Low turnout, bad weather dampen AnTostal

By KRISTI KOLSKI
Assistant News Editor

When huge air toys, a lackluster Loftapalooza show, and a canceled concert are combined with South Bend's temperamental weather conditions, they can form only one thing: A festival called AnTostal, that was less than a huge success.

■ see EDITORIAL, page 7

The annual event sponsored by Student Activities sought to drag students out their rooms by featuring activities and dorm competitions under the theme "The Quest for the Crown."

AnTostal Co-chair Tom Bradshaw felt that "overall, things were good, although Friday was a big success while events Monday through Thursday had a below average turn-out."

"Things could have gone better, but rain on Wednesday and Thursday ruined two of our biggest days," stated Bradshaw.

Rain forced many of the events to either be canceled or moved indoors. "We were counting on people participating when just walking by, but the events were less appealing once moved inside," he said.

Student Activities director, Gayle Spencer, agreed that weather was a factor, but also attributed many of the cancellations to a lack of planning. "The commissioners did not make rain relocation plans in advance so things fell through," Spencer stated.

Part of student disappointment may also have been due to a lack of a big concert. Planning for this event is centered around the Student Union Board's concert commission. Traditionally, SUB sponsors a concert that coincides with the week of AnTostal events. The band Digable Planets was scheduled to come, but plans were thwarted when Campus Security canceled it due to security concerns.

Allyson Luck, fall semester director of programming for SUB, explained that "There is a lot of red tape to get through when dealing with the administration, so we are going to start planning a lot earlier."

According to Luck, concert commissioner Rob Adams has already sent out campus wide surveys to see what bands students would come out for.

The AnTostal festival was further dampened by a lack of events on South Quad. In years past, events were planned both on South Quad and the Field House Mall. According to Bradshaw, "we were under the impression that we would encounter strong resistance from the administration if we tried to do anything on South Quad." Bradshaw felt that this factor may be attributed to "noticeably less participation from South Quad students."

Rosenbush, Johnson awarded for leadership

By LAURA FERGUSON
Saint Mary's News Editor

Saint Mary's student leaders gathered last night to "Celebrate a Leadership Community" and in the process honored Georgeanna Rosenbush and Marlene Johnson with the first Student Leadership Appreciation award.

Rosenbush is the director of Student Activities and Student Government Advisor, and Johnson is the Assistant Director of Student Activities as well as the Student Activities Board advisor.

This is the first year this award has been presented. It recognizes those individuals who have committed themselves in preparing student government leaders for their roles of leadership and action, according to the awards creators.

"We recognize professors in the academic setting, but something must be said for those outside of the classroom," said Noha El-Ganzouri, student body president for the 1994-95 academic year. "They (Rosenbush and Johnson) were the motivation for receiving this award because they have had such an influence on us."

This award was created by several student leaders, including Elizabeth Broghammer, Felicia Tormabene Coleman, Audry Comrie, Melissa Peters and El-Ganzouri.

The recipients for the award were nominated by the Saint Mary's community and reviewed by a committee of student leaders.

Although this year the recipients received a glass trophy, in future years the names of the recipients will be engraved in a plaque outside of the Student Activities office, according to El-Ganzouri.

Congress may eliminate financial aid options

By LAURA FERGUSON
Saint Mary's News Editor

The fate of the several student financial aid programs is still undetermined, but as the United States Senate drafts its proposals, new cuts could be considered.

According to a Washington based education association, some members of Congress may propose eliminating both Perkins Loans, and Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grants (SEOG) in addition to the proposed elimination of the in-school interest exemption and the State Student Incentive Grant Program.

According to Joseph Russo, director of financial aid at Notre Dame, the elimination of the Perkins and SEOG is a worst case scenario.

"There are millions of dollars involved just at Notre Dame," he said. "The biggest federal program here is the Stafford Loan."

These proposals would not eliminate student loans. They would just make loans more expensive because the borrower will be expected to pay the interest while still in school, not the federal government.

For an incoming freshman this could mean that the cost to borrow would be 20 percent higher. This figure could go as high as 30 to 40 percent if the student continues into graduate school, explained Russo.

The budget process began in the Senate late last month, and the House will follow the second week of May.

"Although this is still in the proposal stage, a version has passed the House," said Russo.

"There is a more moderate posture in the Senate so perhaps something less dramatic will be proposed."

Russo also encouraged students to focus on writing letters and calling senators to show their appreciation and to ask for the continued support of education. In particular, students can contact Dan Coats, a senator from Indiana who also sits on the Committee on Education and Labor. Senators from student's home towns could also be contacted.

The Student Aid Hotline has been established for students who wish to voice their concern about these proposals. The number is 1-800-574-4AID and it will be toll free until May 15. Callers will be briefed on the proposed student aid cuts and prompted to tell their own story.

"It would just take a couple of minutes to write, and it is especially important for students borrowing," Russo said. "It is expensive to go to Notre Dame but to make the sacrifice even more expensive makes this a legitimate issue to express."

INSIDE COLUMN

Color me happy

Jenny Shank
Accent Design Editor

It's May and the R.A.'s are getting feisty. The hall is peppered with snotty signs that let you know that you will be fined $69.99 for each inch your furniture is displaced out of its original position. In August, the signs were made of welcoming pastel paper and were decorated with smiley faces and happy, romping bunnies. Now, the R.A.'s construction paper horde is depleted and puke green and orange signs inform us that, if we don't get the heck out of our rooms, Student Accounts will collect our firstborn or right index finger — whichever we have left after purchasing this semester's texts at the bookstore. It's as if they didn't threaten us, we'd never leave for the summer. "No, Jimmy, we can't go to South Bend this summer. Disneyland will have to do."

I'm looking forward to getting back home where I can help myself to a healthy portion of Jello with things in it. Something about Jello cries out to my mom, "I am empty. Fill me!" She answers its plaintive cry, filling it with cabbage, cottage cheese, marshmallows, and anything else that complements the color of the Jello. God forbid the Jello and the things in it shouldn't match. "No, dear, you can't put Bacos in the lime Jello! That would be mixing warm and cool colors. Don't you have your color wheel with you?"

At least Jello colors are straight-forward — not those pansy pseudo-colors many catalogs use to describe their clothing. "The Kiwi blouse is set off nicely by the Eggplant trousers and Newt socks." If they are going to give colors weird names, they should at least call them something cool, like Rory or Floyd. "Dear, I hope you're not washing your Rories and Floyds together! We can't have that!"

It will be good to be home so my dad won't have to give me his weekly Farm Report. "Well," Dad begins, "there's a 10-mile-an-hour wind out of the northwest today with a 50% possibility of precipitation in the morning and partially cloudy skies this afternoon. How is it there?"

"Uh," I reply, my impeccable grammar and depth of thought making Dad glad he sent me here instead of buying a sports car, "it's, like, cloudy...or something."

It will also be nice to get home because it's easier to describe people there. I once overheard my roommate on the phone asking: "Now, is Lloyd the guy with the pierced eyebrow or the guy with the pierced lip?" My brilliant deductive powers led me to conclude that she was not describing anyone at Notre Dame. If she were, the conversation would be something like this: "Now is Matthew the guy who was wearing the Mocha pants and the Rutabaga shirt?"

Besides, I have big plans for the summer, like checking out Time/Life Mysteries of the Unknown books from the library. I would always check one of them out at a time, sandwiching it between a Hemingway and a Faulkner. But the librarian always knew.

"Werewolves and Children of the Night will be due in two weeks," she'd shout, and mothers would grab their children and move them away from me, whispering, "That, Jimmy, is why we are not going to South Bend this summer!"

India's tribespeople fight to preserve their identities

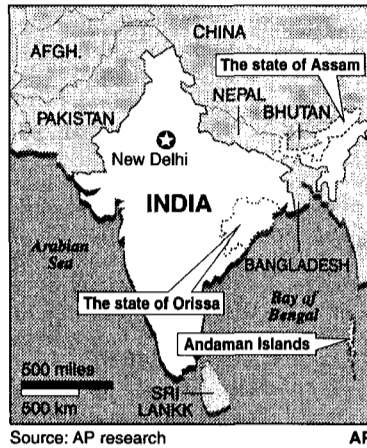

JAGI ROAD, India
Deep inside a leech-infested teakwood forest near a fast-moving stream, two men sit at a bamboo table poring over Oxford and Webster's dictionaries.

The men are Tiwas, one of the 400 tribes in India, and they are writing the first dictionary of their language. The tribesmen in India are descendants of the original inhabitants of the Indian subcontinent before invaders began sweeping southward from Central Asia around 1500 B.C. Many live in forests and wilderness areas and tend to be darker and shorter than average Indians. Many have Asian features.

With 69 million people — about 7 percent of India's population — they are among the country's poorest and most backward people. Since India became independent in 1947, tribespeople have been shunned, discriminated against and forced to give up hunting as forests shrank. But they have been left alone in northeastern India, an area of high mountains, rivers and timberland that sits north of Bangladesh and is attached to India only by a narrow strip of land known as "the chicken neck."

India's national newspapers and television stations rarely report about this area, and many Indians still regard it as primitive. For decades the government neglected its development.

But all that is beginning to change. Today migrants from overpopulated India and Bangladesh are moving into the once-remote area. Businessmen and the government are investing there. Even satellite television is arriving.

These intrusions are threatening ancient ways of life, prompting some tribes to work hard to define and preserve everything from their black magic to their folklore. "The tribals are going through a slow, but steady renaissance process," said Chittattukalam Kuriala, a Roman Catholic priest who has worked with tribal groups in the northeast for 22 years.

For the Tiwa people in Assam, the largest and most developed state in the region, that means a dictionary. "When we have this dictionary, our language will get some respectability and so will be our tribe," Patar said.

D'Amato withdraws invite to Liddy

WASHINGTON

G. Gordon Liddy, the Watergate burglar and talk-radio personality who advised listeners to shoot for the head if attacked by federal agents, was to be the honored guest at Sen. Alfonse D'Amato's gala Republican fund-raiser. But the invitation was suddenly pulled Monday. "The committee is complying with the senator's wishes," Gordon Hensley, spokesman for the National Republican Senatorial Committee, said in a terse statement. Liddy had been slated to appear Tuesday at the GOP's "Salute to Talk Radio," a private affair for about 400 big donors to the NRSC, a political money-raising organization chaired by D'Amato. Liddy was widely criticized for his having advised his audience that if federal agents raided their homes, they should shoot at the head because agents wear protective vests. He modified his advice last week, saying the head was too hard to hit "so you shoot twice to the body, center of mass, and if that does not work, then shoot to the groin area."

Gunman robs man returning money

PORTLAND, Ore.

First, he helped rip off $346,770 in one of the largest automated teller scams in the nation's history. Then, when he tried to return some of the loot, he was robbed. Not all went awry: The robber who robbed the robber was caught and the bag containing the $60,000 was recovered. Gallagher and four accomplices used a stolen bank card to rob 48 ATM machines on Nov. 18. They were able to make 724 withdrawals on phony ATM deposits because a computer software problem at the Oregon Telco Credit Union removed the usual $200 daily limit on weekend withdrawals. Gallagher, who was on weekend release from jail, was confronted by a gunman Saturday as he headed to meet his lawyer to turn over some of the cash to the Secret Service as part of his plea bargain. The man took off with the money, tossing some of it into the air as he was cornered by patrons from a bar a block away. Justin Morris, 20, of Milwaukee was charged with first-degree robbery, unlawful use of a weapon and possession of a controlled substance. Gallagher, 40, and the four other ATM robbers have pleaded guilty.

Woman pleads guilty in bar killing

VIRGINIA BEACH, Va.

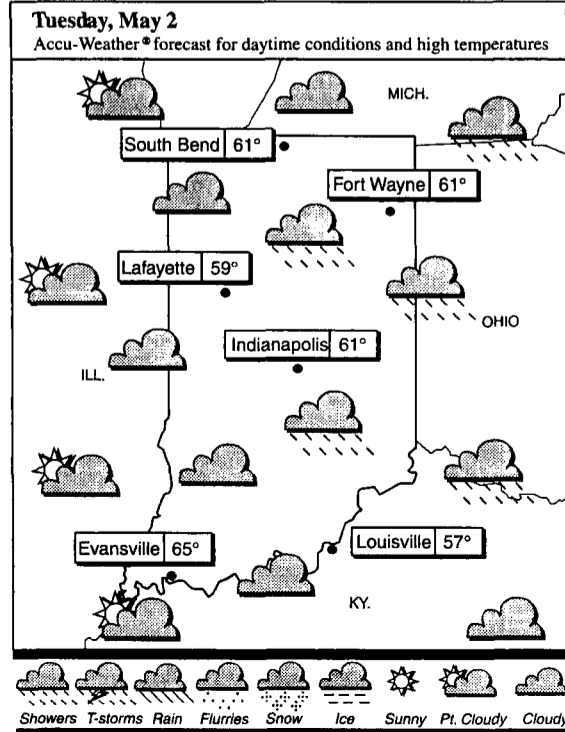

A waitress who had been fired from her job at a bar pleaded guilty Monday to murder in the shooting deaths of the owner, two employees and a patron. Denise R. Holsinger, 30, had told an acquaintance shortly after she was fired last June that her former boss was "going to get his," prosecutor Robert Humphreys said. Bar owner Lamvan Son and three others were shot to death at the Witchduck Inn on June 30. Ms. Holsinger's boyfriend, Michael Clagett, goes on trial June 26 and could get the death penalty as the alleged triggerman. Ms. Holsinger pleaded guilty to four murder charges, as well as robbery and weapons offenses. She could get up to five life terms plus 23 years at sentencing July 19. She would not have faced the death penalty had she gone to trial. Ms. Holsinger bowed her head and covered her eyes as Humphreys, introducing gruesome photographs of the victims as evidence, described the wounds made by shots fired into the head of each. Relatives of the victims wept quietly.

Student assaulted at school by man

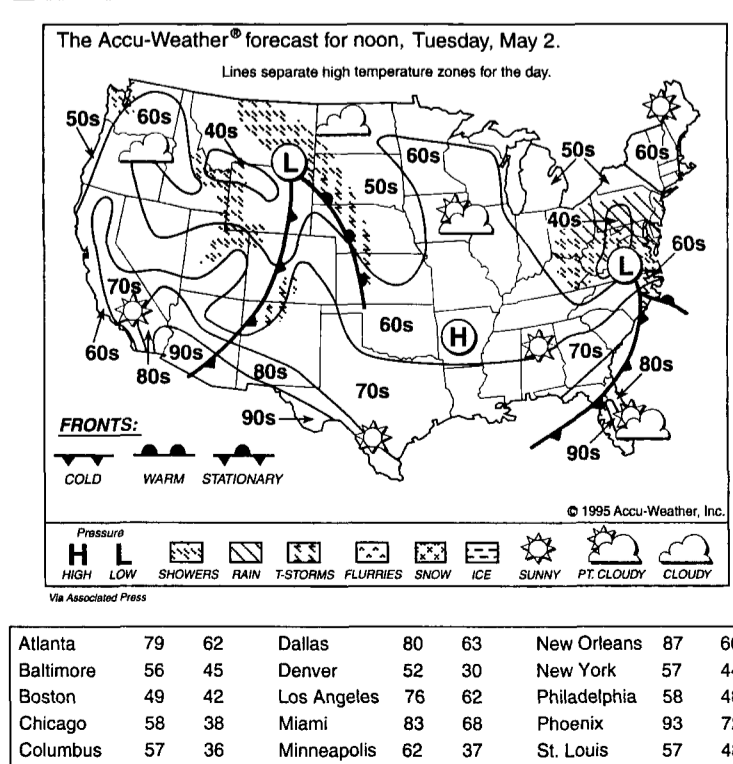

MIAMI

A man abducted a woman and her child Monday and took them to a high school classroom, where he threatened to shoot the hostages unless the female students took off their clothes, police said. One girl was sexually assaulted. A janitor and a band director who walked into the room wrestled the man to the ground and held him for police, said investigators and officials at Miami Springs Senior High. "He threatened to kill the woman and child, pointing the gun at the child unless the girls disrobed," said police spokesman Juan Del Castillo. Some of the 12 girls, piano students, started to comply. "The gun was actually a BB gun, and they didn't know that," Del Castillo said. Del Castillo did not know the man's name or age. He said police were questioning the man and the students, and charges were pending. The abduction was being investigated by police in Hialeah, another suburb bordering Miami Springs. It appeared the victims were chosen at random, Del Castillo said. He did not know the identity or ages of the woman and child.

■ RESIDENCE HALL ASSOCIATION

Review clarifies goals for upcoming year

By PEGGY LENCZEWSKI
Saint Mary's News Editor

Cooperation was the key to success this year for Saint Mary's Residence Hall Association (RHA), according to former President Jenn Cheribini.

RHA, whose primary purpose is to represent residents in policy decisions, had several goals at the beginning of the year.

Cheribini said that the group was extremely successful because "a well-rounded group of people came together and worked well together."

One of the primary goals of RHA this year was to increase the group's visibility. According to moderator Collette Shaw, "RHA is only about five years old, and we worked hard to let other people know about the group."

According to Shaw, the number of participants in Little Sibs Weekend doubled, and the number of participants in the regional and national Residence Hall Association conferences also increased.

According to Cheribini, "We accomplished most of our goals successfully. We sponsored a family in South Bend and donated money to a homeless shelter."

RHA faced problems with attendance and participation, according to Cheribini. "Hall Councils had their own events to run, so it was sometimes hard to find people with enough time for RHA events."

Cheribini said that "RHA was a team effort. There was enough participation that awareness was increased, and everyone was very helpful."

Next year's RHA board will be headed by President Tara Hooper, who was unavailable for comment.

Cheribini said the new board "will work on continuing many of the goals we set, especially publicity. It's a well-rounded group of women working together who have set realistic goals. I think they'll do a great job," she said.

"They've set a lot of goals I hope they'll follow through on," she said.

■ BOARD OF GOVERNANCE

WVFI, relations on agenda

By MARILYN ALIOTO
News Writer

"Last April we set three goals: 1) to better the student social space in Haggar Parlor, 2) to try to receive WVFI frequencies and 3) to expand SURV (Spes Unica Resource Volunteer Center)," said former BOG President Noha El-Ganzouri. She said "our long term goal was to establish a union for students only."

In order to accomplish this, El-Ganzouri and her '94-'95 Board of Governance needed to set short term and realistic goals. "We wanted to find out what the students wanted," she said. In order to do this BOG sent out surveys to the entire student body. When the results came back, there was an overwhelming demand for cable installation. "Over 80% of the students surveyed felt that this service was needed to improve Haggar" said El-Ganzouri.

BOG members also formed a committee to determine the purpose of Haggar, a menu change, the installation of a large screen television, better lighting, and cable. When cable was installed in April, it was a huge hit. "I want to applaud BOG for listening to the needs and desires of the student body," commented Freshman Kristin Liptak.

As for the additional Haggar Renovations, El-Ganzouri sat down to a recent meeting with the interior designer, Dan Deeter (Coordinator), and the newly elected BOG President, Sara Sullivan, to discuss the possibility of having the Haggar renovations completed over the summer.

Next on El-Ganzouri's agenda was WVFI radio station. "We saw a need to either pick up the AM frequencies or financially help the station go FM," said El-Ganzouri. At present, the WVFI Project is in the hands of the new board and will be further addressed in the fall. SURV received a raise in funds from BOG this past year and a director was appointed to oversee the organization.

During El-Ganzouri's term, BOG sponsored the first joint forum in more than a decade to discuss student relations between Notre Dame and Saint Mary's. "Improving relations is a prominent issue on both campuses," she said. According to El-Ganzouri, the best thing to come out of the ND-SMC Relations Night was a "list from both ND and SMC students who are now going to form a committee to work together to try to improve relations". Notre Dame representative Mike Flood attends BOG meetings under the new board and will continue to do so in the fall.

Of the other strides made during this past school year, BOG set up a calendar that is placed outside of the Student Activities Office. This is an important source of information because according to El-Ganzouri, "It announces events ranging from student lectures to concerts and is in close connection with the professors and student body leaders in order to keep on top of the latest happenings on campus."

BOG also sponsored other events throughout the year including: African American Week, Women's Fair, Play of the Mind and Women's Health Week. A Leadership Retreat, which took place April 8, "was an important weekend that not only united the leaders on campus, but enabled us to come together to set our own goals and become aware of the goals of other organizations," said El-Ganzouri. She added that "the retreat let student leaders know that in order to build a strong community and enrich an institution, it must start with the students."

El-Ganzouri thanked her '94-'95 board when she said "the most important and wonderful thing is to be able to work together for a common goal with individuals that really care." She points out that "BOG's success this past year is due in part to the resources and advisors who are the heroes behind us because we are only as good as they are."

As for the '95-'96 board, headed by President Sara Sullivan, they have already begun to pick up where last year's board left off. The plans for next fall include the continuation of the Haggar Renovation Project along with some new ideas.

Club LYFE (Live Your Faith Everyday) is in the works for BOG. It is described as a "light-hearted retreat from school and studies once a week," says Sara Nienaber, an endorser for the group. Club LYFE will be introduced next fall on Activities Night.

BOG approved a preliminary budget for next year and agreed to co-sponsor an appearance made by Ambassador Carlos Fuentes. He will be a guest speaker at St. Mary's sometime next fall. BOG also approved a motion enabling the Sisters of Neffertti to join the Urban League. The members of this group will work with the children of the South Bend community, promoting literacy.

The Sisters of Neffertti will also be involved in a group called Unity in which they would act as big sisters to girls in high school and form discussion groups to talk about the difficulties of being an African-American woman.

Natives: St. Helens embodies 'spiritual forces'

By TIM KLASS
Associated Press

Warring gods, black snow and deities represented by mountains are central features of native folklore focusing on volcanoes in the Cascade Range.

To the Yakama, Klickitat, Cowlitz, Multnomah, Puyallup, Nisqually and other American Indians of the Pacific Northwest, peaks like Mount St. Helens embodied supernatural and spiritual forces.

The Colvilles and Spokanes of north-central and eastern Washington state used the term "black snow" to describe gritty dust that darkened skies and filled the air following eruptions they could not see.

The Klickitats, living mostly east and south of St. Helens, called it Tah-one-lat-clah, or "Fire Mountain."

St. Helens, known until 1980 as the Mount Fuji of America for its symmetrical, snow-capped summit, was linked in many accounts with other volcanoes, especially Mount Adams, to the east, and Mount Hood, across the Columbia River in Oregon to the south.

One begins with the "Bridge of the Gods," a stone span over the Columbia near the modern-day site of Cascade Locks, Ore. Loo-Wit, a toothless old woman, was posted by the Great Spirit to guard the bridge and keep peace between two brothers, Pahto and Wyeast.

Nonetheless, they began throwing white-hot rocks at each other until the bridge collapsed, leaving a perilous rapids.

Loo-Wit was burned, and her cries of pain caused the Great Spirit to transform Pahto into Mount Adams and Wyeast into Mount Hood. Loo-Wit was given the shape of a young maiden — Mount St. Helens.

In another version, Loo-Wit gave fire to the cold and hungry Indians and was rewarded by being changed into a young woman so fair that Wyeast and Pahto waged war for her affections.

Even after they were transformed into mountains, the war continued until a fiery boulder launched by Wyeast silenced

Pahto, giving Adams its rounded mass in contrast to the jagged peak of Hood.

Johnson Meninick, a Yakama cultural specialist, says he was taught as a boy that St. Helens was the youngest of five mountains, preceded by Mounts Hood, Rainier, Adams and the oldest, Spud Butte, east of Adams. He also said he was taught that the volcanoes usually erupt in sequence, making Hood likely the next to go.

U.S. Geological Survey research has found St. Helens is the youngest and most active of the Cascade volcanoes, and its eruptions have coincided closely with those of Hood.

In Northern California and southern Oregon, the Klamath and Modoc Indians told of a cataclysmic battle between the sky spirit chief Skell, who lived atop Mount Shasta, and Liao, spirit chief of the underworld, who dwelled within Mount Mazama.

Red-hot rocks the size of hills were hurled, igniting forest fires that drove the people to seek refuge in Klamath Lake.

Finally, two medicine men sacrificed themselves by leaping into the fire pit atop Mazama, giving Skell such inspiration that he prevailed in battle, beheaded his rival and cast the head into the fire pit. The heat subsided, the tears of those who mourned Liao filled Crater Lake, and the head is known today as Wizard Island.

Teenagers still face prison

Indian youths can still be sentenced despite alienation

By PEGGY ANDERSEN
Associated Press

SEATTLE

Two teen-age Indians still face prison time for robbery, despite a judge's suggestion that their banishment to remote Alaskan islands could lead to reduced sentences, an appeals court ruled Monday.

"A standard-range prison sentence inescapably awaits" Adrian Guthrie and Simon Roberts, who are spending 12 to 18 months in the wilderness to atone for robbing and beating a pizza delivery man with a bat, the state Court of Appeals said.

The court said its order did not mean the boys had to cut short their island stints.

They can renew their motion for a delay of their state sentences, the court said, so long as they realize they face standard penalties once the banishment is over.

Roberts and Guthrie, both 18 and members of the Tlingit tribe from Klawock, Alaska, pleaded guilty a year ago to assault and robbery in Everett.

Snohomish County Superior Court Judge James Allendoerfer delayed sentencing during the banishment, characterized by tribal judge Rudy James as an exercise of self-discovery, atonement and possible restitution.

James said Monday the teens' exile would continue and he would consult a tribal attorney to determine how to respond to Monday's ruling.

"We're not going to be antagonistic ... but we won't throw in the towel yet," he said. He said the ruling might be appealed to the state Supreme Court or the U.S. Supreme Court.

The teens, 16 at the time of the attack in 1993, were charged as adults. Guthrie faces a prison sentence of 31 to 41 months and Roberts, who wielded the bat, faces 55 to 65 months.

In allowing the banishment last summer, Allendoerfer told the teens he had "made no promises" and that "we're back to square one" when they returned to his court in March 1996.

But he also said the Legislature by that time might have "modified the court's authority to deviate from the state sentence" and that their behavior might provide him with grounds for an exceptional sentence.

That was improper, the three-judge appeals court said, "because an offender's conduct after the crime cannot justify an exception ... (and) a court may not delay sentencing to see if the law will change."

echoed the strong sense of resistance from the administration. "Because there was an egg fight on South Quad last year we were strongly discouraged from doing anything there again," Mathews said.

Contrary to these claims, Spencer blamed the AnTostal commission for tardiness in planning South Quad events.

"They could have had some events on South Quad if they had only planned ahead," Spencer stated.

With AnTostal '95 at a close, the focus is now on making next year better. The chair for AnTostal '96, Kerry Van Voris, plans to "make advertising stronger for next year and to pray for good weather because so much of AnTostal's success depends on good conditions."

■ CAMPUS BRIEFS

The parking lot west of Notre Dame's main gate will be closed for six weeks beginning Wednesday, May 3, to allow for continued utility construction on the University's new West Quadrangle.

Faculty and staff assigned to the lot may park in the visitor lot south of the Hesburgh Center for International Studies. A "Kontrol Kard," which is necessary to exit the parking lot without charge, can be acquired from the parking services office, room 117, in the Campus Security Building.

A temporary road has been constructed to facilitate deliveries to the Morris Inn loading dock. For more information on deliveries, contact David Herr at 631-2010.

Sarah Badger, a University of Notre Dame senior from Jordan, N.Y., will receive the University's 1995 Charles and Simone Parnell Award, according to Isabel Charles, associate provost and director of Notre Dame's international studies programs.

The Parnell Award is presented annually to a Notre Dame or Saint Mary's senior who has participated in the University's Angers, France, international studies program and who has demonstrated a high level of international awareness.

Badger, a government and French major, who studied in Angers her sophomore year, has been an active promoter of the program for the past two years, assisting Paul McDowell, the program's on-campus faculty coordinator, with recruitment and orientation meetings. This semester she was the assistant director of a French play, "Le Tartuffe," in which many former Angers students participated.

Badger recently was accepted as a volunteer in Notre Dame's Alliance for Catholic Education (ACE), which provides committed Catholic teachers for understaffed parochial schools while offering its volunteers intensive teacher training and opportunities for personal growth in a Christian community setting. She hopes to teach high school French in the program.

Badger also has worked as an intern with Families Involved in Rehabilitative Environments (FIRE), supervising visits between parents and children separated because of abuse, and has been a volunteer at the St. Joseph Catholic Worker House in South Bend.

The Parnell Award is made possible by a gift from Charles Roedig, professor emeritus of romance languages and literatures, to honor Charles Parnell, also professor emeritus of romance languages and literatures, and his wife, Simone. Both Parnells were instrumental in founding the Angers program at the Université Catholique de l'Ouest, and Charles Parnell directed the program in 1966-68, 1972-74 and 1982-83.

The award includes a cash prize and a plaque. Nominations are made by juniors and seniors in the Angers program.

Kevin Minbiole, a junior biochemistry major in the honors program at the University of Notre Dame, is a recipient of a Goldwater Scholarship award. A native of Northport, N.Y., he is currently studying abroad in London.

The scholarship Minbiole received will cover tuition, fees, books, and room and board for up to $7,000 per year.

The Goldwater Scholarship and Excellence in Education Foundation awarded 285 scholarships for the 1995-96 academic year to undergraduate sophomores and juniors. The scholars were selected on academic merit from more than 1,300 mathematics, science and engineering students nominated by colleges and universities' faculties nationwide.

The Goldwater Foundation is a federally endowed agency established in 1986. The scholarship program honors the late Sen. Barry Goldwater and is designed to encourage outstanding students to pursue careers in mathematics, the natural sciences and engineering.

University of Notre Dame sophomore, Jolene Smith of Ropham, Iowa, has won a scholarship for study abroad during the 1995-96 academic year from the National Security Education Program.

An economics and Spanish major, Smith will study at the Pontificia Universidad Católica in Quito, Ecuador, focusing on the clash between indigenous culture and modern philosophies.

The National Security Education Program provides American undergraduate students with scholarship support to acquire skills and experience in less commonly studied languages and cultures. It is sponsored by the Institute of International Education.

Glenn Rosswurm has been named assistant director of planned giving at the University of Notre Dame, according to Michelle Shakour, director of planned giving.

A 1987 graduate of Indiana University, Rosswurm received his juris doctor degree from the Notre Dame Law School in 1991. As a law student, he was book review editor of the "Notre Dame Law Review" and received the William Kirby award for excellence in memorandum writing in 1988.

Following his graduation from law school, Rosswurm was a trial section associate with May, Oberfell and Lorber in South Bend, Ind. In 1993, he opened his own law firm specializing in state and federal mediation.

Notre Dame's office of planned giving administers gifts received by the University through estates, trusts and similar arrangements. Rosswurm's duties will include expanding the office's programming and educational materials, visiting with University alumni and friends nationwide, and working with the Theodore Badin Guild, Notre Dame's honorary recognition society for planned gift beneficiaries.

Baby Richard 'interacting' with family

By MIKE ROBINSON
Associated Press

CHICAGO
Baby Richard fed ducks, looked through books and talked on the phone with his adoptive family Monday, his first full day with the biological parents who fought for four years to raise him.

The blond 4-year-old hit it off reasonably well with Otakar and Daniela Kirchner, said their lawyer Loren Heinemann. "They were interacting," Heinemann said. "I won't say they were bonding right away, but they were interacting. Things were OK."

On Richard's first night in the Kirchners' two-bedroom suburban apartment, his biological parents slept on the floor in his room to allay any fears, Heinemann said.

"He got a little weepy during the mid-evening — basically, the I-want-to-go-home type of thing," Heinemann said. "Then he came out and had a little snack."

The state Supreme Court granted Kirchner custody in January, ruling the adoption was illegal because he'd been told the child was born dead. Kirchner took custody Sunday.

The child's adoptive family, Kimberly and Robert Warburton, took him home when he was 4 days old. They are identified in court papers only as John and Jane Doe.

His biological mother was under the mistaken belief that Kirchner had abandoned her and told him the boy had died.

When she told him the truth, their child was 57 days old. He launched his custody battle, and the couple later married.

The battle prompted Americans to re-evaluate adoption laws in light of the best interests of the child and the rights of the biological father.

Mrs. Kirchner gives facials in a beauty parlor. Kirchner is an unemployed restaurant manager. He wants to spend a few months getting to know his son, then go back to work, Heinemann said.

Richard was raised Lutheran, while the Kirchners are Roman Catholic. The Kirchners will now attend a Lutheran church, Heinemann said.

Consider summer classes at Holy Cross College

Session I – May 18 to June 23
Session II – June 26 to August 3

There are some good reasons to take classes at Holy Cross College this summer. Perhaps you could benefit from one or both of our summer sessions, each offering a wide variety of quality general education courses. Or maybe our affordable summer tuition rate of $140 per credit hour sounds appealing.

Whatever the reason, Holy Cross College summer sessions can offer you the opportunity to use your time more productively during the upcoming summer break. You can take advantage of our exceptionally small classes, dedicated and caring faculty and our convenient location just to the west of the University of Notre Dame campus. And, of course, credit earned is transferrable.

So why not write or call today for more information about Holy Cross College? Applications for Summer Sessions I and II, as well as for the 1995 Fall Semester, are now being accepted.

FBI releases new sketch of bombing suspect

Profile given of the elusive 'John Doe 2'

By ROCHELLE HINES
Associated Press

OKLAHOMA CITY
The FBI today released a new sketch of the man sought in the federal building bombing, giving the public a profile view of the suspect known as John Doe 2.
The announcement came as rescue workers prepared to turn the task of removing the remains of some 60 people missing in the blast to machines that can safely clear rubble from the shaky shell of the building.

FBI Special Agent Weldon Kennedy displayed a sketch of a stocky man in a baseball cap seen at the location of the April 19 blast with Timothy McVeigh, who is charged with the nation's most deadly act of domestic terrorism.

Kennedy provided a few new tidbits of information: John Doe 2 is "very tan" and muscular, and may be a weightlifter.

"He should be considered armed and very dangerous," Kennedy said.

Another lead emerged when Arizona state police announced the FBI is looking for an Arizona license plate registered to a man believed to be a possible witness to the bombing.

Arizona plate JWK923, is believed to belong to a 1981 White Thunderbird driven by Gary Allen Land, said Sgt. Dave Myers, spokesman for the Arizona Department of Public Safety. He was last seen at a hotel in Vinita, Okla., Myers said.

Tom Crafton, manager of Deward and Pauline's motel in Vinita, said FBI agents came in car and in helicopter Saturday night to "check out a guy who had been here."

Crafton says the man they were looking for stayed the night of the bombing.

The death toll rose to 137, including 15 children. Fifty people are officially listed as missing.

Fire Chief Gary Marrs said a huge backhoe would be brought in to drag the pulverized wreckage the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building clear of the building's dangerously unstable skeleton.

Marrs refused to acknowledge the change means rescuers have given up hope of

Clinton takes stand against evil

In a poignant address Sunday to survivors of Nazi death camps, President Clinton said the Oklahoma City bombing proves that hatred still lurks and urged Americans "to stand against new forms of organized evil." "Ultimately, I wanted to be here today, after all our country has been through in these last days, because you have taught me that the vigilance of memory is our greatest defense," Clinton said.

Wearing a black yarmulke, Clinton told 6,000 Jewish survivors in a dimly lit Paramount Theater that the world must never forget or repeat the Holocaust.

As the generation of Holocaust witnesses passes away, Clinton said new generations of Americans must continue "to fight all forms of racism, to combat those who distort the past and peddle hate in the present, to stand against new forms of organized evil."

He did not specifically condemn paramilitary groups or domestic terrorists, but alluded to Oklahoma City when he said, "As we have seen, hatred still flourishes where it has a chance."

Clinton was to address a dinner sponsored by the World Jewish Congress. Aides said he planned to unveil new measures to combat terrorism.

finding anyone alive 12 days after the blast.

However, Gov. Frank Keating, who has been preparing Oklahomans for the possibility for several days, said late Sunday night that rescuers had "crossed the river" and had accepted that everyone inside is dead.

Concern now is for the safety of the crews that have been sifting by hand through the pulverized rubble of the building despite the threat parts of the structure could collapse on them.

"You reach a point where you don't jeopardize human beings in order to extract the dead," Keating said.

He said machines would begin work within a day or two. Some victims' remains probably will never be recovered, Keating said.

Rescue workers support the decision to switch to heavy equipment, said Oklahoma City police Sgt. Lynn McCumber.

"This thing's gone on for 12 days now, and we've dug through that by hand," McCumber said. "We need to bring an end to this."

Since Thursday, no rescue workers have been in the section of the building believed to contain the collapsed remains of a crowded Social Security office, Marrs said.

Farrakhan plot goes to trial

Shabazz accused of planning to kill father's rival

By JEFFREY SHELMAN
Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS
Amid allegations of a government plot to further a split in the civil rights movement, a daughter of Malcolm X's is being tried on charges she plotted to kill Louis Farrakhan, a rival of the slain civil rights leader.

Qubilah Shabazz is accused of trying to hire a hit man to murder the fiery Nation of Islam leader because she believed he had a hand in the 1965 assassination of her father. The prosecution contends Shabazz was obsessed with killing Farrakhan, whom her mother had publicly accused of involvement in Malcolm X's murder.

Farrakhan denied being involved in plotting his death but has conceded that he fueled anti-Malcolm X sentiment.

"I have a lot at stake. I lost my father and I'm risking losing my mother," the 34-year-old Shabazz told the supposed hit man, a high school acquaintance who was working as a government informant, court documents show.

Farrakhan

The defense argues that the government informant, Michael Fitzpatrick, lured Shabazz into the plot by romancing her and preying upon her fears for her family.

The trial was to begin with jury selection today in U.S. District Court. If convicted, Shabazz faces up to 90 years in prison and a $2.25 million fine. She has been free on $10,000 bail.

Farrakhan, who was never attacked, has said he believes Shabazz was set up by the government.

Judge James M. Rosenbaum has admonished attorneys not to talk about the case.

Before his warning, which stopped short of a formal gag order, the attorneys had laid out their general strategies.

Don't blame it on the rain

Blaming the weather seems to be the easy thing to do after an AnTostal week that bordered on disaster. While Friday afternoon's sun drew hundreds out onto Fieldhouse Mall for laser tag, bungee runs and the St. Ed's Carnival, many of the events scheduled for earlier in the week met a much less fortunate fate.

Why the apathetic reaction? Well, the weather certainly played a role in wreaking havoc on the schedule of events, which made much of the festival's advertising inaccurate and confusing. But in reality, the rain is just a convenient excuse for a lack of student organization and administration flexibility.

AnTostal's woes are evident on the other side of U.S. 31 too. Rather than holding an AnTostal "Saint Mary's Day," as in years past, the SMC Student Activities Board staged a virtual secession. SMCTostal emerged as a reaction to Notre Dame's dismissal of Saint Mary's relevance to the festival. With the continual preaching for improved Notre Dame-Saint Mary relations, the festival illustrates how the campuses are not growing any closer.

There is no reason for AnTostal '96 to repeat this year's failure. Is a week-long festival held during the busiest days of the semester going to promote participation? Probably not. Looking back on last week, it seems that the $20,000 budget was spent on a long list of small scale events, like the air toys at Fieldhouse Mall. It's little wonder that PigTostal was more popular.

A better strategy would be to condense the festival into one or two days while spending money on several big events; the festival could be packed into a single weekend which would also include the Blue-Gold football game and Bookstore Basketball.

By focusing on our Irish tradition rather than a weak theme like "Quest for the Crown," AnTostal can gain the momentum and notoriety necessary to become more than just a Gaelic name. The University could even promote the festival by canceling classes on Friday. Don't laugh: At other schools like Indiana, Michigan and Purdue, spring festivals are the highlight of the semester. Staging such a festival is not impossible. After all, Notre Dame is the home of NBC football weekends and JPW extravaganzas.

While it is an easy cop-out to propose another survey or committee, in this case, it is exactly the thing to do. Both Notre Dame and Saint Mary's students need to voice their input on what they expect from the festival, and then make an effort to participate in the end result. Ultimately, organizers must be held accountable—rain or no rain.

After all, it is your money.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Support selling students short

Dear Editor:

Notre Dame has again come to the end of an academic year, which means, in an apparent self-congratulations for continuing to let students attend its halls, that they have yet again increased tuition. This year, thanks to a slight rise in inflation, however, tuition is only increasing at a two-fold rate over consumer prices.

While this letter may seem, to the administration, like the moaning of an otherwise financially well-off-child-of-the-CEO, I would like to start off with a story as to what the tuition means. For myself, it means that I will be leaving this school one semester early, and with a dwindling number of regrets for doing so. My mother simply cannot afford to send me here, and this will be the only way I can save her the money she doesn't have. Perhaps this is the sacrifice we are to make for the Catholic Church.

What has happened is that, even for the middle class, the University is on the edge of pricing us out. Forget the traditional blue-collar Catholics: the best they will ever be able to do is root for our football team. The middle class—the upper middle class—is beginning to be sacked as well. Our education, and college experience, has been impeded upon by the shadow of debt.

What we are going through makes no sense, in relation to university finances. For starters, the university points to the fact that it intends to spend more (four percent, as opposed to a six percent increase) on financial aid next semester. But how much will be for student loans? When we subtract the increase in student loans, and add the amount of money received from interest on these accounts, we will see a more accurate picture as to how much the university is truly losing in student aid.

I would also like to state that I am aware (thanks to Mark Yusko of the Investment Department) of a stock purchase that the university made early last year, in which they bought into a company, at $1.50 a share, approximately three million dollars worth of shares. As of February, the price of stock in this company had risen to sixty five dollars a share, meaning that the university was sitting on, as of February 1995, $130 million in a single stock purchase, a net profit of $127 million. Not only is this enough money to pay for financial aid for all of academic year 1994-95 (approximately $114 million), but the extra $13 million in profits brings in $1 million dollars more than the tuition increase. If the university failed to at least hold its own in its remaining holdings in a year when the stock exchange broke 4000, I strongly advise turning their portfolio over to a better brokerage firm.

Now we can talk about the one billion dollars in endowments. The one billion dollars sitting in there, to my knowledge (and I was informed by a person in the finance department), is earmarked for the endowment of chairs, construction of new buildings, expansion of scholarships and financial aid; essentially, to develop "a learning environment of cutting edge technology." If this fund, then, is used to cover our "long-term university plans," then why do they need more cash from us? What good does it do if they are really giving it back in financial aid? Why not increase the withdrawal total from the endowment fund? We'll fall in U.S. News; big deal. If they don't want to rank us based on our education alone, then that is their problem.

Finally, I think that what the university is putting us through is a perfect reason as to why Federal Financial Aid should be cut, if not abolished. The fewer students that can afford to go here, the fewer the number of people the University will be able to select from. Eventually, the University will have to select 1800 students from a pool of 1500, meaning there will be a unique blend of utter morons and people trying to get an education.

Of course, in this situation, it would only be a matter of time until the university (and others like it) fold, based on their "let's suck more money" policy. The intelligent children, meanwhile, will be attending local and state schools, pushing the quality of education back up in environments where others will benefit as well.

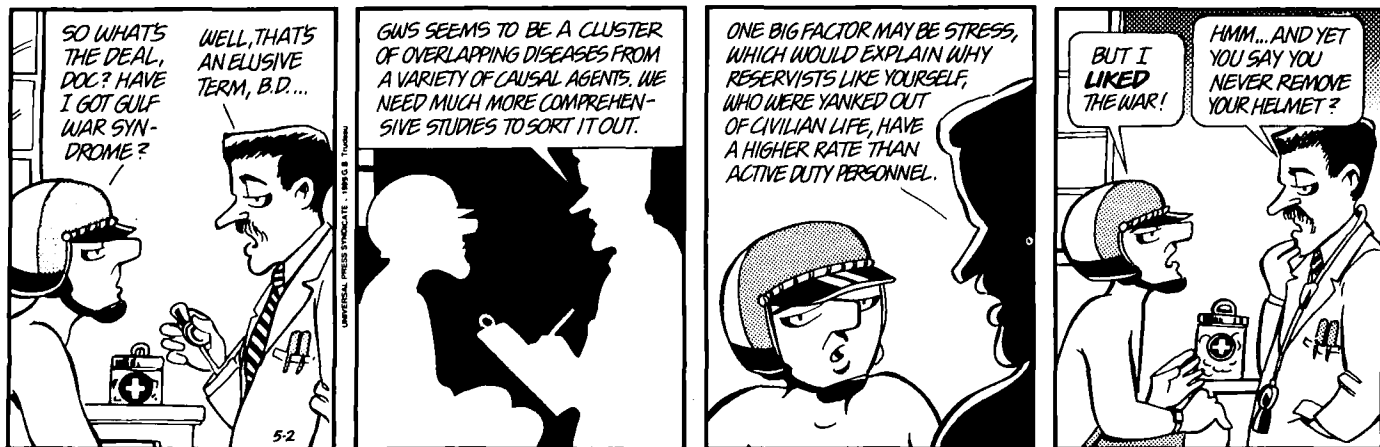

So where is this money going? That's what I would like to know. Unfortunately, we can only find out if we donate an additional three thousand dollars to the University, at which point we would have the option of seeing what exactly they are spending it on. Given the state of the administration, the makeshift slabs of construction material that they call dorms, the deteriorating library, and the dire lack of computer space on campus (but this will all be cured with only a six percent rise in tuition!), I really am curious.

Maybe it goes into leavened bread for mass. After all, everyone can see the dough rising.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Neglected draft pick draws fan's attention

Dear Editor:

This letter is in response to the articles on Friday April 21, 1995 and the following article on Monday April 24, 1995. The lack of objectivity and research in the article concerning the upcoming draft and prospective draftees in Friday's article by Tim Sherman is extremely disappointing.

The purpose of being a reporter is to do the necessary research concerning the subject. If Tim Sherman had done the necessary research he would not have deemed it necessary to omit one key player in the Irish secondary who was subsequently drafted. Travis Davis started 10 of the 11 games for the Irish and was consistently a top tackler for the defense.

It seems amazing to me that Tim Sherman neglected to mention his name as a prospective draftee. Perhaps it would not have been such a "pleasant surprise", as Monday's article on the draft noted about Travis Davis being drafted, had Mr. Sherman researched all viable contenders for the upcoming draft. Had he researched the topic fully he would have known that Travis Davis did not "apparently" do a good job at the combines, he did an outstanding job at the combines, earning him a place in the 1995 draft.

While the writer's apparent lack of faith in both Travis Davis and the Notre Dame players' prospects in the draft (he omitted quite a few players) is not surprising given the harsh criticisms of the 1994 Irish football team, I think that perhaps in the future a little bit more research needs to be done, to avoid any disrespect to the players and to avoid being embarrassed.

LIFE AFTER FINALS

Education begins where ND ends

I thought my education ended on May 16, 1993, when I earned my bachelor's degree from the University of Notre Dame.

That was before I found out my friend and colleague "Amanda" was fired because she was smoking crack. Again.

(I don't know why I am disguising her name. Neither she nor any of her friends have any connections with Notre Dame, and I am the only person in my office who even knows that there is such a newspaper called The Observer. Maybe it's just easier for me to deal with this if I don't have to see her name on my computer screen. But I digress.)

Amanda first came to work at my newspaper shortly after I did. Since we were both fairly new, we sort of learned the ins and outs of our jobs together. I found out that she liked country music, cats and the color purple. I learned to put up with her Florida Cracker drawl, and she tried to decipher my Boston accent.

A few months after she starting working there, my boss discovered that Amanda had tried to steal a company check. The reason: she had blown all her rent money for that money on crack. His first impulse was to fire her, but Amanda promised that she would get help for her addiction. Being a man of mercy, my boss decided to give her a second chance.

Amanda was true to her word. She joined Narcotics Anonymous, a 12-step program for recovering drug addicts. She learned how to deal with stress in a non-chemical way. As an incentive, for every time period she stayed off drugs, she received a key chain that stated how long she had been "clean and serene." She even found a new boyfriend who was recovering from an addiction himself.

We all thought he was a big improvement over the loser she had been seeing before.

Everyone thought that the problem was solved, and she was going to be OK. That was until a couple of months ago, when my boss' 9-year-old daughter pointed out that, all of a sudden, she didn't have as many key chains as she used to. (An office filled with journalists, and a little girl is the first one to notice this. I still can't figure that out.)

After being confronted about this, Amanda admitted that she had fallen off the wagon and was smoking crack again.

Soon after that, she started to miss days of work, coming up with excuses about her car or her alarm clock.

Then one day, Amanda went home for lunch and never returned to work. My boss called her at home and found out she was too high to come to work. That's when the decision was made to fire her.

I recently found out that Amanda has resumed her Narcotics Anonymous program and, despite my worst fears, she still has a roof over her head. She never got around to giving me her new phone number, and I haven't been able to reach her since she was fired. I hope she's OK.

This is just a little reminder to you that your education will not be confined to lecture halls, laboratories or libraries.

It won't be confined to your time at Notre Dame, either.

EVERY THOUGHT'S A POSSIBILITY

All I really need to know I learned this year

As I've prepared myself for my big debut as an Observer Viewpoint writer, I've done the usual studying of example articles. Without him knowing it, I've gotten to know Josh Ozersky very well. So, though my first article is coming out in one of the last issues of the Observer, you'll be hearing from me more often next year. This is sort of a preview for y'all...so, the big question has been, what should I write about? Since we all

3)Indigo Girls and Michelle Malone. For those of you who hate these women, don't read this. But hey, I couldn't write a Top 10 list without mentioning music. Michelle Malone fronts a band called Band de Soleil. They are probably better remembered as the group who threw out condoms at their show on Notre Dame's campus. The Indigo Girls, well, you just gotta love the girls. Both Atlanta-based groups...they provide us with the passion and the poetry. Enough said.

4)Nick's Patio...okay, so I still have other favorites. Steak-n-Shake, Denny's, but made my first jaunt to Nick's a couple weeks back. Great food, great service, and you are always bound to run into someone you know.

5)Road Trips. Travel, it's good for the mind. For those of you who made the trips to the FSU and B.C. games, you know what I mean. There's a certain freedom in busting out on that highway, windows down, music blaring. So, take a trip. I promise you won't miss school too much.

6)Art. I never really learned to appreciate art until meeting two very talented artists this year. It's amazing to me how it really becomes an outgrowth of the person. It serves as a great means for self-expression and I'm learning that in some way, we are all artists!

7)Drama and Tension...two new words in my vocabulary as of late. It seems during the crunch of these final days, everyone is a bit testy. But hey, you just have to remember that life always hands you lemons. So, go make some lemonade! What doesn't kill you will definitely make you stronger.

8)Meeting new people. Okay, so you seem to be in reflective moods lately, I thought I'd give a top ten list of the things I've learned this year. You may or may not benefit from this information. Take it for what it's worth. So, in no particular order:

1)Truman's—Okay, so it's a gay bar. But hey, don't knock it until you've tried it. Making my first appearance at Truman's just a few short weeks ago, I felt this place was really the place to be. You're thinking, "But what if someone, of the same sex no less, tries to pick me up?" Look, it's no different than a straight bar. You come with your friends, you dance with your friends, and you leave with your friends. Cling to the people you go with if need be. But, trust me, the music is much better, the atmosphere oh so nice, and you'll find that the people who do try and pick you up are better than most of the winners you'll encounter at the 'Backer.

2)NDE...short for Notre Dame Encounter. Saw it. Did it. Loved it. No, we're not talking about sex here. The NDE is a weekend-long retreat that is truly a spiritual experience. For those of you that have applied and haven't gotten on, to you I say, "Keep applying!" For those of you who haven't, apply, you'll come out of the experience a better person.

can't help but smile when after meeting someone briefly, you see them again and they remember your name. Or you say, "Hey, give me a call sometime," and they actually call. Then you begin talking on a regular basis and you hang out together and whom! it hits you...I have a new friend. Truly one of my better lessons this year.

9)Consistency...ah yes, one of my favorite words. These are all those little things you do that define you, that make you known to others. They are the things that make you know that when you see your friend who is an engineering major, that she'll always have her distance-meter with her. It is the drive that causes you to never waiver, the thought never crossing your mind that might do it differently today. People may love these things about you or hate them. But the fact that you stick to them and are always consistent is what gains you respect.

10)GLND/SMC-Okay, so you're thinking, not this again. Sorry, but I've learned a lot from watching the beating this group has taken this year. I can honestly say that watching this has taught me what not to do. I may take some heat for saying this, but the way in which Notre Dame has handled this has been disheartening and unimpressive. There is no love lost between myself and the administration, because the love and loving community I thought existed here obviously doesn't.

That's it folks. Adieu until August. Only 10 more days. I leave you with a parting thought from the Indigo Girls: "...the best thing you've ever done for me is to help me take my life less seriously, it's only life after all!"

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Dooley spirit inspires service

Dear Editor:

I take great exception to Pieder Beeli's referral to Tom Dooley as an unrepentant sodomite and his recommendation for the removal of the statue at the Grotto. I read all of Dooley's books about his experiences in Laos and read his mother's moving tribute "Promises to Keep" when I was in junior high.

Among other things, these books shaped my sense of compassion and duty to our fellow man as well as my Christian faith. It is in part due to these books and his life example that I devoted two years away from family and friends to volunteer service in a foreign country. His spirit and example will always remain a part of my life and indeed is a lesson for us all.

On my first visit to the Grotto, I was pleasantly surprised to see his letter to Father Hesburgh and his statue and thought there is no better place than this to remind people of Dooley's work.

I feel sorry for Pieder Beeli who I would venture to guess really is not aware of who Tom Dooley really was. It is small minds like his that promote the discord currently happening on this campus. It is too bad that he must go through his life putting people like Dooley down and not focusing on the greater goodness of all people.

I don't care "what" Dooley was, it is inconsequential to me. Who he was is by far the greater importance and I would invite Pieder Beeli to go to his local library and find out who Tom Dooley was and is in the hearts of all who are moved by his life.

Opera workshop quality merits more recognition

Dear Editor:

I would like to congratulate Garry Grice, the director of the Notre Dame Opera Workshop, along with everyone else who was involved with the production, on the wonderful performances of Mozart's Don Giovanni that were given.

The singing, acting and orchestral playing were all splendid. Don Giovanni is a difficult opera to mount, for any company, let alone a small university workshop with limited resources; yet the challenge posed by the opera was met with tremendous enthusiasm.

The evening I attended was a memorable one for me and I think for the entire audience. Notre Dame has a real jewel in its opera workshop and one hopes that it will begin to receive the recognition it deserves.

Bookstore Basketball: Cheers and jeers

Congratulating 'Guns'

Dear Editor:

We compliment the staff of The Observer on their in-depth coverage from the commencement of the Men's (Co-Ed) Bookstore Basketball Tournament through the championship game on Sunday. As former undergraduate students and current law students, we know how important this event is to the student body.

As female students, we are also aware that there was a Women's division of the tournament. Apparently nobody on the staff of The Observer was aware that 40 female teams competed. These teams advanced to the championship round and a talented women's team, "Big Guns", was victorious on Sunday afternoon. It is too bad The Observer neglected to even mention this facet of the tournament, and more egregiously failed to compliment these women on their achievement.

In addition to chastising The Observer for its lack of judgment in excluding coverage of the Women's Tournament, allow us, as representatives of the student body, to congratulate "Big Guns" on their impressive win.

Women lack coverage

Dear Editor:

Notably absent from The Observer's extensive coverage of Bookstore Basketball was the Women's Tournament. Remarkably, not a single article or picture appeared, despite the participation of 40 women's teams.

The championship game was played on Sunday, April 30, before a cheering crowd who, along with the players, braved rain and cold. Big Guns triumphed over Flynn's Britches 21-12. The game featured an exciting match-up of former ND varsity teammates Coquese Washington (ND '93) and current senior Letitia Bowen.

We also await the Bookstore Commissioner's scheduling of the Women's Tournament awards ceremony and the naming of Ms. Bookstore 1995.

Tourney lacks honor and truth

Dear Editor:

I ask you, "What's wrong with this picture?" In a community which cherishes the ideals of honor, trustworthiness, and veracity, it is sad that these ideals do not hold for Bookstore Basketball. I attended one of the recent bookstore basketball games, (Friday, April 28, 4:00pm) and I was highly dissatisfied with the officiating of this particular game; namely, the cheating which occurred.

As I stood near the sidelines and the baseline, I could hear a referee giving instructions to the team, Sweeter than Candy. He informed them of the opposing teams plays. He warned them of the positions and movements of opposing team members as the plays arose. This referee basically stood on the sidelines coaching the team, Sweeter than Candy. I ask you, how can a referee be impartial when he is coaching one of the teams?

However more incidents angered me. Before the tournament began, all of the teams and referees met to discuss the basketball rules and regulations associated with the tournament. Apparently this referee forgot these rules. Let me explain. When a player gets slapped in the face seven times, its called a foul, not a jump ball. When a player takes several steps without dribbling the ball, its called traveling. When an offensive player stands in the lane (defined by the free throw lines) for longer than three seconds it is called a three second violation. This means that the other team gets the ball.

But I prefer not to believe that this referee was forgetful, biased seems more pertinent. This referee used basketball rules to the advantage of his favored team. He inconsistently called fouls, only seeing the ones committed by the opposing team. In fact, he could not have been forgetful if he was able to call a charging foul from the opposite end of the court against the opposing team.

Granted that animosity will exist, Notre Dame prides itself on its honor. In the upcoming games of the Bookstore Basketball tournament, please extend this honorable courtesy to all of the teams.

Experience for the "Real World"

SMC student puts know-how to the test

By JENNIFER LEWIS
Saint Mary's Assistant Editor

HELPING HANDS

Maureen Mullaney hasn't even graduated from Saint Mary's yet, but already she is putting her education to the test out there in the real world. This senior Social Work major is interning at the Child Abuse and Neglect Coordination Organization (CANCO) for her second consecutive semester. At CANCO, she applies her Social Work degree by co-facilitating children's groups, as well as working with teen parents and parents of adolescent children.

CANCO's mission statement is to prevent and eliminate child abuse and neglect through advocacy, education, intervention and treatment. In order for interns like Maureen to receive funding, they must fit this statement.

Mullaney devotes her Tuesday's and Thursday's to CANCO, where she works 20 hours a week. She begins her day co-counseling five mothers who have either experienced an abusive relationship, are on the verge of having an abusive relationship or are mothers of children that were in an abusive relationship.

"At first I didn't think I could relate to the mothers in my group," said Mullaney. "I didn't feel like I had a right to teach a parenting course without being a parent. With time, it was fulfilling to know that the women could confide in me and learn from my training. I still believe that when I am a parent I will have a lot more inside, but for now, I have enough confidence in myself to help co-facilitate a group."

Mullaney works with people who are living on a month to month basis. They are people struggling with pay checks and people that have unhappy home lives.

Confidentiality is key. Each group must make a confidential pact with one another. Because of the nature of the agency, Mullaney can not approach any individual in her group outside of the office, unless they approach her first.

"I can sympathize with the people in my group, but I will never fully understand the pain they are going through,"

I didn't feel like I had a right to teach a parenting course without being a parent. With time, it was fulfilling to know that the women could confide in me and learn from my training.'

Maureen Mullaney

said Mullaney. "It gets hard at times, but it's eye opening. I thank God for giving me the chance to go to college."

The rest of Mullaney's day is occupied by staff meetings and working with CANCO's satellite office, The Boys and Girls Club, where she co-counsels a "girls group." The main purpose of the group is to counsel pre-teen girls on teen sexuality. They discuss date rape, sex, the Just Say No policy and the changes that take place in a young girl's body.

The Observer/ Cynthia Exconde
Saint Mary's student Maureen Mullaney applies her social work degree interning with the Child Abuse and Neglect Coordination Organization.

When Mullaney started working with the group there were only 7 girls. This number increased to fourteen. According to Mullaney, the children come to the group as an after school activity. It is a place for them to hang out and bring their friends.

Mullaney's most recent project lasted three months. She worked with a six-year-old girl, using play therapy. "I grew in a relationship with her," said Mullaney. "It was hard to say good-bye. I will never be able to call her or talk to her again, unless she makes the first move. She will be able to write me through the agency, but it's unlikely."

Mullaney will only receive four credit hours for her work with CANCO, but she will take this year of experience with her to her next vocation. "If I had the choice, I would do it all over again," said Mullaney. "It helped me know for sure what I wanted to do with my life. Before CANCO, I didn't think I could handle the emotional stress that comes along with the field. Now I know I am prepared."

CANCO offers internship opportunities for students who want to put their knowledge to the test. Helping Hands is a weekly feature that focuses on service oriented activities.

SETTING OUT TO SERVE

By ANDREA JORDAN
Assistant Accent Editor

Is this you? Approaching graduation and unsure if the road you took in college is the road you want to take throughout life? Well, even if this is not you right now, it could be you or a friend later in life.

Currently many seniors are about to put off graduate school or the workplace for a year or two to go to various parts of the country and even other countries. These seniors will not be vacationing, as one may have thought, but they will be putting in many hours of service work. What motivates a senior to do this is multifold.

Jennifer Whiteside, a current senior at Notre Dame who will be participating in a year-long Holy Cross Associates-USA service program following graduation, explained, "This will help decide if social work is my career."

Other seniors may have different reasons. Many of the seniors, for instance, have previously been involved in service programs coordinated by the university, such as Urban Plunge and Summer Service projects, and from these have been inspired on to serve longer.

Senior Missy Pumphrey remarked, "Notre Dame students are more aware of service as a full-time opportunity."

Most senior service programs began about 15 to 20 years ago, and since then there have been many progressive changes. Mary Ann Roemer, Center for Social Concerns coordinator for senior service programs, commented that over the past years, hundreds of programs have been initiated.

Among the programs offered are Alliance for Catholic Education (ACE), Holy Cross Associates USA, Holy Cross Associates Chile, Jesuit Volunteer Corps, Peace Corps, Vicentian Service Corps, to name just a few.

Roemer added that for seniors, service has become a much more reflective, integrated process. Initially, seniors volunteered for service, but most did not think of it as selecting their path in life.

Now, about 200 seniors or about 10% of the senior class join these programs, much higher numbers than 15 or 20 years ago. This percentage of seniors who choose post-graduate service is among the highest in the nation.

When asked if acceptance into these programs is competitive, Roemer noted that acceptance into the more well-known programs can be extremely competitive, but that service through the smaller programs can be equally if not more rewarding.

In celebration of those seniors who have chosen service, a Senior Send-Off ceremony will be held Saturday, May 20. The ceremony will be held in Washington Hall at 10:00 a.m. with a reception to follow at the CSC.

The send-off is an opportunity to recognize seniors who will be involved in service programs, both those coordinated through the CSC and independently organized programs as well, and to inform other students about service opportunities.

The send-off is also an opportunity for the families of these seniors to share in this recognition. Guest speakers will be Father "Monk" Malloy, Mary Ann Roemer, and alumni who have participated in service programs in the past.

A task force of about 20 students, headed by senior Katie Glynn and organized by Mary Ann Roemer coordinated this ceremony.

'Students at Notre Dame are very fortunate to have the Center for Social Concerns to open up many opportunities for them to be involved in service.'

Missy Pumphrey

Missy Pumphrey, head of the publicity side of the task force said, "Students at Notre Dame are very fortunate to have the Center for Social Concerns to open up many opportunities for them to be involved in service."

Pumphrey believes that the very fact that the CSC exists is indicative of Notre Dame's unique commitment to service. This commitment, which extends far beyond the CSC, can also be felt in other areas, such as dorm involvement with service projects, and undoubtedly contributes to the high numbers of Notre Dame seniors who choose service.

While service is often underappreciated at other universities, this is not the case at Notre Dame. The Senior Send-Off is another example of Notre Dame's efforts to recognize the importance of service and to encourage others to continue this Notre Dame tradition.

Whether the reason for doing service is a desire to help people, or an option for someone who is unsure about life's path, post-graduation service projects can be the most worthwhile option for some graduates.

This is a follow-up piece to a previous feature that appeared in Accent.

With a new roster, the Belles traveled to Hilton Head for spring training where they were again able to compete with some high-quality competition, including a Division I team. The Belles went 3-4 in Hilton Head against four good Midwest teams, which rallied them into their official spring season.

The Belles' fall season opened up with a difficult loss to DePauw University, with only senior Andrea Ayres winning her match.

Ayres, originally the team's number two singles and number one doubles player, quit the team soon after due to conflict difficulties along with freshman Kate Marhoefer, the team's number three singles player. These losses caused the Belles to have to make even further lineup adjustments, which was especially difficult for the team.

"Andrea was a big loss for the team," said senior Nancy Waibel. "She had been with our team for four years, filled the number two spot, and won a lot of her matches."

The Belles did not surrender, however, and earned a desired invitation to the Midwest Invitational tournament in Wisconsin due to their spring 3-2 record.

At the invitational, the Belles lost two of their three matches to tough Division II competition, while winning one of the team's most valued wins of the season against Albion College. Because of the big win, the Belles ended up 12th out of 16 teams at the invitational. This standing topped the Belles' 16th out of 16 teams standing last year.

The last major highlight of the Belles' season this year came in their enormous victory against Saint Joseph's College in late April. The win was unexpected for the team, and also to their coach, Katie Cromer. Cromer recognized the fact that they had lost to Saint Joe's in the fall, before they had suffered the losses of their number two, three, four, and six players. However, the team fought hard and created a surprise for Coach Cromer as well as their greatest accomplishment of the season.

"I attribute our success at Saint Joseph's to the performances of sophomore Anne Underwood and freshman Jen Brahler," said Cromer.

She admires the 100% efforts of all the teammates in the meet and throughout the season.

The remaining two matches for the Belles were disappointing losses, but were still crucial to the team's season.

"This season was very interesting," said Coach Cromer. "There were lots of major adjustments which I give credit to the girls for their ability to adjust. Hopefully this season has provided the team with lots of playing experience that will be beneficial to the team in future seasons."

Waibel also feels that the season was beneficial.

"The season was rough because of lost players that caused us to move the lineup around," said Waibel. "I expect a great team next year due to our number one, nationally-ranked singles player Kate Kozacik who is a sophomore, along with the number of freshman on the team."

COLLEGE FOOTBALL

Michigan mischief persists

By HARRY ATKINS
Associated Press

ANN ARBOR, Mich. James Duderstadt stood in the glare of television lights, trying to explain yet another brush with the law concerning his athletic department.

The University of Michigan president announced Monday that coach Gary Moeller had been suspended with pay while the school investigates his weekend fight in a restaurant and scuffle with police.

Clearly, this was not a job the head of a large, proud research institution cherished. Yet trouble somehow keeps finding the Wolverines. In the past two years:

—Two players from the "Fab Five" basketball team and two others from the Wolverines football team were arrested for stealing beer.

—The hockey coach was arrested for urinating in public.

—A football player was suspended for throwing a student through a plate-glass window.

—Another football player was arrested for mistakenly shooting at some police officers.

—Three other football players just admitted their guilt in stealing a credit card and buying merchandise with it.

"The University of Michigan is a large place," Duderstadt said. "We're a large commu-

Moss apologizes

Associated Press

PARKERSBURG, W.Va. Randy Moss, who received trophies as the state's top football and basketball player, turned an acceptance speech into a public apology for his part in a recent fight at DuPont High School.

The Notre Dame football recruit and another student have been charged with malicious wounding in a March 23 incident at the high school.

Fellow student Ernest Roy Johnson was hospitalized with injuries to his spleen, liver and kidney and suffered a concussion.

Moss and the other student, whose name has not been released because he is a minor, transferred out of DuPont shortly after the fight.

At a banquet Sunday, Moss received the Kennedy Award as the high school football player of the year and the Evans Award as the basketball player of the year.

After thanking his teammates, coaches and mother, Moss apologized.

"I have extended my apologies to the individual and his family," Moss said. "But I want to say something publicly. I lost my head and reacted because I heard that he was toting a gun. But that's no excuse. I didn't use my better judgment."

"I've learned a lot from this mistake. I'm ready to face the consequences for my actions. Please pray for me and my family as we go through this difficult time," he said.

On occasion such unfortunate incidents occur. In the end, those of us in leadership positions have to accept responsibility for that.

"Such incidents are always quite unfortunate. And when such misfortunes occur, we obviously are sorry and if necessary make the appropriate apologies and take the necessary action."

Duderstadt said assistant Lloyd Carr had been named interim coach.

He said he was too soon to say whether Moeller might be fired.

"I think that's very speculative at this point," he said. "We want to find what the real facts behind the incident are and the degree to which those have implications for the integrity of our programs and the integrity of the university."

Duderstadt said Moeller was with athletic director Joe Roberson at a Big Ten meeting in Orlando, Fla. Moeller, who faces arraignment May 8, has declined comment, citing an attorney's advice.

"We want to give coach Moeller a fair hearing, a fair investigation," Duderstadt said. "I think it would be quite inappropriate to speculate what the outcome of that might be. At this stage, we know little more than what has been written in the press."

Moeller, 54, was released on bond after he was arrested on misdemeanor charges of disorderly conduct and assault and battery about 10 p.m. Friday.

The two friends are still in the process of meshing their talents at the No.1 doubles entry. Every practice provides an opportunity to build upon their previous success. For example, last Thursday's practice might not have ended in victory, but Crabtree and Lord still learned from the experience.

"Today we played badly, but I still knew where she was," Lord said. "We were playing more as a team. I think it gets better with every match."

However, the 1994-1995 campaign does not mark the first time Crabtree and Lord have formed an alliance. Even before they entered Notre Dame, a junior tournament provided the first opportunity for them to play doubles.

In the fall of their freshman year at Notre Dame, Crabtree and Lord also played together as they received an initial taste of the collegiate doubles world.

"I've always looked forward to playing with Holyn," Crabtree added. "We ended up doing pretty well our freshman year and our coach decided to switch some things up this year."

"It's been nice to play together again this year and hopefully we'll play together next year," Crabtree continued.

After competing together this year, the two juniors can see how they have gotten a feel for each other's game.

"It's funny sometimes," Lord said. "Wendy will signal and I'll expect what she's going to call before she does it."

"We've gotten used to playing together the whole season now," Crabtree explained. "Usually in the first game of a set, I'll know what we are going to do already."

Besides relying on each other, Crabtree and Lord also appreciate team support in their matches.

The nature of tennis qualifies the sport as individual, but both feel that the collegiate game allows that stigma to be lessened.

"This is why I love college tennis so much," said Lord. "When you're out there playing you know that your match is not the only important one and it takes some of the pressure off."

This type of atmosphere contrasts to the junior tennis circuit on which Crabtree and Lord both played.

"In junior tennis everyone is out for blood and it is so individual," Lord added. "Here, it is nice to know there are people on your side."

"You don't feel like you're alone because you have coaches and teammates there helping and supporting you," Crabtree added.

In addition to doubles, Crabtree and Lord have paced the Irish this year at the No.1 and No.2 singles, respectively. Crabtree finished with a 26-13 mark and is guaranteed a NCAA berth at No.1 singles in the individual portion of the tournament. Despite her success, the Concord, Massachusetts native noted an affinity for the doubles game.

"In the past, I've liked doubles better, and I still do," Crabtree said. However, there is more pressure on doubles in college. If you're not playing well it can also affect your partner."

"At the same time, it's more fun because you're not out there alone," Crabtree added.

Lord remains on the bubble of making the tournament in singles with a 19-12 record.

Coach Jay Louderback congratulates Holyn Lord and Wendy Crabtree after another victory. The duo is hoping to compete in the NCAA tournaments. Bids will be announced today.

With wins against top-notch schools such as Kansas and Pepperdine, the native from Carmel, Indiana could be heading to Malibu when the bids are announced today.

In the Pepperdine meet, where Lord won 6-0, 6-0, the Irish as a team enjoyed one of their best matches of the season.

They traveled to California for their first outdoor match and downed Pepperdine 7-2 as Crabtree won her singles match 6-3, 6-4 and the tandem of Crabtree and Lord were victorious 6-4, 7-5.

"I think we knew it was an important match," Crabtree said. "They were a top ten team and we were looking forward to playing them all season. It was a good opportunity and everyone really came together and played well."

It is a win like that one and others against Michigan, Alabama, and Clemson that the Irish hope will propel them to one of the at-large berths that will be announced today.

"Right now, I'd say our chances are 50-50," Louderback added. "We've had some good wins and no really bad losses, so I'm hoping that will be in our favor."

The Irish capped off the season with a 6-3 loss to Indiana, which left them with a 14-10 mark, and now occupy the 26th ranking in the country, eleven spots lower than when they began the year.

"I think we had a tougher schedule this year," said Lord. "Some teams in past years who have not been strong stepped up their level of play during the season. There were no walk-over matches and that was kind of different."

"The teams have gotten a lot stronger in the midwestern region," Crabtree noted. "However, the only way to move our program to the next level is to play the tougher teams."

The Irish hope to get another shot at those tough teams in the NCAA tournament. If the teams fails to qualify, Crabtree and Lord will look to represent Notre Dame at their respective spots.

"Obviously, we'd be disappointed not to make the tournament," Crabtree said. "That doesn't mean the season was terrible, though. Everyone had a good year, learned a lot, and improved, and that's just as important."

As for their chances as a doubles team, Coach Louderback believes they have a good chance to make some noise.

"They could do real well in the NCAA's," Louderback said. "Early in the year when they got down, they didn't communicate. However, both of them know tennis well and it was just a matter getting together and learn what each other is doing."

Knicks outlast Cavs in foul-plagued contest

By CHUCK MELVIN
Associated Press

CLEVELAND
The New York Knicks won it Cleveland-style.

Patrick Ewing had 23 points and 10 rebounds Monday night, sending the Knicks past the Cavaliers 83-81 in a brutal game that featured an NBA playoff-record 74 foul shots.

New York leads the best-of-5 series 2-1 and can wrap it up by winning Thursday night at Gund Arena.

Cleveland's Danny Ferry had a shot at winning it at the end, but his open 3-point shot from beyond the top of the key caromed off the rim as the horn sounded.

New York has won its last six road games against the Cavs, including all three at new Gund Arena.

Every shot and pass was contested by the two teams that were 1-2 in defense in the NBA this year, in a game that crawled at the slow pace the Cavs have used all season.

Thirteen of the Knicks' last 17 points came from the foul line, the only field goals during that span coming on consecutive reverse layups by Anthony Mason.

Cleveland, meanwhile, went scoreless from the field for nearly eight minutes, sinking 10 of 12 free throws during the drought.

New York took the lead for good when Derek Harper — who committed seven turnovers — hit two foul shots for an 81-79 lead with 36.1 seconds left. Cleveland's Mark Price then lost the ball on his dribble, forcing the Cavs to intentionally foul the Knicks to try to get back in it. They stayed close, but Ferry's last-second shot wasn't.

The halftime score — Cleveland leading 38-37 — could almost have been mistaken for a first-quarter score, a sure sign the Cavs had the pace the way they like it.

Ewing, who picked up two early fouls and missed half of the first quarter, still managed to score 10 first-half points to go with Charles Smith's 12, keeping the Knicks close.

Chris Mills, the hero of Game 2, and Price had nine each in the first half for Cleveland.

Price's fourth point of the game, a foul shot late in the first quarter, made him the leading scorer in Cavs' playoff history with 783 points, surpassing Brad Daugherty's 782. Daugherty, who missed the entire season with a bad back, was watching from the bench.

Four players and the head coach on the men's tennis team have been chosen to win awards.

First off, Coach Bob Bayliss is the regional coach of the year for the third time in his career.

Freshmen Jakub Pietrowski has been named one of four national winners of the Bill Talbert Junior Sportsmanship Award presented by the International Tennis Hall of Fame in Newport, Rhode Island.

The award is presented annually by the board of directors of the Hall of Fame to players who exemplify the finest qualities of sportsmanship in tournament play. He will receive his award on July 16 in Newport.

Junior Mike Sprouse, who plays number two doubles and is ranked number 85 in the nation, is the regional winner for the Tennis Magazine/ITA Arthur Ashe Award for Leadership and Scholarship, and the Rafael Osuna Sportsmanship Award. He is one of eight finalists for each of these national awards.

Dynamic Duo

By JOE VILLINSKI
Assistant Sports Editor

A friend should be there through good times and bad, triumph and defeat, and during every serve and volley.

For juniors Wendy Crabtree and Holyn Lord, the latter part of that friendship equation has rang true this year as the No.1 and No.2 singles players joined forces to shore up the No.1 doubles spot.

And there's nothing like two friends getting together to play a little tennis.

"We're good friends," Lord said. "I think that has helped because we've learned where each other is on the court."

"Their friendship has benefitted them because when they get down, they can communicate in close matches," women's head coach Jay Louderback said.

Lately, the only communication Crabtree and Lord have needed is to congratulate each other after winning 8 of their last 11 matches. They finished the season with a 19-9 record and are on the brink of competing in their first NCAA tournament together.

"Their consistency has kept on improving throughout the year," Louderback added.

Irish rebound to win MCC title

By MEGAN McGRATH
Sports Writer

The Notre Dame baseball team prides itself on its ability to bounce back.

After dropping a rain-soaked, sloppily played 9-1 decision to Alabama last week, coach Paul Mainieri didn't worry about his team.

"We always come back after games like that," the coach said. He has reason to be confident: until this weekend his Irish had only lost back-to-back games on two occasions.

So after losing both games of a double-header Saturday 4-3 and 6-5 at Northern Illinois, and losing leading hitters Ryan Topham and Mike Amrhein to injuries, the team remained sure they could come back the next day and claim the MCC title.

Sunday Notre Dame swept the twin-bill, claiming their conference's Western Division Title with 17-7 and 7-4 wins.

In Sunday's first game, a revamped Irish lineup put on an offensive clinic, in spite of Topham, who was nursing a strained right shoulder, and Amrhein's absence.

Notre Dame benefitted from a nine-run second inning, getting four runs on a grand slam by George Restovich. J.J. Brock, Randall Brooks and Scott Sollmann all had RBI singles in the inning.

The Huskies responded in the home half of the frame with their own grand slam, from second baseman Marc McShane. It was McShane's first career home run.

But Irish starter Darin Schmalz settled down and earned his seventh win of the year, lasting six innings and giving up seven hits.

Restovich went 2-3 in the game with six runs batted in. Craig DeSensi went 3-5 with a double and three RBI.

In game two Notre Dame struck early again, putting five runs on the board in the first two innings.

Junior Rowan Richards cranked a three-run homer in the top of the third, and RBI singles by Brock and Brooks gave the Irish the lead.

But starter Dan Stavisky ran into trouble. The freshman allowed four runs in the second and third innings, prompting Mainieri to replace him with Mike Balicki. Balicki earned the win, going five and a third innings and allowing just three hits. Senior Rich Sauget threw the ninth to earn his first save.

In game one on Saturday, the Irish had a 2-0 lead heading into the seventh, but were unable to put the Huskies away.

Rough season comes to a close for Belles

By CAROLINE BLUM
Saint Mary's Sports Editor

Although the Saint Mary's tennis team ended their spring season with a 9-0 loss last Tuesday, the team describes their season with nothing other than words of hard work and dedication.

The Belles planned on playing Albion College last Thursday, but had to cancel due to the injury of senior Robin Hrycko and bad weather, bringing their final season record to 9-12. The record not only includes the scores of their spring season, but of their fall and spring training matches as well.

The team began their journey through the tennis season with their fall matches beginning in September. The Belles fell to Saint Joseph's College and DePauw, but beat Valparaiso University. Both losses were extremely close. The fall season was important for the Belles because it provided their new members with match experience, and gave the team a glimpse of the competition before entering the traditional spring season in March.

Entering into their spring season, however, left some difficult questions with the Belles. They suffered rough losses of not only their number three player Jen Kelley but their number four player, Nora Slusar. This forced the team to be challenged in a face-off against each other, in order to realign their numerical sta-
