Iraq outlines goals in Iran conflict

IRAQ (AP) -- The Iraqi government of President Saddam Hussein has not said what its immediate military objectives are in the fighting with Iran which started last week. But it has said its overall goals are the recovery of small parcels of disputed border territory, full Iraqi jurisdiction over a 60-mile stretch of the Shatt al-Arab waterway separating the two nations, and restoration of "Arab sovereignty over three islands of the southern end of the Persian Gulf."

Robinson lectures on inflation

by Tim Vercellotti
Staff Reporter

Dr. Joan Robinson, professor of economics at Cambridge University, discussed some of the causes of inflation and the problems involved in solving the economic crisis in a lecture yesterday. Her talk was the second in a two-part program entitled "Inflation and the Crisis in Economic Theory." The presentation was sponsored by the economics department.

Robinson told a crowd in Galvin Auditorium that the arms race is in part responsible for today's economic difficulties. The Cambridge scholar pointed out that there are brothers "pleading with the government to buy and sell military weapons," Robinson added that the government must spend money to revitalize the economy and it chooses to purchase arms.

In academic terms, the supply of arms increases proportionally with the demand for arms.

Robinson supported her claims by quoting a report that revealed that world military expenditures increased at a greater pace than the rate of inflation in 1979, for the eighth straight year.

The economic ramifications of the arms race notwithstanding, Robinson called the current weapons competition "the most serious problem of the present time." She urged the Notre Dame faculty and student to study the arms race. "Don't give yourselves too optimistic a picture of how the United States is helping the Third World countries by trading weapons," Robinson said.

Robinson also cited other reasons for rapidly rising prices, one of them being that wages and prices "chase each other." "Workers must request higher wages to sustain their livelihoods. This causes prices to rise. This is a link that shouldn't be forgotten," Robinson said.

The three islands, which control the Strait of Hormuz entranceway to the Gulf, were seized by Iran from the United Arab Emirates in 1971.

Iraqi intentions toward the Iranian oil region of Khuzestan, a major target of the invasion, were unclear. The southwestern Iranian province is largely Arab-populated, and the Iranians have long claimed that Iraq was assisting Arab dissidents there in an attempt to wrest the area from non-Arab Iran.

Virtually all the battle reports came from the official news media of the two sides. No Western reporters were at the front.

A leader of the paramilitary reserves in Baghdad exhorted all Iraqis to do their part in the "jihad," or holy war against the Iranians. In Iran, Moslem clergymen also declared their readiness to fight a "jihad," and arrangements were being made to send clergy men to the front, the state-run Iranian radio said.

In Baghdad Radio reports, the Iraq military command claimed its greatest successes on the ground in the central border area some 100 miles east of Baghdad and at the northern end of the 300-mile long front.

It said armor-led troops completed the capture of the major border town of Qasr-e-Shirin and chased fleeing Iranian troops down the Tehran road to the town of Sar-e-Pol-e-Zahab, some 20 miles inside the border.

The foothills area is 350 miles southwest of Tehran, across the 12,000-foot high Zagros Mountains.

"The fall of Sar-e-Pol-e-Zahab is imminent," the Iraqi communique said.

The Iranians acknowledged that their troops had retreated in the Mehran area. Tehran Radio said the Iraqis had seized nearby Salehabad, and its defenders had withdrawn to nearby hills.

The Iranian report said there were "many" civilian casualties in Qasr-e-Shirin and Mehran.

The Iraqis claimed to have captured hundreds of Iranian prisoners.

In Iran's oil-rich southwest corner, just across the Shatt al-Arab from Iraq, Iranian defenders from Abadan and the major port city of Khorramshahr apparently continued to hold out against the invaders, who reported laying siege to the two centers Tuesday.

Some indications of heavy casualties in the area were appeals by the local Abadan radio for blood donors, for all medical personnel to report to duty, and for automobile owners to volunteer to deliver wounded to hospitals.

United Way plans annual fund drive

by Katie McDonnell

Notre Dame's annual United Way Campaign, seeking 100 percent participation throughout the University, will begin this Sunday, and continue through Oct. 2. Each member of the student body will be asked to contribute $2, while the faculty and staff are requested to contribute a small percentage of their earnings as well, all towards the Universities pledge of $79,000 to the United Way.

Although the individual request for students has been increased from last year's amount of $1, student Chairman Mike Sexton believes that the adjustment is not too demanding, considering the rising costs of inflation in today's economy. "We realize that some people might take offense to our decision," he says, "but we hope that they might reconsider our plea once they recognize the meaning behind our efforts."

"If you think about it," he adds, "$2 won't even buy you a pizza."

Sexton and his assistants Sean Digan, Joe Orie and Jay Traverse, all under the direction of Brother Joe McTaggart, of Campus Ministry, will organize the collection within each dorm nightly throughout the fund-raiser. They also will be assisted in each hall by a designated chairman, usually the vice-president of the hall or the chairman of the community services group, and section leaders withing each floor. Heading the collection from faculty and staff members will be Ted Corvella, of the Biology department.

McTaggart believes that this collection process is far more organized than the manner he followed when he became involved in the campaign five years ago. "We had bake sales and collection boxes throughout the campus," he explains, "but there wasn't the opportunity to involve absolutely

ND scientist finds cancer cure

by Mary Fran Callahan
Senior Staff Reporter

Advancing the quest for a cure for cancer, Notre Dame's Dr. Morris Pollard has discovered that the drug Indomethacin can cure intestinal tumors in rats.

The results of Pollard's research could eventually lead to clinical use of the drug to treat humans afflicted with cancer.

"It works under experimental conditions. That's the first step," Pollard explained.

In the University's Lobund Laboratory, Pollard, a professor of microbiology, and his colleagues established a "model system" using rats as the basis for their research.

The began their work by introducing dimethylhydrazine (DMH) into a strain of rats equally susceptible to the drug, which induces intestinal cancer. After 20 weeks, the drug caused cancer in the rats' intestines.

The researchers then divided the rats into two groups. To one group, the fed Indomethacin by injecting the drug in the rats' drinking water. The remaining half of the rats drank plain drinking water.

After waiting an additional 20 weeks, the scientists then killed all the rats and performed extensive autopsies on the animals. They discovered over half of the rats treated with Indomethacin showed no signs of cancer.

"In over 50 percent of the animals, we couldn't find any tumors. One hundred percent of the untreated rats all had tumors, though," Pollard said.

"This work gives support to optimism that science is on its way to a cure for this particular type of cancer," he commented.

Though scientists still need to learn more about Indomethacin, Pollard's discovery could well lead to clinical treatment in humans,

Jersey declared disaster area due to crop failures

The Garden State has been left a parched disaster area, with farmers watching crops shrivel, reservoirs running dry and water rationing looming in urban areas. New Jersey has suffered three-straight months of above normal temperatures and below normal rainfall, forcing bans on non-essential use of water in the industrialized northeastern section of the state. The Federal Farmers Home Administration has declared 15 of the state's 21 counties—most of them in South Jersey—disaster areas.

Liddy enthralled listeners at Ole Miss lecture

Gordon Liddy earned cheers yesterday at the close of a two-hour "dialogue" with 1,600 University of Massachusetts students. Liddy, who spent five years in prison for masterminding the Watergate break-in, kicked off a 50-campus tour by lamenting the American tendency "to live a life of illusion." At first punctuated by boos and hisses, Liddy's speech ultimately pleased students as it praised the late FBI director J. Edgar Hoover, characterized Watergate as a typical "political espionage," said war is "the nature of man," and expounded on the techniques of knife fighting.—AP

Italian butchers deal bad meat despite court order

Italian butchers have been selling veal in defiance of a court order banning the meat because it contains estrogens hazardous to public health. The nation-wide ban issued in Milan ordered all fresh and frozen veal seized and prohibited its sale or use in baby food. "We just read the story in the newspapers, we did not get any official word," a Milan butcher said. "Customers are asking for veal, and I am selling it."—AP

Playboy leases huge tracts of land in New Jersey

Playboy Corp. and a Vernon Valley development group are seeking to lease about 11,000 acres of Newark-owned land in Sussex County, N.J. to build a sprawling $400 million recreation and convention complex. The plan calls for the development of the watershed acreage to create "the largest, most diverse four-season resort-recreation facility on the East Coast." Sponsors said construction of the complex would create between 7,000 and 10,000 jobs and could create $15 million a year for the city in rental fees.—AP

House committee votes to expel Penna. congressman

The House Ethics Committee voted yesterday to recommend that Rep. Michael Myers, D-Pa., be expelled from Congress for accepting a bribe. Rep. Charles E. Bennett, D-Fla., the panel's chairman, said the vote was 10-2 to strip Myers of his seat in Pennsylvania's First District. Bennett said a committee report would be filed in the House by midnight enabling that body to take up the expulsion matter this week. The chairman said it was his intention to have a House vote on Myer's expulsion before Congress adjourns Oct. 4. "There will be a detailed report filed for the public in a few days," Bennett said. He refused to comment further.—AP

Political contests shape up

A couple of very interesting political races are shaping up locally, and of the several thousand of you who are registered in this state, we fear many are uninformed on exactly is going down in the final weeks before election day. For those who are truly ignorant, the races match up the following combatants:

US House — Rep. John Brademas (D) vs. John Hiler (R).

US Senate — Sen. Birch Bayh (D) vs. Rep. Dan Quayle (R).

Governor — John Hillenbrand (D) vs. Lt. Gov. Bob Orr (R).

The race for the Third District seat in the House is probably the closest, if not the most heated, of the three. Brademas, who was first elected in 1958, is facing a tough fight from political rookie John Hiler.

Brademas, as House Majority Whip, is the third most powerful man in the house, and he can get things done for this area in the wink of an eye. Most recently, he lined up funds for a gasohol plant and a radar weather station in South Bend. On the surface, it would not seem intelligent to vote against the man.

However, unemployment is high in these parts, the recession is hitting the Midwest particularly hard, and Brademas' very visible ties with Jimmy Carter aren't helping him any. As a result, his approval rating has declined steadily among his constituents, and an independent poll done for Hiler showed the 27-year-old challenger leading the incumbent. But in an Observer "Q & A" to be published Monday, Brademas refutes that poll, saying "they polled only 106 people.... We survey more people than that when we want to decide whether to serve hot dogs or hamburgers at a picnic. I cannot take a poll seriously that is taken from such a small sample."

Another factor that has always hindered the Majority Whip in this fairly conservative area is his strictly liberal voting record — he has voted against GOP standards such as the Kemp-Roth bill, the B-1 bomber, deregulation of natural gas, increased defense spending, and the Hyde Amendment, which would prohibit federal funding of abortions. As such, Brademas has been given close contests by candidates whom he outspent 2-1, and whose campaigns have not been as well organized as John Hiler's.

Just as 1972 was not a good year for Republicans, 1980 is not a good year for Democrats. But as Brademas' campaign chugs into high gear, his poll ratings will undoubtedly shoot up again. Expect him to weather the storm.

In the race between Birch Bayh and Dan Quayle, circumstances are surprisingly similar. Bayh is the liberal incumbent with the big pull in Washington,

Tom Jackman
News Editor

Quayle the young (33) conservative selected to go after him. But there's more to it than that.

Ronald Reagan and other Republican bigs have named Bayh specifically as one liberal they absolutely must get out of Congress. To accomplish this, the National Conservative Political Action Committee has stepped in to campaign for Quayle against Bayh, and a Bayh spokesman claims that "in the late days of this campaign, there will be a monumental slur campaign against Birch Bayh."

Bayh is fighting back. He has already filed a complaint with the Federal Election Commission, and will take the NCPAC to court if the FEC doesn't take action. Bayh says, "it's an effort to try to defeat a number of incumbent senators in this conspiracy between young men with the right-leaning philosophies working in conjunction with this right-wing hate group."

complaint with the Federal Election Commission, and will take the NCPAC to court if the FEC doesn't take action. Bayh says "it's an effort to try to defeat a number of incumbent senators in this conspiracy between young men with right-leaning philosophies working in conjunction with this right-wing hate group."

The Senator's voting record is diametrically opposed to that of Rep. Quayle, a fact best evidenced in their 1976 ratings by the conservative Americans for Constitutional Action — Bayh received a 0, Quayle a 96. Bayh spent over a million dollars in his last campaign, and reports say he has amassed more than $1.5 million for this race. Quayle is well-backed also (the NCPAC can't hurt, though he denies any affiliation with it), and he won his last election to the House by a landslide.

Additionally, Bayh is running for a fourth term, and Indiana voters have dumped popular incumbents reaching for that goal before, such as Homer Capehart in 1962 and Vance Hartke in 1976. Barring incident, we'll pick the upset — Quayle in a close one.

The gubernatorial contest doesn't seem to be as close. Popular Gov. Otis Bowen's lieutenant governor, Bob Orr, is going against Democrat John Hillenbrand. Hillenbrand had a tough scrape getting past Ray Townsend in the May primary, and his ad campaign is barely underway, while Orr's has been rolling for weeks now. In this strong year for Republicans, look for Orr to win easily.

Snite Museum of Art plans for public opening

By Sheila Shunick

Notre Dame's $3.7 million Snite Museum of Art will open its doors to the public from 1 to 5 p.m., Sunday, November 9. The new museum will have six times the capacity of the old one, enabling it to exhibit all of the University's 12,000-piece, $15 million permanent collection.

The museum is named for Colonel Fred B. Snite of Chicago. Snite, the major benefactor of the museum, gave the University $2 million the year before his death in 1977 and also donated 41 Old Master paintings over the years. Snite's daughter, Mary Loretto Dillon and her husband will be chief among those being honored during the dedication activities in the week prior to the public opening.

Six other substantial donations will also be recognized in the dedication ceremony of the the dedication ceremonies of the new museum. The Knott-Beckman Galleries of High Renaissance and Baroque Art are a gift of Frederick and Marion Knott Beckman of Granger, Ind. A gift from Walter R. Beardsly of Elkhart, Ind., will support the Gallery of Twentieth Century Art.

The Victor Higgins Gallery of Western Art is the product of a gift from John and Margarette Higgins of Birmingham, Mich. The Ivan Mestrovik Gallery is a donation of Fritz and Mildred Kaeser of Tucson, Ariz. The building's 304-seat auditorium is the gift of Walter H. Annenberg, the former U.S. ambassador to Great Britain. Alice Tully of New York City has underwritten an endowment for the fine arts at Notre Dame.

In addition to the dedication of the museum and the inauguration of the major benefactors, the events of the week preceeding the opening will include such events as a panel discussion by a distinguished group of art critics, an academic convocation to award six honorary degrees, a dedication mass with a blessing of the building and a special preview of the museum for charter members of the Friends of the Snite Museum.

A 16th century Madonna and Child by Italian sculptor Jacopo Sansovino occupies a prominent position in the museum's atrium as a memorial to the Snite's son, Frederick B. Snite Jr., a polio victim who died in 1954 after living 18 years with an iron lung.

During his life, the younger Snite, a 1933 graduate of Notre Dame, inspired millions as the nation's news media nicknamed him "The Boiler Kid" and chronicled his courageous fight against the crippling disease.

Other special exhibits include: Notre Dame Alumni and Faculty Art exhibition; a selection of sculptures, Fr. Anthony J. Lauck; and Christian Imagery in African Art, the Britt Family Collection.

The regular hours of the museum after Nov. 9 will be Tuesday-Friday 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and Saturday and Sunday from 1 to 4 p.m.

The new Snite Museum of Art, scheduled to open November 9, includes a 304 seat auditorium.

everyone. With the leadership that Mike Sexton and his committee have shown, we are now able to achieve that."

Describing their process as a "developed, workable model," McTaggart stresses his hope that this event might soon become a project run by students alone. "I'm confident that this can now be anchored as a true student activity," he says.

As in previous years, a chart posting the daily progress of the drive will be on display in the Administration Building. This chart will also show the rate of participation in the campaign from each dorm, as well. "We hope, as in other years, to instill friendly competition between the halls by comparing them this way," Sexton explains. Other forms of advertisement to be used include posters, newspaper ads, and slogans emphasizing that "Two Heads are Better than One."

The United Way is affiliated with many programs here at Notre Dame, as well as with its world-wide interests to help the poor, sick and disabled. Some of the organizations from South Bend to which the proceeds of the drive will benefit are the Big Brothers/Big Sisters program, the Logan Center, Alcoholics Anonymous, and the Red Cross. There are, however, a great many more which could be added to this list.

McTaggart feels that there is great Catholic educational value to be found in a student's involvement in the drive. "This campaign, really, is a Gospel project," he says. "We are a city responding to the needs of the city, and I am convinced the student body will respond to the help we are calling for. They always have and they always will."

These words of encouragement are indicative of those expressed by everyone involved with the drive. As shown by one of the many posters displayed throughout the campus, they feel that "We're All in this Together."

son pointed out.

An unlimited supply of money can also be held to blame for the current economic troubles, according to Robinson. She found fault with the "monetary theory," which states that there is a finite quantity of money in use at any particular time. She pointed out that it is easy to borrow money on credit.

"Anyone with respectable credit can get an overdraft from the bank. The whole thing (the monetary theory) is total nonsense," Robinson claimed.

Robinson said that in the case of her native country, Great Britain, inflation is a result of the conflict between management and labor unions. Whenever blue collar workers are given an increase in wages, according to Robinson, the employers raise their prices as well.

One solution has been proposed to put a halt to the British quandary. It entails a national treaty that would put a limit on the rise of wages. Robinson voiced two objections to this idea.

"Number one, you cannot rely on the checking of wages; firms may still raise their prices. This is asking workers to fight with their hands tied behind their backs," Robinson stated. She also objected to the expansion of the bureaucracy that such a treaty would entail.

Robinson herself could not offer a concrete solution to the worldwide inflation. She did, however, favor an open dialogue concerning current economic ills. "I hope we can discuss these questions and shed some light on the situation in which we find ourselves at the present," Robinson said.

Robinson spoke at Notre Dame as part of a lecture series entitled "Inflation," which is being sponsored by the economics department. Speakers scheduled for the future include Professors Paul Davidson of Rutgers University, Robert Clower of UCLA and Dudley Seers of the University of Sussex.

Mexico program

CEL announces meeting

by Kathy Corcoran

The Center for Experiential Learning (CEL) announces an organizational meeting for its 1981 Spring Semester in Mexico program tonight at 7:15 in Galvin Life Science Auditorium.

The program is sponsored in collaboration with Augsburg College, Minneapolis, Minnesota, and Professor Joes Mugge of Augsburg will give a presentation on experiential learning programs in Latin American countries. The four students from last year's Spring Semester in Mexico Program will also be on hand to answer questions. The meeting tonight marks the deadline for students to express interest in this particular CEL program.

The program offers two locations for study this year. One is in Cuernavaca, Mexico under the Program in Global Community, for which Mugge serves as director. The other spot is new this year, and involves study and field education at the Universidad Iberoamericana, a Jesuit university in Mexico City.

Both programs are offered to juniors or "very qualified" sophomores with at least one year in Spanish. Each program is designed to increase the student's awareness and understanding of social justice issues in Latin American countries through an integration of both classroom and experiential learning.

On the domestic scene, CEL sponsors the Urban Plunge and Summer Service Projects. The programs allow students to confront problems of poverty and social justice in our own cities.

According to Fr. Don McNeill, director of CEL, plans are in progress for a spring trip to Washington, D.C., where students can meet those involved with social justice in a legislative aspect.

McNeill referred to the Mexico Program as an "excellent intercultural learning experience." He hopes that students' exposure to various problems will cause them to question the structure and values of a society.

McNeill urges all students interested in a spring semester's study in Mexico to attend the presentation tonight, and students interested in other CEL programs should watch the Observer for details.

Crime increases in India

NEW DELHI, INDIA (AP) -- The Crimes of rape, bride burning and dowry demand, reportedly on the rise in India, are causing a nationwide furor, reflected in street protests, heated editorials and irate speeches by politicians.

Indian newspapers carry daily reports of rape and sexual media have been giving increasing attention to the problems of women in this tradition-bound, predominantly Hindu nation of 66 million.

Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's government has presented legislation to Parliament which would establish sentences of two years' hard labor for people who demand gifts and cash from a bride's family.

The legislation also seeks to toughen rape laws by specifically providing jail terms for police officers convicted of the offense. Current laws do not differentiate between policemen and other offenders.

An official Indian commission has joined the fray with a report backing the proposed two-year prison term for dowry offenders and also recommending a fine of 10,000 rupees, about $1250.

The current maximum penalty for demanding dowry is six months in jail and a 5000 rupee

Tale of an illegal keg confiscation

Dear Editor,

As members of the group of Cavanaugh residents whose keg was confiscated on Green Field this past Friday, we feel that we should comment on this latest in a series of week-to-week keg policies handed down by Dean Roemer.

According to Tuesday's article, there was a "non-student" keg on White Field which was not confiscated because the people there "were not presently affiliated with the University." Sounds familiar, doesn't it? Allow us to translate: The alumni may do what they please when they are here for a football weekend, BUT students are subject to the rules of the University. It does not take much insight to see that the Administration's "Students vs. Alumni" double standard has struck again. Or has it? Not according to Dean Roemer, it hasn't. He says Security should not have let the kegger proceed any further, since "As far as (Dean Roemer) is concerned, there is no difference between students and guests." Add one point for student-alumni equality, right? Wrong. Dean Roemer explains, "Alumni, visitors, and families are not subject to University jurisdiction." Thank you for making this situation perfectly clear, Dean Roemer. We are glad to see that you are a man who sticks to his position.

Let's get right down to the directive now. It states that "when a small group meets in the Green Field with their parents and hometown friends, we have not requested Security to confiscate the alcohol." In other words, if mommy and daddy are in attendance, the University will allow students to have kegs on Green Field. We hate to break the news to you, but we are all big boys and girls now, and we don't need someone around to slap our hands to keep us from drinking. To presume that a student's hometown friends and family should be treated any differently than his or her Notre Dame friends and family is hypocritical.

We think that a standard rule that all can follow is a long overdue necessity. We suffered under the burden of the Administration and Security's doubletalk this past weekend. As was stated in Tuesday's article, we were told by a Security officer that we could pick up our keg and tap on Monday morning so that we could at least get the deposit back. However, upon arriving at Security to discuss the situation, we were told that the keg was gone and that we were not receiving reimbursement.

Furthermore, there have been kegs on Green Field on numerous Friday afternoons before, and yet they have not been confiscated. What has prompted the sudden change of this past weekend? When we asked this question during our stay at the Security office, we were told that "they had just been lucky." It is ironic that this whole situation could have been avoided if it had been a mere twelve hours later. That would have made it Saturday, and the rule does not apply on football Saturdays. It seems that the "strength in numbers" rule applies then. As long as everybody else is out on Green Field drinking, it is legal, but one or two groups with kegs are not.

After listening to so many reasons and rules, each of which was different from its predecessor, we have finally grown weary of the weekly revisions in the University's keg policy. We must find an end to this arbitrary and capricious enforcement of keg policies and get a standard rule that we can all TRY to follow.

Catholic pastor a flop on abortion

Colman McCarthy

WASHINGTON — As a pastor seeking to lay a guilt trip on his flock, Cardinal Humberto Medeiros of Boston is a flop. A few days before the congressional primary elections in Massachusetts last week, the two million Catholics of the Boston archdiocese were urged by the cardinal to vote against candidates who favor federal funding for abortions.

Saying that abortion is "an unspeakable crime" and that these are "blood-drenched" times, Cardinal Medeiros wrote in a letter printed in his diocesan newspaper that "those who make abortions possible by law — such as legislators and those who promote, defend and elect these same lawmakers — cannot separate themselves totally from that guilt which accompanies this horrendous crime and deadly sin."

A large number of the faithful — apparently a theologically alert group that believes God, not the cardinal, is the best judge of guilt — voted for Barney Frank and Rep. James Shannon, candidates "who make abortions possible by law." The supporters of Frank — a state politician who seeks the seat being vacated by Rep. Robert Drinan, the priest pushed out of Congress by the Vatican — believed that his overall record was sufficiently liberal and humane, regardless of his stand on one particular issue.

It is hard to see how the Medeiros blast brings the discussion further along. He is now aligned with the hit list approach to politics, so favored by the rabid voices of the fanatical right. Unwittingly, the cardinal may have been a more effective vote-getter for Frank than the craftiest of precinct captains. Reporting on the backlash to Medeiros' letter, the Boston Globe quoted one citizen of unbossed spirit: "I wasn't going to vote until he (the cardinal) sent out the letter; then I voted for Barney Frank. And I'm Catholic."

In using his moral voice to tell people how to vote, Cardinal Medeiros can't help but confuse outsiders. One muddle is this: If abortion — "this horrendous crime and deadly sin" — is so evil, why doesn't the church really exert its strength and excommunicate its members who refuse to obey the official teaching? I am opposed to abortion, but if that issue alone dictated my views about politicians I would have been angered that Fr. Drinan wasn't thrown out of the church, not merely Congress. The Vatican could get a list of Drinan's Catholic financial supporters and excommunicate them too. In Congress, other guilty ones whose voting records on abortion are a bit too sinful would also go: Irish Catholics like Sens. Kennedy and Leahy.

Such a purge would be a new Inquisition. To hear some of the noisier opponents of abortion, burning a few of these heretical "baby killers" at the stake wouldn't be too far beyond what they deserve.

By trying to put a move on liberals like Frank and Shannon — both were opposed by anti-abortion conservatives — Cardinal Medeiros keeps alive the illusion that the abortion debate is divided along the lines of liberal vs. conservative, Catholics vs. non-Catholics.

This has never been the case, and is even less so now. One of the most persuasive arguments in favor of protecting the rights of the pre-born has been made by Dr. Bernard Nathanson, a nonreligious and liberal Jew who for 10 years was a leader of the pro-abortion movement. As an obstetrician, he presided over 60,000 abortions. In his 1979 book, "Aborting America," which details his change in thinking, Nathanson asks the questions that are regularly raised by moral theologians, whether Catholic, Protestant or Jewish: "Parents may not abandon their children; why should they be encouraged to abandon their children-to-be? One race ought not exploit another; why should the already-born be allowed to exploit the not-yet-born?"

Nathanson's argument, which I have yet to see refuted, is based on what he calls "the obvious scientific conclusion" that the fetus "is demonstrably an independent human entity (life)." This, he says, "is a humanistic philosophy drawn from modern biological data, not from religious creeds."

Those like Cardinal Medeiros who speak out against abortion based on their creeds have an obligation not to squander the gains and support that have been won by non-Catholics and nonconservatives who are pro-life on this issue, as well as all others. Aside from alienating the citizen quoted by the Boston Globe — and probably thousands more like her — the Medeiros letter reinforces an image of the church trying to impose its morality on public policy — or in this case, public figures like Barney Frank. It is poor strategy and shabby morality.

Are we to believe that any Catholic who voted for Frank must now take his guilt-ridden soul into the confessional and say, "Bless me Father, for I have sinned. I voted for Barney Frank."

Observer seat of alcohol paradox

Dear Editor,

It is ironic that the editorial staff chose to surround an article about campus drinking with five ads promoting local bars, a liquor store and an Observer tailgater (pp. 4 & 5, Sept. 19, 1980). Assuming this was a faux pas, I nevertheless wonder whether Kelli Flint's article or the alcohol issue itself will ever be taken seriously at Notre Dame.

Poco draws a 'poco' crowd

Jay Traverse

At the outset of Friday night's Homecoming concert featuring Poco, one might suspect that the band would employ a "get in and get out" attitude towards this show at the ACC, and who could really blame them. Only some 3000 fans showed up, and their enthusiasm throughout the evening left a great deal to be desired.

However, none of these difficulties seemed to faze Poco, for the provided the wise few who showed up with a great concert. Led by pedal steel virtuoso Rusty Young and guitarist Paul Cotton, the last remnants of the original band played a well-mixed set of 20 songs with enough old material to please even vintage Poco enthusiasts.

The show began on an immediate up-beat note, as the band went into newer material, mostly from their newly released, electric Under the Gun LP. Songs such as "Reputation," "Made of Stone," and "Boomerang" highlighted Paul Cotton's guitar improvisations. Cotton's work was complemented nicely by bass player Charlie Harrison and Rusty Young, who divided time between the electric and lap steel guitars. It was apparent that Young was much more comfortable with the latter.

Young's anxieties soon disappeared as he and Paul Cotton picked up acoustic 12-strings and recreated the band's distinct, older sound from the days when they played with the likes of Jim Messina, Richie Furay and Timmy Schmidt. They began with Young's hit single of two years ago, "Crazy Love," sung to perfection by Young. From there, they delved further into the past, playing tunes like "Bad Weather" from From the Inside, and "Fool's Gold" from the Crazy Eyes album.

"Bad Weather" provided convincing evidence that Rusty Young is the hands down kind of the pedal steel. He was almost in a trance throughout the song, playing magnificently yet still able to adjust his amp a dozen times in search for the perfect response from his instrument.

The instrumental "Fool's Gold" highlighted a very clean acoustic set by Young and Cotton, featuring Young on the banjo accompanying Cotton's 12-string guitar. After playing "Indian Summer," which included an autumn visual background setting, Poco picked up the beat, and their electric guitars, and cranked out tunes from their last two albums, including favorites like "Heart of the Night," highlighted again by Young on pedal steel, "Down to the Wire," and "Legend" before they left the stage.

After moderate cheering from the crowd, which could have been interpreted as a call for an encore, Poco returned and played "Going to a Hoedown," which left most everyone on their feet as the show ended.

The opening act for Poco featured John Hall, who attended school here in the early '70s and later joined the pop group "Orleans." His small selection of songs included familiar tunes "Still the One" and "Dance With Me," done well despite the fact that Hall had no band behind him for support. Hall will return to ND for the Country Rock Jam in early November.

Dump Bayh group misses budget

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) -- A conservative group that has targeted U.S. Senator Birch Bayh for defeat hasn't been able to raise as much money for the effort as it had hoped, the coordinator of the Indiana campaign said yesterday.

William Grier, a Lafayette advertising man who is heading the state effort of the National Conservative Political Action Committee, said the group originally had planned to spend $140,000 on its anti-Bayh campaign.

"We find we can't get our full budget, just like every other politician," he told reporters at a Statehouse news conference.

"This isn't particularly a gold-encrusted year for fund raising."

Grier said the NCPAC has spent $94,000 so far in their Indiana effort against Bayh, a three-term Democrat who is facing Republican Dan Quayle. From now until Nov. 4, the group will spend about $10,000 more.

"We have another horse to ride in this situation," said Grier. "If we push extremely hard for the money in this state, really push hard, we're going to take money away from Dan Quayle."

Grier said the NCPAC is concerned about getting only enough money to do its job and not hurt Quayle's own effort.

"We don't have a candidate and we must be aware of that continually," he said.

Earlier in the day, David Bochnowski, manager of the Birch Bayh for Senator Committee, released a report listing Bayh's sources of campaign contributions. He said it was an attempt to counter charges from Quayle that Bayh gets most of his money from out-of-state sources.

"For whatever reason, Congressman Quayle has lied about where our money comes from," Bochnowski said. "I'm trying to set the record straight."

According to a summary prepared by Bayh's committee, the campaign organization has raised $815,514 from individuals in Indiana as of Sept. 15. Contributions from outside of Indiana have amounted to $345,575 and direct mail appeals produced $262,224.

Combined with other contributions, Bayh has amassed $1.8 million so far in his bid for a fourth term -- something no other senator from Indiana has ever been able to achieve.

Bochnowski said Quayle has implied that Bayh's campaign is being financed by organized labor. But the committee manager said labor contributions represent only 9 percent of the total raised so far.

Bayh has raised 70 percent of his money from individuals and groups inside Indiana, Bochnowski said.

"It is difficult to break down contributions from political action committees into in-state and out-of-state groups," said Bochnowski. He added the Steelworkers union in Indiana has made contributions to Bayh, but because their political action committee is organized in Pittsburgh, the contribution is listed as coming from out of state.

"It's false and misleading to say that all PAC money comes from out of state, simply because the check comes from the place where the political action committee is organized," he said.

... Crime

fine, but convictions are few and rare.

A woman sometimes "is tortured in every possible way and even deprived of marital rights" if she does not bring sufficient dowry to her in-laws, said the government report.

The report cited numerous cases of harassment and, in some cases, even murder by husbands or in-laws if women fail to provide sufficient dowries at the time of their weddings.

Dowry takes several forms, ranging from cash payments to household goods such as furniture, refrigerators, air conditioners and sometimes even motorcycles and cars.

Police statistics show 69 women were burned to death in New Delhi last year because of low dowries. Few of the cases have been successfully prosecuted.

Already this year, between January and July, 67 dowry deaths have been reported. Social workers and women's leaders say the real figure is far higher because many cases go unreported.

Atlanta defeats

ATLANTA (AP)--Pinch-hitter Biff Pocoroba delivered a two-out, two-run sixth inning double to snap a 2-2 tie and power the Atlanta Braves to a 4-2 victory over the Houston Astros last night.

Pocoroba's liner to left-center field scored pitcher Doyle Alexander and Terry Harper, who both walked against Houston starter Joaquin Andujar, 3-7. Andujar's eight walks finally caught up with him.

The Braves had taken a 2-0 lead over the National League West leaders on solo homers by Dale Murphy, his 31st, in the second and Bob Horner, his 35th, in the third.

Irish JV hosts Spartans

Notre Dame's junior varsity football unit entertains Michigan State's JV squad in a 1:30 p.m. contest Sunday at Cartier Field.

The Irish downed the Purdue junior varsity team 27-7 three weeks ago in West Lafayette. In that season opener freshman John Mosley led the Irish with 79 yards rushing and two touchdowns. Jim O'Hara completed two of three passes for 54 yards, while Kevin Smith connected on all three of his attempts for 28 yards. Stacy Toran intercepted a Boilermaker pass and returned it 76 yards for a touchdown.

Ruggers play Boilers

The Notre Dame Rugby Club will host Purdue this Saturday. Game time for the "A" squad is 1 p.m. at Stepan field with the "B" and "C" matches following. Last year the Boilermakers swept the Irish at West Lafayette.

... Milligan

And all he did was set a high school record for shutouts in a season. He visited Notre Dame when he was a senior and decided he wanted to continue his soccer career for the Irish.

"I went out for the freshman team and I worked pretty hard," he points out. "I really enjoy soccer here. They guys on the team are great and so is Rich (Hunter). I'm glad I decided to keep playing when I came here."

An electrical engineering major Milligan would like to get a job on the east coast after graduation. But that's still a few years down the road. Right now he'd like to contribute to the growth of the Notre Dame soccer program — a program that has reached a critical point in its existence.

"I think the best way to advance the soccer team is to defeat some of the top teams on our schedule," Milligan emphasizes. "A good place to start would be at Indiana on Sunday. I really think we can beat them and if that happens, people won't be able to ignore us any longer."

"I want to see soccer grow at Notre Dame the way it's growing at other schools."

John Milligan (far right), Irish goalkeeper, has recorded three shutouts this season and is one of the keys to Notre Dame's success.

Milligan keeps Notre Dame defense on the ball

by Frank LaGrotta
Sports Writer

Riddle:
What is eight feet high, 24 feet wide and stands at both ends of a soccer field.

Of course the answer must be a soccer goal. (Unless of course the Russians have started giving steroids to their soccer players.) And soccer goals are something very familiar to John Milligan. A 6-1 junior from Palatine, Ill., Milligan spends a lot of time jumping around in front of one as sparsely clad players try to kick a ball over, around, even through him and into the net.

"Well, first of all, you have to be quick," points out Milligan, the Notre Dame's soccer team's first-string goaltender. "And you have to be able to react almost immediately and cover the open area. You also have to help your defense because most of the time they play facing away from the action."

"And you have to keep your mind in the game. Sometimes you can go a long time without ever seeing a shot on goal. The hard thing to do is to stay in the game and not go flat."

Milligan's stats from a year ago indicate that he seldom went flat. He started 19 of 24 games for coach Rich Hunter and registered shutouts in nine of them (a Notre Dame single-season record). He made 125 saves and allowed only 17 goals for a most impressive .791 goals against average.

"John is just an outstanding goalkeeper," points out Hunter. "His quickness and flexibility give him the potential to become the top keeper in the midwest."

After eight games this season, Milligan's skills have shown little sign of decline. He's got three shutouts and is playing as well as ever. He credits a lot of his success to goalkeeper coach Hank Hofman. But Hofman gives most of the praise right back to Milligan.

"John works very hard," comments Hofman, an assistant to Hunter who spent some time in his Holland homeland as a goalie for a semi-professional soccer team. "Sometimes John looks very experienced out there."

But, interestingly enough, Milligan never thought of playing soccer until this senior year in high school.

"Well, a few of my friends were playing and I thought it looked like a good game," he recalls. "So I went out for the team."

Not Randy Ellis

by Skip Desjardin
Sports Writer

Randy Ellis is a product of Texas football.

"All I hear about is how powerful Cincinnati football is, what with Moeller and all the players that they have sent here. I get pretty tired of it."

Ellis says that high school football in Texas is extremely competitive, and that there are plenty of schools back home that could play well against Moeller or in Chicago's Catholic League.

Back home for Ellis is Pearland, Texas. "It's just outside of Houston, and folks down there don't like Notre Dame too much." Obviously, the feeling never rubbed off on the 6-5 offensive lineman.

Randy Ellis has his eyes on med school after Notre Dame.

"I was thrilled that Notre Dame even wanted to talk to me. As a kid, when you thought of college football, you always thought of Notre Dame. I mean even in Texas!" Ellis says that he figured that he would go to college in Texas somewhere, but when the chance to come to Notre Dame came along, he jumped at it.

"My high school didn't have the best football program, so I didn't even think about getting a scholarship. When Notre Dame said that they were interested, I couldn't believe it."

There are always problems when a big high school star, especially one from an area with the football heritage that Texas has, goes on to play major college ball. Suddenly, he's in a position where he is fighting for a spot in the lineup, often for the first time in his life. Ellis was no exception.

"It was tough at first," he confesses, "but I was awestruck by the talent that they had here. I got over the disappointment very quickly."

"Now, I feel like everyone on that squad has to go out and fight for his job everyday. So I always feel that I am getting a shot at a starting role. I think that kind of situation helps the spirit of the team."

Many times, offensive linemen like Ellis are the ones who do the most work. They can win or lose a lot of ball games by the way that they play. Nevertheless, the men who line up in front of the quarterback every game never seem to get the recognition that they deserve. That doesn't bother Randy. "We are a proud bunch of guys. If the team wins, everybody gets the credit. Maybe we don't get the recognition from the press or the fans, but we get the respect of our teammates and opponents, and that is what counts. There is a tremendous amount of satisfaction to be gained from knowing that you did your job and that you did it well."

Ellis says that his football career is not at the top of his list of priorities. He has his ego well under control.

"I wouldn't want all of the interviews and headlines. I'd have to change positions for that to happen. I really like what I'm doing, and I get more than enough reward out of doing it well. Oh, I'd love to play pro ball, there's no doubt about it. I love the game. But I'm not counting on that happening. It would be a great, unexpected bonus."

Randy's real plans include medical school. "I enjoy being a pre-med major. After I graduate from here, I'm looking forward to med school."

Ellis says that he loves Notre Dame, the football, the people and the opportunities they afford him. He says, however, that four years will be plenty.

"I think I'll go to med school back near home. The people down there remember the games against Houston and Texas in the Cotton Bowls, and they love to give me a hard time about going to Notre Dame. It's great, though, because I always get the last word. You can't argue with the scores."

When he came here, Randy Ellis was a product of Texas football. By the time he leaves, and heads on to med school, or to more football, he will be a product of Notre Dame.

"And that will help no matter what I do."

Afterthoughts of a miracle

Random thoughts while savoring Saturday's "miracle":

Not too long ago, Notre Dame's football team was much-maligned for a lack of imagination in its play selection. Now, it seems, the Irish band has claimed that distinction. Gospel music? Come on now. There is no quarrel here with the band's technical excellence, or the dedication of its members. But just because it's the nation's oldest collegiate marching band doesn't mean it has to have a repertoire to match.

Even worse, when Michigan scored to take its 27-26 lead with less than one minute to play, the band struck up Michigan's fight song, "Victors."

Now that's incredible.

The season's first nomination for bush-leaguer of the year goes to Wolverine quarterback John Wangler, who didn't even attempt to call the signals before requesting a timeout when the Irish fans began to whoop it up in the fourth quarter. And of course, the Big Ten officials were quick to come to Wangler's rescue.

Tony Hunter's 31-yard pass to Pete Holohan, which set up Notre Dame's final touchdown, was the best-thrown pass of the season. Is there anything Hunter can't do?

Give credit to Notre Dame's offense. After a sparkling first half, the Irish didn't manage a minute to play and just one timeout remaining, scrambling ability is rather unimportant. Even if the quarterback were able to escape a heavy rush and pick up 10 or 15 yards, so much time would elapse that it would be immaterial where the ball was spotted.

Irish coach Dan Devine said that he used Blair Kiel in the shotgun formation late in the game because he was the only quarterback to practice from the spread formation. Why didn't Tim Koegel, who may be the best pure passer on the squad, get a chance to practice the shotgun during the week?

The main complaint against Koegel is that he can't avoid the rush, but with less than a minute to play and just one timeout remaining, scrambling ability is rather unimportant. Even if the quarterback were able to escape a heavy rush and pick up 10 or 15 yards, so much time would elapse that it would be immaterial where the ball was spotted.

Speaking of timeouts, Dan Devine's explanation that Notre Dame used its second timeout

Craig Chval

Sports Writer

because Bob Crable was shaken up during Michigan's scoring drive, doesn't much water.

The Notre Dame timeout came right on the heels of one called by Michigan. And as Devine has stated in the past, when a player is shaken up, he should get an official timeout and come to the sideline for one play as the rules require.

That was a very critical timeout, especially with Michigan on the verge of scoring. Bob Crable is a great player, but I'd hate to think that our defense is helpless without him.

Now that it appears that WNDU-TV will be able to telecast all the Notre Dame games not shown by ABC, all is well in South Bend. Isn't it funny how students can be knifed, assaulted and pistol-whipped off-campus, and Mayor Roger O. Parent can't be bothered to attend a meeting with police department representatives and University officials in his own office?

But when the NCAA nearly pulls the plug on football telecasts, they're trying to deprive South Bend of its rights to watch its football team.

As far as I'm concerned, Roger O., you can keep your city. Nobody else wants it.

In years past, there were frequent rumblings that the Big Ten would like to rid itself of perennial laughing-stock Northwestern. If commissioner Wayne Duke is worth his weight, he'll give Illinois the heave-ho, instead. The Illini is making a mockery of the conference with its repeated court challenges of conference rulings.

If you don't like the rules of the game, take your ball and go home. Nobody will miss you.

The euphoria of Saturday's conquest of Michigan has everyone pointing to the Nov. 15 showdown with Alabama in Birmingham. Everybody, of course, expects the Irish to be undefeated, which they probably should be. But beware of Miami. The Hurricanes have 20 of 22 starters back. And they were humiliated by Notre Dame in last year's Mirage Bowl.
