'Monk' chosen

'Humbled' associate provost to be 16th president of ND

By MARK PANKOWSKI

"I'm humbled." Those were the first words of Associate Provost Father Edward "Monk" Malloy upon being announced Friday as the next president of Notre Dame.

Meeting Friday afternoon, the Board of Trustees elected Malloy the 16th president in Notre Dame's 144-year history.

Malloy, 45, will succeed Father Theodore Hesburgh as president following commencement on May 17, 1987 and will serve five years.

Malloy's term, which is renewable, will officially begin July 1, 1987.

On the recommendation of Malloy, the board also elected Father E. William Beauchamp as executive vice president.

Beauchamp, who was one of the five presidential candidates, will succeed Father Edmund Joyce. Beauchamp will also serve five years.

In addition, the board voted to renew Provost Timothy O'Meara's term on Malloy's recommendation.

O'Meara, who as provost has been Malloy's boss, will serve the same term as Malloy and Beauchamp.

Flanked at a crowded news conference by Hesburgh and Board of Trustees Chairman Donald Keough, Malloy said, "No one can replace Father Hesburgh nor do I intend to try."

"But together, together in the administration, together with the trustees, together with my fellow brothers and

Delight and relief were the emotions expressed by the three candidates for University president who were not selected for the top two executive posts.

Father Michael McCafferty revealed his enthusiasm for the selection of Father Edward "Monk" Malloy to be the 16th top executive leader of Notre Dame.

"It's great. I'm extremely encouraged, not just about the appointment of Father Malloy, but for the future years ahead," said McCafferty, one of the five men considered for the position of University president.

"Today is a triumph for the Congregation of the Holy Cross," said McCafferty.

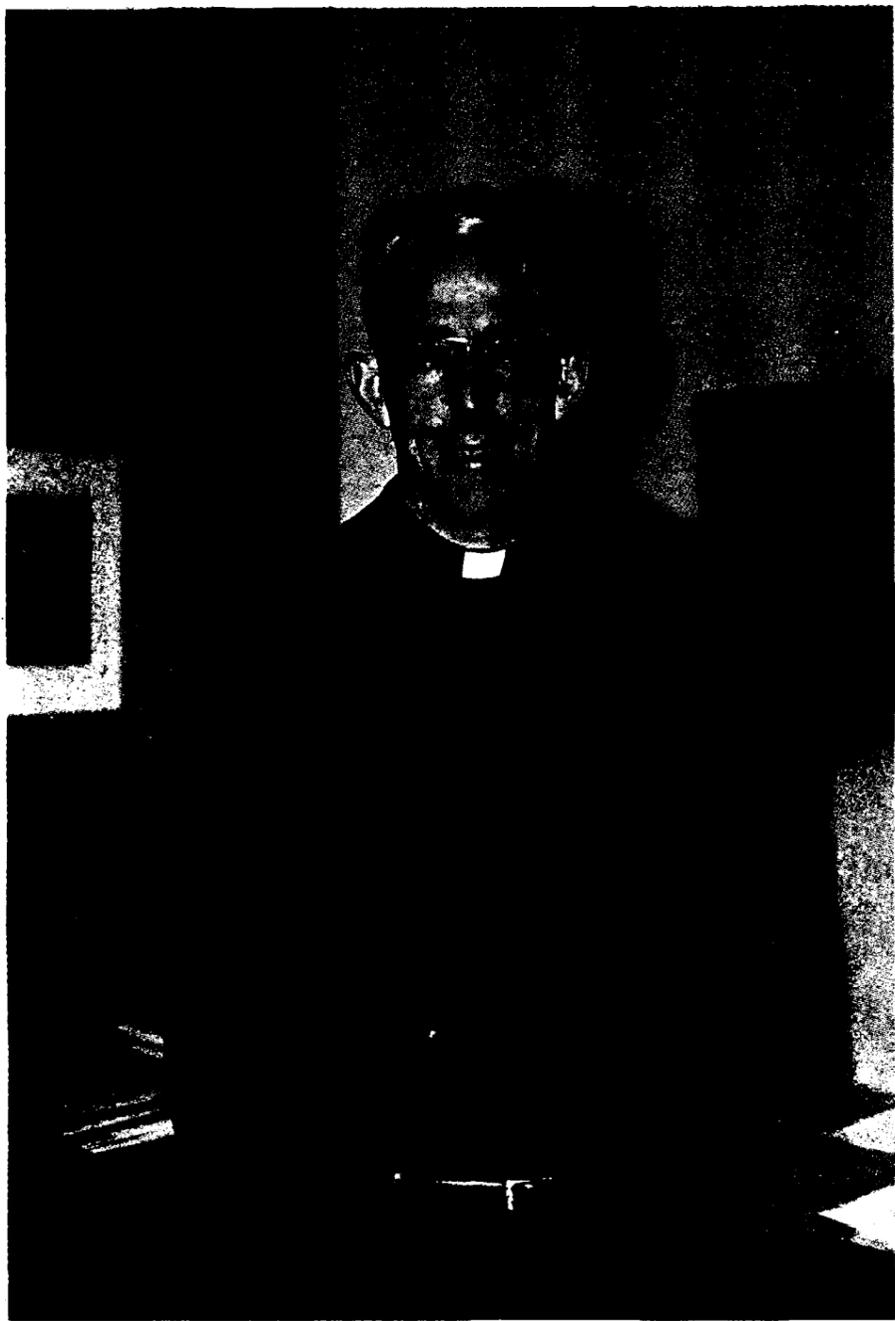

Warm support for the board's decision was also shown by Vice President for Student Affairs Father David Tyson.

"Excellent choice," Tyson said. "Malloy has good vision. He strikes me as the collaborative type of administrator."

"Everyone has been looking forward to Nov. 14. I say the most exciting time will be the time after that," he added.

The third candidate, Father Ernest Bartell said "I'm happy for Notre

The Notre Dame Board of Trustees Friday decided to completely reassess the University's investment policy in May 1987 but did not take any action at the present time, according to Richard Conklin, assistant vice president for University relations, speaking at a noon press conference.

"Essentially there isn't any change in Notre Dame's current policy," said Conklin.

With the election of Father William Beauchamp to the position of executive vice president, he and newly elected University President Father Edward "Monk" Malloy will work as a team, Beauchamp said.

Beauchamp, 44, current executive assistant to University President Father Theodore Hesburgh, and previously considered a possible successor to Hesburgh, will succeed Father Edmund Joyce, current executive vice president.

Joyce is retiring this year after serving at Hesburgh's side for the past 35 years.

Both Malloy and Beauchamp will serve five-year terms beginning on July 1, 1987.

"I'm very excited," said Beauchamp. A team was Beauchamp said he and Malloy will model their administration after that of Hesburgh and Joyce. That's (Malloy's) model. We will function as a team," he said.

"I think both (Father Joyce) and I believe the new team going now are going to bring a new spirit to the place. They're going to bring new ideals and new initiatives, and that's good," said Hesburgh.

Beauchamp, in addition to his role as executive assistant to the president, has also served as assistant professor of management in the College of Business Administration.

Beauchamp graduated from the University of Detroit in 1964 with a B.S. degree in accounting, receiving an M.B.A.

In Brief

A striking teacher in Pleasonton, Calif., helped to break up a kidnapping attempt by slamming the suspect with his picket sign, police said. Investigators said the incident outside the Fairlands Elementary School on Wednesday began when a man drove up in a truck, grabbed Nannette LeVesque, 39, by the arm and said, "Let's go, girl." LeVesque, who did not know the man, resisted and a friend of hers tried to help her. Then striking teacher Neil Shumate, 41, ran over, hit the man with a picket sign and wrestled him to the ground, police said. -Associated Press

A baby believed to be the newborn taken from his mother in Pennsylvania last week was found alive and well Thursday, and a man and a woman were arrested on kidnapping charges, the FBI said. Although the parents of Phillip Worthington still were awaiting the child's positive identification Thursday night, they announced that it was the "happiest day of our lives." Charged with kidnapping were Ramona Joan Thompson and George Stanley Soustek, said Andy Manning, a spokesman for the FBI in Baltimore. FBI agents arrested the two with the baby in a parking lot near a suburban Baltimore shopping mall. The woman was in a car with the baby. The week-old infant was believed to be the baby born Nov. 6 in Sellersville, Pa., to Neil and Barbara Worthington, Manning said. "We have not positively identified that child. We are printing the baby's feet and making all efforts to positively identify him," Manning said. -Associated Press

Divesting may be against the law, says a New Mexico official. The governor recently ordered state universities to divest their interests in firms with operations in South Africa, but the state's chief investment officer says the order violates the state's "prudent man rule," which requires him to manage the portfolio as profitable as possible. -The Observer

It's no laughing matter, said University of Florida officials after they refused to allow on-campus filming of a comedy to be broadcast on the Playboy Channel. They objected because the show would use the UF name for profit and because the school does not agree with Playboy's depiction of women. A Reptilian Ripoff netted charges of "unlawful possession of an alligator" against two University of Florida students. The duo say they "got a little fired up" about an upcoming football game and took the 6-foot animal from a nearby lake to their apartment. Witnesses called the police and the 'gator nappers were nabbed within the hour. The handcuffs? They were for the alligator. -The Observer

Widely-recognized leaders provide insight on success

"Having a bad start was probably the best thing that ever happened to me. We went 5-5 my first year, then lost the opener the following year. Everybody was placing bets on who would succeed me.

"Had we been moderately successful, I never would have questioned the way I was coaching. Now I constantly question everything I do."

These are the words of visiting football coach Joe Paterno commenting in an advertisement called "on staying power," which is sponsored by Panhandle Eastern Corporation and appears in many newspapers as The New York Times.

"On staying power" contains conversations with people widely recognized as perennial leaders in their professions. The purpose of the advertisements is to provide insight into the enduring values and attitudes that lead to success over a long period of time.

Recently, Charles Schulz, the creator of the Peanuts comic strip gave his philosophy on how he stays on top of his field.

Schulz said, "I am not concerned with simply surviving. I am very concerned about improving.

"To have staying power you must accommodate yourself to the task. I have never maintained that a comic strip is Great Art. It simply happens to be something I feel uniquely qualified to do," Schulz said.

From the words of recognized leaders, one should note leadership is a learning process. To maintain leadership one must do what he does best and leave to others what he cannot do well.

In short, one can see common threads between most of society's leaders. One could conclude that universal principles exist which assist successful leaders.

How a leader interprets these principles helps determine whether he succeeds or fails at his task.

At Notre Dame, University President Father Theodore Hesburgh has staying power built on a clarity of purpose and a spirit of tenacity, a tenacity he inherited from his predecessors who built and rebuilt Notre Dame.

In "The Hesburgh Papers," Hesburgh wrote, "Over the years, one's philosophy of education grows and becomes more precise and detailed. What I wrote 15 years ago I would hardly write today."

Hesburgh has, as Schulz said, "accommodated" himself to the task at hand. He has changed the University while constantly learning from the changes he has witnessed.

"Of course every leader has to have a personal vision of where he or she wants to lead, but just having it won't do. Effective leadership means getting the best people you can find to share the vision and help in achieving it. Whether you are talking about being president of the United States or president of Willow Grove College, the principle is equally valid," Hesburgh wrote.

Interestingly, both Paterno and Hesburgh, two different kind of leaders, both quoted Churchill, who faced problems of much greater proportion than either of these leaders.

Joe Murphy

Editor-in-Chief

Paterno wrote, "I never get excited by a win, because, as Churchill said, 'Success is never final.' Likewise, I never get depressed over a loss. I look for the lesson in it."

Hesburgh cited Churchill's quote, "The only guide to a man is his conscience." He was using Churchill's statement to show that a man must do what is right over what is popular.

When Father Edward Malloy and Father William Beauchamp replace Hesburgh and Executive Vice President Father Edmund Joyce, these two new leaders will have to structure their own philosophy of leadership.

Fortunately, like Hesburgh, Paterno and Schulz, Notre Dame's new leaders will have the example and words of history's finest leaders as a guide.

History's message, though, applies not only to famous leaders but to all people, whether they lead an army, a team, a university or a small staff of workers.

Leadership involves sacrifice, patience, compassion and a host of intangible qualities the men I have cited possess.

None of this means leaders are not human. In fact, Hesburgh wrote that the most important quality of the person who governs well is "essere umano, to be human."

Leaders make mistakes, just as all of us do. We should expect nothing more of them than we expect of ourselves: to be the best we can be "with what we have, where we are," as Hesburgh has so many times said.

Notre Dame should receive the new president in that spirit. We must let him grow in the office that has grown so much during Hesburgh's 35 years.

Hickey expresses 'delight' over decision for Malloy

By MARGIE KERSTEN
Saint Mary's Editor

Saint Mary's students, faculty and administrators have all speculated who the new president of Notre Dame would be, who was announced Friday as Father Edward "Monk" Malloy.

"I am delighted with the choice of Malloy as Notre Dame's next president," said Saint Mary's President William Hickey. "His years of experience in the office of provost gives him good insight on the University; it's the best position to learn the innerworkings of the University."

"In my mind, I thought Malloy would probably be selected." He has the ordinary background of a president and has served as a faculty member, he said, adding, "He knows what makes a University run."

Hickey said he has known Malloy for a number of years and that he hopes for a positive relationship with Saint Mary's. "His desire to maintain Notre Dame as an outstanding Catholic University will be supportive to Saint Mary's."

Acting Vice President and Dean of Faculty for the College, Dorothy Feigl said she speculated, just as many students did, about the new

Notre Dame president. "Malloy has the difficult challenge of filling a position that has been held by Father Ted for 35 years." He comes with the best background and a broad view of the University, she added.

"Malloy will need time to be able to unravel his own plan on how he will be . . . and I think he will be his own person," Hickey said.

A Nov. 2 Chicago Tribune article stated that Malloy had been chosen president. Hickey said he thought this article must have had the hardest impact on Malloy himself, because he would be wondering if it were true.

"We wish him good fortune," said Feigl. Hickey said Hesburgh gave him advice when he became president in February, and "I would give the same advice to Malloy."

You have to be courageous because you will face a lot of tough decisions, he said. "Sometimes the easy way to provide an answer may not be the right way, and the right way may not be the popular way," Hickey said. "Never lose your sense of humor . . . a monumental crisis today may be trivial in 10 years."

Most importantly, however, is to keep laughing, he said.

ND community applauds decision

By MIRIAM HILL
Senior Staff Reporter

Members of the Notre Dame community applauded Friday's appointment of Associate Provost Father Edward "Monk" Malloy as University president, calling him "the best of the candidates."

"I can't imagine anyone not liking Ed Malloy," said Father Richard McBrien, chairman of Notre Dame's theology department. Malloy is an associate professor of Christian ethics in McBrien's department.

"Negative comments or lack of enthusiasm for the appointment will come from people who had a different candidate. And my answer to them is: Thank God it's Ed Malloy. As far as I'm concerned, he's the best of all the candidates," McBrien said.

Malloy, who will replace University President Father Theodore Hesburgh in May, is considered a careful thinker who is able to make tough decisions, according to faculty and students interviewed.

"He's well-respected, careful, thoughtful, tough when he has to be, reasonable, and solid," said John Roos, an associate professor of government and international studies who has served on two committees with Malloy.

Notre Dame Magazine Editor Walton Collins echoed Roos' opinion. "Malloy just seems to have a kind of serene quality that I think is good in an administrator, someone who can deal with what comes along and cope with it without a lot of wasted emotion," Collins said.

Several people characterized Malloy, 45, as a down-to-earth administrator who is aware of the concerns of both students and faculty.

"Although I think it's fair to say Notre Dame will probably lose a lot with the departure of Father Hesburgh with respect to fundraising, and public relations . . . I think what Father Malloy will bring to the job is a greater sense of closeness to the internal operations of the University," McBrien said.

McBrien added, however, that Malloy will have to become more outgoing in order to fulfill his duties as president. "Malloy doesn't like to draw attention to himself. The other side of the line, of course, is that the job requires a lot more than that," he said.

McBrien and others noted that Malloy has made unusually strong efforts as associate provost to stay in tune with Notre Dame faculty members.

Since he was appointed associate provost in 1982, for example, Malloy has tried to talk with each of Notre Dame's 800 faculty, Roos said.

Among students, Malloy has earned a reputation as a well-rounded man who can just as easily discuss ethical issues like abortion as mix it up on the basketball court with the residents of Sorin Hall, where he lives.

"Although he has some strong opinions himself, he seems to be open-minded to the students in his class. I think he will be an excellent president to replace Hesburgh," said Notre Dame senior Chris Toal, one of Malloy's students.

"He always makes it a point to tell his students that if they have any problems or questions, to stop by and see him in Sorin," Toal added.

As Malloy assumes the position of president, many people agree that his greatest outside asset will be the tradition left by Hesburgh.

Frank Reilly, dean of the College of Business Administration, said Malloy will be able to build on the strong financial foundation built by Hesburgh. In his 35-year tenure as president, Hesburgh has increased the University's endowment from $9 million to more than $350 million.

"Malloy has one of the critical qualities that is needed and that is 'vision' of where Notre Dame should go in the future," Reilly said.

Added Collins: "It's a big job, but I have a hunch he's going to do pretty well."

Decision called 'as bad as could be'

By JIM RILEY
Assistant News Editor

Approximately 75 to 100 people, mostly students, gathered outside the Board of Trustees meeting Friday around noon to express concern over the the Board's decision concerning divestment.

Peter Walshe, professor of government and international studies and member of the Ad Hoc Committee on South African Investments, announced to the group that the Board had not decided to divest and that the decision was "about as bad as it could be."

"Father Hesburgh is deeply reluctant to divest. The trusttees have decided to wait until May to divest when Hesburgh is retiring," said Walshe.

Father Oliver Williams, professor of management and also a member of the ad hoc committee, said later, "I think timing the alleged divestment with Hesburgh's retirement is ridiculous."

Williams said Hesburgh was in fact quite open to divestment, but that Williams himself was the major force against divestment at this time.

Walshe said Notre Dame committed last May to divest if the situation in South Africa deteriorated. "The situation has since deteriorated catastrophically," said Walshe. "The evidence is clear."

"The committee felt it's not clear to us at this point, that having a company leave does more good than having it stay," Williams said.

Williams said, "The policy gives us plenty of flexibility and also we are very much on record as opposed to apartheid in South Africa."

Two banners were taken away from the group by a man identifying himself as a security officer, according to several students present at the gathering. Rex Rakow, director of security, said he would not comment until Monday.

trustees have pointed to next May to make a review.

"That's the pressure point," said Conklin.

"There was never a formal vote taken" by the Board, said Conklin. During the presentation of the report, one clarification was asked for, but otherwise the Board received the report as it was presented.

Most of the conclusions of the ad hoc committee's report were restatements of past policy, according to Conklin. The first conclusion, however, was new. It said "the committee recognizes the need for complete reassessment of its investment policy in May, 1987 following publication of Reverend Sullivan's recommendations and pursuant to evaluation of progress by the South African government in the dismantling of apartheid called for by the American bishops."

Sullivan said in May 1985 that if all statutory apartheid was not eliminated from South Africa by May 1987, all companies should leave South Africa and an economic embargo should be undertaken, according to Father Oliver Williams, member of the ad hoc committee and professor of management.

All the endowments of universities that have been following the Sullivan principles face a dilemma, said Williams. "Most of us feel that the (South) government won't have eliminated all those laws," said Williams. Since Sullivan has said he will call for divestment in that case, the University will have to decide whether there is reason to keep those investments, said Williams.

Conklin said the University adopted the enhanced Sullivan principles in 1984.

The American Catholic bishops have called on Catholic institutions to divest from businesses operating in South Africa or use their votes in shareholder referendums if there is no significant progress toward dismantling apartheid by May 1987, according to the committee's report.

The investment committee, ad hoc committee, and executive committee have the power to divest from certain businesses at any time without calling the full board together, said Conklin. The committees have used this power recently to divest their holdings in certain companies, said Conklin, though the Board did not specify the names of those companies.

Notre Dame has divested about 13 companies from its portfolio since its first policy in 1978, said Conklin. "We have investments in 29 companies having employees in South Africa," he said.

The investments amount to $33 million or 9 percent of the University's endowment, according to Conklin.

The ad hoc committee is made up of six trustees and three faculty members. Only Peter Walshe, professor of government and international relations and director of African studies, dissented from the ad hoc committee's report.

Malloy well-equipped to lead Notre Dame

By MIRIAM HILL and CINDY RAUCKHORST
Senior Staff Reporters

Notre Dame's newly-named president will come to the job well-equipped, bringing with him an extensive background in both educational and administrative aspects of the University.

Father Edward "Monk" Malloy, a 45-year-old native of Washington, D.C., most recently has served as the University's associate provost. In this position, he has assisted Provost Timothy O'Meara in coordinating all facets of University academic life.

Malloy has spent about half of his life here, arriving in 1959 on a University basketball scholarship.

The Sorin Hall resident said he will continue to live in the hall next year.

"I've found I enjoy living in a dorm. . . it gives me an accessibility that I wouldn't have otherwise," Malloy said.

Basketball fans expressed enthusiasm at Malloy's decision to continue the tradition of "Monk Hoops," the weekly Sorin contests named for Malloy.

"I'll play as long as I can still walk," Malloy said. "I enjoy playing basketball as much now, if not more, than I did (during his days as a Notre Dame player)."

The new president, well-known among students for his accessibility and ability to relate to undergraduate concerns, said he values this reputation among students.

"I prize spending time and being available to students, and I will struggle to find ways to have a presence with students, or as many students as I can," he said.

In the past, Malloy has maintained student contact primarily through his popular theology courses, whose consistently large class lists attest to the associate professor's reputation as a campus educator.

Malloy has chaired two University-wide committees, one which recommended updates in the core curriculum, and another which last year instigated an academic honesty code for the University.

Described by many as a prolific writer, Malloy specializes in the study of Christian ethical issues such as sexuality, war and peace, criminology and biomedicine. He has written two books and numerous articles on ethical subjects.

"I think any public figure today has to have social concerns, and my particular training is to teach about them," he said.

At Vanderbilt University, Malloy earned a doctoral degree in Christian ethics in 1975 after completing theological studies as part of a Smith Fellowship.

He then returned to Notre Dame as a member of the theology department faculty.

During an undergraduate trip to Mexico with the Community for the Lay Apostolate, Malloy said he received a calling to the priesthood. But before entering Moreau Seminary in 1969, Malloy completed his undergraduate and master's degrees in English at Notre Dame, in 1963 and 1967 respectively.

While at Moreau, Malloy completed a master's degree in theology, and in 1970 was ordained a priest in Sacred Heart Church.

"For me, my primary identity is as a priest," Malloy said. He added that being Notre Dame's president will simply be another way for him to carry out his ministry as a priest.

Malloy said his decision to enter the priesthood also was influenced by his strong Catholic background.

"I was an altar boy, I went to Catholic grade school and high school," he said, adding that there were many priests over the years whom he admired and who influenced his decision.

degree from the same institution two years later. He pursued postgraduate studies in higher education on a part-time basis at Michigan State University between 1966 and 1971 while teaching and serving as associate director of admissions at Alma College in Alma, Michigan.

In 1975, after receiving a Juris Doctor degree from the University of Notre Dame Law School, he returned to Alma to work as an attorney in a general practice law firm. He entered Moreau Seminary at Notre Dame in January, 1977, received a master's in divinity degree in 1981 and was ordained a priest April 17, 1982. Between 1980 and 1984, when he assumed his present position, he served as administrative assistant to Notre Dame's executive vice president Father Joyce.

In 1984, he chaired the University Committee on the Responsible Use of Alcohol, which set the University's present policy on student use and abuse of alcohol.

priests in Holy Cross, we can continue to build on the legacy of these last 35 years."

The board's vote confirmed the selection of the 10-member nominating committee, which had met earlier and chose Malloy.

The announcement came during a news conference crowded with reporters, trustees and cameras at the Morris Inn.

Press reports had earlier identified Malloy, who is also an associate professor of theology, as the candidate who would be nominated and confirmed.

As president, Malloy said he will "continue with many of the directions that have already been started.

"It is clear to me that Notre Dame needs to be a major graduate research institution," said Malloy, adding that capable faculty must be attracted to accomplish this.

Malloy, who holds undergraduate and graduate degrees at Notre Dame, said he also wants to continue the "established legacy of high quality undergraduate education."

Added Malloy: "We will, as every major university will, continue to struggle with achieving the proper balance between those two high goals."

In addition, the president-elect said he wanted to keep the residentiality of Notre Dame by continuing to attract "dedicated and fine people to our dormitory staffs."

Malloy, who played varsity basketball for Notre Dame as an undergraduate, said he "would like to see us maintain the standards of the Joyce era—that competitive, high quality athletic program."

At the same time, Malloy said he wanted "to maintain our academic and conduct standards, something that I think has been the hallmark of Notre Dame up to now.

"And to make all of this happen we're going to have to raise money," Malloy said, looking out at the trustees in the makeshift press room.

"And I hope we can continue to find generous friends who want to be part of this common endeavor."

Asked whether there would be any co-ed dorms or parietals changes during his administration, Malloy replied, "We will have organic rather than disruptive changes."

But, he added, "I will not be committed one way or the other."

Keough, who was the head of the nominating committee, described the method of choosing a president as "a long, thoughtful and caring process."

"The result has made us very happy," he added.

The selection process became necessary when Hesburgh told the Board of Trustees in 1982 that he would retire in five more years.

Speaking at the news conference, Hesburgh said, "This is a great day of joy for us.

"You work hard trying to build something and you hope that somehow the thrust forward will continue and that the University will continue to grow and prosper in as many ways as possible.

"I think both Ned (Joyce) and I believe the new team going now are going to really bring a new spirit to the place.

"They're going to bring new ideals and new initiatives and that's good. Places need change . . . That's what keeps places vital.

Speaking about his upcoming presidency, Malloy said he believes "in consultation, in a collaborative style, in listening."

Malloy, who has lived in Sorin Hall for eight years, said he will continue living in the dorm next year.

"I live with and among the students," he said. "I don't know of a greater group of people than Notre Dame students."

Dame." Bartell, executive director of the University's Kellogg Institute for International Studies, said, "I'm happy for Monk and I know he'll do a tremendous job. I know everyone will be behind him."

When asked about his immediate reaction to the decision, Tyson said, "Relief, quite frankly."

McCafferty also said he was relieved. He said he did not foresee any change in his position as an associate professor of law. "I'm delighted to continue teaching full-time," he added.

Commenting on Malloy's remarks to the Board of Trustees and the press, McCafferty said Malloy "struck all the right chords."

power. It is now a recognized leader for reform in college athletics, an ideal for the rest of the country.

"He's an inspiration to everyone," says Athletic Director Gene Corrigan. "He's always stood for excellence.

He's a great role model for our athletes."

But now a new player has been given the ball, a former athlete. Should that make a difference to Notre Dame's athletics? Corrigan and Valdiserri both say no. Not only has Malloy been given a solid university, but he also has been given a top-notch athletic department, one with higher ideals than just wins and losses.

Congratulations

Beuerlein wraps up career

Senior QB reflects on four years at Notre Dame

By DENNIS CORRIGAN
Sports Editor

An early snow storm has made Steve Beuerlein's room a warm haven. He lives in a corner room in Sorin Hall, arguably one of the most prestigious and coveted rooms on campus. Outside the wind swirls the still light snowfall. Inside, soft jazz plays in the speakers. A game ball from Notre Dame's 31-3 win over Air Force this season lies next to a chair.

"I'd rather play in the snow than in the rain," Beuerlein says. That sounds odd coming from a native of Fullerton, Calif., until you stop and consider his career at Notre Dame.

Change of scene, November 16, 1985. A charged Notre Dame team, winners of four straight, comes to State College to face No. 1 Penn State. In the rain, cold and quagmire, the Nittany Lions dismantle the Irish, who would go on to lose their final two games of the season and, ultimately, their coach.

For most of Beuerlein's career at Notre Dame, it has seemed that the rain had been falling on him and his teammates. Countless games in the rain, mostly at home, had been played. And in many, the Irish had come away winless. The end of last season, he says, was the lowest point of his career.

"I can't pick out a time or day, but just the way the whole thing ended with Coach Faust," Beuerlein says. "It was a very rough year for me personally as well as for the whole team. I was really just down, and it just seemed like the whole world was caving in around us and around myself.

"I just thank God for the friends that I've got and made here and the people that helped me through that whole thing and kept me and everyone fighting on. That's the reason why we're where we're at today. Any normal group of people would have folded a long time ago, but we're still fighting because we know we can still make something out of it."

For much of last season, Beuerlein was involved in a quarterback controversy which stemmed from an injury to his shoulder against USC - the same shoulder that had been operated

Not in 64 years

S.B. pair a fixture at home games

By KATHLEEN MCKERNAN
Sports Writer

In 1921, the Notre Dame football team played in a wooden Cartier Field stadium, and Knute Rockne led the Irish.

Sixty-four years later, Lou Holtz enters his first year as Irish coach, the 11th after Rockne, and close to 60,000 fans pack Notre Dame Stadium every home football Saturday.

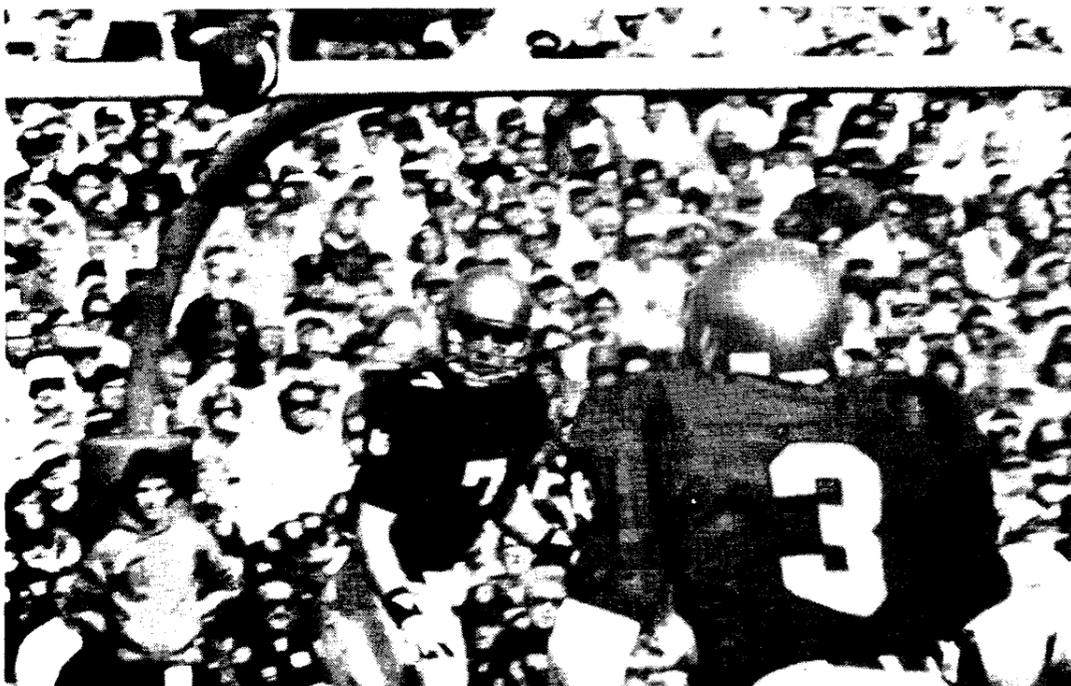

But according to Helen Fisher and Thelma Covell, South Bend residents who have attended games since the 1921 season, Notre Dame football has not changed all that much.

"It's still basically the same," Covell says. "There's the new stadium and there have been different coaches, but the atmosphere - the excitement - is the same.

Helen Fisher brings a consecutive game attendance record of 282 into today's game against Penn State. Thelma Covell missed two games a few years ago because of an illness in her family, but those are the only two games the pair has missed between them since the 1922 season.

The women come prepared for every game with blankets and cushions for their comfort. Despite the sometimes harsh South Bend weather, the devoted tandem never leave early.

on after his sophomore year. When Terry Andrysiak directed the team to a 41-17 win over Navy, the two were shuffled in and out the rest of the way.

When Lou Holtz signed on, the quarterback question arose almost immediately but with a new twist.

"At first I wasn't sure (what to expect)," Beuerlein says, "because everywhere he had gone he had been associated with some sort of the option. It's not going to surprise anybody that I'm really not an option quarterback. I never had been and never will be. I was a little apprehensive at first about the whole situation."

Holtz put all Beuerlein's fears to rest. Almost from day one, Holtz reiterated that Beuerlein was and would be his starting quarterback.

"It was very good for me in the spring to hear that," says Beuerlein. "I was coming off a very frustrating year for me personally and it probably was wavering my confidence. I wasn't quite sure if the whole thing was meant to work out for me."

Still it wasn't enough for the fans or the media. Weekly, Holtz would defend his quarterback and, at times, chastised the media for its criticism of Beuerlein.

"All quarterbacks, if they're going to be successful, have to have a lot of confidence in themselves," says Beuerlein. They've got to believe in themselves and not worry about what other people are saying about them. At times it's hard to do, and I admit that last year, at times, it got to me. I was trying to go out there and make things happen when what I should have been doing was going out there and playing my game and not worrying about what people were saying. I was trying to make the big play all the time."

Now, after a 1-4 start, the big plays are coming for Beuerlein. Although Holtz is known for his use of the ground game, Beuerlein has had his best back-to-back performances in some time, throwing for 517 yards (27-for-42 passing) and three touchdowns. Two of his scoring strikes have been to Tim Brown for 77 and 84 yards. He is Notre Dame's career leader in six categories, including total offense and passing yards. Despite the up-and-down nature of his stay at Notre Dame, Beuerlein wouldn't have had it any other way.

"I wouldn't trade the Notre Dame experience for anything in the world," he says. "It's been a very special place for me, and the people I've met and the opportunities that it's given me are incomparable. I never could have experienced it anywhere else."

"Football has been up and down to say the least throughout the four years. If I had to do it all over again, there's no doubt in my mind I'd do it again. There were a lot of good times, a lot of fun times But you've got to learn to take the good with the bad and just keep your head up and keep fighting and become as good as you possibly can be."

Soon, Notre Dame will be a memory for Beuerlein. The Dome and stadium will have faded into the background. Fall at Notre Dame will be over sooner than expected.

"It just kind of hit me last week for the first time as we were going into the SMU game," Beuerlein says. "It's so hard to believe because I remember when I was a freshman when they introduced the seniors, Blair Kiel and all those guys. I thought, 'Wow that's a long way, I'll never get there.' All of a sudden it's three days away for me."

"It's kind of overwhelming and it is sad. It's something I'm not really too excited about from the standpoint of not ever having a chance to play there again. I wouldn't want it in any different situation than it is now (playing Penn State)."

Change scene, April 27, 1986. A team named Lee's BBQ Roundhouse with a guard named Steve Beuerlein wins the Bookstore Basketball XV tournament. On a bright, sunny day, Beuerlein has found a championship at Notre Dame. Although he admits to taking it a little too seriously, Beuerlein truly enjoys playing ("That's the way I have fun."). For next year, he promises to be back with Bookstore and football teammate Mike Kovaleski and "a secret sub" for Jim Dolan. For Beuerlein, the often embattled quarterback, it's another shot at the sun.

These two aren't actual fair-weather fans when it comes to braving the cold, but they are definitely hard on the teams they follow. Through their clerical careers, they met many of the Irish coaches, but personal contacts have not changed their opinions on any of the coaches.

Covell and Fisher go for the winners, and they admit to having a soft spot for Irish coaching legend Ara Parseghian, who posted an .888 winning percentage and racked up 56 victories at home in 11 years.

"When they win, you love them," Fisher says. "When they don't, you just wonder what's the matter with them. Every coach is a little bit different. We may have met them, but we care more about winning."

What's the verdict so far on Lou Holtz and his 4-4 mark?

"I think he's going to be great," Covell says, "at least I hope so."

When Fisher and Covell first bought their season tickets, the price was only $10. Now the price has risen to almost twice that - for a single game at $18.

The women have gotten their share of publicity for their streak, which covers 64 years. Recently, the South Bend Tribune featured them, and the story was picked up by national wires. The attention has been pleasant, but somewhat confusing, for the pair.

"We enjoy the games," Fisher says. "We come and will always come because we enjoy them, not to get written up. Lately the players and coaches will come and talk to us. That's nice, but we'd come anyway."

"It's strange to get attention for this," Covell adds. "I mean, I've gone to Mass every Sunday for more than 64 years and no one gets all excited about that."

Corrigan clarifies scheduling remarks

By DENNIS CORRIGAN
Sports Editor

Notre Dame Athletic Director Gene Corrigan denied charges that Notre Dame is softening its future football schedule, saying "The thought that we're trying to come up with a cream-puff schedule really does blow my mind."

Corrigan's remarks came at a press conference Friday and were a response to an article in Wednesday's Toledo Blade as well as much-abbreviated articles that had appeared in papers around the country on Thursday. In the Blade article, Corrigan said that Notre Dame was attempting to buy more games to increase Notre Dame's home schedule, not to make it easier by scheduling such opponents as Indiana, Northwestern and Stanford.

Corrigan reiterated this point Friday. "My whole gist of the conversation that I had with John Guggler (author of the original article) was that we needed more home games," Corrigan said. "I can't imagine a school that sells out every game, and has for 27 years since Ara (Parseghian) came, having five home games one year and six the next. Financially, it's a killer for us because we don't get into fund raising and we don't intend to."

"The money that we make from football and basketball is what runs a 21-sport program at the the University of Notre Dame and the best interhall program anywhere in the world. And in order to sustain that, one of the things that we have to do is buy some home games."

What Corrigan wants is to play six to seven home games a season to increase revenues. The yearly imbalance between the number of home games is a result of home-and-home series which most major programs insist upon in order to play Notre Dame. By buying home games, Notre Dame gives the opponent a monetary guarantee for playing the game on the road. In turn, Notre Dame is in no way obligated to play a second game at the opponent's home.

In order to this, single games had to be added with teams Corrigan said had asked to play Notre Dame.

"Indiana's just a one-game series," said Corrigan. "The Northwestern game was one that they came to us a couple of years ago and felt that their program needed a lift like an announcement that we were going to start to play them again."

"We wanted to play a game in Chicago so we scheduled a game in Soldier field. We think it's a good game for us to open with."

"We're playing Miami of Ohio, the cradle of coaching," continued Corrigan. It's a wonderful school with great tradition. Their athletic director's getting ready to retire and he and I are friends. He said to me, 'one thing I'd never ask you, and I'd love to have, is a game with Notre Dame.' That was about 2 weeks before they beat LSU, and we decided before they beat LSU that we would give them an opening game in the 90's."

Corrigan also was quoted as saying that Notre Dame wanted to play more schools that shared Notre Dame's philosophy of academics and athletics.

"If you're all aware of the CFA academic awards, there are only three schools that have won it—Duke, Virginia and Notre Dame. Duke and Virginia have talked to us about a one-game set out here."

Corrigan reaffirmed Notre Dame's commitment to playing intersectional games across the nation but said the Irish would not play everywhere every year.

"We'd really like to play in every section but not every year," he said. "It's a good draw for the people that we play there, and that's why we'd like to get into every part of the country. We're trying to get a series going with Boston College, but that does not mean that we're going to play Boston College every year from now to eternity. We've got a four game set with them in the 90's."

"We've got a three-game set with BYU. I don't consider them one of the soft teams in the country. We felt that's an area the country we have not been. We're playing Washington, Ohio State and two games with Texas."

Any changes that would be made in Notre Dame's schedule wouldn't take effect until after 1992, which is as far as Notre Dame's schedule is planned.

Lions

The respect that Holtz pays to the Penn State defense is well deserved. The Lions are ranked third nationally in total defense and fifth in turnover margin with 32 gained and 16 lost. Six-of-nine opponents have been held to less than 100 yard rushing, averaging 51.0 yards per game over the last six contests. Until Maryland scored twice in the fourth quarter, Penn State went 16 periods without giving up a TD.

Penn State has a host of defensive leaders. Outside linebacker Shane Conlan has 64 tackles while tackle Bob White and outside linebacker Don Graham each have seven sacks. Cornerback Duffy Cobb, who saved the Maryland game by breaking up the two-point conversion attempt late in the game, has four interceptions. Penn State has picked off at least one pass in eight of the Lion's nine games, and now has a total of 19 interceptions. "(Nose tackle) Mike Russo (23 tackles) is extremely strong," says Holtz. "(Inside linebacker) Trey Bauer (53 tackles) is very quick. But it is not individual play. We don't have everybody in synche (on defense) while they all compliment each other.

"They absolutely control the line of scrimmage. We won't have a chance without outstanding defense because you just won't score 30 points against Penn State."

According to Holtz, using new offensive sets and trick plays will not work.

"Whatever you show them they have seen before, they have a complete defensive package. Paterno does a great job blending the defense with the offense (because) he wishes to control the ball."

The veteran senior Penn State defense will run up against an Irish offense and quarterback is rolling up points lately.

In the recent victories, Notre Dame has been led by Beuerlein (102-of-175, 7 TDs, 5 interceptions) who established a career best for passing yardage with 269 against SMU and now has not thrown an interception in the last three games. He leads an offense that has only been outgained in total yards and first downs by one team, Pittsburgh, all season long.

Notre Dame will send tailback Anthony Johnson (58-for-278, 5 TDs), fullback Pernel Taylor (60-for-264, 5 TDs), tailback Mark Green (64-for-248, 2 TDs) and flanker Tim Brown (45-for-217, 2 TDs) against Penn State after gaining 322 yards against SMU.

While Brown has stolen the show, split end Milt Jackson (19-for-238) and tight end Joel Williams (9-for-107, 3 TDs) both have impressed Holtz with their play away from the ball.

Brown ranks second on the NCAA all-purpose yardage chart, averaging 14.9 yards everytime he touches the ball, and netting 173.6 yards per game for the All-America candidate.

On special teams, Notre Dame punter Dan Sorensen averages 39.2 yards and placekicker John Carney is 14-20 on FGs, leading the team in points with 63. Lion's punter John Bruno averages 41.6 yards while placekicker Manca has 37 FGs and 63 points. The Irish plan to counter the ferocious Penn State kick-off coverage by using Skip Holtz to neutralize the Lions kicker downfield.

Time Capsule

Lions hold off Irish, 21-17

ND's last ditch effort intercepted

By MARTY STRASEN
Assistant Sports Editor

Late in the fourth quarter, everything Notre Dame had built up against 13th-ranked Penn State turned to dust.

Blair Kiel had led the Irish in an impressive comeback in that 1981 contest, and all they had to do was put together one more sustained drive to run out the clock and pick up their fourth consecutive victory of the season. But against the Nittany Lions, a 21-17 lead could not have looked slimmer.

In Penn State territory, Kiel, who had thrown a pair of touchdown passes earlier in the game to erase a 10-point deficit and give Notre Dame the edge, dropped back and tossed the ball in the direction of Phil Carter. Penn State played the play perfectly, however, as the defensive linemen dropped back to cover for the blitzing linebackers, and third-string tackle Greg Gattuso came up with the interception.

It was then time for another sophomore quarterback to turn the game's indecisive tide around for the last time. Lions' signal-caller Todd Blackledge, booed by the capacity crowd of 84,175 earlier in the contest for his less-than-impressive performance, marched his Fiesta Bowl-bound team 82 yards for the winning touchdown.

Blackledge capped the drive with a one-yard keeper off the option, but it was the work of reserve tailback Jon Williams that sparked the move downfield. Williams, subbing for an injured Curt Warner, found holes in the Irish defense when Penn State needed yardage, and popped through the line three straight times for 46 yards on the winning drive. Williams finished the game with 192 total yards, the most gained by any back against the Irish that year.

The Lions came roaring out of the gate to open the game, building up a 14-3 lead on Williams and Blackledge runs, and added a field goal early in second quarter to go on top, 17-3.

A Penn State fumble late in the half set up a Kiel-to-Hunter 17-yard score to pull the Irish to within a touchdown, and an interception by linebacker Bob Crable led to Notre Dame's go-ahead score early in the third frame—a four-yard Kiel hook-up to John Sweeney.

Those were not enough to save the visiting Irish against highly-touted Penn State in 1981, however. The Lions had been looming in the shadows, waiting for the right time to pounce. And when the scent of Kiel's interception hit their noses, Gerry Faust's Irish fell like helpless prey.

vs.

By MIKE SZYMANSKI
Sports Writer

Why does the Notre Dame football team want to beat Penn State so badly Saturday?

Perhaps it is because the Nittany Lions are undefeated and are trying to improve their national ranking (third) and chance for a bowl game for the National Championship.

Or it could be that Penn State thrashed the Irish last season 36-6 in the rain on national television. In that game, Massimo Manca kicked five field goals and Steve Beuerlein threw three interceptions. The Irish also lost two fumbles and had a punt blocked.

Maybe it has something to do with the fact that Notre Dame has not beaten a top-ranked team all season, going 0-2 against second-ranked teams Michigan and Alabama. Whatever the reason, the Irish cannot afford the mistakes that cost them those games if they expect to be 5-4.

"If our football team does not turn the football over," says Head Coach Lou Holtz, "and we play a sound kicking game, and all of our people play each and every play without an error, we can play with Penn State. But that's a lot of ifs."

"Penn State is almost two turnovers a game in the plus. They punch at the ball and they are quick with good hands. Penn State's stats tell the story."

And what an ugly story it is for the Irish. The Nittany Lions average 29.8 points and 412.5 yards (251.8 rushing, 160.7 passing) per game while surrendering 10.0 points and 275.3 yards (64.1 rushing, 211.3 passing) per game.

"This is as good a football team as we've played all year," said Holtz. "They are the quickest team we have played, they're sound fundamentally and they do what it takes to win. They start something like 18 seniors and these are kids that already have the experience of playing for the national championship last year."

Penn State's offense vs. Notre Dame's defense

Penn State's dominating ball control rushing game will collide with Notre Dame's defensive strength, permitting no team more than 186 yards, and the one left standing should win the game. Penn State will bring D.J. Dozier (141 for 657, 9 TDs) along with a pair of tough fullbacks, Tim Manoa and Steve Smith, to bear on the Irish.

"Shaffer isn't a spectacular quarterback," said Holtz, "but he never seems to make a bad play and he's a winner."

As of late the Nittany Lions have had trouble putting the ball in the end zone after working it down the field. In the last two weeks, they have scored only three TD's after gaining 772 yards and rolling up 47 first downs.

"You've got to give Maryland credit," ing TDs in eight games. But, defensive end Wally Kleine (6-9, 274), the anchor of the left side, will miss the game because of a shoulder injury. Jeff Kunz (6-6, 252), who filled in against SMU, will start.

On the other side, Robert Banks (6-5, 250) has terrorized the enemy all season, totaling 37 tackles behind linebacker Mike Kovaleski and Kleine. Kovaleski, the leader at 57, will return following a slight concussion against SMU.

Linebacker Cedric Figaro (6-3, 232), who established a single-season team record for fumble recoveries at seven, has come up with the big play on defense all season. He has 36 tackles this season.

Shaffer will test a Notre Dame secondary that has been severely hampered by key injuries to Mike Haywood and Brandy Wells.

Free safety Steve Lawrence "has had a couple of fine games in a row," according to Holtz. Senior cornerback Marv Spence has teamed up with Lawrence to give the backfield some stability. In a surprise move, tailback Mark Green, who excelled at defensive back DB in high school, has seen some work at that position in practice this week.

If the Irish hope to stop the Lions, it will be through turnovers. Notre Dame caused four turnovers against SMU, its best effort in that category in '86, and intercepted two passes. In the first five games of the season Notre Dame went 1-4 turning over the ball 14 times and capturing 10 opponent turnovers. In the last three games, Notre Dame is 3-0, losing the ball two times and recovering it eight times.

Penn State's defense vs. Notre Dame's offense

"When you get the football, Penn State really goes on offense," says Holtz. "They run 34 different defenses, where you might have seen two or three a couple of years ago. They are very complex. Their defense is really outstanding, unbelievable."

"Dozier is at his best in big games," said Holtz. "Smith and Manoa are hard running fullbacks and great blockers. The offensive line is excellent."

Penn State makes very few mistakes which is most evident in its effective passer John Shaffer (99 of 172 for 1296, 8 TDs, 4 interceptions). On the receiving end, Dozier, tight end Brian Silverling (17 for 233) and flanker Eric Hamilton (15 for 267, 3 TDs) will have the ailing Irish secondary running every which way.

said Head Coach Joe Paterno after narrowly beating the Terps 17-15 on a blocked conversion pass last week. "We missed too many scoring opportunities, particularly early in the game. We've got to be a little less cavalier and get in there early. We've got to get the killer instinct and until we do that, we'll find ourselves in some tough games."

And the Notre Dame defense strengthens at the goal line. Penn State has 24 touchdowns on the ground while the Irish have given up only eight rush-

Each week, the Observer sports staff, a random student picked by the sports editor and some well-known figure in the Notre Dame community predict the outcome of the week's major college football games. Records are compiled as to how each person does against the spread. In other words, it isn't enough to pick the winner of a given game. The person must pick the winner and give the underdog points. Malloy will build on Hesburgh's foundation

The Notre Dame Board of Trustees has just made what is possibly the most important decision in its existence. For the past 35 years, Notre Dame has been guided by the hand and vision of a single man, Father Theodore Hesburgh.

On May 17, 1987, all of that will change; Father Edward "Monk" Malloy will become the next president of the University of Notre Dame.

The profound significance of this change may not be realized as of yet by many members of the Notre Dame family. More than an entire generation of students has passed through this academic institution, influenced by Hesburgh. Three-fourths of all living Notre Dame alumni have Hesburgh's signature on their diplomas. Thirty-five years worth of Notre Dame graduates have gone on to influence this country in business, science, religion, government, the clergy and the armed forces - all a product of Hesburgh's Notre Dame.

Through good times and bad, Hesburgh has been a stabilizing force, a solid Catholic founder and father, for an institution that is in constant change. He has built a university on a Catholic ideal that has produced sports powerhouses and Nobel Prize winners. His years, however they may be perceived, are almost over.

Now, because the imminent changing of the guard finally has been announced, the Notre Dame family can look forward to new leadership, new direction. Malloy, chosen out of a qualified field of administrators, will take the helm of the University to influence its next generation of students.

At the end of this academic year, Malloy will inherit a university on the move, with a growing endowment and an ever-improving campus. The challenges before Malloy differ vastly from those Hesburgh faced. Notre Dame needs a president who, upon taking charge of this University, will build upon the success of the past 35 years.

Malloy appears to fit that need correctly. A devoted theologian, a successful assistant provost and a popular resident hall member, Malloy is truly devoted to Notre Dame. He has been described as resolute and unflappable. Father "Monk" Malloy fits well into an overwhelmingly successful future for this University.

The decision has been a long time in coming. The Board of Trustees nominating committee has had to make some tough decisions. Five outstanding candidates were considered for the position of the next president of the University of Notre Dame.

The choice has been made. Father Edward "Monk" Malloy will step forward and lead this university and its devoted family to a future of greatness.

Many challenges issued in Monk's open room

Every night as I walk across the "God Quad" on my way home I'm greeted by the familiar face of Sorin Hall. The porch light is always lit, and the front windows tell the tale of all my friends who are a little behind in their classes.

Shawn Sexton

hail to the chief

Sometimes when it's really late, the hall is dark except for one light shining out of the right front turret.

As I climb the stairs and pass the lighted room, I always check for a sign on the door that says "WELCOME." I know Monk Malloy is home.

Many times I've stopped in this room to pose a question, to ask for advice or to say hello. Monk's door always has been open to me, as it has been to anyone wishing to knock on it.

I remember one time when I was a freshman I dropped by Monk's room and stayed for several hours. Students streamed in and out all night. I was amazed by the wide array of topics they came to talk about, and by the sensitivity shown by Monk to various students' problems and questions.

A great number of these students expected Monk to make a decision for them. To those people, he always posed more questions. No one left that room without having a question asked of him that he could answer immediately. Each left thinking.

Monk consistently asks the questions that people need to ask themselves. Rarely will he answer a question a person should answer for himself. Monk constantly is trying to help those who come to him make responsible decisions on values, attitudes and issues which confront all of us in our daily lives.

I always have felt a challenge entering that room, a challenge to evaluate myself and the world around me in order to improve and gain perspective. Monk issues that challenge on every visit.

Now that Monk Malloy has been elected president of the University I know he will be posing questions to the entire Notre Dame family, giving the University a challenge to answer the questions it must ask of itself in the coming years. I'm certain Monk Malloy carries with him to the presidency the same sincerity and concern he has shown to all of us who have been fortunate enough to enter his room and feel his presence.

Congratulations Monk on a position well deserved. Every night as I walk across the "God Quad" next year I'm sure I'll see the familiar face of the Administration Building with its front turret lit up, and I'm sure if I go inside and look on your office door I will find a sign that says "WELCOME."

Caring and listening are Monk's trademarks

He was heard to say...

"Now, I'm only going to say this once. When I was in third grade there was a boy we called 'Bunk.' Of course, he didn't like it. So he searched for names that he could use on us. In my case it was 'Monk.' I don't know if it was the alliteration he liked or just the fact that it rhymed with 'Bunk,' but it stuck. You can call me whatever you like, but everyone else calls me Monk."

Ken Dice

guest column

First impressions are everything. And as I and 40 other freshmen sat in Sorin's chapel listening to the rector, assistant rector, and four R.A.s, we couldn't help but wonder who was the man that had not spoken yet. We all laughed when the tall, lanky priest insisted we call him "Monk," but, four years later, that is the only thing I remember from that hall orientation meeting. First impressions might not last forever, but this one has lasted four years and is still going strong.

Perhaps the best thing you can do when you talk with Monk is listen. He has a lot to say. Actually, he has a lot he could say. Monk is not the "host with the most" who talks incessantly about anything and everything. He is not a stand-up comic with a routine for every situation. In fact, Monk usually only talks when asked to or when impending doom will be the result of his silence. But when he does, you can feel the knowledge, experience, and sincerity in the room.

You won't be alone in feeling this "Monkness"; thousands of others have already. Students who take his class listen because he is learned in theology. People around the country listen because he is learned in many areas. "Dear Abby" listens because he is learned in morality and current problems. Learned people listen because learned people like to listen to other learned people. Everyone in Sorin listens because he lives in Sorin. Students all over the campus come to talk and listen to Monk because they know he listens. The list becomes longer with each passing day. But why?

Monk has the rare and paradoxical quality of being open-minded and opinionated. He gives every idea a chance whether it comes from a respected author or a freshman in his theology class. Every influential work, and the majority of the not-so-influential ones, has been read along with the papers of thousands of students covering every topic imaginable. But even with this great influx of ideas and opinions Monk has not fallen into the trap of indecisiveness. His beliefs are firm and his opinions are strong. These beliefs and opinions never dominate, they merely guide his words of advice and counsel.

Any one of us could buy a set of encyclopedias if we wanted the facts and answers to every possible question. Books, records, video tapes full of advice and soothing words abound in today's fast-paced world. But none of these can take the place of Monk. Monk is more than a pillar of knowledge, for a pillar of knowledge would be unapproachable. You wouldn't ask Einstein to help you with a physics problem and you wouldn't think of asking e. e. cummings to diagram a sentence. But if your roommate had a special talent you wouldn't think twice about asking him for help in that area. So grab your roommate and fill his head with the great minds of today's academe. That's Monk Malloy. After hearing some viewpoints you were interested in for a paper, you can talk with him about your date to the SYR. After hearing which courses he thinks are harder than others, you can argue with him about the line on this week's college games. To top it all off, he could play a little basketball with you and leave you wondering why you lost 21-0. It really doesn't matter if this particular roommate looks 45 years old!

There is only one thing easier to do than listen to Monk: let him listen to you. It is not part of his job. It is not an obligation of his vocation. It is the result of a deep-rooted concern for people: students, faculty, families, even strangers. What more could we or the future students of Notre Dame want in a president? Can anything upstage caring?

Many people have looked to and learned a lot from Fr. Edward Malloy. Now, his wisdom and experience will no longer be confined to the classroom or private conversation. The entire university looks to him. The entire world will hear of Monk Malloy.

Any day now, we shall all hear: "Now, I'm only going to say this once. When I was in third grade..."

Christian ethics: Malloy's books explore the issues of homosexuality and criminal punishment

MARY JACOBY
features editor

Father Edward Malloy is the author of two books in his field of Christian ethics which address contemporary social issues. "Homosexuality and the Christian Way of Life" was published in 1981, and "The Ethics of Law Enforcement and Criminal Punishment" appeared the following year in 1982. Both books are published by University Press of America.

In the preface to "Homosexuality and the Christian Way of Life," Malloy says that the book was written in response to the controversy between homosexuals and heterosexuals which has spread from the general society into the Christian churches. The debate is weighted on one side by gays wishing to "come out of the closet" and on the other side by people who defend the traditional ethic exemplified by the monogamous family unit. At the theological level, Malloy says, recent studies have disputed the traditional ban of all overt homosexual behavior; and homosexual Christians at the pastoral level have been striving for complete inclusion within the Church.

Malloy offers his belief that discussions of controversial moral issues pass through three stages: an initial challenge to the inherited tradition, a response from the defenders of the tradition, and finally a development of a new consensus. He sees the discussion of the homosexuality issue as in the second stage and has written this book to counter the revisionist arguments.

The book has two major divisions. The first is a treatment of 'the Homosexual Way of Life' as the issue is raised in social and scientific literature on the subject. Secondly, Malloy explores the Christian community's ethical discussions of homosexuality as well as three main approaches to the issue in current Christian discussion in order to develop "an interpretation of 'the Christian Way of Life' . . . as a criterion for judging the ethical status of the Homosexual Way of Life."

Lastly, Malloy explores several pastoral and ecclesiastical issues concerning homosexuality and offers his own opinion as to what the proper Christian approach should be.

Although Malloy writes that he feels a Christian lifestyle ultimately cannot be reconciled to a homosexual one, he argues for the basic civil rights of homosexuals. He says that legal reform is possible without society violating the traditional Judaeo-Christian sexual ethic which includes heterosexual marriage and, by natural extension, procreation.

In regards to sexual matters, Malloy cites the virtues of chastity, love and faithfulness as gathered from a thematic reading of the Scriptures to city and thus depersonalization. The second virtue Malloy discusses in defining a Christian view of sexuality is love. Malloy writes that love must not necessarily be connected with passion and the love of permanent and exclusive commitment can cohere in a relationship," Malloy states. The non-procreative aspect of homosexual relationships provides no opportunity "for the growth of a love which carries the partners beyond the original focus in each other to the wider dimensions of joyful and serious love. "Ideally, the love of sexual passion and the love of permanent and exclusive commitment can cohere in a relationship," Malloy states. The non-procreative aspect of homosexual relationships provides no opportunity "for the growth of a love which carries the partners beyond the original focus in each other to the wider dimensions of joyful and serious on the issues of permanence and exclusivity. He says a fundamental problem in reconciling the two ways of life lies in doubts that "whether exclusivity for a lifetime is ever considered desirable and/or possible by homosexuals who enter such relationships."

In his second book on Christian ethics Malloy explores the contradiction between the horrors of violence and the seeming contradiction of using violence to prevent greater harm in society. "The Ethics of Law Enforcement and Criminal Punishment" focuses on the two aspects of the phenomenon named in its title. Malloy discusses the demands placed on police officers by their occupation and assesses the amount of corruption within the system while offering possible solutions.

The last two chapters of the book deal with both the criminal himself and how the death penalty, even under extreme cases, is not needed for society's protection.

Malloy argues for an increased professionalization of the police force mainly because of the "high degree of discretionary authority" accorded to individual police officers. In addition to improvements in pay, training, recruitment and command structure among other suggestions, Malloy writes that the development of a professional ethic is needed that would support practical principles by a generally approved value system.

In the second chapter Malloy explores the issue of police corruption not because they are worse than any other group but rather because of the policeman's critical role in the protection of society. Many of the measures he proposes for professionalization are also his suggested remedies for the ending of corruption.

The third chapter argues that the ethical aspects of prison sentences should be seen as related to their ability to isolate dangerous individuals from society. Malloy explores the retributive, deterrent and rehabilitative rationales for criminal punishment, concluding that "the level of harm threatened to the common good by the continued freedom of the evildoer must be the primary rationale for invoking (the penalty of punishment)."

Finally, Malloy argues that only by benefiting the "common good" of the society could the state be morally justified in exercising capital punishment and then the death penalty would have to be imposed without discrimination. At the present, Malloy says no conditions warrant invoking the death penalty in America and the greater good would be advanced by eliminating such laws from the books.

Hesburgh included athletics in ideals

So the torch has passed, an era has ended. Yesterday, the Board of Trustees named Father Edward "Monk" Malloy the successor to Father Theodore Hesburgh. An Irish hoopster now sits on Notre Dame's highest bench. Forget about his being a leading theologian. A lot of people know Malloy for his basketball, whether it be his brief varsity stint or his play in the Bookstore Basketball Tournament.

Dennis Corrigan

Sports Editor

Because of his basketball renown, some are wondering how much of an impact Malloy will have on Notre Dame's athletic department. Lately, you see, stories have appeared in print suggesting that Father Hesburgh has de-emphasized Notre Dame sports or, worse, didn't care about them.

One story bandied about is that Hesburgh has put too much emphasis on academics. So much so that Notre Dame will go the way of the Ivy League. No kidding, this story comes from the mouths of several alums.

These accusations, insinuations, call them what you will, are, to say the least, without foundation. Notre Dame athletics has flourished under Hesburgh's tenure. Notre Dame has grown from a football powerhouse to having nationally acknowledged teams in basketball, fencing and now volleyball. Women's sports have blossomed in Hesburgh's 35 years.

More importantly, this growth has come about in complete accord with Hesburgh's philosophy on academics—they come first. At Notre Dame, the term "student athlete" really means something. At other institutions, this notion is given lip service at best. But if an Irish athlete has a test or lab, sorry, coach. Academic standards are adhered to here like nowhere else save a handful of schools. Ask any athlete why he or she came to Notre Dame and after any personal reasons, the words "for the education" invariably are spoken.

"He epitomizes the philosophy on athletics," says Associate Athletic Director Roger Valdiserri. "He has permitted them to be as good as they can be without breaking the rules—the Notre Dame rules. I don't think he would settle for anything less."

Perhaps Hesburgh has been misunderstood. He turned the day-to-day supervision of athletics over to the Executive Vice President, Father Edmund Joyce.

"But don't let that fool you," says Valdiserri. "He knows what's going on everywhere. He can talk a good football or basketball game. The guy is brilliant. He knows what's going on."

So Hesburgh does not roam the sidelines. But is the role of a university president to be the head cheerleader? That is the kind of thinking that leads to rules infractions and blatant violations.

The win-at-all-costs mentality does not exist under the Dome. In Hesburgh's 35 years, Notre Dame's football program has never been tainted with scandal while winning three National Championships and finishing in the top 10 on 14 more occasions. Not bad for a school whose president supposedly shows disinterest in athletics.

Notre Dame has risen from a football factory to a school with an equal blend of academic and athletic excellence. This university is now more than just a leading football

Malloy continues to play the game that brought him to Notre Dame

Father Edward "Monk" Malloy, Notre Dame's next president, is known as an avid basketball player. In his years on the varsity, Malloy saw action in 18 games and scored 25 points.

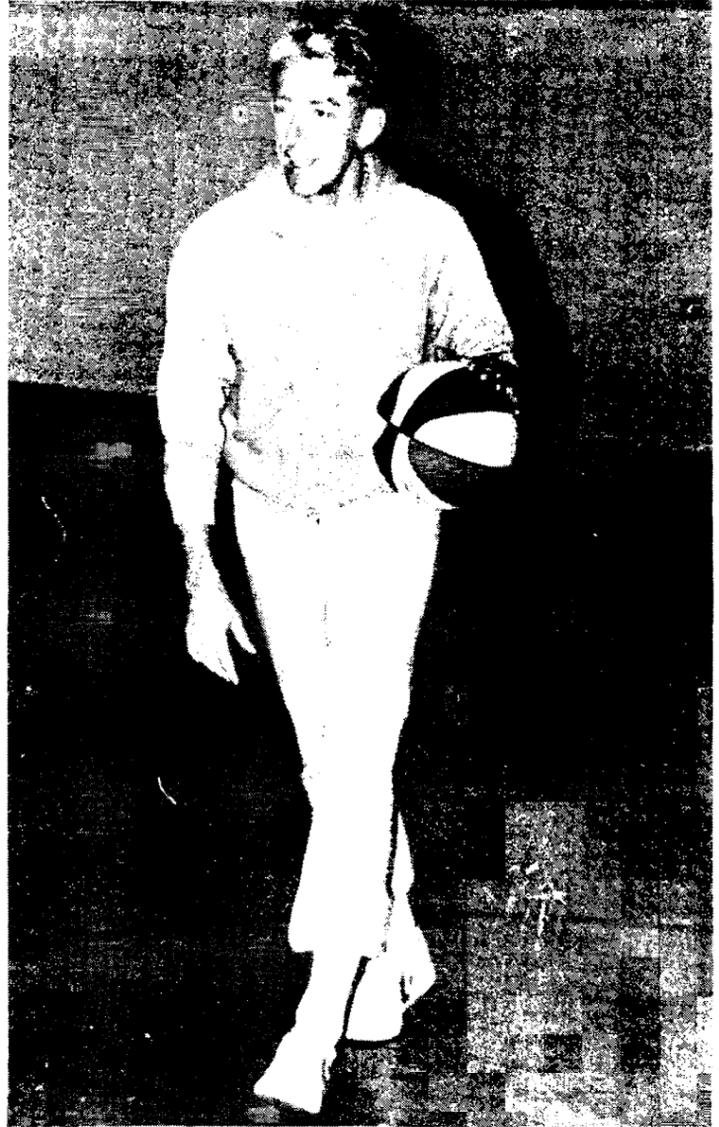

"(My career) was unspectacular. I put in what they asked me to do. I was never a star, but I was allowed to play some."

"It's kind of neat to think you're out there elbowing the guy who's the next president of Notre Dame."

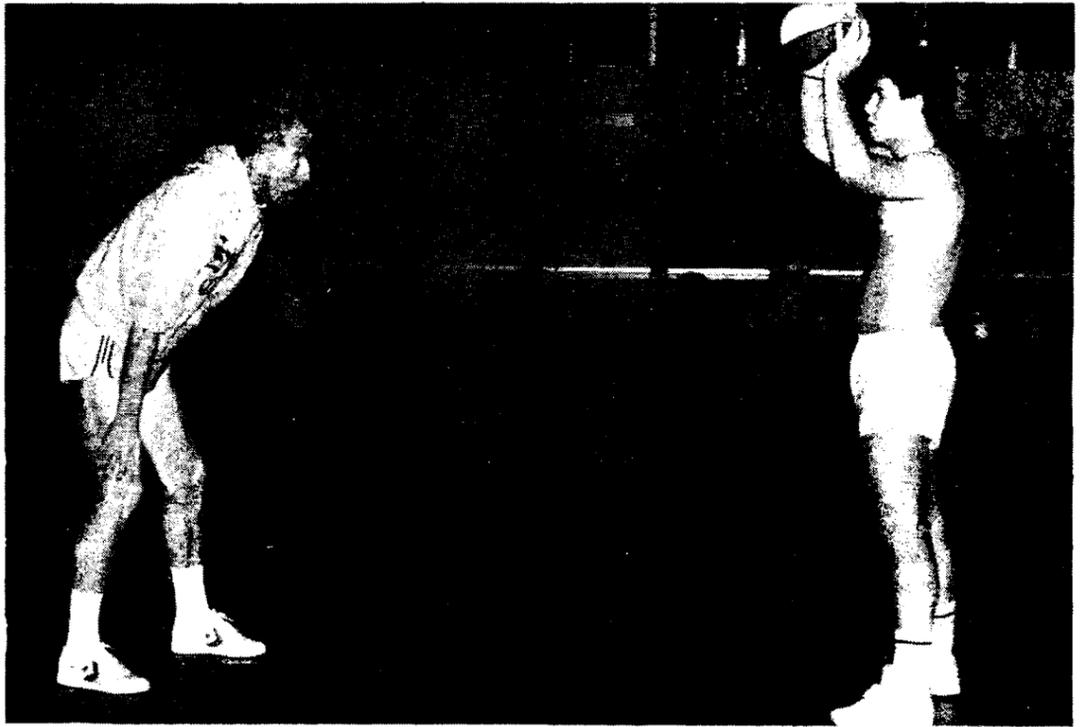

Since then, he has participated in almost every Bookstore Basketball Tournament and sponsored Monk Hoops Night at Sorin Hall.

"It's kind of neat to think you're out there elbowing the guy who's the next president of Notre Dame," says Notre Dame quarterback Steve Beuerlein, a resident of Sorin who also has a sideline in basketball.

But while Malloy's varsity career might not have been the most distinguished, his regular participation in the Bookstore tourney and in Monk Hoops Night shows that his love for the game most certainly has not been extinguished.
