Address Unknown

As the fall semester begins, 109 freshmen will be without permanent rooms. Assigned to study lounges in Flanner, Grace and both Pasquerillas, these incoming freshmen will suffer many problems because of their temporary status. The lack of privacy and the cramped quarters are inconveniences that hinder the students' adjustment to college. The homeless students also present extraordinary difficulties to hall staffs and their residents. Rectors and Resident Assistants must deal with the freshmen overflow without the proper facilities or time allotments. Permanent hall residents must confront the restriction of their living space and the ensuing overcrowding.

But these are not new problems. As early as 1972, over-subscription has been a recurring nightmare for each new class of freshmen. The Towers and the Pasquerillas have become a convenient rug under which to hide the overflow. The administration has not found a way to resolve the problem, and with the secrecy surrounding the overcrowding perpetuated by the Office of Student Residences, it is difficult to ascertain what some possible solutions would be.

The administration does, however, have a couple of obvious solutions. Upperclassmen could lose their four-year housing guarantee. Under that system, the fundamental residentiality of the campus would be shattered. Or the University could make certain that it does not admit more students than it can house by making more conservative picks from the admissions waiting list. Financially, Notre Dame cannot benefit from empty rooms.

We recognize the delicacy of this situation. Whatever the administration acting through Residences does, there are negative consequences. The only satisfactory solution is in the form of additional dormitories and financial planning that does not break down when a few rooms are not filled.

In the spring of 1987, University President Father Edward "Monk" Malloy established a residentiality task force to examine all aspects of residence life. Freshmen suffering the injustice of adjustment to college life from make-shift rooms should head the task force's priority list. By a close examination of the problem through Malloy's task force, a solution must be found.

Life at Notre Dame: The Truth must be Told

You're nervous!
You're excited!
You're here! No more boring class trips to see exhibit upon exhibit of Indian artifacts. No more curfews. No more parents to nag you everyday. But then again, you're no longer a big fish in a little pond. No more homcooked meals. No more parents to hold your hand when things aren't so great.

So the big question on your mind is what to expect now that you are a student at the University of Notre Dame du Lac. By now you've probably had it up to the old kazoo with all those well-intentioned but all too sugary words of advice found in the freshman literature, the "make the most of your four years" and "learn to budget your time" junk. And somehow Mom and Dad's departing tidbits of advice don't cut it as they drive down Notre Dame Ave. with their brand spanking new University of Notre Dame sticker on the family wagon. "Have fun, but don't forget that you're here to study," says Dad in his sternest voice. "Don't be afraid to call. We love you," Mom manages to say between the tears and blowing the schnozz in the Kleenex.

Well, I'm going to try to give you a rough idea of what to expect your first few months in Domerville.

First off, get used to the following dumb questions: "Where are you from?" "What dorm do you live in?" and the fan's favorite, "What's your major?" After awhile, you'll graduate to the big leagues where there are only two questions: "Where are you going for break?" and the subsequent, "How was your break?"

Moving on to the ND version of the Dating Game - SYR's. And as on t.v., there are winners and losers. Sometimes you win and sometimes you get drunk and ditch your date. But they are always interesting and they do give us the opportunity to make a play for that someone special. A little advice: call your dates early, and unless you bear a resemblance to Vanna White or Tom Selleck (depending on your gender, of course), don't put your picture in the Dogbook. Oops, it's a little late for that one I guess. Sorry!

Hard to believe, I know, but things do get a little slow in Indiana once in awhile. A small group of Gloomy Guses have banded together to complain in order to entertain themselves. Their topics run the gamut from head coaches to dining hall entrees. Sports- "Loser Lou" "Heave Holtz." ND males - "They're all socially demented."

ND females - "There aren't any." Ethanol - "It smells worse than New Jersey." The Peace Memorial (alias Stonehenge II) - "Butt ugly." Hungarian Noodlebake - "Low grade-dogfood."

But for the most part, everyone loves it here. You get to call some of your professors by their first names. "Hey, Howie," you'll say, "why did I fail my calculus test?" Pretty neat, huh? Hanging out in a 12x12 room drinking Old Milwaukee, listening to worn-out Springsteen tunes will soon seem natural to you, and you might even come to enjoy it. And it will come as a shock for you young Fightin' Irish studs to discover how many leopard-bikini-underwear ar-wearing Saint Mary's girls named Desiree and Lola there are "looking for a good time" as you walk back to your dorm with a few Panty Raid, shall we say, souvenirs.

Well, it's about time to bring this slightly off-centered view of campus life to a merciful close. Notice that there was no mention of studying or going to classes. No need to spoil the best four years of your life, right? ■

A New Look for North

Notre Dame continues to receive her face-lift as reconstruction work begins on North Dining Hall. Although the dining hall will be closed during summers, William Hickey, director of University Food Services, said it will be in operation for the fall and spring semesters. Sections of the dining hall, however, may be closed separately. This two-year expansion project will provide accommodations for the additional patrons at North Dining Hall when Siegfried and Knott Halls open in the fall of 1988.

And Introducing...

The Class of 1991 is already breaking records. The class of approximately 1820 students includes 1150 men and 670 women, the highest amount of women ever accepted in a single class. The class also has 10 percent minority students, another all time-high for Notre Dame. The average freshman received an SAT score in the low 1200s and was ranked in the top 6 percent of his or her class. "Academically, it's another very good class," said Kevin Rooney, director of admissions. "The biggest difference is the high number of women and minorities. I'm very happy about this class."

Artful Additions

The University of Notre Dame now possess the largest North American collection of art work by the late Ivan Mestrovic. The University recently acquired nearly 300 pieces of the artist's work from the estate of his wife, Olga. Two of the most notable new pieces are a 1917 bronze statue of the Virgin and Child and a 1940s plaster self-portrait. The pre-World War II pieces fill the missing links in the University's collection. Only the Mestrovic collections in the artist's former homes in Split and Zagreb, Croatia, can compare. Mestrovic spent several years living on the Notre Dame campus, dividing his time between teaching and his art.

Non-Profit Athletics

University of Notre Dame President Father Edward "Monk" Malloy recently announced to the South Bend Tribune that Notre Dame athletics would not produce a profit for the University this year. Costs to train, equip and provide medical care for athletes are rising while revenues from televised football and basketball games are declining, Malloy said. Also, Notre Dame has only five home games during the 1987 season. The gate receipts for two of these games, Navy and the University of Southern California, will be split 50-50 rather than the normal 80-20. According to the Tribune article, all sports programs will be affected by the loss in football and basketball revenue since these two sports subsidize the others.

Survival of the Homeless

82 men and 27 women are forced to live in study lounges due to a lack of on-campus housing

By Steffanie Keller

“Due to a shortage of on-campus housing, you have been placed in temporary housing. Your campus address will be a study lounge in...” While most Notre Dame students searched their mailboxes this summer for postcards and news from far-away friends, a large number of freshmen received this not so pleasant news of life at Notre Dame. Eighty-two men and 27 women will be calling study lounges in Grace, Flanner, Pasquerilla East and Pasquerilla West home this fall.

“The first students were notified that they would be in study lounges in July. As soon as we find out they are going to be out of the study lounges, we inform them,” said Jennifer Gooley, on-campus housing clerk at Notre Dame. “Some students who were originally assigned to study lounges have already received permanent housing.”

Which freshmen will be placed in temporary housing is determined by the date of confirmation, not the date of acceptance, said Gooley. “Some people don’t understand the difference between acceptance and confirmation. Some parents hold onto the confirmation card forever and ever. They think ‘He was accepted in March. It doesn’t matter if I don’t send this in until April’. But it is going to make a big difference.” Freshmen are assigned numbers according to their date of confirmation and are then placed in permanent housing as it

Evelyn Reinebold, director of student residences, was on vacation and unavailable for comment.

Gooley, who has been employed in the Office of Student Residences for only one year, said she was unsure of the reason behind the number of freshmen without permanent housing. “It has something to do with the number of upperclassmen being able to remain on campus, and the amount of freshmen accepted by admissions,” she said. “Somewhere in there the balance is off.”

Dr. Emil Hofman, dean of the freshman year of studies, said that he does not believe the problem is the number of freshmen accepted. “The problem isn’t that the freshmen class is oversubscribed. Absolutely not,” said Hofman. “The first reason people seem to want to give for the freshmen living in temporary housing is that too many freshmen were admitted. There is an economic fact of life that so many tuitions are needed to keep the University solvent - we need so many students, we need so many tuitions. Besides that we want to give the opportunity for a Notre Dame education to as many students as we can reasonably do so,” he said.

Hofman said he believes that the proper number of students are coming into Notre Dame for the conditions that are available.

Kevin Rooney, the director of admissions said he agrees with Hofman. "The number of freshmen we enroll is determined by an enrollment projection committee, which decides the number of freshmen. This year, we were aiming around 1820 (the figure was the same for the class of 1990) and then we fill the remaining enrollment with transfers," said Rooney.

"The big question with housing is what to do with seniors. Most schools have a lottery for seniors and reserve enough places for freshmen. Notre Dame tries to accommodate freshmen and seniors at the same time," said Rooney. "The fault here is that Notre Dame tries to be generous to everyone. We have more people who want to be on campus than we do rooms available."

The placement of freshmen in temporary housing poses a number of additional problems for freshmen and hall staff alike, said Brother Michael Smith, rector of Flanner Hall. Flanner is the temporary home for approximately 50 freshmen. "I think it's an injustice to the guys who have to live in the study lounges. They were never meant to be lived in. There's no soundproofing in those rooms at all. They are meant for study and that's it," Smith said.

"I also think it's an injustice to the guys that live in the hall. They are losing out on ten study rooms in the building," said Smith. "And it's an injustice to the R.A.s (resident assistants) who have to deal with it, and it's an injustice to the hall staff. We (Flanner and Grace) are already the largest halls on campus; we already bring in the most freshmen and then we're given 50 more freshmen on top of that. Last year, I had 210 freshmen living here," he said.

"Living in a study lounge was an inconvenience," said Pat McClanahan, a sophomore who spent his first semester in a Flanner study lounge before finding permanent housing in Keenan. "We didn't have places for all of our clothes. There was only one desk when we got there so we had to get desks from other places."

"You couldn't study in there because it was like a social lounge. People were used to coming in there to study so they just came in whenever they wanted," McClanahan said. "Another big problem was the noise. We could hear the guys upstairs and downstairs all the time because the study lounges aren't insulated like a regular dorm room. The noise travelled a lot. Also, living in the tower we could hear the elevator all the time."

McClanahan said that the living in temporary housing contributed to academic problems his first semester. "I definitely think that I would have done better academically first semester if I had been in a regular dorm room. I would have had more time to myself, and it would have been a lot easier to study in the room without all the noise," he said. "My roommates and I all did rather poorly first semester, except for one guy. I think the highest GPA was a 2.4."

Julianne Collinge, a resident assistant in Pasquerilla East who has three freshmen in temporary housing in her section will be specially tuned to the problems they may have. Collinge lived in a study lounge for a brief time her freshman year. "It was a little harder being a freshman in a study lounge, mainly because you knew it was temporary," said Collinge. "Meeting people was just fine. The uncertainty was really the hardest thing."

Mail was another problem for McClanahan. "When we lived in the study lounge, we always got our mail late. After we moved, letters that were mailed to our old address were even later," he said. "I got a Christmas card in March that had been sent to Flanner."

An even bigger problem than late mail for McClanahan was the move into another dorm second semester. "We had to make new friends. It was like starting school all over again," said McClanahan.

Hofman said that this is the biggest problem his office sees with the freshmen in temporary housing. "The biggest problem comes when they are told they must leave the temporary housing," said Hofman. That problem is severe at times. They don't want to leave their roommates and the friends that they have made."

John Tyler, assistant rector of Grace Hall, said that there can be positive aspects to the situation. "The number of people they get to know expands exponentially. You get to know some guys in the dorm, and then you move to another dorm but you still have those connections back in Grace. When their study lounge roommates move, they have access to getting to know a wider and wider range of people."

"The freshmen in the study lounges are considered part of the floor," said Tyler. "At the beginning of freshmen orientation, RAs give a talk to all the freshmen on their floor. Freshmen in study lounges are included in that. They are a part of that floor. They are members of the dorm. They get involved with section athletic events, section social events, dorm social events, dorm extracurricular events. For all intents and purposes, they are members of the dorm until they move out," Tyler said.

Sister Annette "Jo" Giarrante, rectress of Pasquerilla West, said that they will be treating freshmen in study lounges in the same manner other freshmen are treated. "We sent the same packet to the freshmen living in study lounges that we sent to the freshmen who have regular rooms so that they wouldn't feel left out."

Currently, 13 women are living in five of PWs six study lounge, but Giarrante said that she is unsure whether efforts to make them feel at home at Notre Dame will be successful.

beginning," Hofman said. "I absolutely would. It's so very important for their adjustment to the University. I understand why we have the arrangement that we do - up on the task force on residentiality. There needs to be a discussion about whether upperclassmen are 'eating' the beds of the freshmen because they aren't moving off campus."

"What are we going to do if most upperclassmen stay in the dorms? What are we going to do with the percentage of freshmen that's standard that we accept every year?" said Giarrante. "This problem will reoccur if we don't look at it closely. I'm not saying upperclassmen should move off campus, I'm saying if they bank on so many moving off campus, it really causes a problem when that doesn't happen."

Right now, the respective hall staffs are doing the best they can in dealing with the overloads. Smith said he's been told some freshmen may be living in Flanner study lounges all year, both semesters. Tyler said Grace is also prepared for a lengthy stay. "We're preparing to have them stay a while," said Tyler. "We expect the last ones to leave quite a few months down the road."

Tyler said that a request has been made for an additional assistant rector to deal exclusively with the freshmen in study lounges. "It would make not only the staff's responsibilities a little easier but also make it easier for the freshmen that live in the study lounges," said Tyler. "In addition to their R.A.s, there would be one person that is specifically designated to look after them."

As for the freshmen, 109 freshmen who will be living in study lounges until they receive that longed for, or in some cases dreaded, phone call telling them they have a permanent home at Notre Dame, they will be doing their best to make a place for themselves under the dome. "They really do amazingly well," said Smith. "Like all college students, they seem to survive about anything." ■

“I think it’s an injustice to the guys who have to live in the study lounges. They were never meant to be lived in.”

Brother Michael Smith, rector of Flanner Hall

"I think that no matter how much you try to make somebody belong, they know that this is temporary," said Giarrante. "They'll know that any day they can get moved."

"Being in a study lounge is difficult for freshmen because they'll begin to feel like they belong to the section and to the people that they live with. There will be some bonding that occurs immediately," Giarrante said. "The sad thing is that they're going to get tugged right out of that when there's an opening, and chances are that many of them will not remain in this dorm. They'll have to adjust once again to a new dorm, new roommates, a new section, a new staff."

"What I find sad about it is that it happens to freshmen. It would be one thing if it was upperclassmen. I think that for freshmen the first month of their adjustment here is crucial and to think know that might be tampered with having to pack up and move again is my concern," said Giarrante. Dean Hofman, whose oldest son was in temporary housing when he entered Notre Dame, said he agrees with this point of view.

"My bottom line would be that I would like all freshmen to go into permanent housing at the very we're trying to avoid restricting housing for upperclassmen. In no way would I want to give anyone the impression that I approve of the situation as it exists now. Absolutely not. I don't approve, but I understand."

The problem of freshmen in temporary housing is a "no-easy-answer question," said Rooney. "The whole problem is that so many people want to be on campus and for good reason." Smith said he has a potential solution.

"My suggestion would be to place all the overflow in the Morris Inn. The towers are too convenient," Smith said. "It's just a convenient place to pour in all these extra freshmen. Instead of taking care of the solution, they just don't bother with the solution. It seems like all the people that have the power to do something about the situation don't have to live with it. (Father) Jerry (Lardner, Grace Hall rector) and I live with the situation, but we have no authority over it."

Giarrante, who is a member of University President Father Edward "Monk" Malloy's task force on residentiality, said she hopes the task force may have some answers when they give their report March 15. "I think this should be an issue that is brought

A Fresh Direction

By Kathleen McKernan

New athletic director Dick Rosenthal is no stranger to Notre Dame or collegiate athletics. As a student-athlete at the Notre Dame of the early 50s, hoop-shooting "Rosie" earned a finance degree and All-America honors. After graduation, Rosenthal played two seasons in the NBA, furthered his education with an MBA and returned to his college town to work for a local bank.

But now, 25 years after becoming the chief executive officer of that bank, now called St. Joseph Bancorporation, and less than two months after resigning from that position, the 54-year-old

Rosenthal is doing what he calls "repotting himself" in some familiar soil. The move has raised questions among some Irish followers who think it strange that the powers that be chose someone who is so inexperienced in athletic administration. And with such a close proximity between Rosenthal's resignation from the bank and the pursuit of Gene Corrigan by the Atlantic Coast Conference, some have suggested that the sequence of events was not coincidental. Rosenthal has said otherwise.

"I can assure you with everything I have in me that any decision to leave the bank was first and foremost predicated on the recognition that I'd been the chief executive of that institution for almost 26 years," he said, "and I believe there's value in changing chief executives periodically.

"I had not the slightest inkling that Notre Dame would be looking for an athletic director. Indeed, when I found out about it, my first reaction was to try to convince Gene Corrigan that he ought to stay here."

Rosenthal may not have been directly involved in athletic administration, but he does have impressive credits and contacts within the Notre Dame community. He, at one time, was president of the Notre Dame Alumni Association. And although he admits he is short of experience in negotiating television contracts, finance is his field.

"The job is an administrative post," he said, "and I've spent my entire working career in administration. It's true that the facts, the specifics, the techniques of sports administration are new and different. I'm not experienced in terms of negotiating television contracts, but there are other people in this office who are very experienced."

"This would be a terrifying job," said Rosenthal, "if this department were not blessed with experienced professionals. I think I can adapt readily to the job because of those people, and hopefully, I'll be a quick learner."

Former athletic director Gene Corrigan also had praise for his associates, Roger Valdiserri, Brian Boulac and Joseph O'Brien. He told the South Bend Tribune before he left that "I've never worked with so many self-starters."

Executive Vice President Father William Beauchamp, who praised Rosenthal's community record in addition to his experience in business and personnel management, told the Associated Press, "Bottom line, I was looking for somebody I could work with comfortably as well."

As Rosenthal takes his place at the right hand of Beauchamp and assumes one of the most coveted athletic director positions in collegiate athletics, he inherits many of the problems and pressures of predecessor Corrigan. One concern, the primary reason for Corrigan's departure to the ACC, is distance from family. Unlike Corrigan who returns to the southeast to be closer to family, Rosenthal's family is already close at hand. Four of his eight children, who range in age from 17-30, have graduated from Notre Dame. Yet another daughter is currently enrolled as a junior.

With a vision shaped in Notre Dame's past and a personal and professional involvement in its future, Dick "Rosie" Rosenthal becomes the University's guardian of athletic tradition.

Irish Head Football Coach Lou Holtz had Sparky Anderson's audacity with pre-season predictions, Notre Dame fans would have an idea of his expectations for the season. He'd have some new freshman who would be the greatest thing since Paul Hornung. And he'd guarantee an Irish presence in a major Bowl.

But Holtz is a little more cautious. He'd rather downplay the potential in his group of freshman than publicly be wrong. In his annual preseason press conference, Holtz was confident but brief with regard to his freshmen prospects.

"I was impressed with the freshmen," he said, "but once again they are freshmen and they are in shorts and you really can't tell a whole lot about them." And then he threw in a witticism: "It's hard for me to evaluate (talent) in shorts. If I could evaluate in shorts, . . . I'd be a basketball coach."

Holtz also commented on the 100th year of Notre Dame football and the relative value of that anniversary and team play. "When the other team is 3rd-and-2 on our nine, we sure won't be saying, 'Gee, this is our 100th year of football.'"

Amidst conservative evaluations of his new class, he reported the loss of freshman lineman Brian Shannon, who suffered a broken leg in a summer exhibition game. Holtz also snuck in the athletic inelegibility of Mike Stonebreaker, who missed summer school in order to have ear surgery, Cedric Figaro, and Jim Dadiosis.

Flanker Tim Brown has been dominating Notre Dame's share of the magazine market as he enters his senior year as one of the pre-season leading candidates for the Heisman Trophy. When Holtz spelled out the Irish priorities, the trophy hype barely approached a distant second. "If we were going to push Tim Brown for the Heisman, we'd use him on defense as well. Tim Brown will be the first one to tell you that winning is the most important thing for Notre Dame." And Holtz extends the team success concept to his highly-touted freshman class.

"Our freshman football players were highly regarded coming in, and the most important thing that we have to get across to them is that they are no longer recruits - they are members of the University of Notre Dame football team."

Settin' the Facts Straight

I know it's a little early in the year to be making enemies, and it might not be fair to warp you freshman this early on, but I've definitely come to the conclusion that Notre Dame is a pretty lame campus.

No, the academics are fine and you can still build a strong religious and moral character, if that's what you're into. But some people, myself included, need a little bit more than schoolwork and religion to remain sane and happy folks. My personal placebo is music - cool music, stuff that fills in gaps in my life, helps me cope with whatever problems I might have and sometimes just makes me feel good. And from the standpoint of musical entertainment, this is one place where Notre Dame fails.

In my three years here, this campus has been subjected to a pretty lousy selection of "musical entertainment" consisting of true powerhouses like "weird" Al Yankovic, wimp baladeer Henry Lee Summer, the Suburbs (twice), Timbuk 3, arena hacks Berlin, and let's not forget the Tommy Shaw fiasco of three years ago. With the exception of Timbuk 3, all of the above acts are critical washouts - people whose death would be an improvement in the musical world as a whole. And who can listen to Timbuk 3 without falling asleep?

All is not terrible at ND, however. I have been fortunate to witness some pretty good shows here, though these have been few and far between. Three years ago, the Bangles played Stepan Center to a crowd of approximately 300 and August 21, 1987 most of those people were South Bend high school students. Where were all the Notre Dame and Saint Mary's students? Out getting drunk, perhaps? But at least that crowd was an improvement over the 100 or so who witnessed a good set by Joe "King" Carrasco at Stepan the week before.

Other noteworthy performances at Notre Dame over the past three years have been done by Die Kreuzen, Dallol, Get Smart!, and even John Cougar Mellencamp. Only Mellencamp's show (at the ACC) could be considered "well-attended." My point is that even when the folks over at the Student Union Board stumble upon something decent, nobody makes the effort to attend.

Exactly why this is; I don't rightly know. But part of the problem lies in the preconceptions this campus has as to what constitutes good music. If it ain't U2 or Huey, forget it. Conservatism holds many students back from being truly experimental in buying new tunes for their box. This year on campus the really "rad" students probably will be playing a lot of the Cure, U2, New Order, Crowded House, Smiths, Husker Du, Cult, Mission UK, etc., etc., ad nauseum. Too bad all those groups, almost without fail, are two to three years past their prime and several of them suck to begin with.

The impact, or more specifically the lack of impact, that our radio station WVFI has had is also to blame. Last year the station received lots of bucks for a complete overhaul, allowing the campus to finally hear what was touted all along as a "progressive" alternative. When the station returned to the airwaves, the campus was greeted with the thrilling news that practically every DJ was playing the same Eurodisco garbage over and over. I mean, how progressive can a station be if the DJs' musical knowledge doesn't go past what the college music journals tell them to play? Several excellent records sat unplayed in the racks all year because the DJs were afraid to try something new. Don't expect this to change this year.

Really, all this doesn't personally upset me as much as I'm making it sound. I'll still go about my own business reading fanzines and scanning record stores for albums and singles that I think might be interesting. And I'll continue writing this column and disc jockeying on WVFI, regardless of what my fellow students are listening to. But, in the end, I think the campus would be a hell of a lot better off if people just tried something different, and this applies to the higher-ups at WVFI and the Musical Entertainment Committee, as well as to all you plain, ordinary students.

Maybe the reason why many people praise the lifestyle at large public universities like the University of Wisconsin at Madison or the University of Illinois isn't because they drink more beer than we do; maybe it's because their atmosphere is one that is truly open-minded. I mean, if you don't try new and different things in college, will you ever try them? ■

New Beginnings

BY FATHER EDWARD MALLOY

I am genuinely excited as we begin another school year together. This is my first year as president of the University, and I feel a special affinity with those students and faculty who have joined the Notre Dame family for this first time. In one sense, Notre Dame is a large and complex institution - we have over one hundred buildings, 9,400 total students, 900 faculty members and 1,200 staff and administrative employees. The campus spreads out over 1,700 acres and we are the second most popular tourist attraction in the state of Indiana.

But there is another side to Notre Dame - it's soul if you will. This is constituted by the network of friendships formed, by the dedication of gifted minds to the search for truth, by the vitality of the worship throughout the year, and by the deep loyalty of its graduates who return so readily for visits. This is the Notre Dame of hallowed professors, beloved rectors and secretaries who care. Each of us is a part of this reality for better or for worse. It is a sacred trust which we all bear a responsibility to preserve.

I will surely be feeling my way in the months ahead. Don't be surprised to discover some stupid mistakes or some seeming insensitivities. I and all of us in the administration will endeavor to stay in touch and to foster a spirit of open communication. Community is always a difficult achievement and it requires cooperation from all participants.

Particularly to those of you who are students, I would like to offer a few words of encouragement and advice:

■Keep struggling to find a healthy balance between study and leisure, culture and recreation. Education is a serious endeavor. It requires self-discipline and drive. Indeed millions throughout the world envy your opportunity. Take full advantage of the resources here - the concerts and plays, the Snite, the lectures and symposia, the games and clubs and student government. At the same time, there is a legitimate place for fun and celebration, for music and dance, for bull sessions and quiet walks around the lake.

■Get to know and be known by the faculty and the head staff in the dorms. The passage from adolescence to young adulthood is full of challenges of all kinds. Sometimes one's life goals are unclear; relationships flourish and then wane. Friends get sick and relatives die. Your journey is unique in its own way but others have faced similar challenges and might even have a bit of wisdom to pass on. Take the initiative and say hello or stop by for a chat. The seemingly calloused prof or rector might turn out to be a lifelong friend.

■Don't settle for a childlike faith or leave religious commitment at the periphery of one's consciousness and concern. The dorm chapel, Sacred Heart Church, the Grotto - these sites of devotion and prayer provide the opportunity for regular participation with the community of faith. This is an essential component of Christian discipleship. But there is more to it than that. A Catholic university is an ideal place to ponder the Scriptures, to become familiar with the doctrine and practices of the Church, and to confront the perplexing questions of contemporary life. Furthermore, the Center for Social Concerns offers social service projects of all kinds. Whether you make an Urban Plunge, tutor a grade schooler, visit the elderly, or spend a prolonged period in the Third World, you will be cultivating a heightened sense of responsibility for the quality of life of your neighbor in need.

■Finally, take a few risks. The biblical author assigns to the young the challenge of dreaming new worlds. Do not settle for the givenness of things. Imagine and work for a better universe and (I might add) an improved Notre Dame. Do not be a prisoner of your major or your career plans or even your parents' expectations. You have come here to learn how to think more clearly, how to clarify your values, and how to make a difference. There is no better time to begin than this year.

I hope that I can come to know many of you personally this year. Together we can build a greater Notre Dame. ■
