Casey: Party must rethink on abortion

By BRENDAN QUINN
News Writer

The national Democratic Party failed to understand the seismic, social, and political shock waves generated by the 1973 Roe vs. Wade decision, according to Robert Casey, governor of Pennsylvania.

"In the two decades since then (Roe), the party's position on abortion went from open to closed and from dialogue to dictate, and millions of Democrats headed for those open doors and they never came back," Casey said in a speech yesterday on "The Democratic Party and the Politics of Abortion."

"Too many Democrats in this country have had a bad feeling in their hearts and in their souls about the national Democratic Party because the Democratic Party broke its compact with mainstream America when it volunteered itself as the party of abortion on demand," he said.

According to Casey, the pro-abortion forces in the Democratic Party have succeeded in alienating Democrats such as himself by catering to special interest groups which control the party's purse strings. These special interests have turned the party away from the traditional values of millions of Democrats, he said.

The party has shut off discussion on the issue, but even this prohibition has not stopped eighty members of the House of Representatives from voting against the party's pro-abortion position, added Casey.

"This is more than an issue of rights. It is an issue of right and wrong, and millions of Democrats think their party's dead wrong on abortion," Casey said. "The party will stay wrong until they open the party and open the platform process to dialogue and debate," he said.

"It is time for the party to deliver a strong message to the American people that millions of Democrats believe in protecting unborn human life," he said.

Casey said the Democratic Party has failed to capture the Senate committee passes budget, limits defense cuts

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Budget Committee approved a $1.5 trillion budget for next year Thursday after rejecting a plan by its Democratic chairman to cut defense spending by $10 billion and agreeing to limit the reduction to $5 billion, about what President Bush has proposed.

The overall budget for fiscal 1993, which begins Oct. 1, was approved 11-10. The full Senate plans to begin debating the measure next Tuesday.

By a 12-9 vote, the panel rejected a plan by chairman James Sasser, D-Tenn., that would have held next year's defense spending to $286.8 billion.

Three of the committee's Democrats joined the panel's nine Republicans in voting against the plan. The three Democrats were Sens. Ernest Hollings of South Carolina, J. James Exon of Nebraska and Christopher Dodd of Connecticut.

Minutes later, the committee adopted a proposal by Hollings and Sen. Pete Domenici of New Mexico, the panel's ranking Republican, that would set fiscal 1993 defense spending at $291.5 billion. The vote was 11-10, with Hollings and Dodd joining the GOP members.

The vote represented a setback for Senate Democratic leaders, who had been hoping for a deeper defense cut than the president has proposed in the aftermath of the dissolution of the Soviet Union. It came after Defense Secretary Dick Cheney lobbied several of the senators by telephone.

"This says an enormous amount about the strength of the military-industrial complex in this country," Sasser said after the vote. "Bringing down excessive military spending is going to be a long, excruciating process, because they'll resist you at every turn."

Hollings argued that his plan would avoid throwing hundreds of thousands of troops and civilian defense related workers out of work.

"You don't want to counsel yourself out by closing out Fort Dix ... and have them coming up here looking for more unemployment compensation," Hollings said.

Sasser's defense figure was immediately attacked by Republicans and some Democrats as being too deep, and by other lawmakers as being too shallow.

"The ice is cracking, and we don't know how things will end up in the Soviet Union," Domenici told reporters. "What's so bad about waiting three or four years before we drastically reduce the defense."

Thanks to sizable Democratic defections, the House and Senate have rejected efforts by party leaders in the last week to shift billions of dollars from defense to social programs. But even with all savings directed at deficit reduction, Democrats are split over how far the Pentagon's budget should be shrunk.

Faculty vow to keep struggling despite veto

Editor's Note: The following is the third of four articles addressing the issue of faculty participation in the academic governance of the University.

By DAVID KINNEY

News Editor

Although the proposal calling for the reorganization of the Academic Council was vetoed, the debate over faculty participation in the academic governance of Notre Dame continues.

"I haven't heard anyone say they (the faculty) shouldn't have input in the deliberation of academic issues," said Dean Eileen Kolman of Freshman Year of Studies. "The question is in the structures."

Dean Frank Castellino of the College of Science agreed. "As we start to develop a better faculty, this type of faculty will want a say and should have one," he said. But "are we a mature enough University for that to happen at this point?"

It is not only the faculty that is concerned with the operation of the Academic Council. University President Father Edward Malloy said he hopes that the executive committee of the Academic Council can examine its workings and effectiveness in order to enliven the conversation at the meetings.

The proposal drafted by the Faculty Committee on Governance and later approved by the Academic Council was viewed by many faculty to be a modest one, according to Mort Fuchs, chair of the department of biological sciences.

"The proposal did not take the president's veto away," said Fuchs. "It was not a threat to him or the Academic Council."

Faculty emphasize that they do not want complete control of the operation of the University. Rather, they want to have say in issues such as curriculum, the treatment of faculty, tenure policies and how the relationship between students and faculty are handled, according to Professor William Tageson.

Professor David O'Connor said that the governance committee wanted to make a small, focused, concrete step through the proposal, allowing for more gradual change.

The elements of the proposal were intended to both improve the quality of debate in the Council and to facilitate faculty participation in the deliberation, said Fuchs.

Among these changes were increasing the number of elected faculty from 18 to 24. The committee hoped to increase the voice of faculty and, in turn, to make them more influential in the Academic Council, according to Professor Suzanne Marilley.

"The faculty wanted to be prominent in the deliberation of where we should go," added O'Connor.

There was some debate, however, about how such a restructuring would increase the influence of the faculty in the deliberation of academic issues, Marilley said. In 1984, in fact, the Academic Council voted to reduce the size of the Council to two-thirds of its original size in order to facilitate discussion, according to Malloy.

Castellino said that there is no reason to revert to the larger structure of the council. Expanding the number of elected faculty in order to gain a greater majority of elected faculty sets up an unnecessary

Kelly, Carrier win GSU elections

Mike Kelly and David Carrier defeated the ticket of Kurt Mills and Patrick McKinlay yesterday in the Graduate Student Union (GSU) elections, garnering 90 votes in favor of their child and healthcare platform. Mills and McKinlay captured the remaining 66 votes.

Due to ambiguity and low publicity, "out of 1,200 graduate students, the 15 percent voter turnout was not surprising or unexpected," according to Tony Hazbum, election commissioner.

As president and vice-president of the graduate student governing body, Kelly and Carrier plan to reorganize and consolidate the GSU administration in order to incorporate more participation from the grassroots level, Carrier said.

"We would like to spearhead initiatives at the graduate student level to avoid being seen as a distant body of governors," he said.

"We also would like to improve relations between graduate students and the undergrads," added Kelly. "I think there is a misunderstanding between the [two groups] regarding research. We were undergrads once, and we are available as a resource [to the undergrads]."

Both Kelly and Carrier said they feel very strongly about their platform of improved child and healthcare, and are eager to follow up on the studies conducted by the

With the end of the century drawing near, the U.S. and the world find themselves suddenly confronting the socioeconomic ramifications of our past.

We find ourselves faced with depletion of the ozone layer over our heads, not just over penguins at the South Pole. We have just begun to realize the extent of the ecological damage we've created in becoming the world's only superpower.

Those of us that find ourselves on the political left see a slow, but ever growing trend of former moderates and conservatives wading across the mainstream into becoming the despised "L" word (liberal). It is a defection of sorts, caused in part by the realization that not everyone is as well off now as they were twelve years ago; the rich are richer, the poor are still poor and their numbers still grow.

What is Notre Dame's place in this trend to the left? Undeniably, we are a conservative campus, but we are also predominantly a Christian campus, with a graduate, undergraduate and faculty composition.

Christianity, and Notre Dame as a Christian place, should not dictate political ideologies. Rather, it mandates us to follow the "bleeding heart" of Christ, in so much as we struggle to live the Gospel and follow Christ's example of righteousness living, even in His humility. Why should anyone be ashamed of trying to model their heart after Christ.

David Horowitz, in his recent campus lecture "Deconstructing the Left," recognized that many of the ideals touted by the radicals of the 1960's ended up causing more problems than they solved, despite the good intentions. He cited how the South Vietnamese people were victim to greater oppression due to U.S. withdrawal from the war and from the Communist regime that soon thereafter conquered that country.

He implied that the left protested most often just to protest and often failed to think out all the consequences of what they stood for.

The sexual revolution, he said, was responsible for many problems currently in our society. He said that homosexuals in that time period were as promiscuous as heterosexuals, and the left felt that no one should be allowed to dictate another's lifestyle. As a result, AIDS was rampantly being spread long before it was identified—all because of certain leftist ideas about the sexual revolution and "personal freedoms."

As the new political left forms today and in years to come, those leading it and those joining it must realize that their idealism must be balanced with practicality.

Whatever one's political ideology, there remains a factor more important, more challenging and more compelling than any political view. However the country's young intellectuals swing their political views, we must all dedicate our idealism to reflection upon Christ, Ghandi, and King. Good intentions can backfire, but Christ's example cannot if we keep the faith.

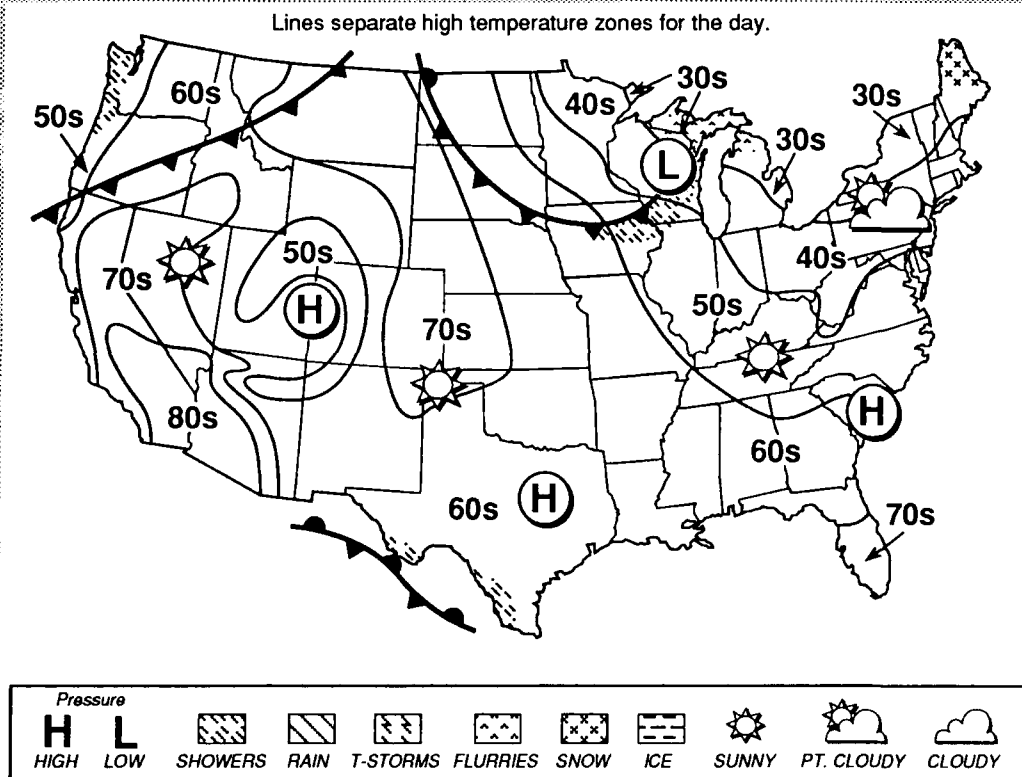

The views expressed in the Inside Column are those of the author and not necessarily those of The Observer.

Iraq holding over 700 prisoners

■CAIRO, Egypt — Kuwait reports Iraq is still holding more than 700 prisoners, though that's down from an earlier estimate of more than 2,000, the Arab League says. Asaad al-Asaad, the league's assistant secretary-general, said Thursday that he delivered the new Kuwaiti list to Nabil Najim, Iraq's permanent representative to the Cairo-based organization. Terming it Kuwait's "final list," al-Asaad said it contains the names of 723 people, compared to the earlier Kuwaiti estimate of 2,101 prisoners. Kuwait says the prisoners have been held in Iraq since the Iraqi invasion of the emirate in August 1990. A U.S.-led military coalition drove Iraqi forces from Kuwait the following February.

Titanic captain negligent

■LONDON — The captain of a ship that was near the sinking Titanic should have tried to save the more than 1,500 people who died, even though he probably couldn't have done anything, an official inquiry concluded Thursday. The captain's son viewed the report as partial exoneration for a man "portrayed as a liar and a drunkard, the baddie in a great drama." The report disagreed with an official finding in 1912 that said Capt. Stanley Lord of the Californian might have saved everyone if he had responded quickly after the Titanic hit an iceberg. The report, presented by Capt. Peter Marriott, chief inspector of marine accidents for the Department of Transport, said Lord saw the Titanic's distress signals, but did not take proper action.

City demolishes wrong house

■PHILADELPHIA — The city contends it had every right to begin destroying 39 rickety rowhouses on a drug-infested block, even though one leveled building apparently was occupied by its owner. Helen Anthony, 59, returned home from work Tuesday to find narcotics officers and work crews standing near the rubble that had been her home for 23 years. Her family could salvage only a few items — a wedding picture, a television and some clothes. City officials said they thought it was abandoned and that police had found bloody heroin needles on the first floor where Anthony's late husband once operated a fish store. Also, city inspection crews said the masonry bulged dangerously and a stairway was falling apart. It looked like only squatters inhabited the building, they said.

Tyson agrees to volunteer work

■INDIANAPOLIS — Boxer Mike Tyson has volunteered for work details at the Reception-Diagnostic Center. Tyson's prison tasks could be janitorial work such as cleaning rooms or helping out in the kitchen, correction department spokesman Kevin Moore said Wednesday. "A lot of inmates volunteer for work. It makes the time go faster," Moore said. Tyson also agreed to take tests to help counselors learn his educational level and understand his personality. Today Tyson ends the first week of his six-year prison term for the sexual attack on Desiree Washington, a then-18-year-old contestant in the Miss Black America pageant.

Faculty consider their role in university governance

Editor's Note: The following is the fourth in a series of articles addressing the issue of faculty participation in the academic governance of the University.

By DAVID KINNEY
News Editor

The faculty's demand for an increased role in academic governance is rooted in questions about the traditional governance of the University and its Catholic identity.

Faculty believe that the University does not treat them with the respect that they warrant as the center of the academic realm. "As a group," said Father David Burrell, a professor of philosophy, "we feel that we should have a significant say in what an institution ... is all about academically."

"If a university is to be a university at all," he said, "deliberation — that is, discussing and deciding — about the shape of an educational environment ought to include the faculty."

Notre Dame is traditionally governed by a top-down administrative structure, contrary to the operation of other institutions of higher learning, according to Professor William Tageson.

There are, however, several areas where the faculty have a lot of power over governance issues, including deciding on curriculum within their academic departments and making recommendations for appointments and promotions of faculty and promotions, according to Provost Timothy O'Meara. "Virtually all of the recommendations" that come from faculty committees are accepted, he said.

However, as the University's faculty improves in quality, more will question why they do not have as much say in the larger academic issues as at other universities.

Professor Philip Quinn, who taught at Brown University, said that at other universities, "a good administration provides leadership, ... but has to provide reasons for its decisions."

University President Father Edward Malloy, however, emphasized that the difference between universities lies in what can be transferred from one institution to another and what is unique about a given institution.

"One of the reasons why we have some things which distinguish us is connected to the identity and mission of the University," he said. "In the midst of what is a healthy and thriving University we need to assure that we do not lose our core values and the fundamental realities that bind us together."

FACULTY PARTICIPATION IN GOVERNANCE

Part 4 of 4

Several faculty members have expressed concern about the intent of Malloy's veto as expressed in his letter published in The Observer Feb. 17.

In that letter, he said that "There are certain aspects of Notre Dame which are distinctive if not unique. Foremost among these is our Catholic identity. This must be preserved at all costs."

O'Meara emphasized that this does not mean that the identity is static. "It changes with time, it changes even as the Church changes."

Many faculty believe that for Notre Dame to be a great Catholic University, they must be among those working on that project, he said.

O'Connor, among others, said that the faculty believes that this excludes them from the University's Catholic mission. While he said that he believes that the Holy Cross Fathers must be a central player in the administration, the faculty must also be a part of the mission to protect Notre Dame's Catholic identity.

"There will be no way of being a Catholic University unless the faculty are part of that endeavor," said Burrell.

"The core of Malloy's argument," said O'Connor, "was that the reorganization of the Academic Council so that it could be more active ... is some sort of threat to Notre Dame's Catholic identity."

If the faculty perceives this to be the case, a number of negative consequences could result, O'Connor said. This attitude implies that "the president thinks that there is a basic incompatibility between Catholicism and the values that the faculty has devoted their lives to," and could lead the faculty to become cynical of the concept of a Catholic mission.

"If this is true, then Notre Dame is in deep, deep trouble," O'Connor said.

Quinn agreed. "The only people that can make it a Catholic university are the faculty and the students in the classroom ... If it is going to be that the only people who can protect this is the administration, then the Catholic identity is doomed."

O'Meara, however, attempted to clarify this point of view. In the past, he said, decisions about how to execute the Catholic mission have been made by the Holy Cross Fathers, the founding religious order of the University.

In the last 20 years, since the Board of Trustees became a board of laymen, the responsibility has become a dual partnership between the laity and the Holy Cross Fathers, he said.

"But if the whole question is lent to the faculty at large," he continued, "we have a lot of evolution to go through before we are ready to claim that we (the faculty) have a special responsibility. An imprint has not been made on the faculty at large that would enable us to successfully undertake this responsibility" at this time.

O'Meara emphasized that most faculty, including himself, have a strong desire to see the Catholic identity continue. However, "if you took faculty that were totally prepared by secular universities, do they have it in their make-up to execute this for the future?"

"I don't distrust the faculty individually or as a group," said Malloy. "But people of good will can disagree about what structure for the University — in terms of its distinctive identity — are important."

Butrus makes first presidential address, Blanco gives his last

By TRAVIS SMITH
News Writer

Greg Butrus made his first student body address as president yesterday, and discussed his and Vice President Molly O'Neill's plans for their term in office.

Butrus stressed the importance of recognizing that date rape occurs at Notre Dame and that steps need to be taken towards preventing it. Working with the Campus Life Council, Butrus said he hopes to get an immediate response to the problem.

"We'd like to develop a plan with Student Affairs so that they could get together with student leaders and student media every few months to discuss statistics about sexual crimes on campus, thereby increasing awareness," said Butrus, adding that he plans to reduce the confusion in DuLac's description of the University's process after a rape occurs.

Butrus also stressed the importance of student awareness in policies made by the administration.

"Many policies are made without the input from students. No student policy should be made without student input. We think the administration should agree to this proposition," Butrus said.

Butrus said that presently University Libraries is considering banning food and drinks from the library. He said he is opposed to this, but also feels that the issue should be made known to the student body and students should be involved in the decision.

Butrus also said he plans to work with law school students to make a legal service a central resource for students for consultation regarding their local legal problems.

The address was opened by Dave Florenzo, this year's vice president. Former president, Joseph Blanco, then spoke and performed the symbolic passing of the gavel to President Butrus. Vice President O'Neill rounded out the speaking.

Presidency because the party refuses to "take the high ground" on the value issues such as abortion. Casey used the 1988 election as an example, alleging that although the people preferred Dukakis on programmatic issues, Dukakis could not convince the electorate that he cared about values.

Pro-life Democrats must take a solid stand to demonstrate to the millions of American voters that the Democratic Party is the party of life, added Casey.

"We, Democrats, must fight for life with the same passion that Democrats throughout history have fought for liberty," said Casey. "If the national Democratic Party and its candidates offer a strong value-oriented message," he said, "the people will welcome them back into their homes and into their hearts and into the White House once again."

The current candidates, must, therefore, address the heart and soul of the electorate if they confrontational mentality. Instead, everyone's interests should be for the good of the University, he added.

Malloy also expressed opposition to increasing the number of faculty on the Council because it would alter the blend of faculty, administration and students, a composition that serves the interests of Notre Dame.

"I think the nature of the decision-making apparatus of the University about academic policies ... is best served by that kind of composition," he said.

The proposal approved by the Council also called for the creation of a number of standing committees. These would be able to examine issues more closely and to provide the rest of the council with more information so that it could make more informed decisions, according to Fuchs.

"Many times," he continued, "I vote in a vacuum."

Castellino said that a lot of faculty members are not interested in participating in the committees, and expressed concern that a small minority of individuals would be involved.

"I sense that some of the concern about the Academic Council," said Malloy, "is that people are trying to make it do are to be successful in November, Casey said.

"My party will never succeed unless we can reach into the living rooms of America to make our presentation," Casey said. "The people are waiting and they are watching. They are ready to open the door."

something it wasn't set up to do." However, faculty and Administration members, including Malloy, are concerned with its operation.

"The quality of discussion can be vastly improved," said Provost Timothy O'Meara, "but there is a certain culture (in the Council) that prevents this."

Dean Eileen Kolman of Freshman Year of Studies said that the Council could use its time better within its present structure. However, "if the Academic Council is the primary academic governance that the faculty participate in, then then the way that it is functioning at present leaves something to be desired," she added.

Malloy said that while the blend of the Council is well-suited to its operation, "where I think the Academic Council needs to improve its functioning is in the quality of conversation about various dimensions of the academic life which are not legislative but evaluative."

Malloy has discussed the possibility of creating a "third thing," a body resulting from the work of and modeled after the Colloquy for the Year 2,000. "I believe we need another vehicle," he said, "to look at philosophical questions, not necessarily to move to legislation but to ask 'How are we doing?' or 'What are the central issues?'"

The goals of the body would include improved communication, wider consultation, healthy discussion and the formation of a consensus, according to Malloy.

Some faculty, however, do not think that such a body is the answer to their concerns, including Paul Conway, chair of the Faculty Senate. "How is this going to increase meaningful faculty participation?" asked Fuchs.

The body, if modeled after the Colloquy, would have a completely inappropriate structure, according to Professor Neal Delany, because it would include members outside of the academic core of the University.

"The president's proposal is simply irrelevant to the faculty's concerns," said O'Connor. "He proposed something that would not address academics only. It is a strange structure for a University that takes academics to be at its heart."

"We had a specific proposal," added Father David Burrell, a philosophy professor, "and the president countered with a vague allusion."

Malloy, however, said that he has been as open-ended and open-minded about the third body as possible. "I have no objections to the group having a majority of faculty on it, but it should include students, staff and a small number of administrators."

"In my judgement, we have a great opportunity here," he said. The Colloquy, in cooperation with the Academic Council and the proposed third body "would allow for deliberation in that sense to an extent that is very unusual on American university campuses."

The fourth round of Middle East peace talks should proceed as planned, according to Michael Shiloh, deputy chief of mission at the Israeli embassy.

"If all goes well, I think that there is no reason why we will not meet again in Washington on the 27th of April," Shiloh said at a news conference Thursday. Although the two groups have not reached an agreement, Shiloh said he feels they have made significant progress.

"The mere fact that Arabs and Israelis can get together under one roof and speak without third parties for many, many hours as well as breathe the same air is something that, for 43 years, was unthinkable and unbelievable," he said.

Shiloh, who serves on the Israeli Delegation, said both the Israelis and the Palestinians have discussed an interim arrangement for five years of self rule. Each group has submitted a plan to the other, but a large gap exists between the groups' demands, he said.

"Nobody among us and among Americans should think that this is a matter that can be solved in weeks or even months," Shiloh said. "It will take many years."

Syria has created one obstacle to the peace process, according to Shiloh, who claimed that "the Syrians are not interested in a peace treaty and have been reluctant to even use the word peace. They believe that peace is for the next generation or the generation after."

Shiloh also addressed U.S. allegations that Israel had shared Patriot missile technology with China, predicting that the U.S. Delegation will not come up with any evidence that Israel negotiated with the Chinese.

Shiloh is the highest ranking Israeli official ever to visit South Bend, according to the Notre Dame public relations office. Born in Hague, Holland in 1934, Shiloh emigrated to Tel Aviv the following year.

After graduating from the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Shiloh served as director of the Berth-Berl Institute for Adult Education for three years. He then joined the Israeli Ministry of Foreign Affairs where he has served ever since. He has represented the Israeli government in embassies and consulates in New York, Tokyo, Bonn, and Boston.

Manchester students help colleagues resolve conflicts

By GERALDINE HAMILTON

News Writer

Reconciliation services and a diversity workshop have been tools for maintaining peace at Manchester College, according to Gary Zimmerman, chairman of Psychology and head of the college's Mediation Service.

Zimmerman discussed peaceful means for resolving conflicts on college campuses yesterday in a lecture titled, "Solving Campus Conflicts Through Mediation." Several Manchester College students who are involved with the Mediation Service also participated.

Zimmerman and the students recently started The Manchester College Reconciliation Service (MCRS), which trains volunteers to act as unbiased conciliators of conflicts in which students at the college are involved.

"Conflict is natural and there is a need to work with human ways of dealing with conflict," Zimmerman said. "Conflict has the danger of brokenness and the opportunity for goodness," he said.

Although conflict is generally perceived as negative, he said, it can be an extremely enriching growth experience. He defined mediation as involvement with two sides who are attempting to work through their problems, and said conciliation is "building or rebuilding a relationship so the disputants themselves can then agree to address their differences."

The work of the mediator "more often focuses on the settlement of the specific conflict," Zimmerman said.

When asked to help resolve a conflict, he said, an MCRS member questions those involved and decides whether the group can be of service. If all parties agree to be involved, a meeting is set up, he said.

There is a small trained listening panel consisting of three to five students who work on a volunteer basis, Zimmerman said. In the first phase of the meeting, the panel listens to each party tell his story and clarify important issues.

In the second phase, the opposing parties speak directly to each other explaining their views of the conflict, he said. Then the panel and the parties review what has been said and the panel assists the parties in reaching a specific solution to their conflict. The parties then sign a non-legal contract stating the resolutions reached, Zimmerman said.

Students said MCRS's main goal is to facilitate communication, and success is not judged by how well people like each other, but by whether or not the problem was resolved.

MCRS has 30 active volunteers and has listened to 15 cases, 100 percent of which have ended successfully in resolution, Zimmerman said.

According to Zimmerman, all cases are strictly confidential. Most come to the MCRS though the students involved in the conflict or residence life staff contacting the service, he said.

Zimmerman, who is promoting the spread of this type of program, said reconciliation services "can have an impact that will ripple."

The Manchester students also spoke about a Celebrating Diversity Workshop which helps build better understanding between varied groups of people.

According to a Manchester student, the skills that are learned in the workshop are identifying the misconceptions learned about other groups and learning the personal impact of specific incidents of discrimination.

There are 100 people at each workshop and Zimmerman said, "in a few hours 100 people can be impacted positively in a non-confrontational manner, where bridges are built."

Native American students planning Powwow to celebrate their heritage

By MARA DIVIS

Native American students will celebrate their heritage through dance at the Native American Student Association's Powwow at Stepan Center Saturday, according to the group's co-presidents Deswood Etsitty and LaVern Yazzie.

The fourth annual Powwow, which will involve traditional dancing, is geared toward promoting and sharing the culture of Native Americans in the communities of both Notre Dame and the Michiana area, Etsitty said.

"It's our way of sharing our culture. The meaning behind the whole thing is sharing our beliefs with others," Etsitty said.

The event will consist of a grand entry, in which traditional dancers will enter and display their individual tribal dances. Intertribal dances for anyone interested in dancing will follow, Yazzie said. This year the group will sponsor a contest for men's, women's, and intertribal divisions, Yazzie said.

Also on the agenda is an arts and crafts fair open to the public. The fair will sponsor a raffle between each dance performance, Yazzie said.

According to Etsitty, the Powwow is the Native American Student Association's largest event for the year.

"We're a pretty small group," Etsitty said. "This is our biggest event, and we depend on a lot of support from groups on campus. Everyone is welcome," he said.

The Powwow will begin with the dancers' grand entrance at 12 p.m. and dancing will last throughout the day.

Brown heckled by Jewish group for considering running with Jackson

NEW YORK (AP) — Democrat Jerry Brown came in for a tumultuous round of heckling Thursday from members of a Jewish community group over his choice of civil rights leader Jesse Jackson as a potential running mate.

"I understand the depth of concern in the Jewish community," said Brown, clearly caught off guard by the sharp criticism at a campaign appearance before the Jewish Community Relations Council.

Brown's remarks were interrupted by state Assemblyman Dov Hikind who urged about 200 people on hand not to "sit quietly and listen to this."

"You insult the Jewish community by picking Jesse Jackson," Hikind told the former California governor.

The angry lawmaker was asked to leave the room and two members of the group escorted him to the door, but others in the audience made it plain they were unhappy with the choice of Jackson. He was hissed momentarily and hecklers sounded off throughout the 30-minute session.

The episode demonstrated Brown's problem among Jewish voters who account for an estimated 30 percent of the vote in a New York Democratic primary.

In key primaries this year, Brown trailed Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton and former Sen. Paul Tsongas of Massachusetts among Jewish voters.

But in Connecticut on March 24, Brown not only won the primary but received 37 percent of the Jewish vote while Clinton got 34 percent and Tsongas 25 percent.

Jackson's own campaign for the Democratic presidential nomination in 1984 was marked by tensions over remarks that were taken by many Jews to be anti-Semitic and anti-Israel.

"That is not an opinion held universally by Jewish people," Jackson said while taping an appearance on the Phil Donahue television show. "During this time of polarity we need to have the will to build bridges. I would hope that blacks and Jews would work together."

But Brown has a number of times named Jackson as his choice as a running mate and said the civil rights leader is qualified both because of his experience and because he could help to heal America's racial tensions.

Clinton more vulnerable to character attacks than Bush to criticism of record

WASHINGTON (AP) — Democratic presidential front-runner Bill Clinton is more vulnerable to attacks on his character than President Bush is to criticism of his record in office, according to a nationwide poll released Thursday.

The poll, the latest in a series by the Times Mirror Center for The People and The Press, questioned three separate samples of the public last week.

One sample was a traditional, neutral matchup of Bush and Clinton. But in a second sample, of questions about Bush's handling of the economy, his failure to get rid of Saddam Hussein in Iraq and the breaking of his no-new-taxes pledge. A third sample was asked first about Clinton's alleged marital affairs and conflicts of interest, and his Vietnam draft status.

In the neutral sample, Bush led Clinton 50 percent to 43 percent. When people were first reminded about the president's failures in the job, Bush's margin was cut to 48-45.

But in the sample asked first about Clinton's character issues, Bush's margin climbed to 15 points — 54 to 39 percent.

Andrew Kohut said the outcome "does represent the potential the Republican Party has in a campaign situation to further worsen the public image of Bill Clinton."

Cuomo: vote for a real candidate

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — Gov. Mario Cuomo said Thursday that it was time to take "none of the above" out of the Democratic presidential race.

"The notion that it will be someone else, that there will be a brokered convention, should be struck from everyone's consideration because it's probably not going to happen and it should not happen," Cuomo said.

Cuomo ended years of speculation about a presidential bid on Dec. 20, saying a state budget battle that has since ended kept him from running this year.

Cuomo asked Democrats to choose either Bill Clinton or Jerry Brown and said, "It is time to take Mr. Nota out of the race. Mr. Nota is N.O.T.A. — none of the above."

Some Cuomo supporters have said they would like to see a brokered convention so the New York governor could have a shot at gaining the nomination.

Asked if he were completely out of the race, Cuomo said: "I'm not in it."

"There are only two possibilities — being in the race and being out of the race," Cuomo added. "I am not in it, therefore I am out of it."

Cuomo, who plans to meet with Clinton on Saturday, said the Arkansas governor "is very close to locking (the nomination) up already."

Nonetheless, Cuomo said the race for Tuesday's New York primary remains "a horserace."

Cuomo also predicted that if Clinton won the nomination, his enduring the character questions would be an asset because he would have "faced it and faced it down."

TB at an 'alarming stage' in New York

DECATUR, Ga. (AP) — Tuberculosis has reached an alarming stage in New York City, but nationwide the disease's comeback seems to have slowed, TB specialists said Thursday.

The nation reported 26,283 cases in 1991, up 2.3 percent from 1990, according to the U.S. Centers for Disease Control. That's a far milder increase than a year earlier, when the contagious and deadly lung disease jumped 9.4 percent, by far the biggest increase ever.

"I don't think the shape of a couple of percentage points means anything in terms of direction," Dr. George Cauthen of the CDC told the agency's Advisory Committee on the Elimination of Tuberculosis at a meeting in suburban Atlanta. "I couldn't tell you what next year will be."

"I have some concerns as to whether we're hearing about all the tuberculosis," added Dr. Dixie Snider, director of the CDC's TB division. "Our opinion is there are a lot more outbreaks ... than we know about."

Tuberculosis, once a dreaded plague, fell sharply in the decades following the invention of antibiotic drug therapy. U.S. cases fell from about 84,000 in 1953 to 22,000 in 1985.

But the disease then began a resurgence, preying largely on people whose systems are already weakened by the AIDS virus. And the disease is increasingly appearing in forms resistant to the most commonly used TB drugs, greatly complicating treatment.

Tuberculosis is spread through the air by those with active TB, usually by coughing or sneezing. Infection occurs after prolonged exposure, putting those in close quarters with TB patients at greatest risk. An estimated 10 million Americans are infected, but most will never become ill, and do not pose a threat to others.

In New York City — which accounted for as much as one in six U.S. TB cases in preliminary reporting last year — a study found 34 percent of tuberculosis cases resistant to at least one anti-TB drug. The report for 1991 found 3,685 cases. The previous year, the city had 3,554 cases, the CDC said.

The problem is especially acute among New York's poor and homeless. A Harlem Hospital study found 89 percent of TB patients never finished their therapy and thus were at risk to infect untold others.

"We ought to make a compelling cry for help for New York City," said Dr. Michael Iseman of Denver, a member of the CDC's TB council. "The situation really is at the meltdown stage."

"The potential is there," Snider said, noting that New York is the nation's "epicenter of homelessness and the epicenter of the AIDS epidemic."

Pro-life priest: abortion is not only a women's issue

By LYNN O'DONNELL
News Writer

Pro-life advocate Father Charles Fiori spoke yesterday on a variety of issues concerning abortion.

Fiori showed the group a tiny, pink model of a baby, and called it a true representation of a fetus. "4,600 babies a day are aborted," he said. "Saying you're pro-choice is like saying you're pro-breathing."

Abortion is everyone's problem, according to Fiori. "It's not a woman's issue, because statistically about fifty percent of those killed are men. I have an interest in that," he said.

"The bottom line is it takes two to make a life," said Fiori raising the model again, "but constitutionally it only takes one to abort it."

According to Fiori, the outcome of this year's presidential election will influence numerous court cases pending in the Supreme court on pro-life issues. "Getting the issues away from the states is key," he said.

Candidates in the 1992 election view abortion as the big issue they wish would go away, Fiori said. Bush, now pro-life, was in favor of Planned Parenthood not to long ago, Fiori said, adding that he hopes leaders will not try to ignore the issue in an election year plagued with unemployment, inflation, and bouncing checks.

"Don't let them forget this one," Fiori adds, holding the pink fetus in his hand. "Never refer to it as an 'it.' This is a boy or a girl," he said.

Quality of Life Committee, a GSU group who surveyed Notre Dame and Saint Mary's students on child and healthcare.

Carrier said they hope to bring to the administration more concrete proposals regarding the childcare issue.

Regarding healthcare, Carrier said the pair hopes the Administration will begin to "treat them more like full-fledged employees than indentured servants." It is in everyone's best interest to improve health benefits beyond what he called the present "bare bones minimum policy."

"Misery leads to little time which leads to bad teaching," Carrier said.

For these same reasons, they are also asking for "at least poverty-level income," Carrier said. "Especially in Arts and Letters." He said, "The $8000 annual stipend is barely adequate to meet basic human needs. With two kids, this forces one's annual income to half the poverty line."

Casey: main voter issue is abortion

By SARAH DORAN
News Writer

Democrats must be open to discussion about abortion, conduct a national debate on the issue, and impose no litmus tests of abortion views as a condition for office, said Governor Robert Casey, D-Pennsylvania, at a press conference yesterday at Notre Dame.

The Democratic Party's current pro-choice position has caused the loss of large numbers of voters who want to vote democratic, but are against abortion, Casey said.

"I would like to see in our (the Democratic Party's) platform, like the Republican platform, a declaration on the affirmation of life," said Casey. "The unborn child should be the national constituency of the Democratic party and we should be fighting for this our most defenceless member."

The Governor referred to ABC exit polls which said that the primary issue of the 1988 presidential campaign was abortion, and that one-third of the Democratic Party members favor the pro-life view. The majority of these party members voted for George Bush in the election, he said.

Casey suggested new programs and policies to supplement his pro-life position, including the institution of reformed day care, neonatal and nutrition programs. He said that both "assistance and alternatives are basic and crucial" to his anti-abortion stand.

"With the obligation to protect life we have the obligation to make life worth living," said Casey.

Looking toward the Democrats' position on abortion in the upcoming presidential election, Casey said, "This is a year in which anything can happen and so far anything has. Hopefully, the pro-life point of view will be given a seat at the table instead of being counted out."

Casey remains uncommitted in Pennsylvania's April 28 presidential primary.

Could 'Governor Moonbeam' be JFK of the 90's?

At three o'clock in the morning it is impossible to say anything at Dave's Doughnuts without feeling as if you're uttering timeless profundities. That plus the tar-like coffee and greasy doughnuts are a great combination.

Jocelyn had been trying to convince us for at least an hour that we should all help her campaign for Jerry Brown. She had this theory about Brown being to our historical situation what JFK was to his Zeitgeist.

Jocelyn and her friend Denise had recommended the glazed jelly rolls. "They'll go with our eyes," Denise reasoned.

We were on the third round of our highly nutritious sugar buzz. Jocelyn was saying something about how Kennedy's death symbolized the American Left's loss of faith in the system.

Of course that got Dave, the doughnut man, to recount the anecdote about how Kennedy had inadvertently called himself a jelly doughnut when he uttered his famous "Ich bin ein Berliner." Dave loves to tell that story.

The only other patron, a cab driver at the next table who had been listening intently to our conversation, decided it was time to throw in his two cents worth of Delphic oracular wisdom. "Hey," he began promisingly. "What if JFK knew he was calling himself a jelly doughnut? I mean, give the guy credit."

"Let them eat cake," Denise put in.

"Doughnuts and circuses," Jocelyn followed. "The story of history in a nutshell."

"History belongs to the workers of the world," my Marxist friend Dex offered.

"We are the world," I observed, savoring my first truly timeless profundity of the night. "We are the children."

I marveled to think of what depths of profundity we might sink to. Clearly there was no room in my present Weltanschauung for even these modest insights.

Jocelyn wanted to get back to Jerry Brown's "we, the children" kind of campaign. "The thing is, we're at a unique historical juncture. The world-historical spirit is at a crossroads, and it's up to us to point it in the right direction."

"Jocelyn may be right," I reflected. "After all, we belong to a generation that's lived through the fall of the Bastille Wall." I was on a roll.

"I agree," said Dave. "It's like we're between rinse and spin in the great washing machine of history. Anyone want I should put extra glaze on this next batch of jelly rolls?"

"Seriously," Jocelyn persisted, "think about what Jerry Brown represents. I mean, OK, he may be just another political charlatan with a gimmicky product. And granted that his tax plan might prove to be regressive.

But he also represents our last reason for believing it's possible to bring about meaningful change within the system."

"I know what you're saying, Jocelyn," Dex said, declining to join me in a fourth round of jelly rolls, "but that's just it. Maybe there is no real hope for change within the system. Maybe real change can only come from struggles against the system."

Jocelyn shook her head. "Come on, Dex. Like you're going to get a populist movement to overthrow this government? Not in the richest country in the world at the apex of its global hegemony."

"No less likely than an effective populist electoral movement," Dex replied.

The rest of us looked at Jocelyn, waiting for her response.

"All I'm saying," she said finally, "is that we have the opportunity to elect someone who might make a difference. We can choose to get involved or we can cynically sit this one out."

The cabby pulled his chair up to our table. "What I hear on TV is this Brown guy is some kind of kook. Isn't he the one they used to call Governor Moonbeam?"

"It's a media plot," Denise said. "They don't want anybody to take Brown's campaign seriously so they say stuff like that."

"When they say anything about his campaign at all," Jocelyn added. "Until the Michigan primary, the media almost completely ignored him. The New York Times gave just about zero coverage to his win in Colorado."

"Yeah," Denise continued, "and then when they couldn't ignore him any longer they had the nerve to write an article about how the TV news hadn't been paying enough attention to the Brown campaign."

A couple of fellow late-night travellers came in and sat down at the counter. Dave went over to take their order. The cab driver and I decided to split the last jelly roll.

Dex grinned. "OK, Jocelyn, you got me. So how can I get involved in this campaign?"

ND men reveal real reasons for working out

By MIKE HOBBS
 Accent Writer

It's that time of year again when the seeds of new growth are supposed to peer through the vast frozen tundra of the South Bend region.

Granted, recently a large majority of the days have fallen prey to showers and snow falls, but these adverse weather conditions have not seemed to halt men from staying active.

Men are involved in a plethora of activities ranging from fitness training to running to shooting hoops in preparation for the perennial Bookstore Basketball tournament. For some, the desire is to stay in top shape, for others it chance to get out and expend some energy and have fun, then there are those who just want to meet the opposite sex.

Chris Donohoe said he finds running a excellent form of exercise that provides some scenic benefits and the possibility to see people.

"I run six days a week," he said. "I find it relaxing to be able to get out and away from the daily rush of activities."

Noting the high concentration of females, but lack of visual stimuli at the Joyce Athletic Convocation Center, Donohoe chooses to run outside since there are a variety of routes.

"It gets so boring running the concourse (at the JACC) since there is all of one track and so many people, but outside is fantastic. There are the lakes, the campus loop, and even the trails to St. Mary's," said Donohoe.

Students like John Lynch find lifting weights a very rewarding form of fitness. Lynch works out at least four days a week for a couple of hours at a time. He said that it dramatically enhances his physique and stature, but said there is a lot more to it.

"Working out not only helps maintain good health, but it improves the way you feel about yourself. I push myself as hard as possible and if I'm not tired and sore at the end of a workout then either I did do it hard enough or not yet finished," Lynch said.

He also emphasized the mental fortitude that he achieves through his workouts.

"It gives you confidence to do just about anything, whether you want to meet the ladies or walk tall, you just feel better about yourself," said Lynch.

Biking, whether stationary or distance, is an excellent form of aerobic exercise.

For those that choose to stationary bike, such as stairmaster, the opportunity to interact with females is always present since it is done indoors. Others, though, will have nothing less than nature as their surroundings. Both Jason Domzal and Kevin Hardman find pleasure in the uninhibited boundaries of biking.

"As long as there is a road and a lack of inclement weather, I'm out biking. If there were eight days in the week, I would be taking advantage of every one of them to be on the open road," said Domzal.

"With warm weather and a little time, there is no better pleasure than going as fast as I can with the wind in my face," Hardman added.

Both Domzal and Hardman bike between 30 and 40 miles a day.

"Most people think of time consumption, I think of it as personal pleasure," explained Domzal.

Another form of activity for many individuals is basketball. Rob Kuennen and Kevin Rule both play basketball at least a couple of times a week.

Kuennen explained that he and his section mates play basketball to get away from their other duties and as a chance to hang out together not just to ogle the females pass by.

"You're at Stepan or the JACC with your shirt off for the female passers-by and everybody is out there having fun and trying to be like Mike," said Kuennen.

Kevin Rule said he tries to play at least four or five times a week at the Rockne Memorial, but admits that the NCAA tournament drastically increases the number guys shooting on any given day.

"You can see tons of girls and guys out there. They are the light-hearted players who just want to have fun," said Rule.

Andy Sinn, the 1992 Bookstore Commissioner, reiterated most of Rule's comments on the natural increase in the sheer numbers of people playing basketball in the spring semester.

"This year we have 704 teams in Bookstore, which is a Guinness Book record," said Sinn.

So you want to be a (burly bohunk / assertive Amazon), but you're afraid you'll never master the subtleties of the weight room?

Are you afraid you'll commit some obscure faux pas such as (sneezing while spotting some bruise / tripping on the Stairmaster) and be laughed right out of the gym on your (concave chest / thickening thighs)?

The secret to weight-lifting, as with any higher pursuit, is etiquette.

ND women prove fitness stereo-types wrong

By JULIE BARRETT
Accent Writer

All Notre Dame women are fat and ugly, according to an old stereotype.

Whoever believes this fallacy must be blind to the multitude of women at ND who stay active, stay healthy and stay in shape.

Look around campus, check out the Rockne Memorial, go to the Joyce Athletic Convocation Center (JACC) and see girls all over the place sporting spandex and sweats while jogging and jumping around to the beat of lively tunes.

ND women do all kinds of sports and activities to keep fit and trim, from running the gamut of aerobic exercise to judo.

Trish Gray, a sophomore from P.W., gets all the exercise she needs in her judo classes. "It's a lot of exercise because we do repeated sequences that use all the muscles," she said. "It's also a lot of fun because I get to throw people around."

The ultimate workout for sophomore Kathy Turner is a little bit of running, rollerblading, and even ballet. Once a week, she takes ballet class at Saint Mary's.

"(Ballet) is so therapeutic for me because of the concentration and coordination involved," Turner said. She added that she loves exercising and would rather "run around the lakes than take a nap" in order to "keep her motor running."

Lewis sophomore Carolyn Carson keeps her engines revving by playing competitive non-varsity sports in her free time, like indoor field hockey and lacrosse.

In addition to the sports,

Carson, an admitted exercise fanatic, stays in tip-top shape by keeping a daily routine of running three miles in the morning and swimming a couple of laps in the afternoon.

"In high school I played sports all the time, so I do REC sports and exercise to stay in shape," she said. "I also like to keep a routine, so I try to exercise every day."

Missing the thrill of playing sports in high school, Jackie Macy, a Howard sophomore, says if she doesn't stay active and exercise, she gets "really lethargic."

She keeps in shape by doing high impact aerobics every Monday and Wednesday and step aerobics on Tuesdays and Thursdays. Friday, Saturday and Sunday she heads for the Rockne Memorial to break a sweat on the versa climber or the stairclimber for about half-an-hour, row on the erg for about ten minutes and finish with some sit ups and push ups.

Sometimes Macy substitutes her exercise regimen with weight-lifting to tone her muscles, she said.

ND senior Jen Yost likes to pump some iron, too, when she's not teaching aerobics twice a week for REC sports.

She said she was intimidated at first when she went to the third floor weight room in the Rockne Memorial because of all the "macho" guys in there. However, now that she's a regular weight-lifter, she "doesn't think twice about being there."

She said she enjoys leading aerobics twice a week, as well, because it keeps her in shape and she has fun exercising to the energizing music.

Yost noted that most of the students that attend her classes are girls. Over 1,000 Notre Dame women this year have participated in the aerobic fitness programs provided by REC sports, according to Greg Kigar, intramural coordinator at REC sports.

Overall, there are six different types of aerobic programs and 17 classes offered, he said. Students can take low, high, combination of low and high, step, stretch, and water aerobics if so desired.

Approximately 2,000 girls each year participate in the myriad of sports and exercise classes offered at Notre Dame through REC Sports, Kigar added.

Women at Notre Dame and Saint Mary's have the opportunity to play sports and take fitness classes they might not have had the chance to do anywhere else such as football, water polo, racquetball, sailing, skiing, aerobics, yoga and judo.

Most women who have taken advantage of these opportunities agree that playing sports and exercising isn't just a way to keep healthy and stay in shape, but also to release pressure and get out some frustrations.

As for the old stereotype that all Notre Dame girls are fat and ugly, the ND women who are keeping active and staying in shape prove it's simply not valid.

"That stereotype is so ridiculous," Macy said. "I was expecting the stereotype to be true when I first came to Notre Dame. But I was surprised to see so many girls involved in sports and in such great shape. Girls here really take care of themselves because many of them are conscientious about everything, their classes, their work and their health."

Notre Dame students utilize the indoor track at the Loftus Sports Center. The Center is open Monday through Friday from 5:30 a.m. to 11:30 p.m. Freshman Marc Baumann and Walsh freshman Monica Vonada push each other to personal bests in exercise. Sit-ups are just one component of their fitness program.

Style: 'Tips for the Truly Taut'

(an Claude Van Damme / Jenna Easton), your first time

Flip this concise guide into your bag (sports bra) for easy reference and walk tall, walk proud, and above all, walk with your arms a little out to the side if they are too bulky with scale to lay flat.

Lycra, Lycra, Lycra! If you've got it, make it tight and shiny. If you don't have it, or if you think that maybe there's a possibility that someone might think that you may not be it, cover it up with a largish t-shirt and hope no one notices. Dance in the mirror—and dance often. When others notice you admiring your own firm physique, chances are they'll come to worship your sinewy Herculean temple, too. A good rule of thumb is to check biceps development after every set; tape measures are optional.

Leave the Village People at home.

Listening to "Macho Man" in the gym is passé, and a little too obvious. "Let's Get Physical" is permissible, but only in the ladies' gym. Richard Simmons' "Sweatin' to the Oldies" is right out.

Keep track of those Walkman wires.

Nothing separates the studs from the amateurs faster than freak strangulation by Nautilus equipment.

Don't cover up those stretch marks!

The marks of greatness, these should be flaunted for what they are: bruises of brawn. But if you still feel self-conscious, try Clinique's light concealer for maximum coverage while perspiring.

Purchase the proper accessories.

Leather lifting belts with silver studs are out this season, as are any remaining items from the "Flashdance" era. Handweights should match the cross-training shoes, not the socks, and boys, please—no half-shirts.

No tickling, cheering, or applauding while others are at the bench.

It's simply not done.

Pasquerilla West freshman Egin Chen demonstrates a proper balance between fashion and fitness on a stairmaster at Rockne Memorial.

Help wanted: an SOS from a lonely dog

Darby O'Gill III has survived the winter, and is in need of friends who will keep him from discovering that April can be the cruellest month.

Darby has proven himself to be a dog for all seasons. In October, he thought that the trees shedding their leaves were playing a game with him.

Once winter arrived, I could have strapped a keg of brandy to his collar, and sent him to Switzerland to rescue travellers lost in the snowy Alps. He took to the cold as a duck takes to water, and you could get frostbite just from seeing him plow through the drifts.

If the springtime ever comes, I foresee he'll feel the need of spending hours and hours sporting with the wild things; but to tell you the truth, I'm too old to sport with him.

I brought Darby to campus last September 14, when he was nine weeks old and weighed only five pounds. Now he's almost nine months old, and weighs twenty-four pounds; and he's still a puppy who wears me out with his playfulness and his willingness to make friends.

There's more love in that cocker spaniel than one priest needs, and he has an excess of energy that is wasted on me; and I'd be proud to have you make his acquaintance. I want students to know that he's available for walks, and for fun and games. He owns his own volley ball; and when it comes to sports, he has the heart of an Olympian.

None of this means I'm will-

Father Robert Griffin

Letters to a Lonely God

ing to farm Darby out to all comers. In my life, he's the little prince; and I'd require anyone volunteering to roam the quads with him to show me references, credit cards, and proof from the Red Cross that you've been trained to save lives.

A number of students have told me, "If you need help in taking care of him, I'd love to take him off your hands for a while." I'm not too proud to accept favors, and neither is Darby. On days when old age is slowing me down, it breaks my heart to watch that young creature springing for the doorknob, in a vain attempt to turn it, so that he can let himself out for the airing he needs.

You may wonder: "Why do you have a new pet, if you're too long in the tooth to take care of him?" To tell you the truth, I depend on O'Gill to keep me young; however, lately I've had an affliction called "shingles" that afflicts curmudgeons, and leaves them aching and racked with pain.

Whenever Darby stands at the door, wild-eyed with restlessness, I try to tell him that the ravaged nerve ends around my waist leave me too sore to move. When he comes over to lick my hands with his wet tongue, I have the feeling he's offering me sympathy.

Darby was halfway through obedience school, when I decided to postpone the more complicated lessons for a few weeks until I was feeling better and could work out with him more. At least he knows the all-important commands, HEEL! and SIT! It's helpful for a dog to know these basics, when you're walking him on a leash.

You may think: "What's the fun of having a dog, if you don't feel able to take care of him?" Come hell or high water, I'll manage to take care of him. My suffering from a slight case of "shingles" doesn't mean my Darby needs to look for a new home.

But no young dog is an island; and as Darby's master, neither am I an island. Both he and I have room in our lives for many friends, and this is a time in our lives we need them. The happy side to a dog like Darby is that once you've befriended him for fifteen minutes, he'll leave you walking tall from thinking so well of yourself as a human being.

There's a story I once heard about sheep, which could be applied, "mutatis mutandis," I think, to a cocker spaniel. The story explains why Moses was chosen by God to become the leader of the Jewish people.

Moses, as a young man, tended sheep for his father-in-law. One day, a little lamb ran away from the flock. Moses went in pursuit of it over hill and dale. Finally the lamb stopped, once it reached a running stream, to have a drink of water.

Moses, seeing this, said apologetically, "Little lamb, I didn't realize that you ran away because you were thirsty." Waiting until the little thing had finished refreshing itself, Moses picked it up and carried it back to the flock.

When God saw how kind Moses was to the thirsty lamb, the rabbis say, He knew he would be good to the Hebrew children. For when God wants to judge a person's character, the rabbis say, He looks to see how well that person tends the sheep.

God must be pleased with the character of any of us whom He sees showing tenderness to dumb creatures dependent on the kindness of strangers. Darby O'Gill III has never met a Notre Dame student that he doesn't regard as a candidate for instant friendship.

When my first Darby O'Gill was still alive, friends sent me the following piece. "God summoned a beast from the field and He said, Behold man, created in my image. Therefore adore him. You shall protect him in the wilderness, shepherd his flock, watch over his children, accompany him wherever he may go—even unto civilization. You shall be his companion, his ally, his slave.

"To do these things, God said, I endow you with these instincts uncommon to other beasts: faithfulness, devotion, and understanding surpassing those of man himself. Lest it impair your courage, you shall never foresee your death. Lest it impair your loyalty, you shall be blind to the faults of man. Lest it impair your understanding, you are denied the power of words.

"Let no fault of language cleave an accord beyond that of man with any other beast—or even man with man. Speak to your master only with your mind, and through your honest eyes.

"Walk by his side, sleep in his doorway, forage for him, ward off his enemies, carry his burdens, share his afflictions, love him and comfort him. And in return for this, man will fulfill your needs and wants—which shall be only food, shelter, and affection.

"So be silent, and be a friend to man. Guide him through the perils along the way to the land that I have promised him. This shall be your destiny and your immortality. So spake the Lord."

And the dog heard and was content.

In response to the many offers from students volunteering to Darby-sit I'm sending out this S.O.S. asking, "Where are you now?"

At the same time, I'd like to apologize for turning my weekly Observer column into something that sounds like a personals-ad. The bottom line is, Darby can be your hound of heaven also, if you want him to be—standing in for the time being, for the hound of heaven waiting for you at home.

Inexperience could doom Duke opponents

Indiana, Michigan and Cincinnati are not accustomed to the spotlight

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — The Final Four is the ultimate experience for a college basketball player and except for the Duke Blue Devils there isn't a lot of experience this year.

Duke has made the national semifinals its March vacation spot. The Blue Devils have been in the Final Four for five straight years and six of seven, winning it all last season.

Everybody but the freshmen on top-ranked Duke (32-2) know what it's like to go through the weekend that culminates the 64-team, one-and-out NCAA tournament.

Seniors Christian Laettner and Brian Davis, like Greg Koubek last year, wound up each of their college seasons in the Final Four, the only players in college basketball history to do that.

You can even take it lightly.

"The more Final Fours you go to, the more cousins you find out you have who need tickets," Blue Devils coach Mike Krzyzewski said.

The other teams need only to have names of immediate family members on their ticker lists.

Indiana (27-6), Duke's opponent in Saturday's second game, is at its fourth Final Four under coach Bob Knight, the last in 1987 when the Hoosiers were champions. In fact, the only Final Four appearance by Knight which didn't end with a title was the first, 1973, when UCLA beat Indiana on the way to its seventh straight title, the last team to repeat as national champion. These current Indiana players, however, are playing beyond the third round for the first time.

Duke celebrates the 1991 National Championship. Indiana, Michigan and Cincinnati will join the Blue Devils in their fifth consecutive Final Four, opening tomorrow in Minneapolis.

"Our players are playing hard and that should be attributed to them making the Final Four," Knight said.

A salient point by Knight, who has been spending much of the tournament making rather odd statements on topics from bullwhips to cerebral reverse to wind currents in the Metrodome.

Knight and Krzyzewski have a long, close relationship and teams with similar styles although no team in the country has a player like Laettner especially at this time of season when the All-American seemingly wills his team to victory.

"When he was a freshman he was not nearly the player he is now," Knight said of Laettner, the tournament's all-time leading scorer and master of the regional championship buzzer-beater. "He has the ability to pass, shoot and create for his team."

Duke and Indiana will follow the game between Cincinnati, the team no one really knows, and Michigan, the team with the freshmen everybody knows.

Cincinnati (29-4) has seven first-year players on the roster, five junior college transfers, a freshman and a transfer from Akron. The Bearcats worked their way to the Final Four through the Midwest Regional and are still the team which could walk through a Twin Cities hotel lobby without being noticed.

"Our guys chase cameras like this dog in my neighborhood chases cars. It's unbelievable," said Cincinnati coach Bob Huggins, who is in his third year with the Bearcats and second NCAA tournament, the first with Akron in 1986.

"Our guys see a TV truck going down the road and they're more apt than not to get off the bus and follow it. It wouldn't do any good to tell them not to. I couldn't tell them not to enjoy it even if I was Scrooge. They're going to enjoy it because that's the way they are. They have fun in life."

So does Michigan and its group of freshmen starters known as the "Fab Five" to everyone but themselves. They don't like the name, but you have to like the way they play.

The Wolverines (24-8) were third in the Big Ten and won their first four tournament games at Atlanta and Lexington, Ky., the identical scenario to 1989 when Michigan won it all under then-interim coach Steve Fisher.

Having had the interim tag removed, Fisher is now known as the man who recruited what may be the best class ever and he has it two games away from another title.

"I worry more now because I have more time to think about it," said Fisher, who replaced Bill Frieder the day before the tournament in 1989. "I did not think about it not being my team three years ago."

There are five seniors on Michigan but none was a factor in that title run. Two were injured, one red-shirted and two others were well down the bench. Glen Rice's 30.7 scoring average that tournament was higher than the combined point totals of those seniors for the season.

You can throw out the records. The Final Four experience is about to begin.

Shaq expected to enter the NBA draft

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Shaquille O'Neal, the 7-foot-1 center who dominated college basketball during three years at Louisiana State, is expected to take his game to the pros next season.

O'Neal called a news conference for 2 p.m. EST Friday at Fort Sam Houston. He is expected to announce that he will bypass his senior year at LSU and enter the NBA draft.

The Times-Picayune and ESPN have both cited unidentified sources in saying that O'Neal is likely to turn pro. LSU coach Dale Brown wouldn't give his opinion.

"I've had my own feeling, which I don't want to express to you now," Brown told the Times-Picayune Wednesday. "I've had this feeling for some time. I just don't want to say anything at all ..."

Brown didn't return a telephone call Thursday.

Brown met Sunday with O'Neal and his family in San Antonio, where the two-time All America is spending his spring semester break.

A few weeks ago, Brown advised O'Neal to turn pro because of what Brown perceived as the undue physical pounding O'Neal has received from opposing teams. However, Brown said he remained neutral during Sunday's meeting.

"I gave them a list of pluses for staying in school and pluses for leaving," Brown said. "I told them whatever their decision is, I'd back them 100 percent. I wasn't going to say, 'Stay,' I wasn't going to say 'Go,' and I won't second-guess their decision."

LSU's Shaquille O'Neal, last year's College Player of the Year, will announce today that he is entering the 1992 NBA draft.

Brown, who said he had told

O'Neal's father, Phillip Harrison, that the news conference should be held at Baton Rouge, said he would not change his plans to attend the Final Four in order to attend Friday's news conference.

Ellis to perform in 4th annual dunk contest

Special to the Observer

The Fourth Annual College Basketball Slam Dunk and Three Point Shooting Championship will be held in Minneapolis on Sunday, April 5 at University of Minnesota's Williams Arena. The event will also include the first Women's Three-Point Shooting Contest in addition to the traditional Men's Slam Dunk and Three-Point Shooting Contests.

In addition to the Women's three-point shooting competition, this event is unique because television viewers will actually determine the Slam Dunk champion. A panel of on-site judges will narrow the eight Slam Dunk contestants to two. During the Men's and Women's Three-Point Shooting Championships, viewers will vote for their favorite Slam Dunk finalist by calling a special telephone number. The Slam Dunk winner will be announced at the end of the broadcast.

Shooting in the Men's Three-Point Championship will be Christian Laettner of Duke, Todd Day and Lee Mayberry of Arkansas, Walt Williams of Maryland, Steve Rogers of Alabama State, Chris Smith of Connecticut and Tom Gugliotta of North Carolina State. One more player will be added.

The Slam Dunkers participating this year include Notre Dame's LaPhonso Ellis, Wyoming's Reginald Slater, Everick Sullivan of Louisville, Calvin Telford of East Tennessee State, Keith Horne of Texas-San Antonio and Washington State's Neil Derrick. Two more players will be added.

Mother Nature stops Irish home opener

By JENNY MARTEN
Associate Sports Editor

In a belated April Fool's joke, the Notre Dame baseball team's home opener against Valparaiso yesterday was snowed out.

The weather has not been kind to the 15th-ranked Irish so far this year. They have yet to hold an practice outdoors and more snow and rain this weekend could cause some problems for the Irish who are scheduled to play 38 games in five weeks.

Weather permitting, the Irish (11-7) hope to make up one of the games against the Crusaders today at Jake Kline and play the scheduled games this weekend. Ball State (7-13) invades Coveleski Regional Stadium for a doubleheader on Saturday and Western Michigan (4-8) comes in for a game on Sunday.

"Both have great traditions in baseball," said Notre Dame coach Pat Murphy. "The Mid-American is a very strong conference and has been represented well in the NCAA regionals."

Notre Dame has won three straight against Ball State including a doubleheader sweep in the teams' last meeting in 1987. The Cardinals hosted MAC rival Bowling Green in a doubleheader on Tuesday and Taylor in a single game on Friday. Last week, Ball State went 4-2 including a sweep of Indianapolis and two split doubleheaders with Western Michigan.

Dave Sinnes

Seniors Eric Jones (2-0, 5.09, 18 K) and Louis Williams (0-2, 9.39, 7 K) are the probable starting pitchers for the Cardinals while juniors Chris Michalak (3-1, 3.44, 1 save) and Pat Leahy (3-2, 3.67, 24 K) are slated to start on the mound for Notre Dame.

Ball State is led offensively by Dan Lehrman, Brian Houdeshell, Curtis Greene, and Corey White. Lehrman (.369, 8 RBIs, 2 HR) went 8 for 17 for Ball State against Indianapolis and Western Michigan last week. Houdeshell is hitting .324 with 16 RBIs and a team-leading 4 homeruns. Greene (.297, 7 RBIs, 2 HR) and White (.288, 3 RBIs) have also been contributors at the plate for Ball State.

The Notre Dame-Western Michigan series goes back a long way and the Irish hold a 61-52-1 advantage in the series. This week, the Broncos played the University of Toledo in a doubleheader on Tuesday and will face Eastern Michigan in a pair of doubleheaders on Friday and Saturday.

Junior Dave Sinnes is the probable starter for the game on Sunday. Sinnes will face several competent hitters in Broncos' Scott Conant, Brian Hostetler, and Eric Dominow. Conant, the shortstop, is hitting .425 with 17 RBIs through 12 games while Hostetler (.368, 14 RBIs, 1 HR) and Dominow (.345, 6 RBIs) have also made contributions offensively.

The Irish have to be careful and not lose their focus this weekend.

"Everyone's gunning for us," said Murphy. "We have to not try to play too hard."

The game against Valparaiso if played tomorrow will start at 3 p.m. The doubleheader with Ball State and Sunday's game with Western Michigan are scheduled to start at 1 p.m.

"I hope people will come and see one of the best teams in the nation play. There is not another northern team ranked in the top-20 than us," said Murphy.

Golf teams face Big Ten competition

By MIKE HOBBS
Sports Writer

Today, the men's and women's golf teams are playing practice rounds in preparation for their respective tournaments this weekend.

The women's team is playing in the 1992 Indiana Invitational.

Due to the large size of the tournament, the ladies' team only traveled with 5 members instead of their usual 6. Playing for the Irish this weekend, in order of tee-off, will be junior Kathy Pharras, sophomore Alicia Murray, senior captain Allison Wojnas, sophomore Crissy Klein, and freshman Liz Fennen.

The key for the Irish this weekend will be consistency.

"We need to shoot an average of 80 each round for each of our ladies this weekend if we are to be competitive in this tournament," said Hanlon.

The Irish have made progressive strides in competitiveness against these teams. In comparison to some of the opponents this weekend, the four seasons of varsity status that the Irish have under their belts appears very green at best.

Despite this the age factor, the Irish are figuring to step up to and surpass some of their competition.

"We are moving up against these Big Ten teams. We are starting to show them that we belong in their league. Hopefully, this will be the weekend where we establish that fact," said Hanlon.

Also competing this weekend is the men's golf team. They traveled to Lafayette, Ind. to compete in the Purdue Invitational. The Irish are looking to improve upon last weekends relative lackluster performance.

Playing for the Irish this weekend will be seniors Mike O'Connell and Mike Crisanti, juniors Chris Dayton and Joe Dennen, and freshman Cole Hanson.

The Irish are hoping for better weather as they traveled today after having practice cut short yesterday due to snowfall and near-freezing temperatures.

This weekend the Irish will look to captain Mike O'Connell and Cole Hanson for strong performances. Hanson is coming off of his first tournament having shot the lowest score on the team.

Rollie Massimino says he will run with the Rebels

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Rollie Massimino, known for his slow, deliberate style of play at Villanova, will have to shift into high gear now that he's coaching the fast-paced Runnin' Rebels of Nevada-Las Vegas.

"We run, but we don't run like the Rebels," Massimino said of his 19 years at Villanova. "Now that I'm here, we're going to run like the Rebels."

Wednesday, Massimino was named to take over a Rebels program hammered by dissension among fans and problems with the NCAA.

Massimino succeeds long-time friend Jerry Tarkanian, who built the Rebels into a basketball powerhouse in 19 years at UNLV.

Tarkanian, who is working the remainder of the NBA season as a color commentator for the Los Angeles Clippers, predicted Massimino would coach a different game at UNLV.

"I know Rollie played a slow-down half-court game, but that was at Villanova," he said. "Now that he's at UNLV, I think you might see him open things up."

Massimino said he hoped to "re-recruit" the remnants of a Rebels team that went 26-2 this season and was ranked No. 7. The Rebels were banned from television and post-season play as a final resolution of a 14-year battle between Tarkanian and the NCAA.

Rollie Massimino

Three members of the team were lost to graduation and a fourth, leading-scorer J.R. Rider, is considering bypassing his senior year to turn pro.

"We're behind, but we'll begin again on the seventh," Massimino said of recruiting for a new school. "Our first goal is to talk to the student-athletes we have and try and recruit them."

"As far as recruiting elsewhere, we will recruit in California, back East, in the Midwest. We're going to recruit nationally."

Tarkanian called Massimino an excellent coach and predicted he would do "a good job."

Junior guard Dexter Boney said he was relieved the search was over and that the Rebels had landed "a name coach."

"He tried to recruit me out of high school when he was at Villanova," Boney said. "I think he'll do a good job if everybody gives him a chance."

Massimino ended a 19-year career at Villanova Wednesday when he agreed to a five-year contract to replace Tarkanian.

Massimino, 57, takes over a powerful but troubled program and a run-and-gun legacy that helped Tarkanian take four teams to the NCAA Final Four and win one national championship.

The appointment, which came seven years to the day when Massimino's Villanova team upset Georgetown to win the national championship, was a surprise because Massimino's name had not been prominent in speculation over Tarkanian's successor.

Massimino said he was persuaded to take the UNLV job when Jim Weaver, the football coach at Villanova when Massimino took the basketball job, and UNLV president Robert Maxson came to dinner at his house Monday night. He said Maxson told him he wasn't leaving until he agreed to become the new coach.

Weaver said Massimino signed a five-year contract with a $106,000 base salary and other university commitments that will bring that up to $386,000 a year. With shoe contracts and other deals, Massimino reportedly will make about $700,000 a year.

Irish open MCC season against Detroit

By JIM VOGL
Assistant Sports Editor

Mercy!

Behind a pitching staff that has allowed only two earned runs all season, the Detroit Mercy softball team stampedes into Notre Dame for this weekend's tournament, which includes Evansville (8-14), Ohio and the Irish (14-12).

Last season, Detroit (9-1 in MCC) accounted for both of Notre Dame's conference losses with two 1-0 shutouts. But the Irish beat the Lady Titans twice in post-season play to earn the MCC crown.

Notre Dame begins defense of their two straight Midwest Collegiate Conference titles. But the Lady Titans, judging from their dominating season so far, are poised to challenge.

The Irish begin their MCC season today at 3:00 with a double-header against Detroit.

"I've said all along that they're the team to beat in the MCC's," said Irish coach Brian Boulac. "We're familiar with both of their pitchers and they're very tough."

Teresa Emery, last year's MCC player of the year, is a perfect 6-0, while not allowing an earned run in 33 innings.

Pam Hammersmidt (4-1, 0.43 ERA in 32 innings) is the number two pitcher for the Titans, who stand atop the MCC with a 3-1 record.

"Their schedule has been favorable toward them so far," said Boulac. "Down in Florida they really jumped on people (Albertus Magnus, Barry and Navy)."

The Observer/Jake Peters

Junior Missy Linn fires a strike against Bowling Green. The MCC season gets underway this afternoon against Detroit.

Third-baseman Debbie Harlukowicz (11 RBI) supplies both power and speed (6 SB). Chris Wasserman (.440 batting average, 11 RBI) and first-baseman Stephanie Hayes (16 RBI) are also big offensive threats.

On Saturday at 1:00, the Irish take on Ohio in a doubleheader.

"They're a decent ballclub with very good pitching," Boulac said. "Their record is right around .500, and they start conference play next week."

The Irish play Evansville at the same time on Sunday.

But perhaps the biggest concern on Boulac's mind is something far more powerful than the Lady Titans.

After taking away five games from the Irish schedule, all three teams hope for mercy from Mother Nature.

SMC softball drops two against Hope College

Special to the Observer

Saint Mary's softball team dropped their first two games of the season, battling Hope College and frigid weather on Wednesday.

Hope beat the Belles 5-3 in the first game although Hope earned three of the runs due to the solid game Belles' pitcher Lisa Bright had.

But the Belles were exhausted as they lost the second game 10-0.

"We had a poor first two innings and the temperature was ridiculous," said Belles statistician Janet Libbing.

With the Belles' play being so weak, coach Don Cromer made many substitutions in order for everyone to gain experience. Cromer took Carol Grobner out of center field and had her relieve Bright at the mound.

"We do not have the depth in pitching staff that other teams have", said Libbing.

April Rhodes filled in at second base for Margie Pelton, who did not attend the games due to personal reasons.

Hope College is ranked in the top five Division III teams nationally. Hope College was also last year's national champions in their division.

The Belles will be looking for their first win on the road when they play at Calvin on Saturday.

Pfeffer, Linehan lead SMC track

By CHRIS BACON AND NICOLE MCGRATH
SMC Sports Writers

Nearing the midpoint of their outdoor season, the Saint Mary's track team travels to the Manchester College Invitational on Saturday.

Traditionally one of the most competitive meets of the season, the Belles will join 10 men's and women's track teams, including Wabash College, St. Joseph's College, DePaul College and Goshen College.

Last season, the Belles set two school records at the Manchester Invitational. Tenesia Davis (graduated) flew to first place in a record-setting 27.38 in the 200m dash.

Meanwhile Davis, Lynn Pfeffer, Katie Linehan and Christy LaBarbera set a second SMC record in the 4 x 100m relay, coasting in at 52.96.

Hoping to improve on last year's performance, the Belles look to Lynn Pfeffer and Katie Linehan to lead them in both track and field events.

"Lynn works very hard at each meet and is calm when juggling around track positions", said teammate Linehan.

Both Pfeffer and Linehan had excellent performances at the Huntington Relays. Pfeffer captured first in the javelin, throwing for 106ft., 9 inches. She placed fourth in the triple jump, soaring 32ft., 4 inches.

Linehan earned three placing finishes. She led the 4 x 100m relay team of Sandy Macklin, Paula Brenton and Moja Brennan to a second place finish in a time of 55:01. Linehan captured two more fourth place finishes in the 100m (14:03) and the 200m (29:09).

"I really enjoy the 100 m dash and I have been working on my starts", commented Linehan.

Manchester's meet will prove challenging for the Saint Mary's team. Manchester boasts of five of its members qualifying for the NAIA indoor nationals including Amy Petersine. The sophomore hurdler qualified for the nationals in her freshman year in both indoor and outdoor competition. She is expected to earn all-American honors this year.

"She's running a lot better this season and we expect her to be an all-American this year for outdoor track", explained Manchester's track coach Meg Sneeders.

But do not count the Belles out of this meet. The team has many talented freshmen who may be dark horses. According to Linehan, the freshmen have added depth and strength to the team. With gaining self-confidence and practice, the SMC track team looks to conquer the lanes on Saturday.

It's the Birthday Buddies! Happy 21st Steve and Nadene!

With Gretzky's arrival in Los Angeles, and expansion into San Jose, hockey—a sport every bit as exciting as any other and as violent as football (for the macho types)—proved that it can succeed even in sub-tropical climates.

Next season, the league will welcome the Ottawa Senators (for a second time) and the Tampa Bay Lightning into the league.

The owners, then, should get their act together—and fast.

Hockey, like baseball, might very well sign its own death warrant with a ridiculous free agency system. But if the owners and players do their homework, perhaps instituting a reasonable salary cap (a la the NBA) and better revenue sharing, an age old sport might not see itself forced into premature retirement.

And now a word from...

NHL could be digging its own grave

Saturday night, the Pittsburgh Penguins seized the fourth and final playoff spot in the Patrick Division with a 6-3 win over the Montreal Canadiens.

Defending Stanley Cup champions, the Penguins were tardy in securing their reservations for post-season play.

Yet if talks between the National Hockey League team owners and players' union continue at their present pace, the playoffs might never be played.

The owners complain that their franchises are eeking out a marginal existence, surviving day-to-day on ticket sales and nothing else.

The players assert that the owners are stuffing their pockets with gargantuan profits secretly earned over the past decade. Because of this supposed wealth, the players also want a free agency system (read: $6 million contracts) like the one had by baseball players.

How close are the two sides to resolving their differences?

So close that at their last meeting, they could only manage to agree upon the agenda for their next meeting. Of course, they agreed on the same issues during their summer meetings, which were intended—the owners maintain—to produce an extension of the moribund union contract.

Players contend that the owners, eager to pad their bank accounts, simply held meeting upon meeting in an effort to weaken the union's resolve and convince the players to put up and shut up.

Yet as the regular season skates to a halt, it looks as if the players may do just that—much to the chagrin of fans and owners alike.

To see the NHL in this predicament is a shame. However, it is also par for the course for a league that has misplayed its cards throughout its history.

Unlike another once-struggling league (the NBA), the NHL has passed through perhaps the most lucrative marketing years in the history of organized sports without capitalizing on television contracts or rising interest.

The NBA, a league saved in its adolescence by greats such as Larry Bird, Earvin "Magic" Johnson and Julius "Doctor J" Erving, played its cards right and is now reaping the benefits.

The NHL, a league near death after 75 years, could easily be saved by the likes of Mario Lemieux, Wayne Gretzky, Brett Hull, and Eric Lindros.

Hockey cards are gaining in popularity, a good indicator that the youth of America are becoming excited about the NHL. Love for hockey goes without saying in Canada, where, along with Christianity and Judaism, it is sometimes jokingly (and sometimes seriously) referred to as a religion.

Adversity faces Notre Dame tennis team

Injuries, West Virginia and Wisconsin will challenge the Irish

By JONATHAN JENSEN
Sports Writer

The eighth-ranked Notre Dame men's tennis team faces three stiff challenges this weekend at the Eck Tennis Pavilion.

First, they must find a way to replace injured junior Mark Schmidt, who was 13-3 at number-five singles and teamed with Chris Wojtalik to produce an undefeated number-three doubles team.

Second, they face an under-achieving West Virginia team on Saturday that is loaded with talent and could surprise the favored Irish.

Finally, on Sunday they meet up against Wisconsin, a team that the Irish lost to last year and have not beaten during Coach Bob Bayliss' five years here.

The answer to the first challenge can come in several forms. In number-five singles, the Irish will replace Schmidt with any one of a trio of juniors. Ron Rosas, Tom North, or Wojtalik are all capable and all have seen action at six-singles this year. In doubles, the Irish will most likely count on the team of North and sophomore Tad Eckert.

"Obviously it's very hard to step in the middle of the season and compete," said Bayliss. "But these players have all been in playing situations."

As far as West Virginia is concerned, Mark Booras, a junior from Flossmoor, Ill., could pose problems for Notre Dame's David DiLucia at number-one singles. In their last meeting, Booras lost to DiLucia 6-4 in the third set.

In addition to the 42nd-ranked Booras, the Mountaineers also boast two talented seniors and three freshmen in their starting line-up, two of which were recruited to come to Notre Dame. The freshmen have been up and down all year, but have the potential to play very well.

"They're a scary team," noted Bayliss.

In doubles, Booras teams with senior Rodrigo Gonzalez to produce the nation's 26th-ranked doubles tandem, so they could also challenge the fifth-ranked David DiLucia-Chuck Coleman team.

"I am very concerned," said Bayliss of the Mountaineers. "Sometimes a good team that has nothing to play for can be really tough."

On Sunday the Irish face Wisconsin, who is led by talented seniors Brian Nelson and Joey Deer at number-one and two singles. In last year's victory over the Irish, Nelson beat Will Forsyth and Deer defeated Chuck Coleman, so the Irish know

The Observer/John Rock

Junior Chuck Coleman prepares to blast a forehand past his Ohio State opponent. The Irish will be in action this weekend against West Virginia and Wisconsin.

they will have their hands full.

The Badgers are even more dangerous in doubles, where Deer and Nelson form one of the Midwest's best teams. They were finalists in the Midwest Regional Doubles Championships a year ago, and they could stand in the way of a potential NCAA birth for DiLucia and Coleman. The seventh-ranked Irish tandem is looking to overtake teams from Ball State (4th) and Minnesota (5th) in the national rankings.

"From our end, this is a match that we're very concerned about," stated Bayliss. "We will have to play very well to win it."

Lacrosse hopes to add Denison to list of victims

By JASON KELLY
Sports Writer

After an 11-5 win at Ohio Wesleyan on Tuesday, the Notre Dame lacrosse team returns home tomorrow afternoon at 2 p.m. to face Denison.

Randy Colley was the key to Notre Dame's attack against the Bishops. He paced the Irish offense with three goals and his offensive production will be needed again tomorrow if the team hopes to extend its win streak to four.

Irish coach Kevin Corrigan is pleased with the improvement his team has shown during the stretch, which helped improve the team's record to 4-3.

"We are starting to become the team we knew we could be," he commented.

They will have to turn in another outstanding performance tomorrow if they hope to knock off a strong Denison team.

Youth has hindered them this year, but they have shown flashes of brilliance.

"Denison is very aggressive," Corrigan explained. "They have some very young players and in some games they've played poorly, but in others they've played very well."

The Irish have fallen into a similar trap this season. Early in the year, they were not playing up to their potential and their record proved it as they stumbled to a 1-3 start.

They have notched three straight wins since then, however, including victories over Lake Forest and 19th-ranked Hofstra, and they are looking to add to that list tomorrow. Consistency will be the objective of the team as the season continues.

"I think we've had some games where Irish midfielder Chip Lonsdale sends a Lake Forest player to the turf. He will try to do the same against Denison tomorrow afternoon.

we've played well," Corrigan said. "Now we are just looking to be consistent."

One consistent force for the Irish this year has been sophomore Randy Cooley. After his hat trick against Ohio Wesleyan, the Irish will rely on his offensive production. For him to be a successful scorer, however, he has to have excellent support and so far this season he has.

"Randy is a scorer, a big-time player," Corrigan explained, "but he has benefitted from the people around him."

One unheralded aspect of the team this season has been its defense. The back line has been a key in Notre Dame's recent success and they turned in their best performance of the season on Tuesday against Ohio Wesleyan.

Despite facing Denison in a scrimmage earlier this year it would appear that the Irish would know what to expect tomorrow, but Corrigan doesn't agree.

"We scrimmaged them at the beginning of the year, but I'll guarantee that we won't see the same team on Saturday."

After tomorrow's game, the Irish have a week to prepare for games against Mount Saint Mary's next Saturday and Stony Brook the following Monday.
