Faith in the law

As it turns 125, law school puts ethics back at forefront

By SARAH DORAN
News Editor

As it begins its 125th year at a time when public faith in the legal profession is at an all time low, the Notre Dame law school is out to restore what is often the missing ingredient in a complete education—ethics.

"If we cannot restore faith in the legal profession, we will have a most difficult time maintaining the rule of law," said David Link, Dean of the Law School. "What is needed is a return to a legal profession that can be trusted, and it is appropriate for us as a religious institution to be drawn to ethical issues."

So, in conjunction with the anniversary celebration of the nation's oldest Catholic law school, the school is capitalizing on its character as it looks to reinvigorate the concept of "professionalism" that Link claims is currently lacking in the legal profession.

"There has been a total loss of professionalism as the origi-

Endowment campaign launched

By MYRNA MALONEY
Assistant Saint Mary's Editor

A Sesquicentennial Campaign endowment goal of $30 million was announced last night by Sister Rachel Callahan, chair of the Saint Mary's College Board of Trustees.

"I am pleased to play a part in the launching of this campaign because I believe that its goals are a testament to Saint Mary's mission. Saint Mary's has always been a school where women found opportunities when they were unavailable elsewhere, where students were challenged by high expectations and rigorous standards, and where each woman received individual attention and guidance. I want that to be true in the future, too," said Callahan, a 1962 graduate of Saint Mary's herself.

"The Sesquicentennial Campaign, with its emphasis on creating an ever richer spiritual, academic, and intellectual environment, will help make his vision of the future a reality," she continued.

At the champagne reception in O'Laughlin Auditorium, William Hickey, president of the College, stated that the first priority of the four year campaign is student scholarships.

"In the face of rapidly rising college costs, fewer families can afford the full cost of a private college education. In order to keep the College accessible to students from a range of backgrounds as well as to maintain the academic quality of the student body, Saint Mary's currently provides financial assistance to well over 50 percent of the student body," Hickey said.

"It is critical to the future of Saint Mary's that this vibrant community of learners be assured. Thus, one third of the gifts received in the campaign, $10 million, will be channeled into underwriting need-based, multicultural, and merit scholarships," he continued.

According to Hickey, the needs of the faculty are also represented in the campaign.

"The Campaign will designate $5 million to endow junior and senior faculty positions, enabling the College to reward faculty for whom teaching is a true vocation and mentoring students a lifelong commitment. These endowed teaching positions will assist us in our efforts to continue to attract and retain the kind of outstanding teachers that distinguish the College today," Hickey said.

The Center for Academic Innovation, which was established to coordinate College faculty development and student enrichment programs, will also benefit from the campaign as $3 million will be endowed to it, according to a press release.

The Center for Spirituality and special projects in information technology will receive $1 million and $1.4 million, respectively. The projects and their corresponding equipment are the only capital items in the campaign, according to Hickey, who has served as Saint Mary's College president since 1986.

Donors may also participate in the campaign by endowing part of the $1.6 million allotted for improving projects, which may include musical performances or funding for the Multicultural Affairs office, according to the press release.

Over five years, the Campaign will raise $8 million for The Annual Fund, through which unrestricted gifts may be endowed to the College.

"The Annual Fund will continue to provide an important supplement to our operating

Losing two doesn't mean we're losers

The Boston College students had barely finished rushing the field and disrupting the game when the crying started.

"Man, we suck!"

"I'm selling the rest of my tickets!"

"I think I'll just do homework on Saturday afternoon for the rest of the fall."

It's amazing how two losses will turn the campus atmosphere from rabid support to passionate disinterest. Fans who ran through Stonehenge last year after Florida State fell, now threaten suicide. From the Rock to Flanner, everyone seems to have sold the team out now that the national championship is beyond our reach.

Please, stop your whining.

Take a little time to appreciate how good Coach Holtz' 81-22-1 record here at ND really is. Admire our seven consecutive top twenty finishes. We've had more NFL draftees than any other school in the past two years. If you need any more reason to feel fortunate about our football team, let me give you a case study in ineptitude. And I'm not talking about the Faust years.

I went to Westhill High School in Stamford, Connecticut. Stamford's a town of 100,000 people near New York City, full of races, nationalities and creeds. Westhill is a school of 1400 students, from the same variable backgrounds. Stamford has a long a glorious tradition of turning out quality athletes. Andy Robitelli of the New York Giants. Bobby Valentine, of major league baseball fame, was a legendary high school football player. Dan Sileo of the Philadelphia Eagles also hails from Stamford. Seems like a place where a decent football team could develop, right? Wrong.

Westhill has a football team that creates new definitions for terrible. We were, are, and will continue to be, cosmically bad.

The Mighty Vikings have not put together a winning season since 1985. In my four years there, from 1988 to 1991 we won seven games. Seven. For those of you scoring at home, that's a bad YEAR at Notre Dame.

In, my freshman year, when I was naive about such matters, I decided to attend our first two games. I watched in horror as our team was outscored 100-0 in those games. In one of those games, we were held without a first down. We dropped our next six, and our redeemed ourselves by "upsetting" the other two weak sisters in our county.

Our misery was not to end there. The next year, our team only had twenty eight players. That means no substitutes, and also brought threats of disbandment from the Board of Education. We went on to a 2-8 record.

My senior year we won once. 2-0. We tied another game, when instead of kicking for the win, our quarterback slipped in the mud and fell on the snap as time expired.

The present Westhill team is no better. So far this year they have been outscored 112-7 in four games. Last week, the team gained five net yards on offense. F-I-V-E.

So if you're thinking of selling your tickets and becoming more studious on Saturday's, remember this pathetic little team in Stamford. And please, stop your whining. I'll see you in the stands tomorrow.

Homicide rate for male teens skyrockets 154 percent

ATLANTA
The homicide rate among young men ages 15 to 19 more than doubled between 1985 and 1991, and researchers attribute the rise to drug gangs' recruiting of younger members and increased use of guns instead of fists.

"When it comes to violence, in the past what may have led to fistfights now leads to gunfire," Dr. David Satcher, director of the Centers for Disease Prevention and Control, said Thursday.

The homicide rate for males 15 to 19 jumped from 13 per 100,000 in 1985 to 33 per 100,000 in 1991, a 154 percent increase, the CDC said. The nation's highest homicide rate — 41 per 100,000 — is among men ages 20 to 24, according to the CDC.

"We've got to get guns out of the hands of these kids — it's an epidemic," said Alfred Blumstein of the Heinz School of

Teen homicides up dramatically

Public Policy and Management at Carnegie Mellon University in Pittsburgh. He contributed to the CDC study.

Blumstein said drug gangs are recruiting teen-agers because the youngsters have little sense of the risks and consequences.

Guns claimed the lives of 88 percent of the 15- to 19-year-olds killed in 1991. From 1985 to 1991, 97 percent of the increase was attributed to guns.

"You have kids transforming bloody noses into shootings," Blumstein said.

Homicide's ranking as the No. 2 cause of death among males ages 15 to 19 has changed little since 1963, said Dr. Kenneth Powell of the CDC's National Center for Injury Prevention and Control. Accidents are the leading cause of death and are responsible for 32 percent of deaths in that age group.

Pilgrims wait to hear divine message

CONYERS, Ga.
Thousands of mud-coated pilgrims stood in a drizzling rain for hours Thursday to hear a message from the Virgin Mary. About 23,500 pilgrims from around the world waited, praying aloud, listening to readings from scripture and waving white paper and white handkerchiefs as they sang "Ave Maria." They gathered under umbrellas and tents to hear from Nancy Fowler, who says she communicates with the virgin on the 13th of each month when she appears on the ceiling of a room in Mrs. Fowler's farmhouse. Meanwhile, in Hollywood, Fla., hundreds of pilgrims flocked to the home of Rosa Lopez, who also says the Virgin Mary speaks to her on the 13th of each month. During a 90-minute recitation of the rosary — in Spanish and English — broadcast into the roped-off street over loudspeakers, the sun broke through the clouds. Onlookers dropped to their knees and stared at the blazing sun. Some reported seeing crosses in the sky, others a silhouette of Mary. Forty-five police officers and an ambulance were on hand. They treated a few members of the streetside congregation who were stricken with heat exhaustion. In Georgia, Thursday's message was similar to those Mrs. Fowler has issued previously: Follow God or the earth will be plagued with war, famine, flood and other suffering. It was the fourth anniversary of the messages. Tens of thousands of people have been drawn to the farm since she began speaking of the apparition only she has seen.

Coors recalls beer carrying bacteria

GOLDEN, Colo.
About 150,000 cases of beer were pulled off shelves by Coors on Thursday because they contain bacteria that makes the beer thicker and cloudy. The bacteria, though, does not pose a health hazard, said Hugo Patino a Coors' vice president. He said Belgian brewers intentionally keep the bacteria in some beer because it gives it a characteristic look and flavor. The spoiled beer represents about 3 percent of Coors' total beer stock, and the company was working Thursday to identify where the batches had gone nationwide. The 150,000 cases were removed from stores in Denver and Dallas. The affected beer includes Original Coors, Coors Light, Coors Extra Gold, Coors Dry, Killian's Irish Red, Keystone, Keystone Dry, Keystone Light, Keystone Ice, Coors Arctic Ice and Coors Arctic Ice Light. The Coors Consumer Information Center is 1-800-642-6116.

Cheap coffee, fuel to be short lived

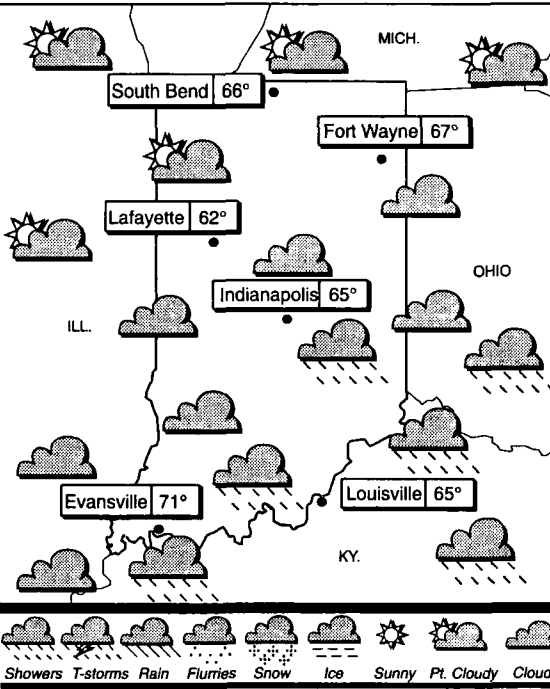

NEW YORK
Two fuels of the American economy — gasoline and coffee — got cheaper last month, but don't count on the good times to last. Gasoline prices in big cities are likely to rise because of federal requirements for cleaner-burning winter gas. And coffee prices have been up and down in recent months. Wholesale price declines in those two commodities combined to push wholesale inflation figures down sharply in September. The overall drop, reported Thursday by the Labor Department, was good news for the economy, which some analysts had feared was growing too fast, threatening higher inflation. Crop-damaging drought in Brazil, countered by forecasts of healthy rain, have sent coffee prices on a roller-coaster ride. The outlook is about as hazy as an early morning with a broken percolator. Coffee prices on the Coffee, Sugar and Cocoa Exchange in New York have risen nearly 9 percent this week. Any continued drop in gasoline prices will have to overcome the higher cost of a cleaner-burning mixture that the government requires during the colder months. To reduce pollution, the government has required gasoline distributors to sell gas mixed with ethanol in those cities during the winter months. The oxygenated gasolines typically add about a nickel a gallon to the price of conventional gasoline. But if shortages of the special mixture develop, the increase could be more than a dime per gallon.

Windows, Quicken companies merge

SAN JOSE, Calif.
Microsoft Corp. and Intuit Inc. said Thursday that they will merge in a $1.5 billion stock swap that extends Microsoft's dominance into personal finance software. The deal gives Quicken, Intuit's best-selling personal money-management program, to Microsoft. To avoid antitrust concerns, Microsoft, the world's biggest maker of personal computer software, will sell its rival program, Microsoft Money, to Novell Inc. Analysts said the deal — believed to be the largest software merger in terms of price — gives Microsoft the lead in personal finance programs. Analysts considered Intuit, based in Menlo Park, Calif., the best example of a smaller company competing successfully against industry-dominating Microsoft. Intuit is a leading producer of small business accounting software best known for the Quicken personal finance program, which the company says has 6 million users.

Curran will speak on AIDS

Special to The Observer

Dr. James Curran, associate director of AIDS programs at the Center for Disease Control (CDC) and a 1966 graduate of Notre Dame, will deliver the St. Joseph's Medical Center's second annual Emil Hofman lecture at 8:30 a.m. Saturday in Cushing Hall.

James Curran

A pioneer in the fight against AIDS, Curran will discuss the history of the disease, current developments, and continuing efforts to find a cure or vaccine. His talk is free and open to the public.

After receiving a bachelor's degree in science from Notre Dame, Curran earned his M.D. from the University of Michigan and a master's in public health from Harvard University. He began his study of sexually transmitted diseases at the University of Tennessee Medical School before joining the CDC in 1978.

In June 1981 — before AIDS had been named or even recognized as a new and deadly disease — Curran examined a man in New York suffering from Kaposi's sarcoma. At about the same time, the CDC published the findings of two California doctors who had treated five patients for pneumonia, a herpes virus and oral candidiasis. A month later, a report was published titled "Kaposi's sarcoma and pneumocystis pneumonia among homosexual men — New York and California."

At that point, Curran and others realized the magnitude of the problem and organized a task force to study what would become known as Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome and its precursor, Human Immunodeficiency Virus. Since then, he has devoted his professional life to the battle.

The late Randy Shilts, author of "And the Band Played On," once said of Curran, "I think he's a brilliant man. He's had an extremely difficult job. On one hand, he's trying to do what's right for public health. On the other, he's having to navigate the perilous waters of those watching over the CDC's every move."

The Hofman lecture is named in honor of Emil Hofman, dean emeritus of Notre Dame's Freshman Year of Studies and professor emeritus of chemistry.

Due to traffic associated with the football game, those attending the lecture are encouraged to arrive early. Bus service will be provided from the St. Joseph's Medical Center doctor's parking lot beginning at 8 a.m.

nal concept of a 'calling' into public service," he said. "It is what distinguishes a profession from a trade and, in essence, what you do in the interest of the general public."

Serving as a forum for discussion on the topic, the law school will continue with their Fulbright conferences on the subject of professionalism. They recently hosted a number of international scholars who presented the third of the series and plans for another conference to take place this fall are underway.

As the profession as a whole looks to improve its public image—which is ranked somewhere between that of trash collectors and used car salesmen—Notre Dame's law school is currently undergoing a self-examination, the third of Link's 19 years as Dean.

In studying its faculty, students, curriculum, financial aid and research role, plans are to evaluate results in light of the school's progress towards turning out highly qualified and ethical professionals, said Link.

The school's current curriculum stands as testimony to its focus on ethics and professionalism, as it exemplifies how "the pervasive method of teaching ethics is really working in law school," said Link, who graduated from the University in 1958 and from the Law School in 1961.

"Ethics is not taught as if it was a separate subject, we expect every teacher to teach it in their classes," he said.

Notre Dame is also the only law school that throughout its entire history has required first year students to take a philosophy of law course, said Link.

"We have never approached law as a pure science," said Link. "Every legal question has moral questions. We want to train lawyers that will always regard themselves as public servants, no matter how they go about providing it."

As the school continues to provide lawyers with complete training as professionals, it relies on its tight, whole community structure of some 600 students, faculty, and staff. Students can only attend the school on a full time basis, as no night or summer courses are offered.

"In order to get into deep analysis of the socio-economic, political background, moral questions and consideration of what the law ought to be, one must be fully immersed in it," said Link. "What is important here is not just what goes on in class—the law has got to be your life."

As much as this goal is necessary, the school's full time nature makes meeting its $17,430 tuition difficult for many prospective students. So as part of its self evaluation, Link intends for the school to take a tough stance in improving financial aid opportunities resources. He is hopeful that the school's more than 6,000 loyal alumni will fill an important need by making contributions toward this cause.

As part of the focus on Financial Aid, the school Loan Forgiveness program will also be closely evaluated in that hope that its "very minimal funding" will be substantially increased, making public sector work more attractive and possible for the interested graduate, said Link.

In each year that the U.S. News and World Report has been published, the school has ranked among the top twenty law schools in the rating by lawyers and judges and overall it is ranked eighteenth in the Country by the Gourman Report on Graduate Education. Link attributes this accomplishment not only to the law school's curriculum and environment of the University itself, but also to the student model the school looks for during admissions.

"We look at their service record and leadership potential—for value oriented services," he said. "We are looking for people who think they can use their law degree to bring about good, justice and peace. We don't want people here who just want to be lawyers."

The school typically admits about 30 Notre Dame graduates in classes which average about 170 students each. As for the high percentage, Link said, "we want a cadre of Notre Dame people in every class, they know how Notre Dame works and can bring others into the Notre Dame ethos."

The Notre Dame Ethos. As the school continues its 125th anniversary celebration, a focus on ethics and professionalism would be hard pressed that to find a more fostering environment.

budget that enables us not only to balance our budget, but to have more flexibility within that budget. These funds will go a long way in providing that margin of excellence that characterizes the institution," Hickey said.

The Annual Fund is one category of the campaign in which everyone in the Saint Mary's family will be asked to participate, according to the press release.

The campaign has already raised well over $13 million in advanced gifts and has the structures necessary for complete success in place, according to Mary Lou Gorno, national chair of the Sesquicentennial Campaign and a graduate of Saint Mary's.

"We have used the College's long range plan to build a compelling case for funding our priorities and have also assembled a National Campaign cabinet who represent diverse groups but who share their commitment to Saint Mary's. We will carry out our targeted campaigns in every region of the country ... beginning with the South Bend area in the Spring of 1995," Gorno said.

"Saint Mary's convinced me that I could make a difference in the world, that I could realize my dreams, and that those dreams weren't gender-specific. I am here because I owe a great deal to Saint Mary's. But I am also here because I believe in what Saint Mary's can do for future generations of women. And the future is what this campaign is all about," she continued.

"The Sesquicentennial Campaign for Saint Mary's College will ensure that the Saint Mary's of the 21st century is as strong, as attuned to the needs of its students, and as aggressive in pursuit of academic excellence as it is today," Hickey concluded.

Alumnus named U.S. ambassador to Jamaica

By NANCY DUNN
Assistant News Editor

The presence of Notre Dame alumni in world politics keeps growing with the appointment of 1958 alumnus Marine Corps Maj. Gen. Jerome "Gary" Cooper to the position of U.S. ambassador to Jamaica. Nominated by President Clinton, Cooper was confirmed by the Senate on October 4 and is expected to be sworn in next Friday.

Cooper is excited about his appointment and views the ambassadorship as an exciting and worthwhile opportunity in his life, according to Charles Lennon, executive director of the Alumni Association. Cooper hopes to give back some of what he learned at Notre Dame, said Lennon.

"Cooper's appointment is another example of a Notre Dame alumnus stepping up to a leadership role offered to and earned by him," said Lennon. "I am sure he will do an excellent job," Lennon added.

University President Father Edward Malloy will be visiting with government, business, Church, and education leaders in Jamaica on October 26, and will see Cooper while there.

"We are pleased that Father Malloy will be one of (Cooper's) first visitors," said Lennon.

After earning a bachelor's degree in finance in 1958, Cooper was commissioned a second lieutenant in the Marine Corps.

During his twelve years of active service, Cooper served in Vietnam, becoming the first African-American officer to lead a Marine infantry company into combat.

For his efforts he was honored with the Bronze Star, two Purple Hearts, and three Vietnamese Cross of Gallantry medals.

Cooper then returned to work in the civilian world as vice president for marketing for David Volkert and Associates, an engineering and architectural firm headquartered in Mobile, Ala.

He also tried his hand at politics by serving as a state legislator in Alabama.

Most recently, Cooper was an assistant secretary of the Air Force for manpower, reserve affairs, installations, and environment.

In 1979, Cooper was named Man of the Year by the Notre Dame Club of Mobile, Ala. For his patriotism, commitment to community service, and outstanding government service, Cooper was awarded the Rev. John Cavanaugh, C.S.C., Award by the Alumni Association in 1988.

With his recent political appointment, Cooper will be joining ranks of other Notre Dame alumni. Ernesto Perez Balladres was recently elected president of Panama. Also, Dr.

Pedro Rossello was elected governor of Puerto Rico last year, and Michael Wadsworth, who has been named Notre Dame's new director of athletics, is currently serving as the Canadian ambassador to Ireland.

Also, Fernando Cardoso, a member of the advisory board of Notre Dame's Helen Kellogg Institute for International Studies, is Brazil's new president-elect.

And, Alexandro Foxley, a leading contender for the Chilean presidency as chairman of the Christian Democratic Party and former minister of finance for the Chilean government, is the University's Kellogg Professor of International Development.

Teenager charged in murders

By GINA HOLLAND
Associated Press

LAUREL, Miss.

A teen-ager was charged Thursday with murdering two gay men in what the sheriff said was a robbery, not a hate crime, as some activists suspect.

Sheriff Maurice Hooks said one of the victims was carrying about $100 before he was shot to death, and no money was found with the bodies.

"I definitely can say it was not a hate crime," Hooks said in announcing the arrest of 16-year-old Marvin McClendon.

McClendon is charged with capital murder in the slayings over the weekend of Robert Walters, 34, and Joseph Shoemaker, 24, both of Laurel. The teen-ager was jailed without bail.

This is the third in a series of open letters to the Notre Dame Community, preceded by Christmas 1993 and Lent and Easter 1994. We are a broadly representative ND PeaceNet group coming from many states, classes and disciplines. We advocate closing the 50-year old ROTC programs in favor of a University Chair in Catholic Nonviolence along with the enhancement of other priorities for the next decade as described in Colloquy for the Year 2000.

The dominant theme of Colloquy is "The Catholic identity and character of the University," but we are concerned to find no definition of the strong military presence on our campus, one which many other graduates, as well as faculty and students, see as tightly bound to the Department of Defense coupled with a trust in concepts and strategies of Total War.

As graduates and others, all of whom cherish affiliation with the University of Notre Dame, we understand the bonding between student and militarism to mean a contradiction to "the Catholic witness and mission" of Our Lady's University," affirmed in Colloquy and a roadblock to its principal purpose, "the formation of an authentic human community graced by the Spirit of Christ," Lamb of God who said "I am the Way".

All we are saying is restore Our Lady's University to full autonomy under the Congregation of Holy Cross and the University Board of Trustees. Our goal: a Pentagon- Free Notre Dame.

Our commitment is to God's creative power, expressed in forgiveness, compassion and love. In this hope we appeal to all who aspire for a peaceful world.

The writers of this letter ask for the opportunity to address our concerns in person before the appropriate committee of Colloquy for the Year 2000.

Sincerely in Notre Dame Our Mother,
 Notre Dame Mother of the Nonviolent Jesus,

Nonviolence stressed as Aristide returns

By LISA HAMM
Associated Press

PORT-AU-PRINCE
To avoid "mob hysteria," the U.S. military plans to carry President Jean-Bertrand Aristide by helicopter from the airport to the National Palace when he returns from exile Saturday.

"Right now, that's our plan: to help him," Lt. Gen. Henry Hugh Shelton, commander of U.S. forces here, said Thursday, hours after Haiti's former army leaders fled to Panama.

Shelton said he feared that massive celebrations Saturday hailing Aristide's return after three years in exile would degenerate into a mob scene.

"All the leaders have stressed nonviolence ... but you get the crowd hysteria that starts to creep in occasionally, particularly if there are those who want to incite a riot," he said.

Meanwhile, Haiti's former army commander, Raoul Cedras, arrived early Thursday in Panama to begin his life in exile.

But he won't be without income. The United States plans to lease Cedras' two homes in Haiti — in effect giving U.S. government money to the one-time dictator.

Shelton met with Haiti's new army commander, Maj. Gen. Jean-Claude Duperval, for several hours Thursday to discuss security.

Shelton said the U.S. military wanted to avoid situations in which Aristide would be part of a procession or make impromptu speeches before crowds.

Aristide's representatives in Haiti couldn't immediately be reached for comment on the plans to fly him directly to the palace.

Shelton also said that Lt. Col. Claudel Josephat, the commander of the northern district who resigned in disgust after 10

Haitian soldiers were killed in a firefight with U.S. Marines in Cap-Haitien on Sept. 24, was missing. Shelton said he reportedly was organizing resistance to the U.S. presence in Haiti.

Shelton said another regional commander, Col. Evans Gideon, was also missing. Gideon was fired after his soldiers tried to attack U.S. Army Special Forces in the southern town of Les Cayes on Oct. 2.

Cedras and his family were taken to the international airport by a convoy of U.S. Humvees before dawn Thursday.

Then the man who helped overthrow Aristide on Sept. 30, 1991, accompanied by his top general, Philippe Biamby, flew to Panama.

U.S. soldiers erected a barricade of concertina wire around military headquarters to protect Haitian soldiers from crowds seeking retribution.

Iraqi troop ban gains support

By LOUIS MEIXLER
Associated Press

NEW YORK

A U.S. proposal to ban elite Iraqi combat troops from near the Kuwaiti border is gaining support among key allies, but there is still disagreement on the details.

The United States, Britain and France have agreed that Iraqi Republican Guard units must withdraw from the Kuwait border region and measures need to be taken to ensure that the soldiers do not return.

But a draft resolution includes no timetable for the pull back and does not specify what the United Nations would do if the soldiers return, a Security Council diplomat said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

The United States is pressing for a strong resolution demanding a withdrawal, but France is pushing for a non-binding presidential statement, the diplomat said.

A statement would require unanimity in the 15-member council, which could delay any statement and lead to a far weaker declaration.

"There is general agreement that something must be done to prevent a repetition of the actions we have been seeing on the southern border," U.S. Ambassador Madeline Albright said Thursday.

Computer whizzes move on

By HEATHER TOMLINSON
News Writer

Why will graduate student Jeff Squyres, junior Junlei Li, and seniors Joe George, Brian Luense, Brian McCandless, and Michael Nahas miss watching the Florida State football game on November 12? Because on that Saturday, these six computer whizzes will represent the University of Notre Dame at the East Central regional computer programming contest at the University of Waterloo in Ontario, Canada.

The five undergraduate students earned the right to represent the University by scoring the highest on a campus competition in which they were given five problems and asked to create algorithms, or numeric equations, to solve them.

Nahas was this year's first-place finisher in the contest, which was sponsored by the department of computer science and engineering. With his return to competition after a year's hiatus, the senior completed all five problems correctly in less than the three hours allotted to him.

McCandless, who is the head of the Programming Club at Notre Dame, finished second. George, Li, and Luense rounded out the top five. The sixth representative, Squyres, is the computer science and engineering graduate student who set up and administered the contest.

Aided by advisors Ray Sepeta and Andrew Lumsdaine, professors at Notre Dame, the students have been meeting once a week to discuss strategies and review problems from previous years' competitions.

According to Nahas, while the team takes the competition seriously, the tone of the meetings is "lighthearted." George believes that the team members work well together, and says "We bring out the strengths in each other."

The collaborative effort should prove to be useful on the day of competition, when the students are asked to work together in solving about eleven questions in five hours. The participants will compete in teams of three; the first consisting of George, Luense, and Squyres, and the second of Li, Nahas, and McCandless.

According to George, the teams were formed as evenly as possible, so that both teams will do well. The top two teams in the region will go on to compete in a worldwide competition with participants from Europe, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Africa, and Canada.

Nahas believes that with two years of experience competing, Notre Dame could advance to the international level of competition.

March to democracy goes on in Latin America

By CHRISTINE RASLAVSKY
News Writer

The journey to stable democracies in Latin America has been difficult and is still ongoing, Juan Mendez, the general counsel of Human Rights Watch (HRW), said in a lecture yesterday afternoon.

HRW is an organization which seeks to promote and protect the rights of people around the world, specifically concentrating their efforts in Latin America.

When the organization began, military dictatorships governed the majority of Latin America.

Since then, HRW has adjusted as Latin America entered a period of transition leading to the present systems of government that Mendez described as stable democracies.

During the period of rule by military dictatorships, HRW fought political violence. Now they try to prevent the violence caused by insurgent groups as well.

According to Mendez, their main goal is to work for democracy, "which means more than free and fair elections."

Ronald Reagan justified U.S. support of repressive Latin America regimes because these nations held elections. Mendez insisted on a larger and broader view of democracy which could not support either those regimes or Reagan's justification of U.S. actions.

Mendez focused his broader concept of democracy upon two basic areas: the independence of the judiciary and a vibrant, strong, and independent society. "An independent judiciary is the only guarantee against human rights violations, and the only assurance of justice."

HRW campaigns for either the abolition of military courts or the strict limitation of military justice to only military offenses such as desertion.

HRW works for the separation of the police and the military, the subordination of both to a civilian government, and the allowance of open investigations into both.

They also observe election campaigns to ensure that all competing parties have the freedom of expression that citizens need in order to independently decide who to vote for. Free election competitions promote the vibrant society that defines a democracy, Mendez said.

Another issue important to HRW is accountability. Mendez stated "we object to the amnesties that have the effect of impeding the investigation of crimes against humanity," and defined those crimes as crimes which are "systematic, massive, and deliberate."

Examples that he provided included genocide, homicide, unexplained disappearances of citizens, and forced relocation of large groups of people. Mendez emphasized that governments neither have the right to "sweep under the carpet" crimes against humanity nor "to take away the right to see justice done."

Although the transition to democracy and the elimination of human rights abuses are difficult processes, Mendez spoke encouragingly. "We have made an impressive gain ... the strength of the human rights movement, the variety and richness in the human rights movement in Latin America is truly impressive."

Women lobby Pope over priesthood issue

By BRIAN MURPHY
Associated Press

ROME

A group of American women led by a radical Chicago nun laid out a strategy Thursday to bring their demands for priesthood right to the Vatican.

Protests and lobbying are planned to coincide with the second half of a month long gathering of bishops and other clergymen drafting a report for Pope John Paul II on trends in Roman Catholic religious life and the roles of women.

The document will be based on hundreds of proposals, including appeals to expand women's influence in Vatican affairs.

One such suggestion is for female lay cardinals, the ecclesiastical rank that selects the pope.

But some women contend the first step in any reform must be a repudiation of the all-male priesthood.

"That's the only thing that really matters," said Sister Donna Quinn of Chicago.

"The priesthood is the fundamental part of the Church and without the ability to become priests, everything else is irrelevant."

Quinn, a Dominican nun, plans to lead protests in St. Peter's Square until the synod ends on Oct. 29.

Along with other American women, she has urged her bishop to speak up for strengthening women's roles in the Church.

A committee of U.S. bishops issued a draft document on Tuesday urging the Church to "reject sexism" and encourage women to become top theologians and Church administrators.

The bishops did not, however, challenge the prohibition on women priests firmly restated by the pontiff in May.

"This will be the downfall of the Church," said Quinn, who takes part twice a month in a women-led celebration that follows the tradition of the Mass, including offering bread or a wafer.

She said hundreds of similar rites by Roman Catholic women protesting their exclusion from the priesthood take place across the United States.

Mistrust greets new cease-fire

By DIRK BEVERIDGE
Associated Press

BELFAST

Suspicion runs deep in the shabby streets of Belfast's Lower Ormeau district, where Catholics use thick metal "drop bars" to keep marauding gunmen from breaking down their doors.

So in this and other Catholic neighborhoods, relief over the cease-fire announcement by Protestant paramilitaries Thursday was tempered with mistrust.

"I think they're just doing it as a ploy, just a cover," one woman, who refused to be identified, said. "My drop bars will be on for a couple of weeks."

A young man hanging out on a street corner, Bernard O'Hara, believed the Protestant cease-fire will last a few months at most.

"They're too bigoted," O'Hara said. "I wouldn't trust them."

Patricia Breen was one of the few voices of optimism.

"We are delighted by it," she said on her way out of a bakery. "We're leaving our doors open, no more drop bars. Parties everywhere."

Most people here will wait and see whether the peace can really be true, and lasting — that both extremes in the conflict have stopped shooting and bombing for the first time in 25 years.

Belfast is, after all, crisscrossed with tall walls, euphemistically called "peace lines," which the government erected to separate some Catholic and Protestant neighborhoods.

And it echoes with the mourning of people who have lost friends and relatives in the quarter-century of strife.

"Peace will not come overnight," said Joyce McCartan, who has seen 13 relatives slain. "It'll take years to heal the wounds on both sides, maybe 20 years to build up that trust."

In 1987, Protestant gunmen burst into her home and fatally shot her youngest child, 17-year-old Gary.

"I'll never get over my child's death. It broke my heart," she said.

She hid her daughter, Rosario, for months after the girl witnessed the gunmen storming into the hallway and later received threats.

Despite Rosario's testimony, no one was convicted in Gary's death. Three men Mrs. McCartan holds responsible were later imprisoned for other crimes.

Mrs. McCartan said the best she can hope for is peace for future generations.

She recalled that a few months before Gary was killed, he told her that his girlfriend was pregnant. "I have a beautiful, wee granddaughter — part of him — which helps to heal a bit."

EDITORIAL

How far have we fallen?

Gender issues in the Notre Dame and Saint Mary's community have always occupied the same enigmatic and ambiguous realm as "Catholic Character" and "the Notre Dame family." No one can absolutely define these words, yet we know they hold a certain value or importance for this community. Although the challenge of definition is enormous, we are not exempted from the ideals which they address. Without a doubt, Wednesday's forum regarding women's issues clarified how negatively sexuality can be regarded at Notre Dame.

Granted, the attitudes displayed by certain residents of Alumni and Carroll are not indicative of the entire male population at Notre Dame. But the nonchalance in which they are commonly accepted suggests a deeper problem. To many, these attitudes are not disturbing, let alone shocking. They are merely accepted.

In many cases, there seems to be a duality in male attitudes about women. Males are prepared to hold friendships with females in classes, but on Friday and Saturday nights, perceptions change. At bars and parties, females become sex objects or even "pieces of meat" waiting for a "walk around the lake" or a "hook-up."

To clear some things up, the definition of a woman is not "the useless piece of flesh surrounding the vagina," as the Carroll Hall notes would have us believe. A woman is an individual who respects herself and humanity. A woman is an individual who possesses the same intellectual, emotional and spiritual faculties as any man. A woman is an individual who extends her regard for her own personal integrity and dignity to every member of society, regardless of race, religion or sex.

The question boils down to this: Would you say these things about Notre Dame, Our Lady? Thinking about it, you already have. The fact that these attitudes exist in this community—a place that has always touted itself as having instilled the highest levels of morality on all its students and faculty—is beyond shocking. In a place that has no Greeks or pledge brothers, the attitudes surprisingly mimic "Animal House."

Notre Dame purports itself to be the pinnacle of morality. If this is so, whatever gave these writers the idea that their attitude was acceptable? Obviously the quality of dorm leadership and character does not uphold the supposed moral tenets of this university.

If hall residents cannot be trusted to use discretion, responsibility ultimately lies with dorm leaders. Granted, some disciplinary action was taken and the Carroll writer was reprimanded, but the fact remains that it took a front-page story in The Observer to realize the enormity of the issue.

How far have we fallen hiding behind our surface of propriety?

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Apology not necessary for humor

Dear Editor:

I am writing in response to Theresa Aleman's article entitled "Forum addresses adversity today's women face" (Oct. 14). One of Aleman's sources, Joe Evans, has grossly misrepresented the attitudes of Alumni hall men.

First of all, the "hall notes" she wrote about are not hall notes at all. They are a series of humorous newsletters written by an individual hall resident for the entertainment of hall residents and are not intended to represent the official views of the hall. They are not forced upon anyone. If a resident desires to read them, he may take one from the stack near the mailboxes of the hall. Anyone who finds the humor offensive is welcome to ignore the newsletter altogether.

Secondly, the newsletter is purposely written with a ridiculing, satirical style. The newsletter ridicules everyone it portrays, especially Alumni hall men.

I do not and cannot apologize for the statements in the Alumni Hall newsletter. If you are offended by them, please do not read the newsletter. Instead, start your own newsletter containing humor you do appreciate and find acceptable. Do not criticize me for appreciating all types of humor, be them vulgar or tasteful.

By the way, the excerpt Joe Evans quoted is almost two years old. Since that newsletters publication, the Alumni Hall rector has asked its publishers to keep offensive language to a minimum.

Carroll responds Hall 'newsletters' insult ND women

Dear Editor:

The reprehensibility of the materials published in yesterday's Observer, cannot be understated. In no way are such destructive and chauvinistic ideas condoned in Carroll.

Weeks before the October 13 article was printed, many residents including our Rector, unequivocally indicated that such notes were unacceptable. The parties involved were reprimanded and notified such intolerable statements could result in dismissal. The following week's notes were acceptable. Thus, the situation was handled appropriately by Carroll Hall. Such grotesque comments have no place in a civilized and Christian context and our actions as a hall government indicate such a stance.

Rather than contact Carroll, Joe Evans and the Editor of The Observer perpetuated the hurtful content of the notes while implying that all residents of Carroll condone such statements. This is simply wrong. We disagree with Evans' indicating the place of their origin and the editor's printing of the name. Carroll effectively dealt with the vulgar and insensitive comments of these notes and feels our right to manage its own affairs was violated. By naming Carroll, Evans stereotyped the dorm.

Carroll Hall sincerely apologizes for the offense that many women and men have taken to the notes.

Dear Editor:

I would like to address the news article written by Theresa Aleman in yesterday's Observer concerning the women's forum and the "lists" that appeared in the Alumni and Carroll hall and/or section notes.

I find it hard to believe that anyone—especially any of the so-called intelligent, enlightened students here at Notre Dame—would write such ignorant, appalling trash. To be sure, I have never seen such a revolting example of male chauvinism in my life. The absolutely sub-human quality of these well-read lists is a disgrace not only to Alumni and Carroll, but to the University of Notre Dame as well.

The responsibility for these egregious comments cannot but rest on every single individual who read them—whether student or hall staff—and let them remain in public for all to see.

To all Notre Dame men who read such garbage with delight, I say open your eyes and take a look at the beautiful women of Notre Dame. If your near-derthal attitudes persist, chances are that is all you'll ever get to do.

Crumbling morality skews definition of debate, education

Dear Editor:

In Wednesday's Inside Column, Suzy Fry accused Notre Dame/Saint Mary's Right to Life of adopting "educate yourself" as its slogan, of having "projected an attitude conducive to neither education nor debate," and of having "cowed others into silence."

As president of ND/SMC RTL, I must state that our organization has never had a slogan, and while appreciative of Fry's suggestion, we do not feel that "educate yourself" encompasses our goals and aims. The goals of RTL are primarily to provide women facing crisis pregnancies with alternatives to abortion. We try to help them financially, socially, and medically.

A secondary effect of our attempt to establish an atmosphere open to life is the education of the Notre Dame community. We are not ashamed to admit that we oppose abortion, euthanasia, and any of the various manifestations of the current culture of death which plague our society. Our group wants to provide the ND community with scientifically accurate information on abortion and other life issues which we feel are among the most critical problems facing society and each individual.

Second, I question Fry's unbiased assessment of our group's attitude towards education or debate, since I am unaware of her attendance at any of our group's meetings or functions.

Finally, as aforementioned, ND/SMC RTL does promote education. Education in turn, naturally promotes debate. We encourage full disclosure and discussion about all facts pertaining to fetal development, the risks of abortion, and abortion's medical, psychological, and social aftermath. It is the pro-choice side which fights against informed consent, and will not willingly divulge any information which may allow a woman to make up her own mind. Antagonizing education itself is "cowering others into silence" and promoting "one-sided debate."

The purpose of any debate, as any philosopher will admit, is to arrive at the truth. Fry's adoption of the prose "Do I contradict myself? Very well, then I contradict myself" is not indicative of one open to the truth. Fry claims that "the questions are harder." To individuals such as Fry it is not the questions that are more difficult. Rather it is the crumbling of moral relativism in the face of truthful answers which is harder to swallow.

Gays get nothing with self-defeat

Dear Editor:

Tuesday, October 11, was National Coming Out Day, the day homosexual and bisexual people decide that they want to be recognized for who they are. They are asked to wear a ribbon to show their support of these beliefs and rights. However, I found something disturbing as I walked to DeBartolo on Tuesday morning. On the sidewalk in front of Fitzpatrick, a phrase was written in chalk: Gay Engineering Students' Entrance. The mere concept of writing something like this "entrance" message suggests immediate segregation. If we are going to write something that implies, "If you're gay, go in this door," why don't we write, "Black people through this door, white people through that door?" The answer is that we are a more mature people now and have seen our wrongs. A message suggesting that only gay people should walk through this door and be proud of it is self-defeating. It is segregation in the very purest form. If they want equal rights or want to be recognized, why should they have their own entrance to a building?

I thought the point of Coming Out Day was to be proud of oneself and not having any hesitations about saying so. Yet, the signs all over campus were written in the middle of the night. If Notre Dame gays are so proud to be gay, why wasn't this done during the day when everyone could have seen it?

Notre Dame gays should consider thinking about what they really stand for, what they really want, and what the best, most mature way of going about that is. Until this is done, they are only hurting themselves.

Hickey fails SURV, SMC

Dear Editor:

When the SURV expansion committee gave Saint Mary's women the opportunity to fill out questionnaires on its quality last year, over ninety percent answered that they would utilize SURV if it were expanded and improved. They were the fuel for our service.

Saint Mary's mission does indeed state, "Saint Mary's promotes a life of...social responsibility." In black and white it vows to "remain faithful to this mission by continually assessing the complex needs and challenges of the contemporary world."

I am one of the ninety percent plus who challenge Saint Mary's to follow through with its mission. I went through the "proper" channels to have our needs heard. Our proposal was excellent yet our committee was ignored. Why?

At the inexorable risk of being disrespectful, I will state that Dr. William Hickey, President of Saint Mary's, lied to us. He committed to a service center with a full time staff in the basement of Holy Cross Hall. He suggested the renovation be completed by the beginning of the fall semester. I imagine he assumed since many vociferous members of the expansion committee were graduating in May, he could commit and fail to follow through.

Within the next 150 years, Saint Mary's will truly live out its mission of social responsibility and Catholicism. It seems to me that an investment in a service center for the future of the college makes sense.

The expansion ball has lost some velocity but it is still rolling. Saint Mary's is your school and I pass the reigns on to you to expand SURV. Don't give credence to the monetary argument.

Surely the alumnae would contribute to a cause so worthwhile.

I wish you luck in your endeavors.

CAPITOL COMMENTS

Side Show Bob won't take Reps over the top

Last Sunday Bart and Lisa Simpson were thrust into participating in Springfield's political process. Side Show Bob was running as a Republican for mayor after being released from prison by the incumbent mayor. The Republican Party was portrayed as big business, partisan, and ruthless. At one point, a black limo snatches Bart and speeds away. Side Show Bob and his henchmen threaten Bart by saying, "No kid has ever gone against the Republican Party and lived to tell about it." Party members, headquartered in a haunted castle, included Mr. Burns, other powerfully established people, and a vampire.

Side Show Bob's television ad against the incumbent mayor was a copy of the 1988 Bush ad showing the revolving door on prisons. While prisoners went in and out of the prison, the announcer told of the incumbent mayor's weaknesses saying, "He's even releasing Side Show Bob." Then the voice says, "Vote for Side Show Bob for mayor."

Side Show Bob won with 99% of the vote, much to the chagrin of Bart and Lisa.

However, after doing research at the library where the files listed everyone who voted, as well as for whom they voted, Lisa discovered that the election was a fraud. Everyone in the cemetery voted for Side Show Bob. Then she discovered that everyone in the pet cemetery voted for Side Show Bob. Then she discovered that everyone in the pet cemetery including her former cat, Snowball, also voted for Side Show Bob. She said, "Now this is personal," and exposed Side Show Bob who was returned to jail.

To me, this is probably the best Simpsons episode aired to date. It touched on every political hypocrisy of both parties, but capsulized exactly how the minority party (Republicans) conduct their legislative obstruction and fear-induced negative campaigning. For example, Mr. Burns' loyal Republican assistant was the "Deep Throat" who leads Lisa to the files because he has been portrayed as being a closeted Gay in past episodes. He told Lisa, "I do it because of my alternative life-style."

Sometimes comedy can succinctly define reality. Instantaneously a comedian can strip a politician of his phony integrity. Leon or Letterman, with one punch line, will KO a public figure's greatest public relations efforts. For example, Leno recently shot a hole through the hypocrisy and blatant partisanship of Rep. Newt Gingrich. One afternoon Gingrich appeared on all three major television networks chastising the Clinton Administration for having several unethical appointees. That evening Gingrich attended a fund-raiser for a convicted Republican senate nominee from Virginia, Oliver North.

With the election cycle closing on November 8th, two opposing strategies have emerged from the Democratic and Republican Congressional Campaign Committees. The Republican know that every incumbent president loses seats in the off-term election cycle. They hope to capture the House of Representatives for the first time in forty years by tying Democratic candidates to Bill Clinton. They have as much chance of succeeding as Northwestern or Michigan State have of winning the Big Ten Conference this fall.

Democrats will run again this year on local issues. They will ask what does the area need for jobs, industry, successful farming, etc. They will address those issues while reminding everyone that it was the Democrats who reduced the deficit for the first time since Harry Truman. They will point to the new crime legislation, and blame Republicans for obstructing Health Care, Lobbying Reform, and Campaign Reform legislation during the last month of this Congressional session. They will also expect the improved economy to help them since the Clinton budget and policies are currently in place.

Republicans, on the other hand, are so frustrated as the minority that they have evolved from the compromising Bob Michel or Gerry Ford to the Newt Gingrich and Dick Armey obstructionists. To them, everyone who opposes their policies is wrong, and they will not compromise. More importantly, they would rather destroy the institution of the House than work with the majority. Consequently, they try to act like a majority and complain when they are limited on the number of amendments they can offer on any individual bill.

So desperate are the Republicans that they tried to nationalize their themes with a "Contract With America" a few weeks ago. They pledge to do certain things in their first one hundred days as the majority of the American public can kick them out. This gimmick is already backfiring on them because it ties all of their candidates to specific issues, like abortion, that may be acceptable in Indiana but not in New York. It further gives Democrats the right ammunition to zero in on defining their Republican opponents.

Republicans think they can take 25 to 50 seats, according to Gingrich. (They need 40 to take control of the House.) What looked like a major loss for Democrats earlier this election year has now been minimized. Democrats expect 20 to 35 losses with the retention of the House. They are closer to the voter's interests. When campaigning they will ask if voters want to return to the Reagan years, banking on the voters' deficit concerns that have already mortgaged the next two generations.

A low voter turnout will favor Republicans, unlike the massive support for Side Show Bob. Of course, if you choose not to vote this year, you won't even count as much as Snowball.

Gary J. Caruso, Notre Dame '73, has worked in Washington D.C. at the U.S. House of Representatives for two Congressmen and two House Committees. He is currently working in a Congressional Campaign during this election cycle. His column appears every other Friday.

Magnificat highlights 'Tribute to women in music'

By MOYA SOMERSET
Accent Writer

The world premiere performance of composer Libby Larsen's Magnificat Canticle of Mary by the Saint Mary's College Women's Choir, South Bend Chamber Singers and Symphony Chamber Orchestra, led by conductor Nancy Menk, is tonight at 8 p.m. in O'Laughlin Auditorium.

Heralded as the leading female composer of the twentieth century, Larsen's The Magnificat is the highlight of a weekend of performances entitled "A Tribute to Women in Music." All of the music performed at the concert has been written by female composers. Other pieces include "Pinions" and "The Settling Years" by Libby Larsen, "Duo Ye" by Chen Yi and Concerto for Piano and Orchestra by Clara Schumann.

Larsen, renowned for her opera, Frankenstein, The Modern Prometheus, has more than sixty commissioned works and six operas to her credit. This "most active and sought-after" conductor in America has spent this week as an artist-in-residence at Saint Mary's.

In one of her lectures, Larsen explained her dilemma in composing The Magnificat, which centers around the Visitation and how Mary received the news. Larsen's struggle centered around the word "acclaim."

Larsen realized she was looking for the private ownership a woman feels when she has a baby which raised the question of Mary "owning" the Visitation.

"I want the music to reflect this noisy kind of joy in the music. The audience should get a feeling of acclaiming, exclaiming and shouting the joyful news," she said. The Canticle of Mary was commissioned for the Sesquicentennial Celebration.

"Commissioning a work is a wonderful way to commemorate this anniversary" stated Menk, "The college commissioned a Mass for the 125th anniversary and the celebration continues on through the music."

"In addition to being one of America's most respected composers, Libby Larsen is also a strong advocate for contemporary music. We are honored to have her with us for the week and we thank her for the insights she has brought both students and faculty," Menk added.

The attitude is mirrored in Larsen's passion for her music. "I write a piece to help Saint Mary's College or an organization celebrate the community, the coming together and staying together for a time span. Or if I have a passion for an idea I work with a performer or organization to bring it into a performance venue."

This motivation was transferred to the students who met Larsen. "I was inspired by her life story, you don't have to have a classical background you can incorporate your background into your music," said Michelle Hessel.

When questioned by students concerning sexism in music and composing Larsen replied, "The first thing a man perceives is a woman and not a mind. I do not believe that this is intentional, much of this is through social conditioning."

Larsen agreed that women face different challenges than their male counterparts, "Finding interrupted blocks of time is the hardest. First thing I am a mother, and it is important to learn to work symbiotically for all of your life."

She advised students to begin developing independent relationships immediately. "Self-motivation and self-confidence are the two greatest assets of an independent artist," Larsen continued.

A "Meet the Composer" preview at 7 p.m. will give the evening's audience an opportunity to hear Larsen and the other conductors speak on the program.

Tickets are available through the South Bend Symphony and the O'Laughlin Box Offices.

Student Alumni Relations Group: Helping students make connections

By PATTI CARSON
Accent Writer

Imagine a group of people who are willing and anxious to assist you in pursuing a career. Imagine a group whose members have already experienced the "real world" that lies beyond college, with its professional trials and tribulations that you, too, may encounter upon graduating. What you are imagining is the Notre Dame Alumni Association. And you can easily become involved with alumni through the Notre Dame Student Alumni Relations Group (SARG).

SARG is a group that fosters relations with alumni and works to get students involved in alumni relations, according to Gina Agresta, co-chair for the SARG community service committee.

Open to all Notre Dame students, SARG is a relatively new organization on campus. "Membership has increased significantly over the past five years," said Agresta.

According to Agresta, one of the largest benefits of membership in SARG is access to the extern program. The extern program enables students to spend a week with an alumni in the profession of their choice. Any students may apply and SARG will provide sponsors for those students to shadow.

Agresta said that students may normally spend the week of either fall or spring break with an alumni, but this year spring break is the only option. Students must make their own travel and housing arrangements, however, alumni may sometimes provide housing.

"The extern program is a great opportunity to explore your career options," Agresta said.

SARG also participates in Alumni Awareness Week, which usually takes place in January. This specific week is designed to get students involved in alumni relations, according to Agresta.

One feature of Alumni Awareness Week is "Say Hello Day." On this day, people wander the campus and say hello to students. If those students return their greeting, they are given an alumni card.

"This card may entitle the student to a five dollar discount on a pizza or some other special prize. Students may turn these cards in at the Alumni Association Office to claim their prizes," Agresta said. The card also contains an alumni fact, she added.

Agresta said that the scavenger hunt is another part of Alumni Awareness Week on campus. One clue per day is printed in The Observer, leading one lucky student to a prize, according to Agresta.

SARG also presents the Senior Spirit Award at the end of each year. "This award is presented to one senior in each dorm who is elected by his or her peers," she said. "The award is presented to students who exemplify the Notre Dame spirit in the areas of academics, leadership, and service." The names of the recipients are inscribed on a plaque in each dorm.

SARG also presents distinguished graduate and undergraduate awards to students who are nominated by peers or professors.

SARG is comprised of many students and two alumni advisors. Advisors Frances Shavers ('90) and D'Juan Francisco ('89) are assistant directors for alumni clubs. SARG is also employed by the talent of four officers and the chairs of all SARG committees, who together make up the executive board of the club.

Other committees monitor the extern program, activities, fundraising, publicity, and community service. The convention committee and the distinguished alumni lecture series/awards committee are also components of SARG.

The executive board of SARG meets with the National Alumni Board, which is made up of twenty-two alumni members, on three occasions per year. These twenty-two board members represent alumni from over 200 national and international Notre Dame Alumni Clubs, according to Agresta.

SARG also works in association with the Student Alumni Association-Student Foundation (SAA-SF). This is a national network of schools which convenes at one designated university two times per year. Of the two meeting occasions, one conference is national and the other is regional.

SARG representatives attend these meetings to get ideas from other alumni clubs and to improve current relations, according to Agresta. In April, Notre Dame will be hosting the District Five Conference, which will include seminars, speaker presentations, and a banquet.

SARG works in accordance with the Alumni Association to sell "The Shirt" at hospitality booths during home football weekends. SARG also hosts legacy receptions for students whose parents attended Notre Dame.

"I definitely encourage students to get involved with SARG," said Agresta. "This organization provides an opportunity to meet exceptional alumni who support Notre Dame students in all their ventures. After all, they were once in our shoes. Students should take advantage of all they have to share," she continued.

Anyone interested in becoming a member of SARG may contact the Alumni Association or SARG president Greg Nordoff.

Cougars offer Irish a chance to regroup

PLAYER TO WATCH. . . TRAVIS HALL

Last spring, Brigham Young coach LaVell Edwards described his defensive line as "quicker and better pass rushers." This year, he has to be thankful that his early assessment was such a good one.

Hall

This statement would not be true, however, unless defensive end Travis Hall did not become a major force for the Cougars and a major threat to opposing quarterbacks this season.

In the Western Athletic Conference, one known for twice as much passing as rushing, the teams that win need to have someone that can keep the quarterback on the run.

Hall has answered the call.

One of the captains for this year's Cougar team, the senior has led by example, recording 108 tackles on the season, second on the team.

But more importantly, he has recorded 4.5 sacks and has caused the opposing quarterback to hurry his throws 13 times.

He has also intercepted a pass and knocked down five others.

The 6-6, 245-pound lineman has become the thorn in many offensive tackles' sides, and should continue to do so.

With Notre Dame's offensive line decimated by injury, the players have not been able to achieve a level of consistency typical of usual Irish lines.

And if the left tackle, be it Mike Doughty or Mike McGlinn, does not get his act together, Hall can consistently be in the backfield Saturday.

Last week, McGlinn started for the injured Doughty, and had a hard time getting his pads or hands on Boston College defensive end Mike Mamula, who recorded two sacks last week.

Hall's presence is even felt on special teams. With his long reach, Hall has a propensity to block punts, which he has already done this year, and block field goals, which he has done in the past.

Special teams is an area where the Irish are beaten every week.

No matter where Hall plays, he presents a challenge to the weakest links of Notre Dame's lineup.

—MIKE NORBUT

Lou Holtz always has something critical to say about his offense.

As a perfectionist, the Irish football coach is never satisfied with the production his offense may have, regardless of whether the team gains 450 yards in one half or less than 100 in a game.

Many times, Holtz looks like he's blowing smoke. But this time, he may be gravely serious.

"Offensively, we've had some trouble running the football," he said.

Notre Dame's rushing attack looked impressive against Purdue and Stanford, but stumbled to only 160 yards on 35 total carries last week against Boston College.

Since seniors Lee Becton and Ray Zellars have been out with injuries, sophomore Randy Kinder has picked up the slack for the Irish, amassing four consecutive 100-yard rushing games.

But he is the only consistent aspect of the whole offense.

Ron Powlus has shown flashes of both brilliance and failure as the Irish quarterback this year. Last week, he threw for only 50 yards and had two of his passes intercepted. This was the same guy who made Stanford quarterback and Heisman Trophy candidate Steve Stenstrom look second best.

Powlus can't take the fall for the whole team, though. The offensive line has been suspect, and some of the reserve running backs have had a problem holding on to the football.

"Obviously we feel we have to change something," Holtz said.

But maybe the Irish do not need to make any changes. Maybe Brigham Young's defense will give the offense the opportunity to grow as a unit.

"This is the same BYU team you'll see year in and year out," Holtz said.

That means the Cougars will come in Saturday with a strong offense and, well, a not-so-strong defense. Downright poor, you might say.

Basically, BYU has a 5-1 record this year because its offense puts almost 40 points on the board a game and hopes the other team can only score 39.

Brigham Young returns only five starters from last year's defense that gave up 45 Notre Dame points, including 31 in the first half.

The Cougar secondary is led by cornerback Patrick Mitchell, who is BYU's equivalent to Notre Dame's Bobby Taylor. The difference here is that though Mitchell has had to deal with heavy passing attacks from Western Athletic Conference opponents, he has not had much experience covering receivers with the overall talent of Derrick Mayes.

"People are amazed at the plays Derrick makes, but I'd have to say we're used to it," Irish quarterback Ron Powlus said. "We see it every day in practice."

Though the rest of BYU's defensive backs are inexperienced, Mayes, Mike Miller, and Charlie Stafford will need to run better routes than they did against Boston College. And most importantly, they will need to make the routine catches that they dropped last week.

Of course, all the catches will be routine if Powlus can hit them in stride. But he can only make a good throw when he is not hurried.

The responsibility of protection rests on the shoulders of an already banged up offensive line. Their job will be much easier this week in blocking the Cougars' defensive line.

Brigham Young's strength lies in their two senior defensive ends, Randy Brock and Travis Hall. But the interior linemen, Mike Ulufale and John Raass, are simply rugs that opposing running backs wipe their feet on while scampering into the secondary.

And when Kinder or Marc Edwards get through the line, they may as well be in the secondary. With the exception of middle linebacker Shay Muirbrook, who leads the team in tackles, the Cougar linebacking corps is inexperienced and easily beatable.

"For us to win, we have to play as close to our potential as we can," Holtz said.

If the Irish offense does that, BYU's defense could be in for a long day. But that won't stop Holtz from complaining.

Cornerback Patrick Mitchell is the leader of a not-so-impressive Brigham Young defense.

RATING THE IRISH

Quarterback 4

Ron Powlus has shown his youth and inexperience in the past few games, but he always seems to play better at home.

Running Back 4

Lee Becton and Ray Zellars are still out this week. That means Marc Edwards and Randy Kinder will see most of the time, since the others have a tendency to fumble.

Wide Receiver 4

All of a sudden, they are not getting open or making the catches that they once made with grace earlier this year.

Offensive Line 2

Pass protection is awful, and the only yardage the running backs get is when they are running for their life.

Defensive Line 3

Mark Hartsell could have had a cup of coffee while he searched for a receiver last week, he had so much time.

Linebackers 4

Even Notre Dame's best unit looked poor last week. The pressure rests on the shoulders of Justin Goheen and Jeremy Sample to keep this defense ready to play.

Secondary 3

This unit is always considered the weak link of an already limp Irish defense. If John Walsh has time to throw, Taylor and company may look even more foolish than usual.

Special Teams 2

Just when the Irish special teams start to look good, they go out and get embarrassed by BC. And how can their kicker boot the ball through the uprights on a kickoff, while our kickers can barely hit one from 35 yards.

Coaching 5

If anyone can pick up the pieces after last week's debacle, Lou Holtz can. But he will have his work cut out for him.

—MIKE NORBUT

Last week, Notre Dame was supposed to play inspired, but got killed by BC. Who knows what will happen against Brigham Young?

COUGARS ON THE OFFENSIVE. . .

Irish hope to halt BYU's aerial assault

By TIM SHERMAN
Assistant Sports Editor

They are the poster boys for the wild and wacky WAC.

They are annually among the nation's leader in more than a few offensive categories.

They have quarterbacks who throw for more touchdowns than they have wives.

They are the Cougars of Brigham Young.

"As far as BYU is concerned, this is the same team you see year in and year out," Irish coach Lou Holtz said. "They are very productive."

In fact, they have produced an average of 472 yards, which is good enough for seventh in the nation. Almost 300 of those have come in the air, mostly courtesy of John Walsh.

"He has very good arm strength," said Holtz. "He really throws the ball very, very well."

That means the Irish are going to have to defend very, very well.

So far, through six games, that has not been a sure bet.

At times, namely the second half at Michigan

St and the first three quarters against Purdue and Stanford, the defense has been dominant. On other occasions, particularly the third quarter at Boston College, it has been downright generous.

Which one will take the field tomorrow.

Whatever one it is, the defense must stop the run. Yes, the run.

Although BYU is known for its' prolific passing attack, the success of the Irish defense has rested upon their ability to stop the run.

All it takes is a quick look at the statistics to see that Stanford threw for 360 yards, while B.C. struck for just 106. But that didn't tell the story.

The Eagles rushed for four times as much yardage as did the Cardinal (244 to 61) and scored all four of their touchdowns by foot.

So, if it is going to come down to the run, who has the edge?

On paper, the Cougars look to be strong, especially up front where it matters.

"Their offensive line is very veteran," Holtz noted. "I think they average a little over 24 years in age, and have four seniors."

One of those seniors is Evan Pilgrim, the right guard.

"He has gotten off to a great start," Cougar coach LaVell Edwards said. "He has been particularly good at run-blocking."

Probably most appreciative of his talents is tailback Jamal Willis, The stat book shows why.

Willis, a four-year starter, owns the BYU career record for touchdowns with 34 and ranks fourth on the career rushing yards list.

This season, Willis has raced past admiring WAC defenders with relative ease.

After six contests, Willis has covered over six hundred yards on the ground, with nine touchdowns.

And like any Cougar, Willis knows how to catch the ball. As a matter of fact he has done so 18 times thus far.

"They always have good wide receivers," Holtz simply stated. "Tim Nowatzke and Bryce Doman are fine receivers."

As always, Bobby Taylor will take one of the two out of Edwards' game plan, but it is the second receiver or tight end who is problematic.

Chad Lewis (16 catches), though not in the class of a Pete Mitchell, is good enough to cause some problems for Bob Davies' crew.

Many observers have been waiting for the arrival of the famous "Wrecking Crew" that Davies led at Texas A-M. If there is a time for such a unit to emerge, playing against a air-oriented team is it. Despite their rushing success, BYU is still very much fond of the air.

This will give guys like Bert Berry, Melvin Dansby, and Renaldo Wynn a chance to pin back their ears and go after Walsh.

Berry lead the team with five sacks and should figure to add to that total against a team that goes to the air nearly 40 times per game.

PLAYER TO WATCH. . . JOHN WALSH

He may not get the attention of quarterbacks like Ron Powlus and Eric Zeier, but to late night ESPN viewers (you know who you are), and to the Notre Dame defense, Brigham Young quarterback John Walsh is plenty well-known. Deservedly so.

Though it is not as glamorous a position as it is at Notre Dame and Miami, BYU has built a strong tradition of great signal-callers. From Jim McMahon (yes, amazingly the headbanded one spent four years in Utah) to the milk-drinking Ty Detmer, who just happened to win the Heisman Trophy, Cougar quarterbacks are annually among the nation's most productive.

Walsh, a junior, has done nothing to spoil that reputation. In fact, he may turn out to be, if he isn't already, better than any of his predecessors.

"Walsh is an outstanding quarterback," Irish coach Lou Holtz said. "I know the pros think that he is one of the best ranked quarterbacks. He has very, very good arm strength."

Walsh

So far, his arm has been strong enough to throw for over 1808 yards in his six outings. Even Math 104 graduates can figure that out to be more than 300 yards per contest.

His efforts have not been in vain, either, as he has tossed 14 touchdowns. More importantly, his arm has been the main factor in his team winning five of its first six games.

BYU quarterbacks always put up good numbers in the yardage and touchdown passes categories, but not necessarily the win column. Walsh is on a mission, (no pun intended) to change that.

Last season, the Cougars had fairly high expectations entering their mid-season showdown with the Irish. Those dreams were essentially dashed early in the first quarter, as Walsh's leg was broken by a swarming Irish defense.

This season, Walsh is out to break something of Notre Dame's, Holtz' vow of a stingy defense.

■ RATING THE COUGARS

28

Don't look past
Brigham Young.
They might ride on the coattails of BC's victory right to one of their own. What a coup that would be.

Quarterback 5

John Walsh walks into South Bend averaging over 300 yards passing, including 14 touchdowns.

Running Back 4

This is the third year in a row Jamal Willis will play against the Irish. He averages over 100 yards per game. Hema Heimuli has done a superb job at fullback.

Wide Receiver 3

With deceptive speed and great hands, this is the unit for the Cougars that can spell doom for Notre Dame.

Offensive Line 4

BYU will start four seniors on the offensive line. They have the potential to look All-World against a pathetic Irish defensive line.

Defensive Line 3

Run defense leaves something to be desired, but Travis Hall is a terrific pass rusher. Look out, Ron Powlus.

Linebackers 2

Shay Muirbrook leads an otherwise inexperienced Cougar linebacking core.

Secondary 2

BYU's defensive backs give up almost 300 yards throwing per game. This is a chance for Powlus and his receivers to get back on track.

Special Teams 2

Cougar kicker David Lauder loses his range at about 40 yards, which is about as far as Alan Boardman can punt the ball.

Coaching 3

Lavell Edwards has 202 career victories, five more than Lou Holtz. But a team that goes 8-4 or 7-5 is considered average in the WAC. Edwards also has a hard time getting a win over an independent team like Notre Dame on the road.

Zataveski

But Zataveski suddenly sprawled into view, stretched to the fingertips, 300 pounds parallel to the turf.

A split second before the ball crossed the plane of the goal line, he nudged it back into play and a teammate fell on it. Boston College ball at the one-yard line.

"Not bad for a 300-pound offensive lineman," Zataveski said. "I got some air."

That play, more than any other in his four years at Notre Dame, defined Mark Zataveski.

Most of what he does is obscured by his position. Centers are seldom the center of attention.

But for those few moments, it was as though he was alone on the AstroTurf, with no glamour guys to steal the spotlight. Just Zataveski and the unreachable football that he, of all people, managed to reach.

That's why he's on the field for every Notre Dame offensive play. That's why he's the long snapper on special teams.

Not because he's quick. Not because he has has remarkable talent.

It's because he will throw every ounce of himself onto the turf to reach the unreachable.

"Is he as good as (former Irish centers) Tim Grunhard, Mike Heldt, Gene McGuire, Tim Ruddy?" Notre Dame coach Lou Holtz asked. "Not physically. But he embodies everything you could ever ask for in a football player. You just can't say anything bad about Mark Zataveski."

Walter Zataveski has worked in the same eastern Pennsylvania plant for 30 years. In younger days, he and his wife Maryanne had to scrounge for quarters just to put gas in the car.

They labored to provide a better life for themselves and for their children. They labor still to maintain the life that they built.

And their son Mark labors every day, on and off the field, acting on the inspiration of his parents. Inspiration that has become instinct.

"My parents taught me the value of working for things," Zataveski said. "They've worked for everything they've gotten. They're all-out type of people and that sets something off in you. They really instilled that attitude in me."

It's an attitude that will make it possible for him to graduate this May with a double degree in American Studies and History, and still manage to be the one constant in an ever-changing offensive line.

He has those days, just like anyone else, days when he'd rather sleep than study, or watch a little TV instead of doing base blocks.

But he just remembers what Mom and Dad have done, and a few extra sprints don't seem so bad.

That's why he's always the first and last on the practice field. That's why he always plays on Saturdays.

"I'll tell Coach Holtz or anyone, I'm the hardest-working player he has," Zataveski said. "I may not be as gifted athletically, but there's nobody who will work harder than I do."

Little Johnny threw his pencil in school one day. Zataveski, Mr. Zataveski to his 7th grade social studies class, devised a punishment.

He made Little Johnny drop his pencil on the floor over and over again, and say 'I will not throw my pencil in school,' each time he bent over to pick it up.

That's a technique not unlike those used by offensive line coach Joe Moore, old-time punishments that Zataveski has become intimately familiar with.

He began subbing at a Catholic grade school near his hometown of Roslyn, Pa. last May after classes ended at Notre Dame.

When the teacher he filled in for had to miss the rest of year for personal reasons, it became Zataveski's class.

And he brought a bit of the football field to the classroom.

"(Coach Moore) has definitely rubbed off on me," Zataveski said. "I use some of the things he does, but maybe not to the same extent."

Teaching offers perspective.

It will one day be his profession, a fact he's more sure about than ever, now that he's had a class of his own.

It's with that future in mind that he approaches every day. Football sometimes consumes his every thought, but eventually reality creeps back into his cranium.

The Observer/John Bingham

Center Mark Zataveski has been a constant on an ever-changing offensive line.

Football is important, but it's not life and death. Whatever rewards the game has given him, Zataveski seems most concerned about passing on his experience in the classroom.

"There's one analogy from a coach back home that I couldn't agree with more," Zataveski said. "Hold a dime up to the sun. The dime is football. The sun is life. In the back of my head, I always know that football is just a stepping-stone to the future."

Still, anxiety about football always gnaws at his gut. Zataveski spends his Sundays reviewing in his mind all the good plays and all the bad plays, especially the bad plays, he made in Saturday's game.

Monday he's practicing again, the next week's game on his mind.

The bigger the game, the more intense, the more anxious he becomes.

"They say you should leave your work at the office, but I have a hard time doing that," Zataveski said. "Sometimes it weighs pretty heavy on you, but I guess it's just part of the all-out attitude that I have."

When you give so much of yourself to the game, when you're fueled with such a passion to succeed, emotions become magnified.

Zataveski probably doesn't know what 'ambivalent' means.

But he knows all about attitude. That's what keeps him going during troubled times.

"There are days when I come home from practice, and I hate football," Zataveski admitted. "But the good days outweigh the bad, and there are many more good ones to come."

Bouncing Back

After a dismal start, Lee Becton hopes to move forward

Lee Becton was in the last place he should have been during the fourth quarter of Notre Dame's 30-11 loss to Boston College last Saturday.

By
George Dohrmann

The senior running back, one of four team captains, was at a friend's house watching the game on television. He sat on couch and watched as the Notre Dame offense sputtered and the seniors' dreams of a national title sank into Boston Harbor.

"I felt really bad," Becton said, "Being back in South Bend and not being able to do my share. It hurt."

It has been a season of hurt for Becton who, because of a groin injury, is questionable for tomorrow's contest with BYU at Notre Dame Stadium.

It began with a poor start in the season opener against Northwestern and climaxed with Becton watching the Irish lose their second game of the season to the Eagles.

"It's been hard," Becton said. "Certainly not what I expected."

What most expected was a Heisman season from the six-foot, 190 pound tailback. But the campaign stalled out of the gate when Becton gained only 16 yards on ten carries against Northwestern.

It was an auspicious beginning, one Becton may have caused himself.

"I tried to do too much. All the talk about the Heisman and hype wasn't really a distraction, but you know, it got me away from my style of play."

"There were times when I think I made bad decisions."

Becton vowed to improve the following week against Michigan, and in one sense he did. He was Notre Dame's leading rusher with 76 yards on 13 carries, but his performance was overshadowed by two fumbles which twice halted Irish drives and resulted in points for the Wolverines.

A lasting image of the game was Becton on the sideline, helmet in hand after coach Lou Holtz pulled him from the game for a few series.

After the game, a despondent Becton had little to say.

"I wasn't holding the ball any differently. I don't know what happened."

What had happened was uncanny. Not in 164 carries last year did he ever let the ball hit the turf. It was strange for Irish fans and strange for Becton, who blamed the loss on himself.

"Lee feels pretty down right now," senior linebacker Jeremy Nau said after the 26-24 loss. "He feels like he cost us the game. But Lee has won a lot of games for us in the past and he will win some games for us in the future."

He's yet to get the chance.

The next week against Michigan State, Becton suffered the groin injury which forced him to miss the last three games.

His absence showed the most against the Eagles. It was not Becton's running ability the Irish needed but his receiving skills out of the backfield. Quarterback Ron Powlus managed only 51 yards on 5-of-21 passing. Notre Dame's quarterback seemed an option short all game, and his usual safety valve sat restless on a couch back at Notre Dame.

Those are facts Becton put behind him as he began practicing again this week. The injury still causes him some discomfort, enough that Holtz was unsure after Wednesday's practice if he would be available Saturday.

"It feels pretty good," Becton said. "I'm just want to play."

The phone rings at the Becton home in Ernul, North Carolina. Lee's mother answers the phone and is hardly surprised by the voice on the line.

"I talked to my mom a lot during the past couple weeks," Becton said. "I talk to my mom and my friends and teammates. Everyone has been really supportive and pushing me to get healthy."

Getting back on the field may be the only way Becton can begin to reach the standards he set for himself at the beginning of the season. That may be the only way he can get rid of the images of the fumbles against Michigan and the fuzzy TV pictures he thinks about when his teammates talk about Boston College.

"There's no way I can forget the past," Becton said. "I just want to take each game separately and get back into the game mentally."

But the motivation has changed for all the seniors as national title hopes faded with the Boston College loss. For Becton there are personal aspirations - a job in the NFL, a few 100-yard games - but at this point they are distant.

"I'm not focusing on me," Becton said. "You think about things like winning a bowl game and finishing 10-2. I'm just focusing on helping the team win the rest of our games."

In Becton's place, sophomore Randy Kinder has shined, totaling over 100-yards against Michigan State, Purdue, Stanford and Boston College. There is an urgency for Becton to get back, to show that he can still carry the load as he did in 1993.

"I know Lee feels good when he's standing there and doesn't have that pain. But the way Lee runs and the body control, etceteras, he is just not - he doesn't even look half speed to me at the present time," Lou Holtz said. "He says he feels much better, but it is still not real solid."

But Becton is ready to go even if he is not at 100-percent.

"I don't think I have anything to prove to myself, but I want to show my teammates that I can be counted on," he said. "I just want to go out and get a victory."

ABOVE: Lee Becton's season took a hit when he suffered a groin injury against Michigan State.

"This season has been difficult, certainly not what I expected."
- Lee Becton

BELOW: Becton went from dodging tackles against Boston College last season to watching this year's loss to the Eagles from a couch South Bend.

JOCK STRIP

The 12-step road to recovery starts with an Irish wake

If Florida loses to Auburn and Florida State, Nebraska to Kansas and Colorado, Penn State to...

Enough is enough. It's time to get past the denial stage. The next step on the twelve-game (I mean, step) road to recovery is acceptance that we have a problem.

Notre Dame's annual national championship hopes for 1994 put one foot in the grave on September 10 against Michigan. Last Saturday, the Irish jumped head first into the casket and pulled the top down. The Eagles were giddy with the chance to put the proverbial nails in the coffin.

So now, with the hopes of a twelfth national title dead and buried, what are we, as Irish fans, to do.

I say we give the #1 aspirations a wake. No, not a mournful event filled with tears and laments, but one of a celebratory event. An Irish wake.

You see, at a true Irish wake, there is not a lot of crying. There is, however, a lot of celebrating. Celebration of both the chance for everyone to come together and of what the person that is being waked had accomplished in his/her life.

Here at Notre Dame, we have a lot to celebrate.

Our football games are not merely 60 minutes of two teams of eleven slugging it out on the hallowed turf of the House that Rockne built. Rather, our games are an event.

A celebration in it of themselves of the Notre Dame spirit. As hard as it may be, we can't let disappointment, no matter how great, tarnish this.

Many of us (myself included) profess to be part of the nation's best student body in terms of loyally supporting and cheering our team onward to victory. That's easy when it is No. 1 vs No.2, Florida St. vs. Notre Dame. It may be different when it is No. 17 vs. others receiving votes, the Irish vs. the Cougars. But if we are such "big fans", then this is the time to show it.

Tim Sherman
Assistant Sports Editor

The other thing the Irish celebrate at their wakes is what the person did during their life.

This program has done an awful lot of great things. Unbelievable things. You know the litany - more national championships (11), Heisman Trophy winners (7), and All-Americans (too many for me to take the time to count) than any other school.

The point being is that the tradition of excellence (not necessarily perfection) will always be here. Even in our darkest days we have more to be thankful for than most schools. For God's sake, even Gerry Faust did some good. He recruited Tim Brown.

So even with our title hopes dashed and the odds of a Heisman long (sorry all you premature 2 or 3 trophy predictors, that means you Beano, see Michigan St. and B.C.), we still have two legitimate All-American candidates in Bobby Taylor and Derrick Mayes. They need, and deserve, our undying support.

Sure, the participant at an Irish wake does have plenty of hurt inside, just like we do now. But they realize they can't do anything about it. What's passed is past.

Maybe we should just understand that this season is our year in purgatory. Maybe this is our time of penance for our insistent type-A attitude of "win, win, win, No. 1, No. 1, No. 1). If this is the case, we should just sit back and make the best of it (read, win or lose, we love the booze, if you like).

But if this is our year in purgatory, then our time in heaven will come. 1995 sounds good.

Riehle nurtures 'Spirit of the Irish'

By CHRISTY FREDERICK
Accent Writer

The room falls silent. About eighty of the biggest men on campus get down on one knee as one man moves to the center of the locker room. The players tremble with anticipation for the game, but the words they are waiting to hear don't come from head coach Lou Holtz. Instead they come from another tradition of the Fighting Irish, Reverend James L. Riehle, chaplain for the department of athletics.

Not standing tall- he's only about the size of Holtz- but standing proud, Riehle says the first part of the Hail Mary and the players respond with the second part. The team is now ready for the day's game.

Riehle came to Notre Dame as a student in 1946, but events at home pulled him from school back to Pittsburgh, where his family was living at the time.

He returned again in 1956 and decided to join the priesthood. "I was 32 years old at the time," Riehle recalls.

From that time on, Riehle held numerous positions at the University including director of Sorin, dean of students, and rector of Pangborn. "I was rector of Pangborn for 12 years, but I lived there for 18 years," said Riehle. "I only left when they made it a women's dorm."

Riehle has held the title of chaplain of the Athletic Department since 1977 and he's been executive director of the National Monogram Club since 1978.

Considering himself semi-retired, Riehle's job is to coordinate the chaplains for all other sports. But he still handles the football team exclusively, both home and away games. "For over the past ten years I've been doing it all myself," he says. "You get a certain amount of familiarity. The players get to know you, and they're comfortable with it."

For Riehle, football Saturdays begin with a team mass at 11 o'clock in Alumni Hall for all the players. Knowing that the game is heavy on their minds, Riehle's masses do not last long. "It's as short as I can make it. I used to be known as the Pangborn Express when I was over there," he says with a smile.

This mass is only part of the day's rituals for Riehle and the team. "I have a Relic of the True Cross and as the players go out of the chapel, they kiss the Relic," he explains. "I also give them a different medal for each game," he adds. The medals are either of the Saint whose feast day is closest to game day or of the Blessed Virgin Mary.

Riehle is also on the sidelines of every Notre Dame football game. "I'm in the locker room when they come off the field for the last time before the game," he explains. "As they come up the steps everyone of them comes up and kneels down in front of me and I give them a blessing. I do that before the game, I do that at the end of the first half, and then I do it at the end of the game."

Himself a part of the Notre Dame tradition Riehle finds the "Notre Dame mystique" quite simple. "There's a lot of traditions, but there's no myths, because we work hard at the things we do," he explains. Riehle believes the special aura that surrounds Notre Dame comes from the dedication and ambition of everyone involved. "It's the same old story, the harder you work the luckier you are," he chuckles. "It means that hopefully everybody does the best they can at the things they do and that takes care of it," he adds.

The chance to interact with the student athletes and to watch their progress is Riehle's favorite aspect of the job. "I feel like I'm a part of it all, and I enjoy it," he says. "It really kind of chokes me up to see players get up and talk in front of 3000 people and not stutter," he said, referring to the players speaking at the quarterback club luncheon. "It's good for them to be able to do something like that and it makes me feel really proud."

Father James L. Riehle has been chaplain of the Notre Dame Athletic Department since 1977.

But being chaplain for the football team isn't always an easy job. It comes with a lot of stress. An athlete all his life, Riehle can sympathize with the players struggles and he especially worries when they get injured. "When I see one of the kids get hurt, it really bothers me," he says.

Over his many years with the team, Riehle has seen a number of incredible wins as well as some devastating losses. "The first game I was ever Chaplain for was the 1966 Michigan State 10-10 tie...which was a great game," Riehle says.

"I've never been a person that highlights things," says Riehle. "There's been a lot of great games." He explains that with each season and each team there is a uniqueness. "It's a credit to this place," he says. "It's just a special place. I still get excited when I hear the Victory March".

Although he is almost 70 years old, Riehle doesn't let his age slow him down. He says his work keeps him young. "I'm not getting any older," he claims, "the kids are getting younger."

But this is Riehle's first season after having open heart surgery last May. People often ask him how he can stand the pressure and stress of the games after having heart surgery. His answer is simple. "I never get excited. I just don't. That doesn't mean I don't get tense or upset, but I just don't get excited."

So Riehle doesn't worry about when he'll move from semi-retirement to full retirement. "I feel pretty good and I feel strong enough," he says. "If it's God's Will I'll continue. I've kind of left it up to Him."

With God's love, Catholicism can change with the times

An obvious drawback to being a member of the Catholic Church is that the young people, wanting to think for themselves, are delivered, at the time they are losing their baby teeth, the $64,000 questions complete with answers, bound up in a catechism which pope's the guarantee.

As shades of the prison house begin to close on the growing boy and girl, they have God's Ten Commandments and the Church's precepts guiding them like the Burma Shave signs that used to be seen on the highway. What must I do to be saved? "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved," the Church answers as glibly as Jimmy Lee Swaggart. What does He save us from? From the consequences of not knowing that God is Love.

Do Catholics tend to reach puberty feeling that they're being suffocated by grace? I have no way of knowing, since I didn't grow up as a Catholic child. Now and then, I hear the cris de coeur from the Catholic rebels, echoing James Joyce, writing in the Observer: "I will no longer serve that in which I no longer believe whether it call itself my home, my fatherland, or my church..." Domers may simply say: "My personal convictions are more sacred to me than all the revealed dogmas of the Catholic Church." Grudgingly, I admire the upstarts. "O brave new world/That has such people in it!"

Father Robert Griffin Letters to a Lonely God

As a lapsed W.A.S.P., I was nineteen when I joined the Church in 1944. In 1944, the world was up to its armpits in hate. The Nazis were saying to the Jews: "We have good news and bad news. The good news is that you're going to Paris. The bad news is that you're going as soap." A newspaper columnist, sickened by anti-Semitism, wrote of Jesus: "They should have fed Him to the lions. You can't make a religious symbol out of mince meat."

For me, the Church's saving grace is that her defining insight comes from John 3:16, which says that God so loved the world that He gave His Son for the life of the world. Does the Gospel mean that He loves the Jew-baiters, the Himmlers, and the Christians who hung Jews on the barbed wire?

So far as I can see, it means that He loves the entire massa damnata, since as a Father, He desires not the death of a sinner. As a victim of the Holocaust who died early—as the Jewish painter Marc Chagall showed in his great canvas of the pogroms called "the White Crucifixion"—Jesus revealed the heart of His Abba when He prayed: "Forgive them, for they don't know what they are doing. Did not the rabbis at Auschwitz show as much grace under pressure? Perhaps it is only secular-minded Jews that believe that after the death camps, there can be no forgiveness.

Believe it or not, young Catholics, your Church is the Church of the long distance runner because the Church exists to bear witness to the New Testament revelation that God is love. Did you imagine that this was a pearl of truth that you could discover on your own? "Love has pitched his mansion in/The place of excrement"—as theology, it's the high-water of the Last Supper. Writing on the human condition, Malraux said: "The genius of Christianity is to have proclaimed that the path to the deepest mystery is the path of love."

Whenever I hear it said that it isn't the two hundred Mass offered daily at Notre Dame that keep the place Catholic, I want to say, "Like hell it isn't. Those Masses keep Notre Dame in touch with its roots, as every sinner knows." As Peguy used to say, the sinner is at the heart of Christianity. "No one is as competent as the sinner in matters of Christianity. No one, except a saint."

What Notre Dame needs now is more scholarly sinners, of the kind who used to make the Catholic Church their refugium peccatorum. As Graham Greene says, if we had not been taught by the Church how to interpret the Passion, would we be able to say from their actions alone whether it was the jealous Judas or the cowardly Peter who loved Christ more?

Graham Greene also wrote this: "Have you seen a room from which faith has gone? ...Like a marriage from which love has gone... And patience, everywhere like a fog?" I have all kinds of patience with young Catholics who feel that their faith is gone. At their age, I was finding the faith that they have lost, but that was a different age of the world. As someone has said, the extermination camps, "in endeavoring to turn man into a beast, intimated that it is not life alone which makes him a man." Man should be forgiven a religion which he knows from face-to-face contact with the Deity that God is love. After that primal insight, it's a matter of working things out—whether through liturgy or ritual, or matters of faith and morals. I do believe that the Church is here to stay. The English historian Lord Macaulay wrote that the Roman Catholic Church "may still exist in undiminished vigor when some traveler from New Zealand shall, in the midst of a vast solitude, make his stand on a broken arch of London Bridge to sketch the ruins of St. Paul's." Macaulay, in my estimate, could be guilty of an understatement.

What pope can say that if the Church exists until the end of time—as we have been promised that it will—women will not be ordained to serve as bishops and priests and even popes? As a Catholic romantic, I believe that anything is possible in the Church which is a showcase for God's Love incarnate.

This year marks Father Griffin's 25th year of writing with The Observer.

Association and USA Today/Mizuno. She also played on the Junior National team in 1992-93.

In her first season with the Irish, Harris has been one of the major contributors to the record setting 16-1 start. She has 213 kills on the season thus far, and has led the Irish in kills in seven of the team's matches. Harris is also a solid defensive force as she has led the team in digs four times, with a total of 147 digs on the season.

Harris' most powerful weapon would be her jump serve that strikes fear in every Irish opponent. Loyola Marymount got a taste of this when Harris served an Irish single-match record of seven service aces against the Lions. She leads the team with 30 service aces, and with half of the season left, could look to break the single-season record of 46 service aces, set by senior co-captain Nicole Coates last season.

Behind Harris' talent and performance lies a humble and cooperative player, who looks to improve every possible aspect of her play.

"She's fun to coach," said Brown of Harris. "She works hard and is very attentive to the coaching staff."

Brown also praises Harris' attitude and ability to play as a member of a team.

"She has a positive attitude and has good communication with her teammates."

Looking into the future, one might wonder if Harris can improve on her performance in her first season. Coach Brown looks to Harris as a dependable player who will continue to contribute to the success of the Irish, but will also continue to improve with age and experience.

"She's performed very well," said Brown, "but she can get much better."

"She will become more consistent and will improve with experience."

Portland

Losses last weekend at No. 4 Hartford and No. 12 Connecticut were the first consecutive losses by a Portland team since 1991.

But despite the apparent loss of momentum, the Pilots have maintained their competitive edge on the home field. They carry a 17-game home win streak into their match with the Irish, including a recent overtime win against then-No. 8 Washington.

"Along with MacMillan, they lost Justi Baumgardt," Irish coach Chris Petrucelli said. "That's two of their three best attacking players."

But Notre Dame may have little sympathy for the Pilots' misfortune. The Irish have been without as many as four starters at different points during this season and have still managed an 11-0-1 record, their only blemish a 0-0 tie with No. 1 North Carolina.

"There's not a lot of pressure this weekend," Petrucelli said. "We've proven ourselves already and that's given us a lot of confidence. We know we can beat anyone, so we can go out and play and have fun."

"Washington is a team full of solid players," Petrucelli said. "Melanie Brennan is one of their best players, but they have no real superstars."

Brennan, the Husky career record holder for goals scored, was named a second team All-American last season.

After their games this weekend, the Irish will have completed the toughest stretch of their schedule, a three week period in which five of the six teams they have played were at one time ranked in the top-10.

These games will also be Notre Dame's last against ranked opponents for the remainder of the regular season, but Petrucelli hopes the squad can maintain its intensity.

"After our weekend against North Carolina and Duke last season there was a sigh of relief," Petrucelli said. "I won't let that happen this year."

"We tried to turn our intensity on and off last year, and when we turned it off for a few weeks we couldn't turn it back on when the tournament started."

Irish travel to face No. 14 Texas

The Notre Dame volleyball team will be "deep in the heart of Texas" this weekend as they travel to the Lone Star State to take on 14th-ranked Texas on Friday night and Texas A&M on Saturday night.

It will be the first meeting with Texas, and Irish head coach Debbie Brown predicts that they could be the toughest match of the year for the Irish thus far.

"Texas is a strong top-15 team," said Brown. "Their last loss was a five-game match against 8th-ranked Florida."

"I would not be surprised if they are our toughest match yet this year."

Texas is 13-3 on the season so far, 3-1 in the Southwest Conference.

This will be the second confrontation between the Irish and the Aggies, who will bring a 7-6 overall record and a 2-2 conference record into the match.

The Irish swept the Aggies 15-4, 15-4, 15-3, at the Colorado Coors Invitational.

involving Irish basketball in recent years.

With entrance into the Big East Conference just one year away, coach John MacLeod's program is enjoying a revival.

Midnight Mania, organizers hope, will act as a catalyst to further inspire fans to follow the Irish.

"We're all pretty excited about it, the seniors in particular," senior point guard Lamarr Justice said. "It's a chance to get the season started on a good note."

It's a season that many people expect to have few good notes.

Much of last year's offensive production has disappeared, with Monty Williams now a New York Knick.

"Some people are looking past this season," Justice said. "But we'll surprise people with the number of games we'll win and the way we'll compete with some of the better teams on our schedule."

"We have a lot of talent and athletic ability. Everyone knows we have great shooters."

It will all be on display for the first time tonight at midnight. The team will conduct a brief scrimmage and then be available for photos and autographs.

The first serious workout, not for public consumption, will be Saturday morning at 8 a.m.

"I don't know how excited I am about being back at 8 a.m., but I'm excited about Midnight Mania, there's no doubt about that," Justice said.

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL

Irish offer ticket package

Special to The Observer

Season tickets for 1994-95 Notre Dame women's basketball games will be available for the first time ever this season.

A reception to tip-off the season ticket drive will be held on Monday, October 17 at 5 p.m. in the Faculty Dining Room of the South Dining Hall. Coach Muffet McGraw and team members will be in attendance to talk about the season.

All season ticket holders will become members of the newly formed Notre Dame Locker Room Club. Members will have priority seating and parking privileges and will receive a copy of the Notre Dame women's basketball media guide and Locker Room Club monthly newsletter. In addition, members will be invited to postgame receptions with the Irish coaching staff and players following selected home games.

Ticket prices for the 11-game package will be $25 for adults and $10 for youths 15 and under.

"We're very excited about our home schedule and the opportunity to offer a season ticket package to our fans," Notre Dame coach Muffet McGraw said. "We're fortunate to have teams like Purdue and Michigan State playing in our building. As always, our MCC league games will be very important as we look for a repeat trip to the NCAA's."

Siegfried up-ends Pasquerilla East, 12-6

By MICHAEL DAY
Sports Writer

When an unstoppable force encounters an immovable object, something has to give. Fortunately for Sigfried, it was the Pasquerilla East defense.

The powerful Slammer offense penetrated the stingy Pyro defense for two touchdowns en route to earning a 12-6 victory and sole possession of first place in the Blue Division.

Sigfried quarterback Marcie McNeill threw two touchdown passes, including the game winner to wideout Kathleen Clark with four minutes left in the game to improve the No. 5 Slammers' mark to 4-1.

After holding PE on the game's opening possession, Sigfried took over near mid-field and wasted no time in establishing a strong offensive game plan.

On their first play, McNeill found receiver Erin Ippolito open over the middle for a 20-yard gain. One play later, tailback Tricia Shafnitz caught a screen pass from McNeill and galloped 25 yards for a touchdown to put the Slammers ahead 6-0.

On their first possession of the second half, PE put together a methodical, time consuming drive to give them a first and goal at the Slammer five-yard line. Two plays later, quarterback Kristen Doty kept the ball and scampered up the middle for a Pyro touchdown. The conversion attempt was unsuccessful, and the score remained tied at six until the four minute mark in the game.

McNeill's strike to Clark gave the Slammers a 12-6 lead that they would not relinquish. When PE quarterback Doty mishandled the snap at the Slammer 30-yard line with under two minutes remaining, the celebration was on for Sigfried.

"We came through when we needed to," said Slammer coach David Bozanich. "It was our toughest game of the year, but we did what it took to win the game."

The victory puts the Slammers all alone at the top of the Blue Division, and with one game remaining, Sigfried is a lock to take part in the postseason playoffs.

Off Campus 18 Farley 0

The word "domination" best sums up Off Campus' performance in their 18-0 win over Farley last night. Defensively, O-C limited the Farley offense to just 85 total yards, and offensively, they exploded for two second half touchdowns to help propel the No. 6 squad to victory.

"Both the offense and defense played extremely well tonight," echoed the O-C coaching staff. "We are starting to gel together as a team heading into the playoffs."

Team captain and starting defensive back Kelly Guerin set the tone early for Off-Campus on Farley's third play from scrimmage. Guerin intercepted a Molly Riestenberg pass and ran it back 60 yards for a touchdown and a 6-0 lead.

Guerin helped lead the team defensively, collecting two of Off-Campus' three interceptions against Riestenberg. The O-C defensive line was able to manhandle the Farley offensive front for most of the evening.

On the other side of the ball, it was the dynamic duo of Sara Donnelly and Megan Allen that spelled doom for the Farley defense. Donnelly scored two touchdowns on a three-yard run and a 10-yard pass reception. Allen and the offensive line provided key blocks all evening long to help Off-Campus amass nearly 150 yards in total offense.

The victory upped Off Campus' mark to 3-1-1, and the team will play its season finale next Monday before preparing for the postseason playoffs.

Lewis 21 Knott 6

The Lewis Interhall football team was given this ultimatum: win their final two games or watch the playoffs from the stands. The Chickens completed the first half of their goal with by crushing Knott 21-6 last night.

The Angel offense couldn't get anything going offensively before intermission. Lewis' defense held Knott to just 23 total yards and no first downs in the first half. Angel quarterback Karen Wallace was intercepted three times and was under constant pressure from the Chickens' defensive line the whole evening.

As bad as Knott was offensively, they may have been worse defensively. After holding Lewis scoreless for much of the first half, the Chickens exploded in the final fifteen seconds of the first half. The offense capped a six-play, 45-yard drive when tailback Amy Granata received the pitch from quarterback Liz Telerico and dashed 10 yards for the touchdown. Lewis added the two-point conversion when Telerico found receiver Marybeth Failla wide open in the back of the endzone.

The Chickens added to their lead in the opening minutes of the second half. Team captain Tracy Cote intercepted a Wallace pass and returned it to the Knott 35-yard line. The Chickens moved the ball to the 10-yard line where they faced fourth and goal.

In a well-designed timing play, Telerico rolled out to her left and threw a perfect perfect lead pass in the corner of the endzone. A streaking Emily Miller fully extended her arms and pulled in the pass in mid stride for the touchdown and a 15-0 Lewis lead.

Knott added a harmless touchdown late in the game, but it was too little too late. Granata put the icing on the cake for the Chickens when she hauled in a poorly thrown screen pass and dashed 60 yards for a touchdown.

Lewis faces their final test on Monday with the playoffs on the line.

Penn State seeks revenge

By HARRY ATKINS
Associated Press

ANN ARBOR, Mich. Joe Marinaro remembers the day Joe Paterno came to his house.

"It was a great honor," the senior Michigan guard said. "I could easily have played for him, and probably would have... but it came down to the fact that my heart was at Michigan."

On Saturday, Paterno and No. 2 Penn State will be at Michigan's house for a game that could decide the Big Ten champion and a berth in the Rose Bowl.

The Nittany Lions are 5-0 and lead the nation with 51.6 points and 556.6 yards per game, while the fifth-ranked Wolverines (4-1) average 31 points and 434 yards.

"Joe Paterno teams are always going to be sound, they're always going to have players," Michigan coach Gary Moeller said. "They know how to play in big games. He knows how to coach in big games."

Paterno, in his 29th year as coach, is the nation's leading active coach with a 262-69-3 record. He is fourth in all-time victories and tied with Bear Bryant for bowl wins with 15.

And Marinaro can almost recite the numbers from memory. He grew up in Andover, Mass., where he became one of the best high school linemen in the country. He got college offers from everywhere, including Penn State.

"Penn State is the dominant college in the East," Marinaro said. "Even growing up near Boston, they were much, much bigger than Boston College."

This is the third straight year Penn State has started 5-0. Both times, the Nittany Lions lost in their sixth game. Two years ago, Miami beat Penn State 17-14 and last year Michigan won at Penn State 21-13.

"The motivation is not to see Moeller go 2-0 over Joe Paterno," Moeller said. "The motivation is to get to the Rose Bowl, to be called."

The Nittany Lions no doubt remember last year's game very well. Paterno probably reminds them of it frequently. Penn State led 10-0, but Derrick Alexander returned a punt 48 yards for a touchdown to get Michigan back in the game.

"Those are things that happen in a great rivalry, but I think the rivalry was there the day they let Penn State in the Big Ten," Moeller said. "It's enhanced by both teams having a chance to win the championship."

Marinaro knows the value of a team seeking revenge. He said it helped the Wolverines repay Michigan State with a 40-20 triumph last week.

"I'm sure Penn State will be coming in here with a revenge factor in mind," Marinaro said.

Wildcats take new-found confidence into Nebraska

Associated Press

MANHATTAN, Kan.

Kansas State quarterback Chad May could hardly have a better day Saturday against No. 2 Nebraska than he had against the Cornhuskers last year.

May set a Big Eight record last year by passing for 459 yards as the Wildcats gained 565 yards total and still lost 45-28.

But it is a far more confident Kansas State team this year, one ranked No. 16 in the nation, and a far more confident May, who hasn't thrown an interception in 166 attempts.

"(The passing game) worked last year," said offensive tackle Jim Hmielewski. "We just came up short. I think we found out how we can beat them, or at least attempt to beat them."

May completed 33 of 44 passes last week for 379 yards — the second-highest total of his career — as the Wildcats went to 4-0 by defeating Kansas in the conference opener.

He has shown great poise in staying in the pocket and has thrown accurately. Perhaps the only knock on him is that he doesn't run well, but he seems nimble enough to step up to avoid the rush.

May played in high school at Laverne, Calif. Cal State-Fullerton was the only school to offer him a scholarship.

Then Fullerton State changed its offense, and the new scheme wasn't suited to May. He tried to get UCLA to bite, but there were no offers there either.

Kansas State coach Bill Snyder heard about the situation, and suddenly the California boy was playing in the Flint Hills of Kansas.

May sat out last season but went into spring practice as the No. 1 quarterback. Now he is being talked of as a Heisman Trophy possibility.

Walsh, Stanford humbled

By ROB GLOSTER
Associated Press

STANFORD, Calif.

Bill Walsh grabbed the microphone and pretended to be a reporter questioning the integrity of John Robinson's football program at Southern Cal. Then he quickly left the room, before Robinson could retaliate.

It was a moment of lightness in what has been a long and not very enjoyable season for Walsh, the former NFL mastermind in his third year back at Stanford.

His Cardinal team, which began the year with a national ranking, has underachieved and fallen to 1-3-1. A few underclassmen have criticized the team's attitude, and even publicly questioned Walsh's style.

And Walsh, who led the San Francisco 49ers to three Super Bowl titles in the 1980s, has been hounded all season to explain derogatory comments he made about opponents ranging from Arizona to Notre Dame.

After a last-minute 36-35 loss at Arizona State last weekend that Walsh called a "disaster," the coach said there was a strong sense of disappointment.

"You can't say you're enjoying yourself," he said. "You try to make it a lesson for the athletes — of how to come back from frustration."

Walsh, who also coached Stanford in 1977-78, took the Cardinal to a 10-3 record and a Blockbuster Bowl victory over Penn State in his first year back. The Cardinal slipped to 4-7 last year, and must struggle to even equal that record this season.

Going into Saturday's home game against Pac-10 rival USC, the Cardinal is last in the conference in scoring defense. The high-scoring Stanford offense, led by senior quarterback Steve Stenstrom, has been unable to make up for a defense that allows 33 points a game.

Walsh said the loss to Arizona State was just the latest in a series of disturbing games.

"I've been humbled before, last year all through the year and this," he said.

"My record isn't dotted with a tremendous win-loss record. We won some Super Bowls and bowl games at Stanford, but it's not a Bud Wilkinson-type record."

Walsh attributes many of the problems to youth. Eleven underclassmen saw significant playing time on defense at Arizona State.

"By the time we're mature as a team," Walsh said, "I'll probably be in my glory somewhere."

■ WOMEN'S CROSS COUNTRY

Irish runners face tough competition

By RANDY WASINGER
Sports Writer

Sunday's trip is crunch time for the Notre Dame women's cross country squad—and they know it.

Coming off a second place finish in last weekend's Notre Dame Invitational, the Irish now head to Ann Arbor, Michigan, for their toughest, and most important meet of the season.

Last year, they finished 7th in the same meet—a meet that Coach Connelly called “probably the worst one we had all year.”

This time around, the Irish will have to rustle up a much better race if they expect to qualify for the NCAA Championships at the end of the season. Sunday's meet features six of the nation's top-20 teams, including 4th-ranked Stanford and 8th-ranked Michigan.

“There are eight districts around the country, and the top two teams from each district qualify for the NCAA's,” explained Coach Connelly. “After that, they take six more as at-large bids. How well you do against the top teams determines whether or not you're picked.”

“A meet like this is critical for us. This meet has the top teams in the country, and it's important that we beat some of them.”

Notre Dame began practice this week as the 18th-ranked team in the nation—a spot they've been at or near for most of the season. They will look for leadership from senior Kristi Kramer, the top finisher for the Irish in every meet this season.

“Nobody's stepped up and tried to win a race this year,” said Connelly, “and we've got some girls who are definitely capable of doing that.”

If Connelly expects to knock off some top teams and solidify his team's chances of making the NCAA's, he will need strong performances Sunday not only from Kramer and Riley, but also from his other top runners—sophomore Emily Hood, senior Maureen Kelly, and juniors Kristen Dudas and Amy Siegel.

“Last year we had three kids do really well at the Michigan meet,” said Connelly. “But our 4th and 5th place runners didn't do as well as they could have, and that really hurt us.”

“This is the last time we will race before districts, so that means it's our last time to run against top teams from outside our district.”

“Sunday's race is critical.”

Badgers' Bevell recovering quickly

Associated Press

MADISON, Wis. Wisconsin quarterback Darrell Bevell is making a speedy recovery from his separated right shoulder and may see action Oct. 22 against Minnesota, coach Barry Alvarez says.

“I think Minnesota is realistic, very realistic,” Alvarez said Wednesday. “I'd be surprised if he doesn't play the Minnesota game.”

But Alvarez said he doubted whether Bevell would be well enough to play at home against Purdue this Saturday. Bevell injured the shoulder less than two weeks ago in the Badger's losing effort against Michigan State.

Alvarez said Monday that he didn't believe Bevell would be able to throw this week, but the injured quarterback was throwing in practice on Wednesday.

“I didn't think he would be able to pick his arm up until next week. But he's worked very hard. He's really made tremendous progress,” Alvarez said.

Backup quarterback Jay Macias agreed.

“He's coming around and starting to throw. He looks pretty good to me,” Macias said.

Macias was expected to be starting quarterback against Purdue. He started last week and led the Badgers to a 46-14 trouncing of Northwestern.

Terrell Fletcher will get the starting nod at tailback in place of Brent Moss, who is still suffering from a strained right knee and ankle, Alvarez said.

But Alvarez hoped Moss would still be available for some action.

“I won't know anything probably until Saturday. I wish I knew myself. I hope he's available,” Alvarez said of Moss.

Moss, who has rushed for 100 yards or more in 16 straight games, said Wednesday he has noticed daily improvement, “but it's not ready yet.”

Morrissey, Flanner vie for play-off bids

By NEIL ZENDER
Sports Writer

Grace vs. Keenan

There aren't a lot of implications riding on Sunday's Morrissey-Flanner game. Just maybe the fate of each team's season. Both teams need a win to remain in playoff contention.

The Manorites (1-2) are looking to bounce back from last week's shocking loss at the hands of Grace.

"We have to go out there and execute perfectly," Captain Avelino Verceles said. "We had the game won last week, until we were victimized by fluke plays in the last quarter. Grace didn't win that game. We lost that game."

But that didn't douse the Manorites hopes for making the playoffs. A 2-2 record might qualify them.

The key man for Morrissey will be tailback John Goetz.

"I have all the confidence in the world in him. He knows how to pick and find the holes."

Flanner flies into the battle at 1-1. A win would give them strong positioning for a playoff slot.

"We watched them play this weekend," Captain Too Keller said. "It was a tough way to lose, to dominate a football game forty-five minutes of the forty-eight. That kind of worries me. They'll be fired up. They have no chance to make the playoffs if they don't beat us. I'd expect to see their best."

"They do have a pretty capable offense, but as long as we don't give up the big play, we can hang with anybody."

Grace and Keenan are the flip sides of a coin. One just delivered a debilitating defeat. The other just suffered one.

Keenan is coming off a tough 22-7 loss to Stanford. At 2-1, they need a win to make the playoffs.

"We need to bring our self-esteem back from our defeat against Stanford," Captain Rob Rolf said. "We need a stepping stone into the playoffs."

For Keenan, the problem isn't the defense. Even though they gave up 22 points to Stanford, Keenan has a solid defense.

"I think we have to establish an offense. In the first few games, we won because of our defense."

While Keenan is coming into the game trying to recover from defeat, Grace is flying high after shocking Morrissey, a team Rolf felt was the best in Interhall.

"I think it's going to be a tough game. Keenan is a very, very good football team. It's going to be a good matchup. Offensively, we lost our fullback (Jeff Ford) with a broken hand. I just hope we can put together four solid quarters and put ourselves in a position to win in the end."

"We need to move the ball with a little more consistency. Defensively, we need to make a stand against a very good offensive team."

"In Interhall football, it's tough to lay out what you need to do to have success. You need more points than your opponent, and anyway we can do it, we'll take."

Stanford vs. Dillon

It sounds like a track meet. Whoever runs better will win. But this is Interhall football, and both Stanford and Dillon are looking to run away from each other in Sunday's battle.

The 2-1 Studs are looking for a playoff slot. They came back from an upset at the hands of Morrissey with a solid 22-7 thumping of Keenan last week.

"We definitely did bounce back," Captain Chad Smock said. "It was nice to come back and have the guys rally like that and play well."

The Studs are hoping that their performance against Keenan spills over into this week's game against Dillon.

"After what happened against Morrissey, it woke everybody up that other teams could beat us. We basically got in playoff mode last week, and so the intensity will be up."

On offense, Stanford is planning to accentuate the running game.

"We've got a very good passing game, but I don't think we're going to use it that much."

If Dillon (0-2) is going to win, they must win the battle on the line of scrimmage.

But if Smock's faith in his men up front is justified, Dillon could have problems.

"I think our offensive line can do a fairly good job against most defenses we can face."

Budzichowski's crew will be trying the same grounded offensive tactic.

However, Dillon's offensive success will depend on their ability to move the ball against Stanford's potent defense. Brett Galley leads a vicious Stud linebacking corp that should present Dillon with problems.

■ MEN'S GOLD DIVISION INTERHALL

Top-ranked Carroll faces No. 4 Alumni

By JEFF COX
Sports Writer

The marquee interhall football match-up this weekend pits top-ranked Carroll against No. 4 Alumni. Although Carroll sits atop this week's power poll, the Dawgs hope to pound that ranking into oblivion.

In order for Alumni (1-0-2) to pull off the upset, they'll have to stop Carroll's upstart offense.

"We've played two good games in a row," Carroll captain Scott Ismail commented. "Our quarterback Chad Harrison has been playing well, and so has our offensive line."

Carroll's offense got a boost from freshman tailback Joe Schenher in last Sunday's 17-7 success against Sorin. Although Schenher played primarily defense in high school, he tallied a 14-yard touchdown in the win.

While Carroll (2-0-1) was having its way with Sorin, Alumni battled St. Ed's to a scoreless tie. Captain Avery Johnson is looking for continued improvement this week.

"Our defense has done their part. Now it's up to the offense," he said. "I'm concerned about execution. The pressure is definitely on our offensive line, receivers, and quarterback Conrad Hansen."

While both captains are concerned about their own teams, both have respect for each other's squads.

"We need to come out and play well," Ismail said. "They're a big, physical team. We know how good Alumni is."

Captain Johnson felt the same way about Carroll.

"We have a lot of respect for them," he said. "It's going to be a good, hard-nosed football game."

Sorin vs. Fisher

After a 12-0 setback to Zahm a week ago, No. 11 Fisher looks to get back to .500 by reeling in a win over winless Sorin.

A win over the Screaming Otters not only would give Fisher a 2-2 record but also a chance for a spot in the upcoming IH play-offs.

"If we win and St. Ed's loses, I think we're in the play-offs," Fisher captain Chris Cary said. "But all we can do is play the best we can and hope."

Cary hopes for another big game out of his offensive line, which he said looked good last week. He also hopes for big things out of freshman quarterback Brian Hertz and his receiving corps.

On the other side of the field, No. 13 Sorin comes in with a host of injuries. A dislocated knee put Sorin's fullback and defensive end on that list, which worries captain Pete Slease.

"We're going through a lot of player personnel changes right now," Slease said. "We have to stay tough on defense, but I'm worried about our offense."

Despite Sorin's injuries, Cary isn't taking the Otters lightly.

"They're a lot tougher than their record shows," the Fisher captain explained. "But we have to concentrate on ourselves."

Zahm vs. St. Ed's

Although the IH football play-offs are down the road, Sunday's Zahm-St. Ed's tussle will have a play-off atmosphere.

In order for No. 6 St. Ed's to win and put themselves in good post-season position, they will have to do what no other team has done this year: score against No. 7 Zahm.

"Our defense doesn't have a weak link," Zahm captain Dave Bozanich stated, "or if it does, no one has found it yet. It's been a whole team effort. All eleven of us have come up big."

Two other Zahm players who came up big last week were quarterback Benji Hammond and split end Rich Rios. The pair helped Zahm to a 12-0 win over Fisher and a 1-0-2 record.

"Our offense finally started to click last week," Bozanich stated. "We need Hammond and Rios to spark the offense early on."

While Hammond and Rios are key players for Zahm, 1-1-1 St. Ed's has some big players of its own.

"Our tailback Mike Norbut is a key player," St. Ed's captain Tony Nowak stated. Nowak went on to say that wide receiver Dan Wajeski is now fully recovered from a thigh injury.

While Nowak is excited about his offense, he also has good things to say about his defense.

Both sides will need a total team effort to come out on top Sunday, and both teams are taking must-win attitudes into the contest.

"I don't know how the play-off system is going to be," Bozanich stated, "but we need to win this game."

And Nowak echoed those thoughts.

"We need to win this game," he said.

■ MEN'S SOCCER

Irish look for change of fortune

By JARED PATZKE
Sports Writer

With the disappointment of a poor showing in the Midwest Conference lingering in their minds, the Notre Dame men's soccer team is now trying to concentrate on the remainder of their regular season which consists of non-conference games. These matches include three nationally ranked opponents.

The 2-1 overtime loss to the University of Wisconsin at Green Bay ended the Irish's regular season conference schedule. With this loss comes a lot of uncertainty for the future of the team.

The top four teams in the Western Division of the Midwest Collegiate Conference will go to the conference tournament, which will be held at Notre Dame. The Irish (4-4 in conference play) are currently ranked third in the division and must wait for the remaining teams to play out their games before they can be assured a berth in the tournament.

Without a tournament berth, the Irish cannot make the NCAA tournament.

While Notre Dame awaits its destiny, the Irish will embark on a rigorous schedule, meeting the likes of SMU, Wisconsin-Madison, and UCLA, who are nationally ranked 10th, 17th, and 9th respectively.

Notre Dame will host SMU tonight at 7:30 p.m. at Alumni Field. The Irish will use this game as a building block for the future. After experiencing several unexpected losses, Notre Dame is searching for consistency in their play.

"We have to get back to the basics and really work on our fundamentals. Recently we've been lacking in that area," said Irish goalkeeper Bert Bader. "There's a lot of pride within this team and we will fix our mistakes."

Bader is the anchor of what has proven to be an extremely strong Irish defense. With the help of Chris Dean, Kevin Adkisson, and Brian Engessor, Bader has allowed only twelve goals. The unit has also combined for two goals and four assists to boost the struggling offense.

Senior forward Tim Oates is anxiously awaiting the match-up with SMU.

"I'm really looking forward to this game. It's a great opportunity for our team to gain confidence and some respect."

If Notre Dame needs anything, it's confidence. The loss to Wisconsin-Green Bay dropped their over all record below the .500 mark at 5-6. It also propelled them out of the Great Lakes Region standings for the first time this season.

"We're going to try and come out more relaxed tonight," comments Oates. "In our last few games we seem to have come out tight, hopefully we'll be less panicked."

Notre Dame lost their only previous game against SMU by the score of 2-0 in the opening round of last year's NCAA tournament.

SMU is the third nationally ranked team the Irish have played this year. Notre Dame lost its other two meetings with ranked teams by scores of 1-0 to No. 7 Penn State and 2-0 to No. 1 Indiana.

If you bought men's basketball season tickets (and you know who you are) you even get a free t-shirt.

But that's just the 11 o'clock euphoria, an insignificant preamble to Midnight Mania.

When the clock strikes 12, college basketball season officially begins. At that moment, the 1994-95 Notre Dame men's basketball team will be revealed to anyone who cares to watch.

It's one of the most anticipated—or at least one of the most publicized—events

Poor Portland

Once the No. 2 team in the country, the Pilots have taken a nose dive

Three weeks ago, today's game against No. 13 Washington looked like a stepping stone for the No. 2 Notre Dame women's soccer team. The match against the Huskies would be tough, but nothing like Sunday's game against then-No. 2 Portland would be.

But since that time, while Notre Dame has gone 2-0-1 against top-10 opponents, the Pilots have taken a nose dive.

Injuries and powerful opponents have taken their toll on Portland.

After losing as many as four starters to injuries, including the nation's second leading scorer in forward Shannon MacMillan, Portland has lost three of its last five games and plummeted to No. 11 in the Intercollegiate Soccer Association of America rankings.

A TALL ORDER

She's a team leader going into only her 18th collegiate game.

She already has her name in the Irish record books.

Freshman Angie Harris was asked to produce, and she delivered

By Betsy Baker

She makes mistakes, like every player does, but not those typical of what one might see of a player in their first season.

"She came in with good skills and continues to learn," Irish head coach Debbie Brown said.

"She makes mistakes, as does every good player, but Angie does not make typical freshman errors."

Harris will take her good skills and virtually flawless play into this weekend, in which the Irish travel to the Lone Star State to take on 14th-ranked Texas and Texas A&M.

Much of Harris' good composure in her first season is due to extensive experience at a high level of play, uncharacteristic of pre-collegiate level players. Harris was one of five high school players chosen to play in the 1994 Olympic Festival last summer. She was named first-team All-American by both the United States Volleyball
