Signals indicate probable death of Chernenko

Associated Press

MOSCOW - Moscow radio stations played somber music early this morning, national television changed programming and lights burned before dawn at the Communist Party Central Committee building as speculation spread that President Konstantin U. Chernenko had died.

Two Politburo members reportedly cut short trips to San Francisco and Yugoslavia and returned home. In Bonn, a spokesman at the West German Foreign Office said a Soviet delegation led by Central Committee Secretary Mikhail Zimyanin that had arrived in Hamburg only late yesterday was leaving by special plane this morning.

Such sudden returns have heralded a death in the leadership in the past.

Similarly, an unexpected switch to classical music preceded announcement of the death of President Yuri V. Andropov in February 1984, and of President Leonid I. Brezhnev in November 1982.

But there was no official word about the health of Chernenko, 73, who was sick and was put out of sight before making two brief television appearances last month.

At 5 a.m. (9 p.m. yesterday), Moscow was quiet as normal for that hour, but five lights were burning in front offices at the generally dark Central Committee headquarters, an indication of unusual activity.

Adding to the rumors that Chernenko was gravely ill or dead was the announcement that a high-ranking Soviet delegation would leave San Francisco two days ahead of schedule.

The Washington Post, in an article from Geneva, Switzerland, reported that a spokesman for the U.S. mission to international organizations there said Vice President George Bush had received unconfirmed reports that Chernenko had died. Bush is in Geneva to address a conference today on the African drought.

Soviet Politburo member Vitaly I. Vorotnikov cut short a visit to Yugoslavia and flew home unexpectedly last night, according to non-Soviet sources, who spoke on the condition that they not be identified.

The sources said Vorotnikov had been expected to fly home from Belgrade today, but instead left directly from Titograd last night. The Communist Party newspaper Pravda reported the return this morning.

In San Francisco, the Soviet delegation led by Vladimir Shcherbitsky, a member of the ruling Politburo, prepared to leave for New York and a special flight to Moscow today, U.S. officials said. It was the highest-ranking Soviet group to visit the United States in more than a decade.

A U.S. official in Washington, speaking on the condition that he not be named, said, "The speed with which the group is returning indicates that Chernenko is either dead or is expected to die within a matter of hours."

This official, who had been briefed by telephone from San Francisco yesterday evening by American officials traveling with the Soviet delegation, said the Soviets "made it clear that these was no problem with the trip - that they were not returning because of anything that had happened in the United States."

In Moscow, the national radio network Mayak and Channel No. 1 of Moscow radio switched early this morning to programs of somber music. The English-

Survey to help design of programs

By MARGIE KERSTEN
Assistant Saint Mary's Editor

Do you think Saint Mary's students have a healthy and open attitude toward sexual issues? Questions such as this were part of a sexuality survey distributed last week to every on-campus student by Saint Mary's Campus Ministry.

The results of the survey will help define the educational needs of Saint Mary's students and to assist in designing educational programs to help students understand and appreciate their sexuality.

The survey was divided into eight parts and topics included the understanding and functions of the male and female bodies; self image and worth; issues of decision-making; relationships; pregnancy; and other sexual issues including incest date rape, sexual harassment, ment, rape, sexual abuse, and homosexuality.

The survey was formulated by Saint Mary's Campus Ministry. Several people were involved in the development of the survey, which went through five drafts before being finalized.

People involved were Mary Feeley, director of campus ministry; Catherine Hale, assistant professor of psychology, and Mary Burke, a senior humanistic studies major, served as a student spokesperson.

"I think most women take themselves seriously and they want to understand their sexuality," Feeley said.

"Sexuality is an extremely important issue and it has been ignored far too long," said Feeley. Saint Mary's currently has no programs in the area of sexuality and the results of the survey will be used solely to develop such programs.

Feeley also commented that although she would like to share the results with the students, "at the same time I want to keep their confidentiality. I'm not sure we can do both. My first priority is confidentiality."

The results of the survey will not be published broken down into straight percentages although some general findings may be published in the future.

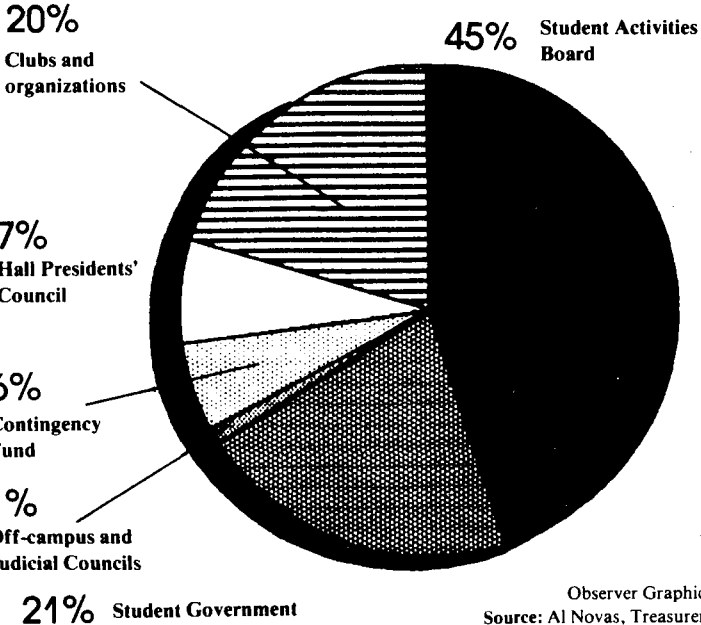

But, through educational programs that develop, students will know what needs were represented the most.

Feeley feels very positive about the response of students to the survey. "I feel grateful to the students willingness to participate and their candidness in responding

Student government finances handled 'like a business'

Where student fees go

Controlling student government finances is "very much like running a little business," said Student Body Treasurer Al Novas.

Although the goal of a student-run, student-financed "business" is not purely profit, Novas stressed his department's responsibility to be financially accountable.

The $35 activities fee paid by students generates $246,000, which is used to finance various student projects. Clubs and organizations receive 20 percent of that figure, while the remaining amount is divided by the Student Senate Budget Committee.

This committee consists of the student body president or vice president, student activities board manager, two senate members and the director of student activities, who is a non-voting member. The student body treasurer chairs the committee.

The Budget Committee divides this 80 percent of the student fees collected among the Student Activities Board, Student Government, Hall Presidents' Council, Judicial Council, Off-Campus Council and a contingency fund.

The SAB receives the largest amount, approximately, $111,000. This money funds 19 organizations and projects, including student businesses. Each project's budget represents the loss that it is "allowed" to lose, because most have sources of revenue besides "incurred expenses."

For example, last year Campus Entertainment's budget was $19,700. At the end of the year, the commission had incurred $14,580 in expenses and generated $2,879 in revenue. Although it suffered an operating deficit of $12,030, the budget allowed $19,700 to be lost.

Sen. William Proxmire accused the Federal Aviation Administration yesterday of letting $48 million get away by "turning a blind eye" to the value of federal land around Florida airports. Proxmire said 9,300 acres at 23 airports in Florida "are sitting idle, home to mosquitos and sawgrass. This land would cause real estate brokers to do cartwheels. It has an estimated rental value of about $32 million a year. . . How much is the taxpayer receiving? a big fat zero." Proxmire said another airport leased 374 acres to a "famous speedway" for $1,100 an acre for 99 years, far below the going rate of $8,000 an acre. - AP

The first shipment of famine aid raised from sales of the British pop record "Don't They Know It's Christmas" arrived in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia yesterday. The record featured some of Britain's biggest rock names playing as a group and raised about $8 million for Ethiopia's estimated 9 million famine victims. The first shipment, worth an estimated $75,000, included 20 tons of powdered milk, 10 tons of high-protein biscuits and 2.5 tons of medical supplies. The aid is to be donated to charities helping famine victims in Ethiopia, said Midge Ure of the Ultravox pop group, who accompanied the shipment. "There'll be a lot more on the way." - AP

Two-thirds of those surveyed in a Newsweek poll supported a ban on magazines, movies and videocassettes that feature sexual violence, the magazine said. But a majority still favored the availability of sexually explicit material, according to the magazine's March 18 issue. According to the nationwide telephone poll of 1,202 adults, conducted on March 6 and 7 by the Gallup Organization, roughly three-quarters of those surveyed said sexually explicit material denigrates women and leads some people to sexual violence. Newsweek said the poll, which had a 4 percent margin of error, showed that a majority of Americans are offered to some degree by the sexual content of today's top television shows, advertising and movies. But Newsweek said the poll makes clear the acceptance of pornography in American life: clear majorities favored the continued sale of X-rated movies and sexually explicit magazines, although some were willing to limit public display. - AP

Sen. Jake Garn will take a paper airplane to play with on his long-delayed space shuttle flight, officials said. Garn, 52, will use the toy for a file demonstrating the fundamentals of science to schoolchildren, said Carolyn Sumners, director of astronomy and physics at Houston's Museum of Natural Science and coordinator of the project. The six other astronauts aboard Discovery will play with jacks, a yo-yo, marbles, a mechanical car and a pink plastic mouse named "Rat Stuff." Garn's trip into space has been postponed five times. The Utah Republican is on the crew as a congressional observer in his role as chairman of an appropriations subcommittee that oversees NASA spending. -AP

The 33-year-old auto mechanic who was kept alive for 11 hours with an unapproved mechanical heart will be buried in Tucson after a service attended by his family and friends, University of Arizona officials said Saturday. The polyurethane heart, designed by Dr. Kevin Cheng, a dental surgeon, kept Thomas Creighton alive for 11 hours Wednesday after a first human heart transplant failed and a second donor heart could not be found. The mechanical heart was replaced early Thursday when a human heart became available. Shortly after Creighton died, Dr. Jack Copeland, head of the heart transplant team, attributed the death to an accumulation of fluid in Creighton's lungs, which placed increased pressure on the transplanted human heart. Copeland said use of the Phoenix Heart did not contribute to Creighton's death. - AP

Sexuality survey a positive step

Human sexuality seems to be a taboo topic on the Saint Mary's campus. There isn't a lot of talk about sexual issues, and people seem to be either embarrassed or unknowledgeable about many of the issues concerned.

But conversations concerning sexual issues were stirred up last week when Saint Mary's Campus Ministry distributed a sexuality survey to every student living on campus.

The survey is extremely thorough, covering almost every sexual topic. Because so many subjects are covered, those taking the survey may question the necessity of some questions.

The diversity of questions, however, can be easily justified.

Survey results will be used to tailor programs to fit the specific needs of Saint Mary's students. A less thorough survey might not offer a true picture of student attitudes.

The survey is a one-shot opportunity. Had it refused to present all possible topics, many important subjects might never have surfaced.

The survey is divided into eight parts. The first section involves questions about the male and female bodies and their reproductive organs, while the second part deals with self-image and self-worth.

Decision making capabilities are questioned in the third section, and the fourth deals with attitudes and relationships.

The fifth section asks questions concerning pregnancy, such as who is responsible for birth control, and what to do in case of pregnancy.

The sixth part is mainly concerned with a person's opinion of homosexuality and sexual harassment.

The seventh section asks three straightforward questions: what a person's sexual preference is, whether or not a person is sexually active, and whether or not the person is using birth control.

The eighth and final section asks if a person would be willing to attend educational programs should such programs be instituted. Space is available at the end of the questionnaire for comments or suggestions.

Although the survey addresses many personal issues, it is vitally important that those completing the survey take it seriously. Once the results are compiled, educational programs can be instituted and students should take advantage of these programs.

The Saint Mary's community is very protected. Because education involves growing and maturing in many ways, it is important that students become more knowledgeable on their own sexuality. Sexual issues are not inherently immoral, and students should not be afraid to confront these issues.

Campus Ministry has made an attempt to bring sexual questions into the open. This is a positive step because it is time for Saint Mary's to recognize that sexuality is part of life.

For too long, students have been led to believe that information on sexuality should not be mentioned.

Margie Kersten

Assistant Saint Mary's Editor

Someone who openly discussed sexual issues might have been considered immoral or looked upon negatively. Saint Mary's is an educational institution and as such should not limit its education by excluding information on sexual issues.

At most state universities, sexual information is readily available. There are programs available for a number of sexual topics, including rape, sexual harassment, birth control, pregnancy and homosexuality. There is no reason why Saint Mary's should be different from other colleges and universities.

MARK WEIMHOLT

The results of the sexuality survey will allow Saint Mary's to identify what information students seek. Campus Ministry has exemplified, through the survey, a sincere concern for the issue of sexuality.

Campus Ministry and all those who worked to develop the survey are to be commended. It is hoped that new educational programs will be developed, and that through these programs students will become less intimidated and more open, honest and knowledgeable about their own sexuality.

Graduate students compete in yearly M.B.A. competition

By MAURA MANDYCK
Staff Reporter

Teams made up of graduate students from five universities were presented with a business dilemma this morning at 8:30 and were required to present a solution by 9:45 tomorrow morning.

Thus is the fourth annual Notre Dame M.B.A. Invitational Case Competition.

The invitational, sponsored by the Notre Dame College of Business Administration and partially funded by the Johnson and Johnson Companies of New Brunswick, N.J., will take place today and will conclude with a judges' decision tomorrow evening.

Representatives from Ohio and

Penn State, Vanderbilt, and the universities of Illinois and Missouri, as well as a three-member team from Notre Dame are all competing in the 24-hour contest.

Notre Dame won the 1982 and 1983 competitions.

Second year M.B.A. students, Carlos Fernandez, John Lawless, and Thomas Varga, will represent Notre Dame.

They were chosen on the basis of an intra-college competition on Feb. 22.

Each university is permitted a three-member team and a faculty advisor at the competition.

Each team will receive a case having to do with general business management policies.

It will be "The challenge of the team to look at the case and make suggestions highlighting the company's market positions, chief officers and financial status," according to Larry Ballinger, director of the Notre Dame M.B.A. program.

Each team will have 24 hours to prepare a 25-minute presentation and can bring a maximum of 10 books on accounting, finance, marketing, management, and business policy.

The presentations will be taped to facilitate the judging.

For the first time, microcomputers will be furnished and rooms in the Center for Continuing Education and the library will be available.

The teams also will be given a student liaison to answer any questions the visiting teams may have about the Notre Dame campus.

Notre Dame's faculty advisor, Dr. Paul Conway, associate professor of finance and business economics, said the team has "a lot of enthusiasm" and "the in-house competition was very lively."

The purpose of the competition, said Conway, is to "zero in on a problem, analyze it, and make proposals for its solution."

If no problem exists for the company, the team will offer advice on expanding its markets, raising funds, or stating corporate policy.

The cases used for competition are drawn from actual companies with problems or questions.

The suggestions offered by the teams are "often what has already happened," said Dr. Conway.

The teams must present "a good plan of action and be able to defend it," he said.

Ballinger commented that the competition gives the students "practical experience which to defend it," he said.

Ballinger commented that the competition gives the students "practical experience which is invaluable."

Professor Richard Hodgetts, an authority in business policy from Florida International University at Miami, will be this year's head judge.

Last year's winner was the team from Ohio State.

An awards dinner for the competition will be at the University Club on Tuesday, March 12.

language service of Radio Moscow's world service also began playing classical music at 10:30 last night.

Normally, the domestic radio station plays a mixture of classical, jazz and Russian folk songs along with talk programs.

At 9 p.m. last night, the two Soviet domestic radion stations on the air were both playing classical music, mostly string music with minor keys, instead of their usual mixture.

One broke in on the hour for a regularly scheduled news broadcast and the other did the same at 9:50 p.m. Neither made unusual announcement.

U.S. National Security Adviser Robert McFarlane briefed President Reagan on the Soviet delegation's request for U.S. assistance in arranging a quick flight home, said deputy White House press secretary Bob Sims.

"They have requested that they be able to leave early," Vivienne Ascher, a State Department spokesman in Washington, said of the delegation that arrived in the United States March 3.

Suicide bomber drives into Israeli convey, 9 people killed

Associated Press

A lone suicide attacker drove his bomb-laden car into an Israeli army truck in south Lebanon yesterday, killing nine Israeli soldiers, military sources said in Tel Aviv.

At least 11 soldiers were wounded in the attack just across the border from the Israeli town of Metulla, according to hospital officials. Most were severely burned.

In Beirut, the capital of Lebanon, an anonymous caller told the leftist radio station Voice of Arab Lebanon that the car bomb was driven by a member of the Lebanese National Resistance in revenge for a car bomb that killed 75 people and injured 250 on Friday near a West Beirut mosque. The caller said there would be a longer statement later.

Israel has denied accusations in Lebanon that it was responsible for that bombing.

Manager Aina Belsky of Metulla's Arazim Hotel, about 300 yards from yesterday's blast site, reported in a telephone interview, "The explosion was terrifying. There was a giant fire and then black smoke shot up."

It was the worst attack on Israel's occupation force since Nov. 4, 1983, when 28 Israeli servicemen and 35 Lebanese and Palestinians were killed by another suicide bomber. In that attack, a bomb-laden truck was driven into a compound where Israelis detained and questioned prisoners.

Prime Minister Shimon Peres was quoted as telling a Jerusalem meeting of women from B'nai B'rith: "We had a very bad day today. Nine of our soldiers were killed." His remarks were relayed by a participant who spoke on condition she was not identified.

The military sources, who also insisted on anonymity, had initially said as many as 10 died in the attack. At the same site, two Israeli soldiers were killed in land mine explosions on Feb. 10.

The Lebanese state-run radio quoted police and other sources as saying that a Mercedes car with a lone occupant drove into the Israeli convoy on the Tal el-Enhass road in the Marjayoun Valley about 100 yards from the border gate.

It said the car hit a truck full of Israeli soldiers, and the explosion set fire to a number of Israeli vehicles.

Machine-gun fire could be heard as surviving Israelis reacted to the attack. Helicopters quickly removed the casualties, area residents told state radio.

The Israelis then sealed off the area.

Before yesterday's attack, the Israeli death toll in Lebanon since the June 1982 invasion stood at 620.

Funds

ment did not spend was applied to other projects which ran over budget.

Some commissions, such as movies and services (refrigerator rental), turn a profit in the long run. Others, such as Musical Entertainment, are terminated mid-year because of overspending for unforeseen circumstances.

"This is the first time we've tried to bring in new wave groups, (Joe "King" Carrasco, The Bangles, The Suburbs)," Novas said, but because of a lack of student interest, each concert lost more money than planned. Musical Entertainment spent its year's budget in the first semester, thus "we basically closed them down," said Novas.

"It's a business, you take risks, you hope that the student body appreciate these concerts (or other events) that we've brought in, and they didn't do as well as we thought," Novas said.

This does not mean an event-free second semester, according to Novas. There are other commissions which fund social events. "There is overlap. If you took Special Events, Campus Entertainment, and Musical Entertainment, (all SAB commissions), you're going to have an approximately $60,000 budget. One person should never control that much money," said Novas.

"You allocate your money, you hope to God they (specific commissioners) hit their numbers," Novas said, but in some cases, "You pad the numbers." The ultimate effect is "we have our bottom line covered."

This does not mean the budget figures are arbitrarily assigned. At the end of each spring semester, SAB officials meet with the student body treasurer and student body vice president and break down the large sum assigned to them by the Student Senate Budget Committee. This sub-budget is approved in the fall by the Budget Committee.

"We have a good idea of what will happen year to year," Novas said, "With the supply (money) we have, we allocate it to the best of our ability to give students what they want."

"We want to make sure it's (student activities fee) being spent properly, it's not being abused, and that it's providing events."

"Granted that we can't have beer busts every weekend, 'cause if we could we would."

Student Government, which received this year approximately $50,000 operates similarly to SAB, but funds different operations.

to the survey. The results will be taken seriously," she said.

Hale was mainly involved with the content and format of the questions. She has done work with surveys before and gave a statistical view of dealing with the construction of the survey.

Burke, who is an R.A. in Holy Cross Hall, said that she got involved with the survey through meetings with R.A.s and student government. Burke was involved with the content of the questions and the cover letter that accompanied the survey.

"Issues of sexuality are not often addressed here at Saint Mary's, and Saint Mary's being an institution of education for whole being, needed to address the issue because sexuality is a part of each person," she said.

So many areas were covered because sexuality is a broad topic, according to Burke.

"If we would have left out some of these areas it would have been negligent on our part," she said.

She stressed the confidentiality of the survey and noted that no percentages will be published. Burke said, "We will use these numbers to know what educational programs to start."

Feeley said the Board of Regents and Student Affairs Committee met and examined the are of education for sexuality. Parents, faculty, students, and staff discussed the need for a program and a sexuality survey seemed to be the best way to determine what the student needs were.

The ultimate goal of the survey is to determine what the needs of the students are, design a program in correlation with the students' needs, and share the information with students before the 1985 school year.

Notre Dame students will be invited to be involved in the programs.

Rangers take to the air

Cadet Alan Perry, a graduate of the US Army's Air Assault School, uses hand signals to guide a helicopter in. The Observer/Johannes Hacker

Johannes Hacker features staff writer

On March 2, while most students were busily sleeping in, catching up on a week's lost sleep, the Notre Dame Army ROTC Irish Ranger Company, the crack volunteer ROTC outfit, was flying about the Michiana region in U. S. Army helicopters on an exciting field training exercise.

The UH-1 Iroquois helicopters were part of an air assault field training exercise which involved the Irish Ranger Company and the 38th Aviation Battalion, Indiana Army National Guard. The helicopter battalion is a reserve unit based in Shelbyville, Indiana.

The exercise was conducted in two phases; the first, the helicopter ride, familiarized cadets with flying in them; in the second, the Rangers conducted small-unit wargames in Juday Creek.

The Irish Rangers reported in at 7:30 a.m. at the ROTC building, and their cadet officers briefed them on entering and exiting the helicopters. Also, the Army ROTC detachment issued equipment, including field packs, radios, and M16 rifles with blank ammunition, to the cadets.

The company then was organized into lifts, or groups which were to ride in the same helicopter. Each lift had a leader who was responsible for providing the pilot with a list of names and social security numbers of the cadets flying in his lift.

At 10 a.m., the cadets marched to Green Field.

Before the cadets boarded the helicopters, the pilots gave a safety briefing and an orientation to National Guard Aviation. After this was done, the first of the three helicopters took off, and nine lifts, totalling over 50 Rangers and about 25 other cadets, took off, flew around the Mishawaka area, and landed in Green Field.

After the helicopter ride, the Rangers went to Juday Creek, a wooded area northeast of campus, to conduct field training exercises and wargames. The wargame ended at 2:30 p.m., and the Rangers marched back to the ROTC building.

This wargame was in preparation for the Army ROTC Roger's Rangers competition at Camp Custer, Mich., where the Irish Rangers will compete against units from Indiana, Illinois and Michigan. The competition consists of three events; small-unit patrolling, testing on such military skills as first aid and communications, and a five-mile squad run with full field pack.

The Irish Ranger Company is a volunteer subunit of the Army ROTC cadet battalion which concentrates on field training and readiness. Also, the unit attempts to instill confidence and motivation in its members. The commander of the Irish Rangers, cadet captain Eric Fredrickson, says of the purpose of the Rangers, "What I'm doing is trying to prepare my people to become future officers in the United States Army."

The company is run in the spirit of the active Army Rangers, a highly trained, highly-mobile unit of the U. S. Army. Army Rangers participated in the invasion of Grenada, and are in turn modeled after Roger's Rangers, a unit which fought in the French and Indian War. Many members of the Irish Ranger Company have had either Airborne or Air Assault training.

Yuppies- you can't stand 'em, you can't shoot 'em

Marc Ramirez

Strange days indeed

They're everywhere.

Unless you excommunicate yourself from the rest of the civilized world, there aren't many places you can go without running into a few here and there. If I didn't know any better I'd say they were a plague sent from the heavens to punish me for my wrongdoings, but since I haven't done any wrong in the last eight years or so, that's out of the question.

The country is crawling with them - look out your window and you'll probably see a couple buzzing about, seemingly innocent but silently deadly. You may have to deal with some at close range today, and if you're allergic to them like I think I am, you could be in for trouble.

You might even be one.

That's right, we're talking yuppies - young upwardly-mobile professionals, spreading across the country at geometric rates, following all the trends and making me downright nauseous as they do it.

I can see you're worried about being one already, and that's a good sign, because if one characteristic typifies a bona fide yuppie, it's that he's damn proud to be one, thank you very much.

There are those who would like to be yuppies. There are those who think they're yuppies. And then there are those who are yuppies. Let's examine the latter, shall we?

YUPPIE HANGOUTS:

Personally, my first instinct when I see more than maybe three yuppies at a time is to run screaming for the nearest door with an "Exit" sign over it. I once had a class in Hayes-Healy, and if you know Hayes-Healy you know that as many as 40 or 50 yuppies have been sighted coming out at one time. Walking through the building between classes can be quite a harrowing experience, so beware of the imminent dizziness which is bound to flood your senses as you struggle toward the door under the scrutiny of a hundred yuppie eyes, clawing through a heavy fog of Polo and Chanel No. 5.

Other yuppie hangouts on campus: Stepan Chemistry Hall, the Law School, the Memorial Library basement, The Snite Museum of Art, Courtney Tennis Center, Walsh.

FIVE THINGS TO SAY THAT WILL UPSET A YUPPIE:

1. "Gosh, isn't that Brut you're wearing?"
2. "Who's this Dow Jones guy? I heard he took a drastic fall."
3. "Tennis has gotta be the most boring sport in the world."
4. "The word out of Hollywood is that 'Dynasty' is being cancelled."
5. "I'm so glad Lionel Richie is finally dead."

A TYPICAL DAY FOR A POST-COLLEGE YUPPIE:

7:00 a.m. sharp - Wakes up bright and early. Mumbles something corny about hating Mondays, thanking God that it's Friday, or something similar. Drags self to shower with matching shampoo and conditioner. Emerges with ambitious look in eyes. Splashes on Pierre Cardin cologne or Giorgio perfume. Dresses in designer clothes or conservative blue suit, making sure all labels are visible.

8:00 a.m. - All prepped up and ready to go, gets into 1985 Honda Accord or Chevrolet Celebrity. Stops for quick breakfast anywhere croissants are served. Waits until other yuppies are done with financial section of counter copy of morning paper. With heart beating rapidly, checks closing Dow Jones average.

8:50 a.m. - Arrives at work at downtown office building. Sits in car for few minutes singing along with final verses of "Like A Virgin," then ejects Madonna tape from professionally installed Pioneer cassette deck. Goes to work.

9:00 a.m. - Walks cheerfully into office, says good morning to receptionist, asks for cup of decaffeinated coffee. Performs duties of job, subconsciously calculating the increase in personal worth with each passing action.

1:00 p.m. - Takes hour off for lunch. Checks options: meet other yuppies for lunch at fine dining establishment; go it alone to small deli-type place where single yuppies meet; procure brown-bagged lunch from office refrigerator - may include yogurt, exotic fruit, Diet Coke, potato salad and/or Chef's salad. If alone, spends time reading "Iacocca," Business Week or anything by Sidney Sheldon/Harold Robbins/Stephen King.

2:00 p.m. - Returns to work. Spends rest of afternoon contemplating benefits of being company president, plots quickest and safest route there. Also considers plans for evening - which hot spots to hit, etc.

5:00 p.m. - Departs office with proverbial sigh of relief. Wipes off dirty spot on "Reagan/Bush '84" bumper sticker on car. Climbs inside, flicks Wham! tape onto cassette deck. Drives home.

8:00 p.m. - If no plans made to meet yuppie friends at nightclub, or to go it alone at classy yuppie singles club, then decision is made to stay home and watch "Falcon Crest."

THE THREE MOST COMMON YUPPIE ANSWERS TO, "WHAT THREE THINGS WOULD YOU LIKE TO HAVE IF YOU WERE SHIPWRECKED ON A DESERT ISLAND?":

1. A company ladder to climb
2. A TV to watch The MacNeil-Lehrer Report on
3. A subscription to The Wall Street Journal

HOW TO CLEAR OUT A ROOM FULL OF YUPPIES:

Shout, "Hey, whose Audi is that on fire out in the parking lot?"

Cynicism stifles the atmosphere at Notre Dame

A friend once told me that she was at odds with her life at Notre Dame. "It's the cynicism at this place," she declared, "you can't get away from it." She complained that students at Notre Dame gave up on things rather quickly, things like the social life, the administration, and student government. People get com-

Vernon Marchal

partmentalized here, she felt, without much thought or reflection. "SMC chicks" are seen as flighty, Notre Dame women are seen as conceited and aloof, and Notre Dame men are seen as juvenile and insensitive. It seemed to her that students too often sorted out and classified others according to negative stereotypes - as if these stereotypes could account for a whole person. She said that she felt alone and estranged from this place, because, to her, it seemed obsessed with the baseness of things.

I did not know what to say to her. She had been at Notre Dame longer than I, and I knew that she would probably not be impressed with the naive advice of a freshman. Finally, I said that I sympathized with her, although in truth my view of Notre Dame was quite different from her's. She undoubtedly detected this, because my sympathy had little effect. I remember wondering what made her so bitter. I felt frustrated because nothing I said seem to make any difference.

My friend has since graduated, but in my time here I have had similar conversations with others. Their unhappiness has made me wonder.

At a place like Notre Dame, filled with intelligent people, cynicism is a fashionable and seductively undemanding habit of mind; it is infinitely more respectable than hopefulness. John Kenneth Galbraith, no small intellect himself, understood this when he remarked that "the man who foresees peace, prosperity, and a decline in juvenile delinquency is a negligent and vacuous fellow. The man who foresees catastrophe has a gift of insight which insures that he will become a radio commentator, an editor of TIME or have gotten to Congress." Smart folks like to be right about bad things. Many of them find that by focusing on the bad, they can appear right with great regularity and with little or no effort. Few things can promise so much for so little.

But the appearance of rightness is not rightness. Not all Saint Mary's women are airheads. Not all Notre Dame women are arrogant. Not all Notre Dame men are jerks. If these are the only kind of people one is looking for, surely one will find them. But in this search, one will inevitably come across many worthwhile and caring people as well.

Almost without exception, the cynic at Notre Dame (or anywhere) is a person who has been sold a bill of goods. He makes no attempt to see the good or correct the bad, for he has been convinced that all such attempts reflect a naivete that is not consistent with his vaunted intelligence. For him, everything is a foregone conclusion. Such a person often becomes complacent and self-righteous. His contact with others is usually characterized by a doleful account of the tragedies of the day.

Of course, the problem with cynicism is that it sets the stage for its own prophecies. For example, chances are that the social life at Notre Dame will be bad if the student body gives up on itself. Few should be surprised that improvement rarely occurs when any significant number of people shun the prospect of improvement.

How we deal with cynicism is not a marginal concern. It is a concern that affects the quality of our lives at their deepest levels. Cynicism severely impairs the ability of the imagination to see possibilities and create options. It hangs over inventiveness and initiative like a pall. It is a habit of mind that, like all habits, is learned early and dies hard.

In the end, cynicism prevents one from being happy and at peace with himself and others. Also, it is the ultimate indicator of a weak mind, for a person with a real idea rarely has the time to turn cynical.

As the dust of death settles, life goes on

In the midst of the fall semester I took time out from my typical editorial parade of social analysis and political salvos to write a philosophical inquiry into the nature of love and life. It was an enigmatic journey which probed and examined the fact that we take the the nature of love and life.

Each person's lifetime is short and seemingly insignificant when viewed in terms of the continuum of human existence. If you are religious or you believe in the hereafter, then death is a beautiful and wonderful thing because it takes one from the pain, ignorance, and mundane trivialities of daily life.

While the theory may provide comfort and consolation, in reality, the practice is crushingly painful, especially when it occurs to a dear and special person like a parent.

Our parents snare a most special relationship because it is through them that we come into being. For fortunate souls, our parents are there every step of the way to offer encouragement and criticism, to change our diapers and bandage our skinned knees, and to smile proudly when we take our first steps across the floor and later out the door into the world.

It is hard to imagine a mother or father as being vulnerable when they always seem to be there for you. But parents are human beings and the time comes when they are no longer with us. The reality of their death is dealt with in due time, but the loneliness that comes with missing their presence in our lives tends to linger.

Even when I went to school very far away, I knew that Mom was only a phone call away if I had a problem, or something special happened that day, or even if I just wanted to call and find out if the Sabers won.

Fifty years and 72 days is so brief a period, but once our candle of life is ignited, we know not when its flame will finally flicker out. While I'd give anything in the world to have my mother back, I take solace in the fact that I gained so much from her while she was in my life. I shared a special relationship with her and I can honestly say that she died knowing how much I loved her and how important she was to me.

There is no practical reason for my digressions on these pages: the relationship between a parent and a child is a very special thing. For those of you who still have living parents, pull them close to you and let them know that you love them. There is no such thing as a "generation gap;" that's a term used to explain a loss of communication.

If you harbor a grudge with your parents or you feel that they don't understand you, just imagine how you would feel if they were suddenly gone forever. How many things would be left undone or unsaid?

It is a sobering thought to say the least. I do not know how many people actually read what is written on these pages, but for those who have made it this far, and who understand and have been touched by what I have been trying to say, I must ask a simple favor of you. Make a special effort to pull your parents close to you. If you are fortunate enough to have your parents live to a ripe old age, then you will have had that many more warm and tender years together.

Lastly, I wish that all of you may be spared from the emotional pain of losing a parent, but if it should occur, then you can definitely find comfort in the notion that you made the most of the time that you spent with them. For me anyway, this notion has made picking up the pieces and going on with life much easier.

dear and special things of those around us for granted as we trudge through our daily lives.

The impetus for my sentimental meanderings was my discovery that my mother had cancer. I knew then that some time in the future I would be writing the follow-up to an earlier article.

But alas, life is not a fairy tale and we cannot always have happy endings. We know not why some of us will live on into a ripe old age and why some have to leave us far too soon. So please bear with me as I make a few observations and draw a few more conclusions about

Conservatives are turning history on its head

It is a thing of wonder to watch the reversals of ground by the administration and its Democratic adversaries. President Reagan calling the anti-Sandinista contras the "moral equivalent of our founding fathers" was a glowing example of the change.

In the past it was the American left liberals who defended revolutionaries in Latin America and the conservative loyalists who speechwriters) seizing the high moral ground of the American founding fathers and the French Resistance in behalf of the contras, while the liberals are reduced to a defense of a status quo they had never before revered.

If you get under the skin of the administration's words you may find a shrewd foreign policy tactic emerging. It is certainly not the "McCarthyism" which Rep. Ted Weiss (D-N.Y.) read into it in attacking Secretary of State George Shultz, nor the "Red baiting" which seems to have stirred Rep. Peter Kostmayer (D-Pa.). Both men are reading the events of today through the color prism of the post-World War II ethos.

President Reagan and Secretary Shultz may inadvertently have been pushed by their militant Democratic opponents into a policy of overtly aiding a revolution which continues to threaten a governmental overthrow, even when it doesn't achieve it.

What counts is not the overthrow but the sword of retribution which hangs constantly over the heads of President Daniel Ortega and his ruling junta and makes them walk warily. Ortega's gesture of offering to send home some Cuban military and forgo some Soviet plane shipments is a slow ritual dance obviously aimed at swaying congressional votes. Shultz does an equally slow ritual dance aimed at influencing the moderate Contradora nations of the region.

The result is that the Communists throughout the region are on their best behavior lest another Grenada or a strengthening of the Salvadoran guerrillas tip the precarious "correlation of forces" against them. Thus the backing of the contras may be achieving exactly the bolstering of legitimacy in the whole Latin American area which the past American efforts in defense of the status quo never achieved.

So you have a conservative administration using the language and tactics of the left ("freedom fighters," "revolutionaries," "Resistance") for conservative purposes. The same thing is happening in the Star Wars Initiative where Reagan is using a high-technology weaponry for the hope of weapons abolition, and his adversaries are reduced to arguing for the overkill status quo of Mutual Assured Destruction (MAD).

It is turning history as well as language on its head. It has its dangers, but dullness and hopelessness are not among them.

were outraged. Now it is the conservatives who side with the revolutionary contras and the left liberals who are outraged at the "immorality" of overthrowing a sovereign established government.

The ground of discussion has suffered a shift like that of the geological plates underlying continents. At first the Reagan people tried the tactic of "covert" CIA aid, in a curious blend of careless cloaks and daggers. The liberals were shocked at the covertness, as if it had not been used by a succession of presidents.

Now Reagan wants a blocked $14 million to become open military aid to the contras. He says, in effect, "To hell with the fig-leaf" and asks "What's wrong with backing the right kind of revolutions by the right kind of people against the right enemies of the U.S.?"

It's a question hard for revolution-oriented liberals to answer. The Democratic leaders have been holding a series of inquests into the party's disintegrating political position. They now find the president (and his

Nicaraguan betrayal abetted by the clergy

Dear Editor:

As fate would have it, I had just read an article on doings in Nicaragua in the October 1984 issue of "The New Republic" and had just seen a television news report on the state of Nicaragua's army, when I chanced upon Prof. William Storey's letter to the editor of Feb. 27. He writes of John Paul II as having "systematically and relentlessly undermined the popular and highly Christian revolution" in Nicaragua.

Granted in comparison to, say, the Bolshevik Revolution, or the uprising of the Red Army, Nicaragua's revolution made a greater appeal to Christian themes and ideals. It certainly involved many more chaps in clerical collars in influential positions. And indeed, the prospect of ousting a despot like Somoza won great support for the Sandinists. But however "popular and highly Christian" the revolution might have promised to be, matters are much different now.

American conservatives would say the revolutionaries have shown their true colors. Liberals would lament the loss of the bright promise. No matter. One now finds de facto government by thugs - many Somozan bosses have miraculously become born-again Sandinista elites - and a populace where a not-uncommon cry is heard for the comparatively bounteous times under Somoza.

The government denounces farmers for capitalist excess when they sell their produce in the market. The revolutionary elite eats the best imported food and lives well, donning the obligatory fatigues for public viewings, while the masses scramble for sanctions, despite the fact that the economy was in a shambles well before the U.S.-backed contras undertook economic sabotage in 1982.

So the scoundrels persist in the pretense of popular support while they stage trumped-up elections and snatch teenage boys from city buses to serve in the army. All the while progressive priests smile beneficently from their cabinet posts. One need not be a toady of the U.S. State Department, or even a conservative, to smell a rat here.

It was, by the way, not some puppet of the Curia but Gustavo Gutierrez who applauded the Pope's words to and about the poor during the recent trip to South America. Say what you will about John Paul, he can hardly be charged with moral inconsistency in opposing the regimes in both Poland and Nicaragua. The two share a basic failing: the betrayal of the aspirations of a largely Christian people. The double-dealing in Nicaragua is all the more scandalous in being abetted by the boys in black.

Father Sorin wanted to have ROTC on campus

Dear Editor:

Whether they are sitting in the classroom, doing situps in the grass, running in formation, or marching across campus with weapons in their hands, the ROTC cadets at the University of Notre Dame are preparing to take an oath to support and defend the Constitution of the United States - the same Constitution that gave Nolasco the right to express his opinion in his letter to the editor March 6.

Unfortunately, Nolasco chose to describe the ROTC training as "humiliating" and "insulting." Does he too find the preservation of his first amendment rights "humiliating" and "insulting"?

Nolasco is bothered by the fact that the Army ROTC "folk" not only vocalize "obnoxious Army chants" and paint their faces, but they crossed campus with weapons in their hands enroute to their training site. He suggest that such a practice at a Catholic university should make Father Sorin turn over in his grave and make present University officials take prompt action to cease this disgrace.

Just a point of information, Father Sorin favored the formation of a military company and in the Spring of 1859, he requisitioned and received Army weapons to supply the cadets with arms. In 1880, Father Corby forwarded a petition to the War Department requesting that an officer be detailed to instruct the cadets - he too requisitioned weapons. Present University officials recognize the importance of well-trained Christian leaders.

Nolasco should not be humiliated by the presence of ROTC programs on a Catholic campus, but should be relieved that the military will have such qualified, responsible Christian leaders.

Nolasco's solution to get the cadets out of his sight - possibly to the "bottom of St. Joe's Lake" - is neither very Christian nor very constitutional. Those cadets in ROTC have the right to be there and to paint their faces just as Nolasco has the right not to be in ROTC and the right to choose a university without ROTC.

Prof. Rice offers to explain his position

Dear Editor:

Brian McKeon's column on March 5 criticized my participation in the defense of the four youths accused of bombing abortion chambers in Pensacola, Florida. Because of the pre-trial order, I cannot discuss the case but I can make available without further comment materials which are already in the public domain. Had McKeon contacted me and expressed the concerns which he voiced in his article, I could have provided such material to him. He could have avoided the numerous misrepresentations in his article.

I will be pleased to provide for any interested member of the University community a copy of the brief submitted by the defense team of which Professor Frank E. Booker, Mary Frances Hasson and I are members. Incidentally, apart from the locally retained counsel, no member of that team is receiving any fee other than a nominal fee of one dollar. I will also be pleased to provide a copy of an article, "The Bomber As Victim," which I had published in January in The Wanderer, a Catholic newspaper.

If members of the University community are interested in informing themselves on this issue, I hope they will avail themselves of this opportunity. If they are not so interested, I hope they will at least have the grace to refrain from inflicting their uninformed opinions upon others.

'Counseline' promotes non-Catholic attitudes

Dear Editor:

The forum upon which I am about to engage has in the past been abused by irresponsible hyperbole. I wish not to contribute to this tradition with any caustic or inflammatory statements. Instead, I wish to make a point which concerns the administration of this University and its commitment to its Catholic nature.

It has come to my attention that the psychological services of Notre Dame include a project called Counseline. This service allows students wishing to know more about a certain subject to call and make a selection from a number of tapes.

Included in their well-advertised list are such subjects as male and female homosexuality and physical intimacy. After listening to these, I find it difficult to fathom how a Catholic university can be in the business of supporting homosexuality and an openly licentious view of sexuality.

Most revealing was Tape 20 on female homosexuality. The tape, far beyond the value neutrality of the others to which I listened, clearly characterized religious disapproval of homosexuality as the result of "biases and fears," clearly stating that it was not morally wrong. Instead, the tape advocated a freedom for sexual self-determination and applies the dictum: If it feels good, do it. Needless to say, something is awry here.

The very nature of being Catholic is to take our Christian heritage seriously. This means employing truths which have been supernaturally revealed for the benefit of all. If we seek truly to counsel, then we must not hesitate in affirming our convictions.

I can understand, perhaps, a stand where a psychologist simply tries to clarify a person's values without suggesting her own. Fine. But a Catholic university cannot retain its integrity by denying the very values which make it distinctive. These tapes clearly do this.

The administration, therefore, has the responsibility not only to discard these poisonous tapes, but to replace them with others which will truly attend to the needs of people seeking happiness and fulfillment. This will be done, not with secular platitudes but with the Christian truths which liberate. Remember: it is our personal salvation which hangs on the balance.

the finals of the 175-pound match. Gailus didn't throw any brutal punches, but he came out in a fury. And after a flurry of combinations and a right that hit the right spot of Packo's head, it was over. Packo was on the ground out cold.

Dave Sassano didn't win the heavyweight championship, but he proved to a lot of people that he is one tough boxer. Sassano lasted three rounds with grad student Jim "the Unknown" Vignone; something no one else could accomplish. This was Vignone's first experience in the Bengals, but his skill obviously showed some prior experience in the ring. Vignone has competed in the New Jersey Golden Gloves.

Vignone took Sassano to the ropes in the first and delivered several flurries of shots to his opponent's body and head. This didn't happen just once, Vignone did it again and again. Sassano showed a lot of skill just trying to protect himself.

Once again in the second Sassano was taken to the ropes by Vignone, only this time Sassano didn't fair as well. The senior was almost knocked out of the ring. Vignone took him to the ropes again, and after a series of punches to the body the referee gave Sassano his first standing eight.

When the bell sounded at the beginning of the third, Sassano figured he might as well get his licks in before the fight was over and he came out swinging. The fight turned into a slugfest, and Vignone took Sassano back to a familiar place—the ropes. Several Vignone combinations prompted the referee to issue the second standing eight of the bout.

The super heavyweight final, featuring Tom Rehder and Pernell "Big Train" Taylor, wasn't the slugfest it was built up to be. Taylor spent the whole fight working on Rehder's midsection due to the height differential, and Rehder only unleashed his cannonball right once.

Taylor took Rehder to the ropes in the first and threw series after series of punches to Rehder's stomach, which didn't do anything to Rehder at all. But they did score a lot of points with the judges. Midway through the first Rehder got a little upset with Taylor's body shots, and wound up and let go a deadly right uppercut that hit Taylor's body. Fortunately for "Big Train," the punch didn't connect with his face.

In the second, Rehder got fired up and connected on a few shots to Taylor's head. Taylor took Rehder to the ropes in the third and landed some combinations to Rehder's head, something he had not done before. Rehder came back and took Taylor to the ropes and landed some combinations to the head that prompted the referee to give Taylor a standing eight. Taylor ultimately won by split decision.

points to the Notre Dame cause with six field goals and a remarkable 12-of-13 from the free-throw line. Ken Barlow added 21 points of his own, going 8-of-9 from the field in the process.

Perhaps the biggest story in this game, though, was the rebounding differential. The Irish pounded the boards especially hard against the somewhat-smaller Flyers, outrebounding them, 37-20, and outscoring them, 12-0, off of rebounds on the offensive end.

"We really took a clubbing in the rebounding department," said Dayton coach Don Donohier. "It was the offensive boards that truly won the game for Notre Dame. They really go to the boards well and are just an outstanding rebounding team."

Royal and Barlow also led the Notre Dame rebounding charge.

grabbing nine and eight, respectively. But they were not the only ones rebounding well. Jim Dolan pulled down six misfires despite playing only 25 minutes, and even the 6-0 Rivers had five of his own.

Rivers had the ball at the end of regulation, but his short jumper with four seconds remaining fell off, leaving the score at 59-59 and sending the game into overtime.

It was Dayton which had the chance to win the game in the first extra period. With the game knotted at 67 and only three ticks of the clock left, Toney put up a shot of his own, but it, too, would not go, and the teams headed for an additional five minutes.

In last year's 80-70 Dayton win over the Irish in UD Arena, it was Toney who came up with 19 second-half points to spur the Flyers in their comeback victory. And, for a few minutes Saturday, it looked like history would repeat itself, as Toney hit five straight outside jumpers to bring Dayton from a 38-37 deficit to a 47-41 lead.

But Phelps refused to let it happen.

"Toney was my concern the entire game," said the Irish head coach. "When he hit those jumpers, I really started to get worried. We tried a box-and-one, we tried a bunch of things. We just wanted to do anything to take him out of his game. Fortunately, we were able to get him out of his groove."

“Coach just told me to get out in front of him and give him something to look at. We wanted to try to get him out of his rhythm,” said Royal, a forward who moved out top to guard the smaller Toney.

Obviously the strategy worked, as Toney cooled down somewhat and Notre Dame heated up for its 20th win. Phelps celebrated the victory with a beer and a cigar, part of a tradition in which the student managers present him with both after a big win.

No doubt, the Irish coach would like to see plenty more beers and cigars in the coming weeks.

"We're in the tournament now and looking forward to playing," said senior guard Dan Duff, a first-time participant in the NCAAAs, like all his teammates save for Barry Spencer. "Anything can happen once you're in. Who knows how far we can go?"

Should the Irish advance beyond Oregon State, they will be matched against the North Carolina-Middle Tennessee State winner. After that, the team which emerges from these four will travel to Birmingham, Ala., along with the twice-victorious among Kansas, Ohio U, Purdue and Auburn, for the regional semifinals on March 22.

Yet, as far as Phelps is concerned, there can be no looking past Oregon State.

"I'm just thinking about Oregon State for now," said the Irish coach. "That's all we can do. You worry about North Carolina, you lose to Oregon State. It's as simple as that."

The Irish and Beavers have had two common opponents this season, UCLA and Washington. Notre Dame nipped UCLA, 53-52, in Pauley Pavilion in February, and beat Washington, 57-50, a week ago yesterday in the ACC. The Beavers, meanwhile, split with both. Oregon State dropped the Bruins, 59-49, at home in Corvallis before losing the return game in L.A., 59-51. The Ralph Miller-coached Beavers beat the Huskies, 52-45, in Washington, but were taken to the cleaners in Corvallis later in the season, losing 60-45.

Oregon State is paced by 6-9 senior forward A.C. Green, who averages 18.8 points a game and had a high of 39 points. The Beavers average 59.5 points as a team to their opponents' 56.2.

As far as the 64-team field of the tournament games, Phelps had nothing but praise.

"The tournament selection committee did an excellent job putting things together. They seeded everyone well," said Phelps. "It's an exciting field. I think the first and second rounds will be very interesting."

"I think Michigan is the team to beat in our regional. We just have to do our own thing here at the ACC, though. The students have been a part of getting us here. There won't be a student section as such, but we still need them."

The next three days will be filled with lots of hard work for the Irish, the same hard work that got them here in the first place. The payoff for that work will be Thursday night at 9:37 when the ball goes up in the air at the ACC.

Women

through the first half to turn a tight 18-14 game into a 32-14 runaway.

In the second half, things got worse for the Muskateers, as Notre Dame scored the first eight points after intermission to take a 51-28 lead. The Muskateers didn't help their own cause, as they shot a dismal 22 percent in the second half. For the game, Xavier hit on just 32 percent of its shots, while the Irish connected on an impressive 55 percent.

In the scoring department, the Irish were paced by Mary Beth Schueth's 19 points and Sandy Botham's 18. Senior Laura Dougherty, who joined classmates Schueth and Ruth Kaiser in the starting lineup for their final regular season contest, contributed 10 points and five assists. Kaiser played her typically solid defensive game and added four points, two of those on a half-court shot that swished through the net as the final buzzer sounded.

"There wasn't a lot of continuity to this game," said DiStanislao. "It was really a physical game. I'm proud of my players because they didn't come out flat for this game, even though we had just clinched the conference championship, and we were playing away from home against a team that we had beaten

GIVE US TIME TO REPAY YOUR LOAN.

If you've gone to college on a National Direct Student Loan, a Guaranteed Student Loan or a Federally Insured Student Loan made after October 1, 1975, and your loan is not in default, here's a way to get your loan repaid.

Use the Army's Loan Repayment program. Each year you serve on active duty reduces your indebtedness by one-third or $1500, whichever amount is greater. In a three-year enlistment, you eliminate your debt.

Additionally, you could learn a valuable skill and take advantage of many other Army opportunities. If you have the time, we have the money.

Irish top Dayton, 80-73, gain NCAA tourney bid

ND faces Oregon St. in first game at ACC

By JEFF BLUMB
Assistant Sports Editor

It's taken four years, but the Notre Dame basketball team is finally in the NCAA tournament again. Its 20-8 regular season record, coupled with its finish as the nation's top independent, was good enough yesterday to make the Irish the seventh seed in the Southeast Regional. An extra bonus was the placement of Notre Dame at the ACC for its first- and, if necessary, second-round game.

The Beavers of Oregon State, 22-8 overall and holding third place in the Pac 10 with a 12-6 conference record, will be the foe Thursday night at 9:37. That game will be preceded earlier in the day by Kansas-Ohio University at 12:07, Purdue-Auburn at 2:37, and North Carolina-Middle Tennessee State at 7:07.

1985 NCAA CHAMPIONSHIP

Approximately 1,500 tickets for all games went on sale to the general public today at 9 a.m. at the Gate 10 ticket office of the ACC. Tickets must be bought as a package for all six games to be at the ACC on Thursday and Saturday. Approximately 2,700 tickets had been available yesterday but the seven ACC visitors took close to 1,200 leaving Notre Dame the rest to sell.

Under NCAA guidelines, tickets for individual games cannot be sold until 24 hours prior to the start of the first game. There will be no sale of tickets expressly to students.

Irish coach Digger Phelps was all smiles after the pairings were announced at 5:30 last evening. But he knows there is plenty of work before Thursday.

"Oregon State is really respectable," Phelps said after the announcement. "You want to play at home, and being able to is a good break for us. But I'm sure Oregon State will play its best knowing that it has its backs against the wall coming in here. The key for us now is just to play the way we have the last two weeks. We're primed."

"I'm sure we'll be here looking at (video) tapes until about midnight. We have tapes of Oregon State against UCLA and Washington. We'll practice (today), and then build the intensity on Tuesday and Wednesday."

ND women win, hope for NWIT berth today

By LARRY BURKE
Sports Writer

CINCINNATI - The Notre Dame women's basketball team accomplished the expected on Saturday, dispensing of an overmatched Xavier team, 78-50, to pick up its eighth straight victory. Today, the Irish will know if they accomplished a much larger goal, namely the first post-season tournament bid since the program made the jump to Division I five years ago.

NCAA women's tournament bids were announced yesterday, and Notre Dame was not among the 32 teams selected. However, the Irish are still under consideration for the National Women's Invitational Tournament, which will announce its eight-team field this afternoon.

Despite a 20-8 record and a North Star Conference championship, Notre Dame's chances of getting into the NAAs were slim. The North Star Conference champion does not receive an automatic bid, and there are only 15 at-large bids available in the tournament. Irish hopes became even slimmer when upsets occurred in several of last week's conference tournaments. Seven conferences, in fact, had at least two teams selected to the tournament, and 13 unranked teams received bids.

Notre Dame's impressive conference play led to a 13-1 NSC record, but Coach Mary DiStanislao's squad ultimately lost out in the eyes of the selection committee because of early season losses to tournament-bound teams such as Tennessee, UCLA and USC.

"It's very disappointing," said DiStanislao, "especially because we know from all the teams we've seen this season that we are of the caliber of the teams in the NCAA Tournament. We didn't receive a bid, so we were obviously penalized for our early season losses. That's an important lesson to the players. You've got to play every game - they all count."

Saturday's game was a good example. Although the Irish had already wrapped up the conference title, a convincing win over the Muskateers was still necessary to strengthen Notre Dame's tournament hopes.

The Irish vanquished any possibility of a Xavier upset, however, as they ran off 14 unanswered points midway

Donald Royal (15) goes up inside against Dayton's Larry Schellenberg (11) as Jeff Zern (50) and Dave Colbert (44) position themselves for the rebound. Royal's career-high 24 points and nine rebounds were a major reason why the NCAA tournament-bound Irish were able to beat Dayton on Saturday, 80-73, in double overtime.

Royal's 24 points key in double-OT victory

DAYTON, Ohio - A pressure-packed environment. A hostile crowd. A double-overtime game. A kill-or-be-killed situation. The question one had to ask was, was this NCAA tournament conditions or Saturday's Notre Dame-Dayton basketball game at UD Arena?

Actually, both.

In the end, it was five-point Notre Dame spurt to open the second overtime which was the difference as the Irish dropped the Flyers, 80-73, in a contest that had all the makings of an NCAA tournament game. The win gave Notre Dame a final regular season record of 20-8 overall and 4-2 against the Midwest independents. Dayton, meanwhile, closed its season out at 19-9 and an even 3-3 in independent round-robin play.

With Marquette's win over DePaul later in the afternoon, dropping the Blue Demons to 19-9 and 3-3, and the Irish emerged as the nation's top independent, in addition to capturing the mythical Catholic league.

Donald Royal's backdoor layup off a pass from David Rivers with 2:34 left in the second extra session put Notre Dame up by four, 71-67. Royal was fouled by Dayton's Sedric Toney on the play, fouling Toney out of the game and giving the Notre Dame sophomore a chance at the three-point play. Royal proceeded to hit the free throw to cap off the Irish surge.

"That's what won the game for us," said Notre Dame coach Digger Phelps of the big basket. "This was by far Donald's best game ever at Notre Dame. He played especially well at the end when we needed it."

"We felt that we could get the ball inside. That was one of our game plans. We didn't think Dayton had the quickness to contain Royal."

Friday's Bengal Bout finals feature action-packed, hard-hitting fights

By JOE BRUNETTI
Sports Writer

With the amount of punches thrown and the intensity of the action at Friday night's Bengal Bout finals, it almost seemed as if Sugar Ray Leonard was fighting at Madison Square Garden. No, Sugar Ray didn't fight and the bouts were held at Stepan Center, but the action was nonetheless furious from the beginning.

Jim Priola dominated Marshall "The Law" Rodgers enroute to his first 140-pound championship. Priola took command of the fight from the beginning, utilizing a straight left that connected more than a few times to Rodgers' head. The senior took Rodgers to the ropes in the first and after a series of combinations to the body and head Rodgers was almost knocked out of the ring.

In the second, Priola pulled the same stunt and once again Rodgers almost landed on one of the judges' lap. Rodgers started to show his fatigue later in the round and he began to drop his hands, leaving his face wide open for Priola to score points with his straight left.

Priola finished the fight relatively unscathed, while his counterpart couldn't boast of such luck.

The 140-pound final, pitting Tom "the Bull" Lezynski against Ed "Munster" Kelly, was built up as one of the best fights of the night, and it lived up to its expectations.

While round one went to Lezynski, the second round was a different story. Kelly sent a blistering right to Lezynski's head. The referee, acting prematurely, gave Lezynski a standing eight count. At the end of the round Kelly and Lezynski got into a furious exchange of flurries against the ropes.

With Lezynski having won round one and Kelly round two, the last round laid it all on the line. Both fighters knew it, and after a furious third it was Kelly who had his second championship.

"Smokin'" Joe Collins survived a dogfight with Todd Lillie in the semis, and the 150-pound junior had enough left Friday night to collect his first Bengals crown over Jim "Quick" Silver. Collins took control of the match and had Silver in trouble many times throughout the bout, but was unable to finish off his opponent. The combinations that did connect, however, scored enough points to give Collins the unanimous decision.

Ed Reilly outslugged 155-pound opponent Jeff Anhut for his first Bengals crown. Reilly delivered some deadly combinations in the first, and he missed on an uppercut that would have sent Anhut reeling. In the second and third rounds Anhut went on the attack, but Reilly warded him off with a left jab that met Anhut's face many times.

After Ed "Wolf" Gavagan survived a brawl with Joe Simmons in the semis, and Dan Watzke was never really challenged in his semifinal bout, it seemed that Gavagan would have the advantage going into Friday night's 160-pound final. That was not how things turned out, however.

After a quiet first, Watzke started to strut his stuff. The senior didn't lose control and start throwing garbage. Instead he picked apart Gavagan, and when he threw something it almost always hit something of Gavagan's. At the end Gavagan was exhausted, but it was Watzke who had his first championship.

The 165-pound championship, as expected, was a brawl. It pitted Tom Hardart against Don "Transpo" Antrobus. Antrobus had TKO'd his first two opponents and Hardart entered the tournament as the number-one seed. Ironically, the two fighters are best friends.

In the first, Hardart didn't throw a whole lot of punches, but the few he did he connected on. Antrobus used his devastating right all night, and he threw one in the first that sent Hardart flying back.

In the second the fight became a bloodbath. Antrobus threw several combinations that left Hardart's face looking like a piece of prime rib. Hardart was seeing stars and almost hit the canvas several times.

Hardart answered the bell in the third, but he would have been better off staying in his corner. Antrobus, once again, dished up some of his power-packed combinations that only worsened Hardart's mental state, and Hardart's corner wanted the fight stopped several times. The referee finally did stop the fight at 1:12 of the third.

Antrobus collected his third TKO and proved to be one of the most dangerous fighters of the Bengals.

Grant "Gale Force" Gailus is dangerous in the ring, and now all of his opponents know it. He TKO'd Greg Rowe by the 31-second mark of the first round in his quarterfinal match. He beat up Tim Lyons in the semis enroute to a unanimous decision. And Friday night he knocked out Dave Packo in the first 43 seconds of
