Reagan accuses Carter of misleading public

ERIE, Pa. (AP) — Ronald Reagan accused President Carter yesterday of making up figures to defend a flawed energy policy and suggested "that's one of the reasons why he's found an excuse for not debating..."

The Republican presidential nominee, disputing Carter's rebuttal to his criticism of the administration's energy program, produced what amounted to a long-distance campaign debate.

It started when Reagan charged Wednesday in Cleveland that administration policies discourage energy production. Carter, at the White House, countered that Reagan made the accusation without checking the facts. And Reagan retorted yesterday:

"Unfortunately, Mr. Carter's 'truth' again consists largely of misleading rhetoric and incomplete facts.

"You know, there are some people who look up the figures and some people who make up the figures," Reagan told a campaign crowd that filled the lawn of the Erie County Courthouse and stretched half-way along a tree-shaded block.

Earlier, in Buffalo, N.Y., Reagan told union men that he is a friend of organized labor. He said they cannot bargain for better wages or anything else "if Jimmy Carter keeps you out of a job." He said pickets who showed up chanting "We want Carter" don't understand his own union record with the Screen Actors Guild.

In Erie, Reagan repeated his assertion that Carter policies "have discouraged the discovery and production of energy in this country."

Then he turned to a point-by-point rebuttal of Carter's energy statements.

Reagan acknowledged that, as Carter said, crude oil production has increased this year, but said it is still lower than it was in 1978 or under earlier Republican administrations. He said statistics published by Carter's Department of Energy show that crude oil production in the continental United States has declined every year since Carter took office. Reagan said Alaska did not come into full oil production until 1978, after Carter was president.

Discounting Alaska, he said, crude oil production was 12.7 percent higher under the Republicans.

Reagan said Carter "tried to boast about increased coal production," but the National Coal Association says 100 million tons of coal-producing capacity is idle and 22,000 coal miners are out of work. "Now it's no surprise to me Mr. Carter is trying to distort his record on energy," Reagan said. "Like his economic and foreign policies, his energy policies have been so damaging to this country, he doesn't want to talk about them."

Military overthrows Turkish government

WASHINGTON (AP)—The government of Turkey, the southern anchor of the NATO military alliance, fell in a bloodless military coup in the pre-dawn hours today, the State Department said.

"There has been a takeover of the government of Turkey by the military," State Department spokesman Sondra McCarty said last night. Few details were available although Mrs. McCarty said Americans there were reported safe.

"We understand from our embassy there was no violence and no danger to Americans over there," Mrs. McCarty said. "We are awaiting more full information."

The takeover of the government of Premier Suleyman Demirel was reported at about 4 a.m. Friday--9 p.m. EDT* SHE SAID. He had been in power since last October.

President Carter, attending the theater Thursday night, said he had consulted about the coup with Secretary of State Edmund S. Muskie during an intermission in the performance of "Fiddler on the Roof."

Turkey is considered strategically important because it borders the Soviet Union. It has long been the site of a series of U.S. listening posts for Soviet actions.

Turkey has been wracked by severe economic problems with unemployment as high as 20 percent and inflation of 130 percent.

The coup came just four days after Turkey's Moslem fundamentalist party ousted Foreign Minister Hayrettin Erkmen and criticized Turkish foreign policy for its interest in joining the European Economic Community, for failing to break ties with Israel and not supporting revolutionary Iran.

Turkish armed forces have intervened in politics twice before in the 56-year history of the republic. In each case the military handed power back to civilians relatively quickly.

About 2,000 people had died in political and religious violence in Turkey since Demirel came to power when the last premier, Bulent Ecevit, lost his majority in the parliament following heavy losses in a mid-term election.

Turkey's military leaders warned civilian organizations last January of the prospect of military intervention in the political life of the country.

Voters register now

by Tom Koegel
Senior Staff Reporter

With Election Day 1980 less than two months away, deadlines for voter registration fall in most states during the next four weeks.

While regulations and deadlines concerning absentee voting and registration vary from state to state, county to county and city to city, one can usually register up to 30 before the election. In California, New York, and Maryland voters can even mail in their registration.

Since all of the deadlines mentioned herein occur before fall break, it might be advisable for first time voters to register in South Bend rather than their home state if their state does not have mail in registration.

Here are the regulations and deadlines in various states polled by The Observer:

Indiana — The last day to register is October 6, and registration must be done in person in the voter's home county.

Requests for absentee ballots can be mailed to the voter's home county office. The county clerk suggests that the voter allow at least a week for the return of a ballot. The South Bend Voter Registration Office phone number is 284-9521.

Focus

California — California is one of three states surveyed that allows registration by mail. Registration forms are available through the county registrar-recorders' offices and must be received by October 6 in order to be filed for the November election. Applications for absentee ballots are included with the sample ballots mailed to all registered voters, and must be returned by October 28.

Residence halls benefit from fines

by Mary Agnes Carey

For Saint Mary's students, several different fines may be imposed for violations in the areas of residence halls, parking procedures, library privileges, and food service.

Although students often are reluctant to pay fines and question their effectiveness, school officials feel the charges are both necessary and useful to the college.

According to Sr. Karol Jackowski, director of residence life and housing, fines for room damages are "an effective way of taking care of the problem."

"The program of assessing students fines on the basis of the cost of the repair is similar to a contract of an apartment lease," Jackowski commented.

The program, which began three years ago, charges students for violations of both housing and safety rules as defined in the SMC student handbook.

"All money not used in repair of damages goes into a restricted fund for the residence halls. This money is used for such purchases as cooking and baking equipment, or students can petition for money to use in the residence halls," Jackowski said.

Students are also fined for failure to register their vehicles or for violation of parking procedures. Director of SMC Public Relations Anne Reed explained all charges levied to students in any area must be approved by the Saint Mary's Board of Regents.

Reed also said that proceeds from parking violations are placed in the general fund of Saint Mary's.

The U.S. Army has given Nick Kotsovos too many parking tickets on his way to work, so he's taking the case to federal court. The civilian computer specialist has been working at Fort Harrison for 17 years. He was recently arrested for unlawfully driving on a military reservation, a violation of the U.S. Code. The charge carries a maximum penalty of six months in jail and a $500 fine. Kotsovos' attorney, Pete Pappas, told federal Judge James Noland the arrest is "a classic case of the lower echelon of the military having gone mad." Assistant U.S. Attorney Lloyd Monroe says the action is the only way the Army could enforce its regulations. Kotsovos says he has received most of the tickets he is charged with, but his attorney argues the arrest is a case of selective prosecution, designed to set an example to other civilian employees at Fort Harrison.

Computerized shopping? There are no lines, no cash registers, no shopping carts, no groceries to carry home from Market Express. It's not even a store. Market Express is a fully computerized grocery outlet which delivers groceries to your doorstep. It accepts deliveries via computer terminal. "The basic concept is computer shopping. It costs $8 a year to join. Customers receive a catalogue, a code list and pay a $40 deposit on a computer terminal," says spokeswoman Rebecca Chaille. Orders are delivered from the firm's warehouse the day after they are received, Ms. Chaille said. The computer catalogue is amended with weekly specials. The list of products includes name brands, generic brands, fresh meat and health and beauty aids. "It offers everything a supermarket does. It has to. We have to be in competition with them," Ms. Chaille says. Items cost about 3 to 5 percent less than in a supermarket, because overhead is lower, she says. "Our average customer is a working woman with a family. We deliver until 8 p.m. six days a week. That's where the working woman comes in. She can call in on her lunch hour," Ms. Chaille says. There is a minimum order of $20 and a sliding delivery fee of $1.50 for orders under $35. Orders that cost more than $35 are delivered free.

Congressman John Anderson's presidential campaign won a court order further delaying the printing of Indiana's general election ballots while Anderson supporters try to qualify Patrick Lucey for the ticket. The Anderson camp wants more time in order to gather voter signatures on nominating petitions for Lucey, Anderson's chosen running mate, and have them certified by county clerks. Just under 7,000 voter signatures are required before Lucey's name can be included on the ballot. Anne Z. Rogers, state coordinator for Anderson's campaign in Indiana, testified that she had no idea how long it would take to come up with the needed signatures. Currently, she said, 1,200 signatures have been certified — far short of the 6,982 required by law. Indianapolis lawyer Karl Stipher, sitting as Judge pro tem, extended the temporary restraining order barring the State Election Board from printing the presidential ballots until 9 a.m. next Tuesday.

Higher tariffs on imported autos from Japan could fail in their goal of helping the U.S. auto industry. The U.S. may have to decide whether to recommend import restriction as part of its investigation of a politically sensitive complaint by the United Auto Workers union that U.S. automakers are being hurt by imports. In an interim report, the commission didn't indicate what it will recommend, but it cited "potential drawbacks" to restrictions such as quotas and tariffs. It said that while they could reduce the number of imports, they probably wouldn't force Americans to buy the current line of U.S. cars if they don't want them. "Since many consumers are able to delay purchases of new automobiles, there is no guarantee that the import restrictions would immediately induce large numbers of buyers to switch from imports to domestic products," the report said.

In Israel

Volunteers go on excavation

Last summer five undergraduates, one seminarian, one graduate student, one English professor, and one home-maker participated in the first (of five) University of Notre Dame-Saint Mary's College Capernaum Volunteer Program, an archaeological expedition in the unexplored Jewish city of Capernaum.

Dr. Joseph Blenkinsopp (Prof. Theology, ND) who headed the program explained its conception: "I've spent many years studying Israeli archaeology. While on another dig with Vassilios Tzaferis (a renowned archaeologist) of the Israeli Department of Antiquities, we thought up the idea for the program. We (at ND) offer a doctorate program in Christianity, but we wanted to generate more interest in Judaism. And nothing is better than learning from first hand experience how Jews lived in their country."

Associate Director, Dr. Harold Weiss (Religious Studies, SMC) expounded further about the important relationship between archaeology and theology: "The scriptures concern the Biblical world and its belief; archaeology is a tool to learn about this ancient world."

Capernaum, the "town of Jesus", was chosen as the site to explore because of its important role in the life of Christ. Also, previous digs led Tzaferis, director of the excavation, to believe the site would prove fruitful in understanding early Christian life since he ascertained that the city had been continuously occupied until the ninth century A.D. In fact, the mound where the site is located (owned by the Greek Orthodox Patriarchate of Jerusalem) might be the very spot of a synagogue in which Jesus taught. But Blenkinsopp was quick to state: "Archaeologists aren't looking for one specific thing; we're trying to understand the past."

Weiss, also clarifying the common misconception of archaeology, added, "We have no vision of anything particular we're trying to find. There's no guarantees in archaeology. If we don't find a synagogue, we haven't failed. Our purpose is to reconstruct the past."

The volunteer program is open to anyone; the only restriction is the limited number allowed. The program ran from May 14 to June 20. To prepare the 12 volunteers for the expedition, three or four orientation meetings were conducted prior to their departure. Lectures on basic archaeological techniques, historical background of the area, and geological facts were presented. Slides of the actual site and films of the area were shown to help the participants visualize their "home" for the next five weeks.

Blenkinsopp and Weiss also supplied the volunteers with a reading list to supplement their archaeological knowledge, for "the more you know, the more you enjoy the program," explained Blenkinsopp. Detailed instructions were given to the participants on what to bring and on what must be done before the trip (i.e. passports and shots).

The volunteers were housed in a youth hostel in Kare-Deshe (three km from the site). All meals were provided for the entire program.

Last year's cost was $500 for housing, food, and transportation while in Israel, and archaeological tours. The airfare to and from Israel was $945.

...Military

At the time, the chief of the general staff, Gen. Kenan Everen, and commanders of the army, navy, air force and gendarmerie criticized political parties for their bickering and allegedly placing partisan interests before national ones.

The generals also said the Turkish people had no more tolerance for advocates of Islamic revivalism or neo-facism.

Last March, Turkey and the United States signed a new defense cooperation agreement after five years of strained relations.

The agreement provided for the reopening of a dozen U.S. MILITARY BASES IN Turkey that had been closed in retaliation for a U.S. arms embargo after Turkey invaded Cyprus in 1974. Many of the bases have been used to eavesdrop on the Soviet naval and nuclear activities across the Black Sea.

The Turkish government had been trying to act as a "middleman" to secure the release of the U.S. hostages being held in Iran.

Turkey has a majority of Sunni and a minority of Shiites, both Moslem sects. The Shiite sect is in power in Iran.

... Fines

"However, the amount collected from these violations never equals the maintenance activities (snow shoveling, replacement of signs, etc.) needed for the upkeep of campus parking lots," Reed said.

According to Sr. Bernice Hollenhorst, students violating library procedures are subject to fines after a three-day grace period. Separate fines are also issued for late return of reference or reserve books.

"The funds are used to replace a book if the student has lost it, or the money is placed in the general fund," Hollenhorst said.

Any funds collected from violations involving student ID use are also placed in the general fund. SMC SAGA Food Service Director Charles Flaim, stated that SAGA charges an additional $1 for bookkeeping costs involved in issuing students a new ID.

According to Les Hitchcock of the Saint Mary's business office, any fine collections forwarded to his office are placed in the college's general fund. "College accounting," Hitchcock explained. "We have several different funds for different purposes, so money in the general fund is used for tuition, room and board, salaries, and other expenses needed to run the college," he said.

Mass to open school year

By Kerry O'Rourke

Notre Dame's opening mass, which commemorates the opening of the school year, will be held Sunday at 10:30 a.m. in Sacred Heart Church. University President, Father Theodore Hesburgh, will celebrate the mass.

All the priests of the Notre Dame Community have been invited to co-celebrate the service. Provost Timothy O'Meara will deliver the service's homily.

Sunday's mass is especially relevant since it marks the feast of the Triumph of the Holy Cross, and the University was founded by the Holy Cross Brothers.

An academic procession will leave the Administration Building at 10:20 a.m. The procession will consist of University administrators, deans, distinguished chairholders, faculty, dorm rectors, student affairs personnel and members of the Professional Specialist faculty.

Professor Edward Trubac will read the Liturgy of the Word with Professor Linda Beard. Dean Joseph Hogan will present the offertory gifts.

The offertory procession will consist of four faculty members: Dr. Alberta Ross, Professor Tang Thi Thanh Trai Le, Xavier Creary and James Melsa.

All faculty members have been individually invited to attend the mass in their academic robes. The middle section of the church will be reserved for them.

The Notre Dame Chapel Choir will sing for the mass. Psalm 83-84, adapted by Henry Hayes, will be sung between readings. During the offertory, a piece entitled "Sung Unto God," by George Frederick Handel will be sung.

'Quickie' returns

The Student Activities Office introduces "Van Lines," a weekend shuttle service for students, featuring trips to area malls, theaters and restaurants.

According to Dr. James McDonnell, director of Student Activities, the service begins this weekend, and will continue throughout the semester with the exception of home football weekends.

The bus will run on the hour every Friday and Saturday night, beginning at 6 p.m. and returning at midnight. Not to be confused with the Transpo system, the shuttle is a yellow school bus from the Eakin Bus Co., which departs from the Main Circle only. McDonnell also has tentative plans to run the shuttle during Thanksgiving weekend, providing more options for the students on cam-

Students may ride the shuttle this weekend free of charge. However, for the remainder of the semester, students must purchase a $.50 ticket to be shown when boarding the bus. Tickets will be available at the Student Union Ticket Office, second floor LaFortune, and in the dining halls.

This program is co-sponsored by the Student Union Service Commission and the Student Activities Office. Fr. VanWolfe created the idea, which is reminiscent of the "Quickie," a shuttle that transported students to Michigan bars in the days of 18-and-over drinking laws. The shuttle was named "Van Lines" in his honor, and in the words of McDonnell, it should prove to be a "van'-tastic idea."

SMC plans new programs

By Cece Baliles

Mary Anne O'Donnell, who has recently been appointed Director of Student Activities at Saint Mary's, says she is not able to "predict any major changes in policy" this year.

As the director she will work closely with all student organizations in planning and implementing their programs. She will also act as liaison with Notre Dame for all student functions, and will be responsible for the College's orientation program for new students.

"I will be working closely with student government and class and hall officers. We hope to continue and broaden many of the programs we already have on campus," O'Donnell said.

"There are many excellent programs at Saint Mary's with good leadership."

O'Donnell mentioned that several new programs will be added this year. "Student government initiated Political Week to help students better understand government," she added.

The clubhouse will be used as a coffee house this year for the first time. This move is co-sponsored by the Alcohol Education Council and student government. "There will be student, faculty and outside talent. There will also be contests. It is being called 'The Empty Keg,'" O'Donnell explained.

The movies and speakers have already been booked for this semester. Fred Stroaskas, George Sheehan and Kreskin are among those who will be appearing this year.

In regard to Saint Mary's party policies O'Donnell says she has no control over these decisions. "The purpose of the Director of Student Activities is to encourage students to create social situations. It is important to remember that we are living in a community. These stipulations have been made to protect the members of this community," she explained. "There are many opportunities to expand the social life at Saint Mary's."

O'Donnell came to Saint Mary's in 1979 as the director of Regina Hall. She received a bachelor of science in elementary education from Bloomsburg State College and a masters degree in student personnel administration from Shippensburg State College.

vary from one election board to another. The deadline for voter registration in Cook County is September 29, with additional registration in the individual precincts on October 7 only. Absentee voters from the city of Chicago only may request ballots from the Board of Election up until October 28 by mail.

Maryland — Maryland residents may register by mail with their home county until October 6. Absentee ballots may be requested by mail until October 28, but allow for the mailing time required for both receiving and returning the ballot.

Michigan — October 6 is the last day for registration which may only be done in person in the voter's home county. Absentee ballots may only be requested in person as well.

New Jersey — The last day to register is October 6. Registration must be done in person, but absentee ballots for previously registered voters may be requested from the voter's home county by mail. The voter must include his name, home address, out-of-state address, and reason for absence from the state.

New York — October 9 is the last day for registration, which can be done by mail with a form available from county voter registration officials. Deadline for absentee ballot requests is October 28. Requests can be mailed, and the completed ballot must be returned to the Board of Elections by 9:00 P.M. election night.

Ohio — Must register in person by October 6 in the county office. May request absentee ballot in person any day up to November 3.

Pennsylvania — In person registration closes October 4. Absentee ballots are available by mail from the registered voter's home county office. Application for an absentee ballot must be requested by October 28 and returned by October 31, but allow more time for mail delivery.

Fee hike

Student activities profit

by Kathy Corcoran

The Student Activities Office has announced a new procedure for allocating student funds--intended to provide clubs and organizations with a better opportunity to obtain financial support.

Student Activities Director, Jim McDonnell said that under the revised structure, clubs and organizations will no longer have to compete with Student Government for money, and all such groups are "welcome and encouraged" to apply. Deadline is Wednesday, Sept. 17.

Under the old system, the $17 Student Activities fee went entirely to one fund and was distributed by the Student Government Board of Commissioners among the Government, Student Union and all clubs and organizations, making it difficult for the latter to receive funds. Last year all activities suffered from a serious lack of funds, and consequently, many clubs were discouraged from applying.

Student Government proposed a raise in the fee last October to $20, and the Board of trustees approved a raise to $25 last spring. This is the first increase in eight years, according to Student Body President Paul Riehle.

With the fee at $25, there are now two separate funds, with $20 allotted to the Student Government Board of Commissioners, and $5 to the Student Activities Subcommittee. This not only increases the Student Government budget, but also provides a separate fund for clubs, organizations volunteer services and special projects.

This procedure will enable these activities to devote more time to serving their purpose, rather than spending time and energy on fund raising projects.

Once all applications for funding are submitted, the Student Activities Subcommittee will meet to review the applications and decide on financial allotment. The group will meet Sept. 21 to make the decisions.

McDonnell said there is no need for a ten minute presentation by each club--as in previous years. Allotments will be decided by applications alone. Results will be submitted to the Observer, Sept. 22 or 23, and clubs dissatisfied with their budgets will have an opportunity to appeal in writing to McDonnell.

Ten minute reports to the committee are required from clubs making appeals, and the group will deliver final decisions on Sept. 28.

On that day, the Student Government Board of Commissioners will review budget proposals for Student Government, Student Union, Hall Presidents' Council, Off Campus Commission, Judicial Coordinator, An Tostal, Mock Convention and Freshman Orientation.

Because of the raise in the student fee, Student Body President, Paul Riehle expects an excess of funds.

Most of the surplus, he claimed, will go to the Student Union to provide more campus social activities, and some will also go to the Student Union to prevent an increase in future years.

Among the new projects for this year are: "Van Lines," a dance on North Quad, a possible Student Union off-campus house and a proposed co-op sponsored by the OC Commission.

Clubs and organizations may inquire at the Student Activities Office for fund applications. The office is located on La Fortune's first floor, and applications must be submitted by Wednesday, Sept. 17.

Memorizing his part

Art Buchwald

Ronald Reagan, Jimmy Carter, and John Anderson have been doing a lot of talking lately about what they will do if one of them is elected our next President in November. But what will become of these three if neither man gains the necessary majority in the electoral college; and the House of Representatives, unable to reach a decision, names House Speaker Tip O'Neill as our next President?

Each man has vowed to cut unemployment, so you can be certain that neither of these three will latch onto the unemployment rolls. Neither will any of these three retire, since they have each made it obvious, if only to themselves, that they know "what's best for the country." With these two facts in mind, I believe it is conceivable that the three, after their defeat, will form a show business partnership and "take it on the road."

Not that such a partnership would be easily formed. On the contrary, contractual negotiations and arguments over artistic control would prove troublesome to three men of such diverse political philosophies. To begin with, who would open the show? The natural solution would be Reagan, given his acting experience. But if Reagan insisted on having Anderson, a natural emcee, doing his introduction, Carter would definitely object.

"I think it would be proper for Ronald and I to open the show," Carter would tell Anderson.

"Then you and whoever else the League of Women Voters name could join us onstage for the second act," he might add.

So you can see the difficulties this troupe would face without even starting the show.

One problem which could be easily solved, however, would be concessions. Naturally, Carter could handle this. And Carter could even hire his brother Billy to be the group's agent. Billy would have no problem booking the three into some of the smaller rooms and even a few of the larger halls in Northern Georgia, as well as Northern Africa.

Opening night in Tripoli might go like this:

House announcer: (a compromise) Live from high atop the OPEC tower, the Khaddafi room is proud to present, direct from a record-breaking engagement across the United States, Jimmy, Johnny, and Ronnie. Let's give 'em a big hand!

Reagan and Carter: (mule train on screen to rear) Thank you, thank you very much.

Reagan: (mules moving closer) To begin with tonight, Jimmy and I would like to debate the American economy and then present our view of where America is headed today.

Carter: Before we start though, I would like to introduce a few celebrities in the audience.

First, at the front table seated next to Colonel Khaddafi, you all know him, my dear brother Billy.

Reagan: (cutting in amid scattered applause) And seated beside the front table, the third star of our show, John Anderson. Let's bring him up.

Carter: (cutting in agitated, as Anderson bounds on stage) Now hold your mules a minute Ronald, I thought we agreed that you and I open the show and then we bring on John for the second set.

Reagan: (out of the side of his mouth) Quiet, Jimmy. Remember the audience, the show must go on. Now folks, Jimmy, John, and I will each present a ten minute report on where we think America's future energy needs will come from. Afterwards...

Carter: (angry) Now wait a minute, Ron. Either you get John off the stage, or its no show. I've been in this business longer than both of you. And if it hadn't been for me we wouldn't be here now anyway. It's my right to decide the cast's order of appearance, and my manager says either you and I open the show, or the show closes down.

Reagan: You're not afraid one of us will steal the scene from you, are you Jimmy?

Carter: Somebody always wants to gang up on the established star.

Reagan: Like your old partner Teddy wanted to?

Carter: Teddy and I never got beyond the contract signing stage.

Reagan: Well, we have. And I think it's time you honored yours.

Carter: I just went on strike.

Reagan: Have it your way then. John and I will go on alone. You can go solo if you want.

Carter: (exiting) I just might do that.

Show ends as Anderson and Reagan stalk offstage to write a new script.

Carter's brother, of course, is responsible for the booking so it is Reagan and Anderson who leave town and Carter opens alone the following night. But don't worry, Reagan and Anderson will find an audience. It might not be the Khaddafi Room in downtown Tripoli, though. They will probably have to settle for Baltimore.

WASHINGTON—Even the most optimistic supporters of Ronald Reagan had to admit that he had a bad week.

They are now spending a lot of time with the candidate trying to get his campaign back on the track.

"Ronnie, tell us again exactly what happened."

"Weren't you guys there?"

"No, we were mending your fences from the week before. We thought it was safe to let you out of the hotel room by yourself on Labor Day."

"Well, I was making a speech at the Michigan State Fair and I was going along fine until I saw this fellow in a Carter mask in the audience. I got so darned mad, I ad-libbed that while I was in Michigan Carter was opening his campaign down in the city that gave birth to the Ku Klux Klan."

"You were talking about Tusculumbia, Alabama?"

"I guess so. I heard somebody say it on the evening news."

"That wasn't very smart, Ronnie. We need to win the South. You got them all upset down there."

"I didn't, darn it. Carter did. He's trying to make a political issue of it."

"What other kind of issue would he make of it, Ronnie?"

"Well, I don't see why I can't ad-lib when I want to. It's no fun reading the same speech all the time."

"Ronnie, every tiem you ad-lib you put your foot in your mouth. That is why everything is written out for you."

"You mean when a guy wears a Carter mask at one of my political rallies, I have to keep my mouth shut?"

Art Buchwald appears regularly on The Observer's editorials page.

"Ronnie, remember when you used to make movies?"

"Yes, and I got the girl in many of them. Every time they write about my movie career they say I never got the girl."

"We know you got the girl. That's beside the point. The important thing was that you worked from a script, and in the movies you could only say what was in the script, right?"

"I don't know what you're driving at."

"We want you to pretend you're making a movie about campaigning for president of the United States, and we want you to read the lines just as they were written."

"I didn't say Carter was a member of the Ku Klux Klan."

"We know you didn't, Ronnie. But you gave Carter an opportunity to say you insulted the South. Seven Governors have called in to protest your remarks. The Ku Klux Klan has nothing to do with the election in November. We've got to hit Carter hard on the recession."

"You mean the depression."

"It's not a depression, Ronnie. That's something else you said that wasn't in the script."

"If I'm going to be president of the United States, I should be able to think for myself."

"It's too dangerous, Ronnie. Every time you think for yourself you lose votes. Let us do the thinking for you—at least until you get elected."

"So what do I do about the South?"

"We're working on the script now. We'll say your remarks were misinterpreted, and what you said about the Ku Klux Klan came out wrong, and Carter is trying to exploit the situation. Then we'll attack Andy Young and Patricia Harris for bringing up the Ku Klux Klan in the first place. Do you think you can do it without throwing in your own two cents?"

"I suppose so, but I sure would like to go on the attack instead of defending everything I say all the time."

"You can go on the attack, Ronnie, just as long as you stick to the script. If you don't like the lines, tell one of us and we'll change them for you. But no more surprises. Promise?"

"I guess I can do it, but it's not going to be fun."

"Okay, let's just test you. I'm going to put on a Jimmy Carter mask. Now what do you say?"

"Where's your dumb brother Billy?"

"No, Ronnie, that is not what you would say. Let's start all over again. Suppose you were making King's Row and..."

Inside the ND pressure cooker life no party

Dear Editor,

This is in response to Miss Adamson's article (Taste of ND Rudeness)(Observer, Sept. 10).

I wonder if the thought ever entered her mind that the behavior she witnessed could have been a result of certain rules we have to put up with, not a cause.

It is hard to act like "mature, responsible adults" when we are treated like children. The behavior that she saw was no doubt a result of frustration that is prevalent in the Notre Dame community. A kick in the shins always brings about a response, more often than not an unpleasant one. We, the students, have been kicked a few times too many. We definitely need some changes. Then, maybe Angela will be able to sleep. Meanwhile, the "ND pressure cooker" keeps building up steam. Enough said.

Pat Martin

Walton off the cuff on constitutionality

Dear Editor,

With regard to Tony Walton's August 29th editorial entitled "Reagan and the Righteous Wing," I was taken back by the righteous attitude which he displayed in his writing. But what really disturbed me was not that he passed judgement on Mr. Reagan and his supporters. Rather, it was the fact that, in the course of the editorial he grossly misrepresented them.

Though maybe I should take the readers through the article point by point and expose the factual distortions, that would be excessively lengthy and unnecessary. It should suffice for the purpose of making clear the extent of his misrepresentations that I consider the main piece of evidence which he presented for his argument and his treatment of it, i.e., the Republican platform plank on appointments to the federal Judiciary. In addition, this letter should serve to resolve questions in the minds of some readers regarding this plank.

In your editorial you described the Judiciary plank as a "...so called 'litmus test' for these judges... This plank proposes that all prospective judges be against abortion or not be appointed to the bench. The constitutionality of this is dubious at best." First, Mr. Walton, it is somewhat astounding how you passed judgement on the Constitutionality of the plank in such an off-the-cuff manner, without any evidence in support of your position.

Furthermore, Mr. Walton, anyone who has read the plank verbatim knows that you distorted its words and spirit in your paraphrase of it. For those who have not seen the plank, it reads as follows: "We will work for the appointment of Judges at all levels of the Judiciary who respect traditional family values and the sanctity of innocent human life." It seems obvious that you read something into this statement that comes not from its words, but from your own prejudices.

But granting that some people do have questions as to the propriety of a political plank which says that the party, if in power, will consider the philosophical positions of a candidate to the Judiciary, let us look at the plank in its historical context. Is it new and unusual that a President be concerned with the philosophical perspective of his judicial appointees? History clearly points to the conclusion "No".

Some fine examples of those who considered this in their appointments are our first two Presidents. Henry K. Abraham in his book Judges and Justices, A Political History of Appointments to the Supreme Court wrote: Both (George) Washington and John Adams limited their choices of justices to persons who were firm supporters of the Federalist interpretation of the Constitution. "In other words, they insisted that all their nominees be proponents of the Federalist philosophy.

The consideration by a President of a perspective Judge or Justice's philosophical outlook is certainly understandable in light of our Constitutional history. It shows that the personal philosophy of a Judge, and in particular a Supreme Court Justice, often affects his legal position on Constitutional matters. Consider an obvious example, Plessy v. Ferguson. There the Supreme Court used the "Separate but Equal" Doctrine to deny blacks their 14th Amendment rights. Certainly this interpretation of our Constitution was influenced by the Justices' personal philosophies concerning the races, and their doctrine was not discarded until much later when the bench became occupied by Justices of a different social and moral philosophy.

Especially today, with the Supreme Court more powerful than ever before and with it handling down numerous decisions which have been clearly influenced by the Justices' philosophical positions, it is important for a President to consider this aspect of a judicial candidate.

This should be sufficient evidence to prove the point that the Republican plank proposes nothing new or unusual. It merely puts into writing that which has been an implicit consideration in most federal judicial appointments throughout our nation's history.

These facts also suffice, Mr. Walton, to show that your editorial was a misrepresentation of the topic about which you wrote.

Drunken, rowdy, Dormers not the norm

Dear Editor:

Upon reading The Observer editorial section several days ago, I became rather surprised with a particular letter written by a Notre Dame student. Angela Adamson understandably was upset when she could not get to sleep one night because of a few students' drunken screaming and stereos blasting. She used her predicament to exemplify the behavior of Notre Dame students; from there, she justified the University administration's enforcing keg prohibition and parietals. After all, these rowdy students behaved immaturely, so it would "logically" follow that the rest of the student body (including Ms. Adamson) generally acts in a similar fashion.

The Observer welcomes letters from its readers. Letters should be typed, double-spaced and signed. To assure swift publication the writer should include his or her phone number.

Ms. Adamson's rash generalization is hardly fair to her and many other Notre Dame students. She unfortunately cannot give the majority of the students credit for acting maturely because of her bad early morning experience. Most of the people I have come into contact with at this school have the decency and the consideration to respect the rights of their fellow students. Of course, there are a select few who think only of themselves, with no regard for anyone else. However, the policies for the sake of such a minority.

Furthermore, the concept of maturity does not really enter the picture with many of these policies concerning campus life. The banning of kegs from dormitories is an inconvenience—and a major one at that—but students will continue to drink. They have to resort to paying more money and making more of a mess by buying cases of beer.

Unless the administration determined that draft beer is more damaging to the students than bottled beer, the keg policy hardly makes sense. With regards to parietals, if the University believes that these rules will significantly prevent sexual activities, they might be surprised to learn that such action can occur before 2 a.m. on week-end nights. It is rather disappointing that the administration would expect behavior of this sort simply because members of both sexes are together at some late hour on a week-end. Maybe maturity does enter the picture: perhaps the administration is punishing us for several people's immature actions and subsequently feels the necessity to make insensible rules to show us who is the boss.

We obviously cannot take an isolated example like Ms. Adamson did and irrationally proclaim that the type of action she experienced is "becoming the norm rather than the exception." Such rationality has obviously been abused by

Notre Dame officials to explain why some of the policies have no student input. Notre Dame students should be able to live in an environment in which they can be treated like adults. Insensible rules are merely obstacles to a healthy lifestyle that a student must have.

China Syndrome: Old-fashioned melodrama

Paul Kenney

The Social Concerns Film Series led off its fall schedule with China Syndrome, a fast-paced, visually exciting melodrama. A T.V. investigative reporter who happens to be present at a nearaccident in a nuclear power plant uncovers evidence of corporate conspiracy, risking the public safety to protect investments. In the course of the story, aspiring young reporter Kimberly Wells (Jane Fonda) experiences social redemption as she turns her back on job security ("I am not ashamed that I have a good job and want to keep it") and battles her wealthy, chauvinistic producer for the chance to do "hard" news. Nuclear engineer Jack Godell (Jack Lemmon), meanwhile, suffers the disillusion of realizing that a life spent in the service of Corporate Power has been betrayed by bosses who do not hesitate to lie, cheat, and even murder to gain their ends. The film is a vehicle for the political thought of, hard-line activists Jane Fonda and Tom Haydn, who invested heavily in its production.

China Syndrome can be considered at different levels. As entertainment, the film is a suspense-filled thriller with outstanding performances by Lemmon and Fonda. Technical effects are superb, especially in the chase sequence and in the realistic TV-studio and nuclear reactor control-room scenes. The resemblance to the sequence of events which occurred later at Three Mile Island is uncanny.

As propaganda for the Haydn-Fonda political philosophy, the film is too heavy-handed. The "good guys" (the "little people") and the "bad guys", the wealthy, big-shot corporations heads and their minions, are cardboard cut-outs. Whenever the producers are afraid a point is too complicated for the audience to grasp, one of the characters delivers a lecture. The "nuclear accident" on which the plot turns is scientifically implausible: a reactor explosion which will "render an area the size of Pennsylvania permanently uninhabitable." This is a substantially larger area than Hiroshima and Nagasaki where nuclear bombs were exploded to deliberately cause devastation in World War II. Hiroshima and Nagasaki have been and are today heavily populated, besides which, as anyone who took a high-school physics course should know, power reactors simply do not explode like a nuclear bomb. While there is a seeming attempt to present both sides of controversial issues, the "good guys" get the best lines.

As a selection for the Social Concerns Series, China Syndrome presents problems. Does the Commission endorse the somewhat simplistic Haydn-Fonda thesis, that the "little people" must rise against their corporate-conglomerate capitalist-male chauvinist oppressors? I myself believe that it is extremely important to alert our students to the moral problems of the "real world", and especially to sensitize science and engineering students to the social consequences of their research and development. Does China Syndrome do the job? The group I saw it with on Monday night recognized the film for the old-fashioned melodrama it really was, hissing the villains and cheering the heroes lustily until virtue triumphed at the end.

DOWN AT THE FARM FESTIVITIES

Sorghum Festival? Check it Out!!

Kathy Leaman

This weekend Notre Dame and Saint Mary's students have reason to celebrate, though the festivities will have little to do with a hopeful win over Michigan. An altogether different tradition will be the cause for the celebration taking place in St. Patrick's County Park four miles north of campus. The special event is the Sweet Sorghum Celebration, and it may very well prove to be the most exciting birthday party you will ever attend.

Three years ago, Charles Geoffrion, formerly a professor of political cultures at Indiana University at South Bend and presently a grants officer of St. Joseph County Park System, conceived of an idea that would bring education outside of the classroom. Hoping to "explore contemporary values" by means of rediscovering our heritage, Geoffrion approached the National Endowment for Humanities committee and the Indiana Humanities Community and received money for a sorghum harvest. Sorghum is a crop which resembles sugar cane and which dates from 2000 B. C. It was first grown in America over 250 years ago, but did not become an important crop until the mid-1800's when it was used for making syrup. This first harvest took place, as this year's will, at St. Patrick's County Park, 50651 Laurel Road in South Bend.

St. Patrick's Park was originally a 185-acre "farm" that supplied food and dairy products for the St. Mary's Community. Today, 105 acres of this land are available to the public for recreation and for a "better understanding of our County environment in its natural and historic setting." This makes it the ideal "theatre" for the spectacle that will unfold between 10:00 and 6:00 p.m. Sept. 20 and 21 when hundreds of people will help harvest and distill this year's crop of 22,000 stalks of sorghum.

The intent behind the celebration is to employ only traditional methods and equipment. Both the gin-pole press (horse and pole) dating from the 1860 and the fly-wheel press (small locomotive) dating from the 1890's will be used. Once harvested, the sorghum will be filtered and cooked for six hours until an amber syrup, one-tenth the original volume of the crop, results.

This syrup can then be used like you would use honey or molasses. As Geoffrion describes it, the harvesting and processing of the crop will become a "museum made dynamic" - where the visitors actually participate in re-enacting history. The actual harvest is just one aspect of this celebration, however. Hoosier life between 1860 and 1930 will be recreated by means of exhibits and crafts, dances, ethnic foods, slide presentations and even a full-scale Civil War battle.

Folk art comprises a good share of the exhibits. Among the crafts shown will be soap-making (by Carmen Samora, a Notre Dame graduate student in Art and coordinator for the festival), weaving with natural dyes (visitors can try their skills on Sandy Lange's giant loom), quilting, rug-hooking, marquetry (inlaid pictorial woodworking), glass staining, chair-caning, bookbinding (by Florian Vieschke who does the binding of the rare book collection in the Memorial Library), bee-keeping, and the making of cornhusk dolls and flowers.

Barbara Driscoll, a Ph. D. candidate will display her culinary talents in an old-fashioned candy store. No additives or preservatives are added to her home-made fudge, rocky road, sugar plums or sorghum taffy. All during the celebration, cider, sorghum and apple cookies, and free home-grown popcorn will be available to satisfy the hungry harvester's appetite.

Members of five ethnic groups will tell the story of their settlement into this area. The nationalities to be represented include Afro-American, French, Italian, Jamaican and Mexican. The latter two groups will describe by use of slide presentations their ancestors' lifestyles in the years following 1898 when they first arrived to work on mushroom farms and to harvest beet crops. The groups will be in native dress and such foods as chicken and strawberry crepes, pastry, sausage, vegetarian dishes and tacos will be sold in the booths. At 3:00 Sunday afternoon, the South Bend Ethnic Folk Dancers, a local group who, according to Carmen Samora, "just likes to dance," will perform early-American, English, Irish, and Scottish dances. And at 1:30 p.m. on Farmer demonstrates old-fashioned horse-drawn plow.

Saturday and 4:00 p.m. on Sunday, the Tar Bottom String Band - whose Vegetable Buddies visits have been enjoyed by Notre Dame and Saint Mary's students, will perform "old-timey American tunes, county blues and more played on the banjo, banjo, hammered dulcimer, mandolin, violin and guitar.

Other local groups plan to contribute to this "education-in-practice weekend. The Wellness Support Center of South Bend will be present to discuss turn-of-the-century nutrition needs and processing. They will have samples of "fruit leather," and recipes will be distributed for those visitors interested in incorporating some of these more healthy eating habits into their diets.

From Discovery Hall in the Century Center will come examples of antique farm equipment. The South Bend Public Library will give three slide talks on midwestern life in the early 1900's. Jean Schmidt, a Quaker from Cassopolis, Michigan, will discuss the plight of the slaves who found liberty through the underground railroad during the Civil War. And as a special attraction, cast members of "Sit-Down '36" - a Miles Corner play about the locally famous Bendix Corporation strike of 1936 - will give an excerpt of their show which will be performed on Sept 25 and 26.

For those visitors to the festivities who enjoy a more rousing spectacle, the Michiana Civil War Re-enactors will stage the "Battle of St. Patrick's Landing" at 4:00 on Saturday and at 1:30 on Sunday. Several units of Union and Confederate infantry, artillery and cavalry in authentic uniform will engage in simulated combat. Women dressed in habits once worn by St. Mary's nuns who served as "nurses of mercy" during the war will be on hand to aid the "wounded."

In addition, students can see the handiwork of two Notre Dame professors - Bill Kramer of the Art Dept. who has constructed a raku kiln for firing pottery and Jim Kohn of the Chemical Engineering Dept. who has helped design the power still which can replace fossil fuels with solar energy as a source of heat distillation. This can be done with a focusing collector which concentrates the sun's energy on a copper tube of water. The heat generated by this procedure powers the distillation process. And because sorghum contains 12-18% sugar, it serves as a good source of ethyl alcohol through distillation. This is one way in which Geoffrion's goal to "explore contemporary values through harvesting a traditional crop" is realized. We can see that our past can have a particular significance to the present.

The third annual Sweet Sorghum Celebration, then, is more than a harvesting of a staple crop. It becomes a "harvesting of our heritage," an exploration of a time when life was more healthful. As Carmen Samora points out, "It's a chance to tell the story of our ancestry, and a chance to have people listen." The Celebration provides an opportunity to learn, to examine the values of another time and consider renewing them today. Admission is $1.00 and parking is free - a small price to pay for such an enriching gift from our past.

LETTERS FOR A LONELY GOD

Sighs and Whimpers

Rev. Robert Griffin

Darby O'Gill is tired of being kept waiting. He is cross because I insist on dressing before taking him out in the morning. He is impatient with being leashed outside the dining hall, where he is never invited in, to beg table scraps. At three in the afternoon, he is ready for supper. He turns over his empty bowl with a protesting paw, and kicks the dish around the room. His tantrum is observed; but still, no supper is served him until five o'clock. Nine months' old cocker spaniels do not decide upon one's domestic arrangements. He must wait for the proper hour before he is fed. Waiting is the principal occupation of a dog's life; waiting means being a slave to somebody else's timetable, with never a schedule you can set for yourself. Waiting is as intolerable for a man as it is for a beast, as is evident from the annoyance of travellers who dream of hijacking planes when they get stuck at airports.

Like my dog Darby, I am tired of being kept waiting. One complaint about life I would like to register with God, existing by Himself independently of time and tide, is: "Too much waiting. Too much bloody waiting."

One of the unstressed merits of heaven is that all of the clocks are set at an eternal noon of a June day, or at an everlasting midnight when the stars are all shining; with neither a.m. or p.m., nor before or after, but exclusively a NOW that neither ebbs nor flows, so that tomorrow and yesterday are forever, inalterably, and entirely today, world without end, praise God, Alleluia! The lost will be found, and the then shall be always, both the contradictions and the resolutions, the loneliness and love. Birth and death and life are experienced together in heaven, in unceasing and simultaneous joy.

In the meantime we have this metered life, with the rags and bones of a piecemeal existence thrown at us as though we were beggars who have no rights. From birth to death, we are handed out endings and beginnings, but what we mostly know is waiting. A thousand times a day, I look at a watch, waiting for a phone call, a meal, an arrival, the comfort of sleep at day's end. I wait for the weeks to pass until I have lived until a birthday, a holiday, a wedding day, a wake. I wait for the years to pass, fearing age, yet needing to move beyond the daydreams known at twenty; the first fears, still faint, at reaching thirty; the delusion of thinking that life, at forty, is just beginning; the mood, familiar at fifty, that you're not going to make it to the semi-finals; the pleasant fiction, enjoyed at sixty, that you are living the romance of sunset and evening star; the sadness at the surfeit of goodbyes you have said by seventy; the rage of age at eighty when you discover the ways that the years can be unkind; the unwillingness to let go, until letting go is all that is left for you, some year after ninety, if you should live so long.

You wait for something to happen, provided it is not the wrong thing. You wait for something else to be over, provided it is not a good thing. You are restless, bored, impatient, and afraid of a change that may be more hateful than waiting.

Darby O'Gill sits in a closed room, impatient for his master's return. His little body lies pressed against the door. You can see the tip of his paw shoved under the door; that visible tuft of hair is all of him that can escape imprisonment. Finding him waiting like this makes me feel sorry for having been gone so long.

Ultimately, I think, in every life, it is God's turn to wait. Waiting at the bedside of someone who is very sick, you could suppose that the sick person is waiting for death, but it doesn't seem true. From watching, you get an impression as though the person had left one room, and entered another: a kind of private place within herself, or a shelter where the yokes are made easy and the burdens lightened. The place entered is a vantage point, it seems, like a mountaintop that does not reach the sky, to which the sweet chariots can swing low, or Jacob's ladder can be lowered, or stairways can be built with ease to the busy side of the Milky Way. The view opens on the dear, sweet beauty of earth, and the landscape is friendly with familiar faces that have been cherished for a lifetime. You, at the bedside, realize you are only hearing half of a conversation that speaks to the living and the dead as though they were together in the same company. You wonder if the children she greets are her infants who scarcely survived their birth.

For a person possessing the fullness of her life in a simultaneous experience of loves, there is no hurry to go anywhere, and heaven can wait forever. I can imagine God, like a perfect gentleman, taking off His tall, silk hat, saying: "Take your time, my dear. Whenever you're ready, you'll find a minute for me."

I enter the room where Darby's been waiting. He gives me a look, as if to say: "Where in the world have you been?" I scratch his ears and rub him under the chin. He'll be with me now until morning. If I wake up first, I take him out to see the early sun.

'Second City' Promises No. 1 Entertainment

Kevin Korowicki

It is said that "laughter is the best medicine." If this statement is true, then the cast members of Chicago's "Second City" comedy troupe are the finest doctors in town.

Second City offers a light-hearted release from the pressures of today's society. Their witty and sarcastic sketches attack some of our most sacred cows: problems in American life, American tourists, sex therapy, test-tube babies, rape trials, computer dating and "night club smoothies." These sketches develop from improvised material.

The reaction of each audience creates a unique spontaneity which Second City incorporates into their show as they transform the absurd into the hilarious.

Second City has produced some of America's finest comedians. The list seems endless: Alan Arkin, Joan Rivers, Valerie Harper, Robert Klein, and David Steinberg. More recently, stars such as John Belushi, Bill Murray, Dan Ackroyd and Gilda Radner, all from NBC's "Saturday Night Live" television program, had their internships with Second City.

Second City originated in the early 1950's at the University of Chicago. An informal group (which included Paul Sills, Eugene Troobnick and Mike Nichols) discovered a common interest in theatre and decided to combine their talents. Borrowing the title of A. J. Liebling's derisive New Yorker profile of the Windy City, they founded the Playwright's Theatre Club on the second floor of an ex-chop suey house at North and LaSalle Streets.

The group suffered financially and was forced to disband for a short period in 1959. Later that year, however, the addition of several new members brought a new vigor to the act. Sills and

Sahlins were joined by actors Paul Sand, Mina Kolb, and Alan Arkin to form "Second City."

From the chop suey house, the group moved to a defunct Chinese laundry in Chicago's Old Town area. Success finally arrived. Chicago citizens took to Second City, and before the group realized it, they were "institutionalized." Municipal honor and the pride of a few struggling actors turned Second City into chic entertainment. Packed nightclubs led eventually to Broadway productions, television specials, and tours.

Today, Second City has come into its own. In a friendly sense, the Chicago group rivals New York's "Not Ready for Prime Time Players," much like both cities' skylines compete for honors of great height and magnitude. Second City has been consulted by NBC for the development of several situational comedies, as well as creating a parody of "That's Entertainment" called "That's Show Biz, Part 29."

With very little in the way of stage props — six wooden chairs and a piano — Second City creates scenes for the mind's eye. They will take the audience on mini-dramas to a sunny balcony in Greece, a kitchen of a quarreling family, a newsroom anchor booth, the waiting room of a sex clinic, or the famed PTA school auditorium. Each scene is unique; no one member of the audience "sees" the sketch the same way. As Mr. Sahlins sees it, the "humor depends on the shared understanding of an audience. . . humor should not be a mechanism, but a discovery."

This "shared understanding" is the basis for the Second City style, associate producer Sloans asserts. She points out that improvisational comedy is not the same as stand-up comedy. "They don't go for the joke. They are 'actors'; their laughs come out of the reality they are creating. The worst thing I can say to them when they come off the stage is, 'I didn't believe you.'"

Mike Hagarty, a 24-year old Chicago native of the group, shares that philosophy. "You show an audience themselves, then they recognize the humor of certain situations and respond with their laughter."

Sandy Davenport, a 24 year old frizzy-haired member says, "There is a element where people say, 'My God, I'm really like that — I've said that 1000 times.'"

Sandra Bogan, 23, still another Second City member, likes relating directly to the audience in person. "The neat thing," says Bogan, "is we work in a setting where you can see the audience, and you see their faces light up and the say, 'Oh yeah,' and you can tell you've hit on something they've been thinking about today."

The most important thing that one will notice about Second City is the "community of comedy." The actors are taught at an early stage that no one individual is the star. Bogan says, "When a show works, the audience should just say 'they're all great.'"

Second City will be performing at the Century Center in South Bend on Sept. 12th and 13th. Tickets are $5.50 for students with an ID and can be obtained at the Century Center box office or by calling the Box office at 284-9111. Kevin Korowicki is a senior history major from Doylestown, Pa. This is his first contribution to Features. The author would like to thank Mary Gause of the Century Center Promotion Department for her help in writing this article.

Confidence key as Irish begin fall season

by Dave Irwin
Sports Writer

If first-year head coach Larry Gallo has his way the Irish baseball team will be heading into this fall season with a wealth of confidence. The Notre Dame squad experienced its finest spring ever in 1980 with a 29-8.

"You have to realize you can beat them," Gallo said. "That's one thing we did accomplish last year. We hope to keep the winning attitude going."

The Irish not only compiled a 29-8 but set six team marks as well. The 29 victories represent the most victories ever by a Notre Dame team and the

.784 winning percentage was the best since 1936. Team records broken include: a .333 batting average, 262 runs, 338 hits, 464 total bases, 229 runs batted in and 196 walks.

Gallo, however, will miss the services of the graduated Dan Voellinger and Dave Bartish as the Irish prepare for the fall opener against Indiana State, Sept. 14, at Kline Field. Voellinger, who caught every game last year, set individual records of 69 total bases and 38 runs batted in. Bartish set an individual record with his .422 batting average while being named second team shortstop on the Academic All-American team for 1980.

Brightening the outlook for the fall campaign will be senior co-captain Mike Jamieson, who set an individual record last year by scoring 36 runs. Jamieson, an outfielder, hit .358.

"The kids made an absolute fantastic pick (naming Jamieson captain)," Gallo said. "He leads by example. They respect him."

Joining Jamieson in the outfield will be senior George Iams and junior Dan Szajko. Szajko batted .320 while Iams helped out with a .304.

"Szajko is one of the best defensively I've seen in college," Gallo said. "He hits all over and has a good arm. They are the two fastest on the team."

Jim Montagano appears to be the leading candidate to assume Voellinger's position behind the plate. Montagano, batted .314 his freshman season but dropped to .233 his sophomore year. The senior receiver sat out last season with a serious facial injury requiring surgery. If he can regain the hitting form of his freshman season it will give the Irish yet another stick in their all ready potent attack.

Junior Tim Ambrey and sophomore Phil Dingle will split duty behind Montagano.

The infield is still unsettled, according to Gallo, but junior Henry Valenzuela should see plenty of action at first base after hitting .308 and .268 his first two seasons. Junior Charlie Tash will play somewhere, probably second or shortstop. Tash stepped in last year and hit .354 in the lead-off position.

Others vying for positions in the infield include sophomore Rick Cryst, and juniors Jerry Scanlan, Scott Siler and Tim Prister.

"There will be a lot of competition," Gallo said. "And the team knows it."

The pitching staff, considered the weak spot of last year's team, recorded a team ERA of 4.50. Gallo does feel confident that he had a good one in senior Mike Deasey, who was 6-2 last year with a 2.39 ERA.

Deasey will be backed in the rotation by senior Bob Bartlett and juniors Byran Smith and Marty Vuono. All three owned 4-1 records last spring.

Gallo's two newest recruits are pitchers Mark Clementz from Elkhart, Ind. and Robert Hickey from Minnetonka, Minn.

"Hickey is big (6-3, 185) and raw," Gallo said. "While Clementz has an excellent curve."

The fall season is not officially recognized by the National Collegiate Athletic Association.

"It is an evaluation thing," Gallo said. "We'll try different line-ups, batting orders, double play combinations, but we still want to keep the winning going."

Gallo's assistant coaches are Ray Lentych, in his fifth-year, and graduate student Tom Handrich, who pitched last year for the Irish.

After graduation

Captain Jamieson aims for coaching job

by Bill Marquard
Sports Writer

A lot of baseball players consider coaching as an afterthought, a way of staying close to the game when their bodies can't keep up.

But for Irish captain Mike Jamieson, coaching is more of a goal than a sidelight. A double major in finance and education, the senior outfielder/designated hitter hopes that course combination may open a few doors into the faculty lounge and on to the baseball field.

"I'm considering a few interviews with various business firms," offers Jamieson with a glance toward the placement manual at his side. "But what I am really interested in is teaching, probably at the high school level."

"And if there were a coaching position open, I'd be more than happy to take that too," he admits with a smile.

If the credentials he has displayed in a Notre Dame uniform for the past three years are any indication, Jamieson is certainly qualified for such a coaching post. The Detroit, Mich. native boasts a .357 career batting average, having led the team in hitting two years ago and finishing second behind Dave Bartish in the 1980 spring campaign.

Yet Jamieson's biggest asset at the plate is undoubtedly his knack for getting the ball in play. In the past two years, he has whiffed only 12 times in 279 official plate appearances.

to catch the ball — that leaves plenty of holes for the ball to find.

"Basically, I am satisfied if I hit the ball hard, even when I make an out. There's always a chance to advance a runner, even when you make an out, while the ball is in play. Striking out doesn't do anyone any good."

After he completes his student teaching next semester, most probably teaching accounting and typing at South Bend's Washington High School, Jamieson would like to return to his alma mater, Detroit's Brother Rice High School.

Mike Jamieson

Coach Kelly about their methods and procedures," remarks the Keenan senior. "The coach's attitude is very important for the team's success and I know I can learn a lot from both of them."

Attitude is an important part of the game, which explains Jamieson's philosophy during the fall exhibition season.

"Granted, the purpose of fall practice is to see who can play what position, but that is not the express purpose. It's important to win a lot of these fall games too. That instills a winning attitude in the team, which is always important."

"I can remember several times back in high school when we weren't as talented as the team we were playing against, but we still managed to win because we had a positive outlook."

As team captain, Jamieson envisions his responsibilities somewhere between the coaching staff and the players.

"I act as a buffer between the coaching staff and players. If there is something the players don't like, I'll talk to the coach about it, and vice versa. And if I am not doing the job I should, I expect either the players or coaches to tell me."

"All of us seniors must set an example for the rest of the team."

With Jamieson as an example, the future of Notre Dame baseball is in good hands.

Gallo replaces Kelly as coach, stresses fundamentals to club

by Dave Irwin
Sports Writer

This fall Larry Gallo replaces Tom Kelly, who compiled a 88-102-1 record in his five seasons at the Irish helm.

The Irish, 29-8 under Kelly last spring, tallied the most victories ever by an Irish baseball team and its best winning percentage since 1936. Just prior to the beginning of the record-book season Kelly announced his resignation.

"It's a case of being in the right place at the right time," Gallo says. "I feel fortunate to be here. I have to feel honored and lucky." Coach Kelly did a lot for the program. Each year there was improvement I just hope to keep the winning tradition going."

The new coach hopes to concentrate on the fundamentals while keeping the program essentially the same.

"I'm a stickler on fundamentals," Gallo says. "I believe that a team with average talent that can execute well can play with a team with great talent."

Gallo came to Notre Dame in the fall of 1979 as a volunteer coach after being assistant at the University of Rhode Island since 1974. "The kids take a lot of pride, genuine pride, in the school," Gallo says. "They feel a lot for the school. That's something a lot of other schools don't have."

Some of this spirit Gallo has noticed has carried over to the team. "They are a really close group," Gallo says. "They work hard together. It's part of the whole educational experience."

During the summer months, Gallo coaches in the Cape Cod Baseball League, comprised of college baseball players from all over the United States, including numerous players in the latest free-agent draft.

Gallo was a three-year man as letterman as a catcher and first baseman at Rhode Island during his undergraduate days and was named to the all-Yankee Conference teams in 1972 and 1973.

In high school, Gallo starred as a four-sport athlete at Classical High School in Providence, R.I., and was selected as a member of the U.S. People baseball squad that toured through-out South and Central America and the Caribbean.

in light of the statistics they've compiled.

The two wins have come against Marquette, 2-1, and the University of Missouri-St. Louis, 3-0. Neither school carries the reputation of being a soccer power. Their losses have come at the hands of the University of Milwaukee-Wisconsin, 1-0, and the University of Connecticut 2-0. With a game against Cleveland State tonight, Billikin coach Harry Keough, is a bit concerned about his team's performance to date.

One of the reasons we're only 2-2 is because we haven't been able to score goals," explained Keough. St. Louis has been able to score only five goals in four games and Keough thinks this offensive inconsistency could become a problem if it continues.

"We should be playing better," commented Keough, "but injuries have been a problem for us." One player nagged by injuries all season is forward, Steve Sullivan, the Billikin's most proficient scorer. He has managed two of his team's five goals in four games and Keough thinks this offensive inconsistency could become a problem if it continues.

"We should be playing better" commented Keough, "but injuries have been a problem for us." One player, nagged by injuries all season is forward, Steve Sullivan, the Billikin's most proficient scorer. He has managed two of his team's five goals but may not be at full strength for Sunday's game.

"I want to stress that we are not taking Notre Dame lightly," emphasized Keough. "Even though they haven't been a varsity team that long, we are fully aware of Notre Dame's reputation for excellence in athletics and we expect that their soccer team will be representative of that excellence.

Injuries may be a problem for the Irish as well with fullback Jim Stein, halfback Bill Murphy and forward Mike Mai all questionable at this writing. Still, Hunter is optimistic about his team's chances in what might be the most important game in its history. "I think we're playing well, we have a good attitude and we're ready to play St. Louis," maintains Hunter. "There's no doubt about the importance of this game to us. I think the team knows this and hopefully, they'll be able to respond to the challenge."

In which case the Notre Dame soccer team will finally cross "the line."

igan, Murphy summed up her teams performance and speculated on some seasonal goals.

"It's rather difficult for me not to be optimistic after winning four out of five games Tuesday night. I think we'll be able to rely on our bench strength which becomes extremely important as the season progresses. We play nearly forty matches this year and depth will be essential. As for goals it's a little difficult to estimate the number of victories but a placement in the state tournament would be extremely satisfying," she concluded.

Irish men rank high in AP stats

(AP) — After one game in the 1980 college football season, Notre Dame's Phil Carter is ninth in the nation in rushing, Mike Courey is 13th in total offense and Jim Stone is fourth in kickoff returns; according to the weekly NCAA statistics released yesterday.

Carter, a sophomore halfback from Takoma, Wash., rushed 29 times for 142 yards against the visiting Boilermakers. Courey, a senior quarterback from Sioux City, Iowa, rushed for 59 yards and passed for another 151 for a 210-yard total. Stone, a native of Seattle, Wash., returned three kickoffs for 105 yards averaging 35 yards per runback.

Purdue's Scott Campbell, who started at quarterback in place of the injured Mark Herrmann, is 16th in the nation in passing efficiency going into Saturday's Big Ten opener at Wisconsin.

The Boilermaker freshman completed 17 of 26 passes for 178 yards against the Irish. Purdue's Dave Young caught six of those passes for an eighth place tie in the NCAA statistics.

In team stats, Notre Dame is fifth in kickoff returns, seventh in rushing defense and 13th in total defense.

Following last weekend's contest, the Boilermakers dropped from ninth to 20th in the Associated Press' college poll. Notre Dame moved from 11th to seventh.

Williams leads Tampa Bay over L.A. Rams, 10-9

TAMPA, Fla. (AP)—Quarterback Doug Williams capped a 62-yard drive by diving over from one yard out with 57 seconds remaining last night to lead the Tampa Bay Buccaneers to a 10-9 victory over the Los Angeles Rams.

Williams set up his own game-tying touchdown, followed by Garo Yepremian's game-winning conversion, by running over Ram defenders Jack Youngblood and Johnnie Johnson for a 10-yard gain to put the ball on the one.

The Bucs, atoning for a 9-0 shutout at the hands of the Rams in the NFL championship game last season, benefitted from an interference call against Ram safety Ivory Sully. Sully interfered with wide receiver Kevin House at the Los Angeles 11, giving the Bucs a 41-yard gain.

The late touchdown offset three field goals by Frank Corral, who equalled his performance of last season when he accounted for all the scoring in the championship game. He booted a 43-yarder in the second period, added a 32-yarder in the third and a 27-yarder in the final period.

The Bucs, 2-0, were unable to generate much offense against a Los Angeles defense that had been shredded for 494 yards in a 41-20 opening-season loss to the Detroit Lions.

The Tampa Bay defense entered the game ranked first in total defense, having allowed only 128 yards in a 17-12 victory over Cincinnati last Sunday.

Injury sidelines Cichy

by Beth Huffman
Sports Editor

Due to an injury sustained in Saturday's 31-10 Notre Dame-Purdue classic, strong safety Steve Cichy will be sidelined for what was termed "an indefinite period of time," by University officials yesterday.

Cichy, a junior from Fargo, N.D., suffers from a chipped vertebrae in the vicinity of his neck, an injury incurred in the opening kick-off of the Irish win. An All-American honorable mention selection in 1979, Cichy handles the kick-off chores for the Irish. The 6-2, 215-pounder raced down the field following his kick-off to tackle Jimmy Smith.

"I figured I was hurting pretty bad, but I wanted to wait until the game was over," said Cichy, who ended the game with a total of eight tackles.

Cichy, who has decided to seek a second medical opinion at the Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minn., was informed by local doctors that he will be unable to play football for approximately three to four months, but the injury should heal well enough to allow him to return to duty next fall.

"Steve's loss is a tremendous disappointment and crucial blow to the team," said Dan Devine, the Irish head coach. "He has developed into one of the best strong safeties in the country."

"Steve's a super youngster and we'll miss his leadership on the field, but his physical well-being comes first."

Cichy, who logged the most time in the defensive backfield for any Irish player in 1979 and tallied 67 tackles along with two interceptions, will be sorely missed in the Notre Dame secondary. Leading candidates to assume Cichy's role are senior Tom DeSiato and sophomore Rod Bone.

Injuries and disappointments are not new to the career of Cichy. The consensus prep All-American, who is confined with a neck brace, was not expected to play in the 1979 campaign due to a weakened bone structure in his lower back. Cichy was given a medical OK just prior to the start of last year's 7-4 season.

Following an elbow injury in the Clemson game Cichy was forced to miss the squad's trip to Japan for the Mirage Bowl game with Miami. Surgery for that injury kept the business major out of spring drills in 1980.

Strong safety Steve Cichy will be sidelined indefinitely due to an injury sustained in last week's 31-10 trouncing of Purdue by the Irish.

Murphy emphasizes attitude to Belle volleyball team

by Tim Prister
Sports Writer

"We're trying to promote a positive moral attitude," second-year coach Erin Murphy optimistically remarked about her Saint Mary's volleyball squad.

Murphy has every right to be optimistic as she takes her youthful-yet experienced--team to Battle Creek, Michigan this weekend for the seasonal opener against Southwestern Michigan College.

"We gained some valuable experience last spring when we participated in a semi-pro league sponsored by the United States Volleyball Association," Murphy said.

Her squad finished third in the regional tourney at Ball State last April. Murphy also coached a Junior Olympic team this past summer. The participation of various members of this years team has enhanced Murphy's optimism.

Spearheading the Belles' attack will be junior and sophomore co-captains Terri Walters and Marianne Viola, respectively. Walters returns this year for her second year as captain.

"Terri provides a steadying influence on her teammates," Murphy commended. "She handles responsibility well and is extremely capable of providing us with the kind of leadership necessary for a successful season."

Complementing Walters at captain is the youthful yet talented Viola. "Marianne was chosen captain not only for her obvious athletic ability but for her spirited enthusiasm. She has a knack for motivating her teammates and is an exemplary player. I hope that all of our younger players will pattern themselves after her," Murphy mused.

In addition to Walters and Viola, coach Murphy is counting heavily on ex-area high school standouts Amy Terry and Mary Beth Hosinski.

Terry, the Belles most valuable player last year, led the team in most of the offensive and defensive categories, according to Murphy. Terry has the ability to improve upon her MVP showing.

As for Hosinski, coach Murphy expressed nothing but praise for her athletic ability.

"Mary Beth began practicing as a setter last February and has progressed tremendously. Even her teammates are astounded at the way she has picked up the position."

Also expected to see a considerable amount of playing time are newcomers Mary Dempsey, Rosemary Whalen and Loree Haney. Dempsey transferred this year after spending a year at St. Mary's of Winona in Minnesota. Whalen was classified by coach Murphy as "a strong hitter with sound defensive capabilities" and Haney as "an extremely knowledgeable player gifted as a setter as well as a hitter."

Following Tuesday night's scrimmage with soon-to-be opponent Southwestern Mich-

Crossing 'the line'

ST. LOUIS—You may find this hard to believe, but Notre Dame football wasn't always Notre Dame football. In fact, the Fighting Irish of old used to play their games in rag-tag uniforms, travel by bus and rarely sell out old Cartier Field.

Until, that is they crossed "the line." That imaginary, yet very real point in their existence when they captured the public's fancy and established themselves as a big-time, honest-to-goodness, money-making venture.

That day came in 1913 when Gus Dorais threw a few passes to Knute Rockne and the Irish beat the Army by a score that escapes me. All of a sudden, Notre Dame, that small Catholic school nestled somewhere between Detroit and Chicago, became Notre Dame that might football power, complete with wide awake echoes, shaken down thunder, and a bunch of sons marching onward to victory.

The Notre Dame basketball program reached a similar point in its history on January 1, 1974 when Digger Phelps led his team to a 71-70 upset of UCLA. Before that game, Notre Dame had a reputedly good basketball team with some pretty good players, but no real national following per se. Since then they've become the "Irish Giant-killers" complete with radio and television networks, green socks and four straight wins at UCLA.

And now it's Rich Hunter's turn. On Sunday afternoon at 2 p.m. he will lead his players right up to "the line" and hope like hell they can kick a few soccer balls over it. For the Notre Dame soccer team, "the line" lies right across the goal mouth on the Washington University football field in St. Louis, Missouri. On Sunday, a couple guys from St. Louis University will be standing in front of that line, trying to make sure nothing, least of all the ball, cross it.

Frank

If the St. Louis players fail, their opponents from Notre Dame will be elevated to a position of high importance—like a top midwest ranking, lots of newspaper headlines and other neat junk like that. If, on the other hand (foot?) the Irish fail, not too much of consequence will occur.

It's like this; no one expects Notre Dame to win. St. Louis is an established college soccer power with a wealth of talent and a pretty formidable history. Notre Dame, however, has only had a varsity soccer team for three years. They, too, have some pretty good talent, but not much history to speak of.

"We play teams like St. Louis and Penn State because it gives us a chance to face some great competition and hopefully it improves our chances for an NCAA playoff bid," explains Hunter. "We know they're good. We know they'll be tough at home."

"But we don't plan to go down there and give up, either."

The Billikins have registered a mediocre 2-2 record this season; a record even less impressive
