Cluster upgrades provide 'real world' technology

Rapagnani: Computer systems changed to keep ND up to date

By JOHN NORTON
News Writer

In an effort to keep technology at Notre Dame up to date, major changes have taken place in the computer clusters on campus.

"Notre Dame has a commitment to keep the most current technologies in front of students and faculty, so that when students graduate from their four years here, they have no problem adjusting to the technology used in the real world," said Dr. Larry Rapagnani, assistant provost for Information Technologies for the University of Notre Dame.

Over the summer and at the beginning of this year, almost everything has changed in computer clusters in Hayes-Healy and Nieuwland Science Hall due to the movement of the architecture classes into Hayes-Healy and the movement of the business classes into the new business complex. The clusters were forced to change in accordance with the types of systems needed for the classes offered in the buildings.

Sixty-five percent of the Unix systems were upgraded campus-wide with Sun SPARC systems. The majority of these upgraded systems are located in Nieuwland Science Hall and Fitzpatrick Hall of Engineering, which alone contains five clusters. The rest of the Unix systems will be upgraded by next year.

"The reason for the staggering of upgrades, is so that we do not get caught behind," Rapagnani said.

One hundred percent of the Macintosh computers, which were almost three years old, were also upgraded this summer. All 260 machines, not including those in DeBartolo Hall were overhauled. The upgrade included larger monitors and more robust machines, especially in Hayes-Healy where such equipment is required to run the software commonly used by architecture and fine arts students. All PC's were upgraded last year.

According to Rapagnani, one cluster, located in the basement of Hayes-Healy, contains 42 Macintosh computers and has been configured so that the room may be divided in half. One half may be used for teaching purposes, while the other half can be left as open access for students.

"Teaching times have been limited in such clusters so that there are as many computers open for student access as possible because that is their main purpose," Rapagnani said.

All the upgrades were performed in a two to three week window between the end of the summer school sessions and the beginning of the regular school year. "We had to work round the clock to complete the upgrades. Students may find the upgrades to be a pleasant surprise but it is important to the University that students are kept as updated as possible," Rapagnani said.

Students looking for a specific type of computer can now find it using a feature built into the new World Wide Web Home Page for Notre Dame, another result of upgrades at the beginning of this year. Students can go into the new Home Page and click on "administration." This will take students to a new menu where they should click on "Office of University Computing/ Educational Media." This will lead to the last menu where students can

■ HALL PRESIDENTS' COUNCIL

Council questions fairness of meal plan

By DEBORAH SCHULTZ
News Writer

In an effort to determine whether or not students are paying an unnecessary amount to eat at Notre Dame, Hall Presidents' Council discussed meal plans at their meeting last night in Walsh Hall.

"Food services believes that the twenty-one meal plan offers quite a bit, and they are more than willing to discuss the benefits," said Co-Chair Matt Schlatter, who described the visit of a food services representative to the Student Senate meeting last week.

"However, on average, students only use 59% of their meals, which comes out to about 12 meals. This information is then given to Business Affairs, and they decide what to charge for the meals," Schlatter said.

Upon hearing this information, HPC decided to continue to examine this issue in an effort to determine what students pay for meals, and whether or not Business Affairs is charging more than necessary.

Encouraging cooperation with other groups, HPC Co-Chair Kristin Beary said, "Student Government has a committee about this same sort of thing. Hopefully we can work something out with them so that we can work together on this instead of doing the same things."

Other business at the meeting included an announcement that activity sheets for the Rockne Award will be collected at next week's meeting, and a decision

Bowles brings new life to SMC art gallery, classes

Barbara Milman, Berlin 1933-45 #7, 1994 linoleum print

This print by Barbara Milman will be shown at The Moreau Galleries at a Saint Mary's College exhibition, which was directed by Johnson Bowles, a new professor at Saint Mary's.

By JENNIFER LEWIS
Assistant Saint Mary's Editor

Bringing new life to the Moreau Gallery and Art Encounter courses at Saint Mary's, artist, writer, photographer, lecturer, teacher, and mother, Johnson Bowles is illuminating the female gender.

"She (Bowles) brings new energy to every project she is involved in," said Marcia Rickard, chair of the Art Department.

Documenting one woman's identity, gender and ritual, Bowles' work is featured in "Wearing a Woman's Life," an exhibit running at Krasl Art Center in Niles, Michigan through October 1. According to Bowles, these aspects of a woman's life are symbolized by the baring of skins and the new shapes of life.

In an effort to capture memorable instances in her life, Bowles used her own clothing, such as her confirmation dress, crossing guard outfit, marching band uniform and wedding dress in the exhibit. She embellished the clothing with sequins, lace and photographs of herself. The twenty-piece exhibit, begins with her christening gown and ends with her daughter's hospital sleeper.

"In a way, the exhibit is very full circle," said Bowles. "We all save things, and we don't know why. It was important for me to express and lay out all those things at once."

The preparation for the exhibit was not as difficult as one might think, according to Bowles.

"My mother said she was moving, and she had all these things that I saved up over the years," said Bowles. "I had probably every point in my life represented."

Bowles shows six to twelve galleries a year from solo to group exhibitions. Largely responsible for the artists featured in Moreau Gallery, she has chosen Barbara Milman's "Herstories of War" and an exhibit by Diane Tani to feature this month. Both exhibits focus on stereotypes, text, and images.

"There is a real sense of commitment in the gallery, that perhaps was dealt with differently in the past," said Rickard. "Bowles shapes the pool from which the gallery board makes its decisions."

And although Bowles became the Gallery Director in the fall of 1994, this is her first semester teaching two introductory art courses at Saint Mary's. Asked to teach Father Conyers' class and given less than two weeks to prepare, she still handed her students a three-page syllabus detailing the objectives and requirements of the course on the first day of class.

"I am trying to give the students a vocabulary to better describe art by relating it to their everyday lives," said Bowles in describing her teaching goals.

Though she was born and raised in North Carolina, Bowles says she is from "all over." She moved around a lot during her grade school and high school years, which is evident in her multiple accents. In college, she stayed on the east coast and received her painting B.F.A. degree from Boston University; she then went

■ INSIDE COLUMN

The trials of living tone-less

Hello, my name is Dan and I'm tone deaf.

Dan Cichalski
Assistant Accent Editor

There. I've said it, it's out in the open, and I know I'm a better person for coming forward and admitting it after all these years.

It's not easy living this way; every day is a struggle. Some days are tougher than others: you wake up in the morning and out of the blue — BAM! — you start singing over and over in your head: "Boat drinks. The boys in the band ordered boat drinks. The visitors scored on the home rink..." It doesn't matter if you haven't listened to Buffett since the Reagan Administration, you can't get it out of your head.

Soon you're singing out loud to yourself. Softly, in the shower where the sound of the water prevents others from hearing your best rendition of "Send Me On My Way." But, by the time you get to brushing your teeth, you're belting it, and everyone looks, and you realize that they are doing so because a bulldozer would be closer to the right key.

It happens in the car, and this is where it hurts the tone deaf person the most because you're usually with friends who are too nice to tell you to shut up and stop singing because they'd rather listen to this test of the Emergency Broadcast System because it's easier on the ears. There are just too many great driving songs out there with which you have to sing along. "Scenes From an Italian Restaurant" is one such song. I've turned that one up and sung along with Billy Joel several times, putting more feeling and effort into my performance than O.J. did when those leather gloves "didn't fit." Then my passenger reaches over to turn it up just a little more because he can still hear me as I tell the story about Brenda and Eddie picking up those deep pile carpets and a couple of paintings from Sears.

It's frustrating when the majority of your friends are qualified singers, in that, for example, they've sung in the church choir or been a Shennanigan. You'll be driving along the beach with the top down, and you want to join in with everyone in coaxing Rosalita to come out tonight but you hesitate because if Rosie hears you singing, she'll lock the doors and won't come out until you commit yourself to a monastery. Having singing friends is intimidating, especially when they ask, "Dan, what key are you singing in? Because, whatever it is, it's not the right one."

I'm now at the stage where I'm always conscious of my singing voice, and I wonder if I need some kind of license to use it. When the National Anthem is played at Yankee Stadium, I stand and sort of say the words to myself. Here I basically hum the Alma Mater because I could be used as tackling dummy for destroying such a lovely composition. In church, even on Christmas, I stand for the hymns and follow along but rarely sing (except for "Silent Night," when we all hold candles and the lights are dimmed).

So now you have some idea of what it is like to be melodically challenged. Consider this column the next time you hear someone attempting "Ants Marching" followed by all the little ants running for cover, antennae covered. And, please, if you see me at a party putting all I've got into "Run Around," just smile politely, sing along, and dance. Of course, I can't dance, either. But that's another column.

The views expressed in the Inside Column are those of the author and not necessarily those of The Observer.

More fighting possible as Yugoslavian peace talks near

SARAJEVO

Allied Bosnian and Croatian forces squeezed a key strip of Serb-held land Monday, a sign that major new fighting could be brewing even as diplomats from across former Yugoslavia try once more to smooth the way for peace talks.

The Croatian army in the north and Bosnian Croat and government forces to the south shelled the corridor Sunday in response to Serb troop and military equipment movement through the area, said Lt. Col. Chris Vernon, a U.N. spokesman.

Vernon said the anti-Serb alliance could be preparing to try to cut the corridor, which would completely isolate Serb-held territory centered on Banja Luka in the northwest. Serbs have lost heavily in that region in recent weeks but retain sizable holdings.

The rebel Serbs have heavy defenses along the vital strip, Vernon said, adding that the Muslim-Croat allies "would have a very big fight on their hands" if they tried to take it.

Col. Ferid Buljubasic, a spokesman for the Bosnian army in Sarajevo, indi-

Bosnia update

1 The Croatian army to the north, and allied Bosnian Croat and Bosnian government forces to the south, shelled the Brcko corridor Sunday.

2 Mass graves containing 540 bodies were discovered on territory recently retaken from the Serbs. Victims are believed to be Muslims and Croats killed by Bosnian Serbs.

3 Bosnian state TV reported that government forces advanced in the Ozren mountains. There is no indication the government has captured territory.

4 The Bosnian government demands Sarajevo's siege be lifted and a secure corridor linking Sarajevo with Gorazde be established.

cated his army would continue to press the Serbs.

"Until peace is achieved, our forces will continue offensive actions," he said.

At talks in Geneva on Sept. 8, both sides agreed to an ethnic division that would give the Muslim-Croat alliance 51 percent of Bosnia and the Serbs 49 percent.

At the time, Serb acceptance of that percentage was considered key as the Serbs had held nearly 70 percent of Bosnia since shortly after war began in April 1992.

However, the Serbs have suffered significant battlefield losses since NATO warplanes bombed their positions as punishment for attacks on Sarajevo. U.N. officials have said the Serbs have made "tactical withdrawals" in other areas they were likely to lose in a peace deal.

The war in Bosnia began in April 1992, when Bosnian Serbs rebelled against the Muslim-led government's decision to secede from Serb-dominated Yugoslavia. More than 200,000 people are believed dead or missing since then.

Gingrich unhurt as plane strikes geese

WASHINGTON

A small jet carrying House Speaker Newt Gingrich, his wife and two bodyguards ran off a runway in northern Michigan after hitting four geese, aviation officials said. No one aboard the plane was injured. The plane was rolling for takeoff Monday from the Mackinac Island airport when one Canadian goose was sucked into the right engine and three others were struck by other parts of the plane, said Tanya Wagner, a spokeswoman in the Federal Aviation Administration's Great Lakes regional office outside Chicago. The pilot aborted the takeoff but was unable to stop the plane until it had run about 30 feet beyond the end of the runway, she said. "We were very lucky," Gingrich said today in Cincinnati, where he was helping fund-raising efforts of Ohio Republicans. "The pilots were very shaken. Another three or four seconds and we would have had a real problem." He said they left later on another plane.

Angry over press, Chrysler bars paper

DETROIT

Detroit News reporters, shut out by labor union sources after a strike at the newspaper, have now been barred from all Chrysler Corp. events because of the auto company's anger over recent stories. Chrysler executives are upset over the newspaper's aggressive coverage of billionaire Kirk Kerkorian's efforts to gain control of the company. A front-page story in Tuesday's News said Chrysler Vice Chairman Thomas Denomme summoned News auto editor Bradley Stertz to his office Monday and said: "From now on, you, your editors and your journal cease to exist as far as this company is concerned. ... You will not be invited to any of our press events. You will have no access to our people. Your phone calls will not be returned," the News quoted Denomme as saying. The action was triggered by a front-page News story Sunday that said Chrysler Chairman Robert Eaton warned company employees that quality could be a weak spot in its battle with Kerkorian.

New Levi bus stops ads banned

NEW YORK

An ad campaign expected to encourage looters to break bus stop shelters to yank out a pair of Levi's khakis was itself yanked Tuesday after complaints from the mayor. Levi Strauss & Co. began putting actual pairs of the $50 pants in bus shelter ads in New York City and San Francisco this week, with the full expectation that people would steal them. In fact, the company was so sure that the crowbar-and-brick crowd would stoop to vandalism to get at the pants, it designed the ads for pre- and post-theft presentation, and paid in advance for repairs. The khakis were placed between the same hard plastic panels used for conventional two-dimensional advertisements, with ad copy that reads, "Nice Pants." Once they disappear, an outline of the khakis remains with the words, "Apparently they were very nice pants." New York Mayor Rudolph Giuliani was not amused at the thought of New Yorkers shopping with crowbars on city streets. He condemned the ads as "a terrible mistake ... exactly the wrong message to be teaching to people." By the end of the day, the ads were pulled in New York.

Four caught smuggling animal innards

LOS ANGELES

Four Chinese have been charged with trying to smuggle bear bile, deer testicles and other purported aphrodisiacs into the United States from China. Zhongri Gao, 36, Yongzhe Jin, 34, Xianglu Jin, 35, and Songyue Li, 35, were arrested Sept. 6 at Los Angeles International Airport. Investigators seized $2 million worth of bear bile, gall bladders of Asiatic black bears, musk deer testicles, rhinoceros horn pills and tiger bone plasters — all considered aphrodisiacs in some Asian countries. The items were hidden in clothing and luggage. Asiatic black bears are protected by international treaty, and the other items are covered by U.S. or international laws. The defendants could get five years in prison. In Anchorage, Alaska, federal agents Monday intercepted 60 bear gall bladders valued at more than $900,000. They had been packed in a legal shipment of two tons of reindeer antlers and smuggled in from the Russian Far East.

Non-governmental groups act with few constraints

By MARY KATE MORTON
Associate News Editor

Non-governmental agencies are of increasing interest in the global sphere because they dare to go where other officials do not, according to Professor Thomas Weiss of Brown University in Rhode Island.

Weiss, a former member of the United Nations and director of International Studies at Brown, spoke last night in the Hesburgh Center for International Studies in a lecture entitled "Humanitarianism and Non-Governmental Organizations," in which he outlined the basic roles of NGO's and their prospects for the future.

Weiss stressed the ability of non-governmental organizations to infiltrate war-torn areas and areas fraught with human rights violations because they operate under a different system of constraints. Whereas United Nations officials must comply with stringent security and insurance policies, the NGO's are less constrained by sovereignty.

"The NGO's tend to get down to the local level, which is not something that governments or the militaries or the UN system can do very well," stated Weiss.

In an effort to clarify the specific tasks of NGO's, Weiss explained the two main functions facing non-governmental agencies today.

The high-profile operations of NGO's usually include emergency crisis control in the war-torn areas of the world.

Weiss suggested the work of NGO's on this front, which focuses on human rights violations and aid to countries in need, is the largest element of the NGO budget.

"Although the figures are very difficult to get a hold of, in the area of 10% of total public development aid and overseas development assistance is provided through NGO's," said Weiss. "In fact, this means that collectively, they [NGO's] are more important than the whole UN system, minus the Washington-based financial institutions."

The second objective of NGO's is to educate its constituency rather than only working within the war zones. Weiss stated that the NGO's need to work on the attitudes of the populations outside of the crisis-stricken countries.

"This phenomenon grew up within the development community as the third world said 'Listen, outsiders, the thing you can do for us is to work on the attitudes of your populations, their consumption behavior,'" said Weiss.

In conjunction with this idea

The Observer/Brian Hardy

Professor of International Studies at Brown University Thomas Weiss spoke yesterday on the growing role of the United Nations and Non-Governmental Organizations in today's war-stricken world.

of education, Weiss drove home the point that advocacy is needed in Washington to raise money for this aspect of the NGO's, since it is not well-funded.

According to Weiss, this should include lobbying the decision-makers in Washington.

The trap that NGO's tend to fall into when they try and come to the aid of everyone in need, and they travel to each and every war zone in search of victims to help, said Weiss. When this occurs, NGO's are vulnerable to governmental manipulation.

Occasionally, its eager, younger members bring with them a naive attitude that they can help everyone. In this sense, Weiss relayed to his audience the need for NGO's to focus on planning and evaluation so that they are aware of the implications of their possible rescue missions.

In relation to the Bosnian crisis, Weiss stressed that NGO's should take a step back and get away from their habit of falling into the role of what he termed "crisis junkies."

"NGO's have to learn when to say no. Bosnia is not the place for a training program."

Students aid peers in disciplinary hearings

By TOM MORAN
News Writer

Recent ads touting Student Government assistance to students undergoing disciplinary hearings are geared toward making students aware of a service that has been available to them for years.

According to Director of Residence Life Jeff Shoup, the option to request assistance in this fashion has long been an express right of Notre Dame students, as guaranteed them in Du Lac (page 75).

The assistance Student Government offers takes the form of a fellow student, also known as a "peer supporter," who can offer both practical and emotional support during disciplinary hearings.

The peer supporter can be either a friend of the defendant(s) or a member of the Department of Student Government Counsel who is specially trained to help in such situations.

According to Judicial Council President Tom Matzzie, the Student Government peer educators help out at all stages of the hearing.

"We advise before the hearing, help out during the hearing and assist (the accused) with preparing a case review if they so desire," Matzzie said.

A case review is an official request for an appeal.

The peer educators also help the defendant(s) fill out advocacy reports before the hearings begin. These reports help flesh out the details of the circumstances of the infraction, and can help show when the University failed to follow proper procedures in handling the case, which can help the cause of the defendant(s).

Matzzie noted that the recent advertisements advising students of this service are part of an ongoing plan to improve the outreach and the service of the peer support system.

The advertisements serve as a reinforcement of the notices all students receive when they are summoned for a hearing. Each summons letter includes a card informing students of their right to peer counsel.

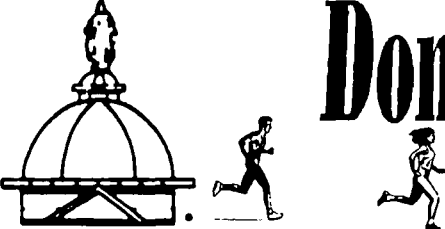

The system has also been improved recently through an increase in the number of students available to act as trained peer counselors. "We now have a director and several students within the Department of Student Government Counsel who can assist students," stated Matzzie.

This has resulted in a greater diversity of personnel available to serve as peer supporters. Previously, Matzzie said, almost all requests for a Student Government peer supporter were handled exclusively by the Judicial Council President.

Matzzie stated that the peer supporter is only available in administrative hearings, which deal with serious infractions such as major parietal violations, drug problems, assault, and repetitive alcohol abuse or violent behavior.

In such cases, he said, the defendant meets before a three-person review board, so a peer supporter is extremely important to help "equalize things."

Yesterday's article on the Saint Mary's freshmen elections omitted the announcement of a fifth party running in Friday's elections.

Kate Tournoux and Elizabeth Dziedzic, who will be running for Class President and Vice-President, respectively, said, "We would like to have freshman class activities to get together with the Notre Dame freshman class."

The Tournoux-Dziedzic ticket is planning a snowman-building contest, a class mass and a St. Patrick's Day dance, where an Irish Leprechaun king and queen would be crowned.

Engineer Foley to speak HPC

Special to the Observer

Henry Foley, director of the University of Delaware Center for Catalytic Science and Technology, will deliver the Ernest W. Theile Lecture in Chemical Engineering at the University of Notre Dame, October 10.

Foley will deliver his address, "Transport and Reaction in Nanoporous Carbon," at 3:30 p.m. in Room 356 of Fitzpatrick Hall of Engineering. The Theile Lectureship recognizes outstanding research contributions by a younger member of the chemical engineering profession. His investigation has led to new composite structures that provide shape selectivity with highly manipulable chemistries.

Foley has been the recipient of the National Science Foundation's Presidential Young Investigator Award. He has served since 1986 on the Delaware faculty, where he is an associate professor of chemical engineering. His research has led to more than 60 professional papers and six patents.

Ernest Theile's groundbreaking research permanently associates his name with the field of chemical engineering. Over 35 years, Theile investigated every aspect of petroleum refining for Standard Oil Company before joining the Notre Dame faculty in 1960. He taught for 10 years, publishing 20 papers and holding some 30 patents.

about the winning dorm for the month of September will be made as soon as possible.

"We are very excited about this award because we haven't had it in so many years," said Schlatter.

Christy Eldred, vice-president of marketing for Adworks spoke to HPC about encouraging students use their assistance in preparing for SYR's and other dorm events.

"We will be speaking to dorm government soon to tell students about what we can do for them. We do everything for SYR's, such as t-shirts and DJ's, and we do things a lot cheaper than many other companies because we are all students, and this is our major. We also do things, like table tents in the dining halls and posters to advertise anything around campus," Eldred said.

Student Body President Jonathon Patrick also spoke to HPC about upcoming events happening around campus, and he distributed lists of on-campus dance facilities.

For further questions about locations, students are encouraged to speak to Katie Beirne, campus social commissioner.

Bond trader charged in Japanese bank's losses

By DAVID E. KALISH
Associated Press

NEW YORK
A bond trader today was charged with falsifying records in connection with $1.1 billion in losses for his employer, a Japanese bank that accused him of 11 years of unauthorized trading.

Toshihide Iguchi, an executive vice president at Daiwa Bank's New York office, was arrested during the weekend in New Jersey, where he lives.

If convicted, Iguchi faces a maximum sentence of 30 years in prison and $1 million in fines, said Mary Jo White, the U.S. attorney for New York. He also could be ordered to make restitution.

He was to appear in court later today and White said the government would seek an order to detain him because of the scope of the case and huge sum involved.

The bank said that no depositor or customer suffered any losses. Despite its need to write off the losses against earnings, it expected to report a profit for the first half of the year.

The bank had fired the 44-year-old executive, saying he engaged in 30,000 unauthorized trades.

White said the bank learned about the losses in July, but that federal authorities were first alerted last week, when the bank made a required report on its trades to the Federal Reserve Bank of New York.

White said the bank's own examiners may have been fooled during the period the unauthorized trades allegedly took place.

"There is some evidence the examiners were led astray when they did some of their examinations," she said.

"The message of this case is perfectly clear ... the internal controls are essential to safeguarding all banks and financial institutions and the money entrusted to them," White said.

She also said others at the bank are under investigation but have not been charged.

White said a rough estimate of the trading loss was between one-quarter and one-third of Daiwa's total U.S. Treasury bond portfolio in New York.

The news stunned Japanese financial circles, where the conventional wisdom had been that controls were far too tight to permit a scandal reminiscent of the Nicholas Leeson case that brought down Britain's Barings Bank.

Barings collapsed and was bought by ING Group of the Netherlands in March after Leeson lost $1.39 billion with bad bets on the Japanese stock market. Daiwa was in no danger of collapse because it is a far larger bank, officials said.

Japan's finance minister,

Masayoshi Takemura, said Daiwa has sufficient resources to cope with the loss, so it will "not cause any concern over Daiwa's financial strength."

Takemura said the ministry has reprimanded Daiwa.

The loss is the latest in a series of blows to Japan's banking industry, including the recent failures of a large regional bank and several large credit unions because of bad loans.

Daiwa said Iguchi was hired in New York to work at the bank's branch there in 1976. Iguchi previously studied at Southwest Missouri State University, Daiwa said.

U.S. bond traders said Iguchi was known for trading batches of securities in a series of deals that would move the market. Usually, he dealt with several companies at the same time in orders of $100 million each, said the traders, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Several elements of the case resembled the Leeson affair, in which the young Barings trader is accused of falsifying documents to cover up his mounting losses.

Daiwa said Iguchi exceeded his trading limits in buying and selling U.S. government securities, then forged documents to conceal his position.

In both cases the trading took place far from the company's home office: Leeson in Singapore for London-based Barings, and Iguchi in New York for Osaka-based Daiwa.

"We are deeply embarrassed that our internal controls and procedures were not sufficient to prevent this fraudulent action," Masahiro Tsuda, general manager of Daiwa's New York branch, said in a statement.

He said a series of stringent new procedures will be added to worldwide trading operations to prevent a similar loss.

Moody's Investors Service, a New York-based credit information business, today said it was reviewing Daiwa's loss to determine if it should downgrade its rating of the bank's financial strength.

Daiwa Bank is one of Japan's 11 major commercial, or "city," banks.

The Tokyo and Osaka stock exchanges halted trading in Daiwa shares after the announcement, but the rest of the market appeared unaffected. The Tokyo Stock Exchange's key index finished up 2 percent.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Setting the record straight about WVFI

Collegiate vs. commercial: the line

Dear Editor:

As the business manager at WVFI, I would like to set the record straight on a few issues raised in the article "WVFI Faces New Challenges" which appeared Friday, Sept. 15 in The Observer.

First however, I would like to make it clear that the fundamental guiding principle of the station is to provide the students with programming that is not found within the realm of commercial radio. This means playing music from younger, up and coming bands on smaller independent labels, as well as offering a wide variety of specialty shows.

Although this format may not fall in line with the tastes and preferences of the general student populous, it serves an important function in maintaining diversity, and exposing to the campus fresh ideas and perspectives.

In response to the article, I take offense at Adele Lanan's comments regarding the listener survey that took place last spring. As one of the authors of the questionnaire, I consider her notion that we "phrased the questions in such a manner that it came back the way (we) wanted" a direct assault on my personal integrity and that of the station as a whole. Certain sources have even indicated that these remarks could possibly constitute grounds to sue for libel in this case.

The fact of the matter is that our primary objective was to paint a clear picture of student opinions toward WVFI. The survey was carefully designed to uphold the standards and conventions of quality, objective market research. Additionally, it was performed as a class project, and was passed by both the administration and the department of social research without question. In short,

Ms. Lanan's allegations are not only unfounded but also untrue.

Additionally, I would like to address the issue of programming as it relates to professionalism. To me, it seems, Ms. Lanan is confusing the latter term with "commercialism." She feels that in order to become worthy of an FM frequency, we have to appeal more to the general tastes of the student body.

Popularity remains the primary determinant. Here is where the dilemma lies. How are we as a station supposed to maintain true to our philosophy of exposing the students to new music and ideas while only playing what they already want to hear?

Popularity remains the primary determinant. Here is where the dilemma lies. How are we as a station supposed to maintain true to our philosophy of exposing the students to new music and ideas while only playing what they already want to hear? Although they may not be the most accepted, the artists we choose to play do exhibit a tremendous degree of talent and are worthy of being heard.

Now, I will be the first to admit that there is room for improvement concerning the station. There are a few sore spots in the organizational culture of WVFI, and we could learn a few lessons about more effective management.

However, there are criteria which need to be weighted differently when judging a college as opposed to a commercial radio station. Whereas a commercial station's target is to entertain and drum up listenership in order to survive as a business, the primary focus of a college radio station should be to inform and educate its listening population about music, whether it be jazz, classical or punk rock.

RYAN DUNCAN
Business Manager
WVFI

Recognizing a need for better communication

Dear Editor:

I am writing this letter in response to an article published last week in The Observer in regards to our college radio station, WVFI. Unfortunately, once again, there is a proven distance, a certain lack of communication between students running the station, the faculty advisor, and the administration.

What is needed is a better communication line, both between the station and advisor, the station and other forms of student media, and WVFI and the students.

Last year, Steven Sostak, the station manager, and Ted Liebler, interim station manager, initiated many new exciting inroads into the meaning and professionalism of college radio.

Our contacts with station alumni, our contacts with other area college stations, specifically WNUR and WHPK, and our initiatives in specialty shows constructed for the sole purpose of student education and entertainment have all created a new spirit of enthusiasm and professionalism at WVFI.

Unfortunately, the article "WVFI Faces New Challenges" was extremely biased and offered no student perspectives except for the perspective of Ken Maverick who was station manager for a little more than a week.

This kind of journalism is unprofessional and continues the stereotypical picturing of the hundred plus Notre Dame and Saint Mary's students involved with this educational goal. Once again, I must emphasize the need for better communication between all parties.

I do take offense at the suggestion of Joe Cassidy that our station does not provide music the students like. Take for example our "Dead" show which offers two solid hours of "The Grateful Dead," or how about the number of rap and freeform show offered?

The only factor withholding success from WVFI is a denial of FM status. The archaic carrier current status of WVFI is a shameful example of no substantial interest in WVFI's format, something that would be unique to Notre Dame and South Bend, but is extremely prevalent in most other colleges and cities across the U.S., Canada, and Mexico.

What we need is a sympathetic ear from the administration, a better communicative link, and an understanding that WVFI is much more professional than three years ago.

Next time The Observer bandies about allegations of unprofessionalism, they should reconsider printing untruthful, libelous, and shameful material hurtful to fellow media and containing no perspective from the inside of the radio station.

"Yellow cat, black cat, as long as it catches mice, it is a good cat."

■ IN MY NEIGHBORHOOD

Part I: The Rage of a Privileged Class

"Upon declaring her intention to leave a cushy job with a Fortune 500 company to go into the nonprofit sector, a young black woman, a Harvard graduate, was pulled aside by her vice president. Why, the executive wanted to know, was the company having such a difficult time retaining young minority professionals?"

The young woman's frustrations were numerous: she felt herself surrounded by mediocrity, by people trying to advance on the basis of personal influence and cronyism rather than merit; she was weary of racial insensitivity, of people who saw nothing about her except color, or conversely of those who, in acknowledging her talents, in effect gave her credit for not really being black; she deemed it unlikely, given her perceptions of the corporate culture, that she would be allowed to make it to the top, and feared waking up in a rut several years hence to find that opportunities (and much of life) had passed her by; and she was tired of having to bite her tongue, tired of feeling that she could only speak out about the wrongs she perceived at the risk of being labeled a malcontent and damaging her career.

Rather than try to explain, the woman finally blurted out that there was "no one who looks like me" in all of senior management by which she meant there were no blacks, and certainly no black women.

"What reason do I have to believe," she added, "that I can make it to the top?"...several years later, she remained discouraged by what seemed a simple reality of her existence. "The bottom line is you're black. And that's still a negative in this society." (Ellis Cose, The Rage of a Privileged Class, 5-6). Damn right, I say.

In one of my classes, we were in one of those discussions of race and ethnicity where the handful of black students were obviously on the defensive (by reflect, naturally) and this one person said that he believes that the black students at Notre Dame are everything short of "better" than other blacks in the community.

I was immediately offended and I wonder if this belief is widespread. I wonder if some people believe that the black students that decide to come here are the genetically capable select few of the black masses; a different breed of black people. And the beat goes on.

When I interview for jobs, I wonder if that person sees someone who is capable and competent, or does that person see a black person who is capable and competent.

It's like having two bushels of apples. The first bushel cost 10 dollars and has perfect ripe, red apples that are all good and worthy to be consumed. The second bushel cost five dollars so you assume they are of lesser quality, and you don't even bother to give them a second glance. Now if I told you, you had to make a pie using the apples from the second bushel and give it to someone of your choice, odds are you aren't going to give it to someone important because in your head you think the apples are inferior, although they really aren't.

It's because you let something outside of it's inherent quality decide how you perceive it. That's the problem in this society, we let what we read about or what we see on TV decide how we judge people.

The above excerpt is from Ellis Cose's "The Rage of a Privileged Class". Most people think that the black underclass are the only blacks that suffer immensely from racism and discrimination, but it is also those black who have escaped the so-called ghetto, that thrive in corporate America who have the same anger and resentment.

I can see it in my own family when I talk to my brother-in-law when he vents his frustration because he works twice as hard as his white counterparts and only gets half as far, and when he plays with his four year-old son knowing that that child may not ever feel content being just exactly what he is.

"Despite it's very evident prosperity, much of America's black middle class is in excruciating pain. And that distress—although most of the country does not see it—illuminates a serious American problem: the problem of the broken covenant, of the pact ensuring that if you work hard, get a good education and play by the rules, you will be allowed to advance and achieve to the limits of your ability" (Cose, 55).

Society today is so much more different than my parents' time. My parents sometimes don't realize that I am up against a totally different "enemy" than they were.

Remember that they grew up in a segregated and externally racist society. My parents had to deal with the racism inherent in small town Georgia and rural Louisiana, not the big overcrowded, commercialized urban cities that my generation has to deal with.

My generation has to deal with a growing internal racism. We grow up bitter and discontent at the world and disillusioned with society. My parents believe that if you have to work harder than everybody to get to the same place then that's okay. I can understand this mentality, but I refuse to work harder and not get further.

My father worked 10-12 hour work days and never made more than thirty-five thousand dollars a year, and I see the same people that started off with him make 2-3 times more because of the color of their skin.

That's a hard thing for me to accept because my father is no worse than those people who are enjoying the fruits of their alleged privilege to white skin. And my father never complained, he just hopes that his children don't have to deal with all that, and no one can say we won't.

What does it all come down to? What are we going to do in society that isn't willing to change anything? Am I angry? Yes, I am. Yes, there is a serious problem, but it is not necessarily the problem that is so problematic, it is the unwillingness of this nation to realize that there is a problem. This breeds such hate, resentment, disgust, and fear. So I wonder what other black students at Notre Dame think about our situation. I guess we'll find out later. To be continued.....

■ DESIDERATA

Keeping priorities in proper order

Personal life comes before professional life

I sat at my desk the other day and looked over the work I had to get done. I had divorce files. There were letters to be written to the Social Security Administration. There was a question as to the validity of a contract. As I went over my tasks, I wondered what type of work I would have been doing had I gotten a job with the Federal Public Defender.

Ever since I decided to study law, I have been motivated primarily by issues in criminal justice. There are a lot of criminal cases pending at any given time, and every criminal defendant needs help in answering the charges brought against him.

Because I have a very non-judgmental attitude - I want to help these people regardless of the allegations against them or the strength of the prosecution's case - I thought a public defender position was ideal for me.

Here at GWC (Goldberg, Weisman & Cairo), we get some criminal cases, but it is certainly not the bulk of the firm's work. I've known this for some time, as I worked here in the summer of 1994. It was for this reason that, although I was encouraged to come back to the firm after taking the bar exam, I pursued a job with the Federal Defender. But I didn't get it and, in retrospect, I am almost relieved.

I didn't have much contact with the people in the Defender's office, but what little there was superficial and tense. One attorney was very irritable. Another looked like she never cracked a smile. Most of the secretaries appeared to resent the attorneys and their jobs in general. I just knew that working in that office would have made me feel terribly lonely. I could foresee myself getting along with these people, but as for being their friends, that wasn't going to happen.

At GWC, by contrast, nearly everyone is cheerful and friendly. Attorneys, secretaries, law clerks and paralegals mingle freely together. We confide in each other, and offer potential solutions for each other's problems (or at least provide a sympathetic ear). We don't all hang out together that often outside of the office, but at GWC, my co-workers are my friends, and there is a certain level of comfort in that knowledge.

This is why my life was made much easier by the Federal Defender's current lack of positions for new attorneys. I knew I would have gotten great experience in the field of law I really feel strongly about. It would have been somewhat painful to turn down... but I think that is exactly what I would have done, and I am glad that fate spared me the agony.

Why would I turn down such a great offer, you are asking? I ask myself the same thing sometimes; in honesty, I wonder if I would be saying the same thing had it actually been an offer. But I do sincerely believe that, if you don't have people you can talk openly to, nothing else in your life can be truly fulfilling.

Not that I don't have a great family and several close friends, but sometimes I just want to talk to my co-workers, and seemingly my co-workers feel the same.

Would I have enjoyed criminal defense work so much in a cold environment like the one I sensed at the Defender's office? Much more importantly, would I have been able to offer my clients the defense to which they are constitutionally entitled when I felt like I, too, was in a major predicament? I think not.

Of course, the nature of one's work does play a role in self-fulfillment. For example, if I were currently defending large insurance companies who avoid payment of benefits to policy-holders whenever they possible could, I would not feel all that great about myself. But on balance, I think one's work is less important than one's friendships.

Just yesterday I learned that a friend of mine, with whom I had lost touch, committed suicide. And while I had already chosen the topic for today's article, it took on a new meaning for me. I wondered if he was surrounded by a support network of friends and family when he took his life? And if not, might he still be here?

I may never know the answers to such questions. But when I think of all the people who compromise their personal relationships for their work, I do know that I never intend to do that. We've got to keep our priorities straight.

The Accent Fashion Patrol raided random campus closets. Although no drastic fashion statements were made, in less than twenty minutes all were dressed and looking great. Best of all? They were comfortable and ready to dance the night away.

Ladies

By ASHLEIGH THOMPSON

Only at Notre Dame would students dress up to drink, but since that is what most will essentially be doing in addition to dancing, being comfortable is the key.

While the idea of this activity might be to Screw Your Roommate, don't screw your date by looking like a prom queen from a bad horror movie.

An SYR is neither a Models, Inc. audition nor an opportunity to rectify all those mistakes made at prom. Having fun should be priority number one, but since those Kodak moments are what remain, caring about appearance is understandable. Here are ten helpful SYR reminders to address some of those never-ending fashion dilemmas.

1) High heels are definitely optional this season. They limit your bust-a-move-ability and your date will appreciate the lack of puncture wounds. With all of the cool suede and platform sneakers out now, finding a fun style or color may eliminate blisters the next day.

As long as the Happy Hiker-look is avoided, boots are also good. Die hard Birkenstock wearers are set with a wild pair of tights or socks. And unless you're going with an Irish Guardsman, huge platform-heeled shoes have gone the way of the dinosaur.

2) Experimenting with color and fabric adds extra spice to any ensemble, especially when it comes to dresses. While the cotton candy look should be avoided, bright colors may accentuate your mood.

Black is always elegant and flatters almost everyone, but don't let your friends get too carried away. This is a dance, not a funeral. And remember, if you can't sit in it or bend over to change a CD, don't wear it.

3) Rhinestones, pearls, lace and chiffon might give your dress some flair, but please, pick only one.

4) Since dancing is the main SYR objective, make sure your hair will not be interfering with your vision. Everyday hairstyles may be very becoming, but something a little different might be appreciated by those that have grown indifferent to your everyday look.

There are lots of cool barrettes out now that are bound to coordinate with any dress. Curls can be fun too, and even a choice hat might be really functional.

5) Nylons are good. Undergarments are necessary.

6) When it comes to jewelry, anything goes. Nice costume pieces may look very sophisticated, but plastic jewelry from quarter machines could be fun too.

Be careful when it comes to jewelry that could get caught on a date or a dress. Watches are always taboo for formal occasions, but since all responsible students need to know when 2 a.m. rolls around, wearing one may be a necessity. Even huge stop watches may be very helpful to signal when dance goes need to...well, stop.

7) Small purses may be quite convenient for gum, lipstick etc. If a camera fits inside as well, bonus.

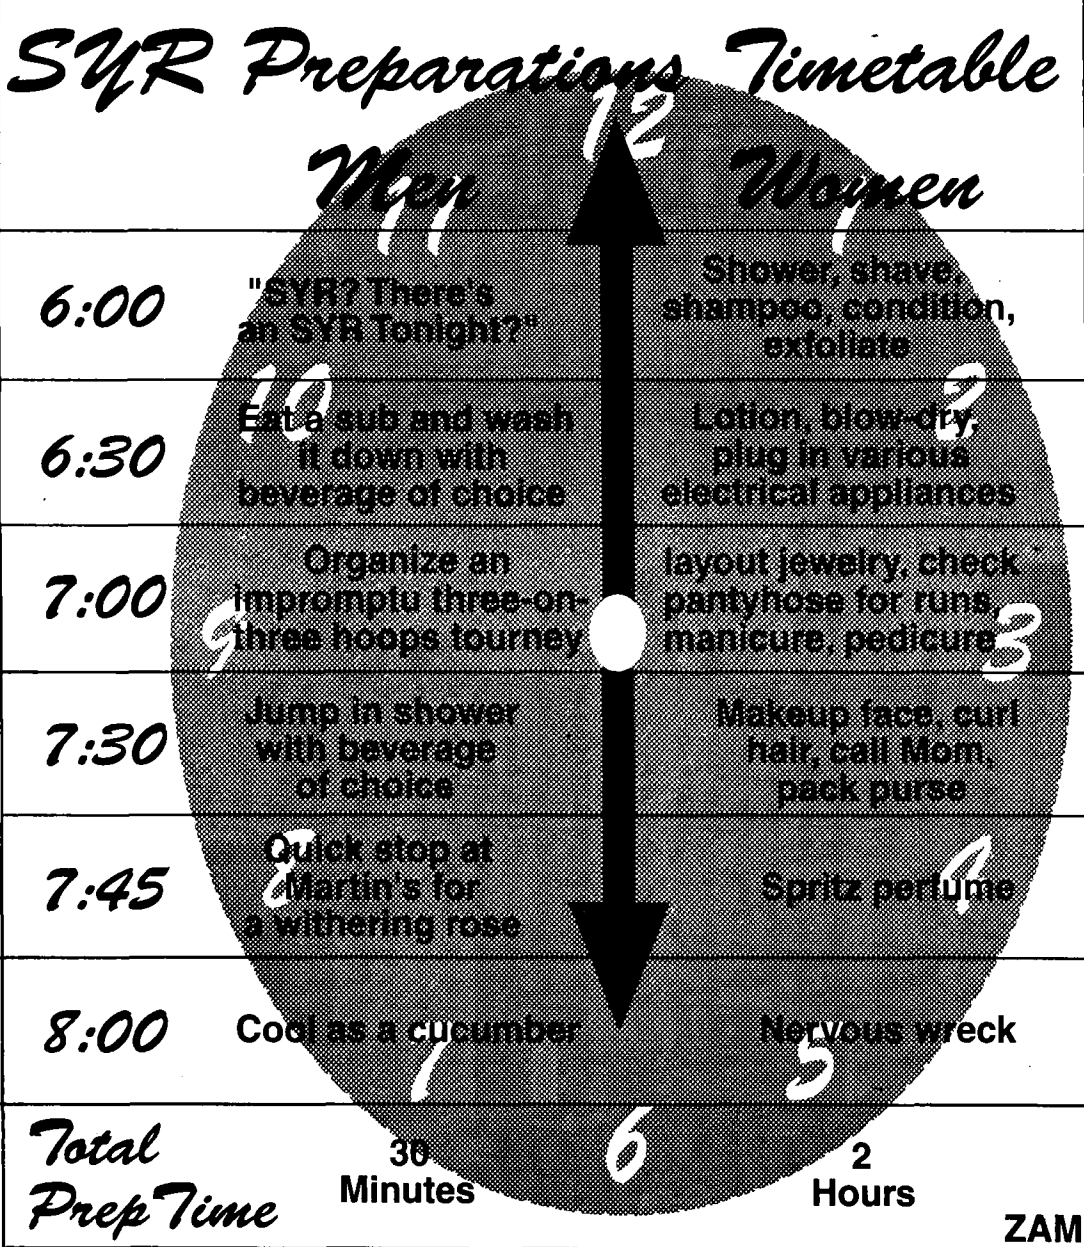

8) Shower. Shave. Brush teeth. Men need constant reassurance that women care.

9) When it comes to makeup, more is less. A guy should recognize his date. It's fun to look a little different from the every day, though.

An important reminder: social gatherings in dorm rooms are REALLY hot. Waterproof mascara works well for anyone with a tendency towards the sweaty side during dancing, or for walking a date home in the rain. Foundation will probably get sweated, beveraged or kissed off, so it may not be necessary for everyone.

10) Remember, the whole point of an SYR is for good friends to have a good time, not to look like display mannequins from a Macy's window. If any of these suggestions require more than ten minutes, a change in the game plan might be a good idea.

Having the best dress or most wild hair may be fun, but are definitely not crucial. Looking good may be an objective here, but feeling good is much more important.

SYR UP CLOSE

The men of St. Edward's Hall pose in their comfortable, yet elegant SYR attire.

Gentlemen

By ASHLEIGH THOMPSON
Assistant Accent Editor

You can pick your date and you can pick your clothes, but you can't pick your date's clothes even though most girls probably wish they could. While guys may seem to have fewer options when it comes to spicing up SYR apparel, this should not serve as an excuse for what is really just a lack of imagination.

The blue blazer, red tie and khakis, a fundamental Notre Dame male ensemble, has seen enough dances. Hopefully, creativity will take hold of campus this SYR season and free the GQ individual inside every guy. For those who still need a few guidelines, here are ten SYR fashion tips to make those women take notice.

1) Blazers are a great aspect of any formal outfit and are really practical for colder weather, and amazingly enough come in other varieties besides navy wool. Earth colors, including all different shades of green and brown, go well with khakis and look very sophisticated.

Even if you're not sure what taupe exactly is, go ahead and try it. Even gray is a nice color for winter.

For those dandruff-free guys, black blazers could be cool for that whole living on the edge, Reservoir Dogs image. Big or small lapels, sports coat or double breasted, its all good.

2) Khakis are really functional and match virtually anything, but pants in varied earth tones look good too. Corduroys look great during Fall and Winter, and are especially stylish right now. Those who would rather not go to an SYR than dress up can even get away with a nice pair of jeans.

3) Ties. Polka dots, floral patterns, cartoon characters and abstract designs provide something a little more unconventional than the standard stripes. Bow ties can be very sexy on that intellectual man, if you can get away without anyone making a Pee-Wee Herman reference. If a tie absolutely cramps your style, vests look fabulous with the right blazer and are especially GQ.

4) Suspenders, (or braces, for the traditionalist), add style to any outfit. As long as they coordinate with the rest of the ensemble, they don't need to exactly match the tie. From a practical perspective, they'll help pants stay put when you feel the need to dance or if your date gets a little saucy, but beware of others that feel the need to snap them. Remember, if you opt for suspenders, don't wear a belt.

5) Accessories can make the difference between looking nice and looking great. Wear a watch so your date can harass you all night by incessantly asking for the time. If wearing khakis is absolutely necessary, an interesting leather belt or a colorful canvas one can differentiate one set from another. Socks are a must and could be the most unique part of an outfit. Crazy patterns are always fun, and even argyles add a touch of sophistication.

Save the baseball caps only for absolute hair emergencies inside dorm rooms; never wear them to the actual dance.

6) When it comes to footwear, being unconventional is the key. Colorful canvas or suede sneakers, not to be confused with gym shoes, can be a lot more comfortable than dress shoes. Docs or hiking boots might look great with more casual pants, and even Birkenstocks can coordinate with that earth tone concept.

7) Deodorant is necessary. Cologne and after-shave are a nice touch, but applying too much may explain a date's incessant wheezing.

8) Shower. Shave. Brush teeth. Women need constant reassurance that men care.

9) Hair gel may be a good thing to contribute to a dapper appearance, but can be extremely disgusting if used in excess. If any appears on your shoulder or your date's, make a mad dash for the restroom.

10) Yes, it is always more important to have a good time in something you're comfortable in than to go all out and be worried about the dry cleaning bill. If blending in with the norm results in less self-consciousness, that's okay. Dressing in tie-dyed dress shirts may not be your style, but on the same note, never feel pressured to fit the mold.

When all is said and done, clothes won't change the kind of date you are or how good of a time you have. If you're going to put effort into the evening, do it at the dance, not in the dressing room.

Mental errors prove costly for Belles as winning streak ends

Coming off of an impressive three-game winning streak against Wittenburg, Muskingum, and Concordia College, the Saint Mary's College volleyball team traveled to Albion College Monday night with the lofty goals of extending its streak, and advancing its record to 6-4. Losing in five games to an only average Albion squad was not in the game plan.

"We just were not finishing the game," Schroeder-Biek said. "We would stop playing at 14.

Indeed, the Belles had ample opportunity to put Albion away in three matches. Splitting the first two games, 14-16 and 15-12, Saint Mary's salvaged a victory in the third, after allowing Albion to come back from an 0-7 deficit to take the Belles to extra Sophomore middle/right attack Arwen Dickey expressed particular frustration with the Belles' step backward in light of their recent winning streak.

Saint Mary's hosts the University of Chicago at home in the Angela Athletic Facility Thursday night.

Entrepreneur's Delight

At least seven different companies have been officially licensed to produce t-shirts commemorating Saturday's game. That figure does not include the numerous underground vendors who have been banking on this game for a year.

Poised Powlus

Holtz's considerable admiration for quarterback Ron Powlus continues to grow almost daily.

"Ron Powlus does so many things instinctively," Holtz appraised. "He is the leader of the team and is more intelligent. His mind is a computer. Plus, he throws a great deep ball."

The Numbers Game

A number of Notre Dame players opened their 1995 campaign with new numbers. This trend was most popular among linebackers, as juniors Bert Berry (13), Kinnon Tatum (2), and Lyron Cobbins (6) all sported new numbers.

Many observers figured the changes were more of fashion statement than anything else. However, in Cobbins case, there is significance beyond the intimidation factor.

"I wanted to do something to honor my mother Louise," Cobbins explained. "I'm the sixth boy in the family so the number six makes sense. Plus, it looks good."

Fast Company

Quietly, tailback Randy

Kinder is joining some heady names in the Irish record book.

The junior has already amassed nine games in which he gained at least 100 yards. This figure puts Kinder fifth on the all-time list, with names such as George Gipp and Allen Pinkett ahead of him.

With at least 18 more games left in his career, it is not inconceivable that Kinder could pass Pinkett's high of 21.

Christy Oleniczak to make the score 7-6.

An aggressive decision to go for a two point conversion and the clear win ended with PW freshman defensive back Sarah Kolasa tipping away the pass to preserve the Weasel victory.

"Both teams played very well, but it was great to come out on top," Weasel coach Tom Fatur said.

Lewis 8, Off-Campus 7

The battle between these two top ten teams was not to be decided until late in the game, with second ranked Lewis pulling out the victory over an intense Off-Campus squad 8-7.

In the second half, though, the action picked up. Off-Campus running back Patti Vassallo scored first on a five yard touchdown burst off a trap right.

Charo Gonzalez finished off the Off-Campus offense for the night, running in a pitch from quarterback Erin Nicholas to add the extra point.

From that moment on, however, Lewis quarterback Liz Talarico took control of the game and proved why she is one of the top quarterbacks in the league. Talarico engineered a nail-biting, two minute offensive drive culminated in a thrilling touchdown connection to Meg Schlosser with only fourteen seconds left on the clock.

A successful two point conversion off a screen pass to Emily Miller sent the Lewis faithful into well-deserved celebration of their hard-fought win.

Farley 18, Knott 12

After a promising victory in the first week of play, Knott was poised to move even higher than their ninth ranking. However, win number two proved to be slightly more elusive, as Farley's Finest knocked down the Angels 18-12.

Four interceptions and a strong running game by the Farley squad ended up being too much for Knott to overcome.

Farley running back Camille Clinton had an outstanding game, starting off the scoring with a 19 yard touchdown reception, although the extra point failed.

Not to be outdone, Knott came roaring back with an explosive fifty yard touchdown run to even the score.

Knott began the scoring in the second half with another touchdown on an option right, but once again the extra point attempt was foiled.

The women of Farley refused to give up, and quickly replied with a scoring drive of their own orchestrated by the hard-nosed running of Clinton.

Later, Clintont ran a sweep to the left for a touchdown with 1:38 on the clock to secure a Farley victory.

"We put in a lot of effort and spirit and our team should be proud of ourselves, but we are not used to playing the favorite," Knott coach Bill Carney said. "Don't take anything away from Farley, they have a great team."

Holtz brushes up on Buckeye history

By TIM SHERMAN
Associate Sports Editor

In the field of coaching, there are a number of academic disciplines that may prove beneficial along the way. For example, an aspiring coach obtaining a degree in an area like psychology, physical education, or sports management may not be such a bad idea.

Notre Dame coach Lou Holtz added another subject matter to that list - history.

The commander of the Irish has been a veritable encyclopedia of information on a wide variety of topics this week, not the least of which was Notre Dame's epic 19-13 victory over Ohio State in 1935.

"I studied everything about that game and watched the video," Holtz said. "It was an amazing game. The irony of it was one of the Columbus papers went to print before the final and put the headline 13-12. Thirteen years later to the exact day, the Chicago Tribune printed 'Dewey beats Truman.'"

Eager Edwards

Holtz is not the only one who is anxious to visit Columbus. 1992 Ohio high school player of the year Marc Edwards has had an eye on this game all season long.

"We keep joking with the players to not expect too much from Edwards, he is saving himself for Ohio State," explained Holtz.

"This is going to be a big game for me personally," Edwards said. "I have a lot of friends from high school who go there and I know how big of a game it is."

1995 IRISH

FOOTBALL

Injury Update

During the third quarter of last week's 55-27 victory against Texas, Irish safeties LeRon Moore and Jarvis Edison collided in mid-air in pursuit of an errant UT pass.

Moore came down with the ball, Edison came down with badly bruised abdominal muscles.

The sophomore free safety who has been used extensively in passing situations is expected to miss up to a month.

Flanker Charles Stafford is another recent addition to the growing injury list with a sprained knee.

The mounting injury toll concerns Holtz.

"The thing that concerned me most starting the season was that we'd lose one or two players every week," Holtz said. "That is what has been happening."

VOLLEYBALL

DePaul quickly dismissed

Two records fall in Irish's brief trip to Chicago

By BETSY BAKER
Sports Writer

They came. They saw. They conquered.

This describes the record setting match of the tenth-ranked Notre Dame volleyball team last night. The Irish 15-2, 15-1, 15-2 victory over DePaul set school records for the shortest length of a match, finishing off the Blue Demons in forty minutes, and for allowing only five points.

The Irish pummeling of the Blue Demons was led by sophomore outside hitter Jaimie Lee and sophomore middle blocker Molly McCarthy who collected seven kills each. Defensively, outside hitter Kristina Ervin and sophomore setter Carey May led the team with six digs each, while freshman Lindsay Treadwell proved to be a force at the net with six block assists.

Irish head coach Debbie Brown complimented the play of her team, especially the absence of costly errors which have had a tendency to plague the Irish team this year.

"Everyone played really well tonight," Brown said. "DePaul was never able to put any pressure on us and we made very few errors."

"We just came in and did the job and left."

The easy defeat over DePaul improved the Irish record to 11-1, giving them a chance to not only rest some of their starters for the weekend, but also give some of the other players valuable experience, adding to the depth of the team overall.

"We got to rest some starters

The Observer/Brent Tadsen

Setter Carey May shined defensively last night against DePaul with six digs as the Irish allowed only five points.

tonight which puts us in great shape for the weekend," Brown said.

The upcoming weekend is of special significance for the Irish because it will be their introduction into the Big East Conference.

The team will travel to Washington D.C. on Friday to take on Georgetown in their first-ever match as a member of the Big East. Then it is off to Philadelphia for the Irish where they hope to become 2-0 in conference play with a victory over Villanova.

"We expect this weekend to be very competitive," Brown said. "Georgetown and Villanova are two of the better teams in the conference."

Pasquerilla Pandemonium

By DANIEL PATRICK MULLEN
and SCOTT DOWNES
Sports Writers

The marquee match-up of the evening proved to be a hard-fought battle between the Pasquerillas. East versus West. PW took control early and held on to beat their neighbors 7-6.

The game started off slowly, with both defenses holding strong. But on PW's second drive, quarterback Liz McKillop threw a 48-yard pass down the middle. On the next play, the Weasels scored on a 28-yard run by junior tailback Megan Shepherd. The momentum continued with PW when they got the extra point for a 7-0 lead.

The fourth-ranked Weasels dominated the fifth-ranked Pyros on the next drive. Sophomore defensive lineman Mary Hepburn, who was Player of the Week last week, tormented the PE offensive line with speed and power. The half ended with a "Hail Mary" bomb by PE's freshman quarterback Elizabeth Plummer that connected just two yards short of a touchdown.

In the second half, three consecutive penalties stalled the PW offense. PW pinned the Pyros back on their own three yard line. In turn, the Pyros shifted toward an air attack to get their offense back on track.

"We needed to move the ball more than in the first half, so we focused more on our passing to be effective," Plummer commented.

With that strategy in mind, she drove the Pyros ninety-seven yards for a touchdown on a number of consecutive short passes to Becky Moraris and Karen Randesi. Plummer was at it again as she dropped in a 14-yard touchdown pass to
