

Game machines suggested for hall income at HPC

by Mary Beth Mungovan
Staff Reporter

Rick Kanser, owner of The Library on Notre Dame Avenue, suggested to hall presidents at the HPC Meeting last night that game-type vending machines be installed as a source of income for the halls.

Kanser, a '73 Notre Dame graduate, said the game machines would provide recreational activity for hall members as well as additional hall revenue. He foresees a crack-down on minors with false I-Ds in Indiana bars in the next months and that this will increase the need for other forms of on-campus recreation.

HPC Chirman Pat McLaughlin also announced that after two weeks he still has received no reply to a letter sent to Phillip Faccenda, Vice-President for Student Affairs, discussing means to alleviate the present housing problem. He stated that if there were still no reply by Thursday a copy of the letter would be sent to Father Hesburgh and the Board of Trustees with an indication that Faccenda made no reply.

HPC is presented with the suggestion of game machines for additional hall revenue.

Rhodes to speak on Kennedy assassination

by Tom Kruczek
Staff Reporter

Rusty Rhodes, an investigator and lecturer on political assassinations, will speak Wednesday February 20 and Thursday February 21 on the subject of the assassination of John F. Kennedy. Wednesday's lecture will be held at Washington Hall and Thursday's at O'Laughlin auditorium at St. Mary's.

Rhodes is executive director of the committee to investigate political assassinations as well as former professor at Santa Monica College. He currently is interested in creating student interest in classes or seminars for the purpose of acquainting students with facts concerning political assassinations. The talk will use slides, as well as the Abraham Zapruder film of the murder of the President in Dallas. The Warren Commission, which was supposed to uncover the truth in connection with the death of the president, chose not to look at this film. No reasons were given.

"A conspiracy that was within the country surfaced in 1963 in Dallas," Rhodes said Tuesday afternoon in an interview with the Observer, "and it is surfacing once again with the current Watergate investigation. Our interest is in circulating petitions for the opening of the archives."

Where the true facts of the assassination may be held. We want this information given to forensic medical teams so they may view the evidence which was been withheld from the public and from the Warren Commission."

Rhodes mentions that Leon Jaworski, the current Watergate prosecutor was brought in to censor some of the evidence before it was given to the Warren Commission for review. It is Rhodes contention the Jaworski withheld information that was important to the decision of the Warren Committee that only one man assassinated the President.

Rhodes also points out that the manner in which Lee Harvey Oswald was characterized by the Warren Commission was wrong. His investigation into the past of Oswald revealed many interesting facts.

These facts, when coupled with evidence that he has uncovered, present a very powerful case for conspiracy.

On Tuesday evening, Rhodes met with Sherman Skolnick, investigator from Chicago. In the meeting Skolnick and Rhodes exchanged ideas and Skolnick gave Rhodes a first generation copy of the Zapruder film. "Once you see a copy of this film, it is almost impossible to believe that one man assassinated President Kennedy," said Skolnick.

Skolnick also said that we have reached a crisis point concerning the assassination.

"If we have gotten to the point that the people who assassinated the president are not objecting to people going across the country telling people that Oswald was not the only person involved in the Kennedy murder, then we have to assume that these people are controlling the show. At one time people couldn't say a conspiracy was involved. People who are surfacing with Watergate are also involved with the Kennedy murder. When you start tying in the Watergate people and the assassination, that is when the real trouble occurs."

Rhodes mentioned that, depending on the feeling of the crowd, he may try to bring into his presentation certain points concerning E. Howard Hunt, Frank Sturgis and other Watergate defendants that they are at least partly connected with the clandestine affair in Dallas.

Rhodes said that a person should try to see both sides of a question before he tries to make up his mind, especially with a subject such as the death of a president.

"The best way to try to disprove what the Warren Commission has to say is to read it. UCLA Law School has found some 1058 different technicalities that it could be dismissed on, but before you make up your mind, see what the Warren Commission said in its report."

Hearst to meet SLA demands

By JACK V. FOX
SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — Publisher Randolph Hearst announced Thursday establishment of a "People In Need" food bank to start handing out free groceries by Friday as an act of faith and good will to save the life of his kidnaped daughter.

The publisher said A. Ludlow Kramer, secretary of state of Washington State, will set up the program and that a coalition of radical groups approved by Patricia Hearst's kidnapers would act as a sort of "executive committee" overseeing the program.

Hearst said he hoped the program could feed 100,000 people a month for 12 months. He said it would be modeled on the "Neighbors In Need" food program set up by Kramer in Washington.

Kramer called for 1,000 volunteers to help distribute the food to the needy as demanded by the Symbionese Liberation Army, which kidnaped Miss Hearst two weeks ago.

Russell Means, a leader of the American Indian Movement, confirmed that "tentative agreement" had been reached and that among its conditions were assurance that members of the cooperating radical group would not be prosecuted by any law enforcement agency.

Hearst, appearing before TV news cameras along with Kramer outside the Hearst home in suburban Hillsborough, promised that the family would take no reprisals against the coalition.

Earlier in the day, Hearst had called on the SLA to match his gesture of good faith and said release of the pretty coed, who will be 20 Wednesday, would be the "best gesture they could make."

The mother, Mrs. Catherine Hearst, her voice breaking, said she hoped Patty would be released on her birthday.

"I'll be waiting for her in a nice, bright dress," she said.

Kramer, a liberal Republican first elected secretary of state in 1964 and reelected in 1968 and 1972, helped set up the "Neighbors In Need" program in the Seattle area to help the thousands of persons thrown out of work by a severe slump at a Boeing Corp. assembly plant.

He ran unsuccessfully for mayor of Seattle in 1969, piling up a $10,000 campaign debt which he paid off in part by getting a job pumping gas at an Olympia service station.

The exact locations of the food distribution centers will be determined by the coalition, Kramer said.

Kramer said there would be no identification system for the needy but that food would be given to those who come in and ask for it.

"We will buy our food wholesale, as cheap as we can," he said. "We will seek donations. We will seek free warehouses and trucks."

Under the NIN program in Washington, he said, a needy family of four gets $6 worth of food a week at a reduced price. The program has been underway for three and one-half years in that state.

The announcement of the nuts and bolts of the program, to which Hearst and the Hearst family foundation will contribute $2 million, came after the publisher met with representatives of the six militant activist groups.

Two Indians, wearing leather jackets, their arms folded, stood solemnly guarding the door to the conference room at the Hilton Hotel at the San Francisco Airport.

NEW YORK (UPI)—The federal court trial of President Nixon's former cabinet officers John N. Mitchell and Maurice Stans on conspiracy and perjury charges began Tuesday. The defense immediately requested all charges be thrown out or the trial moved elsewhere.

The judge reserved decision on the two defense motions, and jury selection got under way. Former Attorney General Mitchell, 60, and former Commerce Secretary Stans, 65, were charged with perjury, conspiracy and destruction of justice last May in an indictment accusing each of a total of 10 counts. They could get up to 50 years in prison each if convicted.

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The Senate Watergate Committee voted Tuesday to end its controversial public hearings and conclude privately its investigations involving Howard Hughes, and CIA and campaign funds from milk producers.

Sen. Sam J. Ervin Jr., D-N.C., announced the committee voted 6 to 1 to hold no more of the public hearings that made Watergate revelations a daily television event last summer. The committee acted to permit the courts, the grand juries and the House impeachment inquiry to proceed undisturbed.

Mardi Gras successful

by Val Zurblis
Staff Reporter

Steve Boy, Mardi Gras Chairman, termed this year's Mardi Gras one of the most successful ever, possibly the most successful in Notre Dame's history.

Approximately $20,000 was taken in as profit. Since all the bills haven't been paid yet this figure is tentative. This is a significant jump from last year's profit of $3700.

Boy explains that no written records were kept on Mardi Gras over the 20 years it has been in existence. Only the cancelled checks remain to tell how profitable the carnivals were.

This year's raffle did not make much money. "The raffle was always the money maker in the past," remarked Boy. "But this year we just about broke even." Apparently, because such a tight show was run, the carnival itself made most of the money.

Mardi Gras has had a reputation for graft and dishonesty. This year the same basic operation was run with a much higher overhead and substantial increase in profits. Boy feels the tighter control placed on the people who work at the carnival caused this. To improve things in the future, Boy suggested that external administrative control could be placed on Mardi Gras. Also he thinks books on expenses should be kept to deter people from pocketing the profits.

"Keenan and Grace were the top money makers in the carnival," asserted Boy. He doesn't know exactly how much each booth made, but he knows Keenan and Grace brought in the most money.

Boy explained that being Mardi Gras chairman required about 100 hours a week of work plus the three weeks of construction of the carnival itself. "It was worth it," relates Boy. "It was probably my greatest educational experience at Notre Dame."

He also attributes the success of the carnival to his staff.

"If I break 22 grand it will be the most money ever made," said Boy.

Playboy buys Agnew book

By THOMAS HILLSTROM
NEW YORK (UPI) — Spiro T. Agnew's literary agent announced Tuesday that Playboy Press has bid successfully for the right to publish the former vice president's novel about a fictional vice president involved in a heated Soviet-U.S. confrontation.

The agent, Scott Meredith, declined to reveal the advance the debt-ridden Agnew will receive for his manuscript, except to say that it is "more than the $50,000 one columnist mentioned and less than the $250,000 another columnist mentioned."

Meredith, who has represented such authors as Norman Mailer and the late Drew Pearson, said Playboy Press was one of five publishers who submitted "major bids" for the book, tentatively titled "A Very Special Relationship."

Playboy Press is a subsidiary of magazine publisher Hugh Hefner's Playboy Enterprises.

Random House reportedly expressed an early interest in the book but later rejected it. The Ladies Home Journal has purchased North American serial rights to a portion of the manuscript for an undisclosed sum.

Meredith said paperback and film rights to the book have not yet been sold, adding that "every major studio" had expressed an interest.

"It's remarkably good," the agent said. "There are one or two or three little amateurish touches, but these can be worked out. Mr. Agnew shows remarkable ability as a novelist."

Edward Kuhn Jr., editorial director of the Playboy Press and Playboy Book Club, said he hoped the book could be published late this year or early 1975.

Both Kuhn and Meredith said Agnew "is going to write every word of it himself," but will receive the same editorial assistance that any first novelist does.

Meredith said that Agnew had submitted 15 typewritten pages of the novel's first chapter and about a half-dozen pages each of a plot outline and character sketches.

The principal character in the novel, Meredith said, is Porter Newton Canfield, a liberal politician appointed to the vice presidency in 1983 by a conservative president following the death of the originally elected vice president.

After Russian troops move into Afghanistan, a terrorist group in Iran, believing the Soviets are actually after that nation's oil, attempts to use Canfield to touch off a confrontation between the United States and the USSR, forming the basic plot to the book.

Meredith said the fictional vice president, Canfield, who is "rather unlike Mr. Agnew," becomes involved with a female member of the cabinet in one of the book's romantic subplots.

"There will be sex," the agent said, "but it will be handled with taste."

John Denver to play in NCCJL prison reform benefit concert

The National Coordinating Committee for Justice Under Law will present a benefit concert Monday, March 4 featuring John Denver, The Nitty Gritty Dirt Band, Oliver and Steve Goodman. The purpose of the concert, sponsored by the Notre Dame Program in Non-Violence, is to raise money for the NCCJL "Alternative to Prison Program."

"The program's main objective is to attack the root causes of most crimes—poverty and unemployment," commented George Mische, executive director of NCCJL.

According to Mische, the alternative to incarceration is job training, steady employment within the program, and communal living with trained counselors instead of a prison term.

"Basically the Alternative to Prison Program is a two-year investment in individuals who come from an environment that is short on education and training, but long on opportunity for getting involved with crime," said Mische.

The NCCJL aims to eliminate the root causes of much crime through expert technical training, a stable community life, and a steady source of income. A pilot project in Washington, D.C. is already underway and will be fully operable by the end of 1974.

The Washington project will train auto mechanics while simultaneously operating a large auto garage.

Much of the money from the benefit concert will go toward funding the initial costs of the Washington project.

Concert proceeds will also kick-off an investigation of Indiana's prison system. Possible NCCJL projects in one of Indiana's major cities will be discussed.

A two day conference on the justice system in Indiana has been tentatively scheduled for March 5 and 6. Members of both political parties, representatives of various prisons and directors of citizen groups are expected to testify.

Further information on the NCCJL's "Alternative to Prison Program" may be obtained in the Program in Non-Violence office in Room 338 O'Shaughnessy Hall.

Campus Exorcism

In past years there were always some annual milestones you could count on to mark progress through the year, like the fall and spring monsoon seasons, final exam weeks with those "special" dining hall meals, the January blahs and then the escalation of room-pick negotiations as the warm weather returns with the robins. Within the past two years, however, an intruder managed to claim squatter's rights somewhere between the blahs and the bloodshed, the effects of which may be far more damaging than any of the others. If we were to title this new milestone for its content as potential drama, it may very well become popular as "Park Your Carcass Elsewhere" or for the more ecclesiastically relevant, possible "Campus Exorcisms". And the encore this spring is a mass exodus of nearly 900 more students ... picked randomly, of course, in a Christianly democratic fashion to dissipate the responsibility.

For those of the fortunate minority who own cars and have locked onto a good off-campus residence without mortgaging their souls, the transition will essentially be a minor inconvenience and casual readjustment from the old living style. In some cases where the rare combination of people get together all anxious to make an off-campus living arrangement really work, the learning experience can be like none possible on campus. But then that's the minority. Now what of those whose eviction lacks the cushioning of such good fortune, where the move introduces more severe pressures than the combined weight of dining hall cuisine, the strange noises from your roommate's stereo and those three pink slips in your major. And if that didn't ring of conspiracy, now you have to find the time and energy to solve this whole new batch of problems... without allowing anything else to slip. The only consolation—if that's the right word—is that you're not alone. Several hundred of your randomly picked friends will be fighting right alongside you... probably for the same house.

Of course there's no getting around the fact that the building of a new residence hall is a serious decision indeed. If it could double as a new faculty office building, engineering facilities or any of a dozen other campus needs, there would be little reason not to go ahead. Real problems rarely get solved that nearly though. Suppose, however, that ND were to be hit by another bout from its age-old plague...fire...say one of the older dorms. Where would all (God willing no one would be injured) the students live? Further, a new residence hall might well serve the combined goals of providing undergraduate and graduate housing, consequently also helping to preserve the uniquely great atmosphere of residentiality high-lighted in the recent Committee on University Priorities study.

There's another twist to the story because of the following irony: in past eras students always seemed to move off-campus in random waves leaving a surplus of campus accommodations to be filled only by enforcing varying degrees of compulsory campus residency. In more recent years, though, with students, faculty and administration really working to make all aspects of campus life the best anywhere, the response has been a preference by students to remain on campus. This leads me to believe that past seemingly random exoduses were neither random nor "trendy" in any occult or supernatural fashion, but the result of a very real misalignment of some aspects of campus living with the preferences of many students. Those were eras of less dialogue, though, and less agreement on mutual goals of all aspects of campus life.

Regardless of intentions, morale cannot but suffer from the overhanging apprehension that you may randomly (that's the element of intrigue and surprise) be displaced to a room above a laundromat before September. House hunting may replace the traditional spring trips to the Dunes when (if) the weather clears...to have something lined up "just in case".

Notre Dame has always been an exception to the rule in more ways than athletics—a trend setter rather than a trend follower—as was unfortunately exhibited by the Admission's Office dilemma which instigated this whole mess two years ago. Maybe more potential freshmen could be placed in an "alternate" category instead of being outrightly accepted. Then the size of the freshman class could be regulated nearly to-the-person. With a better handle on that number a lot of problems reduce to more solvable proportion.

Contrary to some of the popular trends of "post-Watergate morality" it might be useful to analyze this problem from both a financial and ethical point of view. After stacking one side of the scale with those more easily defined and measured costs of construction, maintenance and utility for a new residence hall, why not consider all the implications of forced evictions—random or not—and admit just what a weighty problem really exists. For the present, however, there is little evidence to indicate reciprocity toward several hundred Notre Dame (not University of South Bend) students who give of their time and effort and sweat and talents to make sense of the phrase "We're No. 1." Hopefully I wasn't wrong before in saying ND has never been a place to follow trends, but rather to set them.

— InPIRG — The Need Remains

Two years ago, INPIRG began its "existence" at Notre Dame. It generated enough support to get signatures on petitions from 75 per cent of the students of Notre Dame and St. Mary's to add a $3.00 charge to the tuition bill. The $3.00 was intended to cover the finances of INPIRG.

The project died, however, on the campus of Indiana University that same year when the Board of Trustees there denied a motion to place the $3.00 charge on the IU bill. The support of IU was absolutely necessary for the success of INPIRG across the state. Without IU, it wouldn't cut the mustard.

This year, INPIRG is attempting to generate concern again about consumerism in Indiana. And as it was then, Notre Dame is starting the wheels to reactivate the interest here.

Indiana has no major agency to protect the consumer. The purpose of INPIRG, however, goes beyond the basics of protective consumerism. It serves as a structure into which interested students can channel their concern about issues into some form of action.

Time after time, concern is neglected by those in power and what results is not action or change, but frustration with the system and with "working inside the system." Hopefully, with the backing of the universities of the state, with the financial solidarity of $3.00 coming from all college students in Indiana, INPIRG can serve to translate those frustrations into action.

Public Interest Research Groups have proven themselves worthy in other states and Indiana should be no exception.

Two years ago, The Observer pushed hard for the passage of the $3.00 charge addition to the ND bill. Two years have changed a lot of things, but not the need for this form of consumer structure. And as we did then, The Observer strongly supports the new beginning of INPIRG here.

Nominate Sirica

Editor:

With the vote for Senior Class Fellow upcoming, I would ask that seniors take a few minutes to reflect on the election. Each succeeding year has mirrored a growing lack of interest in the Senior Fellow, whether it be due to involvement in class work or just plain apathy. For four years we have seen nominations which range from the supposedly sacred (P.O.W.s) to the profane (Mr. Dirt), yet in the end seniors in the past have elected some outstanding individuals to hold this honor. Within this in mind I would like to nominate a person who I, and many others consider an outstanding individual--Judge John Sirica. Whatever your political leanings may be, one cannot argue against this man's intense dedication to justice, and the search for truth. He is a man sworn to preserve the laws of this land, and in the face of strong political pressure and adversity, refused to be cowed or betray this duty. In many ways we owe John Sirica our admiration and thanks; more importantly, we have an opportunity to share our graduation with a man who has much to share with us.

O.C. freeloaders

Editor:

I address this letter to the students of the North Quad and the officials of the North Dining Hall. My gripe is this: every day at lunch time, I'd estimate that approximately 50-100 off-campus students sneak in the exits of the North Dining Hall, and then cut up the lines the wrong way. I'm tired of standing in line for 15-20 minutes, then watching one (or two or three) of these free-loaders cut in. I'm not sure what the cost of a lunch is, but I'm sure these daily visitors take their toll, and I don't like paying their way. If the off-campus students like our lunches so much, meal cards are sold at the Ad. building.

I also offer a solution: station a checker at each exit from 12-12:45 each day. The expense of the checkers cannot equal the expense of the free-loaders. The Dining Hall officials can only blame themselves if these rip-offs continue.

If other students feel the same way, speak up! No more free-loaders!

Closeminded ND

Editor:

The refusal of the Arts and Letters department to allow students to take as many hours per semester as they wish is another example of the closed-mindedness that continues to prevail in this supposedly liberal institution.

I think it is an infringement upon an individual's desire to learn to deter him from making the most out of his education, especially when the concerns the academic aspect of it. I can find no reasonable basis whatsoever for this, especially when it is us, and not the administration, who are mostly interested in what we learn or don't learn during our years here. It is time to change existing policies which make Notre Dame everything but a learning institution not only in the social but in the academic field as well.

My high esteem for the educational system of this country has greatly declined after three years here. I have finally begun to look at myself and I realize now that for too long a time I have been putting up with a system with which I can hardly identify. One of the reasons I decided to come to the United States to study was to escape the closed atmosphere to which in a great extent exists in my country. But I have been surprised and disappointed to find out that Notre Dame epitomizes all this backwardness itself.

What bewilders me the most is how so many of us here can continue to live with ourselves in light of the existing circumstances.

Co-ed No Go

The recent furor which arose in response to a letter entitled "Cattle for the Cows" presents us with a valuable insight concerning the social atmosphere at Notre Dame. The original letter and the ensuing responses portray many of the perverse attitudes which are perpetuated on this campus with regard to one's opposite sex. The attitudes which students here have traditionally held regarding women have never been mature or healthy, but many people had expected that co-educational would stimulate a positive change in these attitudes. Apparently, this optimism was not well founded.

I believe that the most appropriate single word which can be used to describe these existing attitudes is "competitive." From the first day one arrives as a freshman the intense competition begins. The males are coached by upperclassmen to hustle and get as many phone numbers as possible while the wiser females educate the unsuspecting freshman girls that the men at Notre Dame have but one intention--sex. Through the guidance of these astute tutors the freshman quickly learn that a male-female relationship at Notre Dame is nothing more than a strategically plotted game. (It seems worthy of note that the most outspoken teachers of these valuable principles are usually those who have been most unsuccessful at this game.) The competitive spirit is nurtured in us early, thus preparing us for the warped situation which we are about to enter.

The letters printed in last Friday's Observer are a prime example of the bitter competition to which I have referred. Apparently, the male respondents were personally offended by the original letter and felt the need for a counterattack. That ever-present demon, the male ego, could not bear to be affronted by a group of co-eds without responding in an equally vicious manner, the result being continued ill will between males and females. It is extremely disheartening to see that many students would rather intensify the competition between males and females rather than attempt to initiate a spirit of cooperation. Perhaps the recognizable similarity in the words co-education and cooperation is not quite accidental.

The crux of the problem which exists here at Notre Dame was expressed by the fact that the authors of many of these letters had requested that their names be withheld. This supports my hypothesis that the relationship between male and female at Notre Dame is surrounded by an air of mysticism. Rarely does one find another person who is willing to expose his-her thoughts and emotions without fear of becoming vulnerable to others. People frequently concern themselves with creating facades or engaging in word games, thus making an honest interchange of feelings an unattainable goal. As long as individuals refuse to express their feelings to one another in a frank and open manner, the present social atmosphere will prevail. Too often people create masks to protect themselves from vulnerability, but if these masks cannot be successfully stripped away, no possible progress can be made toward alleviating the perverted social atmosphere which now exists. It is rather easy to criticize others in an anonymous letter, but the only worthwhile contributions are made when the mask of anonymity is removed.

The letter entitled "Cattle for the Cows" was not an assault on the masculinity of this university's entire male populace. It was an expression of frustration and plea for help, but because of the selfish attitudes which pervade much of this campus those females may never discover the relationships they are seeking. Males are seeking females while females are seeking males, but seldom do they find each other.

It appears that co-education at Notre Dame is not working and for once the university is not to blame. As a senior, I have witnessed co-education from its beginnings, but I do not believe it has brought about any significant change at this university. Co-education means much more than the sudden appearance of females on campus, it must be accompanied by a change in the attitudes of those involved. For this reason I claim that co-education has not been effective at Notre Dame.

I will be graduating in May after four years at du Lac and it saddens me to think that I will not miss this university. Hopefully, those who are now freshmen and sophomores will witness a metamorphosis and maturation of student attitudes toward the opposite sex. Possibly they may feel at least a touch of remorse upon their graduation that I will be lacking at mine.

Meany: Nixon should resign

By DONALD FINLEY

MIAMI BEACH (UPI) Labor leader George Meany said Tuesday that Michigan's congressional election Monday showed the "greatest service" President Nixon could perform for his country would be to resign.

Meany said Democrat Richard F. Vander Veen's victory amounted to "a referendum on Mr. Nixon's own status and credibility with the people of the country" since Vander Veen had campaigned strictly on the issue of the President's Water-gate troubles.

"I think it's a definite indication that the people don't want Watergate to go away, and a good many of them would like the President to go away," Meany told newsmen after a meeting of the AFL-CIO Executive Council.

The Council Monday renewed its call for Nixon's impeachment.

"The election yesterday emphasized the fact that the people of the country do not trust the President," said Meany, president of the AFL-CIO.

"I think the greatest service the President could perform at this time for his country would be to spare us the experience of going through impeachment or possibly spare us three more years of uncertainty and of mistrust on the part of the people of the man in the White House ... and to resign," Meany said.

Meany said Vander Veen's victory over Republican Robert Vanderlaan in Vice President Gerald Ford's old district "makes Gerry Ford look more and more important" as a possible President if Nixon leaves office.

"At least Ford would have credibility, he could gather people around him that could run this country, and I think Henry Kissinger would be just as good a secretary of state under Gerry Ford as president as he is under Richard Nixon," Meany said.

Dayan threatens resignation

By ROBERT SLATER
JERUSALEM (UPI) — Defense Minister Moshe Dayan threatened to resign from the Israeli government Tuesday raising the possibility of a split in Prime Minister Golda Meir's ruling Labor party and a breakdown in her efforts to form a new coalition government.

Dayan planned to meet with Mrs. Meir Wednesday to discuss his offer to resign, announced Tuesday by Transport Minister Shimon Peres, a Dayan associate.

A national unity government would include members of the right wing opposition Likud political bloc, a government which Mrs. Meir said Tuesday making decisions on Israel's peace negotiations with the Arabs.

CAC sponsors Marx Bros. films to be presented this weekend

by Mike Donovan
Staff Reporter

This weekend, the Notre Dame campus has the opportunity to experience the Marx Brothers from their firsts to their finest. Sponsored by the Cultural Arts Commission, the Marx Brothers Film Festival will begin Friday night in the Engineering Auditorium and continue on Saturday and Sunday with two movies shown at 6:00 and repeated again at 10:00 p.m.

Cocanuts, and Monkey Business on Friday, Horsefeathers and Duck Soup on Saturday, and Go West, and A Night at the Opera on Sunday are the features but the Marx Brothers, with their lam-pooning, hillrity, and madness are the main attractions.

Most critics would agree that the festival features the six best works of the Marx Brothers. A Night at the Opera, probably their finest achievement, contains the classic "stateroom scene". No patron cards will be honored for this event. Tickets, at one dollar each, are good for two movies at either the 6:00 or the 10:00 viewings.

The Cultural Arts Commission is looking into the possibility of presenting a Woody Allen film festival next year.

The car, a light blue Volkswagen, had been discovered missing Thursday, Feb. 7 at 7:30 p.m. It was found the next day completely demolished at the rear of the Campbell property near the north end of the campus.

Security also reported a hit and run accident in the St. Joe's Hall parking lot Thursday. One car was damaged and the driver of the offending vehicle has not been located.

Saturday, an auto was reported vandalized around noon in the D-1 parking lot. According to security, the antenna, air filter, and emissions control system were damaged.

Memorial Library saves energy

by Al Rutherford
Staff Reporter

Memorial Library is doing its part to conserve power due to the nation's energy crisis. David Donovan, assistant director of the library and a member of the Energy Conservation Committee, stated two ways in which energy is being conserved at the library: heat and electricity.

"Conserving heat is not as critical as conserving electricity," stated Donovan. "The temperature is kept at 68 degrees but it's hard to keep it a uniform temperature throughout the building. But we're still working to make the library more comfortable."

When the energy crisis first became a major concern, the floodlights on the mural were immediately turned off. The task as of late has been to reduce illumination without hampering the environment needed for reading.

The basement lighting has been recently reduced. On the first and second floors, perimeter lighting has been turned off, decorative lighting has been reduced, and window lighting has been cut out.

From 8 a.m. to 4 p.m., 1042 fluorescent tubes and 209 incandescent bulbs are shut off resulting in a savings of 68,480 watts. In the evening hours from 4 p.m. to 12 a.m., reduced lighting produces a savings of 29,260 watts.

Future plans include the removal of one-third of the fluorescent tubes in the stack tower. The fluorescent tubes will be removed from over book stacks and not over desks or study areas.

"Most of the fluorescent tubes are 40 watts," explained Donovan. "Even when the bulb is removed, four watts still flows through the transformers. But we're still talking of a savings of 36 watts."

Office areas have not been affected yet, but as Donovan explained, "Only certain select areas are being done first. It is on a trial and error basis. We can eliminate a lot of lighting without harming anyone."

Donovan continued, "The administration encouraged everyone to check and see how power could be saved. We have taken the initiative to save as much as possible without any harmful effects."

"The Energy Conservation Committee has approved the removal of the fluorescent tubes," stated Donovan. "We welcome any and all suggestions. If students see where we are wasting, please let us know. Likewise, if our methods are having bad effects, still contact us."

Twenty states to get additional gasoline; Indiana included

by WILLIAM CLAYTON
WASHINGTON (UPI)—

Energy director William E. Simon, moving to eliminate long lines at service stations within a matter of days, announced Tuesday that 20 of the hardest-hit states will get an "emergency injection" of gasoline.

Emerging from a White House meeting with President Nixon, Simon told reporters the allocation would increase total gasoline inventories by 5 per cent in 10 of the states and by 2 per cent in 10 of the states and by 2 per cent in the others.

Simon said he came up with the emergency allocation, to be carried out during the remaining days of this month, after the President last week "expressed deep concern about long lines and the inconvenience the American people are experiencing at gasoline stations for this very basic need."

He said the allocation would reduce service stations lines "within a matter of days."

The energy administrator described the action as "an emergency injection" to give relief to fuel-short areas while adjustments are being made in the long-range nationwide allocation system. The short-term shift amounts to 2 million barrels of gasoline.

Governors will have authority to allocate the extra fuel within the 20 states, Simon said.

Getting a 5 per cent increase are Alabama, Arizona, Georgia, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, Oregon, Vermont, Virginia and West Virginia. The 2 per cent boost goes to Connecticut, Florida, Illinois, Indiana, Maryland, Massachusetts, Missouri, New York, Pennsylvania and Rhode Island.

Simon's announcement came as the Senate prepared to vote on the long-stalled emergency energy bill newly revised by a House-Senate conference committee.

House backers of the energy legislation, aimed at rolling back crude oil prices and giving the President broad powers to deal with the energy shortage, meantime failed to get clearance by its rules committee to vote on the compromise version.

In another congressional development, Sen. Lowell B. Weicker, R-Conn., introduced a bill to make gasoline rationing mandatory within 30 days after approval by both houses. "Those who demagogue the chant of 'no rationing, fail to understand,'" said Weicker, "that people would far prefer rationing to behaving like animals at the gas pump."

But John Sawhill, deputy director of the Federal Energy Office, told Congress' Joint Economic Committee that any decision on rationing should be delayed at least until April 15 to give current allocation plans a chance to work.

"I think we can manage this situation without rationing," Sawhill said.

Simon and Sawhill met for about 45 minutes with Nixon to discuss the new measures.

The meeting followed by about three hours a session Nixon held with two visiting Arab foreign ministers, but Simon said prospects for lifting of the Middle East oil boycott was not discussed in his meeting with Nixon.

Saudi Arabian foreign minister Omar Sakkaf, speaking to reporters shortly after meeting with Nixon, said there would not be any quick ending of the Arab oil embargo, which he called a "long and complicated affair." He hinted that the Arabs were seeking concessions in the form of U.S. foreign aid before agreeing to resume oil sales to the United States.

Simon also predicted further rollbacks in prices for propane. Already, he said, several companies have reduced prices for the fuel which, in addition to industrial uses, is widely used to heat rural homes.

"We're going to see a rollback right across the line by propane producers and if we don't see it we'll roll it back ourselves," he said.

Simon acknowledged that the gasoline allocation program had inequities in it but pointed out that the program was less than one month old.

"What we want to do is give it time to work and we believe it will work," he said.

ND second in polls

North Carolina State is the nation's new number-one basketball squad in this week's polls by the AP and UPI. Notre Dame's Fighting Irish, victors last night over Western Michigan and now 21-1 for the season, moved up to the second spot in both polls.

The advancements, of course, were made possible by the incredible back-to-back wins by Oregon State and Oregon against the defending national champions, UCLA. It was the first time since 1966 that the Bruins have fallen twice-in-a-row, and ironically, both Oregon squads figured in those defeats.

Of the 20 teams in the polls, the Irish have beaten five: South Carolina, Kansas, Indiana, Marquette and UCLA. The first three teams were each defeated by Notre Dame on their home court.

"Beating South Carolina in Columbia has to be one of our best wins of the season," Irish coach Digger Phelps said of the ND 72-68 win. "We're conditioned to playing this type of game on the road since we've been through some pretty tough wars away from home."

"But all of these experiences should help us in post-season competition."

Notre Dame has four games left this season before post-season competition, however. This Saturday, the Irish host West Virginia in a regionally-televised TVS game. The Mountaineers, whose coach, Sonny Morar, recently resigned, hold the only victory over Pittsburgh, the seventh-ranked team in AP's poll and eighth-ranked in the UPI. Tipoff is at 12 noon.

Following that game, Notre Dame will host Ball State (Tuesday at 8 p.m.) and Villanova (Saturday March 2 at 2 p.m.) for the home finales before concluding the season at Dayton on March 4.

All-American Bill Walton and All-America candidate John Shumate, seen here in last month's 71-70 Irish win, currently represent the third- and second-ranked squads in the AP and UPI polls.

Women fencers win two

The Notre Dame-St. Mary's fencing squad won twice while dropping another meet last weekend in Chicago.

The women fencers defeated Chicago Circle, 5-4, clinching the bout by the seventh match. Against Wisconsin's women squad, the ND-SMC ladies battled even for the first eight bouts before dropping the final and the match, 5-4. Purdue's squad did not show and ND-SMC's fencers gained a forfeit win.

Senior Judi Offerle finished the afternoon with four wins and two defeats and is now 24-7 for the season. Captain Cathy Schoendienst, 3-3 in Chicago, now stands 25-7 while Kathy Valdiserri (2-3) is now 23-5. Sue Krakora, who made her debut on Saturday, lost. Bonifert and Rebbholz stand 5-4 and 9-8 respectively for the season.

A 'major' coach

There are other sports here at Notre Dame other than football, basketball and hockey. Unfortunately, they must operate under the stigma of the word "minor," purely a student word. And just as unfortunately, these so-called "minor" sports have some of the classiest, "major" persons on duLac's campus.

One of these grand persons is Don Faley. The Irish track coach, who is only in his second year as head coach at Notre Dame, perhaps had a difficult time re-adjusting to the Notre Dame from which he graduated in 1958. Being the competitor he is, he wanted to do well. And being a ND grad, he wanted his team to excel for the glory of his alma mater.

Don Faley

Not every coach has the same program, the same manner. Faley saw things he didn't like that first year, but unfortunately for him, they wouldn't change as fast as he would have hoped. So, there were some people who became aroused at Faley's tough, boisterous attitude. It didn't help matters, either, when Faley's tracksters failed to win last season.

This season has been a different story, however. Faley lost none of his drive and determination, but for some reasons, there is a great deal more easiness. What are those reasons?

Well, for one, Faley's squad now knows what makes him tick. Perhaps, one member hinted, the coach has mellowed. Anyway the Irish are 2-4, not great, but better than last year.

But the big reason, perhaps, there is brightness in ND's track future is this man's organizational mind. One only had to look at the events leading up to last weekend's Central Collegiate Conference meet in the A.C.C. to see this.

Organizing a 19-team, two-day event like the CCC meet is not an overnight thing. Faley worked hard, with pride and excitement, trying to make the meet a success. Many other people would have waited until the last moment to do the organizing, but Don Faley is not that kind of person. It was fortunate he is not.

Two weekends ago, Faley took his squad to East Lansing to participate in the Michigan State Relays. Afterwards, he went on a short recruiting junket to Canada. When he returned to South Bend on Monday night, he learned that his brother, who had been suffering from cancer, had passed away on the West Coast. So just four days from the start of what should have been his happiest track moment, Faley's mind was occupied with the sorrows of a family death.

Faley flew to the coast to attend his brother's funeral, although filled with sorrow, at least knowing that the preparations for the CCC were 99 per cent completed.

He returned on Thursday evening with not much sleep, but still, the 48th annual meeting went off without a hitch. In fact, many of the coaches wished that Notre Dame could host the event every year. Indeed, Don Faley had done a credible job.

This is where this "minor" business comes in. Notre Dame students, friends, etc. simply don't show up in the great numbers one would expect for competition between world-class performers. It was unfortunate for them, because they missed one helluva meeting.

Well, tomorrow night, they'll have a second opportunity. The Irish will be hosting Western Michigan, a track team which has not lost in its last 42 dual meets. The Irish-Bronco meet starts at 6:30 p.m. in the ACC's North Dome, and the admission is cheap, $1 for adults (children under 12 $.50). It is even cheaper (FREE) for St. Mary's and Notre Dame students who present their ID at the door.

Last season, Notre Dame fell, 107-24, to Western Michigan. This year, although Notre Dame teams have been always known as streakbreakers, the Irish still are rated underdogs. But the meet will be exciting, if not because of the improved Irish squad, but because of Don Faley, a highly organized, "major" man who will never quit.

Faley doesn't need anymore plaudits, perhaps, but this one will come anyway. Monday, Jake Kline, ND's baseball coach, celebrated his 79th birthday. A spirited party with all the members of the various teams using the North Dome for winter practice was organized. It went without a hitch, and it brought a cheerful tear to the venerable coach's eye. Guess who organized it?
