Ethanol committee makes a stink

By BUD LUEPKE
Senior Staff Reporter

The distinctive odor emanating from the New Energy Company of Indiana ethanol plant may greet students next fall if political furor and legal confusion are not resolved this summer.

Since opening last October, the plant's emissions have plagued campus and South Bend residents alike.

Mayor Roger Parent organized a Public Works Committee to investigate what avenues could be taken in resolving the problem. The committee met last Thursday night and ended in dissension among committee members when Councilman Thomas Zakrzewski, D-6th proposed a June 28 deadline for removal of the odor.

Zakrzewski, in whose district the plant is located, is under political pressure from citizens to bring legal action against the plant.

His June 28 proposal was rejected by other committee members. Council Attorney Kathleen Cekanski-Ferrand was reported in the South Bend Tribune as saying there is "no rhyme or reason" to Zakrzewski's proposal.

Plant manager William Cribbs, who was absent from the meeting, was unaware of the proposal. "That's something the councilman came up with on his own," Cribbs said. "The city government is supporting us. As far as I know only the one councilman is against us and I don't know why."

Zakrzewski set his deadline on June 28 in response to the Cekanski-Ferrand interpretation of the city nuisance ordinance. According to her interpretation, action must be taken against a violation within a year. After a year of violation, she said, no action can be taken.

City Attorney Richard Hill, who also failed to attend the meeting, said the year restriction on legal action did not apply to an on-going violation. Any deadline set on the plant is meaningless, he said. Hill was reported in the South Bend Tribune as saying, "When and if litigation is appropriate, we'll proceed."

Difficulties in identifying the exact cause of the odor have hindered clean-up efforts. Committee Chairman George Plain said the odor comes from the drying process which is the last phase in producing ethanol. "The plant has modified two stacks out of five, and these have reduced emissions 50 percent." Plain could not say, however, whether these modifications were reducing the odor. "There's no way to measure odor," he said.

Plain said that similar problems have resulted from ethanol plants in Cedar Rapids, Decatur, and Peoria. He said a recent study concluded that the emissions were not toxic.

Reagan visits gravesite to honor slain Nazis in the midst of protest

Associated Press

BITBURG, West Germany - President Reagan's visit to the military cemetery inspired jeers, chants and whistles of opposition here and around the world yesterday. But cheers were heard too, as many Germans thanked Reagan for defying a storm of criticism to honor their war dead.

A handful of protesters shouted "Please don't go" as Reagan's motorcade carried him through the narrow streets of this small farming community to the graveyard in the nearby hills.

A grim-faced Reagan and West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl laid wreaths at Kolmeshohe Cemetery, where 49 Nazi SS troopers are buried among some 2,000 war dead.

Several thousand people lined the streets to see the president's limousine motorcade speed by. Protesters' chants were matched at times by cheers from supporters. Posters and banners were held aloft amid the throngs.

"They killed my family," read one. "Why, Mr. President?" queried another.

To mute the storm of protest arising from his homage at the graves of Nazis, Reagan spent an earlier hour at a concentration camp where 50,000 Jews and gentiles were put to death by Adolf Hitler's 12-year dictatorship.

"The horror cannot outlast the hope," the president said there — his message to those who accused him of ignoring the Nazi horrors.

Reagan, in one of the most controversial acts of his presidency, spent only eight minutes in silence at the Kolmeshohe Cemetery in Bitburg with West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl on a dank, gray day.

Along the way to the nearby U.S. Air Force base, the president also viewed signs of support: "Hail to the Chief," "Welcome President R. Reagan," and "Thanks for liberty."

About 20 minutes before Reagan passed through the center of Bitburg, 25 German police equipped with riot gear charged into a group of about 200 Jewish students and their supporters. The scuffle broke up after about five minutes, and no arrests were reported.

Demonstrators also greeted Reagan and Kohl earlier, when they went to the Bergen-Belsen concentration camp about 220 miles to the north.

Objecting to the Bitburg stop, they shouted: "Mr. Reagan, don't go there. You don't belong there. We don't want you there."

After the two leaders left the death camp, about 50 people, most of them American Jews who are the children of Holocaust survivors, were allowed onto the grounds to conduct their own memorial service.

"Bergen-Belsen has today been exploited for the political interests of these two men, and the sanctity of this place has been violated," said Menachem Rosensaft.

Credit Union minimum balance policy irks students

By SANTIAGO O'DONNELL and JOHN FLORY
News Staff

Two dollars may not seem like a lot of money, but it might cost the Notre Dame Credit Union more than it bargained for.

The Credit Union's recent $2 finance charge policy for share accounts with a balance of less than $500 has some students taking their business elsewhere.

"I came here to take all my money out, partly because of the new charges, partly because the interest I make in my savings account is close to nothing," said freshman Meg Egan.

"I am going to deposit my money back home in Baltimore, and have my school address printed on the checks, so I can use them here. A lot of my friends are doing the same thing," she added.

According to one Credit Union employee, who insisted upon anonymity, many students are closing their accounts. The exact number of accounts closed belonging to graduating seniors is difficult to determine she said.

"The new fees have only been effective since May 1 and it is too early to tell," she said.

June Rettic, the Credit Union's vice president for operations, declined to comment on the new fees in the absence of Credit Union President Ruth Kelly, who was out of town last Friday.

Rettic also instructed employees not to release any information or comment on the issue.

"I stand by the comments made by president Kelly in the April 19 Observer article," said Rettic.

In that article Kelly said "We're trying to give the students the fairest fee structure of any financial institution. But the cost of doing business has changed radically. A survey we conducted showed that our members wanted us to charge the members who use those (financial) services."

Apparently, some students do not number among those surveyed, as petitions denouncing the new policy as unfair have appeared in residence halls.

Some members of student government said they feel the new finance charges are unfairly targeted at students.

"It seems as if they are taking us for a ride," commented Student Senator John Ginty, who was appointed by student government to study the new fees and possible alternatives.

"It's not so much the charges that I am opposed to, but rather the way this new policy is being implemented. Every age group seems to be exempt from these fees, with the exception of students, he said."

Members under 18 years of age are exempt from finance charge fees. The "net pay" plan exempts members that cash or deposit their pay checks in the Credit Union. This provision exempts many members in the 25 to 55 age group.

Members over 55 years of age may participate in the Members Emeritus program which would exempt them from finance charges, while members over 65 years old can gain exemption through "direct deposit" of their Social Security checks.

Only students and the unemployed do not qualify for any of these exemptions. "I believe that this policy is discriminatory. I am meeting with Ms. Kelly this Monday (today), but I have the feeling that the new fees will stay as they are," said Ginty.

Students will also face a monthly charge of $1 if they fail to keep at least $100 in their savings account and they do not have another account with the Credit Union.

Ginty is currently studying two possible alternatives to the Credit Union. One is to bring a branch of the First Source Bank to the LaFortune Student Center once its renovation is completed. First Source already has a branch operating on the Saint Mary's campus, where students pay up to 75 cents a month in finance charges.

The other possibility is to bring to LaFortune a number of local banks and let them compete for students. "The University of Kentucky has six different banks operating on campus, and it is working out really well," said Ginty.

Senator K.C. Collum agreed with Ginty's remarks, and said he will be closing his Credit Union account today or tomorrow.

Former Student Body President Rob Bertino commented, "I believe that the fees are unfair because the Credit Union caters to many students who can't bank elsewhere because they don't have transportation. If the Credit Union is in financial difficulty they should dip into the pockets of their wealthier members."

"I'm glad that the senate is taking action, and I'm glad that I am a senior," he added.

Said Junior Mansour Eid who closed his account Friday, "If they take out two bucks a month, in a whole year they will take out all the money I have in the bank."

In Brief

The results are in from Notre Dame's participation in the St. Joseph County Blood Bank Program. Breen-Phillips took first place in the hall competition with 25.2 percent residents donating, according to Carol Seager, director of University Health Services. Overall, 636 Notre Dame students gave blood, up from last year's total of 159 donors. - The Observer

The Kellogg Institute has awarded summer internships in human rights to three Notre Dame students. Seniors Brian McKeon, Jim Capretta, Tom Gibbons and sophomore Pablo Iturralde were awarded the internships in competition with other students interested in developmental issues and human rights in Latin America. An overwhelming majority of Americans trust the news they get from network television, according to a survey for U.S. News & World Report magazine by the Roper Organization released Saturday. 58 percent of respondents to the poll agreed that network news coverage is "neutral, objective and middle of the road." Twenty-two percent said TV news leans too far to the left and 10 percent said it was too far to the right. Networks got harsh marks on questions of entertainment quality. Only 8 percent said they were very satisfied with the entertainment offerings of television. - AP

The inherent evils of final exam week

This is the time of year when civilization begins to break down, especially for freshmen.

For many months, you've been living in an uneasy state of truce with that jerk you live with. Despite all the things you'd like to have done to him or her, you have been kind.

This restraint, however you might justify it, has not been because of Christian charity. It has been a survival technique. You have to live in this room, so you both might as well make things as liveable as possible.

In a week, this will no longer be true. There is no further benefit to being civilized. Whatever you do, there is no longer the time for a damaging response from your roommate. So you do all the things you've always wanted to.

Admittedly this is not only true of freshmen. In later years you can become disillusioned with a roommate during the year and wish your lousy room pick hadn't forced you into this arrangement.

Finals time is the perfect time to launch a May Day revolution against the swine. A wave of terror - which is always more effective if other people in your suite join in - can be an excellent way to show your roommate that he or she really isn't as wonderful as he or she thinks.

The cause for these lapses in what is referred to as Christian behavior is not simply the natural tendency of human behavior coming to the fore. There is a more significant cause of this hostility: final exams.

Final exams, because they produce such evil, probably should be banned by a pastoral letter, but that is another matter altogether.

Finals anxiety takes many forms other than roommate slaughter. The most common of these is the sullen silence syndrome. For more than a week, the best of friends refuse to talk to each other. They simply sit silently studying and getting progressively more worried about what might happen during exams.

The introspective silence is fortunate, especially for the North Dining Hall. Everyone eats at North during finals, which is rather irritating for North Quad residents who don't flood the library. Some would think it is stupid to walk five minutes from the library to stand in line for half an hour and then walk back five minutes instead of walking ten minutes to the South Dining Hall and going straight in to eat and walking back from there. The evidence shows, however, that not many think this is stupid.

Tom Mowle

Day Chief

Perhaps ignorance is a sign of breakdowns in civilization, but there are more obvious ones. For example, there is the guy across the hall who insists on playing his stereo with his door and transom closed. These precautions are only a cover for his attempt to destroy your ability to pass your classes, become successful in life, and make your Mommy and Daddy proud of you.

His relative is the person who refuses to let you listen to your classical music to study by, even though you've done so all year. Clearly, he is trying to ruin your routine and is being very selfish to boot. There is a critical difference between someone down the hall playing music just to irritate you and someone down the hall asking you not to play your music. Just what that difference is is not clear, but it is true that both these people are wrong and are infringing on your rights.

The only solution to the strains of final exam time - not to mention the un-Christian behavior it promotes - is to ban finals. This would not, however, be a complete solution. The end of the semester, even without finals, would still promote anxiety at a relaxed campus like this one.

So the semester should end by proclamation sometime in the spring. Father Hesburgh would stand on the steps of the Dome and announce the semester officially ended. This would be no more unusual than the official beginning of the school year he traditionally announces in late September.

Such a Hobbesian approach to school might lead to better performance all through the year, because students would work harder, never knowing when the end would come. Or they would do worse, confident that they still had plenty of time left on this campus. Either way, students would no longer kill each other during finals week.

John Paul II finds film offensive

Associated Press

VATICAN City - Pope John Paul II on Saturday led thousands of faithful in reciting the rosary dedicated to "repairing the offense inflicted" to the Virgin Mary by a French film.

"Je Vous Salue, Marie" (Hail, Mary) by French director Jean Luc Godard portrays the mother of Jesus as a cabbie's girlfriend and shows her nude in some scenes.

The ceremony at the Courtyard of St. Damasus in front of the Apostolic Palace at the Vatican was carried worldwide by Vatican Radio.

Earlier this week, the pontiff invited Roman Catholics around the world to join him in reciting the rosary "with the intention" of expressing their indignation over the film.

Meanwhile, left-wing groups "supporting freedom of expression" staged a counterdemonstration in front of a downtown Rome theater showing the movie.

More than 100 people gathered outside the Capranichetta cinema, which has been the scene of several protests by priests, nuns and neo-fascist groups since the film's opening about two weeks ago.

In the film, the modern-day Mary is the daughter of a gas-station owner and the girlfriend of a taxi-driver named Joseph. The archangel Gabriel arrives in a jet to give Mary the news that although she is a virgin, she is pregnant.

Besides religious protests in Rome, Naples, Bologna and other Italian cities, the movie has also encountered legal problems. Authorities in the Adriatic coastal town of Pesaro seized the film after a judge ruled it was obscene.

Darby's may temporarily relocate

By FRANK LIPO

Copy Chief

Darby's Place might receive a reprieve from its previous death sentence, according to its Manager Bob Newhouse.

Newhouse said he has been discussing a temporary relocation of Darby's with Student Activities Director Joni Neal. The temporary move would be to some closet space near Chautauqua Ballroom.

The relocation will become a reality if the closet space has the electrical outlets necessary to handle Darby's equipment, according to Newhouse. The electrical outlets are the only obstacle which stands in the way of the relocation, he said, adding a decision will be made by tomorrow.

Student Activities Board Business Manager Rob Hoover initially informed Newhouse that the LaFortune renovations, which were given final approval by the Board of Trustees last week and will begin this summer, would leave no base-ment space for Darby's. Newhouse said he then talked to Lee Broussard, SAB manager. "Lee Broussard was willing to try to work something out," said Newhouse.

With Broussard's support, Newhouse then asked Neal if he could view the renovation plans. Newhouse said he has met with Neal during the past two weeks to discuss a temporary location. Newhouse said Neal was "eager to relocate Darby's."

Newhouse said he has heard "indefinite rumours" that the administration plans to discourage late-night studying on campus. "It's not my job to argue with the administration over the issue of late-night study. It is my job to see that Darby's doesn't disappear," said Newhouse.

Any discouragement of late night studying applies strictly to LaFortune, Newhouse said. He said that Neal and Father David Tyson, vice president for student affairs, view a renovated LaFortune's function as "100 percent social" and there will be "no real study space," in a renovated LaFortune.

Father Steve Gibson named Senior Fellow

By MARK WORSCHER

Senior Staff Reporter

Notre Dame seniors had a chance last week to vote for the person who most affected and inspired them, and they overwhelmingly chose Father Steve Gibson to be Senior Fellow for 1985.

Gibson, who goes by "Father Steve" as the rector of Carroll Hall, received 60 percent of the vote.

"It's an honor," said Gibson. "I really hope its a reflection upon three years of good ministering with some people I have come to know and love very much and not a reaction to some of the publicity of the last two or three weeks."

Gibson announced April 14 that he and Father David Tyson, vice president for student affairs, had "reached a mutual agreement that it would be best if (he) did not return as rector next year." Reaction to the announcement was swift, as students across the campus defended Gibson's record and questioned the criteria used to evaluate rectors.

"It's interesting to see the way Notre Dame seniors feel toward Father Steve - obviously pretty strongly," said Dean Christy, president of the senior class. "A lot of people think very highly of him. That's understandable. He fits the criteria for the award in every way."

Last year's Rector of the Year, Gibson said last night he still is unsure of his plans for the fall.

"I have a couple of proposals I will be making, but it really depends upon my superiors. I would very much like to continue in the ministry here at Notre Dame," he said.

Gibson, 42, said he will remember the senior class most by "the people I've come to know the best - who I've been on retreat with from the class. I would hope that some of the friends would be friends forever."

After graduating from Notre Dame in 1966, Gibson went to minister and teach in Uganda for eight years beginning in 1969. He was ordained in the African nation, becoming what he termed "the first white man ordained in east Africa."

Gibson returned to Notre Dame, spending six years at the Fatima Retreat House before becoming rector of Carroll Hall, where he is in his third year.

He will be presented with the award during commencement weekend.

National Nurses' Day today at Saint Mary's

Special to The Observer

"Nursing care makes the difference" is the message of National Nurses' Day, being held today at Saint Mary's and around the country.

Saint Mary's Student Nurses' Association will join the American Nurses' Association, the Indiana State Nurses' Association, and the nation's 1.7 million registered nurses in marking this event.

College President John Duggan proclaimed the occasion, urging all to "join us in observing National Nurses' Day, recognizing that through the efforts of our nation's nurses, nursing care makes a difference."

ANA President Eunice Cole, targeted competition in health care and the availability and affordability of health care services as critical national issues. "These questions that are only lately receiving attention from multiple segments of society have long been of concern to nurses," she said. "On National Nurses' Day, we rededicate ourselves to providing quality nursing care services to the public at prices they can afford."

Colleen Osborne, Saint Mary's SNA President, commented, "We hope that our recognition of National Nurses' Day will make others aware of the vital role nurses play as health care professionals."

National Nurses' Day gives consumers a chance to remember nurses whose care has made a difference in their lives and the lives of their families, said Cole.

Student activity budget approval vote tonight

By SCOTT BEARBY
Assistant News Editor

No significant changes were proposed by the student government budget committee in deciding how student activities fees will be allocated for 1986, according to Student Body President Bill Healy.

The proposal is set to be before the Student Senate tonight for their approval, and Healy said he hopes it will pass without major difficulty.

According to the figures presented by the committee, there will be no increase in the funds available to spend for the coming year. Increases in the student government and Hall Presidents' Council budgets are offset by cut-backs in the Student Activities Board and Off-Campus Council budgets.

The proposed increase in the student government budget, explained Healy, is primarily because of additional administrative costs and inflation. Both the secretary and bookkeeper are scheduled for raises based on the standard University rate. More than $59,000 in allocations was proposed by the committee to cover salaries and other administrative costs.

The Hall Presidents' Council tentatively will receive $20,000 in funds, up $2,000 from last year. The reason for the proposed increase is because off-campus will be able to petition for funds from the council for the coming year, said Healy.

Because of the additional opportunity for off-campus representatives to receive student activities fee funds through the HPC, the Off-Campus Council's budget proposal is approximately $1,500 less than last year, he said. The remaining $1,000 in the budget is slated for social activities, while funds coming from HPC will go toward off-campus improvements.

The only additional proposed alteration in the budget is with Student Activities Board funds. More than $10,000 was removed from last year's $111,000 figure in this year's budget proposal.

Last week the Notre Dame Board of Trustees voted on a proposal to increase the student activities fee by $15, however, the board has not released a statement about whether this proposal passed. Healy explained that even if the increase did pass their proposed budget would not be effected. If the increase did pass "that money would go to Joni Neal and the Student Activities Office," Healy added.

Approximately 20 percent of the activities fee is slated to go to the classes and to various campus clubs. The Judicial Board budget also is proposed to remain at last year's figure of $200, according to Healy.

In addition to Healy, Student Activities Board Manager Lee Broussard, Judicial Coordinator Karen Ingwersen, Student Body Vice President Duane Lawrence, HPC Chairman Kevin Howard, and SAB Comptroller Jack Gallagher were a part of the budget committee headed by Student Body Treasurer Eric Parzianello.

Healy said he sees no problem with the proposal being passed by the senate, which will be meeting tonight at 6 in Room 124 of Hayes-Healy Hall.

First Irish Clover Award presented

By DAN McCULLOUGH
News Editor

They may not have been four-leaf clovers but they were four-star performances as far as student government was concerned.

Notre Dame student government presented University Food Services Director William Hickey, Jr., and former student government executive coordinator Doug Wurth, with the Irish Clover Award at a ceremony Friday in Hickey's South Dining Hall office.

The award was established by student government this year to recognize the student and administrator who best served the student body during the past year, according to former Student Body President Rob Bertino.

The Student Senate and the president's cabinet voted Hickey as the faculty/ staff/administrator winner of the award and Wurth as the student award winner.

Senior Fellow Award winner Father Steve Gibson, Notre Dame's Vice President for Business Affairs

Thomas Mason and Director of Community Relations James Roemer were also nominated for the award Hickey received.

Special Projects committee member Aline Gioffre, Student Senator Pat Browne and Sophomore Class President Jim Domagalski were also nominated for the student award.

"This is the first year in what we hope will become an annual tradition," said Bertino. He added he thought the award was an important way of recognizing those students and administrators who work hard for the student body.

Dog survives 1,000 foot fall

Associated Press

ANCHORAGE, Alaska - Kneeland Taylor thought for sure his dog was dead after he watched him plummet 1,000 feet down a steep mountain face and vanish into deep snow.

But five days later, Lucas came home.

The fall had broken two ribs, collapsed a lung and knocked out some teeth, but the 12-year-old mutt somehow found his way down O'Malley Peak to a parking lot at the trail head.

"By almost any definition, it was a miracle," Taylor said Friday.

Lucas plunged over the edge of a cornice of snow April 27 as Taylor and some friends climbed O'Malley Peak, a jagged and snowy 5,000-foot mountain near Anchorage.

"We were up there for an hour looking around," Taylor said Friday. "He was buried, we figured, so we gave him up for dead. I cried a lot and all that, and the next day I went to church."

Thursday, Taylor received a call from a couple who had found Lucas sitting in the parking lot, a few miles from the mountaintop. Taylor figures that Lucas, who has climbed mountains and run marathons with him for years, remembered the parking lot as the staging area for previous climbs.

Shuttle scheduled for noon landing after bout with rat food and feces

Associated Press

SPACE CENTER, Houston - Challenger's astronauts made final runs on their science experiments yesterday and prepared to fire the space shuttle out of orbit for a long fall toward a high-speed landing in California.

They also had another bout with airborne particles of rat food and feces.

Mission commander Bob Overmyer maneuvered the spacecraft yesterday for the first time in six days and reported "no problem at all."

Challenger "felt like a moving machine again," he said.

The maneuver pointed Challenger's nose at the sun and will cause heaters to turn on in the propellant tank of the spacecraft's powerful rocket engines. This prepares the engines for a firing this morning that will drop the spaceship from orbit and start it Earthward.

The spacecraft had been kept stable to allow the astronauts to conduct experiments, such as crystal growth, that require a near-perfect absence of gravity.

Challenger is scheduled to land on a dry lakebed runway at Edwards Air Force Base in California's Mojave Desert at 12:06 p.m. EDT today. It will cross the California coast near Long Beach three minutes before landing, traveling three times faster than sound.

With their science chores nearly completed, the astronauts began to talk of home.

Pilot Bob Gregory said some of the crew had a post-landing request: "A beer might be nice, but all of us want an ice cream with chocolate and strawberries."

Dr. Bill Thornton said the two squirrel monkeys and 24 rats in the Spacelab 3 housed in the shuttle's cargo bay were healthy and seemed to be enjoying the flight. He added about the monkeys: "We're bringing a couple back who are friendlier than when they came up."

But Dr. Norman Thagard and Lodewijk van den Berg put new food trays in the rat cages yesterday and again had to clog vacuum cleaners to battle a cloud of food particles and rat feces that floated out into the science module.

"We still get a lot of debris," Thagard told Mission Control. "They really have to work on this problem of the food tray changeout."

Earlier in the mission, the food tray changeout sent waves of food and feces floating into the cabin, some of which even floated down a tunnel and into the shuttle's flight deck.

The two astronauts wore surgical gowns, masks and gloves for the half-hour cleanup, and Thagard recommended that goggles be added.

Science mission director Joe Cremin said prime objectives had been achieved on most of the 15 experiments aboard Spacelab 3. He said the seven-man crew - which includes two doctors and three scientists - gathered enough science data to fill 50,000 volumes and collected more than 3 million frames of video data.

In addition to growing crystals, the astronauts also took pictures of auroras around both poles, conducted a series of medical experiments, studied the effects of weightlessness on levitated droplets of fluid, collected cosmic ray particles, and analyzed fluid motion in a device that simulated the surfaces of the sun and of Jupiter.

Manmade voice box enables woman to talk

Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS - The "precious gift of speech will come back to Virginia Lacey today in the form of a $20 plastic-and-rubber device implanted in her throat.

For the first time since cancer took her larynx, or voice box, in November, Lacey, 62, of Chicago, will be able to talk without electronic aid.

Soon after losing her larynx, Lacey wrote of her life without speech: "Not active. Inferiority complex. Depressed."

Though the device itself is cheap, surgeons say the procedures necessary to implant it could cost as much as $5,000. But Lacey's bill will be paid by a new institute and its benefactors, who hope to restore the voices of eight indigent patients this year.

Lacey, a widow living on Social Security, is one of more than 60,000 Americans who have had their larynxes removed during surgery for cancer of the throat.

The larynx is a small box of cartilage atop the trachea, or windpipe. It contains the vocal cords, which vibrate under air pressure to produce the sounds of speech. Because the operation requires cutting into the windpipe, surgeons leave a hole in the throat so a patient can breathe.

Lacey will receive her voice back as a gift from the Head and Neck Cancer Rehabilitation Institute. It was established by Eric Blom, a speech pathologist who developed the voice prosthesis in 1978, and his colleagues, Dr. Mark Singer and Dr.

Ronald Hamaker, with the help of donations from former patients, an Indianapolis hospital and a medical supply company.

Before Blom and Singer developed their technique, throat cancer patients had two options for speaking again - using an electrical device held against the throat to produce vibrations or learning to swallow air and speak by burping the air up through the throat.

Blom and Singer's lightweight prosthesis is about two inches long and is inserted in the throat in the hole left by the surgery.

The device needs to be surgically implanted just once, but several times a year it requires replacement. That is done in a fitting in a doctor's office without further surgery.

Blom and Singer have restored the voices of about 400 patients by using it. Other clinics and hospitals also perform the procedure.

The device allows a patient to speak in a hoarse voice, whose quality varies with the individual and depends on the size and resonance of the person's esophagus, said Blom.

The device is manufactured by a division of the American Hospital Supply Corp., which has agreed to give a lifetime supply to patients aided by the institute, Blom said.

He said the institute has raised about $60,000 in its first year, but needs more.

Lacey, in an Indianapolis hospital last week after the first step of the prosthesis procedure was performed, smiled easily as Blom described what he would do during the fitting today.

Lifetime chance of being murdered calculated by Justice Department

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Americans generally have one chance in 133 of being murdered "in an entire lifetime" and black men have a one-in-21 lifetime chance of being slain, the government said yesterday in its first violent crime risk study.

The study by the Bureau of Justice Statistics also concluded that some six million Americans, or roughly three percent of the population over age 12, will likely fall victim each year to robberies, rapes or other assaults.

The bureau, a unit of the Justice Department, also calculated that "in an entire lifetime," the chance of being murdered is one in 133, as contrasted with the one in 10,000 possibility that it might happen this year.

But for black men, it said, there's a one-in-21 lifetime chance of being murdered.

White men have a one-in-131 lifetime chance, white females, one-in-369 lifetime chance; and black females, one chance in 104.

Murders in the United States reached their highest level in 1980 — one victim out of every 10,000 people. The FBI latest Crime Reports, released late last month, showed that murders fell by four percent from 1983 to 1984. Overall, reported crime dropped three percent.

The findings were based in part on five years of National Crime Survey statistics.

The one-in-31 rate for victims of violent crimes other than murder was the rate actually recorded in 1982. But statisticians said they felt it could be extrapolated as a risk factor for this and future years because violent crime incidence rates, excluding murder, "remained generally constant," between 1978 and 1982, the period studied.

The report said that generally, blacks are more likely than whites to be crime victims.

Young adults run a greater risk than the elderly and people in lower income brackets are at greater risk than those in higher income categories while married people are less likely to be victims than single or divorced people, it said.

These assessments were contained in the newly devised "Crime Risk Index," a government indicator of the chance of becoming a violent crime victim.

Steven Schlesinger, the bureau's director, cautioned that the three percent figure on the proportion of Americans likely to be victimized by robbery, assault or rape in a given year probably understates the peril "over a lifetime."

Risk assessments to establish the likelihood that people will be victims of robbery, rape, and assault were based on the bureau's National Crime Survey, which draws conclusions about crime from twice-a-year interviews with some 125,000 randomly selected people.

The risk assessment for murder, however, was based on a separate analysis of coroner and medical examiner reports from 1978 to 1982 to the National Center for Health Statistics.

Theater review

It is said that success knows no bounds. From the hearty reception of the audience at O'Laughlin Auditorium last Friday night, it appears that the Notre Dame/Saint Mary's Theatre's final production of the year, "We Won't Pay! We Won't Pay!" has followed this proverb well — through blurring the boundaries between situational comedy and social commentary.

This combination succeeds through adopting a whimsical attitude towards the uneasy waves of civil strife. The social commentary is not burdensome, but pointed and enlightening.

Without a doubt, the play's jewel is Monica Smith's portrayal of Antonia. Antonia, the wife of a principled but poor factory worker, passes the time by either making ends meet (by any means necessary) or by fabricating tall tales to pacify her child-like, idealistic husband Giovanni (Jack Blakey).

Smith's performance emanates confidence and pulls the play together.

her. Much of her success, however, must be credited to the balance that Blakey's convincing portrayal of the naive conservative adds to her performance.

The capers of Antonia and her friend, Margherita (Anne Marie Borgman) provide most of the action and suspense of the play. It begins when Antonia capitalizes on a rally at the supermarket and takes a load of groceries without paying. Back at her shabby apartment, she relates the story to Margherita and persuades her to assist in "the coverup." The inevitable vaudeville-style chase ensues.

Peter Hendrickson lends his versatility and talent in portraying the Sergeant, the Lieutenant, Giovanni's father and the undertaker; Giovanni repeatedly marvels at how alike each of these characters look. He tells his best friend, Luigi (Michael Grant), that the phenomenon reminds him of a cheap production company he has seen which didn't have enough actors. This tongue-in-cheek humor typifies the mood of "We Won't Pay!"

Despite the lightheartedness, there is a serious political undercurrent. The theme of government over-involvement and the establishment's suppression of the masses is pervasive. The characters are living under the shabbiest of conditions, and struggling for mere survival.

Luigi strikes a climax when he turns to stealing himself. This uncharacteristic action marks his transition from a blind loyalist to one who has a sense of his own political efficacy and social responsibility. This could have been the most meaningful moment of the play — had it not received such a disappointingly shallow treatment.

The play on the whole, however, provides a night of lighthearted humor and fast-paced entertainment. "We Won't Pay!", through not entirely successful in its focus, manages to combine the rancor of situational comedy with the relevance of social commentary.

Those staying for commencement week will have the opportunity to see final performances on May 16 or 17, at 8 p.m.

Strange days indeed

Prepare for your final lesson.

See the Golden Dome. Now that you have spent a whole year in its shadow, you certainly have become much wiser in the ways of Du Lac. You also should have your priorities straight by now, and given the choice on a cool May afternoon of soaking in sunshine and Stroh's or studying for your history final, you should know which road to take.

See the dining halls lurking on opposite sides of the campus. Lurk, lurk, lurk. Now you really know why people smile as they leave the dining halls. Are they smiling because the food was yummy and scrumptious? Are they smiling because they couldn't get enough? No, they are smiling because they are getting out of the darn place.

See the handicapped ramps leading in and out of the dining halls. In the winter people go sprawling all over them. Sprawl, sprawl, sprawl. Sometimes, when people fall they will emit cries of pain. Now you know why they are called handicapped ramps. People become handicapped when trying to use them.

See the Hammes Notre Dame Bookstore sitting innocently between Badin and Walsh. Why does it have such a fancy name? Because it sells things at fancy prices. Also because alumni and tourists are impressed by fancy names and they will pay very high prices to get souvenirs that say Notre Dame on them.

See the Notre Dame Credit Union. Although it says Notre Dame on it, it is not for sale. But you would not want to buy it anyway. The Credit Union is a very dangerous place. It wants your money. If you ever want to see your money again, do not let the Credit Union have it. They charge you for everything. Charge, charge, charge. If you are not careful, they may charge you for admission.

Do you see the student government offices? They are on the second floor of LaFortune. Strange things happen in student government. Things are going topsy-turvy all the time. If you enjoy a good destruction derby, you will enjoy student government. There are very few rules. Sometimes, you can even make them up as you go along. And the best thing is, very few people really care whether you do or not.

Do you smell something? Is it unpleasant? Does it remind you of the time Spotty lost control on the carpet? Or the liver your mother made you eat last summer? It is the aroma of ethanol, and you should be used to it by now. Ethanol is a very wonderful thing. It makes you happy. Happy that you live somewhere else.

See the soon-to-be Yuppies strutting about. Strut, strut, strut. They are spreading. Soon they will be everywhere. It is a very scary thought. Don't let their innocent manner fool you. If you are in their professional way they will stomp right over you. Beware of a Yuppie who has just encountered a broken rung on the ladder of success. This is a very traumatic event for a Yuppie. They wonder what happened since they did everything right. Can you say "failure?" Most Yuppies are not psychologically able to handle it.

See the cockroaches scurrying about your room. Scurry, scurry, scurry. They already have spread. They already are everywhere. But unlike Yuppies, cockroaches will be around forever. And to tell you the truth, I would rather have a roomful of cockroaches than a roomful of Yuppies.

Review your notes over the course of the last year. You are probably very familiar with the word "no" by now. This is the word that comes down all the time from the bigwigs who work in the Dome. Get used to hearing this word. You will hear it again when you are a senior and looking for a job, and you will continue to hear this word for the rest of your life.

See the seniors who are graduating. They have been here for four long, boring years. They have gone through four South Bend winters. They never had a real student center. They never saw Notre Dame win a national championship. For this they should be respected. Seniors are often very happy. They have their priorities straight. They have lots of fun. Fun, fun, fun. Soon their relationships with Notre Dame will be history.

If you have a job, the Real World is not such a bad place. If you have a job and enjoy it, the Real World is even better. And if you are fortunate enough someday to not have to get a job, you will almost certainly enjoy that, and in that case, the Real World is one easy cakewalk.

See how everything hinges on whether or not you have a job. Hinge, hinge, hinge. Whose fault is that? Not mine.

See the parents coming to Notre Dame to see their sons and daughters graduate. Don't they look proud? Don't they look excited? Of course they do. You'd be excited too if you had one less mouth to feed. See the parents roam the campus like ants. Roam, roam, roam. They are more excited than their sons and daughters. They are practically jumping up and down. Why? Because now that their offspring are graduating, they won't have continue giving arms and legs in order to keep the Golden Dome's accounts payable department happy.

See the seniors at commencement. They are breathing collective sighs of relief. Breathe, breathe, breathe. They have experienced this feeling many times before. They experience it and the end of every year. But this one is different. For many of them, this is the last time. But do they care? Of course not. They have learned from South Bend and Notre Dame that things can change at a moment's notice, just like that.

Class dismissed.

An extremely happy tale of very trusting parents

"The only way to make a man trustworthy is to trust him; and the surest way to make him untrustworthy is to distrust him and show your distrust."

— Henry Lewis Stimson

Once upon a time, in a land called Camelot, there lived a boy who had the good fortune to be his parents' first-born. He knew that he would be expected to handle more responsibility than his younger brother and sisters, and it was this responsibility to blaze his own trail that he enjoyed a great deal.

Mike Sullivan

on 24-hour call

Now this boy worked hard in school and was blessed with enough intelligence to do very well. He did well enough, in fact, that, when he reached the end of high school, he was allowed to go to the school of his choice. A school with a great golden dome lighting the sky in good weather and bad, a school with beautiful lakes and a wonderfully quiet place where he could light candles and spend some time thinking.

And even though his high image of the school was sometimes tarnished during his four-year stay, the golden dome would always be bright, the candles would always be flickering and the Blessed Mother would always be looking down on him and his schoolmates.

The boy also realized that his parents, although they had waved goodbye and left him alone at the place with the golden dome in hopes that he would learn to make his own decisions without having them around to help him, never really had abandoned him to fend for himself. The bills were paid by his father who was willing to cash in life insurance policies to give him and his siblings the best education possible, and his mother was always around to give him advice if he needed it.

But as the four years quickly went by, the boy, who was just as quickly becoming a man, began to realize that there was something his parents had done that was much more important than paying the bills. They had shown him they trusted him to make the correct decisions in their absence - something that meant a great deal to him.

Never had his parents told him what decision to make, even though he had made some wrong choices before, because they realized that he would never learn if he did not make some mistakes to learn from, and that he would never be able to totally trust anyone else or himself, if he was not trusted.

At first, the boy fully did not realize how much his parents' trust meant to him, but as he met schoolmates - some of them friends, some not - that were not really trusted by their parents, he began to realize how much his parents' trust meant to him.

He saw how a friend or two never could really trust him, even though he did nothing to make them distrust him. He saw people who didn't trust their roommates and friends enough to tell them what was on their minds. He saw people who ended up declaring majors or going into fields that they didn't want to because their bill-paying parents "suggested" they do it. He saw friends who never were able to grow up and be themselves because they were too busy being something they felt they were expected to be.

The boy-turned-man gradually came to realize that, although his parents were 600 miles away, they were doing something for him every time he made a choice, whether right or wrong, just by trusting him to make the decision on his own. He knew that he would never be able to thank them adequately, but he felt that he didn't really need to, because, unlike himself, his parents knew what was going on from the start.

Finally, there came a time when the man-who-once-was-a-boy was a few weeks away from leaving the place with the golden dome forever. He knew that he could have gotten higher grades and he knew that he could have received a good job offer with a good salary. He also knew that he had caused himself unnecessary hardships by making some bad choices.

But he also knew that he was ready for any situation, no matter how tough, that he would face in the world beyond Camelot and the golden dome. Of course, he had his trusting parents to thank for that.

And they all lived happily ever after.

'Where two are three are gathered' at Notre Dame

Notre Dame is a Catholic university. As a university, it must be concerned with the intellectual growth of its students. As a Catholic institution, it must be concerned with their spiritual growth as well.

Mike Ialacci

Carroll corner

Notre Dame has realized its need to provide spiritual guidance for its students. The PACE report states "Young people need more guidance in forming their conscience and greater encouragement to live the lives Christ taught us to live."

The best way to teach Christ's message is to live Christ's message. Christ himself taught words must be backed by action, and he himself backed his teachings through his love for his people - eventually played out his death through dying on a cross.

Notre Dame needs individuals who not only profess God's message but live it as well. Students need to come in contact with such men and women in the classroom, in the administration and in the dormitory. When Notre Dame acquires such people, she should hold them with hoops of steel.

Unfortunately for Notre Dame and for her students, one man who has selflessly walked the way of Christ will not be here next year. I speak of Father Steve Gibson.

Father Steve, as everyone affectionately calls him, is a man with a vision. He believes the students under his charge are no longer children but men. He treats them with respect. He gives them responsibility. He trusts them. And most importantly, he loves them.

As an insecure and lonely freshman, I came to know and respect Father Steve. His love was demonstrated by his actions. He worked all summer to create a comfortable social space at Carroll where there was none before. He built an ice rink. He opened up a barber-shop.

Yet it was not simply his selfless dedication that touched me, but his genuine concern for his students. He wanted to help us. Many a time he has stuck out his neck for students. He has given many a second chance. He has been accessible and compassionately moved by our problems. Whenever I was confused or troubled, I sought his advice.

From his dedication to his students, from his selflessness, a community sprouted at Carroll Hall like a lily in a desert. Carroll Hall had been an incoherent and disparate group of individuals. Now it was a home.

At Carroll Hall there exists a mutual love and admiration that is rare at any institution anywhere. Such a community is the epitome of Catholicism. "Wherever two or three are gathered in my name, there I am," Christ said. We at Carroll Hall are gathered in his name.

To disrupt the Carroll community would be to wound the Christian guidance Notre Dame so yearns for. Yet we at Carroll Hall are losing more than an able administrator. We are losing a friend whom we love. Please keep Father Steve.

Professor Rogers turned life into a work of art

Toward the end of my freshman year, I was struggling to make a decision about my major. I heard of a different-sounding major called the Program of Liberal Studies and decided to go to an informational meeting.

The principal speaker at this meeting was a program professor named Stephen Rogers. His message was not a pitch, but rather a simple invitation. He invited those present to join a community of learners dedicated to the best that had been "thought and said in the world." I remember being impressed with what he said about the program. But, more than this, I remember how soothing Rogers' words were. In my state of indecision, he salved my anxieties and charmed my heart and my mind. By the end of his talk, I had decided to enroll in the program.

Stephen Rogers died the Friday before last.

As a former student of his, I feel compelled to share a little of the man who shared so much with this University.

When I think of Rodgers I recall the Samuel Butler quotation that "Life is the art of drawing sufficient conclusions from insufficient premises." Rogers celebrated life, and he made the art that Butler described his vocation. It was with a singular joy that he nurtured those who pursued this art with him, and it was with an amazing dedication that he seemed to turn his own life into a work of art.

His art was affected by his experience. Blind since his youth, Rogers carried out his life and his work in the face of this profoundly insufficient premise. I often marveled at how a man with no sight could so brilliantly treat the many books we read in the program. I had the advantage of sight, and I could not even keep up with the material.

Rogers exhibited an extraordinary sensitivity to human suffering. Gentle by nature, he was well acquainted with the distress that we all feel in the face of our insufficient premises. He often told a story about how, in taking a cab to the University one day, he had asked to be let off at the Law School, but had in fact been let off somewhere else. Alone and confused, he was faced with the challenge of collecting himself and trying to figure out where he was.

He told his students that life confronts us all with similar predicaments. They are at times humorous (Rogers was the first to laugh at his miscues), at times exhilarating, at times wearying and at times terrifying. Rogers, it seemed, could not bring himself to blame anyone for slipping up in trying to make sense of it all.

He believed it took much courage to live with one's doubts and mistakes, and to attend to the truth of one's existence - however confusing it may be - as that truth presented itself.

When one of Rogers' students felt especially down, he was glad to see him. Rogers gave students a reason to believe in themselves, no matter what the difficulty. I often thought "If a man as wise as he can believe in me in spite of all my ignorance, then perhaps I ought to believe in myself too."

He believed in people not in spite of their ignorance, but because of it. He knew that a student struggling with the big questions would often feel inadequate. This, to him, was a sign of what he liked to call the "spark of genius" in a person - the unique quality of those trying to turn their life into a work of art. He was ever ready to help his students through disappointment and failure, so they could face future challenges with confidence and hope.

From Rogers, I learned that while we all are saddled with imperfection and doubt, we can turn these facts of our existence around and make them work in our favor. Indeed, it was his belief that we could make them life-promoting rather than life-threatening. As human beings, he thought that we were all called to this task.

And, in our best moments, he believed that we could turn this into a work of art.

Vernon Marchal is a senior in the Program of Liberal Studies and is a regular Viewpoint columnist.

Quote of the day

"Outta here."

- Sir Obnoxious

Do not perpetuate suffering, but prevent it

An analogy was told to me recently, and as it applies to the world situation today, I would like to share it with you. It concerns injustice. It concerns horror. It concerns life as we know it.

Once upon a time there was a housewife.

David Kroeger

Wednesday's child

She was a woman of strong morals and strong convictions. She was a friend to everyone and would often go out of her way to be generous to strangers. This woman had everything - a large home, a large family and a wonderful husband.

Then, for some unknown reason, things began to go wrong. The woman's husband was killed in a tragic car accident caused by a drunken driver. The housewife was distraught. She did not know what to do or to whom to turn to receive an explanation for such a horrible event. So, she devised an explanation on her own.

The housewife began to accuse the man who had caused the accident. She said he was an evil man who had no right to live. She realized, of course, that it was ridiculous to think that anyone was inherently evil, but common sense began to slip away after she began to tell everyone else of her misfortune. The woman became possessed with the idea that this man must never again be allowed in public, much less on the street, and she used the resources of her family to punish him as best she could.

Soon, the man died. Yet the housewife still refused to believe that he no longer threatened her. She even hated the man after his death, and could not forgive him. She cried and cried for her husband to come back to her, hoping in some way, I suppose, that the hatred that she bore inside her would somehow bring her dead husband back to life. To friends, relatives and bums on the street she preached her belief that drunken drivers were inherently evil people and that drunken driving should be stopped. She believed that she was doing the public a great service by keeping the horrid man who had killed her husband six feet under the ground. Yes, that would certainly stop drunken driving.

Meanwhile, the woman entertained a great many sympathizers and well-wishers in her home. Five years passed and she still continued to extoll the evil of the man now long dead in the cemetery. Those who visited her were sensitive to her grief and allowed her to go on with the thought that she would eventually come back to her senses and get on with her life. They began to shut out the repetition and nodded along with her, seeming to agree.

The housewife was still at a loss, though. She decided to found a commission on how her husband was allowed to die. She even built a monument to her husband. The car in which he had died was bronzed and placed in a large park created in the back yard of her house. By this time, ten years had passed and visitors could still expect the same lecture except that now a guided tour of the memorial was included.

After twenty years, visitors began to be fewer in number. Some suggested that the housewife carry her cause to help others who had lost loved ones due to drunken drivers. The housewife, however, could not accept the fact that millions of others were dying in accidents caused by drunken drivers. They were of little importance in comparison with her husband. She was indignant that anyone would think that her work was incomplete. "Respect the dead!" she cried. Meanwhile, the millions kept dying while the housewife spent her time pruning the shrubbery in the memorial.

Finally, the 40th anniversary of her husband's death came. News came to the housewife that someone was putting flowers on the grave of the man whom she had hated for so long. She flew into a rage and publicized her belief that the flowers should not be laid on the grave. "But, he is a human just like us," came the reply. And now the housewife, who had spent so many years telling herself that this man was evil, refused to believe such an explanation.

She thought that the flowers should be laid on her husband's grave, as her husband was a far better man and he deserved sympathy far more than the sinning drunken driver. She went to the person who wanted to lay flowers on the sinner's grave and insisted on an explanation, at which point she was told, "You have spent so much time worrying about your husband that you have ignored others who have died because of the same thing. There is enough suffering in the world; do not perpetuate it, prevent it." With that the person turned and went back to his home. The housewife left too, presumably to prune the shrubs and to entertain what few visitors she had left.

Law students support retiring ND professor

Dear Editor:

Law school Professor Charles Crutchfield is retiring next month.

For ten years, Crutchfield worked very hard to establish two unique law school courses.

The Street Law Program sends law students to teach high schoolers their rights, duties and responsibilities in our legal system.

Public Interest Law is the other course Crutchfield has developed over the past decade. This course instructs future lawyers in working for the public good - a true rarity in law schools these days.

Unfortunately, there is a movement afoot to undo what Crutchfield has worked so hard to establish. The administration of the Notre Dame Law School is seeking to either cancel or gut these courses for questionable reasons. This is very disturbing, as these are truly great courses, and more importantly, these courses most emulate the altruistic spirit for which Notre Dame and the legal profession are supposed to stand.

We are sad to see Crutchfield go, but we will not idly watch the dismemberment of his life's work.

We, the undersigned law students, protest any move to alter these courses, urge that these courses remain exactly as currently structured and challenge the dean of the law school to reveal his plans before the school year ends.

Raises questions about ISO's election results

Dear Editor:

The International Student Organization serves an obvious purpose; to stand as a voice for those visiting our country. For this reason, several questions need to be raised concerning the ISO's recent election of officers.

Why was the election held on a different date than specified in the ISO constitution? Why did only thirty people receive notification of this change in time to vote? Why did the former administration oversee the elections instead of the election committee stipulated by the constitution? And, finally, why is the new president an American? But why should I be surprised? I understand the same things take place in South Africa.

National MS chairman wishes to thank campus

Dear Editor:

On behalf of The National Multiple Sclerosis Society, I want to congratulate the student body of Notre Dame and two very special and important people, Aline Goffre and Vince Willis. As chairman of the board, I want all of the students on your campus to know how much the society values your involvement in leading the fight against MS.

The University of Notre Dame campaign has helped to set the pace for college campuses nationwide. As the most successful of the original 12 universities in the program, students in every state can look to your campus as the pioneer of this fight. When the MTV concert is broadcast next month, everyone in South Bend can be proud that the nation's eyes are focused on you.

Notre Dame's excellence has confirmed a belief that college students would want to become involved with the society because multiple sclerosis is a young adult's disease, striking just when you begin to build your adult life. I know firsthand how this disease affects young adults as my daughter, who is 36, has had MS for 14 years.

I have been involved in the Students Against Multiple Sclerosis program from the time it was just an idea to last Saturday night's concert. Seeing the overwhelming success of the program on your campus gives our organization hope that the cause and cure of Multiple Sclerosis can be found. Notre Dame's achievements have helped to insure that we will be able to raise the funds necessary to achieve this goal. I have no doubt that your generation will be able to claim it put multiple sclerosis behind us.

Let the South Bend Symphony play for all

Dear Editor:

It is similar to the mentality your mother used to rely on to get you to eat broccoli, and it still holds true. If you do not try the South Bend Symphony, you will never know whether or not you will like it.

After all, 1500 subscribers last season could not be wrong. Not to mention that out of 14 concerts scheduled for the 1985-86 season, surely everyone can find at least one to suit his or her taste.

Why, then, do the words "Symphony Orchestra," continue to frighten people away? Many students do not even realize that South Bend has a symphony, or else they feel that the Symphony has nothing to offer them.

A common misconception is that the Symphony only performs classical concerts. Granted, those whose ears have never experienced anything other than AC/DC might find the Symphony quite different, yet not unenjoyable.

Rarely does a symphony offer only a classical season, including the South Bend Symphony. This upcoming 85-86 season will feature three very different programs which appeal to many different types of people. For the classical lovers, the Symphony has scheduled seven concerts featuring guest artists from Cho-Liang Lin to our own Notre Dame faculty member, Karen Buranskas.

If classical music is not your style, the Symphony has begun a Sunday afternoon Chamber Orchestra series. One of the highlights of this series will be the performance of Handel's "Messiah" in December. Laura Klugherz, another familiar Notre Dame faculty member will be a featured guest in February.

The four Sunday night Pops concerts will be "Pops Laugh-In," "Fiedler's Favorites," "Big Band Sounds" and "Broadway Salute." The Pops concerts are always a guaranteed good time and sure to get you in the mood for more.

There are not good excuses for not trying the Symphony. You think it is too expensive? By arriving fifteen minutes before a concert, a student can receive a $3 Rush Seat to sit anywhere in the balcony. It is cheaper than taking a date to a movie, and more impressive, too. Season tickets for the three series run between $25 and $36 for reserved student tickets.

There is no reason not to take time out for culture. Let the South Bend Symphony play for you.

ND Credit Union still is not justified to start fee

Dear Editor:

I want to personally thank the 1,500 people who signed the petition protesting the new service charge by the Notre Dame Credit Union.

I have sent out letters to Chairman of the Board Richard Thompson and to the Director of the Supervisory Board Daniel Osberger. On Thursday May 2, I met with the president of NDCU. She told me what Amy Stephan wrote in last Wednesday's Observer article - that banks without service charges are the exception, not the rule - is accurate. Believe it or not, the charges are reasonable compared to other banking institutions. St. Joseph's Bank, 1st Source Bank, and American Valley Bank have a $5 service charge for accounts under $500.

Most of us do not earn any interest on our deposits, so what it comes down to is that the Credit Union holds our money for free.

Now, they want to charge us money for this. I think it would be better to start hiding our money in our mattresses. This would provide easy access, more security and no service charges.

Notre Dame finishes third in MLA

By MIKE SULLIVAN
 Sports Writer

After winning the Midwest Lacrosse Association championship last season, the Notre Dame lacrosse team hoped to go for two straight. But it found that to be a much tougher task than taking the first title as the Irish were knocked off the MLA throne following a 9-7 (7-2 in the MLA) season that ended with an easy 15-6 victory at Michigan State Saturday.

The Irish end the season in third place in the conference behind champion Denison and Ohio Wesleyan, both of whom will probably compete in the Division III national championship, leaving Notre Dame the small satisfaction of winning the Great Lakes division of the MLA.

The 1985 schedule was definitely Notre Dame's toughest since lacrosse became a varsity sport five years ago.

However, the season was not a total disappointment as the team came within six goals of Loyola (Md.), one of the top teams in the nation, and several players had outstanding individual performances. Senior attackman Bob Trocchi ended his three-year Irish career with 143 points (84 goals and 59 assists) to break the school career scoring record, while defenseman Justin Shay and goalie Rob Simpson finished their careers as four-year starters.

Women hope to advance to finals

By MARY SIEGER
 Sports Writer

Finals is a dirty word to everyone at Notre Dame. Everyone except the Notre Dame women's tennis team which hopes to advance to the final round of the NCAA Division II National Championship Tournament tomorrow.

After all the long months of frustration, hard work and dedication, the Irish are determined to leave Bakersfield, Calif., Wednesday morning with nothing less than the national title.

"We're excited about going and if we can get to the finals, we're guaranteed second place," said Notre Dame head coach Sharon Petro. "We must play our best tennis to get the National Championship. I ask my players to give me their best and I know they will."

Seeded second in the two-day tournament, Notre Dame stands a strong chance of upsetting two-time National Champions University of Tennessee-Chattanooga. While Tennessee is playing in top form this season to compile an 18-1 spring record, the Irish go onto the courts this afternoon after completing their most successful season in their nine-year history, posting a 24-4 overall record.

"I think we can win it this year," said Irish co-captain Lisa LaFratta. "I didn't feel we really wanted it last year like we do this year. We've beaten a lot of teams this year we've not beaten before and we're playing better."

In first-round action today, the Irish face Abeline Christian College and will face the winners of the contest between Moorhead State University and Cal-Poly Pomona in the semi-final round. Since Notre Dame defeated both Moorhead State and Cal-Poly Pomona during the regular season, the Irish expect to meet arch-rival Tennessee in the finals.

"We have the desire to win it and we may be able to catch Tennessee off guard since they won it last year," said LaFratta. "I want to go out winning because it would be a nice way of leaving."

Last year, the Irish finished third at the National Tournament after dropping a tough match to Tennessee, 6-3, in the semi-final round. With the score tied, 3-3, at the end of the singles competition, the Irish struggled to challenge Tennessee's claim to the National Championship during the doubles.

Since this week's tournament is the farewell appearance for both Notre Dame and Tennessee in the NCAA Division II, claiming the National title is critical for both teams. Next year, both squads advance to the NCAA Division I.

ND's other "man on record" ended Saturday's competition right on ground-level - Chris Matteo set a meet standard with his 14-foot, six-inch effort in the pole vault.

Other record-breakers in the meet included Neil Reilly of Aquinas, with a 153-foot, nine-inch effort in the discus throw, and Kerry Sloan, with a time of 53.34 seconds in the intermediate hurdles.

For Notre Dame, other winning performances in the meet were turned in by John McNelis in the 400, Nick Sparks in the 800, and Autry in the long jump.

"We were missing a lot of talent, but let's not take anything away from Marquette," said Irish coach Joe Piane. "We had some disappointing performances and Marquette ran very well. And they won the race that they needed to win to take the meet."

In that race, Marquette's time of 3:18.9 was less than a second better than Notre Dame's. The Warrior relay team consisted of Mark Carey, Tim Robinson, Phil Logan, and Kevin Jacopin.

Marquette was led by Tracy Brown, a sprinter who nipped Irish freshman Tony Ragunas in the 100 and 200, and then anchored the 400-relay team to a victory. The Warriors' Keith Hanson won the steeplechase in a meet-record time of 8:59.38, and added a win in the 5000.

The Warriors also got victories from James Orthman in the 10,000, Paul Nowakowski in the in the shot put, Steve Redmond in the javelin, Dave Kaluzny in the 1,500, and Pat Weas in the high hurdles. Nowakowski's toss of 51 feet, 3.5 inches set a meet record for the shot put event.

Notre Dame will now begin preparation for the IC4A Championships, which will take place May 19-20 at Villanova University.

Ends hopes for 2nd straight title

Belles fall to Grace College, 9-0

By KELLY PORTOLESE
Saint Mary's Sports Editor

The hopes of obtaining a second state championship were dashed for six seniors on the Saint Mary's softball team over the weekend when the Belles dropped a 9-1 decision to Grace College in the losers bracket of the NAIA District 21 Tournament on Saturday, in Indianapolis.

"We had a super season," said Head Coach Scott Beisel of the Belles' sparkling 23-9 season-ending slate.

"We came out strong in the first game (against Anderson), and had a few injuries.

"We just tried too hard (this weekend). We didn't swing the bat like we normally do. I felt sorry for the seniors who took state as freshmen. I was hoping they could go out the same way they came in. We will really miss this group. I'm very proud of the whole team," concluded Beisel.

The Belles opened play on Friday with an 18-5 victory over Anderson College, but fell to a strong Franklin College team just a few hours later, 17-2.

Junior standout Cathy Logsdon

suffered a twisted knee in the sixth inning against Anderson, but due to prior commitments of freshman pitcher Betty Mihalik, Logsdon pitched in all three games.

Despite the weekend's two losses, Logsdon still finished with a career-best 14-3 record.

Sophomore catcher Janine Adamo earned first-team All-District honors, while seniors Trish Nolan and Teresa McGinnis were named to the All-District Honorable Mention team.

In the final game, against Grace, whom Saint Mary's split with earlier in the season, the Belles were only able to push one run across the entire game. In the bottom of the fourth inning Nolan stroked a double to deep left field, and advanced to third on a single by Adamo. Senior Katy Boldt then laid down a perfect bunt to squeeze Nolan across the plate for the lone score.

Grace tallied runs in five of seven innings, capitalizing on five Saint Mary's errors. Grace, on the other hand, played perfect defense.

Senior Barb Theiss finished the game with two singles in three at-bats.

Grace, seeded third, went on to lose to No. 1-ranked Indiana University-Purdue University at Indianapolis in the championship game.

On Friday, Adamo and senior Elaine Suess swung big bats in the winning and losing causes against Franklin and Anderson Colleges, respectively. Suess connected on six of eight at-bats for five singles and a triple for the day, bringing home four runs against Anderson. Adamo rapped two singles and two doubles, also sending four runners home in the two-game effort.

The second ranked Belles opened their tournament play at 3 p.m. on Friday against Anderson, the eighth seeded team.

Boldt was credited with the save in the 18-5 win, while Logsdon, who fired a six-hitter and walked and struck out one before sustaining her injury, earned the victory.

For graduating seniors McGinnis, Nolan, Suess, Theiss, Mary Lynn Mulcahy and Tracey Bowman, the goal of claiming a repeat state crown was not realized, but after compiling an outstanding 48-14 record the past two seasons, the class of '85, along with its supporting cast, has left its mark in softball circles around the state and has much to be proud of.

Youth spell bright future for Notre Dame sports

The 1984-85 Notre Dame athletic season, which ends sometime this month, has been the most interesting year of the past four for Irish sports. There were, as usual, a number of disappointments, but there were also some nice surprises.

Depending on your frame of reference, you can argue that it was a good or bad year. If you were hoping for a major bowl bid for the football team, or a Division I national championship, this year was a disappointment. But, if you were looking for some new faces or new teams to show hope for the future, then 1984-85 was Notre Dame's best of recent years.

It would be very easy for a senior like myself to be negative about not just this year, but the past three as well. After all, most seniors feel pretty disappointed about the lack of success of Notre Dame teams, especially the football and basketball teams, during their time here. But the 1984-85 season showed too many promising signs for the future to be considered a bad year.

In fact, this past year may turn out to be a very important one for Notre Dame athletics, because it may have been the year that saw the Irish athletic program and fans begin to climb from the hole into which they had sunk for the past few years.

There is probably no better sign for the future than the enthusiasm of the freshmen and sophomores in the face of the cynical attitude that has infected most of the juniors and seniors. Nothing demonstrated this more than the Penn State football game where the freshmen and sophomores poured out on the field - in a very orderly fashion - after the game while the juniors and seniors stayed up in the stands and watched.

Mike Sullivan

Sports Writer

This wasn't the only time that the younger classes seemed to show the life that the upperclassmen once had but have lost through three poor years. Even in basketball, where in the past seniors and juniors had made up most of the crowd, the freshmen and sophomores bought a large portion of the tickets. With David Rivers coming back, next year's ticket sales should be huge.

Everywhere you look, things are looking up for the future well-being of Notre Dame athletics. The men's basketball program appears to be in good hands with people like Rivers and Donald Royal, while the women's program should also do well behind this year's group of freshmen and next fall's incoming class.

The women's basketball program isn't the only relatively new program that should enjoy success in the next few years, either. The volleyball and wrestling programs have new coaches and a new aim of competing with the nation's best teams, while the cross-country team has already reached that point. The fencing and women's tennis teams, both of which regularly are fighting for the national championship, should also continue doing well, even though the tennis team will be moving up to Division I next year.

All in all, it looks like some bright years are ahead for Notre Dame sports. This, of course, is no consolation for those of us who won't be around here to enjoy the success in person, but I wouldn't wish the past four years of disappointments on anybody. So it's nice to know that things will be looking up for many of the students here.

What the underclassmen need to remember is to keep their enthusiasm no matter what happens on the field. Losing is rarely fun, but it is only as bad as you make it. People around here seem to realize now that a football or basketball game is nothing more than that, not a reason for the campus to go into mourning. Just remember that home football weekends and Notre Dame-UCLA basketball games are things you cannot enjoy entirely once you've graduated, so it makes no sense to make them a life-or-death event.

A former sports editor once had a farewell message that was, "Take your sports seriously." If I had to leave one, it would be, "Enjoy your sports." Sports, whether you're watching or participating, are important in that they are an ideal non-violent (well, fairly non-violent) form of tension release. However, they are nothing more. Football, basketballs, hockey pucks, whatever - they were invented with enjoyment in mind. Whether a person is a good athlete or goes to a school with a great football team is not enough reason to make sports anything less than enjoyable.

where we were going to be playing was the biggest highlight of the season," he says, "because I know there was a lot of doubt of us making it as far as we did. That was one of my goals: to come in here and lead Notre Dame to the NCAA, if not all the way."

Rivers also pointed to the 53-52 Irish victory over UCLA in Pauley Pavilion and the Notre Dame student body's reaction to that win as another high point in his season.

The lowest point in the young player's career came at the end of the season, he says. In the final seconds of Notre Dame's second tournament game, Rivers had the ball and the Irish had a chance to break a tie game for the victory.

When Rivers dribbled the ball off his foot, however, Notre Dame ended up on the short end of a 60-58 score.

"You take things like that in stride," Rivers says. "If I'm going to be the best, I have to take the bad with the good because that's a part of being the best."

Rivers had more than a few opportunities to mature as a player last season, and he says he has gained a lot of experience.

Keys

What the former Indiana Miss Basketball did was to lead the Irish in points, shooting 52 percent from the field and 70 percent from the free-throw line, as well as dishing off 67 assists. Keys currently has 1,002 points over her career, placing her at No. 4 on the all-time Irish scoring chart.

It was on the defensive end of the court, however, where Keys really improved to an MVP level. She responded well to a move to the guard position this season, as she recorded 37 steals and 43 blocked shots. Her solid play on defense helped the Irish finish among the top 20 teams in the NCAA in scoring defense.

Finally, Keys proved to observers that she could, indeed, translate all of that potential with which she had entered the program into tangible gains for head coach Mary DiStasio's squad.

"I think in the past two years I was inconsistent," says Keys. "Some games I'd play well and some games I wouldn't. But we talked about my role on the team, and I decided it was only a matter of working hard. I had better conditioning over the summer and that really helped my overall game."

In fact, there were very few disappointments for Keys this year. She can think of only one - the Irish barely missed a trip to the NCAA tournament. That, and not any further personal gains, is what Keys is hoping for next season.

For now, though, Keys seems content just to accept her 1985 Edward W. "Moose" Krause Award and follow 1984 graduate and tennis player Pam Fischette as claimants to the annual award.

Next year, it may be herself that she follows in accepting the award.

Irish thrash Illinois-Chicago, 9-0, to finish 17-12

By CHUCK FREEBY
Sports writer

Chicago may be the "city of big shoulders", and it may be the "hog butcher of the world", but it certainly will not be deemed as a mecca of collegiate tennis in the near future. The Notre Dame men's tennis team quickly proved that fact Saturday morning at the Courtney Tennis Center, extinguishing the Flames of Illinois-Chicago, 9-0, in the season finale.

The visitors from the Windy City only brought five players, and as it turned out they may as well have stayed home and saved their change for another trip on the toll road. This may not have been the strongest tennis team Irish coach Tom Fallon has ever had, but it was still composed of individuals who could hold a tennis racket, which seemed to be all that was necessary to knock off Illinois-Chicago. Every match was decided in straight sets, as the Irish closed their spring with a record of 17-12.

Although disappointed by failing to net his seventh consecutive 20-win season, Fallon was still pleased with the play of his young Irish squad overall. "I think our biggest problem was our doubles play," commented Fallon. "Our doubles combinations just never gelled, and we lost a lot of 5-4 matches because of that. We did well though, and with a year of experience, we'll have a good bunch of players next year to mix with a good crop of recruits."

It will be hard to outdo this year's freshmen, as Fallon was pleasantly surprised with the play of first-year performers Dan Walsh and Paul Daggs. Daggs got a chance to sit back and watch on Saturday, winning his match at sixth singles by forfeit to finish at 21-11 for the spring. Walsh didn't take long to join Daggs in the bleachers, defeating Ivan Salazar, 6-0, 6-0 to also finish at 21-11 at No. 3 singles.

"The biggest surprise was Walsh at number-three," notes Fallon. "Without much notoriety, Dan came in and had a real good year for us, as did Paul Daggs. I think both of those players have a real bright future in our program."

While Fallon thinks ahead, he also had to look back on the past this week, as seniors Mike Gibbons and Dave Obert closed out their careers in style. Gibbons, who has been one of the most consistent winners in Irish tennis history, whipped John Mistro, 6-1, 6-2, to close his senior campaign at 23-7. Obert, who played his first season for the Irish this year, had little trouble blazing by Tony Hazel, 6-1, 6-3.

Fallon had nothing but praise for Gibbons. "He has played well ever since he first stepped on the court here. I'm not looking forward to having to replace him next year."

The departure of Gibbons and Obert will make Joe Nelligan the senior member of the '85-'86 Irish netters. Nelligan, who has struggled at the top singles spot this year thanks partly to an ankle problem, finished on an upbeat note by sailing past Darren Cohen, 6-4, 6-1, on Saturday.

"I'm looking forward to next season," states Fallon. "We have four of our top six players coming back and some very good freshmen who should contribute. Hopefully, we'll be able to get back in the 20-win category again."

been lacking in the present administration's handling of athletics on a whole."

And professional? I know of no one who equates professionalism in athletics with telling coaches that they might as well not try to field competitive teams. Yet, according to Trees, Nester told the College's coaches during their first meeting with her this year that "they might as well forget about having a national champion, in terms of a team, and that they could forget about competing on a national level since Saint Mary's was not that kind of school. The College was not going to push for, nor could it obtain athletes of that caliber, so (the coaches) should not even come in and claim that they were going to do really well athletically."

This year the fencing team was not allowed to compete in its national tournament - the first time in Saint Mary's history that this has happened to any athletic team. In addition, the swim team was denied funding for its Christmas training trip. It seems quite contradictory that an administration which claims to be building an athletic program would deny a valuable experience such as nationals to its athletes, or that the same administration would make its athletes pay their own way for a training trip. Yet Saint Mary's is guilty on both counts.

In its explanation to the fencing team, the administration stated that it could not justify the expense because the team probably would not fare too well. In addition, the team was told that its proposal to compete had been submitted too late. Because there is a special budget set aside for all national competition, it seems strange that the expenses could not be justified, especially for a team of only five members. The swim team was denied funding for the simple reason that the department considered the trip unnecessary and would not cover its costs - not so much as a food allowance.

If these expenses could not be justified, then how can Nester, who also coaches tennis, justify the constant string of seemingly unnecessary overnight trips on which she takes the team. Her team should be able to wait until the morning of the match to leave, like all other Saint Mary's teams do the majority of the time.

Former basketball coach Mike Rouse was not granted drivers for his away trips, being told that it had never been included in the budget, this year nor in past years. In resigning, one of the three reasons Rouse cited was the fact that he had had drivers in the past, whether they had actually been in the budget or not. Since then, Nester has justified hiring drivers for most away trips, but if drivers are not in the budget, where is the money coming from to pay for them?

Professionalism also comes into question considering reports of student workers and athletes who have complained about Nester's physical contact with them. "On more than one occasion, students have approached me complaining about (Nester) 'grabbing' them," stated Byrne. What type of professional image can one hope to maintain with actions such as these? There is no place in any administration for this type of behavior.

If Nester really wants to contribute to the Saint Mary's athletic program, she should either act with professionalism in the future, or else offer her resignation.

Rivers, Keys recognized as Athletes of the Year

Jersey City native's talented ball-handling brought excitement to Notre Dame courts

By PHIL WOLF
Assistant Sports Editor

Freshman David Rivers, the exciting point guard for the Irish men's basketball team, has been named Notre Dame's male Athlete of the Year by the sports department of The Observer.

The award, officially named the Edward "Moose" Krause Award, is given each year to one male and one female athlete whom the Observer sports staff sees as having made the most significant impact on his or her respective team. Last year's recipient was basketball player Tom Sluby.

"I think the impact I made on the team came from the guys, the fellows on the team," Rivers says. "They kind of guided me along the way, so I think a lot of the credit should point in their direction."

Rivers' individual performance speaks for itself, however. The 6-0, 170-pounder from Jersey City, N.J., led all scorers for the Irish in the season with a 15.8 points-per-game average. It really was his ballhandling that made the most difference for the Irish, though.

The quick point guard's ability to run the fast break changed the slow, calculated offense of recent Notre Dame basketball teams into a run-and-gun show that often brought ACC (and other) crowds to their feet. In addition, Rivers' talent at penetrating the defense allowed him to create many scoring opportunities for himself and his teammates, and he dished off 127 assists during the season.

The combination of the young point guard and an experienced front line added up to Notre Dame's first NCAA Tournament bid in three years, fulfilling one of Rivers' preseason goals.

Keys guides teammates to NSC title

By MARTY BURNS

Junior guard Trena Keys of the Notre Dame women's basketball team, whose consistent and often spectacular play led the Irish to their most successful season in history, has been named the outstanding female athlete of 1985 by the sports department of The Observer.

The award brings to a close a remarkable season for the Marion, Ind., native and it comes on the heels of her being named the Most Valuable Player for 1985 by the North Star Conference. The 6-1 Keys accomplished the feat by posting a 17.2 points-per-game average and a 5.6 rebounds-per-game mark while leading her Notre Dame team to a 13-1 record (20-8 overall) and its first NSC championship.

"I'm really honored to be selected," says Keys. "I decided over the off-season that I had to do something more for the team this year, and I just worked really hard toward that goal. I have to give a lot of credit to my teammates, though. Without their help, I wouldn't have been able to do what I did."

Marquette edges Irish in MCC championship

By LARRY BURKE
Assistant Sports Editor

The Notre Dame track team lost out to the Warriors of Marquette University by the narrowest of margins in Saturday's Midwest Catholic Championships. Holding a slim two-point lead over the Irish heading into the final event of the meet, the 1600-meter relay, the Warriors pulled out a clutch victory to take the title in the fourth annual MCC's, on Notre Dame's Monogram Track.

Marquette finished with 108 points for the meet, while Notre Dame wound up with 104. Illinois-Benedictine (28 points), Aquinas (25), and DePaul (23) also competed.

The Irish were hampered by the absence of seven of their top competitors, who were participating in the National Invitational meet in Bloomington, Ill. Despite this, Notre Dame athletes established two new meet standards.

Gary LeKander of Notre Dame broke a meet record in the triple-jump with an effort of 47-0. The Irish, in fact, had the top three finishers in that event, as Joel Autry and Lloyd Constable finished second and third, respectively.

Professionalism lacking in Saint Mary's athletics

Professionalism. This is a quality with which the Saint Mary's athletic department, more specifically its director of athletics and recreation, Jo-Ann Nester, is not acquainted. Unfortunately, it is the innocent - the coaches, the athletes and the whole Saint Mary's community - who suffer most from this lack of professionalism; therefore, it must be stopped.

Last year, former Belles' swim coach Scott Trees brought blatant National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics recruiting violations to the attention of Sister Karol Jackowski, dean of student affairs, and College President John Duggan. Trees met with Jackowski, per Duggan's request, and after promising him she would take the necessary disciplinary action, none was taken.

The violation in question is the use of College funds to pay for the hotel accommodations of the parents of prospective students. This is not exactly common practice at Saint Mary's. Yet, the athletic department picked up the tab at the Roseland Holiday Inn for the parents of two basketball recruits. With this information, it was inexcusable for the administration not to reprimand those directly responsible.

In the last two weeks, both Assistant Director of Athletics and Recreation Tim Dillon and swimming coach Dan Flynn joined the ranks of the unemployed. These two are the latest in a growing list of Saint Mary's employees - peculiarly, most of whom are male - who have either been fired or have resigned amid controversy and on less than friendly terms with the athletic administration in the last year.

Mark B. Johnson

Sports Writer

Last week at the time of his resignation, Flynn said he was "very, very disappointed at the way the administration is running things," and cited this as one of the major reasons for his resignation.

Junior swim team member Mary Fran Gisch commented that "... qualified coaches are not returning because of what seems to be a power play going on in the athletic administration, and the athletes are suffering for it."

This is not the type of behavior one expects from a college of Saint Mary's' touted calibre, but for fear of retaliation from the administration, athlete and coach alike are reluctant to do much about the present situation.

As for Nester, here is an example of someone wanting so badly to look good in a position which she is using only as a stepping stone so that she can soon move up among the ranks of Jackowski. In an interview last fall, Nester said she wanted "to be the dean of a small liberal arts college." Based on the way she is presently doing her job, one has to question her desire to run an athletic department.

Since her arrival last fall, Nester has tried to control every aspect of athletics at Saint Mary's - from being "the only voice of the athletic department," as she states her position, to stripping her assistant, Dillon, of all his duties. What is the purpose of having an assistant if the director will not allow him to do anything independent of her train of thought, to do anything but sit around with a useless title?

Senior Intramural Coordinator and Athletic Council member Kerry Klein commented, "(Dillon) could have done so much more for the athletic program - if only he had not been stripped of all responsibilities and stifled by what I consider to be an obvious case of discrimination."

Klein is not alone in her feelings, as she is not the first to voice her dissatisfaction with Nester's administration. Former Athletic Council President and senior swim team captain Ellen Byrne said, "(Dillon) was honest and straightforward in his efforts - something which I think has
