Bentsen, Quayle face off in VP debate

Candidates clash on Quayle's readiness

Associated Press

OMAHA, Neb.-- Republican vice presidential candidate Dan Quayle said Wednesday night that he has as much experience as John F. Kennedy had when he won the White House and is "prepared to lead this country" if necessary. "Senator, you're no Jack Kennedy," Democratic rival Lloyd Bentsen shot back in the dramatic highlight of a 90-minute campaign debate.

"That was really uncalled for," the 41-year-old Quayle retorted to his 67-year-old rival. Replied Bentsen: "You're the one that was making the comparison, senator . . . and I did not think the comparison was well taken."

The clash over Quayle's readiness for high office was the emotional climax of a high-stakes debate in which the vice presidential candidates also collided over the environment, Social Security and campaign reform. The two men aimed many of their best lines past each other and in the direction of presidential candidates George Bush and Michael Dukakis.

The Indiana senator said he has more experience in critical areas than Democrat Dukakis and added, "If qualifications alone are going to be the issue in this campaign, George Bush has more qualifications than Michael Dukakis and Lloyd Bentsen combined."

Kennedy served in Congress 14 years before winning the White House in 1960. Quayle has served 12 years.

Bentsen took aim at the vice president's vote in favor of a budget plan to curtail Social Security cost-of-living increases and said the Reagan administration had appointed high-

WASHINGTON-- One question, asked time and time again, towered over all others in Wednesday night's vice presidential debate between Dan Quayle and Lloyd Bentsen: could the Indiana senator allay doubts about his qualifications for the office?

The question showed Quayle at his most prepared, looking straight into the camera, his gestures under control, citing his 12-year record in Congress.

Arts and Letters Career Day puts job market on display

By JOHN O'BRIEN

The prospect of finding the right career field attracted over 500 students to the annual Arts and Letters Career Day Wednesday.

"The purpose of this event is to provide students with information about a specific career field, not to recruit for a particular company," said Paul Reynolds, associate director of Career and Placement Services, which sponsored the event.

Career Day, the tenth of its kind, allowed students the opportunity to speak to representatives of 30 career areas about all aspects of their jobs and to receive literature.

The careers represented ranged from social services to graduate schools to commercial banking. The largest crowds were attracted to the representatives of the public relations and advertising industries.

Bob Williams of WSBT television, who represented the communications industry, said the event "gives students an idea of what the industry is really like." He compared the students' search to writing a term paper. "They come to me and say 'I want to go into radio.' I then give them the names of magazines and addresses where they can learn more about it."

Senior Dawn Mack, an English major, commented about the representatives. "They were open and honest. They told me both the good and bad sides of their jobs."

Some students came to the event being fairly sure of their choice of career. Most, however, came to sample the wide variety of career opportunity available to an Arts and Letters major.

U.S. denies hostage dealing

Associated Press

WASHINGTON-- The State Department on Wednesday dismissed as "pure fantasy" an assertion by an Iranian opposition leader that the Reagan administration secretly negotiated with Tehran for the release of American hostages in Lebanon.

"There have been no negotiations, no direct contacts between the United States and Iranian officials," said spokeswoman Phyllis Oakley. "There may be private individuals who misrepresented themselves as speaking on behalf of the U.S. government."

Former Iranian President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr said Tuesday in Paris that Richard Lawless, a former U.S. official, had negotiated in behalf of Vice President George Bush with a representative of Iranian Parliament Speaker Hashemi Rafsanjani.

In reply, Oakley said: "We have flatly denied anyone is speaking on behalf of the U.S. government."

Lawless, president of a Washington-based trade investment firm known as U.S.-Asia, denied through a business partner that he had engaged in any talks with Iranians about the hostages.

In a statement Lawless relayed through partner Therese Shaheen, he said, "I categorically deny, and state for the record, that I am involved either directly or indirectly in any discussions or negotiations with any party related to attempts to secure the release of hostages in Lebanon."

Shaheen said Lawless can produce passport and charge card travel records that prove he was not in that part of the world during the time that Bani-Sadr says he was involved.

The New York Times and The Washington Times, quoting sources they did not identify, reported Wednesday that Lawless worked for the CIA at the U.S. embassy in Seoul in the 1970s, during the same period Bush's national security adviser, Donald Gregg, served with the CIA in Korea.

In addition, The New York Times quoted an unidentified former government official as saying that Lawless had worked in the CIA's operations directorate until several years ago.

IN BRIEF

A roadblock could block Dan Quayle's visit to Napoleon, Ohio next week. City Council members voted Monday 3-2 to close the street in front of the courthouse for Quayle's campaign stop. But at least four votes were needed to block off the street. A sixth Councilman, a Republican, is out of town this week and missed Monday night's meeting. The two Democrats on the Council who voted against street closing said they were not against Quayle's visit, but rather they did not like the way the issue was brought before Council. "I didn't want to be put in the position to make this decision without any prior notice. So I'm looking at it as he (Mayor Steven Lankenau) wants special permission from me for a gala Republican meeting out in front of the courthouse. ... I could not say yes to that," he said. Bachman said after the vote he suggested that Quayle should appear at the high school football stadium.-- Associated Press

Sterilization will affect the sentencing of an Indianapolis woman found guilty of neglect in the death of her four-year-old son. Melody S. Baldwin, 29, was sterilized Tuesday after Marion Superior Court Judge Roy E. Jones had suggested he would be lenient with Baldwin if she underwent the procedure. "She didn't like it, but said she wanted to do it, mainly to cooperate with the court," James D. Slagle, half-brother to Baldwin, said following a hearing to allow Baldwin to be released on bond. Slagle said she entered into the plea agreement because she was "threatened" with the possibility of a 20-to 50-year prison term on the murder charge. Baldwin gave birth to a son Sunday and gave him up for adoption. She faces a maximum sentence of 20 years in prison.-- Associated Press

INSIDE COLUMN

Cleaning up your act is a dirty business

Laundry is one of those small chores moms take care of, children take for granted, and college students take home.

In between breaks, however, students are forced to bite the bullet, collect their quarters and hit the wash room themselves.

When I was younger, I considered laundry a rather mystical practice. Every night, I'd habitually discard my dirty clothes in the laundry chute, and the next day they'd magically reappear in my dresser drawers, fresh and folded.

I wasn't sure exactly what happened during those quiet hours between dusk and dawn down in the depths of my basement, but whatever it was kept me in spotless shirts and clean jeans, so I didn't complain.

Ah, ignorance was bliss!

The summer before my freshman year, the myth was dispelled. One early August morning, Mom dropped the bomb. After summoning me down to the laundry room, she carefully explained that it was meticulous mothers- and not Dynamo dwarves-that kept kids in clean clothes. Adding insult to injury, she explained that one day I, too, would be subject to this foul chore.

Reality really set in the day I left for school. As my parents kissed me goodbye, Mom pushed a roll of quarters into my palm.

Now if that wasn't a symbolic gesture, I don't know what is.

My dorm allots Thursday nights "Guys' night" in the laundry room. Some girls take this opportunity to do their own wash, to do their roommates' wash or to just saunter by the laundry room every ten minutes. After all, it's only a matter of time before they're summoned in to aid some "dude in distress."

I, however, have not fallen prey to this warped scheme. Instead, on Thursday nights, I lock myself in my room, pull the shades and take the phone off the hook.

There is no sight more pitiful than watching a man wash clothes for the first time. These boys can ace metallurgical engineering exams, calculate the number of moles in any compound and list every battle of the Prussian War, but they can't decide whether to wash their tube socks in hot or cold water.

On laundry night, guys will stagger into the wash room, lugging several overflowing clothes hampers behind them. (Most males postpone laundry as long as possible -generally until their clothes can walk to the cleaners themselves.) They then trudge to a remote corner of the laundry room, pour the contents of their hampers out onto the floor and stare at the heap helplessly.

After a few moments-if they're feeling particularly ambitious -the guys proceed to place their clothes into piles. Unfortunately, logic rarely prevails. Men cannot understand why they can't simply wash all the clothes they wear on the upper halves of their bodies in one machine, and the articles they wear on their bottom halves in another.

Michelle Dall
Assistant News Editor

At this point, some sympathetic observer usually intervenes and decides to assist the poor, misguided soul. She (it is invariably a "she") explains that clothes must be washed according to their color.

Ah-hah! The male is on his way to making laundry history now! But he's still a little confused. . . . "Should I put the fabric softener in the washer or in the dryer?" . . . "Do black socks bleed?"

If no one is around to answer such earth-shattering questions, guys will not hesitate to walk upstairs, knock on random doors and plead for an explanation. If a girl is gullible enough to answer the door on a Thursday night, she can abandon all hope of studying. Instead, she'll undoubtedly spend the next few hours teaching this domestic dufus the wonders of modern lint removers.

And there are always the guys who let their fingers do the walking. Leafing through the phone book, they'll call random numbers until they strike a gold mine (alias a girls' dorm). "This is Farley Hall? Great. Can you go down to the laundry room and see if there's a guy named Bruce down there? He forgot this detergent. I'm sure you'll recognize him-he's the one in the pink undershirt with the bleach stains. . . ."

Speaker pushes for consistent life ethic

By BRIDGET GOEYVAERTS
News Staff

Abortion is not the only pro-life issue that must be addressed today, according to Ronald Sider, executive director of a political action committee that supports political candidates who uphold a "consistent life ethic."

The major pro-life issues are abortion, nuclear arms and poverty, Sider said last night in a lecture in the Center for Continuing Education.

Sider, the head of JustLife, a group which supports pro-life political candidates, told students that a total commitment to all aspects of life is necessary for a consistent pro-life ethic. He said JustLife agrees with Cardinal Joseph Bernardin, archbishop of Chicago, on the need for a consistent ethic of life. One cannot speak out against abortion and support the nuclear arms race, for this would be contradictory to the pro-life ethic as a whole, Sider said.

JustLife is based on the Christian belief that "all life is precious" Sider said, adding that life must be whole with God, neighbor and earth.

This wholeness is the basis for the stand the organization takes, that all pro-life issues are of equal value. Sider said neither the liberals nor the conservatives are right on the various issues. He made it clear that consistency is of the utmost importance, and that the true test is "whether or not we have the courage to let the author of life set the agenda for our life."

JustLife has endorsed 35 candidates of both parties, including third Congressional District candidate Tom Ward, a Notre Dame graduate, for their opposition to legalized abortion and other issues, Sider said.

The organization supports neither presidential candidates for the 1988 election.

Board votes for St. Mary's computer

By MARY BETH BLAJDA

The St. Mary's Board of Governance voted last night in favor of purchasing a MAC SE computer for student government use.

"This is a worthwhile investment and one goal of our administration," said Julie Parish, student body president.

The Board ratified a written proposal from Student Government by a 21-1-1 vote.

The standard Apple computer, Imagewriter II printer and accessories will be leased with an option to buy in the second semester.

The proposed location for the computer is 306 Haggar College Center, a room often used by student government. This location was considered for security reasons and its close proximity to student government offices.

"It's a good location for the computer since the third floor of Haggar is the hub of student government life," says Junior Class President Lisa Catenacci.

The computer will be accessible for student government use during normal hours for Haggar, 7:30 a.m.-midnight on weekdays and 7:30 a.m.-2 a.m. on weekends. The computer will not be available when the room is reserved for club meetings.

level environmental officials who were the equivalent of Bonnie and Clyde.

Asked why voters would want to install a Democrat in the White House given current record low unemployment and low inflation under the Republicans' guidance, Bentsen referred to record deficits. "If you let me write $200 billion in hot checks every year, I could give you the illusion of prosperity, too," he said.

Bentsen said Quayle had one of the worst voting records in the Senate on veterans' issues, and said his rival had sponsored legislation to tax the combat pay and disability pay for "people who are lying in the hospital."

He demanded an explanation but the debate turned to another question and Quayle never addressed the subject, which also came up in the days following the Republican convention when Quayle's Vietnam-era service in the National Guard was at issue.

The vice presidential rivals shook hands and smiled as they met at center stage for the beginning of their televised debate. The television audience numbered in the millions, Bush and Dukakis among them.

The debate was dominated from the beginning by questions over the qualifications the 41-year-old Quayle possesses for the vice presidency.

Bentsen, who has sharply questioned his rival's maturity on the campaign trail, said a vice president must be prepared to take over "without any margin for error."

"The debate is about the presidency itself," he said. "The stakes could not be higher."

More than once Quayle insisted that "age alone" was not the issue, but experience. He said that on arms control, the deficit and education, he had a record in Congress, and said, "I'm prepared" to take over in the event of the death of the president.

Asked what his first step would be, he replied, "First I'd say a prayer for myself, for the country that I was about to lead and then I would assemble his

(the president's) people and talk."

Later, Quayle said he did not want to address hypothetical questions but wanted to assure voters, "I will be prepared to lead this country."

The debate produced periodic boos, cheer and laughter from the audience in the Omaha Civic Auditorium, so much so that moderator Judy Woodruff asked for silence during the high-stakes debate.

Just as Quayle was asked to defend his qualifications, Bentsen was asked about his differences with Dukakis on such issues as aid to the Nicaraguan rebels, the death penalty and gun control.

cratic presidential nominee Michael Dukakis.

As the debate progressed, the qualifications question came up again and again and Quayle responded each time without an obvious misstep. You could almost hear George Bush sigh with relief.

Did you see anything that made you wince, Bush campaign chairman James Baker was asked immediately after the debate. "I didn't see anything that made we wince. When you think about what might have happened, we have to be pretty happy," he said.

If the winner of this debate were determined by advance expectations, Quayle had a claim to victory.

He walked on stage with both his supporters and opponents wondering if he would stumble badly. He disappointed those who hoped he would.

But it was not clear whether Quayle eliminated the doubts. That may not be known until Americans vote on Nov. 8.

When Quayle compared his experience to that of John F. Kennedy, it precipitated the sharpest clash of the 90-minute debate.

"Jack Kennedy was a friend of mine," said Bentsen, looking at his 41-year-old opponent. "Senator, you're no Jack Kennedy."

"That was uncalled for, senator," retorted Quayle.

The format helped. All the questions were asked by a panel of four journalists. The candidates had no opportunity to question each other directly.

But the panel kept the focus on the qualifications issue. Four times Quayle was asked to cite his qualifications or say what he would do if suddenly he became president.

Bishop, nun speak on pastoral letter

By ASHOK RODRIGUES
Staff Reporter

The chairman of the U.S. Bishop's Committee on Women in the Church, Bishop Joseph Imesch, and a consultant to the committee, Sister Sara Butler, spoke Wednesday on "Women in the Church: A Pastoral Letter in the Making."

The committee issued a first draft of its letter last April. Since that point there have been revisions to the letter, and the bishops hope to have a final draft out by November of next year.

In order to let women best voice their concerns, the committee issued thousands of questionnaires to women in dioceses, college campuses and the military. "It was the concern that the letter come not from the bishops and consultants down, but from the grass roots up," said Imesch.

He noted that the committee wished to make people aware of the "great gift of women to the Church," and to let women know that they are appreciated. "We hope to dispell some of the unconscious sexism in the Church," Imesch added.

Butler said that on reading the responses from women that "there was an overwhelming sense that women want to be regarded as persons." She noted that the committee found "sexism to be a moral and social evil."

The speakers said that the committee did not cover the topic of the ordination of women. Imesch stated, "A pastoral letter is not where a theological argument is advanced, it's a pastoral commentary a situation." Butler concurred that the purpose was not to cover new ground, but to "chart how we feel" about the role of women in the Church.

Butler also observed that the recent papal letter on the dignity of women basically supported the work that the committee was doing, with both stressing respect and equality for women.

Abortion protestors continue Atlanta sit

Associated Press

ATLANTA-- Police headed off anti-abortion sit-ins Wednesday by impounding the demonstrators' bus and increasing security at clinics where 360 people were arrested a day earlier during the protesters' "siege of Atlanta."

Officers dragged three demonstrators to police vans Wednesday. Most demonstrators, however, limited activities to praying and singing hymns.

The bus was impounded as it took demonstrators from a silent vigil at one clinic to a demonstration at another.

"The officer determined (the bus) to be unsafe for operation. When it was stopped there was smoke coming out and it was crowded with too many people," said police spokeswoman Myrna May. She said she did not know how many were aboard.

Protesters on Tuesday complained that police treated them with unnecessary harshness, twisting arms and fingers and using pressure-point holds just under the ears to force them into buses.

Some screamed or cried as they were taken away, and four were treated for apparently minor injuries.

George Napper, Atlanta commissioner of public safety, said he believed there were isolated arrests "in which police could have acted more gently" but that he thought the overall behavior was justified.

Demonstrators on Wednesday arrived gradually at the Feminist Women's Health Clinic, where police arrested one for trying to jump a barricade and two others for assaulting a woman trying to enter the clinic, W. Holley said.

Researchers develop contraceptive vaccine

Associated Press

NEW YORK --An experimental contraceptive vaccine has blocked fertility without fail in female and male guinea pigs, researchers report, raising prospects that a similar approach might one day work for women and men.

The vaccine is designed to prevent fertilization, which may make it more widely acceptable than another vaccine already in human testing that stops development of the embryo, other scientists said.

Still, "There are many things about it that would have to be changed or improved to make it a useful method for either agricultural animals or humans," cautioned researcher Paul Primakoff.

Primakoff and colleagues at the University of Connecticut Health Center in Farmington report the experiment in Thursday's issue of the British journal Nature.

It is the first demonstration of contraception without fail from a vaccine, experts said.

None of the 25 female guinea pigs that got the vaccine before mating had litters, nor did the mates of the six immunized male guinea pigs. Animals that received sham immunizations for comparison purposes remained fertile.

The vaccine's effect was temporary. Eleven of 24 females tested had regained fertility by nine to 11 months after the immunization, and all four of the longest-studied group had delivered litters by 15 months. Among the males, four of six had regained fertility by seven months after the immunization.

In a telephone interview, Primakoff said his team has since produced contraception in 17 other male guinea pigs.

The vaccine is designed to make the body's disease-fighting immune system attack a protein found in guinea pig sperm. The details of just how that blocks fertility in guinea pigs are not known, Primakoff said.

But immune system proteins called antibodies, taken from the immunized females, prevented sperm from binding normally to guinea pig eggs in the test tube. That suggests the vaccine blocks fertilization within vaccinated females, he said.

Pinochet gets lead in Chile's vote tally

Associated Press

SANTIAGO, Chile-- Military President Augusto Pinochet took an early lead in preliminary returns Wednesday in a plebiscite to decide whether his 15-year rule should be extended to 1997 in a vote which was both massive and peaceful.

In the Interior Ministry's first announced returns from 79 of the 22,248 voting tables nationwide, "yes" votes for continuing Pinochet's presidency totaled 10,628, while "no" votes totaled 7,511.

Interior Ministry under secretary Alberto Cardemil said 168 votes were blank and 222 ballots were annulled for being wrongly marked.

The opposition charged that the initial returns were selective and too small a sample. Narciso Irureta, a vice president of the Christian Democratic Party, said the ministry withheld returns from some tables where "no" votes won a majority in "an intent at fraud that could develop during the night."

New polls show Bush ahead

Associated Press

NEW YORK -- A second national poll has found Democrat Michael Dukakis closing on George Bush in the presidential race, although a newer survey released Wednesday gave the Republican a slightly better lead.

Both surveys found many voters expressing concern about Bush's running mate, Sen. Dan Quayle of Indiana.

The newer poll, an ABC News-Washington Post survey conducted from Sept. 28 through Tuesday, put the race at 51-44 percent with the Republicans in the numerical lead. The poll of 1,196 likely voters had an error margin of about four points.

In the other survey, a Harris poll conducted last week, the Republicans won support from 49 percent of 1,235 likely voters, to 46 percent for the Democrats. It also was a dead heat, given the three-point margin of error.

A Harris poll early last month put the race a bit wider, at 50-44 with Bush and Quayle ahead. Similarly, a CBS News-New York Times poll released Tuesday put the race at 48-46, tightened from 49-44 later last month.

The ABC-Post and Harris polls were released on the night of Quayle's debate with Sen. Lloyd Bentsen of Texas, the Democratic vice presidential nominee. Like other polls, both found doubts about Quayle's qualifications for office.

In the ABC-Post poll, 40 percent said Quayle was qualified to be vice president, but 33 percent said not; the rest didn't know. By contrast, 67 percent said Bentsen was qualified and just 7 percent said not.

Life beyond the Big Eight

Sometime last spring I realized that it's been 10 years since I graduated from college. After getting over the shock of 10 years, I began thinking about the path that took me from Notre Dame to where I am today. I remember I spent most of my senior year thinking about careers, and as a matter of fact, just about everybody at Notre Dame is usually thinking about careers in one way or another. The freshmen and sophomores are deciding on their majors, the juniors are thinking about summer internships, and the seniors are thinking about job interviews and the reality check that's been scheduled for them next June 1.

James Fredian

John Lennon once said that "Life is what happens while you're busy making other plans" and I find more truth in that statement every day. If someone would have told me during my senior year that my life was going to turn out the way it actually has, I would have had them checked for drug abuse. In the mid-seventies it seemed that career hysteria was at its zenith. It seemed that everyone I knew was prepping for law or medical school or a Big Eight accounting firm. Even the liberal arts people were planning on MBA school. Nobody was planning on opening a philosophy shop or hitchhiking across America. I fell right in with the zeitgeist and became an accounting major because it seemed to have been scripted for me that way.

I could accomplish something with just my own mettle, without my upper-middle class script supporting me.

The problem was that I could never think of any way to justify passing up a job or grad school, even temporarily. A professor finally told me that no matter what parents, friends, or anyone else expected of me I was the only one who would have to live with the decisions I have made. The answer had been there all the time, but I had trouble seeing it. The next day I sent letters of regret to the accounting firms and grad schools.

My decision of what to do, now that I had veered out of the mainstream, was to become a volunteer in the VISTA program. (VISTA is the domestic counterpart of the Peace Corps) Why VISTA? It offered adventure, a chance to experience a way of life very different from anything I knew. It offered a chance to help the people who got dealt twos and threes in the game of life, while people like me got all the face cards, and it offered a chance to prove to myself that I could accomplish something with just my own mettle, without my upper-middle class script supporting me.

I ended up living in rural Alabama and working for an organization that ran a network of low-income cooperatives and credit unions and also did some civil right and advocacy work for its constituency. For two years I was a white boy from the suburbs living in a trailer with hot and cold running rodents in an all-black community in a state I'd never been to before, and I was fifty miles from the nearest McDonald's and twenty miles from the nearest bar. This was total culture shock. But it was also the most stimulating experience of my life and the best decision I ever made.

Near the end of my VISTA tenure, I accepted a job with one of the accounting firms that had offered me a job during my senior year. But before I started that job I had the summer off and time to try one more adventure. This time it brought me to Yellowstone National Park as the controller of one of the hotels. It was just supposed to be a summer job, but it was the best three months I've ever had. VISTA was very gratifying, but it was rarely fun. Working in Yellowstone was like going to college with no homework, and with active, adventurous people who loved the mountains and Yellowstone as much as I came to. I would have loved to stay, but I had a date with the real world. I worked at the accounting firm for three years and in many ways it was just what I had expected of a real world job. I learned a lot, I made a lot of money, and I was on a career track in a good profession, but as time went on I increasingly felt that something was missing.

I had my epiphany while watching a special on Martin Luther King. I admired him because he always held his own in the face of public opinion, and that made me take a look at my own situation. What I realized was that in VISTA I had done significant work that I found fulfilling, but as an accountant I found the work to be none of the above. I had what other people considered a good job, but I didn't think it was a good job because I just didn't like the work. What I really wanted to do was work in Yellowstone again, so I managed to get myself a position as a manager trainee there while I was on leave of absence from the accounting firm. I had another great summer and at the end of the season I was offered a job as a manager if I wanted to return the following summer. I did audits and tax returns for one more winter and realized conclusively that I'd had enough of that aggravation, so I went back to Yellowstone and became a hotel manager.

That was four years ago and I'm still pretty happy with the decision I made. My job and my lifestyle are well out of the mainstream once again and people are always asking me when I'm going to get a real job, as if I just happened into this lifestyle rather than having chosen it.

Although work and money seem to denominate everything we do these days, I've found that time is my most important asset. I like my job, but it's just my job, not my life. I have other important things to do besides work (I think my excuse in college was "My education doesn't end when I leave the classroom"). I certainly don't work as many hours as my career-oriented friends do, but I think I use my ample free time well.

Hunter S. Thompson once said, "I wouldn't recommend drugs, alcohol, and violence to anyone, but they've always worked well for me." Similarly, I wouldn't try to proselytize you for a lifestyle like mine. What I will do, though, is to encourage you to have the conviction to march to the drummer you hear no matter how unconventional it might sound. If a career job or grad school is the right choice for you after graduation, then go for it, but don't be limited by those two choices. There is a whole world of possibilities out there for you if you'll just open yourself up to it. Don't get caught up in the job/grad school mind set just because those are the safe decisions or because "Mom will be so proud."

At my graduation in May of 1978, Fr. Hesburgh quoted from the Robert Frost poem "The Road Not Taken" in which a traveler chooses the less traveled road rather than the well beaten path. I think Fr. Hesburgh was trying to encourage us to be creative in our ongoing career development and to consider more of the alternatives available to us. Perhaps he was even trying to express a belief that we graduates had acquired something special during our Notre Dame years that would inspire us to use our talents for more than the pursuit of an upper-middle class lifestyle. But in any case, I think he wanted us to realize that we could use any number of strategies, including unconventional ones, to fulfill our career and lifestyle aspirations.

Peace and Justice group to meet tonite

Dear Editor:

We have joined together to educate ourselves and others in order to grow in the power of our common humanity, to lead us to an understanding of our responsibilities in the world today and to the action we must take accordingly. This is the statement of purpose for a group of students on campus concerned with social justice: Women United for Justice and Peace. Peace and justice are universal issues not limited by sex, race or nationality. Our name reflects a special interest in how these issues affect our lives through a female's perspective. In no way is our name meant to imply a discriminatory bias.

A major goal of our community is to disseminate information throughout the student body. Awareness is the first step to solving any problem. We attempt to positively approach all vital issues through informed discussion and creative action in affirmation of the belief that together we can make a difference for peace and justice. Women United for Peace and Justice will hold a meeting tonight, Oct. 6, at 7 p.m. at the CSC Coffeehouse. We welcome and encourage all women and men on this campus to attend the meeting to take a step toward fulfilling our obligation as peacemakers and proponents of social justice.

'Antigone' pertinent to the times

accent writer

In this election year, voters are confronted with a choice between a passionless technocrat and an heir to our nation's best cheerleader. This difference in leadership styles is also at the heart of the current Notre DameSt. Mary's Theatre production of "Antigone."

Adapted by Lewis Galantieri from Jean Anouilh's play, it focuses on the decision of Antigone to disobey an edict issued by her uncle, King Creon, forbidding the burial of her brother, in order to consolidate power and stabilize his troubled kingdom of Thebes. Antigone, however cannot abide by her uncle's command, and is motivated by her conscience to give her brother the proper religious burial he deserves. This leads to the central conflict of the play, as Creon persuades Antigone to abandon her moral crusade, and obey his order. If she refuses, he will be forced to kill her for state reasons.

The exciting debate that follows between these two main characters contrasts two opposing views concerning governing a nation. Creon argues that a king should lead a nation with his mind, and to the letter of the law. Antigone insists that everyone, especially a leader, should follow his heart and be true to the emotions in it.

The acting by the cast was both professional and sincere, evoking emotions and sparking contemplation of the themes preveniently discussed. The lead performance as given by Kristen Schumacher was especially effective in conveying the conviction of her character, as well as the beauty of her fate. Mark J. Costanzi's Creon exuded a nobility and assurance which was appropriate, emotionally charged, but not overdone.

The supporting characters are all portrayed with equally effective drive and intensity. Siiri Scott's one-woman Greek Chorus calls for special attention as her portrayal ranks as one of the most memorable narration performances I have seen. Also worthy of recognition are Bridget McCarthy's Nurse, who receives my "Neil Simon Jewish Mother" award for her wonderful comic relief;

Gerald Welch's Haemon, who maintains the proper balance between handsome prince and good-natured boyfriend; Michael Murphy's Private Jones who also dabbles successfully in a comic vein; and Emily Stoddart who steals the show as Creon's page, managing to follow the king without getting lost in his shadow.

The staging and direction of the play were all quite natural, managing to augment the actors' performances without interfering with the audience's enjoyment of the dialogue. The costumer and set decorator should also be congratulated for constructing a visually appealing atmosphere in which the actors can practice their craft. In fact, many commented that the costumes must have been borrowed from "Star Trek," which is perfect for a play that contains many anachronistic touches due to its many revisions since Sophocle's original.

On the whole, I must concur with Creon who at one point remarks, "It's hard to say yes, but it is the best answer."

To the Notre Dame Student Body:

All right, listen up. You people been gettin' on my case lately, and its startin' to make my ulcers bubble. The doc says I won't be able to eat any more oranges unless you people lay off, so let's set the record straight on a few things.

First of all, I don't appreciate the hate calls. Ain't nothing that ticks me off more than bein' interrupted from scoring up a few lines for a high school prospect just to hear one of you smart-alecs tellin' me that you hate me now. Heck, I don't care if you hate me now or hate me later as long as you care for me. I wouldn't know what to do if everyone outside Miami didn't hate me.

There also seems to be a little misconception about the difficulty of our football schedule. I don't care what folks say, we play some of the toughest competitors in college football week in and week out with no relief. We have to face teams like Northwest Mississippi State at Jackson (NMSJ) and Landrum College that force us to play the game of our life every week. Who does Notre Dame have to play that's any good? Pittsburgh, Penn State, USC? Gimme a break.

Another thing you intellectual snobs like to poke at is our academic program. Now, we may not have any Rhodes scholars, but I'll have you know that we have the nation's leading programs in intramural bowling, gator wrestling, drug running, and sports car appreciation. How 'bout that, huh? So let's have a little respect where respect is due.

And about those T-shirts.... You kids have been goin' hog wild printing every possible slur about me and our fine school, and I'm not going to take it any more! First of all, there's plenty of other words you could spell with the Miami "U" besides "scUm." How about "vUlgar" or "crUde" or better yet, "pitifU"? And then there's that shirt that implies part of my anatomy is missing. Well, it's just not true! I lease with an option to own.

SMC VB wins

By LIZ VANDERSARL

Recovering from a brief slump, the Saint Mary's Belles got back on the winning track Tuesday night with a win over Grace College.

"The last three weeks have been difficult with several injuries, so this win was a rebound for us," said Head Coach Sue Medley.

The Belles were strong throughout the match, dominating the first game 15-4. The second game proved to be a struggle with Grace College getting the edge 17-15. With consistent serving, the Belles were able to display their superiority, winning the final games 15-1 and 15-1.

"Serving has always been a problem for us, but we improved a great deal in the match. Key players throughout the match were Katie Killilla and Melissa Phillips, who both played extremely well," said Medley.

Saturday at 1:00 p.m., the Belles take on Tri-State in a league match.

Holtz makes plea

Dear Students:

As you probably know, Notre Dame will play host to the University of Miami football team on October 15. I understand Miami coach Jimmy Johnson has been the recipient of several phone calls and letters from Notre Dame students regarding the upcoming football game.

When I first came to Notre Dame, I was impressed with four things about the student body--its competitiveness, its intelligence, its intense desire to succeed and its closeness and caring for other people. I would hope our students display those same traits when it comes to football rivalries.

I'm the first one to appreciate the competitiveness and the intense desire of the Notre Dame students to succeed. I hope you appreciate those same traits in our football players on the field every week.

Yet, it seems to me if we want to display our intelligence, we ought to show a great deal of respect to Miami, its players and coaches for the tremendous accomplishments they've had for the last two years. As you know, Miami has won 36 straight regular-season football games and 20 straight road games overall. That's an amazing record that few teams in college football history can match.

It also seems that if our students wish to display their closeness as a student body and how much they care for their football team, the most valuable thing they can do is be as positive as possible in their support of this team. That should be the case not just this week against Pittsburgh, or next week when Miami comes to town--but every week of the season.

We look forward to welcoming Miami's team and fans for our next home game. Let's make sure that the Hurricanes leave our campus impressed with the classiness of our program and fans.

Best regards,

Lou Holtz

Heisler to head Sports Info

Special to The Observer

John Heisler, a member of the Notre Dame sports information staff since 1978, has been named sports information director at the University of Notre Dame, athletic director Dick Rosenthal announced Wednesday.

Heisler takes over for Roger Valdiserri, who has held that post since 1966. Promoted to assistant athletic director in 1976, Valdiserri now takes on expanded administrative level responsibilities in his role as associate athletic director, a position he has held since 1983. He will continue to oversee the department functions, which include public relations, communications, publications and information.

The 33-year-old Heisler joined the sports information staff as Valdiserri's assistant in April of 1978 and was promoted to associate sports information director in July of 1982.

A South Bend native, Heisler spent one year as assistant sports information director at his alma mater, the University of Missouri, following his graduation from the Missouri School of Journalism in December of 1976.

He has edited 12 different publications judged best in the nation by the College Sports Information Directors of America, including three football media guides and four basketball media guides. He also has edited the annual Notre Dame football highlight film and done color analysis on both radio and television for Irish basketball games.

Valdiserri returned to his alma mater as sports information director in 1966. He previously had served as administrative assistant to Irish football coach Terry Brennan from the time he graduated in 1954 until going to work for Mercedes-Benz of North America in 1959.

Long regarded as one of the pillars of the sports publicity field, Valdiserri served as CoSIDA president in 1986-87 and also received the organization's top individual award that year when he was honored with the Arch Ward Award--which goes annually to a CoSIDA member for his outstanding contributions within and outside the profession. He presently is a member of that organization's board of directors and is chairman of the NCAA Communications Committee.

ND men's soccer 'rained out'

By PETE GEGEN
Sports Writer

The Notre Dame men's soccer team was supposed to play an afternoon match at Valparaiso Wednesday afternoon.

As it turned out, they never left the campus.

An early morning deluge at Valparaiso led to the cancellation of the soccer match. Apparently part of the Crusaders' soccer field is laid over the baseball field on the campus, and the Valparaiso athletic department did not want to risk ruining the field.

"Their athletic director did not want to play the game on their field," said Irish coach Dennis Grace. "We tried to reschedule the game, but no open dates on our schedules matched."

Before the game was cancelled two alternate solutions were offered. Valparaiso suggested playing at a nearby field, but Grace objected.

"The field is only 58 yards wide," he said, noting the NCAA minimum is 65 yards. "We played on that field my first year here, and it was just terrible. There is not enough room for 11 players."

Finally Grace offered to play the game at Krause Stadium. Although the Crusaders would have only 50 miles to travel, they declined.

Cone in Game 2. Belcher, who won nine of his last 11 decisions to finish 12-6, had his only problems against Keith Hernandez. The Mets first-baseman hit a two-run homer in the fourth and finished Belcher with a run-scoring single in the ninth.

Belcher, who struck out a season-high 10 batters, allowed a leadoff double by Len Dykstra in the ninth. Dykstra went to third on a grounder, and scored on a single by Hernandez.

Belcher was replaced by former Met Jesse Orosco, who yielded a single to Darryl Strawberry that advanced Hernandez to second.

That brought on Alejandro Pena, who got the save by getting Kevin McReynolds to foul out to third and, after walking Howard Johnson to load the bases, induced Gary Carter to fly out to right.

Mike Marshall singled in runs in each of the first two innings off Cone and added a third hit to start a rally in the fifth.

Pre-Miami hoopla set for Spirit Week

Special to The Observer

The 1:30 p.m. kickoff to the Notre Dame-Miami football clash at Notre Dame Stadium

INSIDE

Holtz addresses letter to students page 12

on Oct. 15 will climax an entire week of events designed to encourage spirit and sportsmanship.

Billed as Notre Dame Spirit Week, the University's athletic department has arranged activities that will promote the athletic/academic connection at Notre Dame. Special events include two seminars, two Notre Dame-Miami baseball games and a special midnight practice by the Irish basketball team.

Monday's main event is the presentation, "Can a University Excel in Academics and Athletics?" Scheduled for 7:30 p.m. at the Hesburgh Library Auditorium, the discussion will feature Irish basketball coach Digger Phelps and former Notre Dame basketball captain Tracy Jackson, who currently is an investment broker for a Washington, D.C., area firm and a member of the University's Board of Trustees.

Notre Dame philosophy professor Thomas Morris and psychology professor George Howard also will take part in the seminar, which will be moderated by Nathan Hatch, acting dean of the College of Arts and Letters.

While Monday is called "Academic Day," Tuesday will be "Spiritual Day," sponsored by the Notre Dame chapter of the Fellowship of Christian Athletes. Notre Dame's women's soccer team will play Northwestern at 7 p.m. at Krause Stadium.

The dining halls will get into the act on Wednesday's "Whole Health Day," which will include special meals along with videos, posters and brochures at the dining halls to emphasize the proper diet and nutrition.

Most of the athletic events begin on Thursday's "Athletic Day." A seminar called "CBS Sports on Campus" at 3 p.m. in the library auditorium will feature color analyst Pat Haden, CBS Emmy-winning producer Mike Burks and CBS manager of program services and Notre Dame grad Teresa Ross.

The Irish baseball team also will face perennial national power Miami at 7 p.m. in Stanley Coveleski Stadium. Tickets cost $3 for adults and $2 for students, who can get in free with their Blue-Gold Card. The Irish soccer team will play DePaul at Krause Stadium at 7 p.m.

Friday's "Roll-Out Day" will roll out a chain of events to get the community psyched for Saturday's football game. An all-campus picnic will begin at 4 p.m. on the Stepan fields, followed by the pep rally at 7 p.m. on Stepan Courts. Olympic speed skater Dan Jansen will be a guest speaker at the pep rally.

A United Limo bus shuttle service will take people from the pep rally to the ND-Miami baseball game, which starts at 8 p.m. at Coveleski Stadium.

From 9 p.m. to midnight, a student dance, sponsored by 7UP and featuring campus band The Groove, will be held at the Joyce ACC Fieldhouse. Four Italian racing bikes and

Dodgers even series with Mets, win 6-3 behind Belcher

Associated Press

BOSTON-- Dave Henderson, a former Boston postseason hero, singled home the tie-breaking run in the eighth inning and the Oakland Athletics beat the Red Sox 2-1 Wednesday in the first game of the American League playoffs.

Jose Canseco's home run had held up since the fourth inning as Oakland's Dave Stewart and Bruce Hurst hooked up in a pitching duel. But Wade Boggs hit a sacrifice fly in the seventh, setting up Henderson's heroics on a chilly afternoon at Fenway Park.

Carney Lansford hit Hurst's first pitch in the eighth for a double and Henderson grounded the next pitch into right field for the go-ahead single.

Oakland's bullpen, which held Boston to three runs in 35 innings this year, did the job again and preserved the lead. Rick Honeycutt relieved Stewart with the bases loaded and one out in the seventh and kept Boggs to a sacrifice fly. In the second, Boggs-- a .373 career hitter with the bases loaded-- struck out in the same situation, the first time he had fanned in 22 lifetime at-bats against Stewart.

Dodgers 6, Mets 3

LOS ANGELES-- Rookie Tim Belcher allowed five hits in 8

1-3 innings and the Dodgers chased pitcher-reporter David Cone with five runs in the first two innings as Los Angeles beat the New York Mets 6-3 Wednesday night to even the National League playoffs at a game apiece.

In an article written for the New York Daily News, Cone said Los Angeles reliever Jay Howell looked "like a high school pitcher" in the ninth inning of Game 1 when the Mets scored three times for a 3-2 victory. Cone also said Dodgers starter Orel Hershiser was lucky to shut out the Mets for eight innings.

A healthy Banks means a complete backfield

Notre Dame's backfield rushed for 321 yards in a 52-7 rout of Purdue two weeks ago and 341 yards in crushing Stanford 42-14 last Saturday night.

And that was when the backfield was plagued by a series of injuries to key players.

Saturday afternoon against Pittsburgh the Irish will have all of their backs in the lineup and the results could be even more impressive than in recent games.

Junior fullback Braxton Banks, who started the first two games, will be back after missing the last two contests with torn knee ligaments. Banks injured his knee in the first series against Michigan State. Banks has been in action all week, playing a majority of the practice plays in an effort to get back in the flow of the Irish offense.

"It's been tight and sore," Banks said after Wednesday's practice. "A lot of it is getting back into things. I'm going to approach it with a hands-on attitude and give it all I can give it."

Banks suffered a partially torn knee ligament in last year's opener at Michigan and missed games against Michigan State and Purdue. He bounced back to gain 212 yards on 54 carries and four touchdowns. His high game was 59 yards on 11 carries against USC.

In this young season, Banks has carried four times for 13 yards. Ironically, Banks went down at Michigan State on artificial turf and the Irish will play on turf again at Pittsburgh Saturday.

Greg Guffey

Football Notebook

"If I was on the grass, it would make it a little better," Banks said. "I'd rather play my first game on grass, but I can't do much about it."

Fullback Anthony Johnson also went down in East Lansing with a sprained ankle. He missed the Purdue game and carried 14 times for 61 yards and a touchdown against Stanford. Johnson should be near full strength against the Panthers.

With Johnson and Banks back at tailback, Tony Brooks can return to the tailback spot behind Mark Green. Brooks rushed for 110 yards versus the Boilermakers and 59 against the Cardinal. Green has been consistent, gaining 293 yards in the four Irish victories.

The Panthers have been inconsistent against the rush. Pittsburgh surrendered only 71 and 91 yards on the ground in victories over Northern Iowa and Ohio State, but gave up 261 and 124 rushing yards in losses to West Virginia and Boston College. Notre Dame ran for 464 yards against Pittsburgh in 1971, the most ever allowed by the Panthers.

With all four top backs in the lineup, Notre Dame could pose problems to the Pittsburgh defense. If all four regain full strength, the Irish could dominate opposing defenses even more.

"There's no telling where we could go," Banks said. "We were voted the No. 1 backfield in the nation during the summer. I can't see anything that can stop a healthy backfield. That goes for any team in the country, not just ourselves."
