Lowi speaks against liberalism

by Ed Ellis Associate Editor

Theodore Lowi in a lecture at the Library Auditorium last night spoke about the "pathological" dilemma of the Federal government.

"A permanent state of receivership" resulting from "interest group liberalism" is the pathological condition of the American polity today, according to Cornell political scientist Theodore Lowi.

Lowi, speaking last night in the Library Auditorium before a crowd of about 200 students and faculty members, argued that the occurence of "positive government" alongside the non-coercive, "soft," or liberal state creates a dilemma around the political power inherent in the state itself. This results in the interest group liberalism.

Avoidance of Coercion

The concept of the state, Lowi said, implies coercion, but liberal-minded politicians--even so-called "conservative" politicians--try to avoid the concept of coercion in running their governments. In order to avoid coercion, power is split up and handed out to various segments of government.

Lowi listed two manifestations of what he called a "pathological" dilemma. First, he said that laws of such a society are characterized by "high-flown" language backed by minimal sanctions. Second, political rhetoric in such a situation is concerned primarily with populary participation in government, which in reality means participation in individual cases only, not in the general principles to be applied.

Minimum Risk

The society faced with such a dilemma, argued Lowi, will tend to minimize risk to anyone in the system, because this is its function as positive government. At the same time, the society will try to avoid restrictions on anyone, because of the nature of a liberal government.

Because the government must support interests, it must then do things like loan money to Lockheed, which cost no one in particular any money, propose revenue sharing, and enter the housing business on a large scale. Lowi noted that the Federal government now owns more property in the United States than even "the Church."

Institutionalization

Lowi further stated that this pattern of a positive-soft government has become institutionalized in the United States, i.e., it has managed to succeed itself and grow upon itself over the last forty years. President Nixon, he noted, governs much the same way as President Johnson did, which was much the same as President Kennedy. The major positive, soft programs have not been cut back, and most have been expanded.

Nixon, contended Lowi, could have changed things, but instead he "chose to expand and confirm them." The only area where this was not true, according to Lowi, is civil rights, where the President has "misrepresented" busing, its causes, meaning, etc. In other fields, the Nixon Administration has expanded the role of the Federal bureaucracy, which Lowi opposes, he said, because the people running these programs are "stupid." the Federal government, he said, "is a big dumb cluck."

Furthermore, anyone at all running a Federal bureaucracy in these areas will be a "big dumb cluck."

Bad City Government

Lowi said he was especially pessimistic about the chances of the Federal intrusion into revenue-sharing. He stated city governments tend to have the same pathological fear of coercion that is so prevalent in the national government. Because the cities are privilege-prone, machine-run, and corruption-ridden, the Federal funds will be totally wasted. In short, the recipient of the revenue will have all the money to distribute, but no power to do it with because all the power has been spread out.

State government is the only level of government according to Lowi that ever uses the coercive power inherent in the nature of a government, and this means that nearly 98 per cent of coercive laws are state laws.

Sick Polity

Lowi concluded that a polity whose politics was afraid of power yet was expected to "intervene sooner than later" was a basically sick polity, and that the proper function of responsible political science was to be pathological rather than physiological, solution-oriented rather than purely descriptive.

This sense of insight, he said, should offer a "sense of alternatives." This is the function of an intellectual in Lowi's terms.

Judge sets Watergate trial for November 15

by Agis Salpukas
(C) 1972 New York Times

Washington, Oct. 17--United States District Court Judge John J. Sirica today set the start of the trial of the seven men indicted in the raid on the Democratic National Headquarters for November 15, a week after the national election.

Despite vociferous objections from the four defense attorneys and agreement by the prosecutor that the date was too early for both sides to prepare their cases, Sirica refused to budge.

It is likely therefore that little new material will come out from the courts, on the case, which has become an election issue.

Gary Hart, the campaign director for Sen. George McGovern said today that Democratic charges of political sabotage would be turned into a campaign issue and that McGovern may go on half-hour television to deal with the issue.

There is a sense among the McGovern staff that the issue may induce voters to look at his stand on the war, the economy and other issues.

One of the men indicted in the Watergate bugging, Bernard L. Baker, is scheduled to go on trial on October 30 in Miami on charges of "false and fraudulent use" of a Florida notary public seal on a campaign check.

Circuit court judge Bernard F. Jennings of Fairfax County, Va., today ordered Hugh W. Sloan Jr., a former offical of the Finance Committee of the Nixon campaign to appear on Oct. 30 to testify at the trial of Barker.

Judge Paul Baker, who will hear the case in Miami, signed orders to extradite Sloan and two other men, Maurice H. Stans, a former Secretary of Commerce and now President Nixon's chief campaign fund raiser and Kenneth H. Dahlberg, chairman of the Minnesota Re-election Committee, to appear at the trial.

Henry B. Rothblatt, who represents Barker, asked Sirica today he restrain the Barker trial since it would make it very difficult for him to handle and prepare for both trials at once.

But as with the other four defense attorneys who argued that the trial be postponed, Sirica refused to intervene and stuck to his date.

Meanwhile, it was learned that lawyers representing Lawrence F. O'Brien, the former Democratic Party chairman in a $3.2 million invasion of privacy suit over the Watergate bugging incident, will seek a sworn deposition from the 1 landlord of downtown Washington building next to what is now Sen. George McGovern's presidential campaign headquarters.

All depositions in the three civil suits arising from the bugging, including O'Brien's, have been stayed pending completion of the criminal trial.

The landlord, Leonard M.Gatti, confirmed in a telephone interviewlast week that he at one time rented the top floor office of a small, two-story building at 1908 K St. N.W. to "a Mr. McCord," who he said "wanted to open an accounting firm" there.

Gatti, who said he never saw McCord in person but dealt with him only over the telephone, declined to give the man's first name or provide other details of the rental transaction, except to say that McCord paid rent on the property for an undisclosed period of time but never moved in. He said the lease was eventually

Nixon vetoes water pollution act

by E. W. Kenworthy (C) 1972 New York Times

Washington, Oct. 17----President Nixon vetoed tonight the Federal Water Pollution Act of 1972.

In doing so, he brushed aside the recommendation of William D. Ruckelhaus, the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency. He also chose to ignore the overwhelming support for the bill in both Houses of Congress.

In a letter last week to Casper Weinberger, the Director of the Office and Management Budget, Ruckelhaus strongly recom-mended that the President sign the bill, saying that it was "faithful" to the intent of the President's own proposal to Congress in 1971.

Ruckelhaus also said that while the bill authorized much more money for control of Water would be 75 per cent, as compared with a maximum 55 per cent under a 1966 law.

In addition the bill provided $2.7 billion to reimburse states and cities for the Federal share of projects already completed or in progress which has not been paid. The total amount of these "reimbursibles" now amounts to 24.7 billion according to congressional estimates, but only $2 billion according to the estimates of the Environmental Protection Agency.

By contrast, Nixon had proposed only $6 billion in appropriations for sewage plants over three years, and any payment of reimbursibles would have had to come out of that.

The bill set a goal of eliminating all pollution--"no discharge"--by industry and municipalities by 1985, although it was generally agreed that this goal was almost impossible of achievement.

But to this end, it required that industry employ the "best practicable" control technology by 1977, and the "best available" by 1983, taking into account what was 'economically achievable" but in the direction of the no-discharge

In his veto message to Congress, the President based his action on two major points: the $24 billion price tag in the bill, four times the inflation and avert a necessity for that vironmental protection has been "one of my highest priorities as President," Nixon said he was also concerned "that we attack pollution in a way that does not ignore other very real threats to the quality of life, such as spiraling prices and increasingly onerous taxes."

'Legislation which would continue our efforts to raise water quality, but which would do so through extreme and needless overspending, does not serve the public interest," he said.

The President's veto message was delivered within minutes after the Senate this evening had rejected his proposed $250 billion spending ceiling--a fact duly noted by Nixon, who linked the water pollution bill to the issue of higher taxes and inflation.

Noting that there is "a well-worn political axiom which says that any election-year spending bill, no matter how ill-advised defies veto by the President," Nixon said: "but I say that any spending bill this year which would lead to defies signature by President." higher prices and higher taxes

HPC plans budget appeal

by Mike O'Hare Observer Staff Reporter

The Hall President's Council plans to appeal the :Student government finance committee's proposed HPC appropriation.

As a result of last night's meeting, HPC executive coordinator Steve Jeselnick will appear before the Board of Commissioners (the six student SLC members the HPC Chariman and the student body president and vice-president) to appeal the recommended allocation and present an alternate proposal.

finance committee recommended appropriating $7,500 to the HPC with $3,250 going to the HPC sponsored An Tostal weekend and $4,250 earmarked for the Hall Life fund. The $7,500 proposed HPC allocation would average out to about $1.25 for each of the 5200 on campus students.

The HPC proposal however will call for a budget appropriation of $4 per on campus student, totaling about $20,000. Sorin Hall president Walt Spak explained the HPC's rationale for the increased allocation as "getting more money that will be directly available to the students." Spak explained that the students could become more personnally involved in the spending of their student activities fee if more of this money was budgeted to the HPC.

Gary Wills will lecture Thursday

The HPC also heard a report from a special committee appointed at its last session to study the potential scope of the HPPC. Consisting of Walt Spak, Chris Singleton, Jim Clarke, Fred Baronowski, and Ron Paja, the committee recommended the establishment of an HPC treasury for the fall of 1973. The treasury would be funded directly from the $14 student activites fee, with $4 going to the HPC and $10 to student government.

Spak believed that "a treasury would improve relations between hall presidents and their residents and insure the use of this money for student activities only.

HPC Chairman Butch Ward stated "We as halls are not going to use hall funds for maintenance." He added that student activities fees should not be used for repairs that should be paid for out of room and board fees.

The HPC did not however take any action to adopt the special committee's reccommendation to establish such a treasury.

Also at last night's meeting, Mike Jordan of the Alumni Office, told the HPC of the scheduled Alumni Senate meeting the weekend of Novermber 18. expressed the desire of the alumni to live in the residence halls during their conference and asked the council to help find rooms for them

AC: Good Job

Despite the early date, plaudits are already due to the Academic Commission and particularly to its head, Jim Novic. Barely two months into the year, Novic's program has already surpassed any Academic Commission schedule in recent memory. Quality events are the rule and not the exception this year.

Last year's program

Last year, the Academic Commission suffered through an uninspired year. This was due largely to their philosophy, which emphasized addresses by lesser known figures from the academic world.

This year, however, Novic has added to that philosophy. He has included on the list of academic favorites, celebrities whose qualifications, presentations, and knowledge are as great as their drawing card names.

The biggest name thus far on Novic's list was Norman Mailer who drew a large crowd to Stepan Center. Though Senator Edward Kennedy's speech was organized by the McGovern people, Novic's crew added their expertise to the running of the event.

Lowi and Wills

Last night, Theodore Lowi spoke before a good crowd in the Library Auditorium. Lowi is a well-respected and reasonably famous political scientist who gave an impeccable presentation. Tonight, Gary Wills, the famous author of Nixon Agonistes, will speak.

The schedule is excellent. The crew well-run. An early season, deserved ovation goes out to Novic and his Academic Commission. We're all looking forward to a continuing program with the same level of excellence.

Still Need Tix

For the third year running, the ticket exchange program has been forced to extend the dates for turning in tickets. Program director B. J. Bingle, announced last night that exchanges will be taken today and later into the week if necessary.

The program will be jeopardized if an additional 200 tickets are not turned in to the Athletic and Convocation Center today.

We've said it already, but repetition seems in order. This project requires the aid of the entire student body and furthermore it deserves the aid of of the students of Notre Dame-St. Mary's. There are few programs at ND-SMC that are as worthy as this one.

In the past two years, the project has been an absolute success. But in the case of this program, success cannot be measured in mere numbers. That is not the criterion. The criterion that is applicable here are the smiles and laughs of the hundreds of South Bend kids who get this once in a lifetime chance to see Notre Dame play.

What's one weekend in the stadium? Next week, you'll be at the TCU game anyway. Give these kids a chance. Turn in your ticket and then step back and watch the joy of a child. There's no better payment.

An Apology

One of the hardest things to do in the journalistic world is to admitthat you made a mistake. There's a good deal of institutional pride caught up in the whole process, but there's no point in feigning infallibility.

At any rate, The Observer wishehes to apologize for the Edward Kennedy cartoon which appeared on last Tuesday's editorial page.

It is part of a newspaper's job to leap into the middle of a controversy and ferret out both sides of the argument. It is not, however, part of our job to generate that controversy by dredging up outdated editorial material.

It remains true that cartoons and columns represent the opinion of only the writers and artists but in this case the material should never have appeared in print.

So, once again, we're sorry.

European Tripping Oktoberfest: Munich's blast

Munich, Germany - Did you ever invite 4,800,000 people to a 24 day celebration and get 4,800,000 positive RSVP's?

inn mccarry

That, in a nutshell, is Oktoberfest: The world's largest beer blast, hosted by the world's largest beer-brewing city, for the sole purpose of toasting life with the season's new brew.

"I never say such a huge party," said Ed Pascoe, "Such a huge display purely for enjoyment."

Munich is Proud

Munich is proud of her stature as the giant of the beer industry, and celebrates accordingly, in giant style. The festival grounds, located on the edge of the city, entertains guests from all parts of the world. A square mile of carnival rides and games provide cheap thrills for the young and the young at heart. Wurst and kraut stands about for the hungry while 25 beer halls, each larger than a football field, satisfy the thirsty, who range in age from 2-102.

Every hall is packed to the rafters with beer-lovers who overflow into the aisles. This makes it nearly impossible to polka to the lively drinking songs the oom-pah bands supply. Tabletops provide the only dance floors and even ther must step carefully to avoid the empty mugs that slowly accumulate in the center.

The estimated 1,000,000 gallons of beer are sold by the liter in steins that take two hands to lift. Pretzels are available in sizes up to the mammoth 16-inch-in-diameter model.

People Make it Right

The only thing that can outclass the size of the celebration is the magnanimity of the German people. The language barrier proved to be no obstacle to enjoyment and fraternizing with the Bavarians. You would be surprised how easy it is to learn German with a stein in your hands. Beer is bier. "Eins, zwei bsufa!" is the most popular toast and when the Germans kept urging us to "Drinken! Kdrinken!" we had no trouble understanding them.

It was not necessary to drink beer in order to have a good time.

Wine out of a Mug

"People really ragged me at first because I was drinking wine out of my beer mug," related Jane Thorton. "But as long as I was having a good time, they accepted it, and me happily."

One German even treated another non-beer drinker to champagne. "I wanted to meet the German people and Oktoberfest was the ideal opportunity. They are truly beautiful, warm and friendly," commented another of the 25 Rome students in attendance.

Clearly, the enjoyment of the festival was enlarged by the German people. Their gusto and complete involvement in every aspect of the festival is contagious. The fervor with which they perpetuate the Oktoberfest is indicative of their love of life and good times.

"Oktoberfest is very nice," Herr Hermann Shmon, a typical German celebrant said. "The beer is very good, and all is expensive. The advice we give to all our guests is to do and see."

Six Down, Four to go

When I met him, 65 year old Schmon had already drained six liters of beer (The equivalent of about four gallons) and finished four more liters after I joined him. His spirit and zest typify the magic that makes Oktoberfest happen. As he taught us German toasts, drinking songs and spoke of traditions and legends, the magic came alive for us too.

Perhaps Leslie Cella summed it up best.

"Oktoberfest was fantastic - I wouldn't have missed it for anything. The German people are very refreshing and they have a lot of spirit. Now I can see why their beer is the greatest'."

Letters To A Lonely God a secret place, the land of tears

rev. robert griffin

Last week. Rod Brave, the editor to whom I submit my articles each week, asked me for a title for my Observer columns. I am not gifted in choosing titles, but I decided, for the time being at least, to label my work "Letters to a Lonely God." The phrase is an echo of a book title, In the Kingdom of the Lonely God. The book consists almost entirely of material of mine that has appeared in the Observer for over two years now, and will come out in January. By way of self-defense, I would like to say I have no real hangups on loneliness; but loneliness, I fear, is a very real problem for God. It is the price you pay for not being popular.

Sometimes I feel that my dog, Darby O'Gill is keeping secrets from me. Rather regularly these fall afternoons, he takes off (without previously consulting the Kennel Master) to skirmish with the stout butterflies of October, or to chase the ground shadows that footballs make as they spiral through the air. Darby is really too earthbound to trap butterflies; and though he would like to catch a football, to make love to it, he had never learned the folly of chasing shadows. Anyway, the sporting about with moths and pigskin are just the charades he plays for me, because amidst everything, several hours later with the air of an elegant tramp, as though he had just been wearing spats and a bowler hat, whistling like a libertine. Soon after that, he's at supper, and then to bed, with no explanations as to whether he has been behaving as a priest's dog should. In the morning, I awaken to find that great puppy head silhouetted against the light from a neighbooring room, and I know that my dog has been watching while I have slept, and that is the only real togetherness we have these days.

As with my dog, so with the world: it too has been off on errands of its own, in hot pursuit of shadows and butterflies. All over the campus, the Freshmen are reading Jung, and Sophomores are reading Freud, or if it isn't the underclassmen, it's the psych majors and the lesbians. Jung and Freud are always being read in some estoeric group on this campus, most often, it seems, by thin chaps and their leggy girls who keep notebooks in praise of their latent ids. The Freudians are nice people until they ask about your mother; the Jungians are absolute peaches until they inquire about your dreams. Why should I tell a Freudian about my mother? Why should I tell a Jungian about my dreams? Darby, with his paw prints on the pillow, does a better job of overseeing the bedroom than all the Jungians I know of and he doesn't keep notebooks on it, either.

Outside the window, lovers walk arm in arm. They stop to kiss, then look up, and smile and wave. These are the kids who sent you the birthday card of "The Beautiful Hands of the Priest." You read the poem again, and you clean your fingernails. Then you prepare candles to burn for the night.

I could go on endlessly with the list of the little, closed societies, with their little fund of shared secrets, to which you can never belong, with whom you are never at home; the liturgists, for example, who regard themselves as the authentic keepers of the Lord's table. Theirs, they tell you, is the only game in town, and you know you should be spending Sundays clerking at the A. & Or there are the young priests, tailored by Brooks Brothers, newly arrived from their graduate studies in counselling. Their idiom reminds you of the ministers you grew up with in a New England, Protestant childhood; you gave up their type for the comfort of an infallible pope, In a nonverbal, non-directive way, you love them, but you wonder what would happen if you asked them to say a rosary.

Most of the time, it doesn't bother you, this feeling of not being at home anywhere these days, not even in a church whose nearest bishop regularly chides you for transgressions against the received doctrine and discipline. But the week has been a tough one, and you have just celebrated a birthday that reminds you that October is no longer young. Tonight, you argued with a boy who wept for an hour because his father, he thinks, doesn't love him. There is no way, you said, that a father can be loveless toward his child. Your only proof isthatyou know if you had children, you would love them. But you have no way of knowing if they would understand how much you loved them; perhaps they, too, would ache so much from a sense of lovelessness that some evening they would have to bring their sufferings to a priest.

Instead of children, there is a young prostitute you must worry about, and an orphan child in need of clothes. There is a boy with tensions locked inside himself, and you don't know how to reach the secret places inside where the words are in a

As Saint Exupery said, "It is such a secret place, the land of tears."

The world is filled with secret places and private persons. Dogs like Darby O'Gill have visits they can make on October afternoons. Where does a priest go when he is teased into restlessness by the autumn gypsies? I know the traditional answers, but sometimes even God is a very private person. Outside Him, every place seems as frivolous as a pursuit of butterflies.

West Milford, N.J---Any manufactured tourist attraction that gets $3.75 a head for adults and $2 for children and attracts half a million paying customers in its first three months warrants a close inspection. Jungle Habitat, the Warner Brothers tourist trap that opened July 15 in the beautiful bluegreen rolling hills of the Ramapo Mountains, clocked its 500,000th visitor the other day and is already a profit-making private enterprise. It did so well in midsummer that many days they had to close the gates for long stretches. At these peak periods, 8,000 cars were crawling bumper to bumper among the freely roving animals.

We drove the 45 miles up here from New York on a weekday two weeks after Labor Day. Jungle Habitat was not jammed, but we encountered lines of cars and a comfortably occupied parking lot in the middle of the 450 acres. Adults and children were walking through Jungle Junction, where visitors can get out of their cars and wander around safe from wild animals.

This is a good show; Warner Brothers is a big name in show business and animal farms like Jungle Habitat are show business. Taken for what it is, this is a firstrate tourist attraction. The best endorsement can be heard in the joyful screeches of toddlers when they see their first live ostrich running around loose in the woods.

I had avoided animal farms in the recent past because they sounded commercial and contrived. Several hours spent in Jungle Habitat proved that they must be commercial and very carefully contrived, first to make it possible for people and animals to meet on reasonably equal and intimate and natural terms and, second, to be, economically successful.

Safari Drive starts off quietly as the twolane one-way macadam road climbs up into

jungle habitat: talk to the animals

the hills. The wildest things beside the road are peacocks and many other less glamorous feathered friends, and a small herd of baby elephants. Deer begin to become numerous.

Signs warn you to close windows and stay in the car and that rangers are watching as you drive through a high wire fence and stop abruptly because a pair of lions are sprawled in the middle of the road, fully relaxed. Under the tree a few feet away a pride of five lions lies equally relaxed and sprawled out, some sleeping. The Habitat attendants feed their animals each morning from jeeps and trucks so that they develop a tolerance for the strange contraptions that bring them their daily diet.

There are 33 lions now in residence, constituting a half-dozen prides, and at least four or five are pregnant at a time, dropping two and three cubs a month. Neither the lions nor any other animals are sedated, according to Habitat spokesmen, but they are all well fed, have no need to forage, and hunger pangs do not make them predatory or as dangerous as they might be on their

There are tigers in residence but they are ot vet settled down enough and acclimated to their new environment so as to be trusted in the presence of paying guests. Another few months should suffice. The lions are so well adjusted that they sometimes fail to act their roles. In their wilderness, felines normally sleep or doze 18 hours a day.

The mechanized cowboys herd the lions gently toward the road where they can see and be seen. Their diet of raw horsemeat plus Zoo-preme, a combination of vitamins, minerals and other healthful goodies, keeps the lions helathy but, since they no longer have to hunt for their raw meat, slightly slothful.

Habitat seemed to have more than enough zebras, explained thus: zebras come in herds and to maintain them in loose captivity the integrity of the herd has to be maintained, so they were moved in in a body. Apparently ostriches also go in groups, for there are a lot of them.

The bears---a big brown one was chasing a small black one away from his feeding area when we drove by---are in a large enclosure similar to that of the lions. Timber and black wolves are held safely in pens, as are the allibators. Bison, llamas, deer, eland and several other varieties of beasts live amicably together on the hillsides. Fifteen hyenas are coming in soon for the winter.

The alligators, giraffes and other animals that cannot tolerage New Jersey winters soon will go south to a Florida game farm. The gnu and the addax, an Asian antelope, will remain, as will the herd of seven New Jersey whitetail deer who lived on the property before Jungle Habitat and just stayed on as permanent boarders. The lions also will remain, since they seem to like cold weather and love to romp in the snow.

A veterinarian plays doctor to this mixed family of beasts and Warner Brothers plans to establish several acres as an Animal Preservation Center, a nonprofit institution for the behavioral study of animals, with animals and facilities and opportunity to use both offered without churge to college faculties and students.

The publicity material notes that $10 million is invested in the plant itself, $11/2 million in animals, and it takes about $6 million to operate is annually. It draws people mostly from within a 50-mile radius although it lies within reach of a 29 million population marketing area of New England, New York and New Jersey.

paul j. c. friedlander

Originally the Habitat operators had planned to taper off after Labor Day, concentrating on school groups during the week and the public on weekends, but business has been sso good that Habitat will run seven days a week at least through Thanksgiving, continuing through the winter as the weather permits. Fall foliage travel should bring good crowds up this way for, once off the thruway, this is a beautiful mountainous corner where New York and New Jersey meet. A Habitat visit needs a minimum of two hours, can be expanded to a full day.

After two sold-out American tours, under the direction of Helmut Mueller-Bruhl, the Cologne Chamber Orchestra returns to the United States with Justus Frantz as piano Helmut Mueller-Bruhl founded the Cologne Chamber Orchestra in 1960. It was established solely for the purpose of performing at the famed Augustusburg Palace at Bruhl, near Cologne. It was his wish to fill again the beautiful castle with the iov and beauty it was intended to house when Clemens August created it in 1725. The great success this ensemble had, has resulted in numerous tours in all the great music centers of Europe and the Far East, as well as the United States. The orchestra has thirty-five recordings for which they have been awarded such outstanding recognition as the Grand Prix Du Disque and the IGrand Du Discophiles, musical recording honors of Europe.

Mueller-Bruhl's formal education embraced theology, philosophy, musicology. His practical experience in theory, counter point and conducting was received from prominent German masters. He also received special training in violin.

Since 1961, he has been artistic director of the Bruhl Castle Concerts and permanent conductor of the Cologne Chamber Orchestra. He was the first West German conductor invited to Czechoslovakia, and

The Cologne Chamber Orchestra will conducted several orchestras there last Mueller-Bruhl is director of master lasses for Chamber Music at the A Internationale di Musica de Camera in Rome, Italy.

Justus Frantz joins the orchestra for the first time. This celebrated young European pianist established his brilliant career through performances with the Berlin Philharmonic, and duo concerts with violinist Pinchas Zuckerman and fellow pianist Christoph Eschenbach.

Tickets are $3.50 and $2.00, and available at Saint Mary's College, Room 239, Moreau Hall or call 284-4176 for reservations.

Charging "institutional racism". the New Frontier Scholastic Society (NFSS) is objecting to the proposed Student Government Budget. The society opposes, the joint funding recommendation of the Finance Committee that links it to another organization, the Society of Ujamma.

In a released statement, the NFSS said, "We object to the attempt of the Finance Committee to impose racial standards on our membership. The attitude expressed in the Budget Recommendations Statement appears to demonstrate that any organization with black membership is authomatically considered by Student Government to be an exclusively Black Organization, when in fact this is not the case.'

The release goes on to say, "We neither define nor consider our-selves a "Black" Organization, and the attempt by the Finance Committee to do so (whether or not intentionally) constitutes an act of institutional racism.'

The Finance Committee's report has recommended that the NFSS and the Society of Ujamma receive one joint allocation of $2,500 to prevent the "duplication of ser-

In the opinion of Ray Turner, a member of the NFSS, Student Government has labeled the society "black" because it's membership at this point is predominately black. He said that

Turner feels that the joint allocation of funds is the effect of a larger aspect, the thrusting of Ujamma and the NFSS into a corner as "black organizations". Echoing Turner's appraisal, Ron Newkirk, who holds membership in both organizations, suggested that the lumping together of both groups by Student Government was an act of "overt racism". According to Newkirk, the NFSS may reject the joint allocation and ask for a separate allocation.

Dr. Poinsatte, who has acted as a reader in American History Advanced Placement Test for the last six summers, encourages students in the area to investigate advance placement testing.

By means of test performance a student may receive hours of college credit--even up to a full college year--in a variety of disciplines, which can conserve much unnecessary money, time, and effort in pursuing a college degree. The tests are sponsored by the Educational Testing Service centered in Princeton, New Jersey, with a charge of $10-$15 per

US silent on new Isreali reprisals

by Oswald Johnston (C) 1972 Washington Star-News

Washington, Oct. 17---Isreal's tough new policy of hitting suspected Arab Guerilla encampments in neighboring counties without waiting for a provocation is meeting what amounts to tacit apporval from United States officials.

For the record, the State Department let it be known yesterday that Israeli Ambassador Yitshak Rabin would be queried on the policy after a series of air strikes Sunday against Guerrilla targets in Lebannon and Syria.

But the discussion, according to State Department sources later in the day, amounted to no more than a quarter-hour session between Rabin and Assistant Secretary of State Joseph J. Sisco after a diplomatic luncheon.

State Department spokesamen were otherwise silent about the meeting. But according to insources, the only disagreement between the two was over a question of tactics.

Sisco is said to have warned that renewed Israeli attacks on Lebanese territory would make it harder for the government in Beirut to keep up its hesitant efforts to control Palestinian

The limited, almost perfunctory scope of this exchange illustrates how deeply United States' Middle East policy has been affected by the Arab terrorist raid in Munich early last month which resulted in the death of 11 Israeli athletes at the Olympic Games.

In the past, Israeli reprisal attacks on Lebanon, almost invariably causing more loss of life than the Fedayeen attacks that provoked them have been deplored by the State Department as an impediment to U.S. Israeli cooperation. They have generally been held to threaten what little remaining leverage the United States can exert in the Arab world to protect American interests there and press for an eventual peace settlement.

Cairo Sunday night, the gravity of the mission was underlined by President Anwar El-Sadat's most conciliatory language about the Russians since well before the expulsion of Soviet advisers from Egypt last July.

The Munich episode appeared to bring to a close a chapter in which the United States had before it an unparalleled opportunity influence Egyptian policies in the Middle East and at the same time bring the Israelis to the point of negotiating a peace settlement.

High-ranking state Department officials are known to believe that Sadat's expulsion of the Soviets produced a new flexibility in the Israeli political hierarchy that was just beginning to open the way to new peace initiaves when the blow fell at Munich.

Since then, the same officials have spoken hopefully of an eventual resumption of Middle East peace talks. But as a practical matter they appear to have accepted the Israeli view that no further negotiations are worth entering until the threat of Arab Terrorism is snuffed out altogether.

Accordingly, the U.S. Government has taken the lead in pressing for international action against

Success hasn't spoiled Creaney

Mike Creaney admits that basically young football team. A success almost-but not quitespoiled him. "I was spoiled rotten as a sophomore," Notre Dame's senior tight end can say two full seasons later. "I was playing with an experienced offensive line, with everybody's All-American split end, Tom Gatewood, and with everybody's Heisman Trophy winner, Joe Theismann. Things just went the way they were supposed to that year.'

'But junior year,'' Creaney continues, "we didn't have that same efficiency. We were bogged down, mainly because of our general inexperience."

This year, there is more experience and much more talent to go with it. I'm not playing super football compared to last year, but everyone is playing just a little bit better. It's that aggregate sum that adds up to 600 yards." Against Purdue, he caught five passes for 114 yards and a touchdown, his best game statistics in 23 games for the Irish. But he was just as pleased with his performance against Northwestern a week earlier, even though the game plan called on him to be an anonymous blocking lineman rather than a glamorous pass receiver.

'I don't care who does the job as long as it gets done," Creanev says. If we win and all I do is block, that's fine. If I catch a lot of passes and we lose, what good is Creaney has been doing a lot of good by catching passes, blocking and also exerting leadership on a year ago, only the blocking was a constant.

"Last year, I was not in a position where I thought I should say anything," Creaney admits.

"There were a lot of seniors on the team, and I don't think anyone who wasn't a senior would have been listened to. When you throw the ball as little as we did last year, other teams could put eight or nine men on the line.'

"No matter what I wanted to do, there wasn't anything I could do if I wasn't getting the ball. I know Tom Gatewood felt much the same way--if he couldn't get the ball, there was just no way he could

"But this year, the situation is different. I'm one of the few seniors, and it would be wrong if I didn't say anything. There are so many younger guys on the team and their enthusiasm is just infectious. Eric Penick is just like a ping pong ball in a corridor before and during a game.'

"I never believed one person could make all the difference in the world, but Tommy (Clements) has made all the difference. That's taking nothing away from the offensive line, or nothing away from Eric. But Tommy just has a super attitude. He really makes everything go.'

Although Creaney himself has been complimented as one of the best tight ends in Irish foootball history, one of the nicest compliments he claims he's been given has been when people find it hard off the field to believe he's a football player at all. "One of the most complimentary things for he explains, "is when a person says, 'How can you be a football player away from the Most people just can't separate the person from the machine on the field.' They expect the prototype-big, dumb, mean and ugly. It s an unusual thing, but four hours every Saturday afternoon, you try to knock someone down.Afterwards, you're sorry for him. I know there's an incongruity there, but on the football field, everyone has the same equipment on and everyone knows the risks involved.'

'I know what it takes to win on the football field, and it takes 100 per cent dedication of the body and mind. But I also know what it takes to win off the field, and it's not the same thing. Every life situation isn't third and ten.

Creaney does not question his ability as a college tight end, but he is almost too honest with himself when considering his professional

"You have to talk reasonably about pro football," he say. "I've got pro height (6-4) and I probably could keep pro weight, about 230 (he's 218 now), but I've only got average speed and my physical strength is below par. I've never been a physically strong football player. I've never felt you need muscles in your ear lobes. It's more a matter of technique and

"I definitely feel I'm a good college tight end. I'm big enough to block guys like (Purdue's) Keser, Baumgartner or Butz, but they haven't really matured yet either. We're all in the same boat. It's something else to be going against some 10-ayear All-Pro.

Creaney is a psychology major, and although he has not ruled out pro football, he has pretty well analyzed what he has gotten out of football.

"There's a time when you sit back and say, 'That's enough, I've gotten what I wanted out of it.' I've gotten an education, the friendships, the team concepts. Maybe I've gotten enough out of it and it's time to get out.

But not too quickly of course. There's still a season of offensive efficiency ahead.

Irish drop to eighth

Notre Dame, despite coming through with a strong second half showing in their 42-16 rout of Pittsburgh, dropped a notch in the eyes of the respective pollsters in this week's A.P. and U.P.I. college football rankings.

Louisiana State, runaway winners in their duel with Southeastern conference foe Auburn last Saturday night, moved into the seventh spot, forcing coach

Sailors third

Notre Dame's sailing team ran into hard luck while taking a third place finish at last week's J. L. Hudson International Regatta in Detroit. Unable to get a ride on Friday, the team finally made it to the sailing site at Wayne State on the Detroit River in time for Saturday morning's first race. Kevin Hoyt and Bruce Marek sailed in "A" Division, and Will Donetan and Tom Matthews in " ? "B" Division. Their performances were good enough to put them in first place after Saturday's action in a field comprised of six American and five Canadian teams

Sunday brought bitter disappointment for the Irish, though, as the protest committee reversed an earlier decision, and disqualified Hoyt and Marek from the previous day's Race 7A. This added ten points to the N.D. score, which eventually proved to be the deciding margin between first and third.

Donetan, with four firsts in nine races, took low point "B" honors, while Hoyt sailed well, despite the disqualification which ruined his chances of taking low "A" awards.

Toronto took first place, with Queens of Canada a close second. The Irish finished far and away the best of the six American squads.

Al Constants and Mike Dooley meanwhile sailed in the singlehanded regatta at the University of Wisconsin Madison.

Scheduled for this weekend is the University of Iowa Davis Cup Regatta, followed by next weekend's Ohio State event. Also on that weekend, the Irish will represent the Midwest Collegiate Sailing Association in the Douglas Cup Match Race Series at Long Beach, California. Hoyt, Marek, Neil Barth, and John Maus will be making the trip, Notre Dame's first appearance in this important intercollegiate regatta

The sailing club is still looking for new members, with five regattas left, and sailing on St. Joe Lake till at least Thanksgiving. If you are interested, meetings are held on Wednesdays at 6:30 PM in room 204, Engineering Building.

Ara Parseghian's Fighting Irish back to the number eight slot.

Southern California, Oklahoma, and Alabama retained their 1-2-3 ranking in both polls, though the Sooners again managed to nip off some of the distance between themselves and the top-ranked Trojans. With a strong defensive showing in their 27-0 win over Texas, Oklahoma cut the margin to a mere 18 points in the writer's poll, and moved to within 10 points of U.S.C. in the coaches' voting.

Ohio State held their fourth position in the A.P. balloting, while Nebraska, coming off a 62-0 slaughter of Missouri, (Irish opponent in N.D. Stadium Saturday afternoon), edged ahead of unbeaten Michigan into the fifth spot. The U.P.I. poll favored coach Bob Devaney's defending national champion Cornhuskers by boosting them into the number four slot, with O.S.U. and Michigan fifth and sixth, respectively.

L.S.U. and Notre Dame are seventh and eighth, with Colorado, UCLA, and Tennessee sharing the 9-10-11 rankings. Auburn, number nine a week ago, fell to the 15th position, and Texas, 10th last week. dropped out to 14th in the A.P., and out of the U.P.I. voting entirely.

Stickmen tie Purdue

The Notre Dame lacrosse team opened its fall season Sunday afternoon with a 10-10 tie of Pur-The score is deceiving, though, as coach Rich O'Leary ran eight middie lines and played the regulars sparingly.

Senior Ed Hoban was the story on offense, hitting for a three-goal "hat trick" against the inexperienced Boilermaker defense. Rich Mullin, Dave Jurusik, Kevin Fogerty, Mike Loughery, Pete Irace, Jim Courtney, and "Fidel" Volpe added the other Irish tallies. Senior goalies Paul Simmons and Jim Roller were both perfect in the nets as the stickmen led, 7-0, going into the final periods.

O'Leary wants to give valuable playing time to the new men. However, O'Leary is also concerned about finding replacement for Hoban, who graduates in December.
