

Financial position brighter

AAUP charges creative accounting

by Theresa Stewart
 Staff Reporter

"Creative" accounting by the University administration has obscured financial reports, the local chapter of the American Association of University Professors charged yesterday.

The Faculty Senate Report on Recent University Budgets, which will be issued later this week, builds on this AAUP report which measured the University's financial position and "finds it appreciably brighter than that suggested."

In this report, prepared by Committee Z (Economic Status of the Faculty) and distributed to the Faculty, the AAUP pointed out the shortcomings of the Administration's reliance "on the Statement of Current Funds Operations as a measure of change in the financial well-being of the University."

This Statement of Current Funds Operations shows a cash gain of $338,918. The AAUP report charged that this gain emphasized in the University's published financial statements, pertained to only a portion of the University's operations. The reported cash gain does not take into account any of the gifts or bequests received by the University, restricted or unrestricted. It also includes a transfer of a portion of the endowment fund without specifying how the exact figure was determined. Unrealized gains or losses on securities held throughout the year do not appear in the cash gain.

This $338,918 cash gain has been questioned by both the AAUP Report and the Recent University Budgets Report presented at the Sept. 11 Faculty Senate meeting. The Faculty Senate report reads, "The declared surplus in the unrestricted fund was only $339,000. In fact, however, $1.4 million in unrestricted gifts were transferred out of unrestricted current funds into restricted current funds."

The insufficiencies of this cash deficit stem from the method used by the University accountants in preparing their financial reports, Prof. Robert Williamson, Associate Professor in Accounting, said. "These accountant's reports only talk about one of several funds of the University. If we add up all these funds we get a better picture of what the University is worth."

In the "Combined Summary of the Changes in Fund Balances" enclosed in this AAUP report, all University funds are combined to compute the overall change in financial position. An analysis of the Combined Survey indicated the University assets increased $24.8 million in the last 3 years, the principal increase largely the result of gifts and contributions.

Williamson added that this $24.8 million is not all liquid assets, since part of it is tied up in gifts specified for certain projects and buildings. The report states "the University has apparently shifted its priorities from increasing the physical plant to increasing the endowment fund."

Dr. Edward Trubac, AAUP Chapter President, emphasized this shift. "A set of decisions that allocates all gifts to the endowment fund and sets faculty raises at less than half the increase in the cost of living clearly reveals the nature of those priorities," he said.

Dr. James Cushing, Faculty Senate Chairman, felt the Recent University Budget Report goes beyond the AAUP in its overall financial picture and how much of the funds are usable money.

Trubac emphasized: "A set of decisions that allocates all gifts to the endowment fund and sets faculty raises at less than half the increase in the cost of living clearly reveals the nature of those priorities."

AND THEN THERE WAS DARKNESS!!! The concrete foundations used for the light fixtures on the North Quad have made for at least two safety hazards: the darkness and tripping over the bases in the dark.

The initial construction of the additional lights began well over a year ago. But further progress has been held up due to a study being made by the University on campus-wide lighting. In the mean time, the use of a flashlight is advised.

Tallarida believes Food co-op not feasible

by Bill Gonzenback and
 Jim Eder
 Staff Reporters

Fr. Thomas Tallarida, director of off-campus housing, yesterday said that he believes an on-campus, student food co-op is not feasible.

"It's out of the question," replied Tallarida when asked if a building for a food co-op could be constructed on campus. "A new building would cost a minimum of $100,000," he explained.

Tallarida also ruled out the possibility of using Stepan Center as a food distribution station. "Using Stepan for a food co-op would interfere with the functions normally held there, such as Mardi Gras," he stated.

"Full-time guards and employees would be needed, rental fees would be charged and a license would be required," Tallarida also reasoned.

Student Body President Pat McLaughlin had suggested setting up a permanent, on campus food co-op last Sunday when he outlined the findings of a study conducted by the Off Campus Commission. A complete report of these findings, which describe five possible food co-op plans, will be presented today to Tallarida, the Office of Student Affairs, the SLC, the Faculty Senate and the Alumni Association.

"I'm very surprised to hear any criticism, since the report won't be released until today," McLaughlin responded upon hearing Tallarida's comments. "The story in Monday's Observer was only a preview of the report and in no way contained all the facts and reasons behind each alternative studied," he noted.

McLaughlin also stated that "any criticism presented thus far is adequately rebutted in the report."

Off-Campus Commissioner Stan Cardenas yesterday said that he was not surprised by Tallarida's statement. "An on-campus food co-op is possible," Cardenas explained, "but it will require a lot of work, luck and timing."

Tallarida recommended that students living in an off-campus area should unite and select a representative to buy their food at wholesale prices. "The representative could buy the food and then deliver to the houses by car. This way you do not need a building and there are no legal problems," he explained.

Ed Price, director of food services, also said that the food co-op would be a problem to conduct. "This is a very difficult operation, and you need a very big volume to get wholesale prices," he stated.

Price pointed out, however, that he had no objection to the program and recommended that the co-op leaders contact other schools with similar programs "to gain some idea of the mechanics of such a project."

Senior Club to be opened

by Matt Yokom
Staff Reporter

"The Senior Club will definitely be opened," Senior Class President Greg Ericksen announced yesterday. The tentative date for opening is the weekend of October 4th.

The reason that the Senior Club has not been ready for opening is that a manager was not selected last semester, reported Dr. Robert Ackerman, Student Affairs official. Ericksen explained that this was because the Alumni Club was giving up their interest in the Senior Bar. It was then necessary for Student Affairs to become involved, Ericksen added.

The relationship of the Senior Class and Student Affairs is that the University will have an influence in the direction of the Senior Club, Ericksen explained.

Ericksen stressed that the Senior Club's purpose will be to promote recreation and fellowship in accordance with mutual responsibility and good order. Planned renovation will hopefully create a club-like atmosphere rather than that of a bar.

Renovation will include retiling and carpeting of some rooms and painting of most of the walls. A dropped ceiling and panelling will be put in on the second floor. Class officers asked the help of seniors to help in the renovation work that must be done. Those willing to help should contact Renovation Committeemen Bob Spann or Ray Capp.

Applications for business and general manager are to be taken until next Monday Ericksen reported. Those wishing to apply should mail a statement of purpose and experience and three recommendations from University personnel to the Senior Class, Box 114. The selection of the managers will be made by Student Affairs.

Concerns calendar revision

Academic Commissioner addresses council

by Bob Radzewicz
Staff Reporter

Jim Ambrose, Academic Commissioner, addressed the Hall Presidents' Council last night concerning possible calendar revision.

The Academic Commissioner summarized an earlier discussion he had with Fr. James Burtchaell, University Provost, about the calendar situation. Ambrose recalled that Burtchaell felt all aspects of the calendar, including the October break, must be experienced before possible revisions could be considered. In addition, Burtchaell had said any type of poll at the present would be incomplete. With a re-evaluation of the present calendar set for early December, the possibility of a faculty poll at that time was suggested by Ambrose.

"We can't ignore faculty reaction to the calendar in presenting arguments to the Academic Council," the commissioner said. "An extensive poll of the faculty would clearly show their attitude towards the calendar. I think (from discussions I've Had) that the poll may provoke a negative response towards the present calendar."

Ambrose added that student sentiment for revision must remain strong in early December, when re-evaluation talks are held. "The students must be behind us," Ambrose said.

Next, Lynn Larkin, representing the Student-Alumni Relations Group (SARG), announced to the HPC that their rejuvenated organization has initiated a program designed to strengthen communication between students and alumni "We are trying to get the alumni more a part of the college experience today," Larkin said.

Kickoff for the SARG program will be in Washington Hall on Monday, Sept. 23, at 7:00 p.m. Highlights of the 1973 football season will be shown at that time.

Chairman Bob Howl then introduced two alumni to the hall presidents. Jim Dehner and Bob Muniz, now involved in the insurance field, offered their time to explain the pros and cons of insurance to any interested students.

Their main aim was described by Muniz as, "Maybe we can keep you from getting ripped off." Arrangements for these meetings in the halls must be made by the respective presidents.

Bill McLean, student ombudsman, reported to the Council that no decision has yet been reached by the Dean of Students concerning bike registration in the halls. He also mentioned that the Dean's Office is considering bike storage for the storage lockers have been tabled until the bike registration is settled.

Howl concluded the meeting by announcing that meal co-ex tickets will be distributed at the HPC meetings.

Psychology Society meets

by Mary Fran Hayes
Staff Reporter

The Notre Dame Undergraduate Psychology Society held its first meeting Thursday evening, Sept. 5, in Haggar Hall, the new psychology building. "The meeting was strictly organizational, resulting with the establishment of two committees," said Senior, Scott Allen, coordinator of the society.

Blaise Mercadante is chairman of the Career Committee, whose primary function is acquiring information about graduate schools. "A student interested in a specific grad school will give Mercadante the name of the school and he will obtain literature as well as find out about the school's departments and people," explained Allen.

The Academic Committee's purpose parallels that of the Career Committee. However, the Academic Committee, headed by Steve Waterman, concentrates on getting lecturers and new undergrad courses at Notre Dame.

Waterman is also the Society's representative at the Psychology Department faculty meetings. "The Society feels that Waterman can convey student opinion to the faculty," said Allen.

The Psychology Society also has a social aspect. They have scheduled the showing of "Wait Until Dark" for Sunday, Dec. 8 and Bob Kissel is organizing a basketball team. The Society invites ideas from all students for T-shirt designs.

The next meeting is scheduled for Monday, Sept. 23 at 7:00 p.m. in the Haggar Building. All majors and non-majors are invited. Club dues are $3 per year.

Student Union announces Gordon Lightfoot concert

by Mary Reher
Staff Reporter

Student Union has arranged for two upcoming concerts. Sha Na Na will appear on September 28 and Gordon Lightfoot will perform for Homecoming on October 11.

Pete Kernan, concert coordinator, and Rob Kilkuskie, concert chairman, are planning two additional shows for later in the semester but the details have not yet been determined. There will be a total of seven concerts sponsored by Student Union this year.

The A.C.C. is offering other concerts not sponsored by Student Union. Their first show, Elvis Presley on September 30 and October 1, is already sold out. On October 19, Mac Davis is scheduled to appear.

"Student Union will try to present concerts that will appeal to a broad segment of the student population," observed Kernan. "And the A.C.C. will present concerts that will appeal to not only the students but the community at large."

Booked at the Morris Civic Auditorium are two progressive rock bands. Lynard Skynard, from Alabama, will perform on October 1 and Aerosmith, from Boston, will be featured on October 20. The Auditorium is located at the north end of River Bend Plaza in South Bend.

The Goals of Amnesty

The appointment of Fr. Hesburgh to President Ford's Clemency Board can only be met with applause. And then, hope.

Ford must be applauded because in Fr. Hesburgh he has brought a peace-maker back to Washington. The hope must go out to Fr. Hesburgh that his influence will be felt on the Board and he will reconcile his long-held belief in unconditional amnesty with the President's plan for conditional amnesty.

The task of the Board is to administer the Ford's alternate service program. Draft evaders and armed forces deserters from the Vietnam War will be given the opportunity to return to the United States in return for an oath of national allegiance and up to 24 months of alternate public service.

Hesburgh and his colleagues must administer this program sanely and fairly. It must reach out to the thousands of deserters in Canada, Sweden and other countries so that the goal of amnesty is realized for as many as possible. Already many of these persons are denouncing the plan as a sham and a cover-up.

The Board must fairly deal with all draft evaders from those exiled to other countries to those who chose to remain and face the criminal and military punishments.

The president's program seems a sane and fair proposal for the evaders who fled this country. Although it is not the complete amnesty they had hoped for, the program provides the opportunity for each man to return home.

What remains the specific task of the Clemency Board is the question of those estimated 3,120 who went to prison between 1965 and 1973 for refusing to fight in Vietnam. They must also decide the fate of the 130 persons still imprisoned in civil institutions for these offenses and of the estimated 700 deserters now serving time in military compounds. No program of alternate service can justly and sanely offer them any reconciliation.

For those who have completed their sentences for draft evasion charges, no amnesty can retrieve those years lost in the penal institutions of this country. Their debt has been paid; their sentence must be forgotten and their offense forgiven. To accomplish this, the Clemency Board must call for complete reprieves for offenders who have faced the punishment of not only criminal, but military courts.

For the offenders now serving sentences, the Board must extend to them the opportunity to serve out the terms constructively in alternative public service.

The first step in this process has already been taken in Attorney General William Saxbe's granting of a 30-day furlough to all such persons. Yet the Board must extend this furlough to include the 700 men serving under military jurisdiction. The Board must be willing to extend this furlough beyond 30 days.

Finally, the Clemency Board must provide this country with a tangible and viable spirit of reconciliation and peace. This specific program of amnesty offers legal and institutional reconciliation to draft evaders and deserters. But what of the moral and social aspects? Will the draft dodger of six or seven years ago be accepted by the people of America in the true spirit of forgiveness and understanding? Will the granting of a conditional amnesty really bind the wounds of a divisive war and leave us to forget the mistakes of the past?

How Fr. Hesburgh and his eight fellow members of the Clemency Board, confront their tasks will determine what kind of America emerges from the experience of Vietnam.

Terry Keeney

No university bulletin ever warned me about the dangers of Hamburger Helper. The official Notre Dame code book tells nothing about the penalties which accompany mixing coloreds and whites in the washing machine. And campus life never prepared me for dishpan hands or toilet bowl cleaning. I am one of several hundred off-campus students who have let go of the university to do my own. It is quite a change.

Last year I had a hard enough time adjusting to making my bed every day after the campus maids relinquished that task to me. They still did empty my wastebasket, of course, and occasionally vacuumed the rug. I grumbled now and then when they didn't dust off my desk, but I would play the martyr role, make the sacrifice, and do it myself. The greatest inconvenience of all was hauling my laundry bag down to the dormitory basement every week, and then picking it up a few days later, after a dining hall lunch. Surely, I thought, off-campus life could be no more taxing.

After only three weeks of apartment dwelling, it may be too early to compare the relative merits of on versus off campus life. Gone are the dining halls' uncooked hot dogs, elastic jello, and chewable ice cream. In its place is Kroger's finest 89 cents per lb. hamburger, Morton's pot pies and canned Chinese delicacies. Gone are the maids, protectors of male chauvinism and they are replaced by liberating broom sticks, garbage dumpsters, and dusting cloths. Gone are $10.00 allotments of laundry tickets, and instead dimes, quarters and Tide laundry detergent prepare every off-campus student for his trip to the laundromat.

While I hesitate to compare my three years of campus life to my three weeks off campus, I already wonder if remaining on campus for my final year wouldn't have deprived me of the unique slice of life that I'm now experiencing. Spoiled by maids and other campus services too long, perhaps my confrontation with the "Joy of Cooking" is an educational opportunity that no senior should miss. And my newly-acquired talents now include finding my way around "metro" South Bend, reading an electricity meter, and recognizing the difference between tomato paste and tomato sauce. As a resident of the "Campus View Construction Site", I have had the chance to witness the birth of an apartment complex (my own). The melodious sounds of bulldozers and buzz saws fill the air as they busily build while the skies are still snow-free.

Lest I be misunderstood: I am not unhappy with my off-campus fate. I enjoy relaxing in a living room, reading the paper, and smelling dinner cooking on the stove (I especially enjoy it when one of my roommates, and not me, is doing the cooking!). The independence from questions of parietals, liquor rules and campus food is welcome, and the often unreal world of academia is effectively shortcircuited by a trip down the Thrift-Mart aisle. If dormitories can claim a "community" atmosphere, so also can house and apartment mates who must rub elbows in front of pans full of dirty dishes.

All I ask is that those of us who brave traffic jams to get to 8:00 classes not be forgotten. Ours is a different life - maybe better. If you, as a dormitory resident, spot a fellow student equipped with a back pack and a brown lunch bag, think of what you're missing. And when the dining hall serves its version of "Hamburger Helper," seriously consider moving off yourself.

four way street

the problems of a concept album

palmieri, murray, boland, & smith

Editor's Note: With this review, the Observer Features Department introduces four reviewers who will write as a team - a sort of editorial board, reviewing records and concerts. Members of this team include Frank Palmieri, Bill Murray, Mike Boland and Bill Smith.

Concept albums are difficult to create, difficult to perform, and difficult to review. If the concept is not relevant to the listener, the lyrics will appear to be trite and the music often tedious. If the concept is acceptable, believable, the music will, in most cases, not be on the same plateau as the lyrics, or seem to be intricate filler around them. To the reviewer, the conceptual album naturally proposes that a certain amount of bias will be read into his critique by those that can visualize the concept, and by those that can't. The release of Nektar's first American album, Remember the Future, appears to be no exception.

What really is their third album, as a group, Nektar has composed the latest conceptual album to hit the charts. It is the story of a bluebird from a distant planet who gives visions of life, of before life, and of after life to a young, blind earthling. The bird is Nektar's pantheistic representation of a Christ-like savior who has come to spread his wisdom, as he has many times before, but is becoming weary now of being "crucified."

The lyrical account is uninspired and deals basically with philosophical generalities. When the blind child questions the bird about "tomorrow", he prefaces his investigation with insipid statements like:

I can see you
I can hear you
I can see it all when I look into your eyes
I can sense it all when I look into your skies
I can see oh I can feel Whereas these lyrics could possible have worked for a Townshend sponsored rock opera, they don't for this surrealistic, pantheistic, subconscious effort.

To make matters worse, there is a void between the lyrics and the music that is never crossed or mended. As the program starts, in an obvious strain taken from Yes, the four adequately talented musicians weave and layer repetitious themes that never lead to anything. The progressions are anticlimactically halted with no effort spent upon segwaying the individual bands with plausible transitions. The lyrics therefore are paragraphically, almost parenthetically, sung with no relationships to the surrounding bodies of music.

But the problems aren't all lyrical. There are many major flaws in the performance and production of this conceptual project. The album is produced by the group Nektar itself, which consists of Derek Moore on bass guitar, Roy Albrighton on an assortment of guitars, Alan Freeman is the keyboard man, while Ron Howden is on the drums. There is a listed fifth member of the band, a Mike Brockett, but he is a light musician and of no value to a "home" audience. Nevertheless the five of them play a music that is vapid and boring. Albrighton's guitar work is effortless all through the first half of the album, including his psychedelic efforts in "Confusion" which is the last cut on the first side. On the flip side however, Roy does some interesting leads and intricate wah-wah fills, especially on the final song, "Let it Grow".

The keyboard work is also hard to find commendable on the first half, but this was not all the fault of Freeman's work. On the first three songs Alan's attempts, which are mostly simple chordal rhythms, are mixed so far back that at times you don't even

Remember the Future

Nektar

Famous Music Corp.

know he's there. The only times he can be heard are in the last cuts of both sides when his instruments are put obnoxiously out front to create a Lennonistic wall of sound, a pretty poor imitation too.

The rhythm section is by far the most talented segment of Nektar. Moore's bass is not as powerful as Chris Squire's (Yes), or as overwhelming as Roger Waters' (Pink Floyd), but it is more than capable of setting down a direction for the rest of the band to follow and improvise off of. Some notable examples of this are the bass lines laid down in "Confusion", "Path of Light", and "Let it Grow."

And finally, Ron Howden's drumming is the only toil worthy of an effort as grandiose as a conceptual piece of music. The beat laid down is an elaborate rhythm established between Ron's high-hat, snare, and ride cymbal, while his bass drum foot keeps time with "Mo" Moore's meandering bass line. The drumming is used in almost all of the trite transitions, but develops rapidly into a laid back, talented and a very emotional involvement with the beat. And if it hadn't been for this sustaining drive and capricious innovations by Howden, and occasionally Moore, the first American release of Nektar would probably have been a waste of plastic.

turn of the cards --- a good deal

a review by john zygumt

Renaissance's lead vocalist Annie Haslam claims, "Many of our ideas are inspired by classical composers like Rachmaninoff, Shostakovich, Back, Beethoven, and Chopin." Well, most of my favorite rock groups were inspired by Little Richard and Chuck Berry, but I can bury myraunchypast long enough to applaud this album as a nice piece of work.

Pseudo-classical rock and roll can get embarrassing as Rick Wakeman found out when people started asking him questions about Topographic Oceans that he didn't understand much less know how to answer. However on Turn of the Cards Renaissance, for the most part underplays the classical part of their image and concentrates on making good pop music.

Most of the classical allusions that do work involve the brilliant singing of Annie Haslam who can do some breathtaking things. Keyboard man John Tout, on the other hand, seems like an escapee from a piano observatory who isn't sure yet he wants to throw it all away. His keyboard work on "Cold is Being" is melodramatic enough to make the song the most likely candidate for the soundtrack of the next bad screenplay of "The Death of Ivan Ilych."

However, Renaissance does have its moments. Provided with several strong efforts by songwriters Michael Dunford and Betty Thatcher, the group shows some interesting capabilities.

"Running Hard", after a rather pointless piano introduction, flows with exhilaration, allowing the group to show the better side of their pretension. "I Think of You" proves a lovely vehicle for the talented Ms. Haslam and being one of the shorter songs on the album I only hope they quickly release it as a single before Marie Osmond recovers from her tonsil operation. "Black Flame" has it's appeal and contains the penetrating lyrics,

"Now I'm weak, I am losing.
I never thought I'd stop trying.
I'm a lie, I'm just a sign,
Just a symbol of the game."

If nothing else, Dr. Hofman's students can use it for a theme song.

Encouraging also is the fact that the songs which don't work never fail for a lack of effort. "Mother Russia," a tribute written for Solzhenitsyn after lyricist Thatcher read A Day in the Life of Ivan Denisovich (I told you the kids were sophisticates) contains as much musical detail as any other tract, despite its' shortcomings.

An appealing album then, from this relatively unknown English group. Their greatest problem for the future could be developing a strong musical personality for audience identification. This could be solved, I think, by moving Ms. Haslam up front for she is easily the best thing about this interesting album.

reports on the notre dame ducks

clytemestra von der vogelweide

We were deeply saddened to learn from one of our erstwhile associates that the Oakroom recently served ducks. In the first blush of confusion we were inexpressably pleased having always felt that there was no justifiable reason for refusing a well mannered duck dinner in any public area providing he or she were decently appared in shirt and shoes. Upon a better explication of what actually transpired - with only the briefest cross references to the oddities of English syntax - we were properly appalled. As Shakespeare (or was it Marlowe? or Bacon?) wrote "How more ungrateful than a serpent is the hungry student." O mild and (relatively) inoffensive duck! How many failed biscuits, what surfeits of stale cookies have they removed from the disgruntled generalities' jaundiced eye!

We shall never hear thy sweet quack more,
God wot. 1

More than their undoubted charity the Notre Dame ducks should be cherished for their importance in the historical development of something or other as they have never undergone the great vowel shift and are for all intents and purposes speaking Middle Duck. (It has therefore been postulated that the ducks represent descendants from the flock of the redoubtable Treydis Einiksdotter 2 and therefore the westernmost Viking incursion in the new world and as such ought to be maintained at public expense as a national landmark and registered with the bicentennial commission. Until such time as federal aid is forthcoming, all right-minded Notre Dame students should show an interest in historical preservation and feed rather than feed upon the ducks.

Living in Moreau

Chilean priest in exile at ND

by Jim Winters
Staff Reporter

A Holy Cross priest, exiled in June by the repressive military government of his native Chile, is living at Moreau Seminary here with the knowledge that he may not be allowed to return to his homeland for "10 or 20 years."

Fr. Martin Garate, C.S.C., a former theology teacher at St. George's High School in Santiago was accused last Spring of "organizing guerilla warfare" against Chile's ruling military junta. With the Church's

Blood programs to be created in every dorm

by Lonnie Luna
Staff Reporter

A permanent blood donation program with branches in each hall is being created by the Volunteer Services Organization directed by Fr. Thomas Stella. The organization, which includes the hall community services directors, hopes to alleviate the current blood shortage in the area.

At a meeting Sunday evening in the Grace Penthouse, John Famula, chairman of the blood drive, asked all hall directors to organize the groups in their halls. He added that large recruiting drives for donors have begun within the halls and dining halls. "Recruiters will be asking for people willing to donate blood, to drive, or to work once during the year," said Famula. He explained that the halls are divided into four groups with a contact person assigned to each group. Each hall will be visited once a semester and asked to donate blood.

"We are also asking the faculty to donate," he added. Famula said donors and their families will be insured to receive free blood when they need it.

"By 1975, all blood banks in the association will have to be converted to 100 percent volunteer donors," he stated. "The Central Blood Bank in South Bend and the St. Joseph Chapter of the Red Cross have decided to join forces in meeting the growing demand for blood within the community."

Famula noted that the ND-SMC community offers a large and constant source of donors and could benefit from improved facilities.

The next meeting will be Sunday, September 29 in the Grace Penthouse at 10:30 p.m.

protection, he evaded arrest for two months before his banishment. He maintains the charges against him are ludicrous.

"I don't even know how to shoot a gun," Garate says.

Garate is one of 150 priests exiled since General Augusto Pinochet seized power in the September, 1973, coup in which Marxist President Salvador Allende was killed. Declaring a year-long "State of War," General Pinochet ordered the total suppression of popular dissent and the seizure of over 8,000 political prisoners.

Because of their work with the vast number of Chile's desperately poor, priests were particularly suspected of "subversive activity" and were prone to arrest. St. George's, a large Holy Cross High School in the nation's capital, was seized by the government. The order is presently negotiating to regain control of the school.

Garate, 37, has received letters from three of his brothers still living in Chile which report widespread starvation among the peasantry there. Over 40 percent of the Chilean work force earn $40 a month or less—enough for a monthly diet of just three pounds of bread. 12 percent earn nothing at all. The poor have particularly suffered during Chile's severe economic crisis this past year, and in large areas the situation is desperate.

But despite widespread discontent, Garate said, there is little overt opposition to the junta. There cannot be.

"You can't talk, you can't say anything against them," says Garate. "Sometimes you'll be taken prisoner, sometimes tortured, sometimes killed. If you are accused of criticizing the government, you are accused of treason and court-martialed. There is no trial."

Upon his own exile, Garate came to Moreau, the Holy Cross provincial headquarters. A deacon, Diego Irarrazaval, C.S.C., who was exiled with Garate, is living at Christ the King parish in South Bend.

Garate is taking graduate courses in economics at Notre Dame. In addition, he is involved in the order's Peace and Justice Commission, a "clearinghouse" and research center which attempts to foster a Christian awareness of peace and justice in today's world.

Garate believes the junta does not intend to restore democracy to Chile for at least a decade. In the meantime, he intends to work for peace and justice at Notre Dame, and to await their restoration to Chile.

Insurance inexpensive New policy offered

By Don Reimer
Staff Reporter

A new, less expensive insurance policy is being offered to the students of Notre Dame for the 1974-75 school year. According to Barbara Roulo, the campus insurance representative, the reduced price is due to a change of insurance companies by the university. The fee, reduced from $42 to $41 for students, will not lessen the amount of coverage and, as Roulo stated, "there is actually more coverage than last year."

The new policy, which is underwritten by the Puritan Life Insurance Company, provides improved benefits in such areas as hospital room and board, miscellaneous expenses, and doctor's calls. Other provisions include diagnostic expenses, infirmary expenses and accidental death.

The coverage remains in effect for one year beginning August 27, 1974 and includes all vacation periods. Several situations not covered are: dental treatment not due to accident; injury sustained while participating in intercollegiate athletics; and self-inflicted injury.

According to Bro. Just Paczesny, vice-president of student affairs, the university engaged the new company due to, "the better general coverage and the closer location of the main office." He commented that the Northfield, Illinois location of the office would lead to quicker, more efficient processing of student claims. The price reduction, though small, also influenced the decision in this time of rising prices.

Roulo, the student representative, may be contacted from 12 pm. to 1 pm. on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays or from 1 p.m. to 2 p.m. on Tuesdays and Thursdays in room 102 of the infirmary.

Dillon seeks repeat as 1974 IH football teams get prepared

by Art Moher

The 1974 Interhall Football Season opens September 29th as fourteen teams begin their attempt to wrest the title away from Dillon's defending champions. This season, Dillon, Morrissey, Howard, Pangborn-Fisher, Alumni, Sorin, and St. Joe-Off Campus comprise the teams in the South Quad Division. The North Quad's seven teams are Keenan, Stanford, Flanner, Grace, Holy Cross, Cavanaugh, and Zahm. On the South Quad, the defending champions from Dillon Hall look very strong. Mike Bireley, the coach of the Big Red, has seventeen returning starters at his disposal as he attempts to guide Dillon to its fourth interhall championship in five seasons.

Freshman Ray Duran will guide Dillon's outstanding offense. Duran, the only newcomer on the Dillon offensive unit, has an experienced set of running backs in seniors Joe Riepenhoff, Mike O'Neill and junior Craig Tighe. Despite having a strong defensive unit, Coach Bireley looks ahead to a tough season and points to Morrissey as a traditionally tough opponent. The Vince Mecoconi-led Marauders, the only team to break Dillon's four year dominance, lost heavily through graduation. However, Morrissey boasts a balanced offense with quarterback Tim Puntarelli and running backs Paul Furey and Gerry Richardson as returning veterans. Looking at the North Quad, Keenan, an 8-6 overtime loser to Dillon in last year's title game,

The '74 Interhall football season kicks off a week from Sunday with a full slate of games.

Irish head AP poll

Notre Dame has regained the number one position in the latest Associated Press College Football Poll. The Irish began the season number three behind Oklahoma and Ohio State, but, by virtue of their impressive 31-7 win over Georgia Tech, moved ahead of both the Sooners and the Buckeyes. Oklahoma had trouble with Baylor winning 28-11 while OSU downed Minnesota 34-19.

"We had sort of a long fight to be No. 1 last season and it helped our determination, I believe," said ND Head Coach Ara Parseghian. "I think the reason we weren't ranked No. 1 before this season began is all the things that have happened to us - the injuries, the construction accidents, the dismissals.

"People thought we would not be as strong as last season after that. But we were fortunate enough to have a little better performance to open the season than some of the teams who were ranked ahead of us earlier."

Despite the jump in the AP Poll, the Irish are No. 2 behind Ohio State in the UPI Coaches Poll. Oklahoma is not ranked in the UPI poll because the Sooners are on NCAA probation.

Notre Dame received 19 first place votes and 1,004 points in the AP poll while garnering 305 points and 11 first place votes in the Coaches poll.

"I believe it will be at least mid-season before we can get a true line on who are the best teams in the country," said Parseghian. "This early in the season, a poll is just guess work."

"I would be a lot happier being No. 1 if this were January."

returns sixteen starters from last year's squad. The Keenanites should be aided by the return of John Feeney, a starter at quarterback last year until an early season arm injury shelved him for the remainder of the season. Keenan returns some very good veterans such as Al Sondej and Pinky Faherty, plus some talented newcomers. Captain Chuck Kern, however, feels that the North Quad will be competitive and looked to Flanner and Stanford as especially strong opponents. Kern also felt that there could be other surprisingly strong teams.

Each hall will play six regular season games with each squad playing the other six teams in its division once. This season most of the interhall games will be played at Cartier Field with the others played on the fields behind Stepan Center. The games will be played on Sunday afternoons and Wednesday Nights under the lights on the Astroturf at Cartier Field.

FCA meets this Thursday night

The Notre Dame Chapter of the Fellowship of Christian Athletes (FCA) will meet on Thursday, September 19 at 7:00 in Room 24 of Hayes-Healy Center. The major purpose of the session will be the election of officers for the school year.

Last Friday evening, members and friends of FCA gathered at the home of Ken Milani, assistant professor of accountancy, for a cook-out. After dinner, Mark Breneman, ND center, discussed the Georgia Tech game and offered his reflections on what it meant to be a Christian and an athlete.

The members of FCA are planning to attend the October 1 Bethel College lecture featuring former Green Bay quarterback (and FCA member) Bart Starr. Anyone interested in further information about FCA and its upcoming activities please contact Jim Early (1434) or Jim Reinhart (1522).

Sailors host ND Regatta

Notre Dame is not a sailing school. There are no sailing scholarships, sailing coaches, or sailing cheerleaders. No one talks about "sailing weekends" at Notre Dame. No one waits in line to buy sailing tickets.

This weekend, the Irish sailing team (in its twenty-seventh year of existence) hopes to eliminate some of this obscurity as they host 14 other schools in the Notre Dame Fall Regatta at Diamond Lake in Cassopolis, Michigan. The competition features Ohio State, Purdue, Iowa, Michigan, Oshkosh, Wisconsin, Indiana, Western Michigan, Xavier, Miami, Toledo, and three intersection schools.

Last season the N.D. sailors placed second in the league of sailors. The sailors are looking forward to a fine season this year, instead of being number 2, they will be trying for number 1. Even though the team got off to a bad start this past weekend at Purdue, where they finished fifth in a field of seven.

This weekend, only 25 minutes away, north of the Golden Dome, the Fighting Irish will tangle with the Ohio State Buckeyes, the Michigan State Spartans and the Seminoles of Florida State.

The Irish sailing team opens their season hosting the Notre Dame Fall Regatta this Saturday at Diamond Lake.
