Seniors encouraged to explore service options

By JASON WILLIAMS

A fair showcasing different volunteer programs will be held at the LaFortune Ballroom on Thursday beginning at 7 p.m.

All students are encouraged to attend and explore different possibilities of post-graduate service, according to Mary Ann Roemer, coordinator of senior volunteer programs for the Center for Social Concerns (C.S.C.).

More than 60 different programs will be represented, including the Holy Cross Associates, Jesuit Volunteers, U.S. Peace Corps, and Inner City Teaching Corps.

"It's a great opportunity for seniors," Roemer said. "They should at least stop by and pick up some information. They can always say no if they land a spot volunteering, but they can't say yes if they don't turn in an application."

In past years, as many as 400 students have attended the fair, Roemer said. An average of 150 students actually land spots doing some type of volunteer work.

The Holy Cross Associates, a program run by the Brothers of the Holy Cross, have six domestic volunteer programs plus an international program in Chile.

Roemer said prior volunteer experience is not necessary to land a post-graduate volunteer job. She said the main qualification is a student's willingness to volunteer now.

"A lot of students couldn't find the opportunity to volunteer in the past," she said. "The fact that they want to do it now is what's important."

The volunteer fair coincides with a National Service workshop being held at the C.S.C. Thursday afternoon. Marty Rogers, a member of Notre Dame's Board of Trustees, and Maggie Folgerty, a government liaison for the Catholic Network

Women's literature praised

By JAMIE HEISLER
News Writer

Literature produced during the Harlem Renaissance, a period of African-American cultural development based in New York City, was for the most part written by men, according to author Margaret Perry. There were, however, a number of women whose writings have recently received attention for their contributions to the era. These women and their writings were the focus of Perry's lecture, entitled "Their Place in the Sun — Women Writers in the Harlem Renaissance," given yesterday at the Hesburgh Library Faculty Lounge.

According to Perry, the Harlem Renaissance developed as a "release of restraints and fears of the past that allowed the emergence of individual creative artists." Black writers began to focus their attention on racial heritage and at-

"Philadelphia" writer to speak Friends remember Gremillion's courage

Academy Award-nominee Ron Nyswander, the man who wrote the script for the Oscar-winning picture "Philadelphia," will be answering questions following a screening of the film at the Annenberg Auditorium of the Snite Museum at 7:00 pm.

"Philadelphia" was the first major-studio film to confront AIDS and homophobia, and won an Oscar for Tom Hanks for his role as a lawyer with AIDS who sues his former law firm.

Nyswander was brought to campus by the efforts of graduate student John Blandford. Blandford said he thought it would be a good idea to bring Nyswander to campus "due to the lack of a systematic AIDS awareness program here at Notre Dame," and approached various departments here at the University.

Blandford contacted Nyswander through a friend, and the screenwriter enthusiastically accepted. "Apparently Ron Nyswander agreed with me that this was an opportunity to do things with a big splash here on campus in regards to AIDS awareness."

The event, described by Blandford "as an easy sell" to administrators, is being co-sponsored by the Department of Communication and Theater, the Creative Writing Program, the Gender Studies Program, and the Institute for Scholarship in the Liberal Arts.

"This school is very lucky to have him," Blandford said of Nyswander. "He doesn't do speeches very often, and he's doing this one pro-bono."

Blandford expects the evening to be a success, although he echoed criticism leveled by many in gay community

A memorial mass for Monsignor Joseph Gremillion, the previous director of the University of Notre Dame's Institute for Pastoral and Social Ministry, who died last month of natural causes was held last evening in the chapel of the Fischer Graduate Residences. He was 75.

Father Theodore Hesburgh presided over a mass attended by family, friends, and colleagues who mourned his loss, but also remembered all he accomplished, from the Notre Dame community across the world.

Monsignor Gremillion, originally from Moreauville, La., was ordained for the Alexandria-Shreveport diocese on December 4, 1943. Fifteen years later, he traveled to Rome to continue his education at the Gregorian University where he received a doctorate of social sciences in 1960.

History, future of British-Irish tensions discussed

The Observer/Michael Hungeling

Professor Alisdair MacIntyre spoke last night on the difficulties of making peace in Northern Ireland and the obstacles to be overcome.

By KRISTI KOLSKI
News Writer

In his lecture entitled "Cultures in Conflict" yesterday at the Hesburgh Auditorium, Professor Alisdair MacIntyre expounded on the history of the Irish-British conflict and the future of the social strife.

MacIntyre cited a common descent, as well as a common history as the binding force among the Protestants. He also pointed to the Protestant work ethic, contrasting to the stereotypical belief that Catholics are "thankless, lazy, and disorganized."

The Protestants felt threatened by DeValera, the Prime Minister of the Republic of Ireland, who sought to create a Catholic state, and the actions of the Irish Republic Army.

This commonality, the fear of the Catholics gaining power, and the idea of creating a "Protestant state for a Protestant people" led to 52 years of political dominance between 1920 and 1952.

The Protestants "enforced hegemony over the Catholics" through "political gerrymandering, discrimination in public housing, discrimination in employment, and by crushing resistance though potential and actual terror."

According to MacIntyre, "if a community defines itself by its conflicts, then it would hope to continue those conflicts for fear of an indefinable future."

By 1967, however, there was a rise in the civil rights movement led by the Catholics. The Civil Rights Association was moved into action by the renewed activity of Nationalists John Hume of the Social Democratic and Labor Party and Gerry Adams of the Sinn Fein.

Since the early 1970's there has been attempts to decrease discrimination. Through increased pressure to allocate housing to the Catholics and pressure on employers to higher Catholic workers, a "sizable Catholic Middle Class was becoming more prominent."

Between the years of 1972 and 1974, Catholics had gained a large portion of the political power. There was an attempt to create a power sharing system between the Protestants and the Catholics. The Protestants were so against this idea that they unified and in 1974 went on strike to end any viable chance to create a system of power sharing.

In recent years there has been a "rise in the Catholic working class." As of 1991 male unemployment in Northern Ireland was 20 percent, 28 percent being Catholic and 12 percent Protestant. "Protestants see the employment of Catholics as a great threat," said MacIntyre.

In conjunction with this recent trend, the majority of the middle-class Protestant children are going to England to attend school. The loss of the Protestant youth also poses a

A boring liberal education?

Nothing ruins the spirit of a liberal education more quickly than an uninspiring professor. In fact, a lack of inspiration would be an improvement upon the current state of affairs. It wouldn't be fair to lay the responsibility of my success or failure solely on my mere mortal of a prof, but at this point, to sit through the entire forty-five minutes of class without muttering, "Like I care" nine times would be an act of God.

Meghan Smith
Assistant Viewpoint

The premise of a liberal education is to discover what personal knowledge can be pieced together through contact with diverse studies. If I were to base my observations on one class alone, I might conjecture that an education is an opportunity to learn what my professors think and subsequently share with me and that college is a once-in-a-lifetime chance to have my opinions handed to me on a rhetorical silver platter.

No university bulletin I have ever read has boasted such nonsense in regards to any of its departments. Just to hear the term "liberal education" sends my mind reeling over the prospect of a free exchange of ideas and a veritable garden of wisdom. Instead, I get canned lectures and frozen agendas, neither of which are very liberal nor remotely educational.

To make students part of the learning process is just one goal of a liberal education. Not only do I not feel compelled to get involved when classtime creeps around three times a week, I actually feel repulsed and oppressed by the education that perpetually goes on, with or without me. There is no purpose to an education that cares not who profits, much less learns.

Rather than searching for meaning in every lecture, I find myself looking for weak points and focusing on the shortcomings of the presentation. It is difficult here to call it a "discussion" because students have no place but to regurgitate the professor's reflections on what once had potential to be interesting and even applicable material. Rather than stirring my educational appetite, each lecture turns my stomach. I leave the learning table unsatisfied and craving some substance. Utterly alienated and aloof, the joy of walking out the door as class ends far surpasses the value of the course itself. For this, my parents make supreme sacrifices and remind me of them each week on the phone?

Now that I find myself insensitive to the inspirations of learning, nothing can change my attitude toward class. Where I once cursed the system for making me struggle through five courses simultaneously, I now thank DART for allowing me four more chances to renew my faith in the education process. As it looks right now, Underwater Basketweaving would more likely come in handy later on in life than the credits I'll receive for making nothing out of nearly two and a half hours each week. I may spend my next class period thinking about it.

Airlines work to fight jet lag as flyers make it complaint #1

In pro locker rooms, jet lag gets more blame than "I lost it in the lights."

For the globally mobile executive or the leisurely tourist, it can take days to get over the exhaustion, disorientation and general foggy-headedness brought on by flying through time zones.

International air travelers rank it along with boredom as their most frequent complaint, so with overseas travel the fastest growing segment of the U.S. airline industry, there's a market for a small industry of gadgets and drugs that are supposed to help reset the body's clock.

Airlines don't always make it easy to fight jet lag. Doctors advise eating light and avoiding alcohol and caffeine. But unless you ask for something light when you buy your tickets, airlines typically dish up heavy meals and give out free drinks in first and business class. When you're done eating, you might think about resting, but there's the movie.

Some experts also suggest trying to sleep earlier on eastbound flights and staying awake later when flying west. Still others stress getting exercise by walking around the cabin. Drinking plenty of water can help prevent dehydration from the dry cabin air.

Once you're suffering from jet lag, there's no proven cure other than allowing a day or two upon arrival to catch up.

Frustration with jet lag has created a new opportunity for travel companies to offer another perk to attract customers.

British Airways offers aromatherapy in the form of rose or lavender scented oils that passengers apply to their skin. Aside from smelling sweet, the oils are thought to alleviate jet lag by forcing a traveler's circadian rhythms — his or her body clock — back into sync.

The therapy is based on a theory that some scents help you sleep, while others make you more active and can help you adjust to the new time schedule of your destination.

Other airlines are trying to follow suit with their own programs, to the approval of travelers.

Jordan renounces West Bank claims

Jordan renounced its religious links to the West Bank Tuesday in a move apparently aimed at avoiding further conflict with the PLO, but maintained its spiritual claim to Jerusalem. The statement, read on national television, stressed that Jordan would continue to "support the Palestinians by all means and ways, and will not allow any side to harm the deep-rooted relations between the Palestinian and Jordanian people."

It said the action was taken on King Hussein's orders. Palestinian officials and West Bank Muslims welcomed the announcement. "I think it's a good step in the right direction," said Hassan Tahboub, Islamic affairs minister in the Palestinian self-rule government. Relations between Jordan and the Palestine National Authority, which administers the self-rule areas of Jericho and the Gaza Strip, grew strained after Jordan and Israel signed a declaration July 25 in which Israel acknowledged Jordan's special role in caring for Jerusalem's Muslim sites.

Army to train men, women together

The Army tried it and top brass liked it. Now they're making a co-ed combat training program for raw recruits permanent. Women and men will train together at Fort Jackson starting next month, after a successful experiment last year, spokesman Rick Fulton said Tuesday. "All individuals will be treated the same, as soldiers, and all training will be integrated except for instruction that is gender unique, such as rape prevention and personal hygiene," Fulton said. The goal is to have 120 men and 120 women in each of two units. The program will be expanded in late October and November. About 40,000 recruits receive basic training at Fort Jackson annually.

University costs double of inflation

The average tuition at America's four year-year colleges rose 6 percent this year, twice the rate of inflation, and studies show a growing share of the money is going toward public relations instead of teaching. Although the increase was twice the inflation rate, it was also the smallest since 1989, according to the College Board, an association of 2,800 higher-education institutions. The figures were released Wednesday. According to the College Board, average tuition is now $11,709 at four-year private schools and $2,686 at four-year public schools, both 6 percent increases over last year. The cost of two-year private institutions rose 5 percent, to $6,511, and two-year public colleges, 4 percent, to $1,298. When room, board, books, supplies and transportation are added in, the average total cost of a college education comes to $18,784 for resident students at four-year private schools and $8,990 at public schools. Separate government statistics also show that the proportion of money used by colleges for instruction, libraries and maintenance is shrinking, and the amount spent on public relations, marketing and fund-raising is increasing.

Doctors debate effects of alcohol

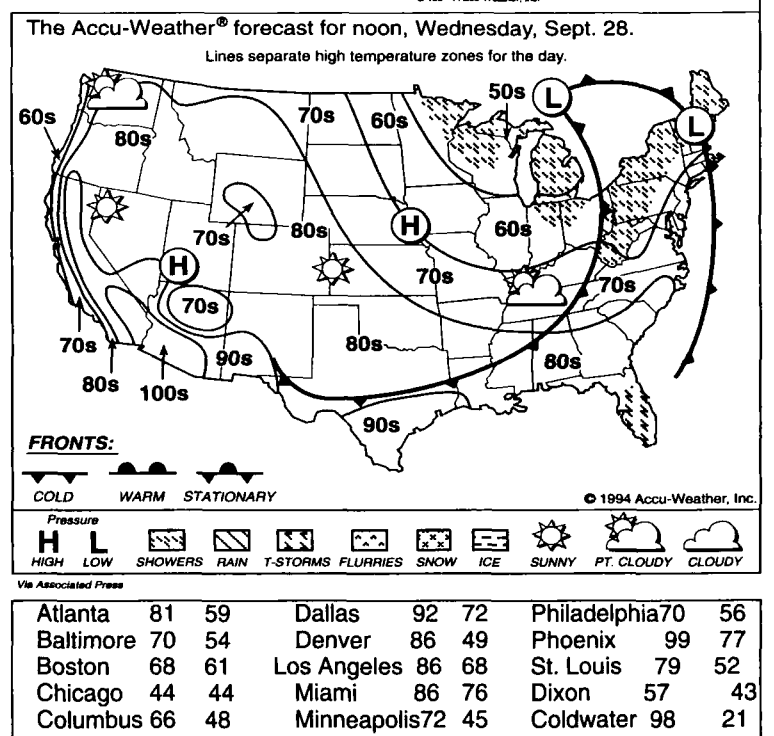

Get some exercise, quit smoking, skip the double cheeseburgers — and have a couple of beers every day? Doctors are debating whether moderate alcohol consumption should be part of the prescription for a healthy heart in light of another study that suggests drinking can reduce the risk of a heart attack. The new study found alcohol consumption was directly linked to increased levels of an enzyme, t-PA, that helps break down blood clots. Other doctors say the dangers of drinking are so grave doctors should never weigh in on the side of using alcohol as preventive medicine. Earlier studies showed that alcohol increases the level of high-density lipoprotein cholesterol that protects against heart disease. However, cholesterol levels can be managed by exercise, diet and medicine, so doctors saw no reason to recommend drinking.

Catholic character discussed

By PATRICK STONELAKE
News Writer

Ralph McNerny, chairman of the Michael Grace Medieval Studies program and author of the famous Father Dowling Mysteries, spoke yesterday on "The Catholic University and Notre Dame" at Morrissey Manor.

He began with the question, "What do we mean by a Catholic university?" To answer this, he looked to the past, citing the 1932 Papal Council Ex Chordia Ecclesia, which outlined several guidelines for the operation of a Catholic university. From Father Sorin onward, McNerny sees Catholicism as the "custodian of education" throughout the past.

He summarized his time at the philosophy department over forty years, citing the changes in that department as exemplary of changes throughout the university and the world. In the beginning, all Notre Dame students were required to take four philosophy classes. As the years went by, sensing "an inferiority complex," the department began to expand on that base, bringing in bits and pieces of the philosophical "good stuff." Soon many gifted but non-Catholic philosophers were brought in to teach these and other classes. "Eventually," said McNerny "Catholic professors found themselves in the minority." He showed obvious concern that this trend had extended into the university as a whole, and into the Catholic community of the world.

McNerny recalled that Father Hesburgh had once questioned if a Catholic university could be a real university, and questioned himself the ability of a secular university to properly function while mired in the "proliferation of rules and regulations" that the government imposes on a state-funded school. In his view, a private institution is the only place for a truly free pursuit of knowledge of any kind. "The question shouldn't be 'can a Catholic university be a real university'... right now the question is, can a university which is not a Catholic university be a real university."

New SMC dance policy ignites controversy

By PEGGY LENCZEWSKI
News Writer

There was intense discussion regarding last week's announcement that all students must arrive at hall dances by 10 pm in order to be admitted at last night's meeting of the Saint Mary's College Resident Hall Association (RHA).

According to Hall Director Colette Shaw, the administration-made decision was made for security reasons. Shaw stated that the decision was made to decrease the use of alcohol prior to the dances, which will be held between nine and one o'clock.

Other concerns involved in the decision included transportation of the students to and from the dance, the occurrence of date-rape, and the strain that dances place upon Resident Advisors and Hall

Directors.

Shaw did emphasize that the decision was not made "to restrict students. It was made in support of hall councils and for security reasons."

RHA intends to support the positions taken by the individual residence halls and plan to circulate a petition to change this policy. According to Jen Cherubini, "RHA will stand behind the decisions of the individual halls. We want to hear what the halls have to say."

Several members of RHA expressed the view that this decision was a threat to students' independence.

In other RHA news,

Haitian mission expanded

Troops surround Parliament

By JEFFREY ULBRICH
Associated Press

PORT-AU-PRINCE

American troops expanded their mission Tuesday from disarming the Haitian military to taking up posts around the Parliament building and City Hall in anticipation of Haiti's return to civilian rule.

The U.S. forces suffered their first fatality Tuesday. An American soldier was found shot to death at hillside mansion being prepared for legislators returning to Haiti for Wednesday's Parliament session.

Pentagon spokesman Dennis Boxx said the soldier's death was being investigated as "an apparent suicide." He was part of the 10th Mountain Division from Fort Drum, N.Y., and his identity was not immediately released.

Military police strung concertina wire in front of the white colonaded Parliament building, a day before the Haitian legislative body was to begin discussing a bill authorizing amnesty for the country's top military leaders.

The amnesty measure was part of a deal worked out Sept. 18 between the U.S. delegation led by former President Carter and Haiti's military junta.

A soldier posted on the roof of the Parliament scanned the area with binoculars, and others took up posts at the gate. Army vehicles stood watch in front of the building.

Small crowds of Haitians gathered in front of the build-

U.S. troops took over the Parliament building and city hall in the capital in preparation for the return this week of Haiti's lawmakers and the Port-au-Prince mayor.

Americans reached their gun-for-money program, paying $50 to $300 to anyone who turns in a firearm.

Parliament is scheduled to convene Wednesday to begin discussion of an amnesty law, part of the deal worked out by the military junta and an American delegation headed by former President Carter.

ing, and others sat under trees in a park across the street, watching the U.S. Army activity.

At City Hall, U.S. military police in armored vehicles were posted inside the compound and Army Humvees, machine guns mounted on their tops, took up guard just outside.

Mayor Evans Paul, exiled President Jean-Bertrand Aristide's former campaign manager, is expected to come out of hiding and return to his office on Thursday, U.S. officials said.

Army tries to buy guns from Haitians

By JOSEPH FRAZIER
Associated Press

PORT-AU-PRINCE

Under camouflaged shelters on a scorching Haitian airbase, American soldiers waited patiently Tuesday for Haitians to turn in anything that shoots in exchange for cash.

Patience was required.

Only a handful of weapons dribbled in during the first hours. But in a country where by some accounts 75 percent of the population is armed, the United States sees the program as a key to stability.

Prices ranged from $50 for a pistol to $300 for a machine gun — huge sums in a nation where the average daily wage is $1.20. But prices on the street can run up to 10 times what the Americans are offering.

The program, publicized by radio, loudspeakers and leaflets, is supposed to last three weeks, but may be extended.

A similar program in Panama after the 1989 American invasion brought in thousands of weapons, from modern military rifles to museum-piece muzzle loaders.

"We don't know how to gauge it this early," said Capt. Andy Mazur of Youngstown, N.Y. "We suspect people will go back and tell their friends that there is credibility here, that we have the cash."

"We don't ask them who they are. You have a gun that shoots, we'll buy it, no questions asked. You have a gun? We'll buy it. Peace," said Pvt. Amos Brown of Honolulu, a Haitian-born Creole speaker working with the program.

"We're getting some junk," whispered another soldier who wouldn't give his name.

The haul in the first few hours included pistols, a World War II-vintage M-1 Garrand rifle and a 9mm Uzi submachine gun, the soldiers said.

Col. Barry Willey, spokesman for the American forces in Haiti, said payment may be increased if the program seems to lag. He urged that it not be judged too early.

"We'll have to wait and see for the first few days," he said.

Some Haitians questioned the effectiveness of the "Gourdes for Guns" program.

Starr's partiality questioned

By LARRY MARGASAK
Associated Press

WASHINGTON
When a Republican candidate attacked President Clinton's "personal scandals" last Aug. 25, the advisory committee on his letterhead included Kenneth Starr, the independent Whitewater counsel.

A spokesman for Starr says it was simply a mistake, that Starr's name was to have been removed from anything "of a partisan nature" after his appointment on Aug. 5.

But critics, including Clinton's personal lawyer Robert Bennett, say it's another example of at least an appearance of partiality by Starr, who was formerly active in Republican politics.

The fund-raising letter was sent by Ernie Berger, Republican candidate for chairman of the board of supervisors of Fairfax County, Va. — a Washington suburb.

Besides the criticism from Democrats, five past presidents of the American Bar Association recently questioned whether political considerations "may have influenced" the three-judge federal court that appointed Starr.

Starr, a former federal appellate judge and U.S. solicitor general, has publicly criticized Clinton's legal position that — as president — he is immune from a sexual harassment lawsuit filed by a former Arkansas state employee. Starr also has contributed to Republican candidates and considered running for the U.S. Senate.

Most of the Fairfax letter focused on local issues, but the first page attacked Clinton and the Democratic-controlled Congress. The letter said of Clinton, "His personal scandals are so great the president of the United States has opened a legal defense fund."

Clinton and his wife established the fund last June, to help them pay a potential $2 million in legal bills.

Jay Lefkowitz, a law firm colleague who comments on Starr's behalf, said including Starr's name on the Berger letter was a mistake.

"Immediately after being appointed independent counsel, Ken instructed his staff that any involvement he had, any letterheads he was listed on, should be terminated immediately."

"He wanted to make it very clear he would have no partisan involvement whatsoever. There was simply some miscommunication."

GOP pledges to cut taxes, balance budget

By JIM DRINKARD
Associated Press

WASHINGTON
Tantalized by their first shot in four decades at taking control of the House, Republicans today united more than 300 of their candidates behind a politically popular manifesto calling for tax cuts, term limits and a balanced budget amendment.

The Republican candidates, two-thirds of them running as challengers or seeking open seats, gathered in bright sunshine on the Capitol steps to sign a "Contract with America." They pledged speedy action on a 10-point platform if voters give their party a House majority for the first time since 1954.

A band of retired military musicians played as the candidates filed past a table draped in red, white and blue, then lined up on a stage erected for the occasion.

"This is a first step toward renewing American civilization," said Rep. Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., the House minority whip who would become speaker if his party picks up 40 seats in November. Most observers predict a GOP increase in the range of 25 seats.

Kevin Vigilante, a doctor running against Democratic state representative Patrick Kennedy in Rhode Island, said "people... have really lost their faith in government. This is all about open government and accountability."

But Democrats counter that Republicans have failed to specify how their proposed tax cuts and new spending would be paid for.

"This is a fraud, and I think the American people need to know that," said White House chief of staff Leon Panetta.

As the event went on outside, Rep. George Miller, D-Calif., said on the House floor that Gingrich was leading "blindfolded candidates" to sign a pledge that will lead to mammoth new deficits.

"I would hope Americans will read this contract before they decide whether they will sign it or not," Miller said.

The contract declares: "A campaign promise is one thing. A signed document is quite another."

"It's really not a gimmick," Haley Barbour, chairman of the Republican National Committee, said. "We're trying to make very plain the difference between a Republican House and a Democratic House."

But the event, designed to capitalize on what is shaping up as a bad-news election season for Democrats, also holds risks. Its unveiling was linked to a half-million-dollar fundraiser that could be a public reminder of the insider politics that polls show voters disdain.

Even so, the event on the Capitol steps today has Democrats worried. For two weeks the party in control of Congress has bashed the plan, calling it irresponsible and a return to a Reagan-style budget that would reward the rich, penalize senior citizens and deepen America's debt.

The GOP plan is familiar campaign-trail fodder. Tax cuts, tough action against crime, welfare reform, the balanced-budget amendment and term limits are among its promises.

But Republicans hoped the agenda would help soften the perception the GOP has become a party of naysayers with no positive program of its own, and appeal to voters tired of Washington gridlock.

Frank Luntz, a Republican pollster who worked on the plan, said each of the 10 items in the "contract" registered at least a 60 percent public approval rating. "The more Democrats draw attention to the contract, the better we will do," he said.

The GOP often has sought to link its House candidates together under national election themes, but with mixed results. This year's effort represents a new level of coordination.

tempted to change others' perceptions. In this period, however, women writers were overshadowed by the male writers of the period, who were more assertive in their views, said Perry.

Nevertheless, there were women who received positive criticism for their writing during that time, said Perry. Novelists such as Jessie Fauset, Nella Larson, and Zora Hurston, and poets Anne Spencer, Georgia Douglas Johnson, and Gwendolyn Bennett emerged and focused on the importance of race and were dedicated to installing racial pride in others. The themes of their literature were diverse, ranging from the frustrated underachiever to the search for self-identity.

Perry noted that the aim of these women was to point out the "idea of blackness being the informing spirit." She went on to add that these women attempted to correct others' views of blacks, a subject on which modern black writers do not focus.

These women received some attention for their achievements at the time from both a black and white audience, according to Perry. Such novels as "There is Confusion," by Jessie Fauset, and "Quicksand," by Nella Larson, are typical of the era and contributed to the progress achieved during the Harlem Renaissance.

"Their role seems small, yet their contributions add much. These women forged a place for themselves, earning a place in the sun," concluded Perry.

of Volunteer Service, will be discussing the National Service Program's regulations, deferment of student loans, and other areas of national service.

In 20 years at her position as volunteer coordinator, Roemer said she has never encountered an incident where a financial institution refused loan deferment to a student doing volunteer work.

Roemer also said many times students' requests are honored when they ask for deferments from graduate schools or from jobs to do a year of volunteer work.

"It's a great opportunity for a break from so many years of school," she said. It will give you real insight into what you might want to do later on."

After receiving his doctorate, Monsignor Gremillion held a number of positions within the Church. The year was 1967 when he received two appointments directly from Pope Paul VI. In one year's time, Gremillion was appointed secretary for the Pontifical Commission of Justice and Peace and a Vatican representative to the World Council of Churches. As a representative, he established direct collaboration between the Vatican and the World Council of Churches.

He also extended his service to the American bishops as director of social development services for Catholic Relief Services and executive secretary of the Pastoral Aid Fund for Latin America.

According to Hesburgh, Gremillion's time was characterized by one world vision for the future unification through the Church. Hesburgh said that he seemed to possess a knack for uniting leaders of all nationalities and strove for justice for minorities, encouraged youths, and proved to be successful. All of this was possible, according to Hesburgh, because he "had courage because he stepped on a few toes in the process."

Even after his retirement in 1986, he remained on campus to continuously pursue his theological research. Hesburgh described his presence on campus as "an old four star general still walking the paths and talking to the young people."

A special portion of mass devoted to contributing remembrances revealed he will never be forgotten. Hesburgh simply stated, "he fought the best fight; that's the best I can say about him."

Argentina suggests NAFTA expansion

By RANDALL HACKLEY
Associated Press

NEW YORK

The Clinton administration is casting about for new members to its North American Free Trade Accord. What would be more natural than to invite Argentina, a mere 4,000 miles south of the border?

President Carlos Menem, in town Tuesday for the 49th U.N. General Assembly, trumpeted the economic achievements of his country since he became president in 1989, saying Argentina's growth rate was third highest in the world behind China and Thailand and inflation just 3.5 percent this year.

There should be a free trade pact from Alaska to Tierra del Fuego, at the southern tip of South America, Menem told 600 businessmen and international investors at the Americas Society.

"It would be excellent if we could do it with NAFTA," Menem said.

Besides the United States, the NAFTA members are Canada and Mexico, a free-trade market of 370 million consumers.

Chile has drawn the U.S. administration's eye as a most-likely new entrant to NAFTA, due to its free-market economy, pro-democratic government and strong traditional ties to the United States.

Besides Chile, according to a draft paper prepared this summer by the office of the U.S. Trade Representative, the short-list for new members includes Argentina, Colombia and Venezuela — all in South America.

However, Venezuela is suffering severe economic, social and political problems, include coup attempts by the military, and Colombia has a drug-trafficking image that some U.S. lawmakers would be hard-pressed to ignore.

In any case, neither Chile or Argentina expects an invitation this year to join NAFTA. Congress nixed that this month — it must authorize the president to pursue "fast-track" negotiations with NAFTA wannabees and Washington doesn't expect that until next spring.

Some lawmakers, mostly Republicans, held up enlarging NAFTA because they worried about language in any pact to enforce environmental protection measures abroad.

Menem noted Tuesday that Argentina, with 33 million people, has been a model of growth during his presidency, has abolished nearly all trade barriers, has a stable currency for the first time in years and no such thing as hyperinflation.

Inflation was 5,000 percent annually when Menem was elected to replace Raul Alfonsin; it's expected to be 4.0 percent next year, when the economy will expand a hefty 7 percent, he said.

threat to the Protestant community, he said.

Thus, there has been an increase in the Protestant paramilitary. However, the paramilitary, unlike the IRA, has "not focused on economic activity or military targets." The Protestant paramilitary engages in random acts of violence and killings. It is attempting to send a message to the Catholic community that if it helps the IRA it will suffer repercussions.

According to MacIntyre, hopes for peace in the near future seem bleak. MacIntyre pointed to a "lack of able leadership in the Protestant community," and he also believes that there is little possibility that an agreement would be accepted by both sides.

MacIntyre suggested that a "change of the face of the Protestant Community" or greater "economic cooperation between the 26 counties of the Republic and the 6 counties of Northern Ireland" would create a more stable bridge between the Protestants and the Catholics, and peace could be achieved.

Deadly plague epidemic spreads across India

By THOMAS WAGNER
Associated Press

NEW DELHI

A huge banner proclaimed "Plague Control Room" at the capital's train station, and police stood by Tuesday to rush the sick to the hospital. There, feverish sufferers shivered while awaiting care; one ailing man tried to sneak away.

Officials urged calm, but as plague spread from western Surat to New Delhi and across the nation to Calcutta, authorities also escalated efforts to find the sick, rush antibiotics to pharmacies and spray insecticide to kill disease-carrying fleas.

TV broadcasts advised that plague can be treated with common antibiotics like tetracycline — drugs available in India without a prescription.

But some pharmacies in New Delhi and Bombay ran out of antibiotics, and New Delhi officials released a list of 200 stores that were well-stocked and would be open 24 hours a day. In Bombay, officials raided two pharmacies because they were selling antibiotics at black-market prices.

For the first time, confirmed cases of pneumonic plague were reported outside Surat, the port in Gujarat state that an estimated 400,000 people fled after the disease struck a week ago. Nine cases were reported in New Delhi and Calcutta, hundreds of miles east of Surat.

At least 54 people have died in Surat, including three on Tuesday. Unofficial estimates put the death toll at 300.

Twenty people, most of them from Surat, were admitted to the Infectious Diseases Hospital in New Delhi, and two tested positive for pneumonic plague, Dr. R.C. Panda said.

People shivering or sweating with fever arrived at the hospital's emergency room and were examined by doctors whose faces were covered with surgical masks.

"We fled Surat because most of the private doctors were gone," said Ramesh Aggarwal, a businessman whose 9-year-old son, Varun, developed a fever after the family left Gujarat. "I rushed him here before I even reached my relatives in Delhi."

Another man from Surat with a high fever tried to sneak out of the emergency room to phone his family, but doctors stopped him.

At New Delhi's train and bus stations, loudspeakers ordered arriving passengers with any ailment to report to doctors working there for free around the clock.

Pneumonic plague is a more deadly form of bubonic plague — the disease that ravaged 14th century Europe and Asia as "the Black Death." The current plague outbreak is the first in India in 30 years.

Indian officials and the World Health Organization urged people not to panic. They said there was no evidence of a widespread epidemic, but many nations announced plans to monitor travelers from India.

Many of those who fled Surat had moved there in search of jobs in diamond-cutting and textile plants and returned to home cities and villages across India, possibly carrying the disease with them.

Rwandan horror continues

By EDITH LEDERER
Associated Press

GOMA, Zaire

In a grim sign that the Rwandan crisis is far from over, the flow of refugees fleeing violence in their country is picking up again.

After weeks of trying to convince refugees it is safe to leave the squalid camps in Zaire and return home, U.N. officials say more refugees are now coming out of Rwanda than are going back.

The latest arrivals tell similar stories of killings, arrests and harassment by the army of the new Tutsi-led government.

Martin Semanza, a 20-year-old with bloodshot eyes, told The Associated Press on Tuesday that Tutsi soldiers killed his parents and three younger brothers as they fled toward Zaire.

Another young refugee, Sebuhinja Rukeratabaro, said he saw a truck filled with the bodies of Hutus arrested by Tutsi troops. Gabriel Sekabanza, 29, said Tutsi soldiers shot and killed about 30 Hutu men, women and children trying to escape across the border.

It is impossible to verify the stories of the three young Hutus, who are among the newest refugees to arrive in Zaire. But their stories are consistent with a recent internal report by the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees, which found an "unmistakable pattern of killing and persecution" of Hutu refugees returning to Rwanda.

The report caused such a furor that Secretary-General

Boutros Boutros-Ghali imposed a gag order on U.N. officials Tuesday to stop them from discussing it. Boutros-Ghali also ordered a full investigation of the alleged revenge killings.

Diplomats in Geneva who have seen the report said it contained estimates of about 30,000 killings by government troops and their supporters.

Hutu militias massacred at least 500,000 Rwandans, most of them minority Tutsis, earlier this year. Fearing retribution, more than a million Hutus fled to Zaire and Tanzania after rebels seized power in July.

The Tutsi-installed government in Rwanda said there is no proof of revenge killings by Tutsi soldiers and accused the UNHCR of trying to discourage Hutu refugees from returning home.

Mandela denies corruption charges

By TOM COHEN
Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG

Nelson Mandela campaigned for president on a promise his African National Congress would stop the "gravy train" of government corruption and special privileges.

Now critics, even his supporters, are charging that the ANC only wanted to stop the train long enough to get on.

Mandela's uncharacteristic prickliness on the issue shows his sensitivity at being perceived as just another politician raiding the public coffers.

On Monday night, he lashed out at longtime ally Archbishop Desmond Tutu for complaining about the new parliament's approval of large salary increases for itself.

"A respected leader was unable to resist the temptation to jump on the bandwagon," Mandela said of Tutu, a fellow Nobel Peace Prize winner for his work against apartheid. "I consider it an act of irresponsibility on his part."

Tutu shot back quickly, telling The Associated Press on Tuesday that the nation's first black president was "showing he's just like any other politician."

"I'm sad, but in a way you've got to say it is good for democracy that even people who like one another can differ," he said.

The salary plan, devised by an independent commission appointed before the first all-race election in April, set the president's salary and benefits at the equivalent of $221,000 a year.

Under the former white-led government, President F.W. de Klerk was paid about $81,700 a year. However De Klerk paid no income taxes, an exemption lifted by the new government. After taxes, Mandela will take home about $115,400.

Members of the new parliament get salaries of about $54,400 — up from $37,300 under the old government.

While such figures don't seem excessive by Western standards, they stand out in a country where millions of impoverished blacks living in shacks without power or running water voted for Mandela to change their lives.

"In terms of the people out there, it was one of the most inappropriate things to have done," Tutu said. "It's filled people with some disillusionment."

Other complaints have focused on a plan, since withdrawn, for government officials to pay personal aides well above the normal civil service salaries. And a decision to give political parties $845 per parliament member to set up constituency offices was condemned as plundering tax dollars.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Senior Bar does focus on students

Dear Editor:

Instead of pinpointing the many fallacies of the September 23 Observer article, "Senior Bar: The place to be or not?," I would like to more correctly inform readers of the real Alumni-Senior Club, better known as Senior Bar.

As its name suggests, the Alumni-Senior Club's purpose is to serve the alumni and senior class of Notre Dame. The Alumni benefit from Senior Bar mainly on football weekends and during reunions. The rest of our time and energy focuses on the students at ND, more specifically, the aged 21-and-over senior class.

Senior Bar is a student-managed, student-employing and student-patronized private club located on the ND campus. Our prices are raised on home football weekends so that we can keep them as low as possible for the students on every other night. Everything in Senior Bar is specifically there for the students. Senior class activities, campus bands, dorm SYRs and many other facets of ND social life utilize the Alumni-Senior Club's facilities.

What really matters is that the attitudes about Senior Bar change from year to year as the staff and the senior class also differ each year. The 94-95 staff agrees that they have the best job on campus and the students we see on Wednesday and Thursday nights sure seem to be having a good time: that alone is what we consider success.

If Senior Bar is "the place not to be," according to news-writer Nancy Dunn, then I'd like to know where she hangs out when she's not writing biased Observer articles which solely reflect her ignorance and lack of professionalism.

Male dominion rears its ugly head

Dear Editor:

I am not surprised to read Paul Pribaz's rebuttal of Kelly O'Neil's column in his letter to the editor on Sept. 22.

I am not surprised that he chose to offer his defense with 'the church has no authority whatsoever to confer priestly ordination on women'.

I am not surprised that he doesn't realize that is the very point Kelly intends to raise—the status quo of the patriarchal church system.

I am not surprised that he rushes to defend this attack on male dominance.

I am not surprised that he interprets Kelly's reference to the equality of men and women anatomically, (when she obviously meant in the context of status) and reiterates the clashed male defense that 'men and women are fundamentally different, yet perfectly complimentary'.

I am not surprised that he, like many others, believe that having Mother Mary as a model for holiness automatically blinds us to the inferior treatment meted to women all over the world.

I am surprised that Pribaz would have us believe that women have their designated place in the family of God, and that God wills that women be trifled and discriminated with.

Time to get on the ball, RecSports

Dear Editor:

It is my understanding that the purpose of RecSports is to provide recreational opportunities for the non-varsity athletes here at Notre Dame. Football, soccer and tennis are three sports that I have found RecSports' organization of to be rather haphazard. My freshman year, I signed up to participate in a mixed-doubles tennis tournament. RecSports gives people byes in the first round, then never tells anyone when the first round will finish. People are forced to forfeit.

Soccer has also been rather unorganized. Last year, Badin Hall made it to the final with out having a loss. Impressive? Well, if we had actually played the 6 or 7 games that got us there, then, yes, we were one heck of a team. RecSports could be a little more organized than that.

Women's interhall football has been probably the most frustrating activity I have ever participated in. One year, people living off-campus cannot play for their ex-dorm. The next year, they can. This year, RecSports has decided that off-campus people can only play on the off-campus team. For a dorm the size of Badin, that really hurts. Four of our players live off-campus and would like to play for Badin this year. I thought that RecSports was here for the students, to make sports fun. Instead RecSports is making interhall athletics confusing and frustrating.

Also, is it really necessary to fill out a new insurance form/waiver for every single sport we play? RecSports needs to think about the way that it runs many of its programs. Including students in the decision making is one way to generate ideas on how to provide services that are more efficient and more user-friendly.

Professors offer insight on Simpson trial

By PEGGY LENCZEWSKI
Accent Writer

A white car sped along the Florida highway, and Americans watched it on their televisions. A man stands accused of murdering his wife, and there is a sudden increase in the awareness of spousal abuse in America.

Everyone has an opinion about the man in the white car, and everyone wants cameras in the courtroom. The O.J. Simpson case has elements of drama, pathos, horror, and social value.

Members of the Saint Mary's College faculty, Professors Ted Billy, Mary Caputi, John Pauley, and Ann Plamondon will meet to discuss these various aspects of the Simpson case and their ramifications tonight, September 28, in Stapleton Lounge.

The Simpson case has sparked interest from most areas of society. Racial groups, women's rights groups, legal groups, members of the media, have all developed various opinions about the murder of Nicole Simpson, and the accusation of her former husband, media personality Orenthal James Simpson.

The Popular Culture Club, at Saint Mary's, will sponsor the panel, which will be moderated by Professor Patrick White. Each member of the panel will present and analyze a different aspect of the case. All members of the panel will discuss the broad issues which have been mentioned in the popular media, however, each member will put them in the perspective of his or her specialized field.

Professor Ted Billy will focus on the media's role in the Simpson case. According to Billy, the media blitz and sensationalism of the pre-trial proceedings has "infringed upon it [the trial] and distorted it."

Billy will discuss the case in terms of "the cult of victimology." From this stance, the desire of the American public to be made aware of the case is a "testament to how decadent our culture is," as no private life remains "sacred anymore," according to Billy.

Pauley will also discuss the effects of the media in the case. He will do so from the standpoint that it is a "case study that would give us the opportunity to discuss discipline related interests."

Pauley goes on to say that, "I see in this case a good case study of some principle that anyone who studied communications would have to understand." This is the principle of the "false intimacy of society," Pauley said.

Pauley feels that as everyone lives in a mass media society, everyone should be aware of the effects of living in such an environment.

"Media enforces the idea that they give us personal relationships which we don't have," Pauley said.

Plamondon will also discuss the effects of the media in the Simpson case, but will present a lawyer's opinion. Plamondon will address the legal issue of organizing an impartial jury, and the credibility of the evidence.

Like Pauley, Plamondon sees this case as an opportunity to observe a "discipline related principle" in application. From the legal standpoint, the exclusionary rule which involves popular knowledge of evidence, is being demonstrated.

Plamondon will also cite legal precedents from the Supreme Court to set the case in a historical context.

Issues of gender and race will be addressed by Caputi.

Focusing on the racial aspect of the case would detract from the case as a gender issue, according to Caputi. She will discuss this in depth, in terms of the fear of female autonomy.

Caputi was fascinated with the quasi-decapitation of Nicole

Simpson in terms of the decapitation of women as a whole. Caputi plans to discuss the case in light of the psychological issues founded by Freud, and the Oedipal Complex.

The panel will present a collection of focused, and specialized opinions of the Simpson case in order to place a better perspective on today's most talked about issue of who-done-it.

Dalloway's offers alternative entertainment

By PATTI CARSON
Saint Mary's Accent Editor

Picture this, a steaming mug of coffee, a deck of cards, and your closest friends. Add the chance to win free t-shirts and coffee mugs. Throw in True North, the popular campus band. Does it get any better than this? Come and see for yourself this Saturday night at Dalloway's.

Dalloway's Coffee House, which opened in 1991 and has been student-run hence, is managed again this year by Holy Cross Hall juniors, Jen Doyle and Meggan Awe.

"Dalloway's is a place for students to listen to campus bands and poetry readings. It's also a place to grab a cup of coffee and play cards," said Doyle.

"Students from both Saint Mary's and Notre Dame are welcome and encouraged to visit Dalloway's, everyone is invited" said Awe.

"Even though we can't advertise as much as we'd like to on the Notre Dame campus, we'd like for Notre Dame students to use this facility also," Doyle added. Professors from both campuses are also welcome at the coffee house.

Dalloway's Coffee House offers a wide variety of beverages. "This year, we'll be serving ice mocha and ice coffee, two beverages that we didn't carry last year," said Doyle.

Dalloway's will also serve coffee, mocha, lattes, cappuccino, soda, hot chocolate, and mineral water, added Doyle. All of the coffee served at the coffee house comes from Spice of Life, according to Doyle.

According to Awe, Dalloway's has also invested in some new games to entertain student during weekends or study breaks.

Dalloway's continues to offer alternative entertainment of the Notre Dame and Saint Mary's community.

"You name it," said Awe, "We've got cards, checkers, Uno, Scrabble, Battleship, and more."

Adding to the list, the Coffee House will feature a variety of specials. For instance, those who carry the Dalloway's Coffee Club Card may buy nine cups of coffee and get the tenth cup free, according to Doyle.

Also, those who buy one cup of coffee may get the second cup for half price on special nights. "Bring your own coffee mug and subtract ten cents from the regular price of coffee," said Doyle.

Awe said that Dalloway's, which traditionally is open on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Saturdays, is scheduled with the office of Special Events on the Saint Mary's campus. Dalloway's uses the Saint Mary's College Clubhouse on these nights, transforming it into the infamous Dalloway's.

"The establishment has been successful so far," said Doyle, "Last year, our biggest crowd gathered when Tim O'Neil, 'the Piano Man,' performed at Dalloway's. We also ended the year with a bang when Victoria's Real Secret performed."

Doyle said that Dalloway's is not just a place for campus bands and study breaks. "We're looking for anyone with a talent that they would like to share. If anyone wants to present a poetry reading or gather some friends to put on a one act play, we'd be thrilled," she said.

Awe said that the coffee house is meant to be used by everyone, so she encourages all students and professors to visit. The most rewarding part of being a student manager, according to Awe and Doyle, is witnessing the establishment of a place for student unity.

"We like to see students supporting campus bands and we enjoy seeing friends come to meet over a cup of coffee," Doyle said.

According to Awe, Dalloway's is run entirely by students.

"Student volunteers from both campuses keep the place going," she said. Awe does not see serving coffee for an hour or two as a demanding job. She sees it more as belonging to a social club.

"Anyone interested in volunteering or sharing talents should give us a call or stop by the coffee house," Awe said.

Dalloway's is open on Mondays from 7 p.m. to 10 p.m. It is also open on Wednesdays and Saturdays from 8 p.m. to 12 a.m.

"Again, we encourage students from both campuses to come to Dalloway's. We'll even give you some incentive to trek on over," said Doyle. "If visitors mention that they read this article, we'll subtract fifteen cents from the regular price of their coffee."

Plan ahead to experience Dalloway's this Saturday night from 8 p.m. to midnight. Imagine how relaxing it would be to sit down with a hot cup of coffee warming up after a cold day after watching the football game.

Husker manager a real life 'Rudy'

By RICK WARNER
Associated Press

Adam Kucera enjoyed the movie "Rudy," the inspirational story of a 27-year-old bench warmer at Notre Dame who got to play briefly in his final home game.

"I liked it because it was about an underdog who made his dreams come true," Kucera said.

Last Saturday, he starred in a "Rudy" revival in Lincoln, Neb.

A 5-foot-8, 180-pound freshman who was a student manager for the Nebraska football team a month ago, Kucera found himself playing quarterback for the second-ranked Cornhuskers in the closing minutes of a 70-21 rout of Pacific.

With fans chanting "Rudy, Rudy" and his father cheering from the stands, Kucera entered the game with 5:22 left and guided the Cornhuskers to two first downs. He left after five plays, gaining four yards on his only run and throwing an incompletion with his only pass.

"It was a dream come true for me," he said. "I grew up in Nebraska, my dad was a coach at Nebraska, and I went to football camps there every summer."

"I was always a big Nebraska fan. My closets are still filled with red things."

Kucera was a good high school quarterback in Lake Havasu City, Ariz., but was too small to be recruited by big-time colleges. Determined to participate in Nebraska football, he joined the team as a student manager, setting up tackling dummies, fixing helmets and doing other odd jobs.

When two quarterbacks left school and another was injured during preseason practice, Kucera was pressed into service on the scout team — scrubs who play the part of the upcoming opponent in practice.

"I was just excited to put on the uniform," he said.

Kucera, who wants to be an orthopedic surgeon, got even more excited when he found out he might play in a mop-up role against outmanned Pacific. So did his father Bill, a graduate assistant at Nebraska before becoming Adam's high school coach in Arizona. He flew in to watch the game.

"If Adam was going to play, I didn't want to miss it," he said.

Adam's moment finally came after Pacific scored late in the game. Following the kickoff, coach Tom Osborne sent Kucera in with his first play, a pitch to tailback Scott Davenport.

"As soon as I ran out there, the nervousness disappeared," Kucera said. "I just focused on the play. I didn't even hear the crowd."

Kucera ran for four yards on the next play, but the gain was wiped out by a holding penalty. After two more running plays, he tried his first pass.

"It was a timing pattern, but I couldn't see the receivers because the linemen were in front of me," Kucera said. "I just threw it away to be safe."

It's hard to see over giant linemen when you're only 5-8. Even though starter Tommie Frazier is sidelined by a blood clot in his leg, Kucera knows his playing time will still be limited to scrimmages and blowout victories.

"I'll never be a starter or a second-string quarterback at Nebraska because of my size," he said. "But I'm comfortable with the position I'm in. I'm happy being the fourth-string quarterback. Asking for more would only lead to disappointment."

Quarterback coach Turner Gill, a graduate assistant with Bill Kucera in 1990, said Adam is an overachiever.

"He's a heady player," Gill said. "He doesn't have the size, strength or speed to be a regular player here, but he's very intelligent and he comes from a good football background."

"I'm as proud of him as I can be," Bill Kucera said. "He's always been a great student and a great leader. And now he's getting a chance to fulfill his dream."

Already, friends and teammates are calling him Rudy. So what does the original Rudy think of Kucera?

"I hadn't heard about him, but I'm happy whenever I hear a story like that," said Rudy Ruettiger.

Frazier out indefinitely

By TOM VINT
Associated Press

LINCOLN

With Nebraska's Tommie Frazier still hospitalized, coach Tom Osborne was hopeful Tuesday that the second-ranked Cornhuskers would not lose their quarterback for the remainder of the season.

Frazier was undergoing treatment to dissolve a blood clot behind his right knee. The junior quarterback probably would remain in Bryan Hospital at least a few more days, Osborne said.

"Tommie Frazier is one of those people I'm positive will not play this week," Osborne said. "I don't think it's a done deal that he'll miss the rest of the season necessarily."

It still was not certain how Frazier developed the clot, Osborne said. Such injuries generally result from a blow that later develops into a clot.

But Frazier couldn't recall taking a hit to the calf area. The clot was discovered Sunday.

Frazier complained of some soreness in the calf the morning of the game, Sept. 17. He played most of that 49-21 victory, but was on the field for just nine plays in Saturday's 70-21 blowout of Pacific.

"I don't think it was something that occurred in the UCLA game," Osborne said. "We nursed it along last week in practice."

Frazier missed practice last Monday, then ran full speed on Wednesday only to have the soreness return the next day. Osborne gave Frazier the option of playing against Pacific, and the junior wanted to go in for at least the early series.

"He did not get hit on the leg," Osborne said. "As far as I can tell, he never was hit anywhere hard on Saturday."

But a trip to the hospital for tests Sunday resulted in discovery of the clot. Medication was started, and by Tuesday morning the clot had been reduced by 40 percent to 50 percent, Osborne said.

"I'm not even speculating at this point what action we'll be taking," Osborne said.

Getting Frazier healthy and deciding when he could return to the field was the key, Osborne said.

He also was concerned whether Frazier would have to remain on blood-thinners, which could prevent him from playing due to the risk of internal injury and bleeding.

Nebraska's medical staff has been in contact with several NFL teams to discuss treatment and length of recovery for such injuries. Osborne said there have been several situations, ranging from one Green Bay player being forced out for six weeks to other players on blood-thinners early in the week, then be taken off late in the week and allowed to play.

"We're not going to do anything that's not recommended medically," Osborne said.

In the meantime, Osborne said his staff and team have "full confidence" in Frazier's backup, junior Brook Berringer. He will make his first career start Saturday against Wyoming in Lincoln.

Berringer threw for three touchdowns and ran for another against Pacific. He is the only scholarship quarterback left on the roster.

Safety Tony Veland, converted from quarterback after a series of injuries, is practicing again at that position.

Also available are sophomore Matt Turman, freshman Adam Kucera and freshman Ryan Held. Kucera, who played quarterback in high school at Lake Havasu City, Ariz., started fall camp as a student manager.

Lions turn TO's into TD's

By MICHAEL A. GIARUSSO
Associated Press

STATE COLLEGE, Pa. Penn State hasn't wasted many scoring chances this season, quickly turning opponents' turnovers into touchdowns and scoring nearly every time the Nittany Lions are inside the opposition's 20-yard line.

No. 4 Penn State (4-0) has the second-highest scoring team in the nation with an average of 52.5, trailing only No. 1 Florida's 58 per game.

The Nittany Lions, who play at Temple (2-1) Saturday, have scored 21 of 24 times they have been inside the other team's 20-yard line, also known as the red zone. Nineteen of those were touchdowns.

"We've done well inside there in a lot of different ways, and I think that is because we have lot of good people ... and because our coaches have been very careful with what they've done down there," coach Joe Paterno said at his weekly news conference Tuesday.

With a quarterback that doesn't throw many interceptions such as Kerry Collins, the Nittany Lions haven't been afraid to pass the ball when they get near the goal line, Paterno said.

"We've been doing a better job with the fades and the post patterns in and around the 10- and 12-yard line," he said.

Collins is the second-rated quarterback in the country with a 198.6 efficiency rating, behind only Terry Dean of Florida.

Penn State has forced 10 turnovers and committed only three.

"There's a lot of fumbles you can prevent by being disciplined and concentrating during the football game, but there's some you can't," Paterno said. "That's a percentage thing, and it's one of those things that is going to happen to us and we'll see if we can overcome it."

Penn State's opponents haven't been able to overcome mistakes, as the Nittany Lions have turned seven turnovers and two blocked kicks into quick scores.

The Nittany Lions have had 10 scoring drives that took less than a minute, which has sometimes forced the defense to remain on the field for long periods of time.

"Going into the fourth quarter we might get a little fatigued," cornerback Brian Miller said. "But as far as the first half is concerned, our energy level is high and we're trying to put them away."

Hurricanes give QB second look

By STEVEN WINE
Associated Press

CORAL GABLES, Fla.

Miami Hurricanes quarterback Frank Costa is getting a second chance this time.

Miami's loss at Florida State in the fifth game last year cost Costa his starting job, and he became a scapegoat for the team's disappointing season.

Costa regained the No. 1 job last spring, and in the wake of Saturday's 38-20 loss to Washington, he remains firmly entrenched as the Hurricanes' quarterback. He'll start again Saturday when No. 13 Miami (2-1) plays at Rutgers (2-2).

"I'm glad I have that opportunity," Costa said Tuesday. "Last year made that loss stick in my head a little bit longer, because I never really got a chance to go out there and make up for it. After that game I was benched for the rest of the year.

"This is an opportunity for me to go out and play right away and make up for it."

Coach Dennis Erickson gave Costa a passing grade in the stunning loss to Washington, which ended Miami's NCAA-record 58-game winning streak at the Orange Bowl.

In the second half, when the Hurricanes were outscored 35-6, Costa completed just 10 of 27 passes with two interceptions. But the first interception — returned for a touchdown — occurred after the intended receiver fell down, and the second interception was a tipped pass that Costa threw as he was hit.

Miami twice had to settle for a field goal following first-and-goal situations. Erickson said the Hurricanes should have run more near the end zone, and he declined to criticize Costa.

"He made good decisions for the most part, and he made a couple of bad decisions," Erickson said. "I thought he played very well."

After what happened last year, Costa appreciates the vote of confidence.

"I look at my own performance, and I could have done some things better," he said. "But I'm not disappointed in myself."

Costa's best moment came at the end of the first half. He threw a bomb that A.C. Tellison dropped, robbing Miami of a 51-yard touchdown. So on the next play, Costa threw long down the other sideline to Yatil Green for a score.

This season Costa has completed 43 of 85 passes for 724 yards with six touchdowns and four interceptions. Perhaps 10 of his passes have been dropped.

"My goal was to go 12-0, and obviously that's not going to happen," Costa said. "But by no means is the season over. Remember that back in 1989 we lost to Florida State and went on to win the national championship."

"The season isn't over." And this year, Costa gets to keep playing.

■ WOMEN'S INTERHALL

Ducks seek win, respect

By CHUCK CAMOSY
Sports Writer

Howard enters their first interhall contest with something to prove. Noticing that they bring up the rear in this week's poll, one might write off the Ducks before they are given a chance. Senior right guard Lynn Quenan cites a solid running attack and steady line play on both sides of the ball as reasons for Howard to gain respect and move up in the polls.

After a tough loss to Pangborn last week, Badin hopes to get back on track Wednesday. Turnovers and costly mistakes need to be eliminated. Captain Lynn Satanek believes last week's performance wasn't indicative of how well the Attitudes can compete.

"We are disappointed by the loss, but being ranked eight will allow us to sneak up on some people. Our team spirit and coaching give us a tremendous advantage."

The game looks to be a competitive one because of what's at stake for both teams. And to add fuel to the fire, Badin defeated Howard in the semi-finals last year. Could this be payback time for the Ducks? We'll know after Wednesday.

Walsh vs. Breen-Phillips

The number one team in women's interhall is Walsh. They shut out Cavanaugh last week 18-0, leaving no doubt they belong there. Junior Quarterback Erin Nicholas and Frosh Tailback Boo Whithers lead the potent offense which moved the ball seemingly at will in their last performance. The defense is very experienced and proved its worth last Thursday, shutting out a resourceful Cavanaugh squad.

Senior Captain and defensive end Kirstin Esmundson won't let success affect the team's attitude. "We won't underestimate B.P. They bring a lot to the table and we must be ready."

Last week the option killed the Blitz of Breen-Phillips as they fell to Lyons. But head coach Bill Gaumond had them put in some hard work this week with an emphasis on stopping the option.

"We're really coming together as a team after this week's practice," Senior captain Melissa McPike said.

While there is much young talent like frosh quarterback Diane Meyers, B.P. looks to senior tailback Wendy Morris both for leadership and touchdowns.

This is another game with interesting stories to watch unfold. If B.P. has corrected its defensive woes the game should be close. Could we see a number one fall? We'll find out Wednesday.

Pangborn vs. Lyons

The game versus Pangborn is no longer an easy win for any team this year. They equaled their entire victory total last year with a 12-7 win over Badin last week. The Phoxes gave indications that they are for real.

"Our young, pumped up defense was the key to victory," said junior captain Trish Sorenson. "We are just real excited to play."

Sorenson lead the offense, scoring both the Phoxes' touchdowns. Boasting a 1-0 record and a number five spot in the polls, Pangborn looks to take a big step on their journey to become one of the elite teams in the league this year.

Lyons, ranked third, is coming off a 19-12 win over B.P. They are lead by Jenny Laden, whose two touchdowns and all-around play earned her player of the week honors.

In a battle of highly ranked teams, the Pangborn/Lyons matchup should prove interesting. The outcome will certainly give the winner an advantage, and the team that loses will suffer their first blemish of the season.

Holtz

senior tailback Lee Becton, thought to be out for another three weeks, may be able to return next week for Notre Dame's matchup with rival Boston College.

"Lee Becton's condition has improved a lot," Holtz said. "He won't play this week, but I anticipate that he'll be back for Boston College."

Becton obtained a hip injury during Notre Dame's 21-20 victory over Michigan State two weeks ago. He did not play against Purdue.

On the defensive end, Holtz expressed concern about Stanford's big-play offensive capabilities, especially those of quarterback Steve Stenstrom.

"They present quite a challenge for us on defense," he said. "They put a lot of points on the board. Stenstrom is a great quarterback. He may be the best in the country."

Freshmen lead net squads

Special to The Observer

Notre Dame freshman Kelley Olson won the no. 4 singles championship Sunday as the Fighting Irish women's tennis team played at the Harvard Invitational this past weekend. Olson defeated Tu Mai of Tennessee, 6-3, 7-5, in the championship match.

Notre Dame had a total of three players advance to flight finals as junior Holyn Lord lost in the no. 1 championship and freshman Molly Gavin lost in the no. 3 championship. The top Notre Dame team of Wendy Crabtree and Lord lost in the finals of the no. 1 doubles by a 3-6, 6-3, 7-5 score to Tennessee.

In consolation action, Crabtree won the no. 1 flight championship while the doubles team of senior Laura Schwab and Gavin won the no. 1 doubles.

In men's action, the Notre Dame men's squad had three players win singles championships and two teams win doubles championships at the Tar Heel Invitational this past weekend.

Sophomore Ryan Simme took the honors in the A Flight with a 6-1, 6-2 win over Han Paino of Richmond in the championship match. On the road to the finals, Simme beat Jordan Murray of Duke, Oliver Mayo of Virginia Tech, Jorge Esqueda of South Carolina, and Nick Walrod of Duke.

Junior Jay O'Brien won the B Flight singles title with a 6-0, 6-1 win over Dan Russo of George Mason in the finals. Irish senior Jason Pun advanced to the third round of that flight.

Notre Dame freshman Vijay Freeman won the C Flight title with a 6-3, 6-7, 6-4 win over

■ MEN'S SOCCER

Irish match featured on national TV

By THOMAS SCHLIDT
Sports Writer

For the past decade the interest in soccer in the U.S. has been on the rise. It has become the number one organized sport among children, and interest in the adult population has also increased.

Since World Cup '94, this growth in popularity among adults has skyrocketed.

Evidence of this is the introduction of the College Soccer Weekly Game of the Week, which features the top collegiate soccer programs and broadcasts these match-ups on national television.

Tonight, the (5-3) Notre Dame men's soccer team is one of the select teams featured as they battle (6-2) Wake Forest at Davidson College in North Carolina. The game will be broadcast on Sports Channel Prime, which is channel 22 in Notre Dame, at 7 p.m.

Yet, the broadcasting is not the only important aspect of this match-up. The Irish will be facing one of the better teams in the nation. The Demon Deacons have national respect and are members of one of the best soccer conferences, the Atlantic Coast Conference.

The ACC boasts such powerhouses as Virginia, Clemson, North Carolina and Duke. Virginia, Clemson, and North Carolina are all ranked in the Soccer America top ten; No. 1, No. 2 and No. 3 respectively. The Demon Deacons controlled their game against Virginia, earlier this season, before the Cavaliers came from behind to win 3-2.

Junior forward Eric Brandsma leads the Deacons with five goals and five assists, and senior goalkeeper Mike McGinty leads the defense with a 1.53 goals against average.

"It's a very important game," midfielder Jason Fox said. "Wake Forest is respected around the nation. Beating them means a lot."

"Any opportunity to play a top team on national television is a big deal," sweeper Kevin Adkisson added. "We can prove to ourselves and the nation that we're ready to win the big games."

The rewards from the publicity are not all in the present. The broadcast allows the Irish to expose their program to the nation. This plays a big role in how the Irish will recruit and rank in the next couple of years.

"This is very good exposure for the sport and Notre Dame," Fox explains. "High school seniors will be watching this game and it will be a big help in recruiting."

Yet, the game will not be easy as the Irish will be without starting forward Tim Oates. Oates received a red card in the game against La Salle last Sunday, and is suspended for two games.

"Tim Oates is a great player and scorer in the box," Fox said. "It's a big loss, but we have a lot of good freshman who can step up for us."

Holtz rebuts Walsh digs

By MIKE NORBUT
Associate Sports Editor

Lou Holtz is still pretty young, relatively speaking. Pacing up and down the sideline keeps him in good shape and looking healthy. He doesn't have one foot in the grave quite yet.

But suddenly, the Irish football head coach is worried about his own funeral.

"I sure hope I don't have to hire pall bearers when I die," the Irish head coach said in his weekly press conference Tuesday. The statement came in response to comments that Stanford head coach Bill Walsh made in his recently published book, "Rough Magic: Bill Walsh's Return to Stanford Football."

In the book, Walsh called Holtz, a "spoiled little brat," an accusation with which the Irish coach disagreed.

"Nobody likes to be called a spoiled brat," Holtz continued. "I don't think that I am. Nobody wants to be disliked, and I don't think I deserve it. But everyone's entitled to their opinion."

"I'm not spoiled, but I like to get my own way."

The Irish coach had only praise for Walsh, but he had nothing more to say about the book.

"He's always handled things with class," Holtz said. "I stand and applaud everything he's done and everything he's accomplished."

"If somebody wants to know what's in the book, they're going to have to talk to Bill Walsh," he continued. "I didn't write the book, and I did not read the book."

"Maybe the comment came over the fact that they beat us in 1992 and Bill thought I didn't give them enough credit," Holtz said in reference to Stanford's 33-16 upset of the Irish in South Bend two seasons ago. "I have worked hard at being a gracious loser."
