive games, but hasn't won. The Chargers were outscored 16-0 in the fourth quarter Sunday against the Steelers in a 23-6 defeat.

Pittsburgh seeks a 4-0 start for the first time since 1979 when it makes its first visit to Green Bay since 1983. The game pairs rookie coaches Bill Cowher and Mike Holmgren, who got his first coaching victory Sunday on the Brett Favre's last minute touchdown pass against Cincinnati.

Favre, who replaced Don Majkowski because of an ankle injury, will get his first start. Terrell Buckley had a 58-yard punt return touchdown for the Packers against the Bengals.

The biggest game between division rivals Sunday matches San Francisco and New Orleans, both 2-1 atop the NFC West.

If the past is any indication, the game should be a close one. The last five games at the Superdome between the two teams have been decided by a total of 15 points.

The 49ers are still waiting for the return of Joe Montana, but without him they have the NFL's top-ranked offense at 439 yards per game. Steve Young is No. 2 in the league with a quarterback rating of 123.2, trailing only the Eagles' Randall Cunningham.

San Francisco is facing a Saints defense that has surrendered an NFC-low 28 points. New Orleans has yet to allow a passer to throw for 300 yards or a receiver to have 100 yards in receptions.

Things such as:

1. The large sums of money given to the university for television rights. Funds which benefit the entire student body, not just the athletic department. (Ya, right!)

2. The opportunity to sweat out or freeze off the effects of the alcohol consumed during pregame tailgaters, so the enjoyment of the game will be untainted by foreign substances.

Home games will feature sober, financially-beneficial entertainment, while away games bring opportunities to improve one's academic standing and the appearance of campus.

Personal enjoyment of Notre Dame Saturday should never decrease due to the presence of commercials. Take a lesson from the networks, who don't let the football game compromise their enjoyment of making money.

Enjoy Notre Dame football, despite the delays

With most of the attention of this young football season centered on the tie with Michigan, the defense, and most recently the Irish Guard, one major complaint has yet to be voiced concerning Notre Dame football, the length of the games.

Notre Dame Saturday, as NBC likes to call it, and College Gameday, ABC's spiffy name for its slate of games, have both featured the Irish this season, but only as a sidebar to the onslaught of commercials which have filled our TV screens.

Both the Michigan and Michigan State contests lasted over four hours, with the actual play itself lasting only an hour. (four fifteen-minute quarters) It boggles the mind that a network must finance three minutes of commercials for every minute of football.

I know that one man can't change television's greed, but at least I can use it to my advantage.

The next televised away game will pose an interesting challenge for me. During the time intervals occupied by commercials, I will attempt to do one or more of the following things:

1. Watch the entire Godfather trilogy
2. Complete the construction of the quad in front of the DeBartolo Building.
3. Get my American Studies degree. (with honors)
4. Knit sweaters for all 22 members of Irish safety John Covington's family.

I am fairly certain that at least one of my tasks will be completed and I believe there exists a faint possibility that I could complete two or three. The point being that I will have used the commercial time wisely, not wasting a single moment.

When attending games, these opportunities don't exist. We cannot accomplish any feats, or even snicker at the newest Little Ceaser Pizza commercial. We must sit in the stands, our knees aching, passing the wasted time by throwing cups and bad-mouthing the poor NBC employee who stands and signals when the commercials end and play can begin.

The mumpers from the student section were civilized during the Michigan game. "This is so annoying," and "I hate that guy" were the most frequently heard comments aimed at NBC's TV timeout boy.

But I fear the escalation of the crowds frustration to the point where things may get out of hand. Who knows what will be said later in the year, say, at the Penn State game.

"I know where that guy lives," and "I bet I could reach him with a small-caliber rifle" may seem far-fetched but who knows what will enter the minds of Irish faithful when the temperature tips below zero, and they are waiting an extra three hours so Bud Light gets their say.

Hopefully fans will be tolerant, keeping in mind a number of beneficial things resulting from the commercials.

Irish soccer teams face stiff challenges

Women confident against Duke

By GEORGE DOHRMANN
Sports Writer

Sporting a new haircut and a newfound air of confidence about his team, Notre Dame women's soccer coach Chris Petrucelli couldn't be happier about his team's chances against 14th-ranked Duke tonight at Alumni Field.

After shrugging off comments from his players concerning his newly trimmed scalp, Petrucelli talked about his team's chances with a confidence not seen this season.

"I think we have a good team, and we match up with them well," said Petrucelli. "We will be comfortable playing at home, and I think it will be an advantage for us."

A small tone of confidence has existed in Petrucelli's voice throughout the season, but nothing resembling the confidence the fifth-year coach has in his team going into today's game.

Perhaps Petrucelli knows something that opposing coaches don't about the 16th-ranked Irish. It could be the fact that his youthful squad is coming together as a unit, and prepared to step up its level of play.

In early season matchups with highly regarded Rutgers and N.C. State, Petrucelli talked about the importance of his young players to avoid intimidation, and to raise the level of their game to the college level. Now the Irish coach feels his team could beat just about any team in the country.

That feeling will be put to the test in the upcoming week. The matchup with the Blue Devils is the first of four contests with ranked opponents.

Men ready for Indiana rematch

By JASON KELLY
Sports Writer

This one is for real.

When the Notre Dame men's soccer team met Indiana in the Golden Boot Classic last month, they suffered a 2-0 exhibition loss, but tonight's game in Bloomington will be different.

Neither team put too much emphasis on the exhibition, using it only as a chance to improve before the beginning of the regular season.

"We were only looking at our team and we weren't trying to be organized as far as scouting Indiana," Irish coach Mike Berticelli said of the exhibition. "It was way too early in the season and both teams used it only as a practice game."

It didn't look like a practice game. From the physical play, it appeared that both teams were fighting for a championship and the same is expected tonight.

When the Irish and the Hoosiers tangle it is always a battle, but there is a mutual respect between the two programs.

"It will be a very competitive game as it always is when we play Indiana," Berticelli explained. "But it's never a dirty game, both teams just go out and play very hard."

The Irish will have to play hard to knock off the explosive Hoosiers.

However, Indiana has proven to be vulnerable against some tough defensive teams, suffering three shutouts in the young season.

20th-ranked women's volleyball achieves balance

By DAN PIER
Sports Writer

On a 9-1 team ranked 20th in the nation, one would expect to find some standouts; a superstar or two who usually grab the spotlight.

It's not that the Notre Dame volleyball team doesn't have those players, it just seems that everyone stands out about equally, rendering the spotlight useless.

You need a floodlight for this team.

"Our balance is one of the things that makes us a strong team, and a difficult team to play against," said head coach Debbie Brown. "A team can't come in and say, 'We just need to stop this player or that player'. That makes it tough to defend us and tough to scout us."

Three teams will try to deal with that problem this weekend when the Irish travel to the William and Mary Invitational. On Saturday, Notre Dame will face Northeastern, a team which returns four starters from a 31-13 squad, and the host team, which promises to provide the best competition in the tournament. Georgetown, off to a slow start after a 23-14 mark a year ago, awaits on Sunday.

The equality amongst Notre Dame's players is evident on paper as well as on the court. Five different Irish head up five of the major statistical categories: Christy Peters leads the team in kills, Cynthia May in attack percentage, Janelle Karlan in assists, Marilyn Cragin in service aces, and Jessica Fiebelkorn in digs. The wealth is spread particularly evenly on offense, where seven players are averaging well over one kill per match.

Brown believes that when her team's potency catches up with its balance, it will be an even greater force to be reckoned with.

"We have excellent distribution right now," said the coach. "We're still working on our efficiency, though. If everyone brings that up just one notch, we will be where we want to be offensively."

Balance and teamwork rarely come about by mistake, and the Irish are no exception to that rule. Brown's leadership has certainly fostered those qualities, but she credits the players for creating the right atmosphere.

"The players are all team oriented," said the coach. "No one is seeking star status over the team. When they get recognized individually, it's not that they're embarrassed, but you get the feeling that they would almost rather have the team recognized as a whole."

Break out the floodlight, William and Mary. Here come the Irish.

The Observer/Jake Peters

The Notre Dame women's volleyball team, shown competing against Purdue, is now ranked 20th in the country as they head to the William & Mary Invitational to take on two top teams in Northeastern and Georgetown.
