Healy-Lawrence recall petition circulation to continue to Monday

By MIRIAM HILL
Copy Editor

The countdown continues. A group of students circulating a petition to recall Student Body President Bill Healy and Vice President Duane Lawrence decided Thursday night to expand efforts to gather the 1100 signatures needed for a recall vote, according to Mike Vore, co-spokesman for the group.

Vore criticized Healy for continuing to show a "defeatist-type attitude toward the administration" during a student government question and answer forum Wednesday night.

Vore said the group hopes to collect the required 1100 signatures by Monday at 4 p.m.

If the necessary number of signatures is obtained by that time, students will be able to vote on Tuesday whether or not they want to recall Healy and Lawrence, Vore said.

The group currently has approximately 800 or 900 signatures, according to Bill Kraiss, a co-spokesman for the group.

Signatures of freshmen and new transfers are invalid because these students have not completed one full semester, as required by a constitutional stipulation.

According to Vore, his group has been "lying low" for the past week, in order to give Healy "a chance to come out and defend himself."

Vore said the group had hoped to see Healy adopt a "more confrontational" approach to dealing with the administration during Wednesday's forum.

But, Vore said, "We still didn't see a change (during the forum)... Bill's philosophy is that there's only so much we can do with the administration, and we're not going to settle for that."

Responding to Vore's criticisms and the group's decision, Healy said, "I've said everything I can say on the issue."

"We can be demanding (of the administration), and I think we have been demanding," Healy added.

The petition, titled "A Real Beginning," has been circulated in dorms, dining halls and classrooms since

Cheating to be studied by honesty committee

By FRANK J. MASTRO
Staff Reporter

Cheating and what can be done to eliminate it from Notre Dame is now the responsibility of the newly-formed Honesty Committee.

The committee was approved by the Academic Council following a recommendation for its creation by the University Curriculum Committee.

"We're going to try to find out what the extent of cheating is, what circumstances promote cheating and try to cultivate respect for honesty," said Father Edward Malloy, associate provost and chairman of the Honesty Committee.

Provost Timothy O'Meara announced appointments to the nine person committee, composed of five faculty and four student members.

The faculty members are Stephen Batill, associate professor of aerospace and mechanical engineering; Francis Castellino, dean of the College of Science; Carol Mooney, associate professor of law; David Ricchiute, associate professor of accountancy, and Robert Wegs, associate professor of history.

Students on the committee are Earl Baker, a senior engineering major and academic commissioner of student government; Vince Lowell, a sophomore engineering major, Margaret McCabe, a junior business major, and Robert Molnar, a junior in the College of Science.

"I think we should take the honesty question very seriously at a university such as ours," said O'Meara. "I don't think it is a very serious problem, but it is something we should consider."

The committee expects to make a recommendation to the provost within the academic year, according to Malloy.

In order to address the matter, the committee has divided into three sub-committees.

One sub-committee will study honesty codes at other schools. Another will establish contacts with faculty organizations, while the third will obtain input from students.

"At the University of Virginia they have an honor code where students are required to turn in other students," said Lowell.

"The sub-committees will meet as frequently as possible in order to get the job done. They will then report to the committee," said Malloy.

The committee now is in the process of setting up mechanisms to talk to as many people as possible about cheating.

"There's no big cheating ring around the school. People are more or less casually cheating," Lowell said.

"One thing that we're concerned about is students who don't cheat," said Wegs. "They don't want to turn in other students. They're in an awkward position. They don't think it's fair for others to get away with it. Ultimately, they get a lower grade."

"We want to both change attitudes about cheating and make recommendations about the way tests are given and so on, if that will help," said Malloy.

The question of integrity had been raised in the Pace Report, a report issued every 10 years by the provost concerning the state of affairs at the University.

Congressional negotiations falter leaving federal budget in question

Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Congressional negotiations on a Senate-passed balanced-budget plan collapsed Thursday night, leaving in doubt when the House and Senate could take final action on necessary legislation to restore the government's borrowing authority.

"I think we have come to the conclusion to amicably agree to disagree," said Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., chairman of the Senate Finance Committee and chairman of the negotiations on the Senate plan to force a balanced budget by 1991.

"I'm sorry that the conference failed to agree," said Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, R-Ill., chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, who led the House bargainers.

The talks fell apart at the end of a day during which congressional leaders traded partisan insults over who was stalling the talks.

While the wrangling continued, Rep. James Jones, D-Okla., chairman of the Ways and Means subcommittee on Social Security, announced that he was asking the General Accounting Office, Congress' investigative arm, to look into the Treasury Department's handling of Social Security funds.

Jones said in a written statement that he wanted auditors to see "whether Social Security trust assets, held in long-term invested securities, have been cashed in by Treasury on more than one occasion to pay benefits, so that the funds normally used to pay benefits could be used to keep the government going despite the debt limit."

With the failure of the talks, the issue moves to the House floor on Friday where Democrats and Republicans will offer separate balanced-budget packages.

Congress is facing a Friday deadline for passing legislation raising the national debt limit from the current $1.824 trillion to more than $2 trillion.

Treasury Department officials have warned that if the debt limit, which allows the government to borrow to pay its bills, is not increased by then, they will have to redeem billions of dollars held by the Social Security trust fund and other trust funds to keep the government solvent.

Administration officials also have indicated that if the current money problems continue, they may begin temporarily halting spending for some programs.

"Our view is the House ought to act... (and) stop playing games over there," said Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kan. "They've been holding the bill hostage."

Dole may think he is being "politically cute and smart," but "24 hours of (partisan) happiness on his side isn't what he's supposed to be looking for as a leader of this Congress," said House Speaker Thomas O'Neill Jr., D-Mass.

"The Senate stonewalled it, they don't want to go into it issue by issue," O'Neill added, calling the Senate-passed plan to force a balanced budget by 1991 "a political document."

The House, O'Neill said, was trying to "bail the most popular president since John Quincy Adams out of the bucket he's put the nation in."

At the White House, spokesman Larry Speakes said President Reagan directed administration lobbyists to tell legislators he is "deeply disturbed" by the deadlock. Speakes said Congress must act within 48 hours or "force us into disarray in our financial dealings."

Award established for volunteer service

By CHRISTINE CAPONIGRI
News Staff

The John W. Gardner Student Leadership Award, granted for exemplary volunteer service outside of the Notre Dame community, has been established by the Office of Student Affairs.

Any graduating senior, graduate, or professional student who has volunteered at the local, state, or national level is eligible for this annual accolade.

Campus organizations which have done service outside of the University also may be nominated for the award.

The idea for the award was taken from a national award of the same name, also given for volunteer service.

University President Father Theodore Hesburgh was given the award by the Independent Sector, a group of non-profit organizations, on Oct. 8.

"Hesburgh was chosen for his lifelong involvement in and support of volunteerism," said Father David Tyson, vice president for student affairs.

Tyson said he is "very excited about this award. There are a number of volunteering awards presented at commencement, but this is the first given for service outside the Notre Dame community."

Hesburgh's $3,500 award will provide the cash gift for the Notre Dame winner each year. The recipient can use the $200 honorarium as he wishes.

Anyone may nominate a student who fills the qualifications of outside service and high academic standing. The nominations must be received in Spring, at a date to be announced later.

Nominations received by the vice president for student affairs will be screened by the student affairs senior staff. Hesburgh will approve the final selection.

The John W. Gardner Student Leadership Award is named for the founder of the Common Cause, which "brings together people from the public, private, and independent sectors for the purpose of service," said Tyson.

At Hesburgh's suggestion, the Office for Student Affairs decided to establish the award.

SMC alcohol awareness week set

By MARY FRAN GISCH
Staff Reporter

Alcohol Awareness Week at Saint Mary's, scheduled for Nov. 4-8, will focus on the results of last year's alcohol survey, said Dean of Student Affairs Sister Karol Jackowski.

"The surveys were given last year to 400 students at random with an equal amount in each class. We were really pleased with the high return rate of 62.7 percent," said Nan Loy, advisor to the College's Alcohol Education Council.

"It should be very interesting to see how the situation has changed over the past six years," said Loy, explaining that last year's surveys will be compared with a similar survey taken in 1979.

Saint Mary's Alcohol Education

consultant Molly Sullivan said she thinks there is an alcohol problem at Saint Mary's "in the same sense that there is an alcohol problem in America."

"I'm not sure if there is an overwhelming problem in this community, but I'm sure there are people out there who are hurting. We are here to help," Loy added.

Sullivan said she thinks the difference in the two surveys might be surprising.

"I would guess that the proportion of heavier drinkers (at Saint Mary's) is even higher now than during the 1979 survey," she said.

"I have not yet seen the actual results, but I would think this could either be due to either a better recognition of the problem, or an actual increase of the problem," Sullivan added.

Sullivan and Loy said the final results of the survey will not be disclosed until Monday's presentation in Haggard Student Center at 7:30.

Two recovering alcoholics, a Notre Dame graduate and a nun, will make presentations on Wednesday night in Stapleton Lounge at 7:30.

Thursday's presentation features Dr. Terry Alley, medical director for the Renaissance Center in Elkhart, who will speak on the natural highs created by endorphines. The talk will be held in Regina North Lounge at 7:30 p.m.

Hot air balloon rides will finish the week on Sunday afternoon at 4 in the field in front of the dining hall. Rides are open to the public at the cost of $1.

Recall

Thursday Oct. 18. The petition criticizes Healy and Lawrence for "failing to stand up for student rights, most recently regarding the Dillon tailgater at Ann Arbor" and for "attempting to disband the Student Senate."

The petition also cites Healy's decision to dismiss John Dettling and Pat Baccanari from the Committee for Responsible University Practices as a reason for dismissing Healy and Lawrence.

Vore also said student government failed to stand up for students' rights when two students were suspended from the University for a parieters violation this semester.

Vore said the petitioners will meet at 4:30 p.m. Friday in the New Orleans room of LaFortune to discuss ways to collect the 200 to 300 signatures they still need. The group plans to designate a representative in each dorm to gather signatures for the petition.

In order to recall Healy and Lawrence, Vore said, two-thirds of the students voting on the referendum must vote to recall them.

If students vote in favor of a recall, a general election for student body president and vice president will be held within two weeks after the recall vote, Vore said.

All undergraduates are eligible to vote on the referendum.

Healy and Lawrence would be eligible to run in the general election, but Healy said he has not decided whether he and Lawrence would run if such an election were held.

Far right makes substantial gains in South African midterm elections

Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa - White-supremacist parties on South Africa's far right said Thursday their broad gains in five midterm elections proved there is a surge in white opposition to sharing power with blacks.

The governing National Party of President P.W. Botha, campaigning on a platform of gradual race reform, won four of the five Parliament seats at stake in Wednesday's voting but lost ground everywhere to the far right.

Two ultra-conservative parties slashed the Nationalists' past majority in four districts and took a seat away from Botha's party in the Orange Free State for the first time since 1953.

The National Party, in power since 1948, has a huge margin in Parliament, and parliamentary control was not an issue.

Leaders of the far-right Conservative Party and the Reformed National Party said voters showed anger over government failure to quell 14 months of bloody rioting over apartheid as well as dissatisfaction with the economy and the government's approach to race reforms.

Pro-government and liberal newspapers noted the five districts were largely blue-collar and rural and said the far-right never had been in a more favorable position than in Wednesday's vote.

The far-right's victorious candidate, Louis Stofberg of the Reformed National Party, had made an issue of a couple in his town of Sosoiburg who married this year after the National Party repealed laws barring interracial sex and marriage.

Stofberg's pamphlets said the white man and his mixed-race wife "could live in your street . . . and their children could go to your schools."

Botha said he was satisfied with the outcome of the elections, "considering the difficult economic consequences of the recession, the drought (and) the present unrest situation in certain parts of the country."

"We will have to continue to work and build toward a peaceful South Africa for all population groups in a responsible manner," he said, suggesting he would not be deterred by the far right's gains.

Andries Treurnicht was jubilant over the gains of his conservatives and the allied Reformed National Party, which won a seat in Parliament for the first time since its formation in 1969.

While the National Party actually increased its votes slightly from 26,274 four years ago to 27,062, the two far-right parties jumped from 6,899 in 1981 general elections to 22,547 on Wednesday.

"I think the main reason is (Botha's) swing away from white self-determination to power-sharing and mixed government," Treurnicht said in a telephone interview from his home in Pretoria.

Trade deficit rises in Sept. to new high

Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The country's foreign trade deficit soared to an all-time high of $15.5 billion in September while the government's main gauge of future economic activity posted a scant 0.1 percent increase, the Commerce Department said Thursday.

In further news, the department said orders to U.S. factories fell 0.6 percent last month, further emphasizing the battering the U.S. industrial sector is taking at the hands of foreign competition.

The September trade deficit was 57 percent higher than the August total as imports surged to a record high of $33.3 billion. The increase was led by a 54.8 percent jump in shipments of Japanese cars and a 17.6 percent increase in oil shipments.

The barely perceptible 0.1 percent advance in the Index of Leading Indicators in September, coupled with the drop in factory orders, left many private economists concerned about the durability of the current recovery.

"The economy is struggling," said Allen Sinai, chief economist for Shearson Lehman Brothers. "We have a trade sector that is in deep trouble. U.S. industry is being pushed against the wall."

Many analysts said the high trade figure underscored the impossibility of reaching the administration's targets of a five percent growth rate during the second half of this year. They said growth of less than three percent was much more likely.

Trade has sapped the economy's strength all year long as U.S. manufacturers have eliminated 340,000 jobs since January in the face.

Juan heads for Florida

Associated Press

NEW ORLEANS - Tropical storm Juan, apparently picking up strength, moved toward Alabama and Florida Thursday after haunting the Gulf Coast for five straight days with high tides and heavy rain that caused more than $1 billion in damages and flooded thousands of people out of their homes.

The erratic storm's toll included seven people dead and four missing since Saturday, when Juan developed as a tropical depression in the Western Gulf of Mexico. A sailboat missing since Monday with four people aboard was reported safe Thursday.

The National Weather Service said Juan passed over the mouth of the Mississippi River at daybreak and accelerated toward the northeast at 15-20 mph, a path that could take it across the Alabama and northwestern Florida coasts by afternoon.

There were signs the storm was strengthening, and winds neared hurricane force in squalls around its center, the weather service said.

It was not expected to grow all the way to hurricane strength because its speed should have it quickly over land, said Jim Lynch, a hurricane specialist at the National Hurricane Center in Coral Gables, Fla.

He said the storm had not weakened substantially because "It never really got inland. It was around the (Louisiana) coast, and a lot of that was swamp. The farthest inland it got was 30 miles. Without any real high terrain over Louisiana, it still had its energy source over the Gulf of Mexico."

As it moved out, water receded in some parts of Louisiana.

"That water's going down real good with that northwest wind," said Terrebonne Parish Deputy Ray Hebert. "It went down at least four to five feet . . . just overnight.

Waters were chest-deep in sections of a New Orleans suburb, as marshwater overflowed hurricane protection levees after five days of rain from Hurricane-Tropical Storm Juan. Story at left.

Arms control ideas given by Reagan

Associated Press

WASHINGTON - President Reagan announced Thursday the United States will unveil a new arms control proposal in Geneva Friday that he said will build on the recent Soviet proposal and emphasize reductions in "destabilizing" nuclear arms systems.

"I would characterize our arms control position as deep cuts, no first-strike advantage, defensive research . . . and no cheating," Reagan said in a televised statement at the White House.

He also announced he has asked the Soviet Union to extend the current session of the Geneva arms control talks, scheduled to adjourn Friday, for an extra week to hear details of the American proposal.

Reagan said he has sent a letter on the subject to Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev and also has communicated with American allies, who had been urging an American counterproposal to the Soviet plan unveiled in early October which called for a 50 percent cut in nuclear arsenals of both superpowers.

Just before making his announcement in the White House press room, the president met with four Soviet interviewers and told them he would accept some of the figures the Soviets had proposed in their plan for a 50 percent reduction in nuclear missiles and warheads.

He told the journalists from Moscow that his reply to the Soviet proposal will be laid out at the arms negotiating table in Geneva on Friday.

Reagan said he wouldn't disclose details of the proposal now because "history shows progress is most surely made through confidential negotiations."

Soviet Union and East bloc may initiate ties to Israel

Associated Press

TEL AVIV, Israel - The Soviet Union and its East bloc satellites are moving toward diplomatic ties with Israel in an apparent effort to expand their role in the Middle East, Israeli officials said Thursday.

The Soviet moves come at a time when there is intense diplomatic activity in advance of the Soviet-American summit and the stirrings of a Jordanian-Israeli peace initiative.

Israel radio said reports had reached Jerusalem that Jordan and Egypt had been urging the Soviet Union to re-establish ties with Israel. The New York Times said Washington would convey an Israeli message to the Kremlin that the only way the Soviets could join the peace talks would be to restore diplomatic ties severed in 1967.

A foreign ministry official who spoke on condition of anonymity said he could not confirm the report.

Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir touched off a flurry of speculation when he said on Israel television Wednesday night that in recent days "we received information that another Warsaw Pact country wants to strengthen ties with us."

Poland announced its agreement Oct. 23 to exchange low-level diplomats with Israel and to set up visa offices that would allow travel and promote cultural exchanges. Shamir declined to say what country wanted to improve ties but the most likely was Hungary, which has growing economic relations with Israel.

"I sense a change in the tone that I haven't heard before and (I heard) new thoughts about relations," said Victor Shemtov, one of three Israeli Parliament members who visited Moscow last week.

"I think that these new thoughts may explain the reports of ties with Hungary and the others, which may be leading to ties between Moscow and Israel," said Shemtov, former head of the opposition socialist Mapam Party.

Shemtov and two other leftist members of Parliament were invited to visit the Soviet Union by the Soviet Peace Council.

"They told us that the Mideast conflict was part of the global conflict between the powers and that while temporary agreements can be reached, a just and lasting peace can only be achieved with superpower participation."

A government official with knowledge of recent contacts with the East bloc said the restoration of diplomatic ties with the Warsaw government was the first of a process.

"The Polish move would have been impossible without Soviet approval and it is also clear that Russia is contemplating a similar measure," said the official who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The Soviets apparently seek to play a role at an international conference on the Middle East. Prime Minister Shimon Peres has said Israel will agree only if Moscow restores diplomatic relations.

Israeli officials have said a loosening of restrictions on the emigration of Soviet Jews would also make Israel more amenable to an enhanced Soviet involvement in the peacemaking process.

Woman kills two and wounds 7 in shopping mall shooting spree

Associated Press

SPRINGFIELD, Pa. - Three days after Recife Cosmen celebrated his second birthday, an aunt took him to Springfield Mall to be outfitted for a church's weekend benefit fashion show.

Cosmen originally was not included to be in Saturday's show at the United Methodist Church in Trainer, according to the Rev. Jesse Walker of Chester United Methodist Church. But room had been made for him at the last moment, and Wednesday's fitting session was arranged.

Approximately 3:30 that afternoon, a 25-year-old woman wearing combat fatigues went to the mall and repeatedly fired a semi-automatic rifle. She killed two people, including Cosmen, authorities said. Seven others were wounded.

Sylvia Seegrist, who said she lived in nearby Crum Lynne, was charged with two counts of murder, eight of attempted murder, aggravated assault and weapons violations. She is being held at the Delaware County prison.

A preliminary hearing is scheduled for Nov. 7.

Seegrist's mother, Ruth, said her daughter had been in and out of psychiatric hospitals 12 times in the last 10 years and once had tried to strangle her. Her pastor said she had stabbed someone at a halfway house four years ago.

At her arraignment Wednesday, Seegrist told Justice Joseph DiPietro: "Like, hurry up, man; you know I'm guilty, shoot and kill me on the spot."

Relatives and friends said she was very interested in weapons and war.

Shortly before the shooting, Gina Wootson, 29, her daughter, Tiffany, and four of the girl's cousins, including Cosmen, who lived in Minquadale, Del., got out of their car in the mall parking lot and headed for the main entrance, according to Wootson's brother, Mario Wootson, 32.

As Wootson and her charges headed for the entranceway, a woman identified by police as Sylvia Seegrist got out of her car and started firing a .22-caliber semi-automatic rifle, missing two people.

"She aimed the gun and started shooting the kids," said Mario Wootson. Wootson was not at the mall, but in a telephone interview he related the events that were told to him.

The third shot fired hit Cosben in the heart, said Springfield police Chief George Hill.

Tiffany Wootson, 10, and Kareen Wootson, 9, moved in front of the boy and two other children, 2-year-old Pia Williams and Niki Rothwell, 5, according to Walker.

"They were trying to help the older women protect the children," said Walker, who visited the family in the emergency room of Metropolitan Hospital.

The shooting stopped when Jack Laufer, a 24-year-old graduate student, walked up to the woman and took the rifle away from her, thinking it was all some sort of Halloween prank being played on shoppers in the suburban Philadelphia mall. Laufer said he discovered it was not a prank "when we saw the first victim."

Court decides mill worker had sex slave

Associated Press

REDWOOD CITY, Calif. - A former mill worker was convicted Thursday of abducting a young hitchhiker at knifepoint and holding her in bondage for seven years as his sex slave.

Cameron Hooker was convicted of 10 of 11 felonies: one count of kidnapping, six counts of rape and three counts of sex-related acts. He was acquitted on one rape count.

The San Mateo County Superior Court jury deliberated for three days, considering more than 140 items of evidence, including sexual bondage equipment made by Hooker and love letters written by the woman to Hooker while she was staying with Hooker and his wife, Janice.

The defense claimed the woman fell in love with Hooker and was a willing participant in bondage rituals.

The prosecution said the woman believed she would be killed if she escaped.

Hooker, 31, was not arrested until three months after the woman fled from him in August 1984. It was his wife who finally brought in authorities, with the help of a clergyman.

Under California's three-year statute of limitation on kidnapping, the jury had to decide if she was held captive during the entire seven years she lived with the Hookers in Red Bluff, a ranching and farming community 160 miles northeast of San Francisco.

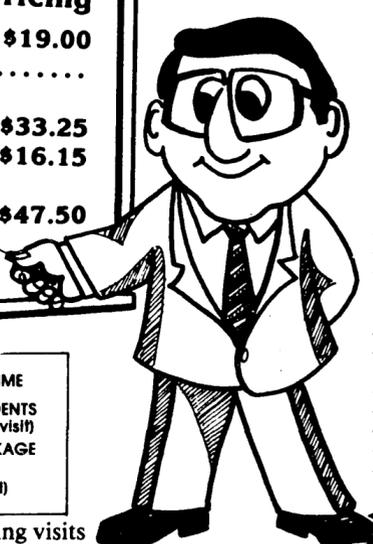

The defense argued the love letters to Hooker were a basis for that "reasonable belief." But the woman testified she wrote the letters only so he would treat her better, not because she loved him.

The Hookers admitted they kidnapped the woman, then 20 years old, at knifepoint as she hitchhiked near Red Bluff. Janice Hooker was granted immunity from prosecution in exchange for her testimony.

The prosecution claimed the woman was locked into a box, kept under the Hookers' waterbed, for up to 23 hours at a time from 1981 to 1984. While admitting the woman was kept in the box, the defense said the woman was allowed out many times and that the confinement was not as lengthy as claimed.

Shiites want prisoners for hostages

Associated Press

BAALBEK, Lebanon - The leader of a radical Shiite Moslem group said there is no hope of five Americans and four Frenchmen kidnapped in Lebanon being released until Kuwait frees 17 extremists convicted of bombings.

"I wish the demands of the kidnapppers could be met and all the Americans freed," said Hussein Musawi, leader of the pro-Iranian Islamic Amal, a splinter group of the main Amal movement.

But he said that Islamic Jihad, or Islamic Holy War, the group of Shiite fundamentalists believed to hold the U.S. and French hostages, will wait to liberate the hostages until the demands are met.

Release of the 17, most of them Shiites, has been Islamic Jihad's main demand since it began kidnapping Westerners in January 1984.

Kuwait refuses to release the men, jailed for bombing the U.S. and French embassies in December 1983.

Islamic Jihad claimed on Oct. 4 that it had killed a sixth American hostage, U.S. diplomat William Buckley, in revenge for Israel's air strike against Palestinian guerrillas in Tunis. But Buckley's body has not been found, and American officials have said they cannot confirm the claim.

Musawi said in an interview Wednesday that he was not involved in the kidnappings or in Islamic Jihad. But his group shares some of the strident anti-American philosophy of the shadowy extremists and has similar links with Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's revolutionary Iran.

"I'm against the kidnapping of innocent people," he said in his heavily guarded home in Baalbek, an ancient Roman town in the Syrian-controlled Bekaa Valley of east Lebanon.

"But for these guys Reagan and (French President Francois) Mitterrand, I'm for kidnapping them and putting them on trial."

The five missing Americans are a journalist, an academic, a librarian, a Roman Catholic priest and a hospital administrator.

Musawi, who earlier described the 17 prisoners as "good guys, believers," defended the bombings in Kuwait. "The government of Kuwait is an agent of the American government, just like Israel."

The American hostages are: Peter Kilburn, 60, of San Francisco, Calif., librarian at the American University of Beirut, missing since Dec. 3, 1984; Father Lawrence Jenco, 50, a Roman Catholic priest of Joliet, Ill., kidnapped last Jan. 8; Terry Anderson, 38, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press, a native of Lorain, Ohio, kidnapped in west Beirut on March 16.

Indiana resident prepares himself for historic transplant of 6 organs

Associated Press

PITTSBURGH - An Indiana insurance adjuster awaiting historic surgery to transplant six abdominal organs says the chance of regaining his health, no matter how risky the procedure, is worth the gamble.

"It's a big decision. But you put all your marbles on the table. You look at what you can have and what you have. There's such a vast difference," Herb Seal of Pekin, Ind., said from his bed at Presbyterian-University Hospital of Pittsburgh.

The surgery, approved this week by the University of Pittsburgh, would replace Seal's liver, stomach, large and small intestines, pancreas and spleen.

"Somebody said I'm like Barney Clark. In essence, I am that way," he said, referring to the late Seattle dentist who received the first Jarvik-7 artificial heart in December 1982.

"But if we can get a second chance at life, that because of medical progress we can make it . . . I'm fortunate I'm here. I figure I'm helping somebody else as well as myself," Seal said.

All but six inches of Seal's intestines was removed in two operations 4 years ago because of complications from ulcerative colitis. Fourteen hours of daily intravenous feeding over the years has caused his liver to deteriorate. He also suffers from pancreatitis.

"I'm told I'm in serious condition, that I'm slowly dying. Once the liver starts to go, it's gone, kind of like soured milk," Seal said in a telephone interview late Wednesday night.

Surgeons never have simultaneously transplanted so many organs in approved surgery, according to Ann Metzger, spokesman for the university-affiliated hospital.

Seal said he has been told the operation may last as long as 20 hours. Heading the surgical team will be Dr. Thomas Starzl, a leader in liver, kidney, heart-liver and pancreas transplants.

Starzl attempted a similar multi-organ transplant two years ago in emergency surgery on a boy who had lost his intestines in a swimming pool accident. The child died after developing complications, including pneumonia.

Seal's transplant will be performed as soon as a donor of compatible size and blood type is found, according to hospital spokesman Tom Chakurda. All six organs must come from the same person.

"Everything is average, the Chevrolet model," said the 5-5, 139-pound Seal, who has A-positive blood. "They're talking in the near future."

Seal worked as an insurance adjuster and was involved with his family's fruit business in Mapleton, Utah, before becoming ill in 1981. He moved with his wife, Bannah Sue, and their three children to a lakefront home in Pekin a year later to be closer to major hospitals.

Seal's liver began to deteriorate rapidly several months ago and he was referred to Presbyterian-University Hospital for a liver transplant. Starzl and other Pittsburgh surgeons recommended, however, that six of his organs be removed in a single operation.

Soviets and Americans consider possible swap

Associated Press

HAMBURG, West Germany - The United States and Soviet Union are negotiating the release of Soviet dissidents Andrei Sakharov and Anatoly Shcharansky in exchange for imprisoned Communist spies, a West German newspaper reported Thursday.

The mass-circulation Bild daily said Soviet Communist Party leader Mikhail Gorbachev would "give a signal" for the trade if his Nov. 19-20 summit meeting with President Reagan "comes off well."

Bild, citing "diplomatic sources in Moscow and Washington," said negotiations on the dissident-spy swap were going on simultaneously in both cities and East Berlin, capital of Communist East Germany.

It was not immediately possible to confirm the report officially.

Involved in the talks, said Bild, are Francis Meehan, the U.S. ambassador to East Germany, and Wolfgang Vogel, an East German lawyer who has been pivotal in talks that resulted in major East-West spy exchanges in recent years.

Sakharov, 64, and Shcharansky, 37, the Soviet Union's best known human rights activists, would be released in exchange for Soviet bloc spies imprisoned in the West, according to Bild.

Sakharov had gone on several hunger strikes in the past five years to win permission for his wife to go West for treatment. She reportedly suffers from glaucoma, which could blind her.

Bild, well known for its diplomatic contacts, said a swap was being negotiated "under the strictest secrecy." The trade allegedly broke down as follows: The United States was ready to send imprisoned East Bloc agents to the Soviet Union.

Also to be handed over to the East would be two Communist spies jailed in West Germany. They were identified as Lothar Erwin Lutze of East Germany, and Yevgeni Semliakov of the Soviet Union.

In return, Moscow would free Shcharansky, Sakharov and up to 12 imprisoned agents of the United States, Britain and West Germany.

Bonner release rumored

Associated Press

MOSCOW - Moscow authorities kept silent Wednesday on reports that Yelena Bonner, wife of dissident physicist Andrei Sakharov, would be allowed to go to the West for medical treatment.

The Soviet ambassador to West Germany, Vladimir Semyonov, told The Associated Press in Bonn he believed the reports that she would leave for medical care were true, but he said he did not know when she would go and where.

Soviet sources who have had sporadic news of the Sakharovs during their exile in Gorky, 250 miles east of Moscow, said they had heard no word from the 60-year-old Bonner.

The sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said they did not know if Bonner would go to the Sakharovs' Moscow apartment before leaving for treatment for glaucoma, an eye ailment that threatens her sight.

Both she and her husband, 64, winner of the 1975 Nobel Peace Prize and the Soviet Union's best known dissident, also have heart conditions.

Police who have guarded the apartment since Bonner was detained in Gorky in May 1984 told Western reporters no one was there. Sakharov was exiled to Gorky in 1980.

Victor Louis, the Soviet journalist who said Tuesday that Bonner will be permitted to go to the West for treatment, told The AP on Wednesday the decision on her departure "is all sort of in the hands of the family."

He said he presumed Bonner's relatives in the United States would be able to get details of any departure by telephoning her in Gorky.

Efrem Yankelevich, who is married to Bonner's daughter, told reporters Tuesday from his home at Newton, Mass., that the family had booked telephone calls to the Soviet Union on Wednesday and Thursday in an attempt to confirm the reports she would leave.

In Moscow, officials at Ovir, the visa-issuing authority, referred news media inquiries to the Foreign Ministry. Spokesmen there said they had heard rumors about Bonner's leaving.

But reporters at the airport said Wednesday's Austrian Airlines flight to Vienna left Moscow without Bonner aboard. The airline said it had no passenger booked under that name.

Astronauts conduct experiment to determine space sickness cause

Associated Press

HOUSTON, Kennedy Space Center - Challenger's astronauts endured jolting, carnival-like rides on a sled rolling on 12-foot-rails inside their orbiting laboratory Thursday in an experiment to learn why people get sick in space.

None of the four test subjects reported getting sick and NASA flight director Chuck Knarr said all eight crew members were healthy, but experiments designed to confuse and upset the inner ear balance mechanism did take a toll.

Ernst Messerschmid, one of two West German scientists in the eight-member crew, reported that "the ceiling appeared to be the floor," an illusion that he said took him more than half an hour to dispell.

Messerschmid was one of four who rode an electric-powered sled that is able to give sudden and violent acceleration forces equivalent to the force of gravity on Earth. While riding the sled, the astronauts wore helmets that blacked out their sight or displayed a rotating dome painted with dots to further confuse their vestibular system, or balance mechanism.

The experiments began just a few hours after Wednesday's noon launch of Challenger from Kennedy Space Center, and continued into Thursday as the crew, the largest ever launched, started 24-hour operations in the pressurized Spacelab carried in the shuttle's cargo bay.

All of the experiment equipment in the laboratory was turned on, but officials reported that a furnace intended to melt metals malfunctioned. Experts on the ground worked to figure out how to fix it.

The astronauts also launched a small experimental Defense

Department satellite called the Global Low Orbiting Message Relay, a Defense Advance Research Projects Agency system designed to track Soviet submarines under the Arctic ice.

The laboratory's 76 experiments were designed to study the effects of zero gravity, actually microgravity in the shuttle's low orbit, on melted metals and glasses, biological samples including insects and frog eggs, and on the astronauts themselves.

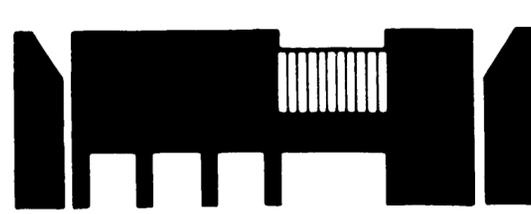

Although the furnace failed, the astronauts reported a successful start on a number of other experiments. Data was collected on a colony of fruit flies that will hatch during the seven-day mission, and lights were turned on to start germination of corn seeds. Also on board are fertilized frog eggs, a colony of one-celled animals called paramecia, and a variety of bacteria.

University should lead in apartheid divestment

Let's be very plain.

The constructive engagement policy embraced by Notre Dame's South African investments policy does not work. It has proved itself to be ineffective in advancing the human rights of blacks in that country. Therefore, the administration must assume a policy of divestment.

The University must take a moral stand and recognize its responsibility as a leading voice in Catholic America. It must use its influence to the fullest extent to end the racist apartheid regime in South Africa.

To do this, the administration should incorporate into its policy the suggestions of the Anti-Apartheid Network. If the South African government has not taken realistic steps to end the apartheid system by Feb. 1, 1986, then Notre Dame must request that the U.S. firms in which it owns stock begin disinvesting. If the companies refuse, the University must divest from those companies.

The moral arguments the University uses to support its stand are out-of-date and unrealistic:

Hesburgh's main contention is that a pull-out by U.S. companies would result only in immediate investment by companies from other nations - such as Japan and West Germany - which would not be as concerned with dismantling apartheid.

Given this attitude, it would make more sense for Notre Dame to invest all its funds in South Africa to prevent others from moving in. This is, of course, unrealistic - as unrealistic as the University's attitude.

The University's claim that it is trying to help blacks and that given time, the Botha government will be forced to reform falls apart in view of the fact that constructive engagement has been going on for 37 years now and apartheid is getting worse, not better.

During the past year, the violence and injustice in South Africa have escalated. The government denies human rights, brutally represses any sign of black solidarity, and regularly arrests and tortures its black citizens. Because blacks are becoming increasingly vocal and violent in expressing their frustrations, the situation is coming to a head and civil war appears to be imminent.

The University has more influence in ending apartheid by having investments there.

How many more people must die before the University is convinced that constructive engagement is not enough? While U.S. companies adhering to the Sullivan Principles have helped the handful of blacks on their payroll, what evidence is there that they have helped bring about any changes in the fundamental structure of apartheid?

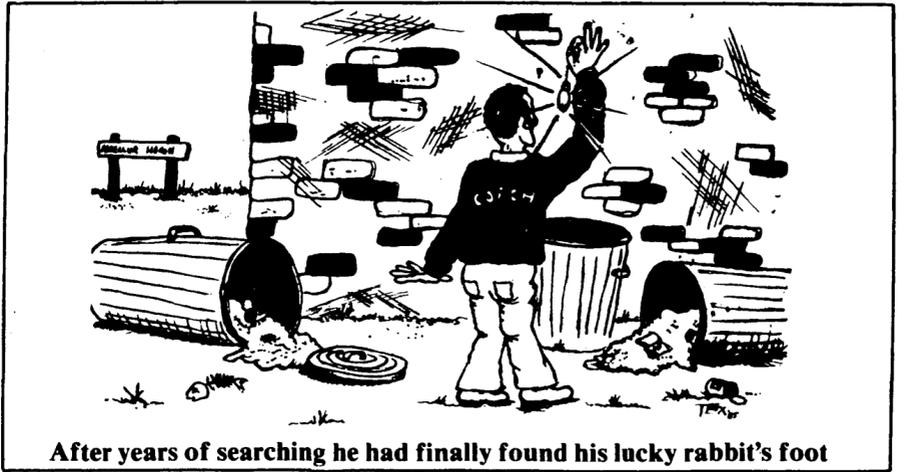

Hesburgh has been, by his own admission, instrumental in the U.S. civil rights movement. His involvement has shown that there are more effective ways to bring about change than through corporate investments. Through divestment, Hesburgh can make a strong statement companies would be forced to listen to.

A large-scale divestment, and the resulting economic crisis, would hurt blacks more than anybody else.

Undoubtedly, divestment would cause South African blacks to suffer. But such a policy will lead to their ultimate freedom. According to the late Chief Albert Luthuli, Nobel Prize winner and president of the African National Congress, "If it is a method which will shorten the day of blood, the suffering to us will be a price we are willing to pay. In any case, we suffer already, our children are undernourished, and . . . we die at the whim of a policeman."

What the University is doing now to stop apartheid is not enough. Notre Dame must live up to its moral commitment and truly support measures that will end the nightmare. Nothing else has worked. It's time for divestment.

Culture shock complete in trip through Europe

At the end of June, I left South Bend for seven weeks in Europe - two weeks in Italy and five in England. In spite of the scramble that proceeded departure, I thought I had most contingencies covered, not so as it turned out. For as we deplaned at Heathrow, London, culture-shock quite unexpectedly felled me. Transition from the United States is exasperatingly difficult. We travel from this country freighted with biases, seldom mindful of the fact that, anthropologically speaking, we carry with us as much cultural baggage as any New Guinea head-hunter or Iranian fundamentalist.

Ann Pettifer

On a train journey from London to Pisa, culture-shock degenerated into neurasthenia. There were only four members in our party, which left two couchettes in our compartment available to strangers. The anxiety we felt at the thought of sharing what we had already come to think of as our space, was immense. At Paris a stranger did come aboard, a fragile-looking African from Senegal. Using my execrable French, I pieced together his story; he was on his way to Florence to serve an apprenticeship in watch-making.

Our L.L. Bean luggage, which had colonized most of the available racks, suffered no competition from his scant belongings which were contained in an orange plastic shopping bag. As we fretted and fussed about space, food, teeth-cleaning and pyjama-donning rituals, this gentle, apprehensive African traveller folded himself neatly away on the top bunk. Without a single direct reproach, he had reminded us first-worlders of the enormous chasm our economic and cultural hegemony has created.

Italy was enchanting. We stayed with friends in their monastic Tuscan farmhouse. Not surprisingly, we were not yet through with culture-shock. A number of Tuscan hill towns are run efficiently and imaginatively by the local Communist government. It was faintly shocking to see the hammer and sickle displayed so openly.

One afternoon our hosts' mechanic, Juliano, dropped by for a glass of wine. Scruffy and down at heel, he proved a formidable conversationalist. With our host acting as translator, a vigorous discussion followed. Juliano was a card-carrying Communist. With impressive assurance - not in the least intimidated by the fact that his auditors were university educated - he dispatched political issues from imperialism to the Vatican's banking practices, and he did so knowledgeably and seemingly without rancor.

While politics retain a certain vitality in Italy, religion is languishing. The Mass and religious processions - I joined one following the blessed sacrament - are almost exclusively female affairs, usually middle-aged or old women at that. At those weekday Masses I happened upon, the women seemed poor and beaten.

On Sunday, in Italy as in the United States, the borghese strut their stuff. Still, virtually the only males present were those officiating at the altar. The Catholic Church, it seems, has failed to evangelize Italian men. It is not easy to account for this phenomenon. Perhaps Italian men see politics, and not the Church, as the vehicle for social transformation. Or there may be a simpler explanation at hand: Italians live cheek by jowl with the Vatican.

On a quick trip to Foyles in London, before I left for Italy, I picked up a new paperback called "In God's Name" written by a British investigative journalist, David Yallop. Yallop contends that Pope John Paul I, the chap who preceded the present pope, was murdered because he was about to clean out the curial Augean stable. Yallop has assembled an enormous amount of evidence on Vatican counterfeit bond swindles and corruption in high places, which includes Mafia and fascist-Masonic connections.

This evidence is being treated with respect by establishment journals like The Economist which wrote: "An engrossing and disturbing book. It reflects no credit on the Vatican that its spokesmen affect to view the charges with contempt and ignore the questions raised." A prominent Catholic theologian recently remarked, "If only one-fifth of this stuff is true, we are in deep trouble." For Catholics tired of hectoring from the custodians of Catholic orthodoxy, this book is their best rejoinder.

The train journey home was a snap. The upper middle class Americans, recent graduates of a Southern university, joined us at Genoa. It was a relief to be back with our own tribe, with people who engaged in the same rituals. They were a handsome couple, easy-going and confident; we chatted amiably about life in the South. But behind the Jamesian innocence there lurked facile opinions and attitudes.

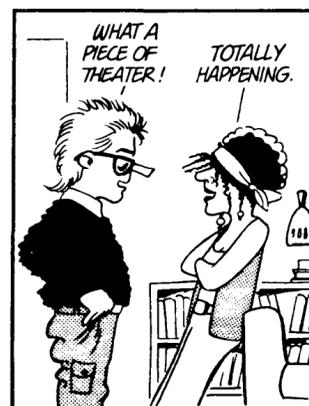

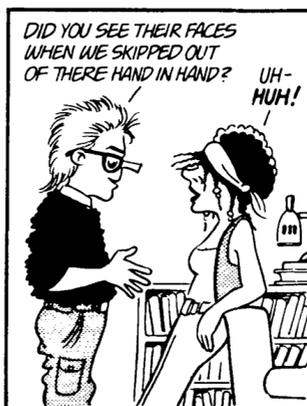

Britain's Margaret Thatcher's politics of selfishness were applauded, Reds were baited and Southern paternalism was endorsed slyly.

Culture-shock had, finally, come full circle.

Sophomore officers ask students to take action

Dear Editor:

From the first meeting of the Student Senate, disunity and power struggles have marred the body. Despite Student Body President Bill Healy's best intentions for providing an equitable student forum, several senate members have refused to grant Healy's cabinet the chance it deserves.

Despite the ineffectiveness of the senate, we, the officers of the sophomore class, think the organization is the only representative voice of the student body and should not be dissolved.

Therefore, we do not support Bill Healy's current action to abolish the senate, but we do believe that the impeachment of Healy would render student government completely ineffective. And, a newly elected student body president would cause even further dissension.

Therefore, we encourage students to:

- Maintain the senate by voting against the amendment.
- Demand that the senate immediately begin restructuring student government.
- Support Healy's administration.

ND students are unique in their care for others

Dear Editor:

Of the many different aspects of student life at Notre Dame, the one I feel is most intriguing is the friendly, helping attitude displayed throughout the Notre Dame community by certain campus organizations and by many students.

The assistance that is given includes anything from showing companionship to the less fortunate from the surrounding community to helping a confused freshman through his adjustment from high school to college. I find these services invaluable.

One program that extends its aid off campus is the Neighborhood Study Help Program. This group is composed of about 250 to 300 students who offer their tutoring services to students in both elementary and high school. Besides tutoring the students, the program participants also take the children to picnics and to leisure activities such as bowling. So, in addition to teaching these children, the tutors become friends with them, which is precisely what some of them need.

Another organization that lends its help to those in need is the Council for the Retarded. This, again, is a student-run program, but they limit their assistance to retarded children. The members of this group go to Logan Center where they entertain retarded kids. I feel proud to attend a University at which the students are willing to spend some of their time entertaining the less fortunate. Their consideration and compassion is unparalleled.

In addition to the clubs, I think the majority of the individual students at Notre Dame also are willing to give their assistance. During my first day of classes here, I remember being in a state of confusion on my way to the Rockne Memorial. I asked a fellow student how to get there, and he proceeded to walk me to my destination.

Considering the fact that he was on his way to class on the other side of campus, I found his act very generous.

From these examples, I have concluded that many Notre Dame students are unique in their care for the well-being of others because of their helpful, considerate and friendly characteristics.

Impoliteness violates the purpose of protests

Dear Editor:

In a recent letter, graduate student Timothy Thomas condones the "supposed" impoliteness of John Dettling and Pat Bacchanari, inferring that it is a necessary response to the violent methods used by South African police. Although I believe that the accusations against Dettling and Bacchanari are unfounded, I think the analogy made by Thomas is poor and distorts the entire campus anti-apartheid effort.

First, interpersonal relations between members of the Notre Dame investment committee have absolutely nothing to do with the manner with which South African police treat black residents. Politeness and professionalism by student government representatives must be maintained at all times, regardless of the desperation of any issue with which they deal. Second, the "eye for an eye" attitude taken by Thomas provides no more of a solution to the South African situation than University President Father Theodore Hesburgh's rhetoric. It also contradicts the non-violent idealism of such anti-apartheid leaders as Bishop Desmond Tutu. While the plight of blacks in South Africa might not be solved without escalating violence, it certainly will not be solved by Notre Dame students emulating the actions of the officials they are protesting.

Removal of president has many ramifications

Dear Editor:

It is amazing that many members of the student body of Notre Dame lack the foresight and understanding to realize the implications of electing a new student body president and student body vice president in mid-term.

Student government does not consist of only these two offices. Besides the student body president and student body vice president, there are approximately 70 other students who, as members of the cabinet, are working to improve student life and to represent student interests at Notre Dame.

For example, the Social Concerns Film Series is run by student government in conjunction with the Center for Social Concerns. The United Way drive is sponsored by student government.

Through student government there is a study being done on minority life at Notre Dame that should result in some practical solutions to the underlying problem of racial prejudice on campus. The Health and Food Advisory Councils, which keep administrators updated on specific student needs, are organized through student government.

If Bill Healy and Duane Lawrence are removed from office these and many other worthwhile projects will end. Whoever would take their place would have to appoint a new cabinet, re-allocate all student government funds and instigate new projects. This is obviously a waste; Healy and Lawrence stayed here all summer to organize the events of this year's administration. Many of the projects take an entire semester to be actualized, and there have already been thousands of dollars spent implementing the projects underway.

The election of a new student body president and vice president would end only in the waste of time, money, and many people's efforts; it also would result in an ineffective administration. The new officers would be faced with a time limit that would make any results impossible. Even if the new student leaders could organize miraculously an entire administration by second semester, they would have only two months, until the annual election in March, to see their plans accomplished.

Instead of acting rashly, we hope the student body realizes that by electing a new student body president and student body vice president they will be choosing a new, necessarily inefficient government. Such an election would waste already existing expenditures of ideas, time and money.

Attitude responsible for Royals comeback

Dear Editor:

Lately many weighty matters have been discussed in this space, South Africa, U.S.-Soviet relations, even campus social life. But I'd like to comment upon our yearly fall classic here in America, the World Series. Why? Well, yes it was exciting and all, but I wonder if maybe we here at Notre Dame could learn something from it.

That's right, I said learn something. Look, how did the Kansas City Royals, certainly no team of superstars, twice rally from being behind three games to one and become world champions?

Oh sure, my fellow sports addicts and I could point out technical reasons: the fine pitching of men named Charlie Leibrandt, Bret Saberhagen, and Danny Jackson, the hitting of a third baseman named George Brett and good overall play by Lonnie Smith and, yes, even Buddy Biancalana.

Adding to the Royals' effort was the apparent infestation of Cardinal bats with termites. But all that would be missing the point. The key here was attitude, a positive one. When they got behind, there was no finger pointing, no backbiting, no whispers that the manager was through or that he should resign.

The Royals just hung in there and gave 120 percent instead of 110 percent, and in the end it paid off.

Now anyone can tell that I am referring to the all too prevalent attitude toward Notre Dame's football team. But this also can be applied to life in general. Instead of getting down, dig a little deeper, try a little harder, cheer a little louder.

I am not saying it will always pay off in championships, or straight As. But it sure can't hurt. Just ask the Royals and while you're at it ask them to show you their World Series rings. Think positive and remember, the Royals showed you the way.

Senior Bar shut down due to guests' behavior

Dear Editor:

This past weekend was an exciting one for both the alumni and the students at Notre Dame. Our football team played excellently against USC, the weather was outstanding, and most of us were fired-up after a great October break. One of the best indicators of this excitement was the huge number of fans that filled Senior Bar to capacity and then some.

Unfortunately, because of numerous immature acts, Senior Bar was left in an intolerable state after Saturday night's closing. There were holes punched in the walls, broken windows, smashed bottles throughout the building, misuse of the restrooms and a broken fence.

Because of Senior Bar's condition, we were not allowed to open the facility this past Wednesday night. As staff, we firmly believe that the majority of this damage was caused not by the students, but rather by those visiting for the weekend. We apologize, therefore, for the inconvenience that was caused by our closing. The students were forced to suffer the consequences of others' actions.

We hope that in the future we can avoid such problems, but to insure this we need your help. As seniors, remember this is your bar. If you see others destroying club property either stop them, or report it to a staff member. The only people who really suffer in the long run are the students. This is our place to have fun and after the weekend is over, our "guests" just go home.

ND investment profits should assist Africans

Dear Editor:

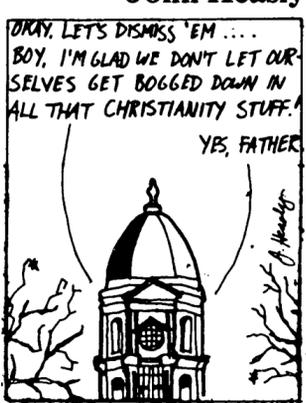

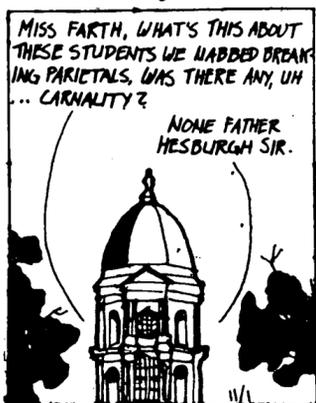

I am not questioning Notre Dame's investment policy in South Africa. Maybe we can apply some pressure and force the South African government to end apartheid. I do want to question what is being done with the profits generated from our investments. The rate of return is about 30 percent.

If we really want to help South Africa, why don't we use these profits milked out of the people to help them. We could send food and medicine; build schools and hospitals; give the money back to the workers; buy out "evil" investors, thus being able to create more pressure on the South African government and send coffins after the civil war starts.

But pumping these profits back into South Africa would not mean a tuition raise or a halt in any vital programs here on campus. Our ample endowment could cover any losses suffered. Or a cutback in extraneous expenditures, for instance, the mounted police patrolling Green Field, would reduce any losses. Sending the money back to the black South Africans would not cause any great economic sacrifices back here, if we are only maintaining our investments to bring about moral justice.

Nicaraguan civil rights thwarted by the Sandinistas

An article from Associated Press entitled "Suspension of Civil Rights Sparks Conflict in Nicaragua," published on Thursday, Oct. 17, is misleading. Trouble and conflict existed in Nicaragua just a few months after the Sandinistas took control of the country.

Adolfo Calero

guest column

Moreover, constitutional rights basically have been suspended since that time. Being a Nicaraguan myself, I can relate to you several incidents that illustrate this fact.

On one occasion, while trying to find out what those new people wearing the uniforms were like, I had a discussion about the shut-down of a left-wing radical newspaper that had started publication just after July 1979, the month the government changed hands. I questioned a Sandinista officer and said it seemed to me that the reason why Nicaraguans had lived through terrible months of civil war was precisely because they were tired of being denied freedom of speech and countless other rights.

His answer, literally, was this: "Most people do not know what they should read; it is therefore the obligation of the government to choose for them. Furthermore, you should not concern yourself with things you do not know about."

I decided I had nothing else to ask and that it would be clever to leave before the man got angry. Friends of mine spent a night in jail for expressing similar opinions, and I was not about to wait to see if the same would happen to me. I realized afterwards that my dreams of freedom for Nicaragua and Nicaraguans would not be what I had imagined.

There are many other concrete observations and actions that help to elucidate the character of the Sandinistas and the suspension of civil rights several years ago. For example, huge billboards line the streets of the main cities in Nicaragua, serving as a warning to anyone who does not agree with the Sandinista government. The billboards read, "Counter-revolutionary, the eyes of the revolution are watching you . . . Neighborhood Committees of Defense." Two huge eyes and a hand holding a gun accompany the logo.

This is a definite threat to those who do not support the policies of the government, as well as a vehicle for mass coercion. If this seems a lame threat, it should become more serious when you remember that these Neighborhood Committees of Defense are practically in every neighborhood, and that they have the power to dispense rationing coupons for oil and other necessities, as well as letters of recommendation which the government asks to see for travel abroad, local employment, etc.

The person leading the neighborhood committee usually is handpicked by a Sandinista representative, and can be counted on to be the most pro-Sandinista person in that area.

Now consider the visit by Pope John Paul II. During that visit the Sandinistas sent trained mobs in government vehicles to harass and boycott the meeting between the pope and the people, but the supporters and followers of the pope outnumbered the Sandinistas by far.

These mobs did manage to be disrespectful to John Paul II and to carry out one more act in a long list of hostile acts against the Catholic Church of Nicaragua.

These same shock troops, similar to those used by Hitler and Mussolini, called the "divine mobs" by President Ortega, also burned and ransacked the offices of the National Democratic Movement and the Conservative Democratic Party while police stood by and watched. These government sponsored mobs also attack the homes of political figures, destroy their property and spray slogans on the wall, many of which are death threats.

What about the closing of the newspaper, La Presna, at least 15 times since this revolution began, and the obligation to submit every single page to the censorship office for approval during the last several years? What about the official lifting of censorship, just two weeks before the "first free elections" to be held in Nicaragua, so that other parties could present their views?

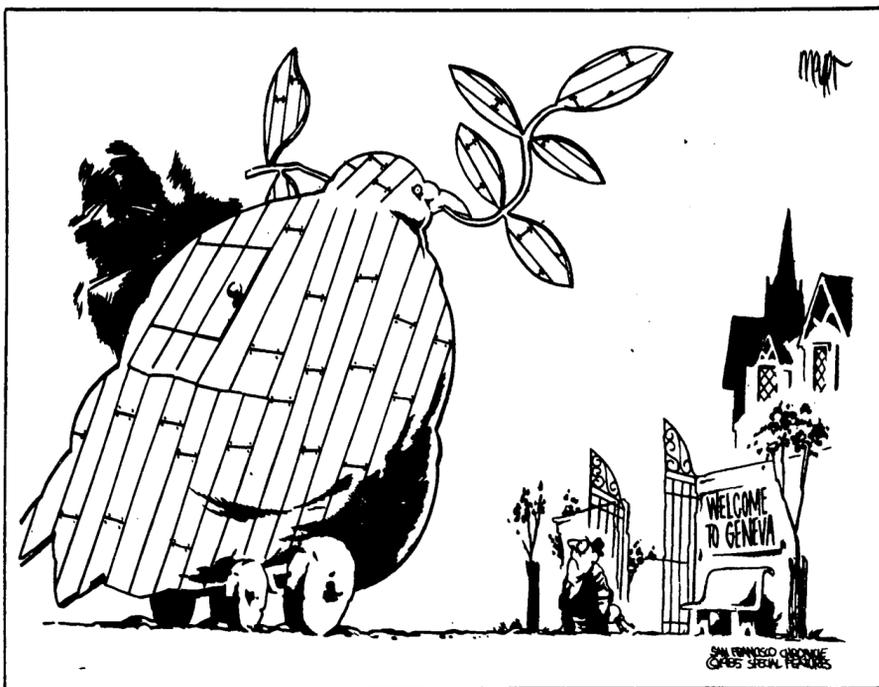

After the so-called elections, censorship returned. Political parties not allied with the Sandinistas have not been permitted normal access to the media for years. How can these elections be called free?

This new suspension of civil rights, if there are any left, is just a public statement designed to confuse public opinion and to make people think there has been freedom in the past. President Ortega claims US aggression causes all the problems in Nicaragua. This is a ridiculous charge that is disproved by thousands of Nicaraguans who are willing to hold guns and use them.

President Ortega claims that this suspension of rights is a consequence of the war, but, in fact, it is the other way around; the war is a consequence of the suspension of civil rights which took place several years ago. Civil rights is not in the Sandinista lexicon nor will it ever be a part of it.

Adolfo Jose Calero is a first year MBA student at Notre Dame.

Suffering calls for love, understanding

Father Robert Griffin

Letters to a Lonely God

In Canada last week I heard a story that may be truth or fiction. A young soldier, wounded in battle, was confined for many months in an overseas hospital. As the time for his release drew near, he wrote his parents a letter: "I have a buddy whom I would like to bring home with me. He's been with me through thick and thin. He either comes home with me or he stays here. He has no other choice.

The parents quickly assured their son that his buddy would be a welcome guest.

The wounded G.I. wrote again: "I'm not sure that you understand. I would like you to give my buddy a home. I would like you to welcome him as you've always welcomed me and treat him as lovingly as you always treat your children."

The parents, marvelling at the devotion between soldiers who have been in action together, promised that they would make the young stranger a member of the family.

Their son wrote: "In fairness, I should warn you: my buddy has a handicap. He lost one of his arms in a grenade blast."

His parents answered: "The loss of an arm is very sad. As far as we're concerned, it will make us love him more."

In another letter: "He's missing a leg as well as an arm. The left side of his body was mutilated, and he's badly crippled."

The parents responded: "Son, we'd like to help. After talking it over, we've decided that we can't accept such a responsibility. It wouldn't be fair to your brothers and sisters."

There were no more letters. The parents didn't hear a word from the hospital for a month. Finally, a telegram came from the war department, followed by a letter from the chaplain, notifying them that their son was dead. He had taken his own life.

The body was flown home in a G.I. casket. Before the funeral, the undertaker opened the casket so that a bereaved family could say goodbye to their soldier, home from the war. Only then did they realize the extent of his battle wounds. The 20-year-old body was missing an arm and a leg.

Stories like this come out of every war. As you're deciding the stories are myths, somebody tells you: "I know a family to whom it happened." William Sloan Coffin lost his 24-year-old son in an auto accident. His friends tried to console him with their talk of the Will of God being done. The sorrowful father tuned them out: "At the news of Jim's death, God was the first one to weep." God always cries when the good die young.

You have here, out of Canada, the kind of cautionary tale that alienated youth like to tell on the adults. Hollywood has made a cliché out of the blindness and selfishness on the other side of the generation gap. Those parents should have guessed who the amputee was.

In the great emergencies like war, each of us is father and mother or brother and sister to the victims of violence. In the family of mankind, parents can't divide the children into yours and mine; they can only recognize them as ours. Fathers and mothers who reject the responsibility for the least of their children are ironically punished. They may spend the rest of their lives with a tragic kind of egg on their faces.

On the other hand, the soldier with the missing limbs didn't offer his family the chance to work things out. In a home with love in it, you can always work things out. How infinitely sad those parents must have felt when they understood the test to which their love had been subjected. The lad should have known that a stranger, no matter how near and dear, is not as close as one's own flesh and blood.

God makes us fierce in caring for our own. The father at the graveside may have well asked the dead: "My boy, didn't you know I would lay down my life for you? How could you hurt your mother by doubting us so much?" The survivors were left with a guilt they will never get over. A well-intentioned young man, hating the idea of being a burden, made a decision that broke everybody's heart. He could have been kinder. You don't hold it against him. He didn't know what he was doing.

Later, his parents would realize that if they had listened harder, they would have heard his cry for help. The cries for help are all around us, but we're not good listeners. A youngster comes out of a foxhole with half his limbs gone. After six months in a foreign hospital, he writes home, hinting how badly damaged he is. Some of the despair and depression must have shown in the letter.

His parents missed the hints, because they thought they knew what the score was. They didn't find out the score until the game was over. They completely missed the cries for help. Some of us are not very satisfactory as an older generation. Alienated youth are right in not trusting us as parents. Still, suicide is so cruel. It leaves you with nothing to say. Hearing the crazy stories, you ask where the fault lies. Let him who is without sin cast the first stone.

Gipp hears tale of Notre Dame's famous legend

Editor's note:

This is the seventh episode in The Observer's serial publication of the new Notre Dame football story, "The Gipper's Ghost." Chapter Six, Glimmers of Hope, continues from the previous week as the Irish battle with MSU is resolved. The Gipper, reincarnated as Dutch Reagan, astounded fans last week as the team's amazing new recruit.

Glimmers of hope

"Yeah, it's gotta be a bomb," came a reply.

The Spartans certainly thought so. Their pass-prevent defense was well-deployed.

Up in heaven, God drew a deep breath.

The wind stopped. The American flag hung limply on the flagpole.

Kneeling seven yards behind the line of scrimmage, Collins looked up at Reagan and called out a final reminder.

"Remember what the coach said, Dutch. Concentrate! Approach. Impact. Follow-through!"

"I'll remember. I'm ready."

Collins fielded the snap and placed the ball on the tee in one continuous motion. Reagan stepped forward and kicked.

The football soared heavenward, peaked and began its rapid descent.

It just might be long enough.

The ball hit the crossbar . . . and bounced over!

The electronic scoreboard displayed the outcome. The clock read 0:00. Home 14. Visitors 14.

Collins embraced Reagan. Notre Dame's losing streak had ended - in a tie.

Gipper's legend

Joe Kelly slept well Saturday night. He rose early, slipped on his bathrobe and slippers and tiptoed downstairs. He let Rusty, the family's golden retriever, out the front door. Rusty bounded to the end of the driveway, scooped up the Sunday paper in his teeth and galloped back inside.

"Good boy, Rusty," Kelly said, trading a pair of Milk-bones for the South Bend

The Gipper's Ghost

Chapter Seven

Tribune. He noticed that the Tribune had returned to its old practice of featuring a full-color game photo on the front page. Tucking the paper under his arm, he walked into the kitchen. His wife, Maureen, had been up for an hour. She was sewing.

"I'm on the letter 'G' already. Only two more to go," she said. She had been introduced to Dutch after the game and had told him she thought it was a shame the equipment manager hadn't found time to add his name to his road jersey. She would personally make sure that everyone in Notre Dame Stadium this Saturday knew that the blue jersey with the numeral '1' belonged to Dutch Reagan.

"That's great, honey. Dutch will certainly appreciate it."

Maureen asked the question that so many interviewers had asked him the day before.

"Joe, where did you find that boy?"

Kelly explained, "The credit really belongs to one of the priests at Notre Dame. He wandered into my office last Sunday. He told me to go out and watch an intramural game. Dutch was playing for the Sorin Hall team. He was incredible!"

"Have I met this priest?"

"No, but you will. He's our new team chaplain. His name is Father Rock."

"Well, next time I visit you in the ACC, I'm going to find this Father Rock and give him a great big kiss on behalf of the Kellys."

"You're a sweetheart, Maureen."

"I know. Now go wake up the kids or we'll be late for church."

"Yes, Coach. Right away, Coach," he said. Maureen called the plays at home. He called Rusty. "Rusty! Upstairs! Go get the kids out of bed."

The dog accepted his new assignment with a joyful bark and raced up the stairway with Kelly on his tail.

Hart Collins was having a pleasant Sunday also. He barely made it to the 11:00 high Mass at Sacred Heart Church. The chapel choir was just finishing the entrance song when he slid quietly into one of the back pews.

Every few minutes, he sneaked a glance up at the choir loft. His girlfriend, Lauren Kennedy, sang in the choir.

After Mass, he and Lauren enjoyed a leisurely lunch at the South Dining Hall. Later, he spent part of the afternoon playing frisbee with friends on the South Quad. The lush green lawns may have belonged to the groundskeepers on weekdays, but on weekends they were the property of the students, unless the automatic sprinklers were turned on.

In the evening, he let Dutch persuade him to attend the annual screening of the Warner Bros. motion picture "Knut Rockne - All American" at the Knights of Columbus Hall. The movie starred Pat O'Brien as Knute Rockne and Ronald Reagan as George Gipp. Dutch had been strangely eager to see it.

But that night so was Collins, even though by his own admission he had probably seen it seven times before.

After the show, Hart and Dutch decided to grab something to eat at the campus snack shop, the Huddle. Hart ordered for both: Huddle-burgers with cheese, French fries and Coca-Cola Classic.

They occupied an empty booth. When Dutch sipped his Coke, he thought to himself, Now, this is the real thing. I'm glad at least some things never change around here!

Dutch was quite pleased with the film portrayal of himself. He couldn't resist the opportunity to bask a little longer in his own glory. "That George Gipp was sure some football player, wasn't he? I'll bet Ronald Reagan won an Academy Award for his performance."

Collins said, "Well, Ronald Reagan may deserve one for some of his more recent performances, but in 1940 the Oscar for best actor went to Jimmy Stewart for 'The Philadelphia Story.'" In addition to being a movie buff, Collins had won Sorin Hall's Trivial Pursuit championship last semester.

"I'm impressed, Mr. Trivia Expert. Tell me more about this Gipp fellow."

"Well, it's pretty much like it was in the film, although you know how Hollywood sometimes takes license with actual historical details. Gipp played for Knute Rockne, and most experts agree he was Notre Dame's greatest player. He was about your size, Dutch, six foot, 180 pounds.

"Anyway, during his final season he contracted a strep throat infection. That was pretty serious in those days, medical care not being up to modern standards. I heard somewhere that the entire student body kept vigil outside St. Joseph's Hospital, praying for his recovery. But he died - only two weeks after he was named an All American.

"That was in December, 1920. The legend was born several years later, in 1928 - Rockne's worst season.

"Notre Dame had lost two games early in the season and would lose two more before it ended. But first they had to meet an undefeated Army team.

"There were 90,000 people on hand at Yankee Stadium for this game - one of the largest crowds ever to watch a sporting event in New York City. Very few felt the Irish had a chance of winning.

"Now, in the movie Rockne makes his great speech at halftime, but that's pure Hollywood. Apparently, the scriptwriter thought it would be more dramatic to have the Irish trailing at halftime."

"So, what actually happened?" Dutch asked.

Collins said, "Rockne really told the story before the game. The actual words probably varied a bit, but essentially he said what was presented in the film." Collins knew the speech by heart; he had memorized it as an exercise for his high school public speaking course. He imitated Pat O'Brien's rendition of Rockne's voice:

"Well, boys. I haven't a thing to say. You played a great game this first half, all of you. I guess we just can't win 'em all. Boys, I'm going to tell you something I've kept to myself for years. None of you here knew George Gipp. He was long before your time. But you all do know what his tradition stands for at Notre Dame. Well, the last thing he said to me was: 'Rock, sometime when the team is up against it, when things are wrong and the breaks are beating the boys, tell them to go in there with all they've got and win just one for the Gipper. I don't know where I'll be then, Rock,' he said. 'But I'll know about it, and I'll be happy.' That's all, boys."

"What a great speech," Dutch said.

"It worked. Supposedly there wasn't a dry eye in the locker room. Even the mayor of New York, who was there in the locker room at the time, had tears in his eyes. It was a scoreless tie at the half. In the third quarter Army scored a touchdown, but missed the extra point. The Irish finally scored when Jack Chevigny, one of Notre Dame's halfbacks, vaulted into the end zone for a touchdown. When he jumped back on his feet, he threw the ball in the air and said, 'That was one for the Gipper!' He really said it!"

Senior tri-captain Chris Telk will lead the Notre Dame soccer team onto Alumni Field for the last time this weekend, as the Irish play host to Loyola (Ill.) Friday at 2 p.m. Notre Dame will be looking to improve its 6-11-4 record in the last contest of the 1985 season.

Basketball tix sell out; 200 frosh turned away

By JEFF BLUMB
Sports Editor

By 3:45 Thursday afternoon, all remaining student basketball tickets had been sold, and approximately 180-200 freshmen who had wanted to buy tickets were unable to do so.

This year's total student ticket sale of 4,327 is the largest number since the 1980-81 season, when 4,450 tickets went to students. Last year 3,047 season tickets were sold to students, which was up from 2,897 the previous year.

Notre Dame Ticket Manager Mike Bobinski said Thursday his office had no pre-sale expectation of the increase amounting to nearly 1,300 tickets.

"Projection-wise, we had no way to see this coming based on sales of the last few years," said Bobinski. "Our position is that what happened is both good and bad. It's good that we sold out, while it's unfortunate that not everyone who wanted to get in will be able to."

The applications of those students unable to purchase tickets were collected by the ticket office without money and will be held in the event of cancellations or checks which bounce. Any student tickets coming back into the ticket office for whatever reason will be sold on the basis of a lottery of those applications collected.

Bobinski said an alternate method of basketball ticket distribution will have to be worked out for next year. That method probably would not include split packages, however, he added. The student season ticket last was split into packages 'A' and 'B' in the 1982-83 season, but the split package method is disliked by the ticket office because of the difficulty in making two equally competitive packages and the large disparity in sales between the two.

Because every student ticket was sold, all Notre Dame basketball games this season now are technically sold out. The rest of the seats in the ACC are sold on the basis of season tickets, as well.

In past years, when some student season tickets remained, those seats were offered to the general public on a non-renewable season ticket basis up until the first game of the year. At that point, all season tickets were broken up and sold by the individual game, and, nonetheless, almost always resulting in a sellout.

Umpire's call was bad, but Ueberroth backs it

Associated Press

NEW YORK - The ninth-inning call that helped the Kansas City Royals win Game 6 of the World Series and eventually take baseball's championship was a bad one, Commissioner Peter Ueberroth said Thursday.

He also said he was considering a rule change which would allow the designated hitter to be used in every World Series, rather than every other year, but only when the American League team is the home team. He said such a change could come as early as next year, when the DH is scheduled to be used in all World Series games.

Ueberroth, discussing last week's controversial World Series call in an appearance on NBC's "Donahue" show, defended American League umpire Don Denkinger as one of baseball's best and said human errors are "part of the game."

The Royals won Game 6 by a score of 2-1 Saturday night and then beat the St. Louis Cardinals 11-0 on Sunday to win the World Series, four games to three.

During the show, Ueberroth viewed videotapes in which Denkinger called Jorge Orta safe at first base after he hit a slow bouncer wide of the bag. The tapes show Jack Clark fielding the ball and flipping it to pitcher Todd Worrell on the bag, apparently before Orta touched base.

"I think he may have missed it. He may have been safe ... I think he missed the call," Ueberroth told talk-show host Phil Donahue. "In all of sports, sometimes there's a fumble and they reshow it and, sure enough, the guy fumbled before he was on the ground. And you watch basketball and somebody bumped somebody and the referee misses it."

A spokesman at the commissioner's office, Chuck Adams, said he believed Ueberroth meant to say that Orta may have been out.

Interhall soccer playoffs feature close games

By TERRY LYNCH
Sports Writer

As if the regular season matchups were not enough to satisfy soccer fans on campus, interhall soccer started playoffs this past week. The action, as it has been for most of the 1985 season, was intense and close as the best teams of the 1985 season squared off.

In one of the most surprising outcomes in the young playoff season, the undefeated Stanford Studs, winners of the East European League, downed the physical Flanner "A" squad, 1-0. Dave Stevenson scored the game's only goal in the first half for the Studs, and a combined effort by goalkeepers Tim Baker and Shawn O'Grady recorded the shutout.

"It was kind of rough out there today," commented Stanford captain Jim Byrne on Thursday's action.

"The wind was tough, and I don't think either team was playing their best game. We played good enough to win, so that's all that matters."

The Studs' defense also featured some outstanding play by Tom Biafore and Bill Farrell.

The Stanford victory took on added meaning for the Studs, who established some much-needed credibility by defeating an opponent in the stronger West European League. The Studs, who had rambled virtually unopposed through the East European League, now can be sure of their playoff status.

The Holy Cross Hogs also kept their undefeated status with a 3-2 overtime playoff victory over Dillon I in a wild game on Wednesday. With the Hogs missing two of their starting defenders in interhall soccer's second-ranked defense, it was center forward Bill Young who picked up the slack for Holy Cross, scoring two goals and chipping in with an assist.

Dillon I jumped out to an early lead, but Young put Holy Cross back on top with his two goals. Dillon squandered a later chance to even the score on a penalty kick, when Holy Cross keeper Keith Terreri proved equal to the challenge.

Dillon, however, was not about to roll over and die after that episode, and proved it by tying the game with a little over three minutes left in regulation play.

In the first five-minute overtime period, Holy Cross once again took the lead when Jim Conway netted the game-winner on a crossing pass from Bill Young. The Hogs, now sporting a 6-0 record, could go far in the playoffs as evidenced by their exceptional play all season and this week's playoff win, which showed that the Hogs are a deep and talented team.

St. Ed's was the third team to come out victorious in this week's action, as it defeated a very stubborn Howard team in a shootout, 2-1.

Midway through the first half, Howard's Matt Buckley put his team on top with a penalty kick. Five minutes later, St. Ed's blew a chance to tie the game before halftime on a penalty kick, and the score remained 1-0 for Howard until the middle of the second half. Tim Tammon provided the firepower, and the score was even at one goal apiece.

The two overtime periods did little to solve anything in this fierce match, so in the end it came down to a shootout. St. Ed's capitalized on its first three chances, with Dave Warth providing the final blow. Howard could manage only one goal, and the shootout ended at a 3-1 advantage for St. Ed's.

St. Ed's atoned for its late-season collapse against Grace "A" with the victory over Howard, and now can look forward to the playoffs with some confidence. The game, which was a result of a postponement, established St. Ed's and Grace "A" as co-champions of the South American League.

ND receives oral commitments from two top basketball players

Special to The Observer

Notre Dame reportedly has received oral commitments from two high school basketball stars and is close to getting one from a third player.

According to Mike Douchant of The Sporting News, Scott Paddock, a 6-9 forward-center from Plantation, Fla., and Tony Jackson, a 6-8 forward from Weston, Conn., have told Irish coach Digger Phelps of their intentions to play for Notre Dame next season.

Another forward, 6-8 Keith Robinson from Buffalo, N.Y., also is close to committing to the Irish, Douchant reported.

Notre Dame officials refused to confirm or deny the report.

Robinson and Paddock both were named in The Sporting News' preseason listing of the top 75 high school seniors. Robinson was ranked as the 27th best player in the nation, while Paddock was tabbed as the 46th best.

Street & Smith listed Robinson and Paddock as high honorable mentions on its preseason high school all-America team.

All three players will have an opportunity to sign the national letter-of-intent and make public their intentions on Nov. 13, when the first signing date rolls around.

Ballestros loses PGA standing

Associated Press

PONTE VERDA, Fla. - Seve Ballestros' membership in the PGA Tour has been revoked and the Spanish golfer will not be allowed to play in four co-sponsored tournaments in the United States next year, Commissioner Deane Beman announced Thursday.

Ballestros, however, will remain eligible for the Masters, the U.S. Open and the PGA.

Those tournaments, the American-based trio in golf's Grand Slam events, have their own rules involving eligibility. They are not considered "co-sponsored events" by the tour, but rather are "approved events."

Ballestros, one of the world's leading golfers, has won two Masters titles and a pair of British Open championships.

He also will be allowed to play in the USF&G classic in New Orleans March 20-23, in which he is the defending champion.

The ruling, made by the tour Policy Board at a meeting in New York Tuesday, came as a result of Ballestros' failure to play in the minimum of 15 tour events in 1985 required to retain membership.

Ballestros, playing in the Portuguese Open in Almancil, Portugal, said he had known about the ruling, but declined comment. "I'll say something later," he added.

He played in only nine American tournaments - including the Masters, PGA and U.S. open - this year. In that limited schedule he collected $206,638 and won the New Orleans tournament.

The flamboyant Ballestros first became eligible for tour membership after winning the 1978 Greater Greensboro Open.

Saint Mary's soccer team loses one, will end season at home Saturday

By ANDREA LaFRENIERE
Sports Writer

The Saint Mary's soccer team dropped its record to 4-9 Wednesday in Holland, Mich., losing to the Hope College Women's Soccer Club, 2-1.

Senior Sue Schierl scored the only goal for the Belles, who, according to Head Coach John Akers, played as good a game as they've played all year, despite the loss.

"I think that we played very well as a team," he said. "We dominated the game, and we had four times as many shots as they did. Unfortunately we weren't able to get the ball in the net."

Weaknesses in the Belles' defense allowed the Hope team to score its two goals. Akers remarked that defensive problems have plagued Saint Mary's in earlier games.

"There have been few really good goals scored against us this season," Akers said. "It's mostly small breakdowns in our defense that allow the other teams to get goals we shouldn't be giving them."

The Belles traveled to Kalamazoo, Mich., on Oct. 17, where they defeated the Nazareth College Women's Soccer Club, 6-0.

Schierl put in three shots for the Belles, while sophomore Karen Chandler, senior Katie Boldt and junior Ann Nora Ehret each contributed one goal.

The Belles end their regular season Saturday, when they play host to the Loyola (Chicago) Women's Soccer Club at Angela Field. The game, which is scheduled for noon, should be completed before the kickoff of the Notre Dame-Navy football game.

Belles volleyball falls to Marion

By CHRISTINE FORTIN
Sports Writer

The Saint Mary's volleyball team traveled to Marion, Ind., for its penultimate match of the season on Wednesday. The Belles' enthusiastic effort was not enough, however, to bring home a win, as the Belles fell to Marion College, 15-8, 15-7, 15-8.

"Marion is a strong and tall team," commented Saint Mary's Head Coach Mary Jo Lambert. "And they play at a fast tempo. We adjusted to their particular way of play, but our passing, setting, and hitting was not consistent."

Nevertheless, there were "moments of brilliance," according to Lambert, when everything went right and the Belles held their own. There were a lot of side outs during the match and stall situations when the score remained static for up to 10 rotations. Therefore, Lambert said she does not feel that the score is indicative of her team's ability.

"Mary Reidy made nine kills and had a very good offensive game," said Lambert. "All the girls are playing better."

The Belles will go on the road to play their last game of the season on Tuesday when they meet Franklin College in Franklin, Ind.

Evert Lloyd serves way to victory

Associated Press

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. - Chris Evert Lloyd used pinpoint serving to defeat easily Britain's Jo Durie, 6-2, 6-3, Thursday night in the opening match of the 57th Wightman Cup.

American Kathy Rinaldi defeated Anne Hobbs, 7-5, 7-5, in the second and final match of the day.

The Americans have won the last six meetings in the annual women's competition with England and lead the series 46-10. With a 2-0 lead in this year's seven-match event, the U.S. needs to win only two more matches for the title.

Durie won the first game of the first set, but Lloyd, ranked No. 1 in the world, roared back to win the next five games. The final game went to deuce five times before Lloyd won to take the set.

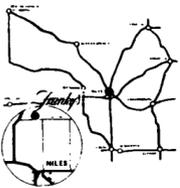

Lloyd, who has won 26 straight Wightman Cup matches without a loss, took control early in the second set by winning the first two games. Durie, ranked 29th in the world, fought back to 3-2 before Lloyd won games six and seven to put the set and match out of reach.

Lloyd was successful on 66 percent of her first serves in the opening set and 87 percent in the second set.

Flag football 'second season' begins with Sunday's games

By FRANK HUEMMER
Sports Writer

The "second season" of women's interhall flag football begins Sunday as four teams will battle it out for the right to the interhall crown.

Heading the list of Final Four teams is defending champion Farley Hall, which is the only undefeated team competing in the playoffs. It will take on the only South Quad representative, Lyons Hall, which finished the season at 4-3.

In the first meeting between these two teams this season, Farley squeaked by Lyons, 14-12. This second matchup will take place Sunday at 1:30 p.m. on Cartier Field.

Hockey

Thebeau was injured in the second Anchorage game and missed the remainder of the schedule to this point. His absence was sorely felt as the Irish surrendered 17 goals to Fairbanks. Smith said he hopes to have Thebeau back by Monday, but until then center Mike McNeil has dropped back to the blue line. McNeil teams with freshman Roy Bemiss on the first defensive line.

The goaltender position is very unsettled. As of Thursday afternoon, Smith said he still was uncertain who would start Friday, although he indicated he was leaning toward senior Marc Guay. Guay split time in Alaska with junior Tim Lukenda, but neither was especially sharp. Meanwhile, sophomore transfer Jeff Henderson and freshman Mark O'Sullivan wait in the wings.

The other game will feature "Pasquerilla Warfare" as Pasquerilla East will shoot to capture Pasquerilla West. This explosive confrontation will start Sunday at 2:30 p.m. on Cartier.

In the first meeting this season, P.E. handily defeated P.W., 31-14.

Farley Hall will have its perfect record on the line as it tries to repeat as interhall champion. The team is led by quarterback Marilu Almeida, who runs the team with precision.

"The key to the game will be if we can run against Lyons. If that happens, we will be in good shape," said Farley coach Pete Janicki. "We are a lot better team than we were at the beginning of the season."

Meanwhile, Lyons Hall comes into the game on a two-game winning streak. The key performers are quarterback Jean Luther, defensive end Cathy Colosimo, defensive tackle Cathy Condit and running back Robin Mchugh.

"I think the girls know we can beat Farley as long as we don't make any errors," said Lyons assistant coach Terry Connaughton. "It will be important for us to score early and get the lead."

Lyons Head Coach Mike Connors stressed that the defense also will be quite important.

"The defense will be the key to the game against Farley. We must be able to shut them down," said Connors. "Furthermore, we will be fired up since we are the only South Quad team in the playoffs, and there will also be a revenge factor involved to motivate us."

In the other matchup, Pasquerilla East will take its 5-2 record into the postseason game.

"Nobody expected us to do as well as we did," said P.E. coach Dave Haimes. "We have a really explosive offense, and this week our team has been practicing hard. We will be ready for anyone in the playoffs."

P.E.'s explosive offense is led by quarterback Colleen Donnelly and wide receiver Regi Richter. Running backs Annie Schrenk and Elise Armstrong help balance the offensive attack. Meanwhile, middle linebacker Carie Hand anchors the defense.

"The key to the game for both teams should be stopping the big play," said Haimes. "Our defense is really psyched for the challenge."

The final team in the playoffs is Pasquerilla West, which also comes into the game sporting a 5-2 record.

"This game is going to be a blood bath. Our girls are prepared and they will have to stop P.E.'s triple option," said P.W. Head Coach Tory Patterson. "If we can stop that, we can beat them."

Patterson praised his defensive line and said he feels it will play a big role in the game. "Our defensive line has played real well all year, and they will be the key to the game for us," said Patterson. "The game against P.E. will be a real good matchup."

The defensive line is led by Mary Jane Lorton and Char Beyer. Meanwhile, the offensive attack relies on quarterback Cathy Flick and wide receiver Nancy Evans.

The two winners of the playoff games will play Sunday, Nov. 10, at 2 p.m. in Notre Dame Stadium.

Final four teams to meet in interhall playoffs

Howard's running game will meet Alumni's defense

By GREG STOHR
Sports Writer

Howard interhall football captain Jim Chmiel has heard a few things about his team's first-round playoff opponent, Alumni.

"We've heard they like to clean people's clocks," he said. "They're known for physical play."

The South Quad rivals will battle Sunday at 3 p.m. on Cartier Field for the right to play Sorin next Sunday.

Sorin drew a first-round bye because of its perfect 4-0 regular-season record.

Though respectful of the 3-1 Dogs, Chmiel said he feels that his team has a powerful ground game which may present a problem for Alumni.

"Our strength definitely is our running game," said the chief of the 3-1 squad. "Our running backs and offensive line are outstanding."

Howard's top back is sophomore Pat Clark, who runs behind a youthful offensive line of three freshmen and two sophomores. Chmiel said he likes to keep the ball in the middle of the field on offense.

"Our running backs are more like bulldozers than Walter Payton," he said.

Other top Howard players include wide receiver Tom Passinault, linebacker John Adams and cornerback Tim Kottack.

Alumni, on the other hand, should continue to rely on balance and variety in its attack. Quarterback Ken Schuermann and backs Tim Smith and Chad Smith (unrelated) stand out for the Dogs offensively.

"We have a good quarterback, a good backfield and a good, solid line to make some holes," said captain

Paul Laughlin. "We like to keep balance offensively."

Defensively, Alumni has allowed only five points per game with two shutouts.

Laughlin said his players are happy simply to be in the playoffs after clinching a berth in the season's final week with a 8-0 triumph over Zahm.

"We were really excited at the last game and its carrying through," he said. "Everyone is excited to play more football."

Balance and power will clash in Stanford-Flanner game

By GREG STOHR
Sports Writer

Balance will meet sheer power when Stanford faces Flanner Sunday at 1:30 p.m. at Cartier Field in the first of two first-round interhall football playoff games.

The winner will earn the right to play Grace, which earned a first-round bye with a 4-1 regular-season record, next Sunday.

Flanner, 3-1-1, has won three straight after opening its season with a loss and a tie. Team captain Tom Sullivan said that his squad is peaking now.

"Our last game (a 13-6 triumph over Morrissey) was the best game we've played," said Sullivan. "Our line opened up some good holes against Morrissey. We pretty much drove down the field on them. We don't do anything fancy."

Flanner boasts sophomore tailback Tim Arnold as its main threat on offense. Arnold has scored two touchdowns this year, including a five-yard touchdown run in the Morrissey game.

Sullivan said he feels that his team's true strength is its defense, however, which has allowed only two touchdowns this season.

"We have a real physical defense," said the junior. "I think we're a lot more aggressive and tougher than the teams we've played against."

Stanford captain Bill Jolley agreed that Flanner's power may present a problem for his squad.

"I've seen them play once," he said, "and they're very big and physical."

3-1 Stanford, though, boasts some very capable players of its own, especially quarterback Al Martin, a sophomore who spent last autumn on the varsity roster. His favorite receiver is fellow second-year man Brent Basham.

Stanford is not a one-faceted team, however.

"Every week someone new is taking up the slack," said Jolley. "One game it's the defensive line. The next it's the defensive backs."

The Studs are not as experienced in post-season play as one might expect defending league champions to be. Stanford lost 13 players off its 1984 championship squad. Jolley said he sees both advantages and disadvantages to this youth as the playoffs approach.

"We're not completely coming together as a unit," he said. "We have a lot of new, really young players, who haven't played together long."

"But in a sense it's good because all the new guys are as hungry as we were last year."

Mary Decker Slaney

Runner will train during pregnancy

Associated Press

NEW YORK - Mary Decker Slaney, once the teen-aged darling of track, with her pigtailed flying during a race, now is a mature woman, expecting a baby next June.

She plans to continue training until about two weeks before the birth and to resume competing a couple of months after giving birth.

"I'm not going to run indoors, but I do plan to train the entire winter and spring, until shortly before the baby is expected," the 27-year-old Slaney said by telephone from Eugene, Ore. "If there are no complications, I hope to be racing again in August or September.

"If I can stay as fit as I want, I don't think it will be too rough.

"But if something happens and I can't race during the summer, I will go for the (1987) indoor season. Then, I will be really hungry to race."

Slaney was very hungry to race this year - after her 1984 disappointment in the Olympic Games at Los Angeles, where she had her celebrated tangle with Britain's Zola Budd during the women's 3,000-meter final. It was an ugly incident that resulted in bitter feelings between the two outstanding distance runners.

Slaney satisfied her hunger with unbeaten indoor and outdoor seasons - in races she finished. She set two world bests and six American records, at distances between 800 meters and 5,000 meters. The only blemish came in the 1,500 meters in the U.S. Olympic Invitational indoor meet at East Rutherford, N.J., in February, when she was injured while leading the race and could not finish.

Otherwise, she won two races indoors and 14 outdoors, her most scintillating performance coming at Zurich, Switzerland, Aug. 21, when she smashed the world record for the mile with a time of four minutes, 16.71 seconds.

In that race, she beat Romania's Maricica Puica, the Olympic 3,000-meter gold medalist, and Budd.

"It is always more important to win a race decisively than to break records," Slaney said. "You rarely get a race of such high quality and you should make the best of those situations."

It was her first confrontation against Puica since the Games, but not her first against Budd. That came July 20 at London, where Slaney won the 3,000 in 8:29.69, then an American record, and Budd finished third. Reportedly, Slaney received $75,000 for that race and Budd collected $125,000.

Slaney also earned $35,000 for being the top women's point-scorer and the leader of the 3,000-meter competition in the inaugural International Amateur Athletic Federation Outdoor Grand Prix.

"It was a tough season because I put pressure on myself to do well, but in the end, it was rewarding," Slaney said.

Slaney said she plans to keep racing through the 1992 Olympics, with another brief break after the 1988 Seoul Games to have another child.

"My life is changing a little," she conceded. "Next year should be a lot of fun. I have a lot to look forward to - having the baby and then racing."

Maybe they will, Coach. Maybe they will.

The Irish hockey team will return to the ACC this weekend with action like this from last season. Dennis Corrigan previews Notre Dame's two games with Kent State in his story below.

Hockey comes home; Irish play host to KSU

By DENNIS CORRIGAN
Sports Writer

The 1985-86 Notre Dame hockey team opens its home season this weekend with two games against Kent State. The first game will get underway Friday at 7:30 p.m. on the ice rink in the north dome of the ACC.

The Irish and Golden Flashes will tangle again on Saturday night with the same 7:30 start. Regular admission prices for both Friday and Saturday night are two dollars for adults, one dollar for youths.

Admission is free to Notre Dame and St. Mary's students with ID cards.

The Irish will be looking for their first win of the young season after a disastrous 0-4 road trip in Alaska last week.

The task will be formidable, though, as Kent State comes into Friday's game with an unblemished 4-0 record. The Golden Flashes have posted consecutive two-game sweeps of Penn State and Windsor. Second-year head coach John Wallin returns with 16 lettermen on a team that went 11-14-2 last season.

Irish Head Coach "Lefty" Smith said he is looking forward to an interesting series in this, the first meeting of the two schools.

"Kent State started their program in 1969 (one year after Smith reinstated hockey at Notre Dame)," said Smith. "They struggled for four or five years but have since built a strong independent program. John Wallin, a good friend of mine, has built an outstanding club.

"It'll be an excellent test. It'll be opposite slates going against each other. It'll be very interesting to see how we respond."

The Irish will need much better efforts both offensively and defensively than they showed on their Alaskan trip. The Irish scored 11 goals while surrendering 28 in losses to Alaska-Anchorage and Alaska-Fairbanks. In the first two games at Anchorage (6-3 and 5-2 losses) the Irish converted on only three of 10 power-play opportunities and allowed two short-handed goals. In addition, the penalty-killing unit gave up two scores in three short-handed situations.

Offensively, the Irish are waiting to click. Through three games, senior right wing Tim Reilly has gotten off to a quick start with four goals, but last year's leading goal scorer, senior left wing Brent Chapman, is goalless with three assists. Smith attributes Chapman's blank slate to "hard luck."

Center Tom Mooney has chipped in one goal and three assists, while Brian Montgomery and Steve Whitmore have the only other Irish tallies.

Defensively, the Irish are in a quandry. Senior defenseman Bob

Facts speak for themselves

Even though Notre Dame is only 3-3, high hopes abound in the Irish camp this week as preparations are being made for Navy. Decisive wins over Army and USC the past two weeks have sent many people scurrying to hop on the Irish bandwagon. At the same time, however, others remain leery of getting their hopes up because wins certainly aren't guaranteed over the next five weeks.

There have been many times since Gerry Faust became Notre Dame's head coach in 1981 that fans have had high expectations of the Irish, only to have those hopes come crashing down. Lately many Notre Dame players have talked of it being a "new season" for the Irish, but on an objective level there really is no reason to believe things will be any different now than in the past.

It wouldn't be fair to say that the Irish can't win the rest of their games, finish 8-3, go to a major bowl and Faust receive a contract extension. A rational person realizes the unlikelihood of that happening, though.

Those who think the Irish started a new chapter of Notre Dame football against Army should think again. More than likely, it's the same old story.

The facts on Faust as Notre Dame coach truly do speak for themselves.

FACT: Faust's winning percentage of .548 (28-23-1) ranks third worst among the 24 coaches Notre Dame has had in its history. Only Joe Kuharich (.425) and Hugh Devore (.500) had lower winning percentages.

FACT: Should Faust lose another game, he will have lost more games (24) than any other Notre Dame coach in history. Presently, he is tied with Kuharich for that dubious honor.

FACT: Only six seasons in the history of Notre Dame football have seen the Irish lose three or more games at home. Two of those seasons have occurred while Faust has been coach, as the Irish suffered three losses at Notre Dame Stadium in both 1983 and 1984.

FACT: Faust's 1981 team was the first Notre Dame team in 18 years to finish with a record under .500 and only the seventh losing team in the history of Notre Dame football dating back to 1887. Among those seven sub-.500 teams were Notre Dame's first two, which went 0-1 and 1-2, respectively.

FACT: Notre Dame is 4-13-1 in games decided in the fourth quarter since Faust has been coach.

FACT: Under Faust, Notre Dame has lost or tied 10 games in which the Irish have blown a lead in the fourth quarter.

FACT: Of the 13 games in which a Faust-coached team has trailed at halftime, only once has Notre Dame come back to win.

FACT: Since the inception of the Associated Press Top Twenty in 1936, Notre Dame has not been in AP's final poll on only 14 occasions. Four of those occasions have come in Faust's four years as Irish head coach.

Further, only one other time (1960-63) has Notre Dame gone four consecutive seasons unranked at the end of the season, and, should the Irish finish this year unranked, it would be the first time Notre Dame has gone five straight campaigns without appearing in the final AP poll.

Jeff Blumb

Sports Editor

FACT: Notre Dame stands 90-69-8 (.562) in games in which the Irish were facing a team ranked in the top 20 at the time of the game. Faust-coached teams have not done all that well in this area, however, going 7-11-0 (.388) in his four-plus years as coach. As with overall winning percentage, only Devore (.214) and Kuharich (.250) fared worse than Faust against Top Twenty teams.

FACT: Prior to this season, Notre Dame had been ranked in the AP poll 448 out of a possible 587 times since the poll began. This frequency placed the Irish first in the number of poll appearances by one team. Looking at the numbers in terms of decades, one can see that Notre Dame has fallen off in the '80s under Faust.

From 1936-39, Notre Dame ranked second among all schools in the number of appearances in the Top Twenty. In the 1940s, again the Irish were second. The '50s saw Notre Dame place third in number of appearances, while the Irish came in fourth in the '60s. In the '70s, that ranking became sixth, and in the '80s it has dropped way off to 18th.

FACT: Between the years of 1970 (when Notre Dame agreed to accept a bowl invitation for the first time since 1925) and 1980, the Irish played in eight major bowl games (Sugar, Cotton or Orange) and one minor bowl game (1976 Gator) for a total of nine bowl games in 12 seasons - a .750 percentage. In the four seasons Faust has had the opportunity to take Notre Dame to a bowl game, the Irish have participated in just two minor bowls (1983 Liberty and 1984 Aloha) - a .500 percentage.

FACT: Since 1913, Notre Dame has had 79 consensus All-America selections. While Faust has been coach, Notre Dame has had but one such selection, and the honor was won by a Dan Devine-recruited player, Bob Crable.

FACT: In Joe Yonto's 17 seasons as defensive line coach (1964-1980), Notre Dame's defensive line was ranked among the top 10 nationally in rushing defense on 12 occasions. In Faust's four full seasons, only once has the Irish defensive line been so highly ranked (eighth in 1982).

Yonto developed two winners of the Lombardi Award, given to the lineman of the year in college football, in addition to having two finalists for the award. Crable - to repeat, a Devine-recruited player - was a finalist for the award in 1981 under Faust.

Since Faust took over in 1981, Yonto has been stationed behind a desk at the ACC as a glorified paper pusher. Meanwhile, Notre Dame is now on its third defensive line coach over that time span.

FACT: Notre Dame has had 30 first-team Academic All-America selections since the honor's beginning in 1952, the most by any one school. Since Faust has been coach, though, only one Irish player has won the honor - that being John Krimm in 1981, who, again, was recruited by Devine.

The closest Notre Dame has come to the award since Krimm is Greg Dingens' selection as a second-

The unassuming 'boss' of comedy

CATHERINE COFFEY
assistant features editor

It's 5:20.
"Hello, this is the reporter from The Observer. May I please speak with Mr. Leno?" It's 5:20.
"You're 10 minutes early! Could you call back in a few?" -Jay Leno's manager.
"Sure."

Sure I can call long distance to L.A. (not Los Angeles, L.A.) in 10 minutes. It's not every day that I have the opportunity to converse with the man David Letterman called, "the funniest comedian working today." Besides, it's not going on my phone bill.

I can't believe that I'm interviewing comedian Jay Leno, a regular on "Late Night With David Letterman," and a performer on the Tonight Show and Merv Griffin. Let's try this again.

"Hello, this is the reporter, may I please speak with Mr. Leno?"

"Cathy! This is Jay."

Egads - I can call him Jay.

"How are you?"

"I'm fine," I respond. Who'm I fooling? I'm as happy as a cow out to pasture. "What inspired you to become a comedian?"

"Well, after my wife was killed by a heckler I knew I'd spend the rest of my life fighting comedy, just like crime."

Actually, his wife, Mavis Nicholson-Leno, is alive and well at their home in the Hollywood Hills.

"No, when I was a kid I always liked comedians. When I went to college in Boston I used to emcee at talent shows. I made jokes, and it seemed like a good way to make a living. After a few months, I was making $10 to $15 a night, which is what my friends working at McDonald's or Wendy's were making. Then, I started going around to the strip joints and places like that. And when you're a college student, working in the strip joints is the most wonderful job in the world."

Am I sure I want this guy to be my close personal friend?

"After that, I used to commute to New York to work in those famous little in-joints in the City like To Catch A Rising Star, and The Improvisation. Then, eventually The Tonight Show. It's really one step at a time, a slow and gradual process."

Let's see. If he graduated in 1973 from Emerson and he's been working since then, that's 12 years. Hmmm, most people graduate from college when they're 21, so 21 plus 12 equals...

Popular comedian Jay Leno, a regular on "Late Night With David Letterman" and other TV shows, brings his own brand of humor to Stepan Center Saturday night.

Where does his material come from?

"I write 99 percent of my material. You go through the day, and if you're hanging around reasonably intelligent people, you say things and they say things, and you get ideas."

Reasonably intelligent people. Isn't one of his best friends David Letterman?

"Is Mr. Letterman your favorite comedian?"

"Mr. Letterman - ohh hoo!" Leno replies. "Call him Dave."

Okay. I am going to die. David Letterman and I are on a first-name basis. I am hot now.

"David's one of my favorite's, along with Robert Kline, Rodney Dangerfield, and Steve Martin. Anybody who's original," Leno answers.

"You were described in the press release as a cross between Sylvester Stallone and Stan Laurel. What does that mean?"

"I don't know what that means," Leno responds.

Wrong release, Cathy! You should have spent more time on this instead of watching the Garfield Halloween Special.

"What did you study at Emerson?" I ask.

"Speech therapy, which I took because I saw in the college brochure that no written test - an oral report - would be given as the final. That sounds good to me. School was something I just went to in the morning before work," Leno says. "I feel really lucky to have come so far. I never thought I'd be famous."

Am I surprised! A humble comedian - what a rarity. He's truly grateful for his success.

"How do you handle overly-enthusiastic groupies?"

"Well, comedy's not really that way," says Leno.

Now I know what career I'm not pursuing.

Does he have anything to say to the students of Notre Dame?

"I hope you win Saturday."

Jay Leno will perform Saturday night at Stepan Center at 8 p.m. Tickets, $10.50 in advance and $12.50 at the door, are still available at the ACC Box Office and the Student Record Store.

Simon's Broadway hit delights with love story

Special to The Observer

In his hit Broadway musical "They're Playing Our Song," which will be making a tour stop at Saint Mary's O'Laughlin Auditorium Sunday, author Neil Simon wastes no time in heating up the plot.

Set in the glittering Manhattan world of recording studios and penthouse apartments, "They're Playing Our Song" charts the fits, fights, and egos of two gifted people, superstar songwriter Vernon Gersch and his pretty lyricist, Sonia Walsk.

After falling deeply in love, Sonia and Vernon discover their special talent for irritating each other at a trendy New York disco when both gloat and celebrate at hearing their own songs being played. Another thorn is Leon, Sonia's clinging ex-lover, who insists on calling her at Vernon's at all hours of the day. Added to the biting interplay of their songwriting collaboration, everything points to an explosive break-up.

But growth, real needs and an unlisted phone number conquer all. By the final curtain, Vernon and Sonia are back together, ready for the roller-coaster moods of '80's romance.

Advised by a slinky dance line of their "inner voices" (three guys for him, three girls for her), Sonia and Vernon explore their lives through a wide range of musical emotions. Composed by Marvin Hamlisch ("A Chorus Line") and lyricist Carole Bayer Sager ("Midnight Blue," "Nobody Does It Better"), the acclaimed score is a vibrant blend of tender ballads, comic turns and exultant rock, culminating in the rousing disco beat of the show's title song.

But the chief strength of "They're Playing Our Song" lies in its recognizable love story. The fast-paced script by Broadway hit maker Simon reveals the warmth and reality beneath Vernon and Sonia's uproarious one-liners.

Starring as Vernon in this new version of the show is Bill Tinsley, a young actor/singer last featured in tours of "Side by Side" by Sondheim and Jacques Brel. As an avid composer and songwriter, Tinsley finds a number of similarities between himself and the role he plays.

"We have the same drives, the same ambition and insistence on professionalism. I hate to say this, but the only real difference between us is I'm not as famous as he is - yet, he is definitely where I want to be in ten years. As for the more personal side of Vernon, there's a shyness, a reserve there that also rings a bell in my own personality. But that shyness is a big part of his charm."

The part of Sonia is played by Diana Bert, a petite powerhouse singer making her first major appearance before a national audience. Even more than Tinsley with his "Vernon," Diana feels an emotional affinity for her character.

"Sonia's bizarre, showy clothes, her flip, defensive humor - that dizzy quality - that's me, totally. There's more than that, too. 'Cause underneath the jokes and eccentricity, Sonia is a very self-affirming, loving woman. It takes the challenge of her relationship with Vernon to bring all that out. It's sort of weird, the mirror image of a fictional person staring back at you. But on the big plus side, my emotional click with Sonia makes me realize I've got a lot to give this part."

Hailed by NBC's Gene Shalit as "a wonderful walloping hit," the original "They're Playing Our Song" won the coveted Tony Award for Best Musical. The show then went on to play to three years of packed houses on Broadway. This fall, a new national tour of "Song" is delighting audiences from New England to Texas.

In the end, the show's enduring popularity is a credit to Neil Simon and his warmly comic love story. Perhaps New York Post critic Clive Barnes put it best when he wrote: "Light and lively, with a sharp eye on the ups and downs of 'now' relationships, 'They're Playing Our Song' is funny and provocative entertainment. Your audience will cheer it."

Try for a minute, to imagine some of your worst nightmares. You pay $500 for a new radio, and it only picks up songs by Jim Nabors. Hardee's caters your wedding. Your Orgo final is in Braille.

As terrible as these thoughts are, they pale in comparison to the living nightmare experienced by the innocent, easy-going, Paul Hackett in the new film "After Hours."

Movie review
After Hours
★★★ (out of four)

In this black comedy, starring Griffin Dunne as Paul, a simple date with a girl (Rosanna Arquette) he meets in a coffee shop becomes an ugly entanglement with the neighborhood in which everything goes wrong.

Over the course of one night, our hero is confronted by an onslaught of weird characters and bizarre situations which jolt his otherwise plain life. He soon finds himself stuck in a downpour miles away from his home with no money - all while a posse is scouring the town, looking to take his life.

Dunne does an excellent job of being subjected to the many cruelties which are inflicted upon him during the night. Compared to Paul, Charlie Brown looks like Don Johnson. His journey on the "Bad Luck Express" is such an unlikely and thorough punishment that the movie is actually more bizarre than funny.

Although the film overall has a humorous tone, it's not a movie for everyone. Its humor is fast-paced and dry, and there are many times when something will happen onscreen for absolutely no reason. Using death and other dire subjects as focal points for humor do not add to the "pleasantness" of its plot. The humor is drawn by the situation Paul is in; the worse-off he is, the funnier the movie is. Again, this is assuming you appreciate or are open to such strangeness.

The supporting characters also do a fine job of playing the assorted weirdos that bump into Paul during the night. Teri Garr, Catherine O'Hara (from the old Second City TV show) and Verna Blume all add to the movie with their eccentric parts. All of them, at one point or another, have the eye for Paul. This was an interesting contrast for the various characters who wanted to kill him at the same time. Luckily, there doesn't seem to be any moral to the characters or the movie as a whole.

Overall, "After Hours" is a "different" movie, with a lot going on that will either have you laughing or shaking your head. Unfortunately, if you're a headshaker, there's a good chance this film could cause you to have a nightmare of your own.

SMC founder's tale steeped in heroism

features writer

General Ulysses S. Grant once described her as "... a woman of rare charm of manner, unusual ability, and exceptional executive talents." This woman was Mother Angela Gillespie, the founder of Saint Mary's College and the subject of "Give The Children," a play to be presented by the Northern Indiana Historical Society.

...a woman of rare charm of manner, unusual ability, and exceptional executive talent.

The play examines Mother Angela's role as a nurse during the American Civil War. Specifically, it shows her influence on two of the many soldiers under her care: a boy of 15 who had lied about his age so he could serve his country, and a disillusioned Irish immigrant.

Mother Angela was the first of six sisters of the Holy Cross to volunteer, at the request of General Grant, for nursing service on the battlefields. They began their work at a military hospital in Paducah, Ky., and were soon asked to open another one in Mound City, Ill.

A volunteer at the hospital wrote, "At the time of my arrival the Mound City Hospital was considered the best military hospital in the United States. The Sisters of the Holy Cross were employed as nurses, and by their skill, quietness, gentleness, and tenderness, were invaluable to the sick ward. Every patient gave testimony to the skill and kindness of the sisters." In all, 80 sisters served, in 15 hospitals.

The sisters were not mere nurses' aides among many others, but the forerunners, in 1862, of the Navy Nurse Corps., led by Mother Angela. After the war, Commodore Davis, Commodore of the Western Flotilla, as a token of great regard presented Mother Angela with two grim souvenirs of the days of strife - two cannons, "Lady Polk" and "Lady Davis" - which had been captured from the Confederate navy. And, on Nov. 30, 1919, the U.S. government recognized the sisters' efforts by placing markers, signifying army service, on the graves of the sister-nurses in the convent cemetery.

"Give The Children" will be presented at the Historical Society, in downtown South Bend, at 8 p.m. Friday and Saturday, and at 1:30 p.m. on Sunday.

Movies

•The Student Activities Board hosts the movie "The Exorcist" Friday and Saturday night in the Engineering Auditorium. Starring Ellyn Burstyn, Lee Cobb and Linda Blair, the film is based on the non-fictional 1949 case in which a Jesuit priest allegedly expelled a demon from a 14-year-old child in Maryland. "The Exorcist" reveals the fear and anguish surrounding the concept of demonic possession while exploring the fundamental nature of evil and its irrational and violent infestation of man. The National Catholic Office for Motion Pictures calls "The Exorcist" "... gripping entertainment ... a unique example of effective film making." Tickets are $1.50 for the 7, 9:15 and 11:30 p.m. shows.

•Friday night the department of communication and theater will sponsor the film "We of the Never Never" in the Annenberg Auditorium. Taken from the memoirs of Austrian pioneer Jeanne Gunn, the plot portrays her struggles as a lone woman struggling for the rights of the aborigines. Tickets for the 7:30 and 9:45 p.m. shows are $3.

Duke's breaks old routine with weekend blues, jazz

JOHN AFFLECK

Duke's Bistro answers the question: "What can you do for fun in South Bend that breaks the old routine?"

Duke's is a blues and jazz club offering a comfortable atmosphere, a wide selection of beer and wine at an affordable price and some quality blues and jazz acts.

"We opened as an alternative to other clubs in town," co-owner George "Duke" Albiez said. "It's nothing against them, it's just that the only other live music you hear in town is rock."

With his wife D.J., Albiez started presenting blues and jazz artists at Duke's last year.

The pair are an integral part of the club's atmosphere, dressed in tasteful, if somewhat flamboyant, complementing suits.

The club is about the size of an average family restaurant. There is a mellow feeling to the place with its soft lighting and wood-tone furniture. Seating is adequate; tables are located around the stage, while booths which provide clientele a little more privacy are also available.

Appetizers and sandwiches are on the menu at Duke's, and though I haven't done any taste-testing, their descriptions make these munchies sound considerably better than fast food.

As for drinking, Duke's serves only beer and wine. The club has a collection of over 40 brands of imported bottled beers, however, and features 12 ounce Molson and Michelob Dark drafts for a dollar. Wine is available by either the glass, the bottle, or both, depending on one's choice.

Live entertainment is featured at Duke's Wednesday through Saturday nights. Wednesday is "Jam Night," when unknown musicians from the area are given the chance to perform. About 15 musicians are featured each week, usually playing in single acts or duets. Thursday normally features a group doing either easy-listening or country blues music.

On weekends, Duke's hosts quality blues and jazz bands from the upper Midwest, such as The Sharks from Elkhart and South Side Denny and the Skintones. The Albiezes recently struck a deal with The Legendary Blues Band, the late Muddy Water's back-up group, to bring them to Duke's for an upcoming weekend. The club gets jammed on weekends, so it's best to get there early in the evening.

Duke's is a viable alternative to the usual round of weekend parties and dive bars, which at this point in the semester may be getting a little boring. The only catch is the location, a good couple of miles off campus in the Georgetown Shopping Center. Otherwise, I would highly recommend Duke's for a refreshing change of pace.

Your attention, please... McCarthy entertains with safety messages

By PHIL WOLF
Sports Writer

It's a football Saturday in Notre Dame Stadium. As the third quarter ends, Tim McCarthy lights a cigarette on the photo deck outside the press box. He pulls a three-by-five index card from his pocket and makes a few marks on it. He steps inside the public address broadcast booth.

Shortly into the fourth quarter, a timeout is called on the field, and McCarthy's voice is heard by more than 59,000 fans in the stadium.

"May I have your attention, please. . . ."

The crowd roars, then falls silent. Yes, almost 60,000 people, during the fourth quarter of a Notre Dame football game, shut up.

"This is Tim McCarthy for the Indiana State Police. . . ."

Who is this man? Why does everyone in the stadium so want to hear what he has to say? What is so special about him?

He is the 54-year-old sheriff of Porter County, but to Notre Dame football fans, he is the entertaining representative of the Indiana State Police, who makes an announcement at every Notre Dame home football game. His safety messages - always given with a play on words at the end - have made him a part of the Irish football tradition for the last 25 years.

Still, it seems odd that football fans sit quietly while he delivers his message. And that was what McCarthy said to himself in 1960 when he began making the announcements. Last week before the USC game, the sheriff sat in the ACC reminiscing about his "rookie" season.

"I thought, 'This is ridiculous,'" McCarthy said of the straight-forward manner that was used for the safety announcement in those days. "You're trying to get a message across, and at the Notre Dame game, let's face

Scannell is satisfied with little publicity.

Out of the spotlight Scannell does job with consistency

By ERIC SCHEUERMANN
Assistant Sports Editor

Offensive linemen never seem to get the credit they deserve. When things go well the glamour positions get much of the praise, and when things go poorly the line often seems to be blamed. But that is the nature of the position, and Notre Dame senior guard Tim Scannell is satisfied with the way it is.

"It doesn't bother me to be out of the spotlight," says the 6-4, 278-pound native of State College, Penn. "I can do without that. I'd rather just do my job and be satisfied with that. Offensive line was just the position I was made for. I have no desire to play anywhere else."

And most people associated with the Notre Dame football program would agree that Scannell, one of four captains this year, has done his job very well in his four years in an Irish uniform.

He is now in his third season as a regular at the quick guard slot, and has played in 36 games in his college career, which includes 25 starting assignments. In fact, Scannell made such an impression in his 12 games last year that he was tabbed to the preseason Associated Press All-America team prior to the 1985 season.

"It's hard to say what I do well," says Scannell when asked about his successful career. "I guess I'd say my strengths would be my technique, my consistency and my intensity. That's it in a nutshell."

"I try to just get my job done every play and avoid making mistakes. I might not always have the greatest block, but usually I get the job done in whatever way I can."

An honorable mention all-America selection coming out of State College High School in his hometown, Scannell had to choose between playing for the Irish or staying home to play for Penn State.

"It was a hard choice to make," he recalls. "My dad's a vice-president at Penn State and I grew up following the team. Growing up, Notre Dame was the enemy. I never really thought much about coming here until right before my senior year."

"I have a lot of friends there, but in the end I decided it would be best for me to go away to school and broaden my horizons a little bit."

"And I have a lot of family history here, too," he continues.

A few questions remain about ND

Chuck Freeby

Irish Items

Hello again, everybody!
Why?

That's the $64,000 question this week around campus, and it's taking many different forms. Still, almost all the questions start with "Why?" For example.

Why are the Irish playing so well now after playing so poorly earlier in the year?

If you asked Gerry Faust, he would tell you that, with the exception of the Purdue game, Notre Dame has played well all year. Not wanting to begin an argument which we already have written many times, let's just say most people disagree with that statement. Instead, Allen Pinkett seems to offer a better observation about Notre Dame's success in the last two weeks.

"We're making less mistakes," noted Pinkett after the USC game. "We're not turning the ball over like we did earlier in the year. It's simply a matter of execution."

The facts back Pinkett up, much more than they do Faust. Notre Dame has made only one turnover in the last two games, compared with nine in its first four outings. Penalties have been cut down from an average of 7.5 in the opening four games to 4.5 in the last two.

Furthermore, the offense is capitalizing on the work of the defense. On seven occasions in the USC game, Notre Dame's defense forced either a turnover or a lost possession on downs. Five times, the offense was able to convert those situations into points. That's something the Irish failed to do early in the season, and it cost them dearly.

While the offense is producing, the defense also is doing fine work. The secondary, which took its share of abuse after the Purdue game, has come back with some fine efforts the last two weeks. The linebackers and defensive backs have done a fine job of helping against the run, while limiting USC's passing attack.

It has been the play of the defensive line, however, which has been the most pleasant surprise. Eric Dorsey has been much more productive since moving from the nose tackle position to the left side, while reserves Mike Kiernan and Jeff Kunz have performed admirably in filling the gaps left by injuries to Greg Dingens and Wally Kleine.

While the players have been doing their job, all is not well in the land of the Irish. People are still asking.

Why are the Irish still calling timeouts because of rampant confusion after six games of the season?

Twice during the second half of the USC game, Notre Dame had to call timeout because it didn't have enough men on the field. Things like that are understandable in the first game of the year; they are beyond comprehension at this stage of the season.

So far, the Irish have been fortunate because such mistakes have not yet cost them a ball game. Let's hope the problem can be solved before it's too late.

Unfortunately, it is too late to solve the next problem which has everybody asking.

Why, oh why, did Notre Dame don the green jerseys at halftime?

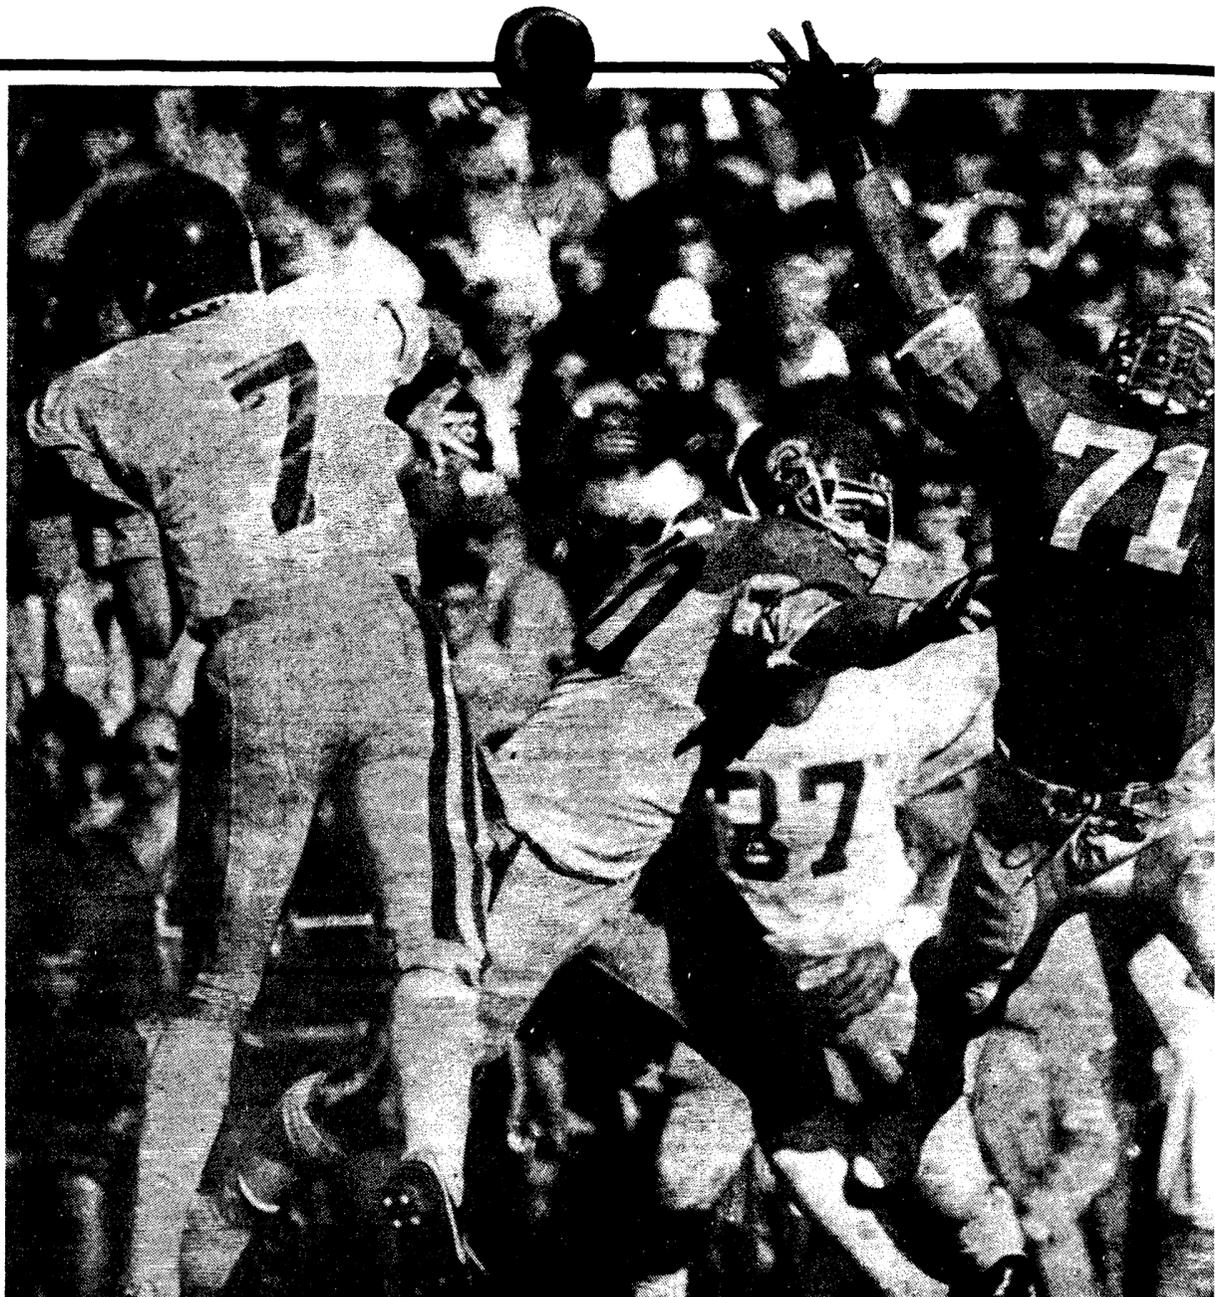

Gerry Faust, the man who gave the order for the wardrobe change, cited history as his reason for changing to the green jerseys. He recalled the USC-ND game in 1964 when Notre Dame lost a 17-0 third-quarter lead, and the 1974 contest, when the Irish blew a 24-6 halftime margin. Yet, if Faust would have thought a little more about history, he may have relented in his decision.

In 1966, Notre Dame methodically rolled up a 51-0 score on USC at the Coliseum, only to return home the following year to lose 24-7. The lesson was simple - you don't embarrass an opponent.

Not only did the wearin' of the green humiliate the Trojan players, it also embarrassed Notre Dame officials. It would have been one thing if Notre Dame had started the game in green; it was another thing to change with a 27-0 halftime lead.

The change only could have distracted the players, who already were playing well. Most, like Pinkett, saw the change as "no big deal," while others seemed embarrassed at the decision. It caused one writer to comment, "You can take the coach out of high school, but you can't take the high school out of the coach." A bit strong, perhaps, but the message certainly is clear.

Please, Gerry, leave the fashions to Pierre Cardin. Let's wear the navy blues and try to make Navy blue.

Eric Dorsey attempts to block a Sean Salisbury pass last week against USC.

Dorsey returns to home at defense

By MIKE SZYMANSKI
Sports Writer

Notre Dame defensive tackle Eric Dorsey, having moved back to his familiar defensive end position, has shown the Army and USC offenses that for him there is no place like home.

Dorsey, a 6-5, 270-pound senior from McLean, Va., started the year at nose tackle to replace an injured Mike Griffin. He struggled at that position until Wally Kleine went down with an injury, and Dorsey moved back to his familiar left tackle position.

"When we reshuffle the line, we strive to put our most experienced and most dominating players in the game as much as possible," says Irish defensive line coach Rick Lantz.

Dorsey has responded to the latest change in fine fashion, recording 10 tackles against Army and 11 tackles against USC. "I have much more confidence and am comfortable at the outside," says Dorsey. "I can use my speed more efficiently."

"I also have more responsibility. Since the nose tackle simply clogs the middle, the ends must pass rush, contain the quarterback and stop outside runs. We have a cleared field of vision to see plays and one-on-one teaming with offensive linemen. There is also less likelihood of incurring injury."

Injuries have plagued Dorsey's career. Playing in his freshman year helped him to "mature extremely fast," Dorsey says. But his sophomore and junior years ended in painful injuries.

"The best part of Eric's game is stopping the run. His explosiveness off the line of scrimmage combines his overwhelming strength with his good speed," says Lantz. "He needs to improve his big play ability in the pass rush."

Dorsey, one of the strongest Irish players with a 455-pound bench press, wrestled in high school to improve his football flexibility and agility.

"A good arm base is needed to practice solid locking out technique," says Dorsey.

"Navy uses unconventional blocking schemes as opposed to brute force. Dorsey must be dominating against the run, as he was against Army and USC," Lantz says. "He must react to traps and control his charge to the ball with poise."

Scannell

"My father played here and my grandfather was chairman of the physical education department for 40 years. I had a little bit of Notre Dame in me, also, so it was a natural choice for me."

Scannell played in eight games his freshman year, including a 28-minute stint against Navy after an injury to starter Randy Ellis. He was the only freshman offensive lineman to earn a monogram that year.

After torn knee ligaments sidelined him that spring, he came back ready to play in the fall of 1983, although wearing a special brace which he still uses.

Even after missing much of spring practice, Scannell started the first two games that year. But he reinjured the knee when he was hit from the side in the Michigan State game. He regained the starting spot for good beginning with the USC game.

Last year, he started all 12 games for Notre Dame, and played more minutes than any Irish player on either offense or defense.

"I was pleased with the way I played last year," Scannell says. "I was fortunate enough to go injury-free throughout the season and to start every game. I played pretty well and was consistent."

Throughout Scannell's years at Notre Dame, the team has been under constant scrutinization and pressure because of inconsistent play. But although it can be difficult, he feels it can be beneficial at the same time.

"There's definitely a lot of pressure here," he says. "But that's something I knew would happen when I decided to come here. People expect a lot out of the Notre Dame football players. It's a tough situation, but it makes you try harder all the time and it really brings the best out of you.

"In terms of national attention, Notre Dame really is unparalleled. It's great for players because it gives us a great deal of exposure. You just can't beat the exposure we get here."

With only six games gone in the current season, the Irish already have had their share of ups and downs. But Scannell feels Notre Dame has overcome its problems and is making progress toward becoming a very good team.

"The team definitely feels a lot better about itself after the last two games," he says. "We faced some adversity earlier, and we responded well. We're a much more confident team. The key now is just to go out and play with the same intensity and consistency that we had against Army and Southern Cal."

Consistency, no doubt, which Scannell himself demonstrated.

it, nobody wants to listen to the policeman tell them to behave themselves on the way home."

It was Nov. 5, 1960, when the young police officer first stepped into the broadcast booth. He made his safety announcement as his predecessors had done. He gave it, in his words, "straight, very formal and very sincere. And it just didn't go over very well."

McCarthy decided to try a new twist for the 1961 season. Previously he had been given some traffic-related "punchlines" by a friend who made traffic reports for WGN-Radio in Chicago. That friend, Len Baldy, a Chicago police officer, died in a helicopter crash in the line of duty, McCarthy said, "and I had never used those (punchlines) out of respect to him. But I thought the Notre Dame game would be the ideal place to try those."

On Sept. 30, 1961, the 55,198 fans in Notre Dame Stadium heard a pitch against drinking and driving, followed by, "The automobile replaced the horse, but the driver should stay on the wagon."

The reaction, McCarthy said, was great, "and so the story goes. I've been doing that ever since 1960."

McCarthy has delivered his safety message at more than 100 games since then, and his supply of driving quips finally is running low.

"I used the ones my friend gave me," he said, "and the last several years I've been making them up. Through the year, I watch for a play on words or an acquaintance will give me an idea, and I'll save those up. But it's getting to the point where they are harder and harder to find."

In fact, the well has run so dry recently that McCarthy has begun recycling his punchlines. The sheriff made that admission rather sheepishly last weekend before the second game in which he used one of his "oldies."

"One reason I'm doing that," McCarthy said, "is because during the first home game, I happened to run into Digger Phelps, the (Notre Dame) basketball coach, and he said, 'Hey, you ought to go back to some of the old ones.' Well, you always do what the coach tells you."

So far this season, Irish football fans have been entertained by these McCarthyisms:

- If you drive under the weather, it may be a fine today and cooler tomorrow.
- It never takes too many bottles to make a case in court.
- If you drive to beat the band, you may wind up playing a harp.

After their delivery, these lines usually are met by as many moans as cheers. Their author said he doesn't mind the mixed response, however.

"Even with the moaning and groaning, you know they're listening," he said. "My idea is just to try to leave them with some sort of a message that they might remember I sincerely do want the people to get home safely. You're talking about an awful lot of automobiles."

McCarthy plays down the role he performs in the press box, citing the hundreds of other law enforcement officers involved in traffic control at Notre Dame games.

"What I do up there is a very small part," he said. "I have worked traffic many many times prior and after the games, and it always has been a very tough assignment. Those police officers are really kind of the heroes because they're the ones who are actively working to get people into and out of the stadium as safely as possible."

McCarthy himself has become somewhat of a hero after these 25 years. The state police asked him to continue making his announcements even after he left the force six years ago. The sheriff has more than a year remaining in his present term in Porter County, located in northwest Indiana, and he said he plans to continue his "duty" at Notre Dame games as long as he is welcome in the press box. "It's the best seat in the house," he said, "so why not?"

McCarthy said he has not forgotten about the thousands of fans who hear his message every week. They also do their part, he said, to see that traffic moves well.

"The people that attend these games are not only good sports fans," he pointed out, "but they're good sports when it comes to driving. They're looking out for their fellow motorists and this is what we have to have."

Just to be on the safe side, though, all of those motorists still will hear "the policeman tell them to behave themselves on the way home." They still will hear friendly reminders such as these, a few of McCarthy's own favorites:

- Drive like lightning and you'll crash like thunder.
- You'll never get to heaven if you drive like the devil.
- You may be at the end of your rope if you try to tie one on.

And the odds are pretty good that Notre Dame Stadium will be close to silent for a moment in the fourth quarter of every game as long as the fans hear that familiar voice asking for their attention.

ive end

to get them out of the gimmick plays."

This 3-3 season and Notre Dame's record during his college career have been a learning experience for Dorsey.

"I came here freshman year with high expectations, looking at the team and the tradition," says Dorsey. "This season I think we needed to work as a unit and win games by large margins. With the momentum we have now, nothing will stop us."

"I came to Notre Dame partly because we play many excellent and top 20 teams," he continues. I do not want to escape competition because I want to test myself against the best."

No one would doubt that Dorsey has had an opportunity to do that.

Confusion reigns as Irish tie Navy, 6-6

Time Capsule
by Marty Burns

War may be hell, but to football fans of the United States service academies 1945 was a very good year. While many star athletes left school to join the military ranks, they still were allowed on autumn Saturdays to don the uniform of the service academy into which they had temporarily transferred.

This stroke of military intelligence immediately transformed academies like Army, Navy and Great Lakes into gridiron terrors. While Monday through Friday at the service academies became a time to roll back communism, Saturday afternoon became a time to roll over depleted powers like Notre Dame.

Still, the 1945 Irish managed to stand 5-0 when they went up against heavily favored Navy at Cleveland's Municipal Stadium. This was a pretty good feat by interim head coach Hugh Devore and his troops, for Notre Dame had been hit heavily by the call to service. Not only did the Irish lose several players, but they lost legendary head coach Frank Leahy for that year as well.

At any rate, Devore did a great job of getting his young and inexperienced team up for the clash with the Middies. The Irish, which had games coming up with both Army and Great Lakes, managed to concentrate on and outplay their foes from Annapolis throughout the contest, although eventually they came away with only a 6-6 deadlock.

Though the weary and battle-scarred Irish might have felt a bit cheated by the final, the 82,000 fans in attendance saw an exciting ball game. Notre Dame shocked the Midshipmen early when fullback Frank Ruggiero bowled his way seven yards and across the goal line for an Irish score. Little did viewers realize at the time that placekicker Stan Krivak's ensuing failure to add the extra point would be the difference between a tie and a win.

Krivak breathed a huge sigh of relief, however, with minutes left in the game when Navy placekicker Jack Currence shanked his attempt at a tie-breaking point-after conversion. The Middies had scored on a 60-yard interception return by Clyde Scott, who picked off a deflected pass by Notre Dame's Frank Dancewicz and raced unmolested into the end zone.

What broke out moments later on the final Irish drive of the game was confusing to referees, confusing to players, confusing to fans, and most of all, confusing to NBC play-by-play announcer Bill Stern.

Notre Dame drove almost 80 yards to the Navy goal line. With less than a minute remaining, Dancewicz hit halfback Phil Colella with a pass that brought the young player right in front of the end zone. As a cadet furiously tried to pull Colella down by the shoulders, the Irish stalwart struggled to cross the line. Finally, both players fell out of bounds in the left corner, right before the touchdown marker.

While fans hollered and looked on in dismay, officials ruled Colella short of the goal by one foot. The Irish then tried two quarterback sneaks but were stifled by the Midshipmen. The clock ran out, and so did the tempers of the angry Notre Dame team, which still was miffed about the earlier call.

The officials then called the two team captains together to flip for the honorary game ball. That's when Stern, who was calling the game on radio, told the audience the referees were flipping a coin to determine if the Irish had scored the touchdown.

Stern was just a little off base. The tie stood, although the Irish did win the toss for the ball. As for the U.S. Navy, it went on to great success in the Pacific, bringing about peace and returning many Irish players back home to Notre Dame in time for a national championship in 1946.

The Game

VS.

By MICHAEL J. CHMIEL
Sports Writer

Coming into Saturday's game with Navy, Notre Dame is on a roll with two straight wins at home by lopsided scores against highly-touted teams.

Although the Midshipmen come into the contest with a 3-4 record, they have won three of their last four games and have shown great improvement. Last week, they were successful in knocking off Pittsburgh by a 21-7 margin and Irish head coach Gerry Faust believes Navy will provide his 3-3 Irish squad with an ample challenge.

"Their record is very deceiving," said Faust in his weekly press conference. "The first three games that they lost were by a total of eight points. They've really found themselves. They've won three out of their last four games against three outstanding teams."

Navy's offense vs. Notre Dame's defense:

The offensive unit of the Midshipmen puts forth a balanced attack led by junior quarterback Bill Byrne. The 6-3, 201-pound Byrne, whose younger brother Tom plays for the Irish, was sidelined with a broken ankle in last year's matchup with Notre Dame after leading Navy to a 17-7 lead. Last year, Byrne passed for over 1,400 yards in his first eight starts. So far this season, he is 92-of-181 for 1,103 yards and six touchdowns.

In the backfield, Navy relies heavily on Napoleon McCallum to provide the offensive punch. In 1983, the senior tailback averaged 144 yards a game, ranking fourth in the country. This season, the 6-2, 214-pound McCallum is averaging just over 112 yards a game. He also has caught 24 passes, to lead the team, for 193 yards and a touchdown. On special teams, McCallum has returned 12 punts for 109 yards and 10 kickoffs for 251 yards.

Joining McCallum in the backfield will be sophomore Chuck Smith. While the 5-10, 195-pound fullback's primary responsibilities lie in blocking, he also has caught 11 passes for 102 yards to bolster the team's passing game.

The receiving corps for the Midshipmen was depleted at the end of last year when its top four were lost to graduation. This year, however, Navy has relied on speedy talent, which includes senior flanker John Lobb and junior flanker Tony Hollinger. Lobb, at 5-11, 183-pounds, is the second leading receiver on the team with 13 catches for 133 yards and one touchdown.

Hollinger, 5-11, 188 pounds, is the most experienced of the receivers after grabbing 12 balls last year for 168 yards and two scores. This year, he is tops among receivers with three touchdown receptions on 11 receptions for 225 yards.

Navy has an entirely new offensive line this year after losing all five linemen to graduation last year. The replacements provide the academy with better size and speed, however.

"Their line on both sides of the ball is the biggest among all of the academies," said Faust. "They're more in our league in terms of size."

Junior center Victor Tuttle, 6-3, 235 pounds, is the only non-senior on a line that lacks previous experience. On the left side, the Midshipmen go with a couple of 252-pounders in tackle Francis Bijak, 6-5, and guard Chris Castelli, 6-2. On the strong side, guard Mark Miller, 6-3, 265 pounds, tackle Patrick Hoffman, 6-5, 254 pounds, and tight end Greg Schildmeyer, 6-2, 226 pounds, provide the blocking.

Thwarting the Navy attack, the Irish will use a line-up similar to that used against Southern Cal. The Irish are expected to dominate the line as they have allowed only one rushing touchdown in their last 15 quarters of play.

While junior tackle Wally Kleine is expected to be back in time for the Penn State game, both he and senior tackle Greg Dingens will be out of the line-up. On the defensive line, the Irish will go with veteran Eric Dorsey at left tackle. Dorsey is the only defensive lineman to start every game this season for the Irish, and he leads Notre Dame with eight quarterback sacks for losses totaling 31 yards.

Joining Dorsey will be senior Mike Kiernan at nose tackle and sophomore Jeff Kunz at right tackle. Both started last week and were keys in stopping the Trojan offensive machine.

Due to the rash of injuries on the line, the Irish are expected to utilize their healthy linebacking corps again this week. Last week, they brought in five linebackers in a number of situations to go along with two down linemen.

Leading the Irish defense at linebacker is senior captain Tony Furjanic. Furjanic leads the team with 21 solo tackles and 87 tackles overall. Joining Furjanic on the inside will be junior Mike Kovaleski. After missing the Army game because of a torn thigh muscle, the junior came back with nine tackles against Southern Cal and is fourth overall with 42 stops.

Outside, junior Robert Banks and Cedric Figaro will have containment responsibilities. Aiding them will be a backfield consisting of junior cornerbacks Troy Wilson and Marv Spence. Senior Pat Ballage and junior Steve Lawrence will start as the safeties. Lawrence is second on the team with 56 tackles, including 14 last week.

Notre Dame's offense vs. Navy's defense:

Two Irish offensive units are alive and well and expected to put points on the board. Last week the first unit racked up 23 points, while the second unit added 14 points.

The first unit is coming off a good effort and is healthy for the Midshipmen. A strong showing by the line last week is likely to be duplicated this week because of an edge in size and experience.

While he did not practice until Wednesday of this week, a healthy Steve Beuerlein is expected to add to his career completion record at Notre Dame, which he achieved against Army. On the year, the junior is 72-of-145 for 956 yards and two touchdowns. Backing Beuerlein will be sophomore Terry Andrysiak, who was 3-of-3 passing last week, in addition to throwing the last Irish pass for a touchdown.

Joining Allen Pinkett in the backfield will be sophomore Frank Stams, who scored his second touchdown of the year last week. At back-up roles are junior Hiawatha Francisco, who ran for 57 yards last week on 10 carries, and senior Tom Monahan.

In the receiving corps, the Irish are strong again with sophomores Reggie Ward (14 catches for 209 yards) at split end and Tim Brown (11 for 179) at flanker. At tight end, junior Tom Rehder will provide good blocking and height for receiving. Last week Rehder was the leading receiver for the Irish with two catches for 37 yards.

Navy's 5-2 defensive look will be tested all day as the Irish will try to outmuscle a much smaller line. Starting up front for the Midshipmen will be defensive ends Chad VanHulzen, 6-5, 225 pounds, Eric Fudge, 6-1, 208 pounds. On the inside will be left tackle Michael Musser, 6-3, 230 pounds, middle guard David Pimpo, 6-1, 248 pounds, and left tackle Kent Vanhorn, 6-3, 232 pounds. Fudge, VanHulzen and Pimpo will pressure the Irish quarterbacks all day as each has collected five tackles for lost yardage this season.

Leading the Navy defense is linebacker Jim Dwyer, 6-2, 223 pounds, who leads the team with 95 tackles. Joining the senior behind the line will be junior Vincent McBeth, 6-1, 218 pounds.

The Navy secondary will be the toughest unit to play against as it is the most experienced of the three. Second on the team in tackles is junior safety Marc Firlie, 6-1, 204 pounds, who has made 77 stops. Joining Firlie are roverback John Carroll, 6-0, 194 pounds, strong corner Steven Brady, 6-0, 185 pounds, and weak corner Thomas Metzger, 5-10, 185 pounds.

With three straight wins at home this season, the Irish will be looking for their fourth by trying to dominate on both lines.

PEERLESS PROGNOSTICATORS

Each week, the Observer sports staff, a random student picked by the sports editor and some well-known figure in the Notre Dame community predict the outcome of the week's major college football games. Records are compiled as to how each person does against the spread. In other words, it isn't enough to pick the winner of a given game. The person must pick the winner and give the underdog points. Home team is in CAPS.
