CAMPUS BY-PATHS

Much loosening of belts this afternoon.

Many enclosed in belts can continue to eat.

This was realized at about 4:35 or thereabouts, it being impossible to tell, most watches and mine, being pawned.

But the chap who sent $1,000 over to one of our most prominent halls, asking Edward to bet it on the Army for him may go hungry.

We pity him—

For not knowing better than to bet on the Army.

Whoop-ee! Whoop-ee! Whoop-ee!

A wonderful yell:
Bach—Rah!—Rah!—Rah!—Rah!
Bock!

Tou-ou-ou—pee-ee!

Musical, and remindful of the joyous old days.

Mr. Frank Kolars, who runs the "Through the Looking Glass," who rates five letters or more a day, smoker of Piedmonts, pal of Danny McGowan, and resident of Sueur Center, Minnesota, is now, since the game is over and money is flowing in, able to lay in a new supply of snuff.

's nuff!!

Whoop-ooo-oooo—pee-ee!

The other day, we are informed, Danny and Frankie snuck in one of South Bend's moving picture emporiums. When their brilliant orbs had become used to the Stygian blackness, they discerned two beautiful damsels not far down the center aisle.

"You go down first," Danny told Frank, "sit on the far side of them, and wait awhile. I'll come down later and sit on this side. When I'm there awhile, you notice me, and say 'hello,' and then, I'll recognize you, and we can, because we disturbed the girls, talk to them, and—"

"You thing' up the cleverest things," said Frankie. "Pip pip!"

A few minutes after Frankie had ensconced himself on the far side of the beautiful belles:

"Hello, Dan; well I'll be—how-re-ya?"

Dan looked over at Frankie. He stared at him. He turned his nose in the air in disdain for the impertinence of the young fellow, and turned to watch the picture.

Andy Slay, or something like that—at any rate, the chap in the blue sweater who seldom graces South Bend's Rialto—tried out the cut system the other day. He spent three hours in his 8 o'clock class, just because he was sleepy. Classes came, and classes went, and Slay snored on for hours.

It may have been that he was in the classroom superintended by Father Mulcaire on the day that Father Mulcaire called the role, and he began to assign seats, grave mystery, many were called but few responded.

Whoop—oo-ooop—co!

—MR. GRUNDY.

One hundred couples were at the dance given by the Notre Dame Band at the Oliver hotel last night. The crowd was not as big as expected.

Harry Denny's nine-piece orchestra played. The orchestra was led by Victor la Betz in the absence of Harry Denny.

SET DATE FOR JUNIOR PROM

May 2 Tentative Date; November 15 Day of Class Mixer; Make Big Sum on Class Dance.

Friday, May 2, was set as the tentative date for the Junior Prom at a meeting of the class held in the Library Friday. The day is 12 days after Easter.

The date for the Stag Supper, to be attended by juniors only, was set about November 15. The affair is intended to be a class mixer.

John Moran, presented a report on the junior football dance held on the evening of the Lombard game. A profit of $87.35 was reported. A rising vote of thanks was then given George Sheehy, chairman of the committee on dance.

Class distinctions for juniors were discussed, but no action was taken.

A pin committee will be selected at the next meeting. The class discussed the advisability of securing class pins during the present school year or during the summer.

The next meeting will be in the Library on Friday at 12:30.

MISSION ENDS AT UNIVERSITY

Father Lenartz Makes Closing Remarks at Off-Campus Mission; Mass Ends Retreat.

The campus mission and the off-campus mission were brought to a close yesterday. The campus mission ended with a Solemn High Mass, and the Papal Benediction was given by Rev. J. W. Donahue, who conducted it. It is significant that it ended on the feast of St. Edward, the patron saint of Father Edward Sorin, the founder of Notre Dame.

Rev. Matthew J. Walsh, president of the University, was celebrant of the closing mass. Rev. Thomas Irving was deacon, Rev. Joseph Burke, subdeacon, and Rev. Francis Weninger was master of ceremonies.

Throughout the mission the number of communions increased daily until yesterday, when a decrease was noted, because so many students were excused for the week end. It was necessary to place chairs in the aisles of the church every night of the mission to accommodate the overflow.

The off-campus mission came to an end yesterday morning at St. Joseph's Church, when Rev. George Finnegan delivered his concluding sermon on "Temptations and the Way to Overcome Them."

Rev. William Lenartz, pastor of the church, made a short address, in which he expressed his approval of the mission and tendered his appreciation that it was held in his church.

The success of the mission is attributed to the efforts and sacrifices made by Father Finnegan, rector of Holy Cross Seminary. Father Finnegan was assisted in his work by Rev. Hugh O'Donnell, who directed the singing, and by Joseph Cassasanta, who played the accompaniment during the week. The Rev. George Holderith, rector of the off-campus students, also assisted.

DOMES PICTURES.

Work of taking senior Dome pictures was progressing slowly yesterday morning, according to Jack Scallan, editor of the Dome. No pictures were taken yesterday afternoon, and none will be taken today.

Scallan urges all seniors and club officers who wish their photos to appear in the 1924 Dome, to present themselves in the K. of C. rooms of Walsh hall as soon as possible. An effort is being made to complete the photographs this week.

Number Thirteen Is Lucky for Rockmen

Is 13 an unlucky number? Yesterday's game with the Army wouldn't seem to indicate that it is. Coach Rockne's invariable habit of wearing a number "13" on his jersey in practice has furnished food for thought for the superstitious.

When we add up the letters in "Notre Dame" and "Army," the result is 13. Count 'em. And when we put the two teams together on the 13th of the month, the result is a 13 score.

Incidentally, this story is appearing in the thirteenth issue of the DAILY this year.

Where is that guy who said 13 was unlucky?

STUHLBREHER, LAYDEN, WALSH STARS OF GAME

Army Outplayed All Through Battle That Upsets Dope; Layden and Don Miller Make Touchdowns.

By J. F. Fleming. Out-punted, out-played and out-fought, the Army went down to defeat at Ebbetts field, Saturday afternoon before the Fighting Irish. Never once did the Army come within Notre Dame's 10-yard line.

The score was 13 to 0 in favor of the greatest fighting team that ever represented Notre Dame.

Harry Stuhldreher, "The Little General," called the plays which spelled defeat for the Cadet eleven. Never once did the Little General falter, always out guessing the opposing eleven men. To Harry goes much credit for the Irish's victory. Don Miller and Jimmie Crowley showed the East that only Notre Dame players can run as they did.

Crowley and Miller thrilled the crowd time after time by their slippery running. Layden was cheered constantly; the big fullback broke up the Army passes and played a great defensive game. He was a star, on the offensive, too. He hit the heavy Army line for many gains.

Great Game at Center. Adam Walsh played the greatest game at center that has ever been played in the East, press reports said. He was in every play; receiving slight injuries twice during the game, he fought with even more determination. Wood, the Army star, tried to make gains through the line, but was always stopped when he attempted to hit center.

Harvey Brown, the midget captain, played one of his best games; he was always in the way of the oncoming Army backs, and often threw them for losses. Crowe, who replaced Collins at end, distinguished himself by his many pretty and neat tackles. Bacah and Vergara, Oberest and Noppenbarger formed the rest of the Irish stone wall which was the cause of the Army's defeat. Mayl played his usual brilliant game at end.

First Touchdown. Notre Dame scored the first touchdown near the close of the first half on a pass, Stuhldreher to Layden, after Crowley and Miller marched down the field from Notre Dame's 42-yard line. This was the only march of the game. Outweighed 15 pounds to the man, the Fighting Irish fought a game which the Cadets and spectators will long remember. When the Army team marched onto the field, they looked like giants compared with the Rockmen.

It was remarked that it seemed as if a high school was to play an all-star eleven. But not once during the game did the Army complete a forward pass, while the Irish completed many. The Army intercepted but one of the Hoosiers' passes, while the Irish intercepted several of the Soldiers'. Thirty-five thousand people witnessed the game, and it is said the Yankees' stadium would not have seated the mob which attempted the gate.

Walter Camp witnessed the game and viewed the work of the great

GET GAME ON WIRE. Thousands crowded the Notre Dame gym yesterday to watch the grid-graph flash the reports from West Point. Cheer-leader Eddie Luther led the cheers, the best heard in years.

Bucknell Will Talk to Scribblers Club

Professor William Bucknell, M. A., Cambridge University, 1918, will deliver a lecture on "Cambridge Lore" to the Scribblers tomorrow evening, according to Jack Scallan, secretary of the club. The meeting will be held at the usual place.

Before coming to join the faculty of the College of Arts and Letters at the University this year, Professor Bucknell was instructor of English Literature in the College of St. Francis Xavier, Antigonish, Nova Scotia.

He is special lecturer at the College of Arts and Letters.

Paul A. Mulcahy, Ph. B., 1922, is now with the Selden Truck corporation, Probert street, Rochester.

GREET THE TEAM.

The student body is requested to be at the New York Central Station at 5:25 today to meet the team. There will be no snake dance from school, but a demonstration will be held at the station and the Elks' club, to which the students will proceed after meeting the team.

Freshmen, read your handbooks before you go!

All students are expected to conduct themselves in an orderly manner while in town.

THE MISSION

The Mission at the University closed yesterday. There were some who did not attend the services, but they were few in number. They were not missed, and, on the other hand, they missed a great deal.

The fact that Notre Dame missions accomplish so much of what is aimed at proves two things. The first is that those who are responsible for and those who conduct the missions are unusually able. The second is that the representative Notre Dame man is at heart an earnestly responsible man.

Credit is due to both the conductors of the mission and to those who made it a substantial good by their attendance. Those who through laxity neglected to attend need no upbraiding. They are the losers.

THE CANE GANG

Robert Cortes Holliday is not the only one who concerns himself with carrying a cane. At a recent meeting of the senior class, the subject was debated very seriously. The seniors, feeling the need of some distinguishing mark, are casting about for a device which will set them apart from the underclassmen.

It has been suggested that all seniors carry canes, but there are a few drawbacks to the plan. The tradition, as is known, belongs to the Law school, and for the seniors to take it over bodily would not only be unjust to that school, but would argue a startling lack of originality as well.

Then, too, there appears to be a prejudice against the cane, throughout the entire middle west; it is unreasonable, no doubt, but nevertheless it exists. The spectacle of an apparently able-bodied youth flourishing a cane on the thoroughfare rouses a feeling of pity that is anything but akin to love on the part of the less fortunate brethren. The most serious fault to be found with the system in that the cane carrier is self-conscious and amateurish. An advisable course to pursue is to have college students carry canes for four years, and have each class use a particular type of cane. In this way, by the time the student is a senior—when he must be sedate and dignified—he will twirl his stick with the finesse of the Prince of Wales, and his manner will then distinguish him.

FAVORITE SPORTS AND THEIR METHODS

John J. Tigert, of whom nobody ever heard before and who has already dropped back to his former innocuous niche, managed to make the headlines last week. According to press dispatches he said: "I am not prepared to point to a single college that is not subsidizing or paying its athletes, or in which the president is not winking at it." We overlook the grammar as possibly having been garbled in transmission.

The point is this broad-gestured indictment—and we can see the speaker in the act of describing a vicious circle with a fist that shivered the flag-draped water-stand—this scathing broadside is entirely gratuitous. The same withering charge could be made with equal authority by any first-class bootblack.

It is truly amazing that without an iota of evidence Mr. Tigert, who seems to be something in the United States Bureau of Education, questions the integrity of everybody who happens to be a college president and expects his audience to take his own word honor bright.

Our only reason for taking cognizance of the volubility of this member of the U. S. Bureau of Education is the large mass of fable and rumor circulated by a band versed in the rich sport of baiting college athletics.

We who know our athletes as roommates, classmates, and bosom friends resent the merest insinuation of dishonor. We ardently admire the men who represent Notre Dame on the field of sport. If there are any elite on the campus, they are that par excellence. When somebody says they are "bought," arraigns them for being prostituted by commercialism, it is time for direct action unless there is incontrovertible proof. Moreover, those infrequent instances where individuals deviated from the code of ethics only add to our pride in the body of our monogram men.

Hooda was out walking with a friend. They had walked scarcely a mile before Hooda perceived that his companion was on crutches. Half a mile later Hooda had decided that there must be some reason for it. And almost within the distance of three blocks after that he asked, "You are lame."

"How's that?" asked his friend, some hundred feet later.

Hooda was silent for perhaps a block and then answered, "I don't know, I'm sure."

His friend mused for eight and a quarter rods and then, "You see I fell over the rear wing—"

"Heavens, don't tell me the rear wing," said Hooda.

His friend thought a few limps and then said, "Yes, the rear wing. The rear wing of a bridge."

"But wasn't there any water below it?" asked our hero.

"No," said the friend, some few brisk hobbles later. "No; not a darn drop."

"I don't believe you," said Hooda. "If there wasn't any water there there wouldn't have been any bridge. You can't fool me. And besides that, there was a drop or how did you get hurt?"

Yesterday Hooda was picking his teeth with a sliver that he extracted from his head. We understand that some one has bought a new pair of crutches.

After the preliminary news reel, they got down to business at the Palace this last half and showed what proved to be a very good picture, "Yesterday's Wife." The lead was played by Irene Rich, an actress who does not appear nearly often enough. Every role she takes is graced by a note of quiet dignity which is almost certain to assure its success. The others in the cast, Josephine Crowley, Philo McCullough, Eileen Percy, and Lewis Dayton, gave the star splendid support, the honors going to Josephine Crowley, who began by being a villainess of the deepest dye and finished by being a sort of fairy godmother.

The Melville Brothers opened the vaudeville bill with a clever line of gymnastics that was a departure from the usual run of such turns. They were followed by Bennington and Scott, a man and woman, who sang and danced and did a little specialty, much to the pleasure of all concerned. The third number on the program was the Russian Trio DeLuxe, soprano, cello, and piano. All of them distinguished themselves by their exhibition of classical and semi-classical music. The pianist played with skill, but the two numbers she gave have been heard so often in vaudeville that they have little attraction. Zuhn and Dreis, who have been seen here before, were popular as ever with their clever dialogue.

The headliner, The Seattle Harmony Kings, scored the hit of the afternoon. Their program was well balanced and well played. In addition, they seemed to have such a merry time rendering their selections that the audience, willy nilly, had to enjoy it.

As this is about to go to press, we are still trying to formulate an opinion of the two girls who sat behind us, who thought that the music of the Russian Trio was not worth listening to, and then said they were just crazy about Mendelssohn's Spring Song when the Seattle Harmony Kings played a few bars from the Melody in F.

lows, as any other youth, but because of the century-tried background that is behind Notre Dame education, he is not the iconoclast of the usual university.

This attitude of the Notre Dame man should be mirrored in his newspaper. For that reason, THE DAILY, having begun with too much blatency, is endeavoring gradually to tone down its style, to become less noisy in its makeup and tone, so that when it does speak, it shall be heard. All this, of course, must be done gradually.

In line with this change it hopes to become more human—less of a journalistic automat that performs its news-giving functions mechanically and lifelessly, and more of a living chronicle of Notre Dame, aliye and assertive. The new column, Campus By-Paths, is one means by which the paper hopes to add the personal tone that will make it more representative.

As far as it is able THE DAILY will do its best for Notre Dame institutions. The junior class and the band were accorded daily publicity for their dances, the grid-graph announcements were given prominent position, and all University campaigns will be given as much space as the campaign seems to warrant, depending, of course, on the available space for the day.
